Sister Liguoria Poznanska, born January 15, 1880, entered the Congregation on December 4, 1919. She was sacristan almost all her life as a religious. In 1953 she was appointed assistant to the house superior in Cracow. She died in Cracow on May 2, 1960.

231 It could be that at this particular time the Saint was given to know the day of her death.

232 No date is given, but it can be supposed that the vision occurred between January 8 and 15, 1938.

233 Sister Faustina was very sensitive to the division into choirs. In this case, Sister Seraphina certainly was not guided by the division, but seeing Sister Faustina already wet, she thought it would be easier for Sister Faustina to go to the gate than for another sister to get wet, too. In giving the order she obviously did not know Sister Faustina was unwell, or else she would have done otherwise. Sister Seraphina was a good and pious sister. She was never known to make any differences among the sisters.

234 It was the custom in the Congregation to pray for the dying person the prayer, "O most kind Jesus..." and Psalm 129 "Out of the depths."

235 Sister Faustina's superiors during her lifetime as a religious:

M. Margaret Gimbutt — beginning of novitiate and third probation before perpetual vows;

M. Raphael Buczynska — in Cracow and Warsaw;

M. Rose Klobukowska — in Plock;

M. Xavier Olszamowska — in Kiekrz;

M. Borgia Tichy — in Vilnius;

M. Seraphina Kukulska — in Walendow.

Sister Xavier — Jane Olszamowska, born 1883, entered the Congregation in 1912. She was superior in Kiekrz and in Warsaw, and then was secretary general. She died on March 11, 1970, in Cracow.

²³⁶ Cf. Bishop Zbigniew Kraszewski, “Udział Matki Bożej w Dziele Odkupienia” (“The Role of the Mother of God in the Work of Redemption”) in Gratia Plena, Poznan, 1965.

²³⁷ Probably Father M. Sopocho, because he was chiefly active in spreading the devotion of The Divine Mercy and in efforts to found the new community; but Sister Faustina may also have had in mind Father Andrasz or Mother Irene Krzyzanowska, because they, too, made efforts to spread the devotion of The Divine Mercy.

²³⁸ Father Theodore Czaputa was the confessor of the novitiate. Some of the professed sisters also made their confession to him. The Saint’s spiritual director was Father Andrasz. Sister Faustina is careful to make the distinction.

²³⁹ Sister Tarcisia — Casimira Piotrowicz. Born in 1891, she entered the Congregation in 1912. For a short time she was a nurse in the Cracow house.

²⁴⁰ Probably Sister Amelia, who was Sister Faustina’s close friend.
Sister Amelia — Stanislava Socha was born on May 15, 1911. She entered the Congregation in 1930. The doctors soon diagnosed she had tuberculosis of the bones in her hand. Sister Amelia was afraid of being a burden to the Congregation and asked Sister Faustina to pray for an early death for her. Sister Faustina promised that, within a year after her, Sister Amelia would also die. That was the case, as Sister Amelia died on October 4, 1939.

²⁴¹ Carnival — a time of revelry and merrymaking before the Lenten Season.

²⁴² A doctor called in to see the sick sisters. It is hard to say which one. A Dr. Stoch came frequently.

²⁴³ Probably Dr. Silberg, who knew Sister Faustina’s condition.

²⁴⁴ To the hospital for contagious diseases at Pradnik near Cracow, known as the “sanatorium.”

²⁴⁵ There is a corridor leading from the house to the choir loft of the chapel. Sister Faustina was in the choir loft and so attended Mass, but she was not strong enough to go down and take part in the procession with the palms.

²⁴⁶ Father Zukowicz, S.J., who was celebrating Mass that day. He was assistant to the provincial for very many years. He was a close friend of the Congregation of Our Lady of Mercy. As a great benefactor of their apostolic work, he often visited the girls and brought them small gifts.

²⁴⁷ Sister Casimir — Irene Twarowska. Born 1911, she entered the Congregation in 1933. She worked as a group instructor and then as the head of the home for girls. She died in Cracow on April 18, 1969.

²⁴⁸ The following sisters had been in the novitiate with Sister Faustina:

Senior novices: Sister Alice Dabrowska, Sister Cherubim Kowieska, Sister Ernest Szczyrba, Sister Yvonne Goebel, Sister Joachim Gluc, Sister Kinga, Sister Crescentia Bogdanik, Sister Laurenta Kosinska, Sister Longina Suchomska, Sister Lucine, Sister Natalie Fiszer, Sister Placida Putyra, Sister Renata Jodlowska, Sister Simon Nalewajko, Sister Valentina Leszczynska.

Junior novices: Sister Anunciata Peraj, Sister Bernarda Wilczek, Sister Celine Bronikowska, Sister Felicia Zakowiecka, Sister Justine Golofit, Sister Clementine Gluc, Sister Louise Gadzina, Sister Martina, Sister Regina Jaworska, Sister Severina Marciniak, Sister Teresita, Sister Zenobia Saja.

Sisters who were clothed together with Sr. Faustina: Sister Bernadette Federowicz, Sister Bonaventure Edelmänn-Głowacka (d. Dec. 17, 1936), Sister Florentine Pajak (d. Jan. 2, 1950), Sister Henry Skulimowska (d. Oct. 20, 1974).

Sisters who corresponded with Sr. Faustina: Sister Justine Golofit, Sister Louise Gadzina, Sister Regina Jaworska; perhaps there were others, but at present they are unknown.

249 Sisters of the Congregation of Servants of the Most Sacred Heart of Jesus, who worked at the hospital at Pradnik. The Congregation had been founded in Cracow in 1894 by Bishop Peiczar.

250 Sister David Cedro; Sister Alana — Caroline Wilusz, born July 20, 1910; Sister Medarda — Caroline Podrazik, born June 16, 1910, died 1966.

251 Similar incidents can be found in the lives of saints; for example, St. Stanislaus Kostka and St. Bonaventure.

252 Low Sunday. The Sunday mentioned by Sister Faustina was the first Sunday after Easter; that is, the day that was to be the Feast of The Divine Mercy.

253 Probably a reference to the flu epidemic which had begun in February and continued for several months. As many as 22 sisters were down on some days.

254 It is difficult to establish the date. Sister Faustina no longer dates anything but merely writes, “today.” At any rate, this was after Pentecost; that is, after June 5.

255 It can be supposed that Sister Faustina had the vision of the Heart of Jesus on the Friday after the Octave of Corpus Christi; i.e., on June 24, 1938.

FATIMA

Marianna Bartold

Fatima: The Signs and Secrets

Marianna Bartold

“In that same hour, he rejoiced in the Holy Ghost, and said: I confess to thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hidden these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them to little ones.”
-Lk. 10:21.

All Scriptural quotations were taken from the Holy Bible, Douay-Rheims translation, with revisions and footnotes (in the text in italics) by Bishop Richard Challoner, 1749-52. Taken from a hardcopy of the 1899 Edition by the John Murphy Company. IMPRIMATUR: James Cardinal Gibbons, Archbishop of Baltimore, September 1, 1899.

Copyright © 2014 Marianna Bartold and KIC.

All Rights Reserved.

Cover Design Copyright © 2014 by KIC.

Also available on Kindle from this Author:

Guadalupe: Secrets of the Image

Another Kindle book from KIC, the publisher:

Divine Parables Explained by Fr. Prachensky

TABLE OF CONTENTS

SECTION I

PART 1

FATIMA'S PROPHETIC MISSION:

ST. MICHAEL AND THE BATTLE IN HEAVEN

- Who the Holy Trinity Sent to Fatima
- St. Michael, from Genesis to Apocalypse
- A Foreshadowing at Fatima
- Three Cousins See the Angel, 1916

PART 2

THE SIGNS AT FATIMA, May-September, 1917

- June: the First Signs
- What the Children Saw
- July: Six Signs Granted to the People
- August: The Lady's Invisible Presence and a Boom of Thunder
- September: A Luminous Globe a Pillar of Cloud, and a Shower of Flowers
- Seeking the Meaning of the Signs

PART 3

THE CLOUD, SIGN OF THE HOLY TRINITY

- Examining the Sensible Signs at Fatima
–The Seven Purposes of Signs
- The Cloud in Holy Scripture

PART 4

SIGNS FROM THE EAST

- The Luminous Orb
- The Holy Trinity, the Virgin Mary, and the East

PART 5

STARS AT HIGH NOON:

OUR LORD, OUR LADY AND THE CHURCH

- Stars in the Scriptures
- The Lady and the Symbol of a Star
- The Virtues of the Virgin Mary
- The Other Signs at Fatima

PART 6

SIGNS OF GRACE:

THE SILENT PARABLES OF FATIMA

- A Golden Atmosphere
- Like an Eclipse
- From Blazingly Warm to a Cool, Fresh Breeze

PART 7

MOTHER OF GOD, REFUGE OF SINNERS

- Thunder, a Small Tremor, and Lightning
- All the Colors of a Rainbow

PART 8

A SHOWER OF PETALS:

THE LADY OF THE ROSARY, MEDIATRIX OF ALL GRACES

- Flowering Trees at the Height of Summer
- A Shower of Signs in September

SECTION II

PART 9

OCTOBER: THE PROMISED SIGN

- Our Lady in the Modern Age
- The Effects of Divine Mercy
- What the Children Saw on October 13, 1917
- What the People Saw
- “A Wheel of Fire”
- Virgin of Fatima and the Apocalypse:
The Great Sign in Heaven
- A Royal Woman, Clothed with the Sun

- The Great Sign at Enmity with the Dragon
- The Woman and the Church
- The Message and the Miracle:
A Private Revelation?

PART 10

HIDDEN REVELATIONS: THE STAR OF ESTHER AND THE SECRETS OF FATIMA

- P.S. to the Message of Fatima
- Figure-Types:
Of Mary, There is Never Enough
- The Book of Esther and the Book of Revelations
- Figure-types within Figure-Types
- The Secrets of the Star
- The Intercession of the Queen
- The Faithful Must Stand for Their Lives
- Sr. Lucia and the 13th of February
- The Time Limit Expired
- If You Love Me, Keep My Commandments

PART 11

THE SIGNS AND TRACES OF HIDDEN THINGS

- The Seven Purposes of Signs
- The Mother of God vs. Modernism
- The First Sign:
Immaculate Spouse of the Holy Ghost,
Figure of the New Israel, the Church
- The Second Sign:
Mediatrice of All Graces
- The Central Figures in Esther
- The Consolation of the Elect
- The Continuing Tale of Two Cities
- Only the Lady Queen Can Help You

PART 12

FATIMA AND THE GREAT ET CETERA:

TRACES OF THE THIRD SECRET MESSAGE

- Fatima and the Significance of the 13th
- Five Scourges, Five Blasphemies, Five First Saturdays
- Two Means to Save the Church Militant
- Revealing Remarks about the Third Secret and the Consecration
- The Dogma of the Faith and the Great “Et Cetera”
- “In” Portugal, Not “Throughout” Portugal

PART 13

OUR LADY OF AKITA

AND THE THIRD SECRET OF FATIMA

- The Cause of Our Lady’s Sadness
- Further Hints of the Third Secret Message
- From Fatima to Akita:
Part of the Third Secret Revealed
- The Hidden, Bitter Star

SECTION III

PART 14

WHAT POPE BENEDICT XVI REVEALED: THE THIRD SECRET IS SPOKEN

THE SIX THEMES

OF THE THIRD SECRET OF FATIMA

OUR LADY AND THE APOSTLES OF THE LATTER TIMES

- Parallels: Our Lady’s Requests and St. Louis de Montfort
- Mary Forms the Great Saints of the Consummation

PART 15

FATIMA'S FOREMOST REQUEST

- Red Herrings:
 - Flotsam and Jetsam in the Mainstream
- The Meaning of Consecration

THE WOMAN

AND THE BATTLE OF THE LATTER DAYS

- Two Handmaids to Sanctity
- Our Mother, Mediatrix, and Queen
- The Sacred and Immaculate Hearts
- The Example of St. Joan of Arc

PART 16

THE AGE OF MARY

AND THE LOST MEANING OF CONVERSION

- True Conversion in Three Stages
- Our Lady: Devotion and Conversion

THE IMMACULATE CONCEPTION: MOTHER OF GOD, MOTHER OF MEN

- The New Adam and the New Eve
- The Redemption of the Virgin
- The Unbreakable Bond of the Woman and Her Seed

THE STAR BEFORE DAWN

- THE MIRACULOUS MEDAL
- THE GREEN SCAPULAR “BADGE”
OF THE IMMACULATE HEART
- OUR LADY WEPT AT LASALETTE
- THE LADY OF LOURDES
 - St. Bernadette: A Life of the Beatitudes
 - The Saint's Early Years
 - Little Shepherdess of Bartres
 - The Beautiful Lady at the Grotto
 - This World and the Other

- Life after Lourdes

OUR LADY MARY, THE EVENING STAR AT PONTMAIN

- First Phase of the Apparition:
A “Grand, Beautiful Lady” and a Triangle of Three Stars
- Second Phase of the Apparition:
Symbols and a Message Written in Gold
- Third and Fourth Phases of the Apparition:
A Mystical Harp, A Red Crucifix, and the Holy Name of Jesus
- Fifth Phase of the Apparition:
Two White Crosses and a Mysterious Veil
- Meanings of the Apparition’s Symbolism

THE VIRGIN OF PELLEVOISON: LADY OF MERCY, LADY OF THE SACRED HEART

- “Fear Nothing; You are My Daughter”
- Estelle’s Prayer to Our Lady of Mercy
- The Messages of Pellevoisin

VISION OF SILENCE: OUR LADY OF KNOCK AND THE APOCALYPSE

- What the People Saw at Knock
- The Secret of Knock

PART 17

THE DOMINION OF THE KING AND QUEEN

- Jesus, King of the Eternal Ages
- Christ is King by Nature as God and Man
- Christ’s Kingdom, As It Should be on Earth
- Why Mary is Queen
- The Immaculate Heart,
Pattern of the Sacred Heart

THE MYSTERY OF THE SACRED HEART DEVOTION

- Object and Acts of the Sacred Heart Devotion
- “Behold this Heart,
which has so loved men”
- Constancy to the Sacred Heart,
Needed More than Ever

THE PRECIOUS BLOOD OF JESUS AND THE GREAT SECRET OF FATIMA

- Our Lady and the Precious Blood
- The Great Secret Revisited
- A Vision of the Church’s Calvary

THE EXALTATION OF THE HOLY CROSS: THE SIGN THAT SHALL BE CONTRADICTED

- Glorifying the Cross of Christ

THE GREATEST SECRET: OUR IMITATION OF CHRIST

- The Saints and Their Love of Christ Crucified
- Why the Passion of Christ?
- Charity: The Height of Virtue, the Perfection of Sanctity
- The Holiest of Schools
- I Love You More

OUR LORD’S ESCORTS ON THE WAY OF THE CROSS

- The First Escort
- The Second Escort
- The Third Escort
- The One who Stands Apart

PURGATORY: THE DOCTRINE OF GOD’S MERCY AND JUSTICE

- Purgatory:
A Teaching from Antiquity

- At Fatima:
The Fate of Two Souls Revealed
- Out of the Depths
I Have Cried to Thee, O Lord

PART 18

SECRETS OF THE DEVOTION TO THE IMMACULATE HEART

- Why Devotion to the Immaculate Heart?

A MYSTERY OF MERCY: THE VIRGIN MARY AS MOTHER

- The Immaculate Heart: A Secret of God

THE REMEDY: AN IMMENSE DEVOTION

- A Glimpse at the Devotion's History
- The Slowly Germinating Seeds

A MYSTERY OF SALVATION: THE SYNTHESIS OF ALL DEVOTIONS

- Why the Virgin Mary Draws Our Attention
- Secrets in the Order of Grace

THE ULTIMATE REASON FOR FATIMA: THE ONE THING NECESSARY

- The Promises and the Prophecies:
A Pattern of Three's
- A Mystical Doctrine
- The "Business" of Salvation

FIVE SIMPLE STEPS TO SANCTITY

- The Five Point Defense of the Catholic City
- May God Save Us in Time and in Eternity
- Our Lady and Catholic Action
- The Virgin and a Mystery of the Holy Trinity

WHY DAILY DUTY SANCTIFIES US

- What is Daily Duty?

- Pitfalls on the Path
- “Pick Up Your Cross Daily and Follow Me”

WHY SATURDAY IS OUR LADY’S DAY

- Ancilla Domini (Handmaiden of the Lord)
- City of God:
The Glories and Sorrows of Mary
- Five Means and Mysteries of the City of God
- Virgin Most Faithful

SUPPLEMENT

THE FIVE FIRST SATURDAYS

I. The History and Text of the Promise

II. Some Precisions on the Conditions

III. The Promises Attached to this Devotion

FATIMA PRAYERS

I. Prayers Taught by St. Michael

II. Prayers Taught by the Virgin Mary

III. Fatima Morning Offering (by Sr. Lucia)

THE LITTLE CROWN

OF TWELVE STARS

OF THE BLESSED VIRGIN MARY

(As Taught by St. Louis de Montfort)

THE 15 ROSARY PROMISES

(Our Lady to Blessed Alan de la Roche)

THE HOLY ROSARY

ACCORDING TO THE METHOD

OF ST. LOUIS DE MONTFORT

THE 15 ROSARY MYSTERIES

FOR BEGINNERS

HOW TO PRAY THE ROSARY

(FOR BEGINNERS)

-ABOUT THE AUTHOR

-NOTES

-SECTION I-

PART 1

Fatima's Prophetic Mission: St. Michael and the Great Battle in Heaven

“We would be mistaken to think that Fatima’s prophetic mission is complete.” [1] Those words, uttered by Pope Benedict XVI during his May 2010 homily at Fatima, gave the Church a stupendously thought-provoking insight. Only three years earlier, on the 90th anniversary of Fatima, the Pope had said something similar: “The apparitions of Our Lady of Fatima...are without doubt, the most prophetic of all modern apparitions.” [2] Before him, Pope John Paul II acknowledged that his own predecessors gave Our Lady of Fatima special recognition, because her messages were more prophetic than any previous Marian apparitions which were approved by the Church as worthy of belief. He also said in his sermon of May 13, 1982 that “Fatima places an obligation on the Church.” Certainly, Popes of the Roman Catholic Church do not say such things of mere private revelations, which impose on the Church no such duty.

Of Fatima, it can be truly said that no other Church-approved apparition has received such world-wide attention or has been the subject of such controversy within the Church herself. It is not that the Church doesn’t recognize Fatima as worthy of belief, because the decision in favor of Fatima was made in 1930. Rather, the internal debate among the Church’s members, high and low, center on two subjects: The Virgin’s request that a reigning Pope and the world’s bishops solemnly consecrate Russia to her Immaculate Heart and also on what is called “The Third Secret of Fatima.”

In 1984, Pope Benedict XVI (then Cardinal Ratzinger, and now Bishop Emeritus of Rome) said that “the things contained in this 'Third Secret' correspond to what has been announced in Scripture and has been said again and again in many other Marian apparitions, beginning with the Fatima apparitions in their known contents.” [3] Since the Third Secret of Fatima corresponds to Scripture, it must be said that the Church knows all scriptural prophecies are fulfilled—except those foretelling the “last days.”

However, as previously mentioned, in May 2010, Pope Benedict XVI purposely chose to use the descriptive term “prophetic” in defining Fatima’s “mission.” So let us look to the meaning of these words as the Church provides them:

“Prophecy: A definite prediction of a future event which depends on the free will of God or man, and therefore can be known only by divine revelation. Some prophecies are conditional...Others are unconditional; for example, Christ foretold His death and resurrection...Christ Himself often appealed to prophecies as proof of His divinity and divine mission.” [4]

As for “mission,” the root meaning of this word is “sending.” [5] As it is used in ecclesiastical and theological writing, a “mission” (a sending) is usually accomplished in at least one of three distinct ways. As will be seen, all three of the following definitions of the word “mission” appear to apply to the Fatima revelations:

- First, a “mission” is a place to which missionaries are sent by the Church to establish the Faith “where the majority are not yet converted or have fallen away from the Faith.” [6] Missionary work “for the conversion of infidels has always been an important part of the Church’s work, since Christ sent the Apostles to preach to all nations and to make all men His disciples.” [7]

- Second, a “mission” is a “series of sermons and religious exercises conducted in a parish over a certain period of a number of days by priests sent into the parish to renew the religious fervor of the faithful. To renew the Christian Faith and practice of Catholics, the sermons and instructions of a mission usually deal with the fundamentals of the Christian life: the purpose of man; sin; redemption; the justice, mercy, love, and graces of God; death; hell; and heaven.” [8]

- Third and most significant, a “mission” is a direct action (a “divine sending”) made by God Himself for the salvation of His people. The Holy Scriptures infallibly record that “the Son is sent into the world by the Father, [9] and that the Holy Ghost is sent by both the Father and the Son [10]—but in no place in the Scriptures do we read of the Father being sent into the world. Hence, theologians use the term divine mission, or ‘sending,’ to designate the procession of one Divine Person from another in the Holy Trinity with the connotation of some effect of the procession in creatures, through a new presence of the Divine Person in that creature.” [11]

Who the Holy Trinity

Sent to Fatima

At Fatima, the very first creature sent by the Holy Trinity was an angel who identified himself as “the Angel of Peace” and later as “the Angel Guardian” of Portugal. [12] The angel’s three appearances to the young shepherd children were a prelude to the Virgin Mary’s later visits. It can be stated with moral certainty that this angel is none other than St. Michael the Archangel, whose very presence at Fatima provides the initial and great insights into what Pope Benedict XVI called “Fatima’s prophetic mission.”

For almost one thousand years, St. Michael has been recognized by the Catholic nation of Portugal as its Angel Guardian and the Angel of Peace. Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité, historian and expert on the Fatima apparitions, observed “that good Portuguese historians are inclined to recognize in him [Fatima’s Angel of Peace] St. Michael the Archangel, their patron and protector, who had always been venerated as the Guardian Angel of their country...King Alfonso Henriques [1139-1185], founder of the nation and of the dynasty, having been baptized in a chapel dedicated to St. Michael, chose the Archangel as the special protector of his armies and his kingdom.” In 1514, at the request of King Manuel I, Pope Leo X granted the Portuguese nation a special feast in honor of their Angel Guardian, traditionally recognized as St. Michael. In Portugal’s national monastery at Batalha, “the monks chanted each day an antiphon and prayer in honor of St. Michael, the Guardian Angel of Portugal.”

Frère Michel additionally notes, “Fr. Martins dos Reis [another Fatima historian/author] has observed that the other title by which the Angel of Fatima revealed himself—‘I am the Angel of Peace’—also suggests his identification with St. Michael the Archangel. Indeed, in the Portuguese tradition, where he is quite prominent, St. Michael is often called the Angel of Peace, especially in the liturgical office of St. Elizabeth of Portugal.” Finally, Frère Michel concludes, “In addition, in the Roman Breviary as well as in the litanies, the Archangel is invoked under these titles: ‘Auctor pacis,’ (Author of Peace) and “Angelus pacis Michael,” (Michael, the Angel of Peace). [13]

It seems that it was this Angel of Peace—St. Michael the Archangel—who was sent to the little ones at Fatima “to fill them with a very elevated mystical grace, by which they felt themselves penetrated by the Divine Presence.” [14]

St. Michael, from Genesis to the Apocalypse

And so, we may ask —who is St. Michael and why was he sent to the three Fatima children? Like all angels, he is a pure spirit (without a body), created by God. Both St. Augustine and Pope St. Gregory the Great state that “angel is the name of an office,” but the word angel “expresses neither their essential nature nor their essential function; viz.: that of attendants upon God’s throne...” [15]

“Angel” means “messenger,” and so an angel acts as a divine messenger sent by God. The Holy Scriptures reveal that God sends angels to announce His will, to correct, punish, teach, rebuke, or console. [16] Angels appear in the Holy Bible from beginning to end, from Genesis through the Apocalypse.

The Scriptures further disclose that the angels are not all equal to each other. [17] It is commonly taught that there exists a hierarchy (an order) of the angels, known as the nine choirs. The nine choirs are divided into three “triads” (i.e., a group of three; a trio).

The highest triad consists of the seraphim, cherubim, and thrones; their specific concern or purpose is the contemplation of God. The middle triad is made of the dominions, virtues, and powers, who are appointed to concern themselves with the order of the universe but also other causes. Finally, the last (or “lowest”) triad is of principalities, archangels and angels. Amongst the specific concerns of this last triad is the welfare of the people, and it is to this choir that St. Michael belongs.

What is an archangel? The meaning of this word, which comes from the Greek, is “prince-angel.” Although he is in the last order of angels, St. Michael the Archangel became Prince of the Heavenly Host [18] because he was the first to rise up against Lucifer and the other angels who rebelled against God. It was St. Michael who cried out, “Who is like unto God?” and it was he and his angels who “smote the rebel Lucifer and his followers in the conflict of the heavenly host.” [19] The fallen angels were cast from heaven and condemned to hell. [20]

Five times is the name of Michael the angel explicitly mentioned in the Holy Scriptures—three times by the prophet Daniel, once by St. Jude, and once by St. John in the Apocalypse. All of these passages provide further enlightenment about why the great St. Michael the Archangel was sent to the Fatima children:

- In the Prophecy of Daniel, Chapter 10, the Holy Scriptures give Michael’s name for the first time. Daniel’s chapters 7-12 are considered to be his four “apocalyptic” chapters because, like the later Apocalypse, they foretell things that were, things that are, and things that shall be. What is also made clear in these same four chapters is Daniel’s reliance on heavenly creatures, sent to him by God, who explain the visions given to him.

Beginning with Chapters 7 and 8, Daniel wrote the first of his prophetic and apocalyptic visions. Explanations of these visions were given by the angel Gabriel, [21] who appeared to him as a man. In Chapter 10, it is recorded: “In the third year of Cyrus king of the Persians, a word was revealed to Daniel surnamed Baltassar, and a true word, and great strength: and he understood the word: for there is need of understanding in a vision.” [22] Following this event, the prophet Daniel mourned and fasted for 21 days. [23]

(These words from Holy Scripture provide insight into the Great Secret of Fatima, especially the Third Secret Vision which, like Daniel’s vision, could be described in the same way: “a word was revealed to Lucia, surnamed dos Santos, and to Francisco and Jacinta, surnamed Marto; and a true word, and great strength; and they understood the word: for there is need of understanding in a vision.” In other words, the children of Fatima, like the prophet Daniel, heard words to explain the two visions within the “Great Secret” they were given by God. In a similar manner, they also would make personal sacrifices to God in reparation for sin.)

Then appeared a good angel (whose name is not given by Daniel, but who may have been Gabriel returning to the prophet), saying, “Daniel, thou man of desires, understand the words that I speak to thee, and stand upright: for I am sent now to thee.” [24] After speaking of Daniel’s prayers and sacrifices, the angel revealed, “I am come for thy words,” [25] and then declared, “But the prince of the kingdom of the Persians resisted me one and twenty days; and behold Michael, one of the chief princes, came to help me, and I remained there by the king of the Persians. But I am come to teach thee what things shall befall thy people in the latter days, for as yet the vision is for days.” [26]

It must first be explained that “the prince of the kingdom of the Persians” was a fallen angel, a demon of great power who resisted the good angel for 21 days—i.e., a full three weeks. A mere human could not continue to resist one of God’s angels for such a length of time, but a demon of great strength could. We know that many angels became corrupted, resisted the Holy Trinity, and eternally lost their places in Heaven. Although forever darkened, they retained their powers of intellect, strength, and hierarchical order. St. Paul tells us, “Put you on the armour of God, that you may be able to stand against the deceits of the devil. For our wrestling is not against flesh and blood; but against principalities and powers, against the rulers of the world of this darkness, against the spirits of wickedness in the high places.” [27] The Douay-Rheims Bible translation includes a note to this verse, which states: “In the high places: or heavenly places. That is to say, in the air, the lowest of the celestial regions; in which God permits these wicked spirits or fallen angels to wander.”

Our Lord Himself, when rebuking the Pharisees for attributing His miracles to Satan, speaks of the differing degrees of wickedness among the demons: “And when an unclean spirit is gone out of a man he walketh through dry places seeking rest, and findeth none. Then he saith: I will return into my house from whence I came out. And coming he findeth it empty, swept, and garnished. Then he goeth, and taketh with him seven other spirits more wicked than himself, and they enter in and dwell there: and the last state of that man is made worse than the first. So shall it be also to this wicked generation.” [28] Thus we understand that individuals, rulers, regions or countries which reject the Triune God and the one religion by which He wishes to be adored and glorified most certainly open themselves to demonic rule.

To return to the prophet Daniel, he had for 21 days fasted and prayed in reparation to the Lord, for he had seen a great and terrifying vision of what would befall his people. Although he understood the vision, he did not yet know that it was a vision “for days”—meaning far into the future, the end times. The 21 days were thrice the ancient custom of seven days’ of fasting, which tell us that Daniel’s 21 days of sacrifice displayed extreme sorrow and extraordinary penance. Unbeknownst to Daniel, the 21 days of his penance and reparation offered to God coincided with the angel’s battle with a powerfully resistant devil, the “prince of the kingdom of the Persians.” However, it becomes clear that Daniel’s acts of reparation were accepted by God, for the angel spoke of Daniel’s sacrifices and also told him, almost in a confiding manner, of his own struggle against the “prince” (meaning leader, one of a higher order) demon of the Persians. Since angels of Heaven do not engage in idle gossip or expect human sympathy, it is also certain that God wished Daniel to know what had transpired and that, due to his own prayers and penances, St. Michael was sent by God to assist the good but lesser angel.

At the end of the same chapter, the good angel declares: “But I will tell thee what is set down in the scripture of truth: and none is my helper in all these things, but Michael your prince.” [29] Once again, Scripture attests that Michael is a prince. Even further, the angel states to Daniel that Michael is “your prince,” meaning the prince of the elect, those who belong to God’s kingdom on earth and follow His commandments. In the Old Testament, the chosen people were those of the earthly Israel, but this ancient nation was a living figure-type of the spiritual Israel (today known as the Roman Catholic Church) that would be established by the Messiah, Jesus Christ.

- Michael’s name is mentioned a third time in The Prophecy of Daniel, when the good angel speaks of the last events of the end times (the Novissimi), the time when anti-Christ shall appear and persecute God’s people: “But at that time shall Michael rise up, the great prince, who standeth for the children of thy people: and a time shall come such as never was from the time that nations began even until that time. (Author’s note: One sentence from the 1973 message of Our Lady of Akita is remarkably similar to this Scriptural prophecy, as one will see in another section of this book.) And at that time shall thy people be saved, every one that shall be found written in the book. And many of those that sleep in the dust of the earth, shall awake: some unto life everlasting, and others unto reproach, to see it always.” [30]

- In the Epistle of St. Jude: “When Michael the archangel, disputing with the devil, contended about the body of Moses, he durst not bring against him the judgment of railing speech, but said: The Lord command thee.” [31]

First, this Scripture passage explicitly reveals that Michael belongs to the order of the archangels.

Second, the quotation helps us grasp the difference between the proper honor due to one of God’s chosen creatures and the worship due to God Himself. According to Origen, St. Jude referred to an ancient Jewish tradition, made known by revelation, that St. Michael concealed the tomb of Moses at God’s command, because Satan moved to incite the ancient Hebrews against honoring the body of Moses as a precious relic; rather, the devil planned to deceive them into worshiping Moses’ body with the worship meant only for God. [32]

Third, it is implicitly understood that Michael was sent by God to give the devil a command that came from the Lord and not from himself.

- In the Apocalypse of St. John: “And there was a great battle in heaven, Michael and his angels fought with the dragon, and the dragon fought and his angels: And they prevailed not, neither was their place found any more in heaven. And that great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, who is called the devil and Satan, who seduceth the whole world; and he was cast unto the earth, and his angels were thrown down with him. And I heard a loud voice in heaven, saying: Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ: because the accuser of our brethren is cast forth, who accused them before our God day and night.” [33]

In writing of this epic war in heaven, St. John “speaks of the great conflict at the end of time, which reflects also the battle in heaven at the beginning of time.” [34] This is known because, in apocalyptic symbolism, the word “heaven” means “the Church,” [35] God’s kingdom on earth. In other words, there shall be a great battle in the Church, between Michael and his angels and the dragon and his angels—a last war so great that it mirrors the first, terrible combat between the good and fallen angels.

Another consideration is the Venerable Bede’s interpretation, summarized in The Book of Destiny: “If ‘heaven’ is the Church on earth in the Apocalypse...[t]he angels who fight under the leadership of Michael are the loyal bishops and priests of the Church, while the angels of the dragon are the sinful priests and bishops.” [36] In the final battle of the last days, states Butler’s Lives of the Saints, “when Antichrist shall have set up his kingdom on earth, it is St. Michael who will unfurl once more the standard of the cross, sound the last trumpet, bind together the false prophet and the beast and hurl them for all eternity into the burning pool.” [37]

Too, the Church Fathers believe that other parts of Holy Scripture allude to St. Michael’s presence, although his name is not openly given. For example, the Fathers believe Michael “was the cherub who stood at the gate of paradise, ‘to keep the way of the tree of life,’ [38] the angel through whom God published the Decalogue to his chosen people, the angel who stood in the way against Balaam, [39] [and] the angel [40] who routed the army of Sennacherib.” [41]

Through Scripture and Tradition, God has revealed to the universal Church that St. Michael is the prince and guardian of His people. Catholic Tradition also teaches that St. Michael fulfills the four following offices:

1) Michael, as God’s first loyal defender, fights against Satan while this world lasts.

2) Michael is the rescuer of the souls of the faithful from the power of the enemy, especially at the hour of death.

3) Michael is the champion of God's people—“the Jews in the Old Dispensation, the Christians of the New; therefore he is the patron of the Church, and of the orders of knights during the Middle Ages.” [42]

4) Michael is the Angel of Judgment, calling souls away from earth and bringing them to the Throne of God.

It is this same great archangel whom God sent to Fatima; Michael, Prince of the Heavenly Host, chosen to precede the “great sign” that would appear in heaven (the Church)—the “woman clothed with the sun.” [43]

A Foreshadowing at Fatima

How did the Fatima apparitions begin? Lucia dos Santos, the seventh and youngest child of Antonio and Maria Rosa dos Santos, was seven years old when she became shepherdess to the family’s flock. While together with three other neighboring shepherd children, Lucia and her friends thrice saw a mysterious figure in the air, like a statue made of snow. This figure is believed to be a presage of the angelic apparitions that Lucia would later behold with her younger cousins, Francisco and Jacinta Marto, both of whom are now beati (called “Blessed” by the Church). Lucia and her cousins would, in the spring and summer of 1916, receive three clear apparitions of the Angel, who literally identified himself as “the Angel of Peace” and “Angel Guardian, the Angel of Portugal.”

Years later, Lucia (who became a nun) would under obedience to her bishop, Jose Alves Correia da Silva, write a series of memoirs, which were later published as a collection under the title, “Fatima in Lucia’s Own Words.” The Bishop of Leira made this request when, in 1935, the body of her younger cousin, the child Jacinta, was exhumed from the grave and her face was found incorrupt. After the bishop sent a photograph of Jacinta’s opened casket to Lucia in the convent, Lucia sent a letter of thanks that also humbly declared her own conviction of Jacinta’s holiness.

According to Fr. Thomas McGlynn, O.P. who, under Lucia’s direction, made a statue of Our Lady of Fatima, Lucia’s thank-you letter “aroused the Bishop’s curiosity—perhaps many graces given to the children had been hidden all these years. He, therefore, commanded Lucia to write her memoirs.” [44] Each memoir led to a further order to write another, resulting in four memoirs, all written in a diary-like form but addressed to the bishop. These memoirs were written between 1936 and 1941 (Memoir I was written in 1936; Memoir II was written in 1937; Memoirs III and IV were both written in 1941). [45] angelic portents of 1915 followed by angelic visitations in 1916, sacrifices her cousins offered to God, the apparitions of Our Lady in 1917, and a few later appendices about apparitions and locutions she received as a nun. The memoirs are in addition to other correspondence to her superiors regarding the apparitions and the “Great Secret” of Fatima, in its three distinct parts. Recalling how the angel apparition began, she related:

In these accounts, Lucia wrote about her cousins’ lives, her own, the

“News that I was beginning my life as a shepherdess spread rapidly among the other shepherds; almost all of them came and offered to be my companions. I said 'Yes' to everybody, and arranged with each one to meet on the slopes of the serra. Next day, the serra was a solid mass of sheep with their shepherds, as though a cloud had descended upon it. But I felt ill at ease in the midst of such a hubbub. I therefore chose three companions from among the shepherds, and without saying a word to anyone, we arranged to pasture our sheep on the opposite slopes. These were the three I chose: Teresa Matias, her sister Maria Rosa and Maria Justino. On the following day, we set out in the direction of a hill known as the Cabego. We went up the northern slope. Valinhos, a place that Your Excellency already knows by name, is on the southern side of the same hill. On the eastern slope is the cave I have already spoken of, in my account of Jacinta. Together with our flocks, we climbed almost to the top of the hill. At our feet lay a wide expanse of trees—olives, oaks, pines, holmoaks, and so on, that stretched away down towards the level valley below.”

“Around midday, we ate our lunch. After this, I invited my companions to pray the Rosary with me, to which they eagerly agreed. We had hardly begun when, there before our eyes, we saw a figure poised in the air above the trees; it looked like a statue made of snow, rendered almost transparent by the rays of the sun.”

‘What is that?’ asked my companions, quite frightened.

‘I don't know!’

“We went on praying, with our eyes fixed on the figure before us, and as we finished our prayer, the figure disappeared. As was usual with me, I resolved to say nothing; but my companions told their families what had happened the very moment they reached home. The news soon spread, and one day when I arrived home, my mother questioned me:

‘Look here! They say you've seen I don't know what, up there. What was it you saw?’

‘I don't know,’ and as I could not explain it myself, I went on: ‘It looked like a person wrapped up in a sheet!’ As I meant to say that I couldn't discern its features, I added: ‘You couldn't make out any eyes, or hands, on it.’

“My mother put an end to the whole matter with a gesture of disgust: ‘Childish nonsense!’

“After some time, we returned with our flocks to the same place, and the very same thing happened again. My companions once more told the whole story. After a brief interval, the same thing was repeated. It was the third time that my mother heard all these things being talked about outside, without my having said a single word about them at home. She called me, therefore, quite displeased, and demanded:

‘Now, let us see! What is it that you girls say you saw over there?’

‘I don't know, Mother. I don't know what it is!’

“Some people started making fun of us. My sisters, recalling that for some time after my First Communion I had been quite abstracted, used to ask me rather scornfully:

‘Do you see someone wrapped in a sheet?’

“I felt these contemptuous words and gestures very keenly, as up to now I had been used to nothing but caresses. But this was nothing, really. You see, I did not know what the good Lord had in store for me in the future.” [\[46\]](#)

Three Cousins See the Angel, 1916

Lucia's memoirs also relate that a year later, sometime in the spring of 1916, “Francisco and Jacinta sought and obtained permission from their parents to start taking care of their own flock. So I left my good companions, and I joined my cousins, Francisco and Jacinta, instead. To avoid going to the serra with all the other shepherds, we arranged to pasture our flocks on properties belonging to my uncle and aunt and my parents.

“One fine day, we set out with our sheep for some land that my parents owned, which lay at the foot of the eastern slope of the hill that I have already mentioned. This property was called Chousa Velha. Soon after our arrival, about midmorning, a fine drizzle began to fall, so fine that it seemed like mist. We went up the hillside, followed by our flocks, looking for an overhanging boulder where we could take shelter. Thus it was for the first time that we entered this blessed hollow among the rocks. It stood in the middle of an olive grove belonging to my godfather Anastacio. From there, you could see the little village where I was born, my parents' home, and the hamlets of Casa Velha and Eira da Pedra. The olive grove, owned by several people, extended to within the confines of the hamlets themselves. We spent the day there among the rocks, in spite of the fact that the rain was over and the sun was shining bright and clear. We ate our lunch and said our Rosary. I'm not sure whether we said it that day in the way I have already described to Your Excellency, saying just the word Hail Mary and Our Father on each bead, so great was our eagerness to get to our play! Our prayer finished, we started to play 'pebbles'!"

"We had enjoyed the game for a few moments only, when a strong wind began to shake the trees. We looked up, startled, to see what was happening, for the day was unusually calm. Then we saw coming towards us, above the olive trees, the figure I have already spoken about. Jacinta and Francisco had never seen it before, nor had I ever mentioned it to them. As it drew closer, we were able to distinguish its features. It was a young man, about fourteen or fifteen years old, whiter than snow, transparent as crystal when the sun shines through it, and of great beauty. On reaching us, he said:

'Do not be afraid! I am the Angel of Peace. Pray with me.'

"Kneeling on the ground, he bowed down until his forehead touched the ground, and made us repeat these words three times:

'My God, I believe, I adore, I hope and I love Thee! I ask pardon of Thee for those who do not believe, do not adore, do not hope and do not love Thee.'

Then, rising, he said: 'Pray thus. The Hearts of Jesus and Mary are attentive to the voice of your supplications.'

"His words engraved themselves so deeply on our minds that we could never forget them. From then on, we used to spend long periods of time, prostrate like the Angel, repeating his words, until sometimes we fell, exhausted. I warned my companions, right away, that this must be kept secret and, thank God, they did what I wanted.

"Some time passed, and summer came, when we had to go home for siesta. One day, we were playing on the stone slabs of the well down at the bottom of the garden belonging to my parents, which we called the Arneiro... Suddenly, we saw beside us the same figure, or rather Angel, as it seemed to me.

'What are you doing?' he asked. 'Pray, pray very much! The most holy Hearts of Jesus and Mary have designs of mercy on you. Offer prayers and sacrifices constantly to the Most High.'

'How are we to make sacrifices?' I asked.

'Make of everything you can a sacrifice, and offer it to God as an act of reparation for the sins by which He is offended, and in supplication for the conversion of sinners. You will thus draw down peace upon your country. I am its Angel Guardian, the Angel of Portugal. Above all, accept and bear with submission, the suffering which the Lord will send you.'

"A considerable time had elapsed, when one day we went to pasture our sheep on a property belonging to my parents, which lay on the slope of the hill I have mentioned, a little higher up than Valinhos. It is an olive grove called Pregueira. After our lunch, we decided to go and pray in the hollow among the rocks on the opposite side of the hill. To get there, we went around the slope, and had to climb over some rocks above the Pregueira. The sheep could only scramble over these rocks with great difficulty.

"As soon as we arrived there, we knelt down, with our foreheads touching the ground, and began to repeat the prayer of the Angel: 'My God, I believe, I adore, I hope and I love Thee...' I don't know how many times we had repeated this prayer, when an extraordinary light shone upon us. We sprang up to see what was happening, and beheld the Angel. He was holding a chalice in his left hand, with the Host suspended above it, from which some drops of blood fell into the chalice. Leaving the chalice suspended in the air, the Angel knelt down beside us and made us repeat three times:

'O Most Holy Trinity, Father, Son and Holy Ghost, I adore Thee profoundly, and I offer Thee the Most Precious Body, Blood, Soul and Divinity of Jesus Christ, present in all the tabernacles of the world, in reparation for the outrages, sacrileges and indifferences with which He Himself is offended. And, through the infinite merits of His most Sacred Heart, and those of the Immaculate Heart of Mary, I beg of Thee the conversion of all poor sinners.'

"Then, rising, he took the chalice and the Host in his hands. He gave the Sacred Host to me, and shared the Blood from the chalice between Jacinta and Francisco, saying as he did so:

'Take and drink the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, horribly outraged by ungrateful men! Make reparation for their crimes and console your God.'

"Once again, he prostrated on the ground and repeated with us, three times more, the same prayer 'Most Holy Trinity...' and then disappeared.

"We remained a long time in this position, repeating the same words over and over again. When at last we stood up, we noticed that it was already dark, and therefore time to return home.”

It was the last time the three children saw the Angel, but they did not tell anyone of him. Francisco would ask Lucia questions because, as she and Jacinta had discovered, he could see the angel but he could not hear his words. The same would also occur with the later apparitions of the Virgin Mary.

After the first visitation of the Angel, as Lucia said, “It did not occur to us to speak about this Apparition, nor did we think of recommending that it be kept secret; the very Apparition itself imposed secrecy. It was so intimate, that it was not easy to speak of it at all.” She would also write, “The supernatural atmosphere which enveloped us was so intense, that we were for a long time scarcely aware of our own existence...The presence of God made itself felt so intimately and so intensely that we did not even venture to speak to one another. Next day, we were still immersed in this spiritual atmosphere.”

As for the final vision of the Angel of Peace, Lucia would later confide in her memoirs, “Impelled by the power of the supernatural that enveloped us, we imitated all that the Angel had done, prostrating ourselves on the ground as he did and repeating the prayers that he said. The force of the presence of God was so intense that it absorbed and almost completely annihilated us. It seemed to deprive us even of the use of our bodily senses for a considerable length of time. During those days, we performed all our exterior actions as though guided by that same supernatural being who was impelling us thereto. The peace and happiness which we felt were great, but wholly interior, for our souls were completely immersed in God.” [\[47\]](#)

PART 2

The Signs at Fatima, May-September 1917

“I dwelt in the highest places, and my throne is in a pillar of a cloud.”
–Ecclesiasticus 24:7

When people think about the Fatima apparitions, most recall in their minds a particular image of Our Lady, dressed all in white, standing with her bare feet upon a white puff of cloud. Rarely, one may see a holy card or picture of Our Lady of Fatima, with a backdrop of a twilight sky scattered with stars. What is not generally known is that the delicate white mist of cloud under the Virgin’s feet, the changed sky, and the stars are not artistic embellishments. People who came to the Fatima apparitions witnessed the unusual white cloud and other phenomena, all which hold a “highly symbolic and mystical significance.” [\[48\]](#)

Our Lady’s first visit to a small hamlet called Fatima, Portugal took place when the sun was directly overhead (called solar noon) on Sunday, May 13, 1917. Appearing in an open field known as the Cova da Iria (the Cove of Irene), “a Lady dressed all in white” stood lightly atop a carrasqueira, a young holmoak sapling that stood about three feet high and bore glossy, green leaves. On that day, the Lady appeared to three young children—Lucia dos Santos (age 10) and her two younger cousins, Francisco and Jacinta Marto (ages 9 and 7, respectively), and she asked them to return each month through October, “on the 13th day, at this same hour” [\[49\]](#) (solar noon). Promising to later give her name, she said only of herself, “I am of Heaven.” [\[50\]](#)

In her memoirs, Lucia briefly related the first apparition:

“High up on the slope in the Cova da Iria, I was playing with Jacinta and Francisco at building a little stone wall around a clump of furze. Suddenly we saw what seemed to be a flash of lightning.

‘We’d better go home,’ I said to my cousins, ‘that’s lightning; we may have a thunderstorm.’

‘Yes, indeed!’ they answered.

“We began to go down the slope, hurrying the sheep along towards the road. We were more or less half-way down the slope, and almost level with a large holmoak tree that stood there, when we saw another flash of lightning. We had only gone a few steps further when, there before us on a small holmoak, we beheld a Lady all dressed in white. She was more brilliant than the sun, and radiated a light more clear and intense than a crystal glass filled with sparkling water, when the rays of the burning sun shine through it.

“We stopped, astounded, before the Apparition. We were so close, just a few feet from her, that we were bathed in the light which surrounded her, or rather, which radiated from her. Then Our Lady spoke to us:

‘Do not be afraid. I will do you no harm.’

‘Where does your Grace come from?’

‘I am of Heaven.’

‘What does Your Grace want of me?’

‘I have come to ask you to come here for six months in succession, on the 13th day, at this same hour. Later on, I will tell you who I am and what I want. Afterwards, I will return here yet a seventh time.’

‘Shall I go to Heaven too?’

‘Yes, you will.’

‘And Jacinta?’

‘She will go also.’

‘And Francisco?’

‘He will go there too, but he must say many Rosaries.’

“Then I remembered to ask about two girls who had died recently. They were friends of mine and used to come to my home to learn weaving with my eldest sister.

‘Is Maria das Neves in Heaven?’

‘Yes, she is.’ (I think she was about 16 years old).

‘And Amelia?’

‘She will be in Purgatory until the end of the world.’ (It seems to me that she was between 18 and 20 years of age).

‘Are you willing to offer yourselves to God and bear all the sufferings He wills to send you, as an act of reparation for the sins by which He is offended, and of supplication for the conversion of sinners?’

‘Yes, we are willing.’

‘Then you are going to have much to suffer, but the grace of God will be your comfort.’

“As she pronounced these last words ‘...the grace of God will be your comfort,’ Our Lady opened her hands for the first time, communicating to us a light so intense that, as it streamed from her hands, its rays penetrated our hearts and the innermost depths of our souls, making us see ourselves in God, Who was that light, more clearly than we see ourselves in the best of mirrors. Then, moved by an interior impulse that was also communicated to us, we fell on our knees, repeating in our hearts:

‘O Most Holy Trinity, I adore Thee! My God, my God, I love Thee in the most Blessed Sacrament!’

“After a few moments, Our Lady spoke again:

‘Pray the Rosary every day, in order to obtain peace for the world, and the end of the war.’

“Then she began to rise serenely, going up towards the east, until she disappeared in the immensity of space. The light that surrounded her seemed to open up a path before her in the firmament, and for this reason we sometimes said that we saw Heaven opening.”

Lucia went on to explain, “The Apparitions of Our Lady inspired neither fear nor fright, but rather surprise. When I was asked if I had experienced fear, and I said that we had, I was referring to the fear we felt when we saw the flashes of lightning and thought that a thunderstorm was at hand. It was from this that we wished to escape, as we were used to seeing lightning only when it thundered. Besides, the flashes of lightning were not really lightning, but the reflected rays of a light which was approaching. It was because we saw the light, that we sometimes said we saw Our Lady coming; but, properly speaking, we only perceived Our Lady in that light when she was already on the holmoak tree. The fact that we did not know how to explain this, and that we wished to avoid questions, caused us to say sometimes that we saw her coming, and other times that we did not. When we said we saw her coming, we were referring to the approach of the light, which after all was herself. And when we said we did not see her coming, we were referring to the fact that we really saw Our Lady only when she was on the holmoak.” [\[51\]](#)

Another interesting detail became known years later. When assisting Fr. Thomas McGlynn, O.P., who sculpted the first statue of Our Lady of Fatima, Lucia told him, “She always had a star on her tunic” and “She always had a cord with a little ball of light.” [\[52\]](#) As he asked for details of color, Lucia said, “The light of Our Lady was white, and the star was yellow...She was all of light. The light had various tones, yellow and white and various other colors. It was more intense and less intense. It was by the different tones and by the differences of intensity that one saw what was hand and what was mantle and what was face and what was tunic.” [53]

Questioned again at a later point, she thrice confirmed to Fr. McGlynn that the star and the cord were yellow, not the color of gold. Lucia, incidentally, described both the cord and the star as a more intense and yellow light.

The yellow star that shone between the knee and hem of the Fatima Virgin’s tunic is known as the “Star of Esther,” a symbolic reference to the Old Testament history of Queen Esther, the Jewish queen of pagan Persia, who saved her people from total annihilation on the 13th day of Adar. Church Doctors like St. Albert the Great (called “the Great” due for his surpassing knowledge and wisdom in science, philosophy, and theology, he is also known in Latin as St. Albertus Magnus) and St. Alphonsus de Liguori (Italian Catholic bishop, spiritual writer, scholastic philosopher and theologian) recognized Queen Esther as a historical figure-type of the Virgin Mary.

The Fatima apparitions reveal so much more of this typology that my study on Queen Esther and the date of 13 Adar (according to the ancient Hebrew calendar) and their varied links to Our Lady of Fatima resulted in my 2008 series of articles, initially published in Catholic Family News and then, with the copyright notice attributing the rights to me, on my own blog. The first article in the series (“Hidden Revelations: The Star of Esther and the Secrets of Fatima”) gained the most attention. Unfortunately, it has also been copied in full or in part to various pages on the Internet, often with neither proper credit nor my permission. That said, after the 2008 series was published, “Hidden Revelations” eventually became a subject of Internet discussions and debates on various Catholic boards.

By 2013, however, “Hidden Revelations,” especially the sections on Esther’s original Hebrew name and its meaning, as well as the significance of the 13th day of Adar to Fatima, became increasingly recognized as valid input. Imitation may be the sincerest form of flattery, because sections of the work (including its footnotes) were quoted verbatim, in sermons and articles both on and off the Internet, but again without any acknowledgement of the author. I ask the reader to kindly understand that, for the two following reasons, I only provide this brief mention of my study and my 2008 article(s) because: 1) It is not difficult to foresee that there will be those who shall presume that I have utilized the work of another while neglecting the courtesy of mentioning the source. Giving credit where it is due is one thing for which I always strive in my writing, as I trust that both the number of this book's footnotes (1,061 in total) and the manuscript's mention of specific sources will prove, and 2) most imperative, the typology of Queen Esther to the Virgin Mary of Fatima is so striking that the 2008 series, all of which is my original work, is later shared (and only slightly rearranged in order) as Parts 10-13 of this book.

June: The First Signs

Except for the children, there were no other people present in May. Lucia had no intention of mentioning to anyone the Apparition. She asked her cousins to also saying nothing, to which they both agreed. However, little Jacinta could not contain her enthusiasm and immediately told her mother, Olympia Marto. While Olympia was incredulous, her husband Ti Marto did not hesitate to muse that it could be possible that the Virgin appeared to the three children, as she had done at Lourdes and LaSalette. He knew his children never lied and that they had not enough knowledge to make up such a detailed story. However, Jacinta's revelation led to severe repercussions for her cousin Lucia, whose mother for some reason believed her forthright and youngest child was lying.

As word of the Vision spread, however, a great number assumed that the "Lady dressed all in white" was the Holy Mother of God. Starting in June 1917, each month brought an increasing number of both pilgrims and scoffers alike. Each month, only the three children could see the Lady. Each month, the ever-growing crowd (who did not see the Apparition of the Lady) was permitted to witness seemingly inexplicable, external signs which attested to the presence of a heavenly being.

When the Virgin returned on Wednesday, June 13, 1917, the three children were waiting for her. So were at least 50 other people who came to see for themselves what was really happening in Fatima. June 13 was the Feast of St. Anthony of Padua, a very popular day among the Catholics of Portugal. Lucia's mother had hoped that the village festival in honor of St. Anthony would halt Lucia from going to the Cova, while the parents of Francisco and Jacinta allowed the little ones to decide where they would go that day.

- It was at this June apparition that onlookers first saw a little cloud over the holmoak tree. Maria Carreira, one of those who saw the mysterious vapor only as the Apparition ended, said "we saw nothing but a slight cloud, just a few inches away from the foliage, rising slowly toward the east.” At another time, she said that “it was a little cloud...which went up gently in the direction of the east, until it finally disappeared completely.” [54] It seems that Lucia and her cousins did not see this cloud resting on the holmoak tree because, in after years, Lucia would say, “The people spoke of a cloud but I saw none. Our Lady’s feet rested lightly on the top of the leaves.” [55]

- “During the vision,” stated another witness, “the branches of the tree were bent down all around” as if someone was stepping upon the branches. Yet another witness remarked that “when Lucia announced that Our Lady was leaving in the direction of the east, all the branches of the tree picked up and leaned in the same direction, as if Our Lady, as she left, had let her dress rest upon the boughs.” [56]

- When the cloud was no longer in sight, others also noticed that the little holmoak tree’s shoots, which had formerly been standing upright, were bent and inclined toward the east. [57]

- Moments earlier, during the Apparition, some of the fifty onlookers discerned an unintelligible murmur, “like the sound of a very faint voice, but we could not understand what it was saying; it was like the buzzing of a bee.” [58] Heard only between Lucia’s words to the invisible Lady, the mysterious sound appeared to be the Lady’s responses to the child.

What the Children Saw

As the witnesses saw or heard these first signs in June, what did the children experience? It soon became apparent that all three children could see the Lady, but Francisco could not hear her. Lucia, the eldest cousin, was the only one who spoke to the heavenly visitor. Once more, we rely on Lucia’s written testimony:

“As soon as Jacinta, Francisco and I had finished praying the Rosary, with a number of other people who were present, we saw once more the flash reflecting the light which was approaching (which we called lightning). The next moment, Our Lady was there on the holmoak, exactly the same as in May.”

However, in June, there was one slight difference which the child Lucia would not reveal until she was a nun and writing the memoirs. In the June 1917 apparition alone, the Lady showed the children her Immaculate Heart, encircled and pierced by thorns but displaying no swords through the Heart, as in usual artistic renditions of the Sorrowful and Immaculate Heart of Mary. When one considers this difference, it also makes sense, for the swords represent the Virgin's sorrows as the Mother of Christ, especially during His Passion and Crucifixion. The thorns, however, represent the sins of mankind. The children interiorly felt that they should not reveal this "secret," which they would in July learn is the true center of the Fatima message.

'What do you want of me?' I asked.

'I wish you to come here on the 13th of next month, to pray the Rosary every day, and to learn to read. Later, I will tell you what I want.'

I asked for the cure of a sick person.

'If he is converted, he will be cured during the year.'

'I would like to ask you to take us to Heaven.'

'Yes. I will take Jacinta and Francisco soon. But you are to stay here some time longer. Jesus wishes to make use of you to make me known and loved. He wants to establish in the world devotion to My Immaculate Heart. I promise salvation to those who embrace it, and those souls will be loved by God like flowers placed by me to adorn His throne.'

'Am I to stay here alone?' I asked, sadly.

'No, my daughter. Are you suffering a great deal? Don't lose heart. I will never forsake you. My Immaculate Heart will be your refuge, and the path that will lead you to God.'

"As Our Lady spoke these last words, she opened her hands and for the second time, she communicated to us the rays of that same immense light. We saw ourselves in this light, as it were, immersed in God. Jacinta and Francisco seemed to be in that part of the light which rose towards Heaven, and I in that which was poured out on the earth. In front of the palm of Our Lady's right hand was a heart encircled by thorns which pierced it. We understood that this was the Immaculate Heart of Mary, outraged by the sins of humanity, and seeking reparation."

Of the light, Lucia would later reveal, "I think that, on that day, the main purpose of this light was to infuse within us a special knowledge and love for the Immaculate Heart of Mary...From that day onwards, our hearts were filled with a more ardent love for the Immaculate Heart of Mary." [59]

"You know now, Your Excellency, what we referred to when we said that Our Lady had revealed a secret to us in June. At the time, Our Lady did not tell us to keep it secret, but we felt moved to do so by God." The secret of June 1917 was the Immaculate Heart of Mary which, the children immediately grasped, was “outraged by the sins of humanity, and seeking reparation.” This manifestation in June, the month in which the Church honors the Sacred Heart of Jesus, also shows that it is God’s will to make the Virgin Mary better known and loved, honoring her Heart beside the adoration of His own.

July: Six Signs Granted to the People

On July 13, the Lady promised the children, “In October, I will tell you who I am and what I want, and I will perform a miracle so that all may believe.” [60] Then the Virgin showed and told the children a secret—what is today known as the “Great Secret” of Fatima, which has three distinct parts called the First Secret, the Second Secret, and the Third Secret. For the growing crowd of people [61] who came to see the child visionaries, many (but not all) would also see and hear the unexpected.

1. Most of the witnesses who were closest to the spot where the Lady appeared heard a far-away, indescribable sound, perceived only in response to Lucia’s words. [62]

2. The atmosphere changed. As one witness stated, “The luminosity of the sky noticeably decreased, as during an eclipse, the whole time the ecstasy of the children lasted,” [63] and stars were seen in the midday sky.

3. At the height of a Portuguese summer, the very hot temperature suddenly dropped to a pleasant degree, accompanied by “a cool fresh breeze.” [64]

4. The color of the atmosphere became yellow as gold. [65]

5. During the Vision, a cloud again appeared and rested on the holmoak tree—but this time it gently spilled down and extended around the children. [66]

6. A “large clap of thunder” was heard just seconds before the eldest child, Lucia, suddenly jumped up from her kneeling position, exclaiming, “There she goes! There she goes!” as the Lady departed. The thunder shook the ground, so that a small arch placed by the apparition site “trembled as if in an earthquake.” [67]

In her memoirs to the bishop, Lucia described what she and her cousins witnessed during this central Fatima apparition, the one in which the children were given the “Great Secret” in its three distinct parts. One will note in the following memoirs the manner in which she records the Virgin’s words, especially the sentence which Fatima scholars agree introduces the Third Secret: “In Portugal, the dogma of the faith will always be preserved, etc.”—the et cetera clearly denoting that there is more to follow.

“A few moments after arriving at the Cova da Iria, near the holmoak, where a large number of people were praying the Rosary, we saw the flash of light once more, and a moment later Our Lady appeared on the holmoak.

‘What do you want of me?’ I asked.

‘I want you to come here on the 13th of next month, to continue to pray the Rosary every day in honour of Our Lady of the Rosary, in order to obtain peace for the world and the end of the war, because only she can help you.’

‘I would like to ask you to tell us who you are, and to work a miracle so that everybody will believe that you are appearing to us.’

‘Continue to come here every month. In October, I will tell you who I am and what I want, and I will perform a miracle for all to see and believe.’

“I then made some requests, but I cannot recall now just what they were. What I do remember is that Our Lady said it was necessary for such people to pray the Rosary in order to obtain these graces during the year. And she continued:

‘Sacrifice yourselves for sinners, and say many times, especially whenever you make some sacrifice: O my Jesus, it is for love of Thee, for the conversion of sinners, and in reparation for the sins committed against the Immaculate Heart of Mary.’

“As Our Lady spoke these last words, she opened her hands once more, as she had done during the two previous months. The rays of light seemed to penetrate the earth, and we saw as it were a sea of fire. Plunged in this fire were demons and souls in human form, like transparent burning embers, all blackened or burnished bronze, floating about in the conflagration, now raised into the air by the flames that issued from within themselves together with great clouds of smoke now falling back on every side like sparks in huge fires, without weight or equilibrium, amid shrieks and groans of pain and despair, which horrified us and made us tremble with fear. (It must have been this sight which caused me to cry out, as people say they heard me). The demons could be distinguished by their terrifying and repellent likeness to frightful and unknown animals, black and transparent like burning coals.

“Terrified and as if to plead for succor, we looked up at Our Lady, who said to us, so kindly and so sadly:

‘You have seen hell where the souls of poor sinners go. To save them, God wishes to establish in the world devotion to My Immaculate Heart. If what I say to you is done, many souls will be saved and there will be peace. The war is going to end; but if people do not cease offending God, a worse one will break out during the reign of Pius XI. When you see a night illumined by an unknown light, know that this is the great sign given you by God that He is about to punish the world for its crimes, by means of war, famine, and persecutions of the Church and of the Holy Father.' [\[68\]](#)

'To prevent this, I shall come to ask for the consecration of Russia to My Immaculate Heart, and the Communion of Reparation on the First Saturdays. If my requests are heeded, Russia will be converted, and there will be peace; if not, she will spread her errors throughout the world, causing wars and persecutions of the Church. The good will be martyred, the Holy Father will have much to suffer, various nations will be annihilated. In the end, My Immaculate Heart will triumph. The Holy Father will consecrate Russia to me, and she will be converted, and an era of peace will be granted to the world.'

'In Portugal, the dogma of the Faith will always be preserved; etc...
Do not tell this to anybody. Francisco, yes, you may tell him.'

(Again we are reminded that Francisco alone, who could see the Vision, could not hear the Virgin's words. The same phenomenon had occurred with the Angel's visits. Afterward, when the children were alone, Francisco would ask the two girls what the Angel or the Lady had told them.)

The Virgin's sentence about Portugal and the dogma of the Faith, as mentioned earlier, is considered by Fatima scholars as the opening text of the Third Secret. Reason alone conveys that the "et cetera" reveals that clarifying words follow, otherwise the prophecy about Portugal and the dogma of the Faith is incomplete. After all, it has been known for decades that the "Great Secret of Fatima", as also heretofore mentioned, is not three separate Secrets but one whole Secret, with three distinct parts.

The Third Secret also contains a Vision, which clearly relates to the missing text of Our Lady's words: "In Portugal, the dogma of the Faith will always be preserved, etc." It was not until June 26, 2000, that the Vatican finally released the description of what some prelates (but never any Pope) claim is the whole Third Secret (but which many logically conclude is only a part of the entire Third Secret). The following English translation is how it appears on the Vatican website:

"After the two parts which I have already explained, at the left of Our Lady and a little above, we saw an Angel with a flaming sword in his left hand; flashing, it gave out flames that looked as though they would set the world on fire; but they died out in contact with the splendour that Our Lady radiated towards him from her right hand: pointing to the earth with his right hand, the Angel cried out in a loud voice: 'Penance, Penance, Penance!'

"And we saw in an immense light that is God: 'something similar to how people appear in a mirror when they pass in front of it,' a Bishop dressed in White 'we had the impression that it was the Holy Father.' Other Bishops, Priests, men and women Religious going up a steep mountain, at the top of which there was a big Cross of rough-hewn trunks as of a cork-tree with the bark; before reaching there the Holy Father passed through a big city half in ruins and half trembling with halting step, afflicted with pain and sorrow, he prayed for the souls of the corpses he met on his way; having reached the top of the mountain, on his knees at the foot of the big Cross he was killed by a group of soldiers who fired bullets and arrows at him, and in the same way there died one after another the other Bishops, Priests, men and women Religious, and various lay people of different ranks and positions. Beneath the two arms of the Cross there were two Angels each with a crystal aspersorium in his hand, in which they gathered up the blood of the Martyrs and with it sprinkled the souls that were making their way to God." [\[69\]](#)

After the Great Secret was revealed, Lucia related that the Virgin Mary then said:

*'When you pray the Rosary, say after each mystery: O my Jesus, forgive us our sins, save us from the fires of hell. Lead all souls to Heaven, especially those with the greatest need of Thy mercy.

"After this, there was a moment of silence, and then I asked: 'Is there anything more that you want of me?'

'No, I do not want anything more of you today.'

"Then, as before Our Lady began to ascend towards the east, until she finally disappeared in the immense distance of the firmament."

The children were immediately surrounded by people with questions: "What did the Lady say to you? Why did you go so white? Why did you cry out in fear? What happened?"

Lucia could only answer, "It's a secret."

The crowds continued to close in, so that Ti Marto (as the father of Francisco and Jacinta was called in the village) lifted little Jacinta, covered her face with his hat, and made his way through the throng. Two other men carried Lucia and Francisco, holding the children high in their arms. As she was being carried above shoulder-level, the exhausted Lucia announced to the crowd that the Lady promised a Miracle for October 13. One can imagine the effect of the stunning announcement on a crowd that had already witnessed such amazing signs. Due to those present at the July 1917 apparition, word of the promised Miracle quickly spread throughout Portugal.

August: The Lady's Invisible Presence and a Boom of Thunder

In the morning of August 13, the children were abducted by the Masonic mayor of their locality. They were, therefore, unable to meet the Lady at the appointed place and time. Certainly, Heaven knew that the children were not present at the Cova di Iria, where the Apparition appeared. But God deigned to grant certain signs to the throng of people, thus manifesting the Lady's unseen presence.

The sun shone brightly in the clear August sky, and those who came to Fatima eagerly awaited the arrival of the children and the noon hour. Then word came and spread throughout the crowd that the mayor had kidnapped the young visionaries. As the people began to talk among themselves, the hour of solar noon commenced—as did certain signs previously seen and heard in July:

- First came an extremely loud boom of thunder, which so badly frightened the people that many scattered and ran, thinking they would be killed. Maria Carreira, eyewitness to every Fatima apparition since June 1917, said, “Some thought the thunder came from the road; others thought it came from the holmoak; but it seemed to me that it came from a distance. It frightened us all...” [\[70\]](#)

- A flash of lightning, following the thunder, also garnered the attention of the now-silenced crowd. This “flash,” seen only by the three children, served as the sign of the Virgin's approach. [\[71\]](#) In August, when the children were not present, it was the crowd who perceived it. [\[72\]](#)

- Immediately after the “flash,” a little cloud, described as very delicate and very white, appeared and hovered over the little holmoak tree for a few minutes, “and then rose in the air and disappeared.” [\[73\]](#)

- Simultaneously, there was a change of atmosphere, in which people saw “all the colors of the rainbow, pink, red, blue....The trees seemed to be made not of leaves but of flowers...The ground came out in colors and so did our clothes. The lanterns fixed to the arch looked like gold.” [74] (At the initiative of Signora Maria Carreira, the villager who since June 1917 came to the Cova on the 13th of the month, a humble wooden arch, to which was added on each side a plain lantern, was erected over the holmoak tree.)

“When the signs disappeared, the people seemed to realize that Our Lady had come and, not finding the children, had returned,” as Maria Carreira would later say. “They felt that Our Lady was disappointed and hence they were exceedingly upset.” [75]

Among themselves, the awed people agreed that the Lady had indeed come—with many incensed “against those who had the audacity to deprive the Most Holy Virgin of her usual confidants.” [76] In fact, history records that a group of pilgrims went in search of the perpetrator or suspected accomplices, demanding the children’s return. [77]

Meanwhile, over the course of three days (August 13-15, 1917), the young ones endured a roller-coaster of interrogation, enticing promises, a malicious charade of facing death should they refuse to deny seeing the Lady from Heaven, and finally, imprisonment with adult malefactors. Through it all, the three children remained faithful to what they had earlier reported, but they refused to divulge anything pertaining to the Secret.

The little ones were released to their parents on August 15, the very day on which the Church celebrates the Assumption of Mary, body and soul, into Heaven. (In 1917, the Assumption of the Virgin Mary was a Church doctrine. It was not solemnly defined as a dogma until 1950.) Our Lady unexpectedly appeared to the children on Sunday, August 19. She again promised a miracle in the last month “so that all may believe.” She also told the children, “If you had not been taken away to the City, the miracle would have been greater,” [78] thus emphasizing God’s revealed truth that all people are affected by every sin that wounds the Mystical Body of Christ.

Again, Lucia recorded what happened on that day:

“I was accompanied by Francisco and his brother John. We were with the sheep in a place called Valinhos, when we felt something supernatural approaching and enveloping us. Suspecting that Our Lady was about to appear to us, and feeling sorry lest Jacinta might miss seeing her, we asked her brother to go and call her. As he was unwilling to go, I offered him two small coins, and off he ran.”

“Meanwhile, Francisco and I saw the flash of light, which we called lightning. Jacinta arrived, and a moment later, we saw Our Lady on a holmoak tree.”

‘What do you want of me?’

‘I want you to continue going to the Cova da Iria on the 13th, and to continue praying the Rosary every day. In the last month, I will perform a miracle so that all may believe.’ (Note that this is the second time the Virgin promised an October miracle.)

‘What do you want done with the money that the people leave in the Cova da Iria?’

‘Have two litters made. One is to be carried by you and Jacinta and two other girls dressed in white; the other one is to be carried by Francisco and three other boys. The money from the litters is for the ‘festa’ of Our Lady of the Rosary, and what is left over will help towards the construction of a chapel that is to be built here.’

‘I would like to ask you to cure some sick persons.’

‘Yes, I will cure some of them during the year.’

Then, looking very sad, Our Lady said: ‘Pray, pray very much, and make sacrifices for sinners; for many souls go to hell, because there are none to sacrifice themselves and to pray for them.’

“And she began to ascend as usual towards the east.”

September: A Luminous Globe, a Pillar of Cloud, and a Shower of Flowers

On the liturgical calendar, September is the month in which the Church honors Our Lady’s Nativity (Sept. 8), the Holy Name of Mary (Sept. 12), her Seven Sorrows (Sept. 15), and Our Lady of Ransom (Sept. 24).

At Fatima in 1917, September was the month before the promised miracle. It was also the month after the children were kidnapped, when—as far as the public knew—they missed their August visit with the Lady. Rather than discouraging pilgrims from the site, even more came.

Perhaps it is for all of the reasons stated above that, during the apparition of Thursday, September 13, the celestial phenomena became more pronounced. In fact, during the September Apparition, the people saw a new sign—a luminescent globe. Later, the cloud accompanying the Vision wrought itself into an incense-like pillar.

On this day, the sky was deep and blue, and entirely without a trace of cloud, as was reported by Fr. John Quaresma who, in later years, became the Vicar General of Leiria, Portugal. With two other priests, Fr. Quaresma came to Fatima, trying to ascertain the truth of the reports they had heard.

He and his companions disguised themselves by wearing suit-coats. “All three were at a distance from the crowd, on the raised part of the Cova, observing events.” [\[79\]](#)

Years later, a letter of Fr. Quaresma’s, written in 1932 to another priest, provides the most details of what happened during the September Apparition. From Father’s letter, we learn the following:

- For the first time, many of the onlookers saw a luminous globe, moving from east to west at midday, the exact time that the Lady always asked the children to meet her. From what is gathered by his testimony, Fr. Quaresma only saw this globe of “extraordinary light” for a brief time. Others saw it travel across the sky and descend toward the holmoak tree. As the Vision ended, witnesses again saw the globe of light, departing toward the east.

- As the globe approached the small tree, the brightness of the sun lessened, the surrounding atmosphere became a golden-yellow, and some people reported seeing stars in the sky.

- During the Apparition, a greater number of the onlookers observed a shower of small white objects—described either as petals, snowflakes, dove-shaped forms, stars, or roses—all of which gently fell from the sky and disappeared before touching the ground. [\[80\]](#)

- A “pleasant looking cloud formed around the rustic arch” over the holmoak tree, where Our Lady appeared. “Rising up from the ground, it grew thicker and went up into the air until it was five or six meters high; then it disappeared like smoke that vanishes before the wind...A few moments later, similar curls of smoke were formed and disappeared in the same manner, and then a third time. Everything happened as though some invisible thurifers were incensing the Vision liturgically. These three ‘incensations’ together lasted the whole time of the apparition; that is, from ten to fifteen minutes.” [\[81\]](#)

Once more, Lucia testifies to what happened on this September day, where the throngs of people were larger than ever before:

“As the hour approached, I set out with Jacinta and Francisco, but owing to the crowds around us we could only advance with difficulty. The roads were packed with people, and everyone wanted to see us and speak to us. There was no human respect whatsoever. Simple folk, and even ladies and gentlemen, struggled to break through the crowd that pressed around us. No sooner had they reached us than they threw themselves on their knees before us, begging us to place their petitions before Our Lady. Others who could not get close to us shouted from a distance:

‘For the love of God, ask Our Lady to cure my son who is a cripple!’ Yet another cried out: ‘And to cure mine who is blind!...To cure mine who is deaf!...To bring back my husband, my son, who has gone to the war!... To convert a sinner!...To give me back my health as I have tuberculosis!’ and so on.

“All the afflictions of poor humanity were assembled there. Some climbed up to the tops of trees and walls to see us go by, and shouted down to us. Saying yes to some, giving a hand to others and helping them up from the dusty ground, we managed to move forward, thanks to some gentlemen who went ahead and opened a passage for us through the multitude.

“Now, when I read in the New Testament about those enchanting scenes of Our Lord's passing through Palestine, I think of those which Our Lord allowed me to witness, while yet a child, on the poor roads and lanes from Aljustrel to Fatima and on to the Cova da Iria! I give thanks to God, offering Him the faith of our good Portuguese people, and I think: ‘If these people so humbled themselves before three poor children, just because they were mercifully granted the grace to speak to the Mother of God, what would they not do if they saw Our Lord Himself in person before them?’

“Well, none of this was called for here! It was a distraction of my pen, leading me away where I did not mean to go. But, never mind! It's just another useless digression. I am not tearing it out, so as not to spoil the notebook.

“At last, we arrived at the Cova da Iria, and on reaching the holmoak we began to say the Rosary with the people. Shortly afterwards, we saw the flash of light, and then Our Lady appeared on the holmoak.

‘Continue to pray the Rosary in order to obtain the end of the war. In October Our Lord will come, as well as Our Lady of Dolours and Our Lady of Carmel. Saint Joseph will appear with the Child Jesus to bless the world. God is pleased with your sacrifices. He does not want you to sleep with the rope on, but only to wear it during the daytime.’ (Author's Note: The children had been making many sacrifices, including constantly wearing under their clothing a rough bit of rope they discovered while playing. They cut the rope in thirds, each taking a part to wrap around their waists. The rope hurt and chafed terribly but, like the other penances they were offering, the three young ones kept this sacrifice for the conversion of sinners a secret among themselves.)

‘I was told to ask you many things, the cure of some sick people, of a deaf-mute...’

‘Yes, I will cure some, but not others because God has no confidence in them. In October, I will perform a miracle so that all may believe.’ (Note that this is the Virgin’s third affirmation of an October miracle.)

“Then Our Lady began to rise as usual, and disappeared.”

Seeking the Meaning of the Signs

Of all the signs given to the people since June 13, the delicate cloud is a constant. Those who saw it confirmed that it rested on the holmoak tree during the Apparitions, always coming forth from, and returning to, the east. In July, it reached out to surround the children, who would see and hear the “Great Secret” of Fatima. In August, despite the children’s absence, the beautiful cloud still manifested itself.

And then, in September, when the sky was blue and clear, the preternatural mist once more appeared at the very site of the Apparition, thickly rising from the ground to an impressive height. Three times in September, this remarkable cloud exhibited the characteristics of blessed, burning incense which, in the Church, is used during solemn liturgies and Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament. At the last Apparition of October, 1917—the month of the prodigious Miracle of the Sun—it would do so again.

What is the meaning of the extraordinary cloud? Why did it always come forth from the east and depart hence? Why did thunder sometimes announce the Lady’s approach or departure? Why were stars seen at noontime? What of the sudden atmospheric changes or mysterious flowers seen on trees, at the very height of a hot summer? Can we discover the significance of the other signs? To find the answers, we must look to the two sources of Divine Revelation—Tradition and Scripture.

PART 3

The Cloud, Sign of the Holy Trinity

“You, O Mary...are a living Tabernacle, a Monstrance, a living Temple, the permanent abode of the Most Holy Trinity, Mother of God and Our Mother...”

–Sr. Maria Lucia
of the Immaculate Heart, eldest of the Fatima visionaries

Throughout salvation history, the signs of God indicate various purposes. A true sign can possess any one or more of the following seven functions: It confirms God’s word, His goodness, authenticates prophecy, verifies God’s blessings and His intervention for the sake of the elect, strengthens the faithful with hope, insures or testifies God’s Presence, or declares His judgment upon sin. [82] Not only do the 1917 apparitions of the Virgin Mary at Fatima fulfill all seven functions of Scriptural signs, they also serve as a “Mariophany.”

To understand what is meant by “Mariophany,” we must look to the definition of “Theophany,” which comes from the ancient Greek (ἡ) Θεοφάνεια - Theophaneia and means “appearance of God.” The Concise Catholic Dictionary defines “theophany” as follows: “[1] Appearances or visions of God to man or the direct communication of God with man. [2] The apparitions of God to man, usually as recorded in Genesis where God appeared visibly to man as Lawgiver, Judge, and Prophet. They taught that there was only one God and that God Himself was speaking to man.” [83] In both Christian and Jewish usage, the word refers to “the manifestation of God to man; the sensible sign (i.e., one or more of the five senses, such as sight, scent, hearing, taste, or touch) by which the Presence of God is revealed.” [84]

In brief, “Mariophany” may be defined as “appearances of Mary” to man. Like the word “theophany,” however, there are rich, deeper meanings to this one term. “Mariophany” refers to the apparitions of Mary when she, already assumed body and soul into Heaven, appears visibly to a person (or persons) to remind all of mankind to turn to God, Who is Lawgiver, Judge, and Prophet. “Mariophany” can also mean the manifestation of Mary in which God emphasizes her office throughout all of salvation history, from Genesis to the Apocalypse. Finally, “Mariophany” signifies God’s Triune Presence in the Immaculate Virgin, through whom He reveals Himself via “sensible signs.”

Examining the Sensible Signs at Fatima

As previously noted in the first part of this work, witness testimonies reveal the following “sensible signs” seen at Fatima over the course of five months:

- A delicate white cloud, traveling from east to west, serenely settling over a young holmoak tree. The same cloud, after resting on the tree during the entire time of the Apparition, rose and departed from whence it came –toward the east.

- In July (the month in which the Virgin gave the children a Great Secret), the cloud (mentioned above), three times curling and rising into the air during the whole time of the Apparition—as though invisible thurifers were liturgically incensing the Vision.

- Claps of thunder, either as the Lady arrived or as she departed.
- Flashes of light, as the Vision approached the small holmoak tree.
- The ground of the apparition site momentarily trembling, like the briefest of earthquakes.

- The branches and shoots of the young holmoak tree mysteriously bending to the east after the Apparition departed.

- Atmospheric changes of the sky’s luminosity, similar to a solar eclipse, or changes of unusual color, from yellow gold to all the colors of the rainbow. Some people reported seeing stars in the sky at solar noon.

- A relieving drop in temperature, during the hottest days of summer, accompanied by a cool fresh breeze.

- Small, white objects described as stars, roses, or doves gently falling from the sky, only to disappear before touching the ground.

- A globe of extraordinary light that glided, from east to west, descending toward the small holmoak tree.

“Of all the signs witnessed by the people since June 13, the delicate cloud is a constant,” as Part I of this book also observed. “...In July, it reached out to surround the children, who would see and hear the ‘Great Secret’ of Fatima. In August, despite the children’s absence, the beautiful cloud still manifested itself.”

“And then, in September, when the sky was blue and clear, the preternatural mist once more appeared at the very site of the Apparition, extending itself over the holmoak tree, down to the ground, only to rise up to an impressive height. Three times in September, this remarkable cloud exhibited the characteristics of blessed, burning incense. At the last Apparition of October, 1917—the month of the prodigious Miracle of the Sun—it would do so again.”[85]

The Cloud in Holy Scripture

What is the meaning of this cloud, this one recurring sign, seen by the people during every Apparition of the Lady? Since only the three young shepherd children could see a beautiful Lady dressed all in white, the people of humble and simple faith immediately concluded that the cloud revealed the presence of the Virgin Mary. Like the Scriptural theophanies wherein the Lord our God revealed His Presence in the form of a cloud or a pillar of cloud, one can say that the beautiful mist at Fatima also manifested the presence of the Holy Trinity within the Virgin Mary, who is God’s living, perpetual Tabernacle.

Frère Michel of the Holy Trinity, a most astute Fatima historian and apologist, was careful to point out this biblical theophany which occurred in 1917. In discerning the meaning of the cloud, he wrote that “from the giving of the law to Moses on Sinai to the Transfiguration of Jesus on Tabor, the cloud always appears in sacred history as the symbol and sensible expression of the divine Presence.” Let us look, then, to some of the Scriptures which record the Lord God manifesting His Presence in the form of a cloud or a pillar of cloud:

- “Behold, the Lord is riding on a swift cloud and comes to Egypt; and the idols of Egypt will tremble in his presence.” (Isaiah 19:1) St. Jerome, St. Proclus and many early writers considered the “swift cloud” to be an opaque reference to the Virgin Mary. Since the Hebrew word “qual” means either swift or light (as in weight, not brightness), St. Jerome noted that “surely we ought to see in the light cloud holy Mary, who was not weighed down by any manly seed.” [86]

- “And the Lord went before them to shew the way by day in a pillar of a cloud, and by night in a pillar of fire: that he might be the guide of their journey at both times.” (Exodus 13:21)

- “And the angel of God, who went before the camp of Israel, removing, went behind them: and together with him the pillar of the cloud, leaving the forepart...” (Exodus 14:19)

- “And now the morning watch was come, and behold the Lord looking upon the Egyptian army through the pillar of fire and of the cloud, slew their host.” (Exodus 14:24)

- “And when Aaron spoke to all the assembly of the children of Israel, they looked towards the wilderness: and behold the glory of the Lord appeared in a cloud.” (Exodus 16:10)

- “And the glory of the Lord dwelt upon Sinai, covering it with a cloud six days: and the seventh day he called him out of the midst of the cloud.” (Exodus 24:16)

- “And when he was gone into the tabernacle of the covenant, the pillar of the cloud came down, and stood at the door, and he spoke with Moses.” (Exodus 33:9)

- “And all saw that the pillar of the cloud stood at the door of the tabernacle. And they stood, and worshipped at the doors of their tents.” (Exodus 33:10)

- “The Lord came down in a pillar of the cloud, and stood in the entry of the tabernacle...” (Numbers 12:5)

- “And the inhabitants of this land, who have heard that thou, O Lord, art among this people, and art seen face to face, and thy cloud protecteth them, and thou goest before them in a pillar of a cloud by day, and in a pillar of fire by night.” (Numbers 14:4)

- “...and the Lord appeared there in the pillar of a cloud, which stood in the entry of the tabernacle.” (Deuteronomy 31:15)

- “And it came to pass, when the priests were come out of the sanctuary, that a cloud filled the house of the Lord.” (3 Kings: 8:10)

- “And at the seventh time, behold, a little cloud arose out of the sea like a man's foot. And he said: Go up and say to Achab: Prepare thy chariot and go down, lest the rain prevent thee.” (3 Kings 18:44)

- “So when they all sounded together, both with trumpets, and voice, and cymbals, and organs, and with divers kind of musical instruments, and lifted up their voice on high: the sound was heard afar off, so that when they began to praise the Lord, and to say: Give glory to the Lord for he is good, for his mercy endureth for ever: the house of God was filled with a cloud.” (2 Paralipomenon 5:13)

- “And in a pillar of a cloud thou wast their leader by day, and in a pillar of fire by night, that they might see the way by which they went.” (2 Esdras 9:12)

- “Yet thou, in thy many mercies, didst not leave them in the desert: the pillar of the cloud departed not from them by day to lead them in the way, and the pillar of fire by night to shew them the way by which they should go.” (2 Esdras 9:19)

- “He spoke to them in the pillar of the cloud. They kept his testimonies, and the commandment which he gave them.” (Psalms 98:7)

- “I dwelt in the highest places, and my throne is in a pillar of a cloud.” (Ecclesiasticus 24:7)

- “Who is she that goeth up by the desert, as a pillar of smoke of aromatical spices, of myrrh, and frankincense, and of all the powders of the perfumer?” (Canticles 3:6)

Of this mysterious column of cloud, St. Ambrose wrote: “That pillar of cloud did, in its outward appearance, go before the children of Israel, but as a mystery it signified the Lord Jesus, who was to come in a light cloud, as Isaiah said; that in the Virgin Mary, who was a cloud on account of the inheritance of Eve, but light because of her virginal integrity.” [87]

Elsewhere, St. Ambrose again compared the Virgin to a cloud: “Oh, the riches of Mary’s virginity...As a cloud, she waters the earth with the rain of Christ’s grace...Receive, then, receive, O consecrated virgins, the spiritual rain that falls from this cloud...Run after this good cloud, for within her she has brought forth a fountain to water the face of the earth.” [88]

Centuries before the Fatima apparitions, St. Alphonsus de Liguori wrote of the Old Testament’s pillar of cloud and pillar of smoke: “This stupendous pillar, at times as a cloud, at others as fire, says Richard of St. Laurence, was a figure of Mary fulfilling the double office she constantly exercises for our good. As a cloud, she constantly protects us from the ardour of Divine Justice; and as fire, she protects us from devils.” In regard to the passage from Canticles 3:6 (quoted above), St. Alphonsus also said: “We gather from the sacred canticles, that on the Assumption of Our Lady, the angels asked her name three times. Who is she that goeth up by the desert as a pillar of smoke? Again, Who is she that cometh forth as the morning rising? and again Who is this that cometh up from the desert, flowing with delights?” [89]

Considering that the biblical theophanies reveal the manifestation of the Holy Trinity in a cloud or a pillar of cloud, we must likewise consider the remarkable cloud of Fatima, which consistently appeared during the apparitions of the beautiful Lady of Fatima who, on October 13, 1917, identified herself with these words: “I am the Lady of the Rosary.” Frère Michel muses, “But how can we explain the fact that a creature—even the most sublime—could manifest herself in the glorious aura of a specifically divine attribute?” [\[90\]](#)

The answer, he notes, is also found in the Scriptures. Specifically, he writes that it is “rich in mystical significance and is taught in the Gospel of Luke, by way of allusion but still quite clearly: through a series of hints that the exegetes have perfectly grasped, the Evangelist identifies the Virgin Mary with the Ark of the Covenant.” [\[91\]](#)

“This Ark,” he continues, “was like a moveable sanctuary, the place where Yahweh had fixed His residence, accompanying Israel in its wanderings; and the Cloud manifested His presence. As soon as the Ark was introduced, we read in the book of Exodus, ‘the cloud covered the tent of the meeting, and the glory of the Lord filled the tabernacle.’ [Exod.40:34-35] After the building of the Temple by Solomon, the Ark was solemnly carried in by the priests to the Holy of Holies. And finally, it is by the Cloud that Yahweh manifests that He is taking possession of His Temple, and establishes His abode there.” [\[92\]](#)

“Mary is the sanctuary and the repose of the Holy Trinity,” said St. Louis de Montfort, echoing the Church. [\[93\]](#) He also said, “Mary is a holy place, and the holy of holies where Saints are formed and moulded.” [\[94\]](#) On September 13 and October 13, 1917, the Fatima Cloud rose three times like incense, just as incense is liturgically offered three times before the Blessed Sacrament at a High Mass or Benediction. Frère Michel observed that these three signs not only remind us of the “triple incensation in the liturgy, [but] the Immaculate Virgin shows us that she is the Abode and the Temple of God, the Sanctuary of the Holy Trinity, and the Ark of the New Covenant.” [\[95\]](#)

PART 4

Signs from the East

“Look about thee, O Jerusalem, towards the east, and behold the joy that cometh to thee from God.”

–Baruch 4:36

In continuing this concise study of the external signs seen by the crowds during the 1917 apparitions of Our Lady of Fatima, I ask the reader to keep in mind that the many “public” portents hold a “highly symbolic and mystical significance.” [96] The second chapter of this work described the seven functions of a true sign from God, [97] noting that the signs at Fatima fulfill all of those seven purposes. It also observed that the signs of Fatima serve as a “Mariophany,” [98] and briefly illustrated how, through the sensible sign of a cloud, Our Lady of Fatima showed herself to be “the abode and Temple of God, the Sanctuary of the Holy Trinity, and the Ark of the Covenant.” [99]

The graceful cloud, signifying Our Lady’s presence, was seen arriving or departing to the east. In the last two months of the Fatima apparitions (September and October 1917), many in the crowd also noticed a luminous globe. This globe appeared in the sky, moving from east to west at midday, at the exact time that the Lady asked the three children to meet her.

Among the people, some saw the globe descend toward the holmoak tree, only to disappear while the Vision lasted. As the globe approached the little tree, the brightness of the sun lessened, the surrounding atmosphere turned a golden-yellow, and stars were seen in the sky at solar noon—a scientifically impossible occurrence if a solar eclipse is not underway. When the Lady’s visit to the children ended, many witnessed that the globe or “orb” of light reappeared and serenely ascended into the sky, toward the east. Here, it is essential to emphasize that the globe (like the cloud), always came from, and departed to, the east.

The Luminous Orb

First, we shall consider the beautiful globe of light. Some immediately thought it a means of transport for the Virgin Mary, who is risen from the dead and assumed, body and soul, into Heaven. In other words, the globe draws attention to the Assumption of the Blessed Mother.

As Fr. H. O’Laverty wrote in his book, The Mother of God and Her Glorious Feasts, “...it should not be forgotten that...in the things of God, where there is but the true and the good, simplicity alone will reveal the greatest heights and the most secret depths.” [\[100\]](#) In 1917, the Assumption of the Virgin Mary was a Church doctrine which would be solemnly defined as a dogma in 1950. Like the parables of Our Lord, and like the answers He gave to those who questioned Him, we must delve a little deeper to better understand the manifestation of this globe.

When reflecting on the Fatima sign of a luminous globe, one comes to the realization that at no other Church-approved Marian apparition did Our Lady exhibit any display of being “carried” from Heaven to earth. For example, in the 1830 apparitions of the Rue de Bac to St. Catherine Labouré, the Virgin suddenly appeared in the chapel; the saint could even hear the rustling of the Lady’s gown. With one exception, there were no bystanders to attest to any outer signs, and so it must follow that none were given. In the one case in which the saint, at prayer with other sisters, saw the Virgin in the chapel, not one other person was aware that a heavenly vision was taking place. LaSalette was a one-time apparition; there were no witnesses except the visionaries.

The 1858 apparitions at Lourdes, France, were different because Lourdes is the first of modern apparition sites which drew onlookers. St. Bernadette Soubirous stated that “the Lady” who came to her simply appeared in the Grotto niche—but when pressed for details, she said that a “golden cloud” within the niche quickly preceded the Lady’s appearance. The people who came to Lourdes during St. Bernadette’s apparitions would testify to the saint’s demeanor during her ecstasies, but none reported any sensible signs attesting to the Vision’s presence.

In other words, neither at Lourdes nor at later sites, like Pontmain and Pellevoisin, were there any “public” manifestations of the Virgin traveling to or from the apparition site—no cloud, no orb, not even the tiniest glimmer of celestial light witnessed by spectators. Neither were there other signs like those at Fatima: a flash of lightning, brief claps of thunder, trembling of the ground, a gentle rain of small white objects described as petals, doves or stars, or any atmospheric changes of color, light, or temperature. (The one-time apparition of Pontmain does have one exception, which were three stars in a triangular formation that onlookers saw only on the one night in which the Virgin appeared. The three stars were never seen again. And, of course, this observation does not include Our Lady of Knock, which was a singular appearance, witnessed by anyone who came to the site.)

In addition to the dogma of the Virgin's Assumption, it seems the Fatima globe simultaneously reminds us of the Virgin's magnificent office in the whole of salvation history. For example, St. Bernard addressed the Lady Mary as "the heavenly chariot," [101] while St. John Geometra saluted her by saying "Hail, resplendent car!"—signifying that "she is the car in which her clients mount to heaven." St. Athanasius said, "And thou, O Lady, wast filled with grace, that thou mightest be the way of our salvation, and the means of ascent to the heavenly kingdom." [102] The orb of light attests to her own words at Fatima, when she said, "I am of Heaven," and not "I am from Heaven."

As Fr. O'Laverty wrote, "God wishes to make use of Mary for the salvation of souls." [103] The mysterious, beautiful globe confirms that the Virgin is assumed body and soul into Heaven, and it simultaneously confirms the doctrine that Our Lady is the Mediatrix between mankind and the Lord Jesus. She, herself, is "the heavenly chariot" that leads souls to Heaven when they cooperate with God's designs.

The Holy Trinity, the Virgin Mary, and the East

Second, we shall consider why both the cloud and the globe of light traveled from the east and returned to the east. To do that, we shall once more briefly look to the Scriptures, keeping in mind that the following quotations and accompanying, short commentaries merely scratch the surface of all that the Bible reveals to us about God, His Presence, foreshadowing, prophecies, and the many figure-types of Our Lord or Our Lady:

- "Before the tabernacle of the covenant, that is to say on the east side, shall Moses and Aaron camp, with their sons, having the custody of the sanctuary, in the midst of the children of Israel." (Numbers 3:38)

In the Old Testament, God's instructed Moses that the Tabernacle in the wilderness must always face east, toward the Mount of Olives, where Christ's Passion would one day begin. A figure-type for the Virgin Mary, the Old Testament Tabernacle is also a figure of the eternal Church, which Christ founded upon Peter, the Rock.

- "Who hath raised up the just one from the east, hath called him to follow him? he shall give the nations in his sight, and he shall rule over kings: he shall give them as the dust to his sword, as stubble driven by the wind, to his bow.” (Isaiah 41:2)

The Just One is Our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ. The star of His Nativity, the Star of Bethlehem, rose in the east. [\[104\]](#) Consider, too, that the miraculous Star was a great sign seen in the sky, as foretold in the Old Testament (“a star shall rise out of Jacob”—Numbers 24:7). Here it should be noted that, with the exception of three wise men who undertook a perilous journey to follow the star, nobody else paid the sign any attention. In a similar manner, the signs and the requests given at Fatima, coupled with the continual modern-day signs of warning given to the entire world, are for the most part ignored.

- “Arise, O Jerusalem, and stand on high: and look about towards the east, and behold thy children gathered together from the rising to the setting sun, by the word of the Holy One rejoicing in the remembrance of God.” (Baruch 5:5)

Jerusalem is, of course, an ancient historical city but, like other biblical places or people or events, it also serves as a figure-type. Since the Scripture passage above cannot be interpreted literally (because the city of Jerusalem cannot arise, or stand high, or look), it is a figure-type (or rather, a personification) for both the Church and the Virgin Mary (whom the Church founded by Christ also calls the heavenly Jerusalem).

- “And the spirit lifted me up, and brought me into the east gate of the house of the Lord, which looketh towards the rising of the sun.” (Ezechiel 11:1)

Thus opens the Prophecy of Ezechiel, which the Douay-Rheims Bible prefaces in this manner: “A prophecy against the presumptuous assurance of the great ones. A remnant shall be saved, and receive a new spirit, and a new heart.”

Such a preface soundly reminds us of our own times. Does it not make us think of the “great ones” who refuse to heed the entire message of Fatima? Should not the virtue of perseverance bid us to pray and work for the complete release of the Third Secret of Fatima and for the conversion of sinners? At the same time, does it make us deeply grateful that even now, as in the days of Ezechiel, a remnant shall be saved?

- “And the glory of the Lord went up from the midst of the city, and stood over the mount that is on the east side of the city.” (Ezechiel 11:23)

This phrase, “glory of the Lord” or the “glory of God” refers to a sensible sign of God's Presence—the "Shekinah." The word "Shekinah" literally means the dwelling or settling of God, whether in a person or an object (like the Ark of the Covenant or Solomon's Temple). Furthermore, among the Hebrews, Shekinah was interchangeable with the word God.

In the Old Testament, the "Shekinah" was seen to ascend (it "went up from the midst of the city") and "stood over the mount...on the east side of the city." In a similar manner, both the luminous globe and the cloud seen at Fatima ascended to the east.

- "And he brought me to the gate that looked toward the east. And behold the glory of the God of Israel came in by way of the east...And the majesty of the Lord went into the temple by the way of the gate that looked to the east." (Ezekiel 43:1-2, 4)

Again, the Scriptures record God's preference for the symbolism of the east, for the "glory of God" (Shekinah) came in by way of the east. Recalling that the word "glory" refers to a sensible sign of God's Presence in a person or object, and that "Jerusalem" is also a symbol for either the Virgin of the Church, and that since Christ's death and Resurrection, the House of Israel are the faithful in the Church, this passage moreover calls to mind the ancient Israelite's exultant praise for Judith (a historical figure-type of Our Lady), which the entire Church ecstatically proclaims of Mary, the Mother of God, "Thou art the glory of Jerusalem, thou art the joy of Israel, thou art the honour of our people." [\[105\]](#)

Tradition also teaches that the Eastern Gate of the ancient Temple of Israel is a figure-type of Our Lady, who as the Immaculate Conception is the "glory of God." As St. Louis de Montfort wrote, "The Holy Ghost, by the mouth of the Fathers, also styles the Blessed Virgin the Eastern Gate, by which the High Priest, Jesus Christ, enters the world and leaves it (Ezech. 44:2-3). By it He came the first time, and by it He will (leave) the second (time). The sanctuary of the Divinity, the repose of the Most Holy Trinity, the throne of God, the city of God, the altar of God, the temple of God, the world of God—all these different epithets and encomiums are most substantially true with references which the Most High has wrought in Mary." [\[106\]](#)

- "Thus saith the Lord of hosts: Behold I will save my people from the land of the east, and from the land of the going down of the sun." (Zachariah 8:7)

Zachariah's prophecy is one fulfilled in Christ, the promised Messiah, and His Church. However, since Scriptural prophecy often possesses a dual meaning, and since many Old Testament prophecies are intended for future days, it may likewise refer to the last days. This prophecy appears to be speaking of at least two nations from which God will literally save his people.

- “For as lightning cometh out of the east, and appeareth even into the west: so shall the coming of the Son of man be.” (Matthew 24:7)

In the quote above, Our Lord foretells His Second Coming and the Last Judgment; the entire passage prophecies the signs that shall precede the literal last days of the world. Jesus will return from the direction of the east, for it has long been held that, when He ascended into Heaven, He ascended toward the east. As St. John Damascene wrote, “At His ascent into Heaven, He went to the East, and so do the Apostles pray to Him; He will come again as the Apostles saw Him going, and so the Lord says Himself: For as lightning cometh out of the east...” [\[107\]](#)

The East, then, is always symbolic of Christ. It is the reason why God willed the Old Testament Tabernacle to face the east, why the Star of Bethlehem rose in the east, why Catholic altars traditionally face the east, and why, in this modern age, Our Lady of Fatima, who is hailed in the Litany of Loreto as “Gate of Heaven,” arrived and departed to the east. May we remember, too, that “Russia, which is in easternmost Europe, will be the font of conversion once it is actually consecrated to the Immaculate Heart of Mary.” [\[108\]](#)

PART 5

Stars at High Noon: Our Lord, Our Lady, & the Church

“The sun, and the moon, and the stars being bright, and sent forth for profitable uses, are obedient.”

–Baruch 6:59

Stars appearing on a clear day at solar noon. Atmospheric changes of the sky’s luminosity, similar to a solar eclipse, with hues from yellow gold to all the colors of the rainbow. A sudden and relieving drop in temperature, during the hottest days of summer, accompanied by a cool fresh breeze. Flashes of lightning and claps of thunder that made the ground tremble. These and other portents, witnessed by many onlookers to the 1917 Fatima apparitions, possess a “highly symbolic and mystical significance.” [\[109\]](#) In particular, the Virgin Mary’s visit of September 13, “in which there were more signs than ever, and the largest crowd was present, imposes itself quite especially on our attention.” [\[110\]](#)

As already noted, in September, a new sign—a luminous globe—was seen, gliding from east to west. It descended to the holmoak tree, over which the Lady always appeared to the three children. The time was high noon and, according to a letter written by witness Fr. John Quaresma, who later became the Vicar General of Leiria, Portugal, there was not “a cloud in the deep blue sky.” [\[111\]](#) Then, writes Fatima historian Frère Michel of the Holy Trinity, “the sun’s brightness diminished, the atmosphere became golden yellow, like the other times. Some people even reported being able to distinguish the stars in the sky.” [\[112\]](#)

Stars in the Scriptures

According to Fr. Bernard Kramer, “In the Septuagint, [\[113\]](#) the word [sign] is used for celestial phenomena.” [\[114\]](#) With the exception of the sun, which is the “day star” [\[115\]](#) of the Scriptures, the symbol of Jesus who is the Son of Justice (but also representative of the Immaculate Heart of Mary, per St. John Eudes), rare is the sight of a star during the daylight hours. Writing on the invisible power behind the sign of the Star of Bethlehem, which shone in the day, St. John Chrysostom observed, “... one may see this from the time also. For it [a star] appears not in the night, but in mid-day, while the sun is shining; and this is not within the power of a star." [\[116\]](#)

Such a manifestation is, however, within the omnipotent power of God,
Who uses the lights of heaven when He wishes to give His people a sign.

The Holy Bible infallibly confirms that the lights of the firmament are intended for many purposes, including “for” signs:

- “And God said: Let there be lights made in the firmament of heaven, to divide the day and the night, and let them be for signs, and for seasons, and for days and years: To shine in the firmament of heaven, and to give light upon the earth. And it was so done. And God made two great lights: a greater light to rule the day; and a lesser light to rule the night: and the stars.” (Genesis 1:14-16)

- A STAR SHALL RISE out of Jacob and a sceptre shall spring up from Israel...” (Numbers 24:7)

- “The sun, and the moon, and the stars being bright, and sent forth for profitable uses, are obedient.” (Baruch 6:59)

- “Where is he that is born king of the Jews? For we have seen his star in the east, and are come to adore him.” (Matthew 2:2)

- “And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, by reason of the confusion of the roaring of the sea and of the waves; Men withering away for fear, and expectation of what shall come upon the whole world. For the powers of heaven shall be moved.” (Luke 21:26)

Stars remind us that God is the Creator and that we are the created; simultaneously, they remind us that the “works of God show forth His glory, that His law is greatly to be esteemed and loved,” and “that mankind cannot comprehend His power and wisdom.” [\[117\]](#)

Silently, the countless number of “jewels” in the night sky also speaks of God’s majesty, love, mercy and justice:

- “Dost not thou think that God is higher than heaven, and is elevated above the height of the stars?” (Job 22:12)

- “And the stars have given light in their watches, and rejoiced...” (Baruch 3:34)

- “O Lord Our Lord, how admirable is thy name in the whole earth! For thy magnificence is elevated above the heavens... Out of the mouth of infants and of sucklings thou hast perfected praise, because of thy enemies, that thou mayest destroy the enemy and the avenger. For I will behold thy heavens, the works of thy fingers: the moon and the stars which thou hast founded. What is man that thou art mindful of him? or the son of man that thou visitest him?" (Psalms 8:2-5)

Recalling that Scripture passages often possess both a literal and spiritually figurative meaning, we also know that in the Old Testament, stars also signify the elect. "In Genesis, the patriarchs, head of the twelve tribes of Israel, are also called stars. And the words of Daniel (7:10) cannot be restricted to the priests only of the Antiochean persecution but surely embrace all martyrs of that ordeal. If the chosen people of the Old Testament are called stars, much more appropriately so the true believers of the Church of Jesus Christ," [\[118\]](#)—i.e., true believers in Jesus Christ are practicing members of the one, holy, Catholic, and apostolic Church that He established. The members on earth are called the Church Militant, those in Purgatory are the Church Suffering, and those in Heaven are the Church Triumphant. The Church on earth is also called the kingdom of God on earth, the Body of Christ, and the Catholic City. The elect (the Church Militant) are also called the just or the people of God, because they are the souls of predestination, meaning the souls whom God knows shall remain on the narrow path of redemption and attain salvation. St. Anthony of Padua expressed it thusly: "The saints are like the stars. In His providence, Christ conceals them in a hidden place that they may not shine before others when they might wish to do so. Yet they are always ready to exchange the quiet of contemplation for the works of mercy as soon as they perceive in their heart the invitation of Christ."

Even though it may seem to stand alone, each "star" (i.e., each person) has a unique and spiritual purpose to fulfill and, by doing so, adds to the beauty of "heaven" (the biblical, symbolic language for "the Church"). Moreover, God knows the names of every "star" as well as their total number. As shall be seen, we may discern depths of meaning in the following Scripture quotes, which may be literal, spiritual, figurative, prophetic, or a combination of them.

For example, in the literal sense, "stars" are the material stars observed in the night sky but, in the spiritual sense, "stars" which remain "in heaven" are human beings who shall attain everlasting life. "Jerusalem" is literally the actual ancient holy city, yet it is also a figure-type for either the Virgin Mary or the future Catholic City that would be founded by the Messiah, Jesus Christ. "Israel" denotes the elect, while "heaven" literally indicates the skies above but it, too, is spiritually symbolic for the Church:

- “I alone am not able to bear you: for the Lord your God hath multiplied you, and you are this day as the stars of heaven, for multitude.” (Deuteronomy 1:10)

- “And you shall remain few in number, who before were as the stars of heaven for multitude, because thou heardest not the voice of the Lord thy God.” (Deuteronomy 28:62)

- “The Lord buildeth up Jerusalem: he will gather together the dispersed of Israel. Who healeth the broken of heart, and bindeth up their bruises. Who telleth the number of the stars: and calleth them all by their names. Great is Our Lord, and great is his power: and of his wisdom there is no number.” (Psalms 146:3-5)

- “The glory of the stars is the beauty of heaven; the Lord enlighteneth the world on high.” (Ecclesiasticus. 43:10)

- “O ye stars of heaven, bless the Lord: praise and exalt him above all forever.” (Daniel 3:63)

- “And there are bodies celestial, and bodies terrestrial: but, one is the glory of the celestial, and another of the terrestrial. One is the glory of the sun, another the glory of the moon, and another the glory of the stars. For star differeth from star in glory.” (I Corinthians 15:40-41)

In the Old Testament, stars also symbolize kings [\[119\]](#) (or what we today call leaders of nations) as well as teachers of God’s Laws and those of His Church. These teachers could refer not only to priests and theologians, but also to teaching nuns, lay catechists, or any Christian who instruct others in the traditional Catholic Faith:

- “But they that are learned shall shine as the brightness of the firmament: and they that instruct many to justice, as stars for all eternity.” (Daniel 12:3)

In the Apocalypse, the Lord speaks of giving the morning star to “he that shall overcome,” yet in another passage, Jesus—who is Priest, Prophet, and King—calls Himself the Morning Star:

- “And he that shall overcome, and keep my works unto the end, I will give him power over the nations. And he shall rule them with a rod of iron, and as the vessel of a potter they shall be broken, As I also have received of my Father: and I will give him the morning star. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith to the churches.” (Apocalypse 2: 26-29)

- “I, Jesus, have sent my angel, to testify to you these things in the churches. I am the root and stock of David, the bright and morning star.”

(Apocalypse 22:16)

Elsewhere in the Book of Revelations, stars indicate a group who occupy offices of high estate; they symbolize the Catholic hierarchy (bishops and priests). The ordained clergy alone can offer the Holy Sacrifice of the Holy Eucharist, forgive and absolve sins, bless, etc. As Rev. Kramer was careful to note, “The highest function of the hierarchy is worshipping God and offering the worship of the entire membership to Him.” [\[120\]](#)

Within the hierarchy, the first degree of rank consists of the bishops of the Church, who are also called “angels” by the Lord in the Apocalypse to distinguish them from priests of lesser title. Bishops are “high priests” who can administer all the Sacraments that affect the society of the Church and also perform certain sacerdotal functions that lower-ranking priests usually cannot—for example, Confirmation (which a priest can administer but only under certain circumstances and only with his bishop’s permission), Holy Orders, and the consecration of a new church and its altar. The secondary degree is comprised of priests. [\[121\]](#) Thus, Our Lord speaks in the Apocalypse of seven stars, whom he also calls angels (bishops) of the seven churches, while the seven candlesticks represent seven churches (what we today would call seven dioceses or larger parish areas where the Church is established among the people):

- “I am the First and the Last...Write therefore the things which thou hast seen...The mystery of the seven stars, which thou sawest in my right hand, and the seven golden candlesticks. The seven stars are the angels of the seven churches. And the seven candlesticks are the seven churches.” (Apocalypse 1:20)

Finally, we come to the apocalyptic passage, which is mentioned many times in this book and which may be the most well known throughout the Christian world. It is also the one that many believe is the infallible prophecy foretelling the authentic Marian apparitions of the Modern Age, which opened with Our Lady’s appearance at Guadalupe, began anew in 18th century Europe (especially in France), and then culminated in the public and sensible signs at Fatima in Portugal, the country long called “the land of Holy Mary”:

- “And a great sign appeared in heaven: A woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and on her head a crown of twelve stars...” (Apocalypse 12:1)

This woman is understood to be a figure-type of both the Virgin Mary and the Church; certainly, it is a prophecy rich in mystery. Of this verse, St. Louis Marie de Montfort wrote, “St. John the Evangelist saw a woman crowned with twelve stars, clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet. According to the commentators, this woman is the Blessed Virgin Mary, with her virtues and her privileges, especially that of her divine maternity.” [\[122\]](#)

Considering that, at Fatima in 1917, stars appeared at high noon, announcing the Blessed Mother’s appearance to the people, and recalling the profound Scriptural meanings of stars as signs, is it not within faith and reason to believe that the Lord our God wishes His people to persevere in the Catholic faith, despite all the obstacles and crosses they must endure in this age of spiritual deprivation, and to contemplate and imitate the virtues of His Virgin Mother, the Queen of all Saints, who once stood at the Foot of the Cross of Jesus Christ, Our Lord and Savior?

The Lady and the Symbol of a Star

Like her Divine Son, the Virgin Mother of God is also called the Morning Star. In historic time, she appeared before her Son and she does so again before His Second Coming. Like the “morning star” of the earthly sky, she always appears before the dawn, the rising of the “day star” (the sun, which is the material symbol of her Son and Savior, Jesus Christ). St. Alphonsus de Liguori reminds us, “In the revelations of St. Bridget, Mary is called ‘Star preceding the sun,’ giving us thereby to understand that when devotion towards the divine Mother begins to manifest itself in a soul that is in a state of sin, it is a certain mark that before long God will enrich it with His grace.” [\[123\]](#)

In other words, Mary, the Morning Star is the “anticipatory star” or “demonstrative star” of Christ (the day star). At Fatima, the sensible signs given to the people, the loving and motherly message and prophecies given by the Virgin Mary to the three shepherd children, and the fulfillment of the promised sign—the Great Miracle of the Sun—reminds us again that she is indeed, the Morning Star who arrives shortly before the “Sun”—i.e., her Divine Son. All that happened at Fatima brings to mind the words of St. Peter: “And we have the more firm prophetic word: whereunto you do well to attend, as to a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts.” [\[124\]](#) in the heavens, guiding weary travelers through the darkest hours of their lifelong journey. For many reasons, the Evening Star is also hailed as “Star of the Sea.” In Latin, her name Maria derives from “Maris,” which means “sea.” Her Hebrew name is Miryam but in Aramaic, Our Lord’s and Our Lady’s native language, it is Mariam which means “bitter” or “bitterness.” According to St. Isidore of Seville (+636 A.D.), her name also means “enlightener” for she brought forth Christ, the Light of the World; the same saint also observed that in the Syriac language, her name means “Lady.”

The Lady Mary is likewise known as the Evening Star, the brightest star

[\[125\]](#)

“For Mary means a bitter sea, star of the sea, the illuminated or illuminatrix,” St. Bonaventure (+1274 A.D.) once penned. “Mary is interpreted as Lady. Mary is a bitter sea to the demons; to men, she is the Star of the Sea; to the angels, she is Illuminatrix, and to all creatures, she is Lady.” [\[126\]](#)

In the symbolic language of the Holy Scriptures, the bitter salt-sea (with its fluctuating waves and tempests) represents the world, as well as the “sea of humanity.” Of Mary, who lived in this world but never possessed the spirit of the world, St. Aelred (+1167 A.D.) wrote: “Her name means Star of the Sea; no doubt the Star of this sea which is the world. Therefore, we ought to lift up our eyes to this Star that has appeared on earth...in order that she may lead us, in order that she may enlighten us, in order that she may show us these steps so that we shall know them, in order that she may help us so that we may be able to ascend.” [\[127\]](#)

St. Thomas Aquinas (+1274 A.D.) said, “Mary means Star of the Sea, for as mariners are guided to port by the ocean star, so Christians attain to glory through Mary’s maternal intercession.” [\[128\]](#)

Finally, we have the beautiful insight of St. Louis de Montfort, who in the early 16th century wrote: “God the Father gathered all the waters together and called them the seas or maria (Latin, seas]. He gathered all His grace together and called it Mary or Maria...this immense treasury is none other than Mary whom the saints call the ‘treasury of the Lord.’ From her fullness, all men are made rich.” [\[129\]](#)

The Virtues of the Virgin Mary

Among the meanings already explained, stars may also represent a plentitude of virtues and/or profound privileges. In the history of salvation, the number “12” is “the perfect number, God’s number” or “the number of completion.” [\[130\]](#) Recalling the crown of twelve stars worn by the woman of the Apocalypse, who is herself a “great sign appearing in heaven,” we might ask ourselves: “Exactly what are the virtues of the Virgin Mary?”

In making that inquiry (in the hopes of imitating Our Lord’s Immaculate Mother), we recall that in the sacred history of the Church the number “12” is meant only as a symbol of completion. We therefore cannot literally limit Our Lady’s virtues to twelve. For example, we may consider the holy insights of St. John Eudes who, in recognizing the many Marian figure-types in the Old Testament, referred to twelve specific types among a greater number when he wrote the following:

“Among the many images and representations of the Admirable Heart of Mary, I can distinguish twelve of surpassing beauty. Six of them are found in the principal divisions of the universe; namely, the heavens, the sun, the center of the earth, the inexhaustible fountain of Genesis, the sea and the Garden of Eden. The six others appear in six of the most important manifestations witnessed by the world from the time of Moses to the death of Our Lord. They are the burning bush of Mount Horeb, the mysterious harp of David, the magnificent throne of Solomon, the marvelous Temple of Jerusalem, the miraculous furnace of Babylon, and the holy mount of Calvary.” [\[131\]](#)

To return to the many virtues of Our Lady—which are symbolized by the number 12—we look to a prayer known as The Little Crown of the Twelve Stars of the Blessed Virgin Mary, in which there is an exquisite line that simply declares, “Thy virtues, O Virgin, surpass the stars in number.” This centuries-old prayer was offered to God by many saints including St. Joseph Calasanctius and St. John Berchmans. It is known that St. Louis de Montfort recommended this prayer to his religious foundations (the Montfort Fathers and the Daughters of Wisdom) as a morning prayer. The saint added to each Hail Mary a short invocation to the Virgin, and he also urged those who embraced the devotion to Jesus through Mary to pray The Little Crown. [\[132\]](#)

This prayer is divided into three sets of “crowns.” The first is the Crown of Excellence, the second is the Crown of Power, and the third is the Crown of Goodness. Each crown hails a “set” of four inestimable virtues. The Crown of Excellence honors “the divine maternity of the Blessed Virgin, her ineffable virginity, her purity without stain, and her innumerable virtues.” The Crown of Power honors “the royalty of the Blessed Virgin, her magnificence, her universal mediation, and the strength of her rule.” The Crown of Goodness extols the unfathomable mercy of the Blessed Virgin toward four types of people: sinners, the poor, the just, and the dying. [\[133\]](#)

The Other Signs at Fatima

It is no coincidence that the virtues honored in The Little Crown of the Blessed Virgin Mary are the same holy qualities Our Lady chose to display at Fatima. To declare that the signs and the complete message of Fatima highlight the Virgin's virtues and privileges is certainly an understatement—for the time has already arrived in which God wishes to establish worldwide devotion to the Immaculate Heart of Mary.

With that said, the following sections are the signs that shall be examined:

1. Most of the witnesses who were closest to the spot where the Lady appeared heard a far-away, indescribable sound, perceived only in response to Lucia's words. [\[134\]](#)

2. In July, just as the apparition began, the atmosphere became yellow as gold. [\[135\]](#) As one witness stated, "The luminosity of the sky noticeably decreased, as during an eclipse, the whole time the ecstasy of the children lasted." [\[136\]](#) In August, when the children were abducted by the Masonic mayor and were not present for the Vision, the people saw "all the colors of the rainbow, pink, red, blue....The trees seemed to be made not of leaves but of flowers...The ground came out in colors and so did our clothes. The lanterns fixed to the arch looked like gold." [\[137\]](#)

3. At the height of a Portuguese summer, the very hot temperature suddenly dropped to a pleasant degree, accompanied by "a cool fresh breeze." [\[138\]](#)

4. Also at the July 1917 apparition, a "large clap of thunder" was heard just seconds before the eldest child, Lucia, indicated the departure of the Lady. The thunder shook the ground, so that a small arch placed by the apparition site "trembled as if in an earthquake." [\[139\]](#) In August 1917, when the children were not present, an extremely loud boom of thunder so badly frightened the people that many scattered and ran, thinking they would be killed. [\[140\]](#)

5. Again in August, a flash of lightning, following the thunder, also garnered the attention of the now-silenced crowd. This "flash," always seen by the children, served as the sign of the Virgin's approach. [\[141\]](#) The flash was not usually perceived by the crowd but, this time, the people saw it. [\[142\]](#)

6. During the Apparition of September 13, 1917, a greater number of onlookers observed a shower of small white objects—described by witnesses as either as petals, snowflakes, dove-shaped forms, stars, or roses—all of which gently fell from the sky and disappeared before touching the ground. [\[143\]](#)

As we shall see, all of these supernatural signs also hold a great significance in Divine Revelation. Through the intercession of the Virgin Mary, the unusual marvels at Fatima are intended to remind the Church, and all peoples of the world, that God has willed to give His graces and peace to mankind through the hands of His Immaculate Mother, who is the cause of our salvation, Jesus Christ.

PART 6

Signs of Grace: The Silent Parables of Fatima

“Through thee we have access to the Son, O thou giver of grace, and Mother of our salvation.”

–St. Bernard of Clairvaux

During His public life, Jesus spoke to great crowds of people in the form of parables, telling “plain, simple stories easily remembered by plain, simple people, even without learning or talent. In these He clothed His divine doctrines...taking His illustrations from those common and obvious objects with which they were most familiar, screening the Divine Mysteries at the same time from the ill-disposed and bigoted who listened to the parables but would not understand their meaning.” [\[144\]](#) In a fashion similar to Our Lord’s divine parables, the sensible signs witnessed by pilgrims present at the 1917 Fatima apparitions strengthened and consoled the faithful, converted souls, counter-acted the doubters, and gently emphasized the divine doctrines revealed by God to His Church.

The first parts of this work concisely examined many of the wonders seen and heard at Fatima. While those signs are rich and profound in their meaning, the next two parts (Parts 7 and 8) of this treatise shall likewise be succinct although, like St. Bernard of Clairvaux, this writer declares with filial love: “Of Mary, there is never enough.” Part 9 examines the “Great Sign,” the promised Miracle. However, from that point, Parts 10–18 grow in detail in this continuing study of other aspects of Fatima, including our ongoing conversions (growth in the interior life, also called the spiritual life), the Third Secret, our adoration and imitation of Christ, our devotion to the Immaculate Heart of Mary, the Sacred Heart, the Precious Blood, and more. With that said, we look to the following signs given at Fatima from June through September, 1917:

• In June and July 1917, many witnesses closest to the spot where the Lady appeared heard a far-away, indescribable sound, perceived only in response to Lucia’s words. [\[145\]](#) Others said they “heard something like the murmur of a very fine, but unintelligible voice.”

[\[146\]](#) What else could be this murmur other than the Virgin’s voice?

In most instances, the Holy Scriptures describe a heavenly voice as loud or great or strong. At Fatima, however, it seems only those who first came to the apparition site (and only in the months of June and July) received the favor of “distantly” hearing Our Lady’s voice. The fortunate ones included the faithful Maria Carreira, who had taken it upon herself to tidy the area around the holmoak tree, placed flowers and a silk bow upon it, and built over it a humble arch with lanterns on each side.

Years later, the exact spot of the apparition was marked by a statue of Our Lady of Fatima, standing upon a marble pillar. The statue and the pillar are directly in front of the Chapel of Apparitions (the first sanctuary built in honor of the Virgin of Fatima), and all three are now enclosed within the Basilica of Our Lady of the Rosary.

It is as though the Virgin of Fatima, the Queen of Prophets, took the prophet Zachariah’s words for her own: “And they that are far off, shall come and shall build in the temple of the Lord: and you shall know that the Lord of hosts sent me to you. But this shall come to pass, if hearing you will hear the voice of your God.” [\[147\]](#)

• In July, August, and September, when certain signs indicated the arrival of the Virgin, the atmosphere became yellow as gold. [\[148\]](#)

In the history of the Fatima apparitions, July (the first time the atmosphere turned to yellow-gold) is pivotal, because Our Lady gave the three young children the Great Secret of Fatima in its three parts. It was also in July that the Mother of God promised, “In October, I will tell you who I am and what I want, and I will perform a miracle for all to see and believe.” [\[149\]](#) As word spread of the coming miracle, the crowds grew greater each month—as did the signs at Fatima. In October, the promise was kept, the children were given the Lady’s name and heard her final request, and the foretold miracle was the “great sign”—the Miracle of the Sun. So why, in the three months preceding the final “public” apparition, was the color of yellow-gold made manifest?

Gold represents the glory of God, His divine nature, and His revelation. Yellow-gold is the color of the sun, which symbolizes Jesus, the Son of God, the Lord and Savior of the world. Gold is also “the symbol of unselfish and complete immolation to God” [\[150\]](#)—i.e., the virtue of charity, which St. Louis de Montfort called the “gold of love” and “the fulfillment of the whole law.” [\[151\]](#) (On a vital side note, the lives of the three Fatima visionaries were those of heroic charity and sacrifice, reminding “the world that it is necessary to avoid sin, and to make reparation to an offended God, by prayer and penance.” [152])

Even in ancient times, purest gold was considered a precious metal, and it was one reserved for the Ark of the Covenant, the Temple, and all the vessels that served the Lord. St. Alphonsus de Liguori wrote, “In the book of Exodus, we read that God commanded Moses to make a mercy-seat of the purest gold, because it was thence that He would speak to him. Thou shalt make also a propitiatory of the purest gold...There will I give orders, and will speak to thee.” [153]

The root of the word “propitiatory” means to pacify or placate, to conciliate, to reconcile; it also means to intercede, to calm, to mediate, or to atone. All of these verbs of “being” or action apply to both Our Lord and Our Lady. Like the Ark of the Covenant which it covered, the Old Testament propitiatory or “mercy seat” is also a figure-type for the Virgin Mary, upon whom God rests and speaks to His people—just as He did in Old Testament history and as He does again in modern times. [154]

St. John the Evangelist states in the Apocalypse, in which he writes of things present and future, [155] that an angel took him up in spirit to “a great and high mountain” and showed him “the heavenly Jerusalem coming down out of heaven from God,” [156] saying that the city itself is “pure gold, like to glass” and “the street of the city, as pure gold, as it were transparent glass.” [157] This heavenly Jerusalem also serves as a figure-type for the Virgin Mary.

• As one Fatima witness stated, “The luminosity of the sky noticeably decreased, as during an eclipse, the whole time the ecstasy of the children lasted.” [158]

It was at Fatima that Mary, the Queen of Prophets, delivered a heavenly command, in a manner more majestic and striking than that of the Old Testament prophets. Our Lady of Fatima, like the prophets before her, called sinners to conversion, foretold great blessings when God’s commands are heeded, and warned of dire sufferings if they are not. The dimming of the sun at Fatima calls to mind that which biblical prophets called a “day of darkness” [159]—a time of tribulation and distress due to God’s wrath against the multitude of sins.

A “day of darkness” can also signify the day of the Lord, of which the prophet Amos warned: “Woe to them that desire the day of the Lord: to what end is it for you? The day of the Lord is darkness, and not light.” [160] In one interpretation of Apocalypse 8:12, wherein a great mountain (denoting a kingdom), burning with fire, slides into the sea, the star Wormwood falls, and a third part of the sun, moon, and stars darken, it is stated:

“The prophecy of our text foreshows a time of trouble for the Church and an obscuration of her splendor and her power to enlighten the world. The prophets called any misfortune that dimmed the luster of the theocracy a day of darkness. Likewise, when they prophesy defeat and humiliation for other nations they predict it by obscuration of the sun, moon, and stars. Isaias speaks thus to Babylon (XIII.10) and Ezechiel to Egypt (XXXII.7). Joel calls the coming war with the Babylonians ‘a day of darkness and of gloominess’ (II.2); of the temporal extinction of the theocracy in the Babylonian Captivity he says, ‘the sun and the moon are darkened, and the stars have withdrawn their shining.’ Ezechiel likewise calls the extinction of the theocracy ‘a cloudy and dark day’ (XXXIV.12) [\[161\]](#)...Thus Amos prophesied upon the kingdom of Israel (VIII.9).” [\[162\]](#) To briefly state it, then, a “sign” like the darkening of the sun foretells that God’s judgment on His people (and possibly all nations) is near.

Remembering that the material sun of our solar system is also “the” symbol of Christ, the Gospel of Luke relates that when Christ was crucified, “there was darkness over all the earth until the ninth hour. And the sun was darkened...”[\[163\]](#) This darkness was supernatural, for Christ was condemned at the time of Passover, which was celebrated during the full moon—at which time a solar eclipse is not possible. The sun was darkened because Jesus, the God-man, was dying, of His own free will, to save His people from their sins.

At Fatima, the decreased sunlight, so similar to that of an eclipse, was also supernatural, lasting only during the time of the Virgin’s visit. In fact, the dimming of the sun at Fatima might also be attributed to the many glories of Mary, of which St Alphonsus de Liguori wrote, [\[164\]](#) stating that in the Canticles, Our Lady is called “bright as the sun.” [\[165\]](#) St. Bonaventure said of the Blessed Mother, “She is more beautiful than the sun” and Lucia, the only Fatima visionary to reach adulthood and an elderly age, said that the Lady was “more brilliant than the sun.” [\[166\]](#)

Perhaps, too, the diffused sun at Fatima manifested Our Lady’s glory before God but also her clemency toward her Divine Son’s people, for the Virgin Mother of God came to the modern world to remind us of what St. Peter taught: “But you are a chosen generation, a kingly priesthood, a holy nation, a purchased people: that you may declare his virtues, who hath called you out of darkness into his marvellous light.” [167]

• At the height of a Portuguese summer, the very hot temperature suddenly dropped to a pleasant degree, accompanied by “a cool fresh breeze.” [168]

In the Holy Scriptures, when the Lord our God spoke individually to a prophet, in order to give His people a message of mercy and/or a warning of His just retribution for their infidelity, He did so in a quiet yet awesome and breath-taking way. For example, in the third book of Kings, we read a passage in which “the word of the Lord came unto” Elias, the prophet, [169] who lived during a perilous time when the people of Israel had again forsaken the Lord’s covenant and were waging a war against God and His servants. [170] Through Elias’ intercession, two miracles had already occurred on Mount Carmel, but Jezebel the queen sought to take the prophet’s life.

“And he [i.e., the word of the Lord] said to him [Elias, the prophet]: Go forth, and stand upon the mount before the Lord: and behold the Lord passeth, and a great and strong wind before the Lord over throwing the mountains, and breaking the rocks in pieces: the Lord is not in the wind, and after the wind an earthquake: the Lord is not in the earthquake. And after the earthquake a fire: the Lord is not in the fire, and after the fire a whistling of gentle air. And when Elias heard it, he covered his face with his mantle... and behold a voice unto him.” [171]

Is it not possible that, like the whistling of gentle air that manifested to Elias the very Presence of God, the sudden but soothing change of temperature and the gentle, cooling breeze declared the Virgin Mary’s presence—she who is the Perpetual Tabernacle of the Holy Trinity? St. Louis de Montfort, when teaching that we must accomplish all of our actions in, with, and through Mary, explained that she is “the true terrestrial paradise of the new Adam” (Jesus), writing: “It is only the Holy Ghost who can make us know the hidden truth of these figures of material things. There is in this place [the Virgin Mary] an air of perfect purity; a fair sun, without shadow, of the Divinity; a fair day, without night, of the Sacred Humanity [of Jesus]; a continuing burning furnace of love, where all the iron that is cast into it is changed, by excessive heat, to gold.” [172]

Finally, for the child visionaries and the thousands of pilgrims who came to Fatima, the delicate and considerate changes in the elements during

Our Lady's apparitions may well have served as a foretaste of Heaven. After all, in the Apocalypse, St. John relates: "They shall no more hunger nor thirst, neither shall the sun fall on them, nor any heat. For the Lamb, which is in the midst of the throne, shall rule them, and shall lead them to the fountains of the waters of life, and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes." [\[173\]](#)

PART 7

Mother of God, Refuge of Sinners

“Now therefore children, hear me; blessed are they who keep my ways.”

–Proverbs 8:32

In this seventh part on the public, sensible signs witnessed by crowds during the May-October 1917 apparitions of Our Lady of Fatima, we look to the phenomena of thunder, the shaking of the ground, lightning, and the atmospheric changes of rainbow colors:

- In July, the month in which the Virgin Mary gave the three child visionaries the Great Secret of Fatima in its three distinct parts, a “large clap of thunder” was heard just seconds before the eldest child, Lucia, suddenly jumped up from her kneeling position, exclaiming, “There she goes! There she goes!” as the Lady departed. The thunder shook the ground, so that a small arch placed by the apparition site “trembled as if in an earthquake.

[\[174\]](#)

- In August, when the children were not present at the apparition site because the mayor had abducted them, a great crowd gathered in anticipation of solar noon, the usual time of Our Lady’s appearance. When the hour arrived, the people heard an extremely loud boom of thunder, which so badly frightened them that many scattered and ran, thinking they would be killed. [\[175\]](#)

- A flash of lightning, following the thunder, was also seen in August, garnering the attention of the now-silenced crowd. This “flash,” always seen by the children, served as the sign of the Virgin’s approach [\[176\]](#) but had never been previously perceived by the people.

Thunder, a Small Tremor, and Lightning

In the Scriptures, the sound of thunder, the appearance of lightning, or the trembling of an earthquake announce a direct manifestation from the Lord or of the Lord. Thunder denotes God’s “voice”—i.e., His irrevocable declaration of His truth, mercy and judgment: “The Lord shall thunder from heaven: and the Most High shall give forth His voice.” [\[177\]](#) (Here it should be noted that only twice was thunder heard at Fatima—in July, after the Great Secret was divulged, and an even greater “boom” in August when the plotting mayor kidnapped the children. Recalling that thunder denotes God’s voice, often in judgment, we should also remember that Our Lady would, in August, tell the children, “If you had not been taken away to the City, the miracle would have been greater.”) [178]

Lightning is the sign of God’s divine majesty and His wisdom and power in His wonderful works, His miracles, and His judgment. [179] In the Book of Exodus, thunder and lightning together announce the Holy Presence of the Lord God immediately before He gave the Ten Commandments to Moses: “And now the third day was come, and the morning appeared: and behold thunders began to be heard, and lightning to flash, and a very thick cloud to cover the mount...and the people that were in the camp, feared.” [180]

Both thunder and lightning are likewise found in the Psalms, representing Divine Revelation which enlightens the interior life of the soul, when King David mysteriously addressed the Lord: “The voice of thy thunder in a wheel. Thy lightnings enlightened the world: the earth shook and trembled.” [181] An eyewitness of the Fatima apparition in July (again, the month in which the Virgin Mary disclosed the Great Secret for the salvation of the Church and the world) inadvertently chose similar words to those of King David when, at the moment the child Lucia exclaimed the Lady’s leave-taking, “the earth trembled like an earthquake.” [182]

In searching the Holy Bible from the Old Testament to the Apocalypse, there are a total of 17 references to an “earthquake” or “earthquakes.” In most instances, an earthquake is the predominant sign of God’s explicit action to save the faithful (spiritually and sometimes physically) even as it confounds the obstinate.

When the Old Testament prophet Isaiah foretold God’s judgment on reprobates, he prophesied: “*And it shall be at an instant suddenly. A visitation shall come from the Lord of hosts in thunder, and with earthquake...” [183] The Gospel of Matthew records an earthquake at the moment of Christ’s death and a “great earthquake” at His Resurrection. [184] The Acts of the Apostles also tells of a great earthquake which shook the foundations of the prison in which were held Paul and Silus, released their “bands” (bonds), and opened their prison doors. [185]

In the Apocalypse, St. John the Evangelist alludes to lightning, voices, and thunders (together) four times, [186] while an earthquake (or a “great earthquake”) is mentioned either alone or with other signs, a total of five times. [187] The first instance occurs when he is granted a vision of the Lord’s throne in Heaven: “And from the throne proceeded lightnings, and voices, and thunders; and there were seven lamps burning before the throne, which are the seven spirits of God.” [188] Lightning, voices, and thunders are not mentioned again until Chapter 8, but this time “a great earthquake” is also revealed to him: “And the angel took the censer, and filled it with the fire of the altar, and cast it on the earth, and there were thunders and voices and lightnings, and a great earthquake.” [189]

St. John was later ordered to “measure the temple of God, and the altar and them that adore therein,” [190] and thereafter was told of the two witnesses who will publicly testify to Christ whilst resisting the actual person of anti-Christ. [191] He then wrote again of lightnings, and voices, and an earthquake, which this time accompany the Ark of the Covenant (which has already been explained as a historical figure-type of the Virgin Mary, because it was wholly consecrated to the Lord. Furthermore, it was never to be touched by any man; the Lord overshadowed the Mercy-Seat of the Ark, just as the Holy Ghost overshadowed the Virgin at the Incarnation of Christ. Like the Virgin, the Ark contained the Bread of Heaven, a figure-type for Christ):

“And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest render reward to thy servants the prophets and the saints, and to them that fear thy name, little and great, and shouldest destroy them who have corrupted the earth. And the temple of God was opened in heaven: and the ark of his testament was seen in his temple, and there were lightnings, and voices, and an earthquake, and great hail.” [192]

In addition to the symbolism of an earthquake already described, Fr. Herman B. Kramer, author of The Book of Destiny, stated his opinion: “Revolutions and overthrows of governments are also called earthquakes in prophetic diction.” [193] The Bolshevik Revolution in Russia, which arose during the very months of the Fatima apparitions, certainly could be described as a “great earthquake,” especially since Our Lady warned that, if her requests were not granted, Russia would spread her errors (plural) throughout the world. [194]

● Rainbow Colors: In July (again, the month wherein Our Lady revealed the “Great Secret”), there was an atmospheric change, in which people saw “all the colors of the rainbow, pink, red, blue...The trees seemed to be made not of leaves but of flowers...The ground came out in colors and so did our clothes. The lanterns fixed to the arch looked like gold.” [\[195\]](#) In October, the rainbow colors would appear again during the promised miracle.

At Fatima, a humble arch had been placed in honor over the young holmoak tree, because “the Lady” always appeared upon it. As previously mentioned, a witness testified that, in July, the lanterns placed upon it appeared as gold—even though everyone and everything else were seen in rainbow colors. Why might this be?

Earlier in this work, it was explained that the color of gold represents the glory of God, His divine nature, and His revelation. Yellow-gold is the color of the sun, which symbolizes the Son of God, the Lord and Savior of the world. Gold is also “the symbol of unselfish and complete immolation to God”—i.e., the virtue of charity, which St. Louis de Montfort called the “gold of love” and “the fulfillment of the whole law.” It was further explained that, even in ancient times, purest gold was considered a precious metal, and it was one reserved for the Ark of the Covenant, the Temple, and all the vessels of the Lord.” At God’s command to Moses, the “mercy-seat” of the Ark was likewise made of the purest gold, for from it He would give orders and speak to the prophet. Like the Ark of the Covenant which it covered, the Old Testament propitiatory or ‘mercy-seat” is also a figure-type for the Virgin Mary, upon whom God rests and speaks to His people—just as He did in Old Testament history and as He does again in modern times.

Next, we examine the atmospheric phenomena wherein Fatima witnesses observed all the colors of the rainbow, on the ground and on their clothes. Let us consider a previous referral to the Apocalypse, when St. John the Evangelist was privileged to see a vision of God’s throne, wherein he described it as follows:

“After these things I looked, and behold a door was opened in heaven, and the first voice which I heard, as it were, of a trumpet speaking with me, said: Come up hither, and I will shew thee the things which must be done hereafter. And immediately I was in the spirit: and behold there was a throne set in heaven, and upon the throne one sitting. And he that sat, was to the sight like the jasper and the sardine stone; and there was a rainbow round about the throne, in sight like unto an emerald.” [\[196\]](#)

St. Alphonsus de Liguori wrote that the rainbow encircling the throne of God is “an express figure of Mary.” [197] St. Alphonsus then quoted a priest of the episcopate, known as Cardinal Vitalis: “The rainbow round the throne is Mary, who softens the judgment and sentence of God against sinners.” He also cited St. Bernadine of Siena, who said “it was of this rainbow that God spoke when He promised Noah that He would place it in the clouds as a sign of peace, that on looking at it He might remember the eternal peace which He had covenanted to man. I will set My bow in the clouds, and it shall be the sign of a covenant between Me and between the earth...and I shall see it, and shall remember the everlasting covenant. [198] ‘Mary,’ says the saint, ‘is this bow of eternal peace, for as God on seeing it remembers the peace promised to the earth, so does He, at the prayers of Mary, forgive the crimes of sinners, and confirm His peace with them.’”

In the tenth chapter of the Apocalypse, St. John revealed: “And I saw another mighty angel come down from heaven, clothed with a cloud, and a rainbow was on his head, and his face was as the sun, and his feet as pillars of fire. And he had in his hand a little book open: and he set his right foot upon the sea, and his left foot upon the earth. And he cried with a loud voice as when a lion roareth. And when he had cried, seven thunders uttered their voices.” [199]

In an interpretation shared in The Book of Destiny, “This vision presents a powerful angel stepping into the wicked world to make a momentous revelation...His face shines like the face of Christ and reflects a rainbow from the cloud. In this apocalyptic verse, the word ‘rainbow’ signifies a message of mercy although it forebodes the direst of all God’s judgments upon the world.” [200]

Finally, we might recall that a rainbow usually boasts seven colors—red, orange, yellow, green, blue, purple (indigo), and violet (sometimes perceived as a deep pink, because, depending on the individual, it is possible to see the various hues within a rainbow). In the Church, there are seven Sacraments, seven gifts of the Holy Ghost, the Seven Last Words of Christ, the Seven Sorrows of Mary, the Seven Joys of Mary, the Seven Spiritual Works of Mercy, and the Seven Corporal Works of Mercy.

It is also intriguing to discover an observation made by Fr. James L. Meagher, a priest of the 19th century: “All through the Bible runs the sacred number seven, and in sevens the Gospels were written in the original Greek.” [201] Lastly, according to Fr. Herman Bernard Kramer’s discernment of Catholic symbolism, the number “7” is considered as God’s sacred number, the number of spiritual perfection, and the fundamental number of the Apocalypse. [\[202\]](#)

PART 8

A Shower of Petals: Our Lady of the Rosary, Mediatrice of All Graces

“...after Christ, we find in Mary the end of the law and the fulfillment of the figures and oracles.”

–Pope St. Pius X, "Ad Diem Illum Laetissimum," 1904 A.D.

“When will people learn that it is very easy to secure the friendship of Mary and that her protection destroys all the wiles of the devils?” asked Fr. H. O’Lavery, the author of The Mother of God and Her Glorious Feasts. “The friendship of Mary is not passing, like so many worldly friendships, which is based often on love of self rather than on love of others. Our Blessed Lady only wishes to bestow graces upon us and to bring us within the Sacred Heart of Jesus.” [\[203\]](#)

It may seem strange to call the Mother of God “our friend,” but did not Jesus call the Apostles His friends? “I will not now call you servants: for the servant knoweth not what his lord doth. But I have called you friends: because all things whatsoever I have heard of my Father, I have made known to you.” [\[204\]](#)

To state a truth in the most simple of terms, the 1917 Fatima apparitions highlight the motherly solicitude and the friendship of Mary, who inevitably identified herself as the Lady of the Rosary while revealing herself as the Mediatrice of All Graces. In this section on the public, sensible signs manifested to the witnesses of the Fatima apparitions, we look at two signs yet to be examined:

- Onlookers to the third Apparition, which occurred on July 13, 1917 (the day the Virgin Mary gave to the children the Great Secret in its three distinct parts), testified to atmospheric changes, in which people saw “all the colors of the rainbow, pink, red, blue....The trees seemed to be made not of leaves but of flowers...”

- During the Apparition of September 13, the month before the promised Miracle, the sensible signs increased and included a shower of small white objects—described either as petals, snowflakes, dove-shaped forms, stars, or roses—all of which gently fell from the sky and disappeared before touching the ground. [\[205\]](#)

Flowering Trees at the Height of Summer

“The trees seemed to be made not of leaves but of flowers...” In this one sign alone, we will see that the flowers are a multi-faceted emblem of both the Virgin Mary and the Catholic Church established by Our Lord Jesus Christ, which alone offers the spiritual means to gain eternal salvation, and the heavenly garden of Paradise.

- Firstly, it is thought-provoking when one notices that witnesses of the July apparition never mentioned a likeness to a specific type of flower—for example, an apple, peach, pear, or cherry blossom. Instead, they simply used the generic term “flowers.” The significance? All beautiful flowers symbolize the Virgin Mary’s holiness and divine prerogatives.

To cite only a limited number of examples, the white lily (also known as the “Annunciation Lily”) is a symbol of Our Lady’s Immaculate purity; impatiens (called “Our Lady’s Earrings”) denote the Virgin’s ears which heard God’s word and kept it; the small violet reminds us of Mary’s humility; the lovely “Lady’s Slipper” flower calls to mind the Virgin’s charity when she traveled on foot to the hill country to assist her elder cousin, St. Elizabeth, the mother of St. John the Baptist; the columbine represents the Holy Ghost overshadowing Our Lady; the strawberry, in flower and yet simultaneously bearing fruits, symbolizes the Perpetual Virginity of Mary, and the marigold (“Mary’s Gold”) signifies the glories of Mary, “a woman clothed with the sun” in the Apocalypse. [\[206\]](#)

- Secondly, the Old Testament’s Prophecy of Isaias foretells, in figurative language, the budding and blossoming of God’s kingdom on earth, the Catholic Church, despite the constant onslaughts against it from without and within: “The land that was desolate and impassable shall be glad, and the wilderness shall rejoice, and shall flourish like the lily. It shall bud forth and blossom, and shall rejoice with joy and praise: the glory of Libanus is given to it: the beauty of Carmel, and Saron, they shall see the glory of the Lord, and the beauty of our God.” [\[207\]](#)

The Virgin Mary, Mother of the Church, came to Fatima with the most urgent of messages to save the Church from the wasteland of desolation, the abomination of desolation. There may also be an implicit allusion to the Apocalypse, for the woman crowned with twelve stars flees to the wilderness. It has been shown that the royal woman of the Apocalypse is a figure-type, sometimes for the Virgin Mary and other times for the Church. One could truthfully state that Our Lady has been “chased” out of the Church, for in a great number of parishes there rarely exists any public devotion to her. The apocalyptic dragon, after chasing the woman into the wilderness, then goes out to seek war with her children—those who are still faithful to Christ and His Church, who still hold and practice a filial devotion to the Sacred and Immaculate Hearts.

- Thirdly, since flowers on trees produce fruits, it follows that celestial flowers are the signs of graces, given by God through the hands of Our Lady, strengthening the elect in practicing the supernatural virtues. St. Louis de Montfort taught: “If Mary, who is the tree of life, is well cultivated in our soul by fidelity to the practices of this devotion [to Jesus through Mary], she will bear her fruit in her own time, and her fruit is none other than Jesus Christ.” [208] Pope Leo XIII expounded on the doctrine of Mary as Mediatrix of All Graces when he wrote: “With equal truth may it be also affirmed that, by the will of God, Mary is the intermediary through whom is distributed unto us this immense treasure of mercies gathered by God, for mercy and truth were created by Jesus Christ. Thus as no man goeth to the Father but by the Son, so no man goeth to Christ but by His Mother.” [209]

However, just as Jesus could work no miracles in Nazareth due to unbelief, Fr. H. O’Lavery wrote that “Mary cannot give her gifts to those who will not receive them. How many pass by graces or refuse them, with the result that countless souls are lost. Every grace accepted means the increase of grace in others. Every soul sanctified means the sanctification of countless other souls.” [210] This explanation appears to be another reason for the flowering of the trees, for God primarily acts in the world through people—that is, God acts through those who accept and use well the graces He sends, for the good of their own souls and that of others.

Thus the heavenly flowers which briefly replaced the trees’ natural leaves, an event witnessed at the height of summer (when trees do not blossom but are already growing fruit) and lasting only through the time of Our Lady’s Apparition, also appear to represent the Gifts of the Holy Ghost. Hence, the flowering trees represent the virtues and good works necessary for salvation, which are never out of season. “By a voice he saith: Hear me, ye divine offspring, and bud forth as the rose planted by the brooks of waters. Send forth flowers, as the lily, and yield a smell, and bring forth leaves in grace, and praise with canticles, and bless the Lord in his works.”

[\[211\]](#)

• Fourthly, when explaining why we must accomplish all of our actions “in” the Virgin Mother of God, St. Louis de Montfort, known as the apostle of “true devotion to Jesus through Mary,” wrote: “Thoroughly to understand this practice, we must first know that Our Blessed Lady is the true terrestrial paradise of the New Adam, and that the ancient paradise was but a figure of her...It is in this earthly paradise that there is the true tree of life, which has borne Jesus Christ, the Fruit of Life, and the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, which has given light unto the world. There are in this divine place trees planted by the hand of God and watered by His divine unction, which have borne and daily bear fruits of a divine taste. There are flowerbeds adorned with beautiful and varied blossoms of virtues.” [\[212\]](#)

Almost two centuries later, Blessed John Henry Newman said, “A garden is a spot of ground set apart for trees and plants, all good, all various, for things that are sweet to the taste or fragrant in scent, or beautiful to look upon, or useful for nourishment; and accordingly in its spiritual sense it means the home of blessed spirits and holy souls dwelling there together, souls with both the flowers and the fruits upon them, which by the careful husbandry of God they have come to bear, flowers and fruits of grace, flowers more beautiful and more fragrant than those of any garden, fruits more delicious and exquisite than can be matured by earthly husbandman.”

[\[213\]](#)

He continued, “All that God has made speaks of its Maker; the mountains speak of His eternity; the sun of His immensity, and the winds of His Almightyness. In like manner flowers and fruits speak of His sanctity, His love, and His providence; and... since they are found in a garden, therefore a garden has also excellences which speak of God, because it is their home.” [\[214\]](#) This mystical garden of Paradise is likewise a figure-type of the Virgin Mary.

“My sister, my spouse is a garden enclosed, a fountain sealed up.”

[\[215\]](#) Those are the words of the Holy Ghost, speaking of His Beloved—the Virgin that would bear Christ. St. Sophronius (560-638 A.D.) remarked, “Mary was this enclosed garden and sealed fountain, into which no guile could enter, against which no fraud of the enemy could prevail, and who always was holy in mind and body.” Almost six centuries later, St. Bernard said something similar when addressing the Blessed Virgin: “Thou art an enclosed garden, into which the sinner’s hand has never entered to pluck its flowers.” [216]

• Finally, Blessed Newman reminds us that “our first parents were placed in ‘a garden of pleasure’ shaded by trees, ‘fair to behold and pleasant to eat of,’ with the Tree of Life in the midst, and a river to water the ground. Thus Our Lord, speaking from the cross to the penitent robber, calls the blessed place, the heaven to which He was taking him, ‘paradise,’ or a garden of pleasure. Therefore St. John, in the Apocalypse, speaks of heaven, the palace of God, as a garden or paradise, in which was the Tree of Life giving forth its fruits every month.” [217]

A Shower of Signs in September

Other than the Miracle of the Sun, the final sensible sign to examine is the shower of small white objects, described either as petals, snowflakes, dove-shaped forms, stars, or roses, all of which gently fell from the sky and disappeared before touching the ground.

• White: The color white represents purity of mind, heart, and will. It is the symbol of prayer and good works for the conversion of sinners. Additionally, white is comprised of all seven colors of the rainbow and therefore signifies the whole of God’s plan of Redemption.

• Snow: In the Book of Proverbs, we read: “She shall not fear for her house in the cold of snow: for all her domestics are clothed with double garments,” a passage that refers to the Virgin. St. Alphonsus de Liguori reminds us that these "domestics" are Mary's clients, and then he cites Cornelius à Lapide who said this double clothing “‘consists in her adorning her faithful servants with the virtues of her Son and with her own,’ and thus clothed they persevere in virtue.” [218]

• Doves: “Those who are led by the Spirit of God are the children of God.” [219] From the time of antiquity, a white dove is the symbol of the Holy Ghost, the Spirit of God. The dove is seen in representations of the Annunciation (the Incarnation of Jesus Christ), the Lord's Baptism, and the descent of the Holy Ghost upon Mary and the Apostles at Pentecost. The dove is also the symbol of the Sacrament of Confirmation, which means the sacrament of “strengthening,” through which the confirmed person is then called “a soldier of Christ because he is especially deputed to profess the faith strongly and fight for it.” [220]

The dove is also the symbol of the Virgin Mary. St. Alphonsus explained: “Mary was prefigured by the dove which returned to Noah in the Ark with an olive branch in its beak, as a pledge of the peace which God granted to men. And on this idea St. Bonaventure thus addresses Our Blessed Lady: ‘Thou art the most faithful dove; thou was a sure mediatress [sic] between God and the world, lost in a spiritual deluge; thou, by presenting thyself before God, hast obtained for a lost world peace and salvation.’ Mary, then, was the heavenly dove which brought to a lost world the olive-branch, the sign of mercy, since she in the first place gave us Jesus Christ, who is the source of mercy; and then, by His merits, obtained all graces for us.” [221]

Again, the saint tells how Mary is likened to a dove in the Canticles, wherein it is written: “There are...young maidens without number. One is my dove, my perfect one (in the Hebrew it is “my entire, my immaculate one”) is but one, she is the only one of her mother.” [222] St. Alphonsus continued: “All just souls are daughters of divine grace; but amongst these Mary was the dove without the gall of sin; the perfect one without spot in her origin, the one conceived in grace.” [223]

• Stars—as mentioned in a previous chapter—remind us that God is the Creator and that we are the created; simultaneously, they remind us that the “works of God show forth His glory, that His law is greatly to be esteemed and loved,” and “that mankind cannot comprehend His power and wisdom.” [224]

Recalling that Scripture passages often possess both a literal and spiritually figurative meaning, we also know that in the Old Testament, stars also signify the elect—i.e., true believers in and of the Church, the Body of Christ. “In Genesis, the patriarchs, head of the twelve tribes of Israel, are also called stars. And the words of Daniel (7:10) cannot be restricted to the priests only of the Antiochean persecution but surely embrace all martyrs of that ordeal. If the chosen people are called stars, much more appropriately so the true believers of Jesus Christ.” [225]

In the Apocalypse, the Lord speaks of giving the morning star to “he that shall overcome,” yet in another passage, Jesus—who is Priest, Prophet, and King—calls Himself the Morning Star. [226] Elsewhere in the Book of Revelations, stars indicate a group who occupy offices of high estate; they symbolize the Catholic hierarchy (bishops and priests). [227]

Finally, again is repeated the reference to the apocalyptic passage that may be the one most well known throughout the world. It is also the one that many believe is the infallible prophecy foretelling the authentic Marian apparitions of the modern age— and specifically those of Our Lady of Fatima: “And a great sign appeared in heaven: A woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and on her head a crown of twelve stars...” [\[228\]](#)

- Roses: The white rose is the symbol of pure love (charity) and beauty of soul, which explains why it is the foremost symbol of the Virgin Mary, who is called the Mystical Rose of Heaven. As the rose is also considered the Queen of Flowers, so Our Lady is hailed as the Queen of Heaven. The rose is likewise an emblem of the Holy Faith, martyrdom, and the secrecy of the Sacrament of Penance, while five roses grouped together symbolize the Five Wounds of Christ, from whence all graces flow. [\[229\]](#)

-SECTION II-

PART 9

October:

The Promised: Sign

“For she is more beautiful than the sun, and above all the order of the stars: being compared with the light, she is found before it.”

–Wisdom 7:9

As we have seen, from May through October 1917, the hamlet of Fatima, Portugal was graced by the presence of the Virgin Mother of God. Shining brighter than the sun, veiled and gowned in white, adorned with the Star of Esther and a luminous necklace from which hung a brighter orb, with a Rosary suspended from her right arm, the Lady promised three shepherd children, “In October, I will tell you who I am and what I want, and I will perform a miracle so that all may see and believe.” [\[230\]](#) The vow was fulfilled with the most stupendous public miracle since the parting of the Red Sea. Symbolizing Christ, the Great Miracle of the Sun (like the Star of Esther on Our Lady’s gown), is a “figure-type,” illustrating once more that “the miracles of Our Lord and the signs accomplished by Our Lady of Fatima are not only extraordinary facts which bear witness to their supernatural origin, they are also symbols rich in meaning, the sensible expressions of mystery.” [\[231\]](#)

Our Lady in the Modern Age

“The intervention of God in human history through the Fatima events was predicted in the Bible and is God's definitive response to the revolt of many nations and peoples away from the revelation and rule of Jesus Christ,” explained Father Joseph de St. Marie who was, at the time, Professor of Theology at the Pontifical Faculty of Saint Theresa in Rome. “The revolt against God is the ‘mystery of iniquity’ of which Saint Paul speaks, saying that it is already in operation.” [\[232\]](#)

Let us then consider the Great Revolt of the “Modern Age,” which began in the 1500’s immediately after the Renaissance era and continues to our times. Of great import to the Church and the faithful, each heinous step of this Revolt occurred two hundred years apart, the last of them coinciding with Our Lady’s appearances at Fatima: the revolt of Luther (1517), the public establishment of Freemasonry (1717), and the birth of Bolshevism

(1917)

Note also how the Great Revolt against the Church, which began in 1517, is comprised of three distinct parts—just like its antidote, the Great Secret of Fatima, which opened with a vision of hell because so many souls condemn themselves to eternal perdition. Thus the first step of the Revolt marks the 16th century as “the epoch of humanism and also of the Lutheran drama, of the Protestant revolt. Humanism was a cultural movement admittedly, but it was also a return to paganism under the color of culture. As for Luther, he was at the very beginning of the division of Christian Europe. He was the great divider: ‘Gott ist im Himmel, du bist auf Erden’ (‘God is in His Heaven; you are on earth’). Between heaven and earth, Luther establishes an impassable abyss. He denies all mediations. In the end Luther, who talks so much about Christ, denies the mediation of Christ's Humanity. A fortiori, he denies the mediation of Christ's Mother, His Co-Redemptrix.” [233] Herein lies the essential significance of the 16th Century: “The affirmation of man, of rupture between heaven and earth by the denial of the mediations which unite them: Christ, Mary, and first of all the Church. Such is the beginning of the revolt of modern times against God.” [234]

To this first revolt of the Modern Age, the hierarchy of the Church ultimately responded at the infallible Council of Trent (1570). Still, the evil continued to spread into the 17th century. Heresy insidiously spread throughout Christendom, finally reaching France, “the eldest daughter of the Church,” so-called because it was the first nation to publicly proclaim Catholicism as the state religion. Although condemned as a heresy, Jansenism rippled throughout the country, which explains the French bishops’ resistance to St. Louis de Montfort’s apostolate of True Devotion to Jesus through Mary. The Jansenist crisis, however, led to a worse one.

Near the end of the 17th century, Our Lord attempted to save the Church and France by His direct intervention via the Sacred Heart apparitions at Paray-le-Monial, France. Jesus asked for reparation to His Sacred Heart, especially in the form of the Nine First Fridays, and He also sent a special request to the King of France. Above all, as He offered His Divine Mercy, He spoke of the ingratitude of sinners which would soon demand His Justice.

St. Margaret Mary revealed, “Our Lord showed Himself to me covered with wounds, His body all bleeding and His Heart torn with grief; He seemed overcome with fatigue. I threw myself at His feet, filled with a great fear, and I dared not say a word to Him. He said to me: 'Behold to what I am reduced by My chosen people whom I had called to appease My justice, and they persecute Me in secret. If they do not mend their ways I will punish them severely; I will withdraw the good, and the rest I will devote to My just wrath, which will flame up against them.'" [235]

Not thirty years later, in 1717, Freemasonry was born. A secret society, it bears a special hatred for the Catholic Church, "and its avowed aim to destroy the Church is confirmed in Catholic and Masonic documents alike [236]...Within 50 years, Masonry's well-known battle cry was 'to overcome Throne and Altar'—that is, monarchies and Catholicism." [237]

Still, the patient Lord waited for the members of His Church to repent and offer reparation, but not enough did so. He waited for the king of France to heed Him—but to no avail. "The 18th Century saw a further expansion of rebellion which reached its climax in the French Revolution, the first great act of organized political rebellion against God." [238]

Deeply offended, the Merciful "Heart of Christ somehow withdrew behind the Heart of Mary" for "men had refused to respond, or had given insufficient response, to the appeal" [239] of the Sacred Heart. The passion of France began in July 1789, commencing exactly 100 years to the day that Our Lord made known to St. Margaret Mary Alacoque a special request: To save France from the enemies of the Church, the Catholic monarch must solemnly consecrate himself and the country to His Sacred Heart, thus publicly proclaiming that France placed her trust in God. [240] For 100 years, the kings ignored the request; the tragic result was the French Revolution. France, "eldest daughter of the Church," succumbed to the Masonic Revolution's savagery and its pernicious attack against altar and throne.

In many ways, the doom of 18th century France prefigures both the Third Secret Vision of Fatima and the reign of apocalyptic anti-Christ. Here will be mentioned the three most pertinent parallels:

- First, the line of Catholic monarchs who failed to honor the Sacred Heart's consecration request, a rejection which eventually led to the apostasy in France [historically prefiguring the failure of a line of Catholic Stewards of the Catholic City—the Popes—to command the bishops of the world to participate in a solemn, collegial consecration of Russia to the Immaculate Heart of Mary];

• Second, the rightful king's imprisonment (before his execution) lasted 3 ½ years (the length of time in which anti-Christ will persecute the faithful);

• Third, the cruel deaths of the monarch, his queen, and the little Dauphin, all of which were both preceded and followed by the martyrdoms of those who were faithful to Catholicism and to the kingly office [so like the Third Secret Vision in which “a bishop dressed in white” and others before and after him are killed, most likely as martyrs for Christ and also for their fidelity to the papal office].

The 19th century was a “catastrophe for the Church and for the Faith... God could tolerate no more: He could no longer permit men's crimes to go without chastisement; yet neither could He cease to seek to spare us through pure mercy.” [241] So it was that Our Lord sent His Mother to the world.

Beginning with the Rue-de Bac in Paris (1830), Our Lady also appeared at Blangy (1840), LaSalette (1846), Lourdes (1858), Pontmain (1871), Pellevoisin (1876), and Knock, Ireland (1879). With the exception of Our Lady of Guadalupe in Mexico (1531), the others that followed in Europe and Ireland became the very first Marian apparitions of modern times. With the 1830 series of apparitions to St. Catherine Labouré, Our Lady gave the world the “Medal of the Immaculate Conception” (commonly known as “the Miraculous Medal”), with its inscription, “O Mary, conceived without sin, pray for us who have recourse to thee.” At each of the apparitions, she always showed herself the Mother of Mercy and the Mediatrix of All Graces.

The year of Our Lord 1917 marked the third year in which the world suffered from the first universal war. It should be noted that Our Lady did not again come to earth until that year, when the the third part of the Great Revolt was imminent. The Secrets of Fatima, “in their known contents” as Cardinal Ratzinger phrased it in 1984, allow us to reasonably deduce that the Virgin came to warn the Church that mankind had entered a critical juncture in history—specifically, the “revolt” [literally, “apostasy”] that must come first, as foretold by St. Paul. [242] It is this last Revolt that possesses the ability to lead the entire world into the age of great distress among all nations, thus initiating an even greater, three-fold chastisement, prophesied by St. Luke in his eschatological discourse and by St. John in the Apocalypse.

Bolshevism, arising in 1917, completed the “trinity of errors” of the “Modern Age.” As we have already seen, the first part of the Great Revolt consists of philosophical error (which departs from the Church’s philosophy of scholasticism). From this error sprang the other two—theological ambiguity and political-social secularism. [243] “And let it be noted; at the very moment when, as a consequence of the Bolshevik victory, the 'Red Dragon' emerged at one extremity of Europe in Leningrad, which then was still Petrograd, at the other extremity of Europe, at Fatima...there appeared the 'Woman Clothed with the Sun', the Immaculate Heart of Mary. Such was the miracle of October 13, 1917, the Miracle of the Sun, a miracle which calls for an entire book to itself...But, dear friends, this sun is the symbol of Christ.” [244]

The Effects of Divine Mercy

Thrice foretold in the preceding three months, witnessed by 70,000-100,000 people, the astounding Miracle of the Sun marks Fatima as unique amongst all Church-authenticated Marian apparitions. The “Great Sign,” given on October 13, 1917, majestically summarizes the whole Fatima message of God’s Divine Mercy and Justice, which are inseparable.

“Among the effects of Divine Mercy,” said St. John Eudes, “we must enumerate three principal realities, which in turn embody numberless effects. The first is the Incarnation of the God-Man; the second, his Mystical Body, namely Holy Church; the third is the Mother of the God-Man, namely the Most Blessed Virgin Mary. These constitute three admirable masterpieces of Divine Mercy.” [245] Possessing theological and Mariological depths which no one could hope to fully explore, these three principal masterpieces nevertheless resonate throughout the Fatima revelations. They are manifested in the Great Secret (in three distinct parts) and the Great Miracle (in three marked phases). Conversely, the Great Revolt’s three parts utterly oppose these holy realities.

During the whole night and morning of Oct. 12-13, 1917, a “thin, persistent rain fell, wetting the fields, muddying the ground, and penetrating with its cold humidity” [246] all those making their way to Fatima. No doubt, Heaven had many reasons for sending this permeating rain, which might be summed up as a chance to offer as a sacrifice for the conversion of sinners that which the Lord allows us to suffer and as a “sensible sign” of the graces God wishes to dispense through the hands of the Immaculate One.

Many people expected the miracle to begin promptly at noon, according to the clock, not realizing that the Lady appeared at the solar noon hour—that is, according to the sun’s time. In October, the difference between solar time and clock time was that of an hour and a half, which explains why witnesses would later say that the children arrived just before one o’clock (11:30 a.m. by the sun’s time) or that they saw the cloud around 1:30 p.m. (solar noon), which occurs in the following account.

“I am going to relate to you in a brief and concise manner, without any statements which would conceal the truth, what I saw in Fatima on 13 October, 1917,” wrote Dr. Joseph Almeida Garrett, Professor of Natural Sciences at Coimbra University, who penned his witness account in December, 1917. “I arrived at midday. The rain which had fallen persistently all morning, combined with a blustery wind, continued fretfully, as if threatening to drown everyone. The dull and heavy sky, its dark-grey clouds water-laden, predicted abundant rain for a long time to come.”

“I remained on the road in the shelter of the hood of my car, looking rather disdainfully towards the place where they said the apparition would be seen, not daring to step on the sodden and muddy earth of the freshly-ploughed field. I was a little more than a hundred meters [about 330 feet] from the high wooden posts mounted by a rough cross, seeing distinctly the wide circle of people who, with their umbrellas open seemed like a vast arena of mushrooms. A little after one o’clock, the children to whom Our Lady, as they declare, appeared and appointed the place, day and hour of the apparition, arrived at the site. Hymns were intoned and sung by the people who gathered about them. At a certain moment, this immense mass of people, so varied and compact, closed their umbrellas and uncovered their heads in a gesture that could have been one of humility or respect, but which left me surprised and bewildered, because now the rain, with a blind persistency, poured down on their heads and drenched them through. Later, I was told that this crowd, who finished up by kneeling in the mud, had obeyed the voice of a child.” Indeed, it was true that Lucia, in anticipation of the Virgin’s arrival, had asked the people to close their umbrellas.

“It must have been about half-past one when there rose up, on the precise spot where the children were, a pillar of smoke, a delicate, slender, bluish column that went straight up to about two meters, perhaps above their heads and then evaporated. The phenomenon lasted for some seconds and was perfectly visible to the naked eye...It was repeated yet a second and third time. On these three occasions, and especially on the last one, the slender posts stood out distinctly in the dull grey atmosphere.”

Note that Dr. Joseph Almeida Garrett carefully observed the wondrous pillar of smoke and yet wrote in his account that he had been “looking at the spot of the apparitions, in a serene, if cold, expectation of something happening and with diminishing curiosity because a long time had passed without anything to excite my attention.” [\[247\]](#)

One may well consider the professor’s latter words, pondering if the oppressive difficulties of the perseverant faithful—thousands of people exhaustedly making their way through persistent rain and wind that was at first annoying but then chilled them to the bone, spattered and then bogged down with the heavy mud of this earth, mocked by others and yet filled with hope—and who perhaps, like Dr. Garrett, also felt that a “long time had passed without anything to excite [their] attention” are literally indicative of the many spiritual trials the Church Militant shall continually endure until all of Our Lady’s requests are finally heeded. For although a long time has indeed passed since the Mother of God made her requests, we know that their accomplishment will immediately result in the fruition of the Virgin’s promise: “In the end, My Immaculate Heart will triumph. The Holy Father will consecrate Russia to me and she will be converted and an era of peace will be granted to mankind.”

What the Children Saw on October 13, 1917

The cloud which appeared indicated the Virgin’s arrival and, as usual, Lucia asked the Lady what she wanted. She revealed to the three children who she is and what she wanted: “I want a chapel to be built here in my honor, for I am the Lady of the Rosary. Continue to say the Rosary every day. The war will end soon and the soldiers will return to their homes.”

Lucia said she had many things to ask of the Lady, “to heal some sick people, and to convert some sinners, etc.”

To this general request, the Virgin gravely responded: “Some, yes; others, no. People must amend their lives and ask pardon for their sins.”

Growing sadder, she said, “Do not offend the Lord our God any longer; He is already deeply offended.” [\[248\]](#)

“Then, opening her hands, Our Lady made them reflect on the sun and, as she ascended, the reflection of her own light continued to be projected on the sun itself.” [\[249\]](#) Here, as with other manifestations at Fatima (like the mysterious pillars of incense arising, three times, from the holmoak tree upon which Our Lady stood [\[250\]](#)), we recognize anew that incredible

Mariophany of which Sr. Lucia would later write, addressing the Virgin as “a living tabernacle, a Monstrance, a living Temple, the permanent abode of the Most Holy Trinity.” [\[251\]](#) Surely those words of Sr. Lucia’s grant a breath-taking glimpse into the “lights about this mystery” (the Holy Trinity) that she later received as a young nun but was not permitted to reveal. [\[252\]](#) (Years later, a cardinal would publicly state, “While the death of God is proclaimed with arrogant glee, Fatima appears to be a supernatural light. It is God who reveals Himself with the impressive majesty of Sinai,” as the Cardinal Patriarch of Lisbon said at the 8th Fatima Congress at Kvelaer, Germany, on September 18, 1977.) [\[253\]](#)

Lucia continued, “After Our Lady had disappeared into the immense distance of the firmament, we beheld St. Joseph with the Child Jesus and Our Lady robed in white with a blue mantle, beside the sun. St. Joseph and the Child Jesus appeared to bless the world, for they traced the Sign of the Cross with their hands.”

“When, a little later, this apparition disappeared, I saw Our Lord and Our Lady; it seemed to me that it was Our Lady of Sorrows. Our Lord appeared to bless the world in the same manner as St. Joseph had done.”

“This apparition also vanished, and I saw Our Lady once more, this time resembling Our Lady of Mt. Carmel.” [\[254\]](#)

At the precise moment Our Lady cast her own light upon the sun, the drenching rain suddenly stopped, the brooding clouds dispersed, and the sky became clearer. The sudden change immediately attracted attention of the great crowd of thousands.

What the People Saw

Many witnesses, both poor and rich, uneducated or cultured, believers or scoffers, testified to what happened next. First among them is the faithful Ti Marto, the father of Blessed Jacinta and Blessed Francisco: “We looked easily at the sun, which did not blind us. It seemed to flicker on and off, first one way and then another. It shot rays in different directions and painted everything in different colors...What was most extraordinary is that the sun did not hurt our eyes at all. Everything was still and quiet; everyone was looking upwards...” [\[255\]](#)

O Dia, the Lisbon newspaper, described the Miracle in this way: “At midday by the sun, the rain stopped. The sky, pearly grey in color, illuminated the vast arid landscape with a strange light. The sun had a transparent gauzy veil so that the eye could easily be fixed on it. The grey mother-of-pearl tone turned into a sheet of silver which broke up as the clouds were parted and the silver sun, enveloped in the same gauzy grey light, was seen to whirl and turn in the circle of broken clouds. A cry went up from every mouth and people fell on their knees in the muddy ground... The light turned a beautiful blue as though through the window of a cathedral. The blue faded slowly and then the light seemed to pass through yellow glass. Yellow stain fell on white handkerchiefs against the dark skirts of the women. The colors were repeated on the stones and the serra.” [256]

Perhaps most astonishing is the report published in O Seculo, the anti-Catholic, Masonic daily paper of Lisbon, Portugal, written by none other than the paper’s Editor-in-Chief, Avelino de Almedia. We must give credit to this man who, despite his leanings, honestly reported what he witnessed regardless of the heckling and derision that he knew he would receive from his employers and fellow journalists:

“...one could see the immense multitude turn toward the sun, which appeared at its zenith, coming out of the clouds.”

“It resembles a dull silver disc, and it is possible to fix one’s eyes on it without the least damage to the eye. It does not burn the eyes. It does not blind them. One might say that an eclipse was taking place.”

“An immense clamor bursts out, and those who are nearer to the crowd hear a shout: ‘Miracle! Miracle!’ Prodigy!...Prodigy!”

“The attitude of the people takes us back to biblical times. Stupefied and with heads uncovered, they watch the blue sky. Before their dazzled eyes the sun trembled, the sun made unusual and brusque movements, defying all the laws of the cosmos, and according to the typical expression of the peasants, ‘the sun danced...’”

Fifteen days later, after receiving the expected mocking, Almedia enumerated previously omitted details: “What did I see at Fatima that was even stranger? The rain, at an hour announced in advance, ceased falling; the thick mass of clouds dissolved; and the sun—a dull, silver disc—came into view at its zenith, and began to dance in a violent and convulsive movement, which a great number of witnesses compared to a serpentine dance, because the colors taken on by the surface of the sun were so beautiful and gleaming.” [257]

Dr. Garrett also described “a disc, with a clear cut rim, luminous and shining, but which did not hurt the eyes. I do not agree with the comparison which I have heard made in Fatima—that of a dull silver disc. It was a clearer, richer, brighter color, having something of the lustre of a pearl. It did not in the least resemble the moon on a clear night because one saw it and felt it to be a living body...It looked like a glazed wheel made of mother-of-pearl.” [\[258\]](#)

“A Wheel of Fire”

As witnesses testified, the “dance of the sun” was repeated three times, with many likening its movements to a “a wheel of fire, “a bicycle wheel,” a “captive ball of fire,” etc. For ten to twelve minutes, the people stood transfixed in wonder, before their amazement turned to terror as the sun suddenly crashed toward the earth:

- “As if from a bolt from the blue, the clouds were wrenched apart, and the sun at its zenith appeared in all its splendor. It began to revolve vertiginously on its axis, like the most magnificent firewheel that could be imagined, taking on all the colors of the rainbow and sending forth multi-coloured flashes of light, producing the most astounding affect. This sublime and incomparable spectacle, which was repeated three distinct times, lasted for about ten minutes. The immense multitude, overcome by the evidence of such a prodigy, threw themselves on their knees. The Creed, the Hail Mary, Acts of Contrition burst from all lips, and tears, tears of thanksgiving and repentance sprang from their eyes.” (Dr. Formigão, professor of the seminary at Santarem.) [\[259\]](#)

- “It seemed like a wheel of fire which was going to fall on the people.” (Maria Carreira)

- “...it spun like a firewheel.” (Maria do Carmo Marques da Cruz Menezes)

- “...it spun round upon itself in a mad whirl.” (Dr. Almeida Garrett)

- “It came down as if to the height of the clouds and began to whirl giddily upon itself like a captive ball of fire.” (Fr. Pereira da Silva)

- “I saw the sun spinning round and it seemed about to come down on us. It revolved like a bicycle wheel. Afterward, it returned to its place...I wasn’t afraid, but I heard people cry out: ‘Oh we’re going to die! We are going to die!’” (John Carreira, the crippled son of Maria Carreira, and later sacristan of the Fatima shrine) [\[260\]](#)

- “I saw the sun, as if it were a ball of fire, begin to move in the clouds. It had been raining all morning and the sky was full of clouds, but the rain stopped. It lasted for several seconds, crushingly pressing down on us. Wan faces, standing here, from every side great ejaculations, acts of contrition, of the love of God. An indescribable moment! We feel it. We remain dominated by it. But it is not possible to describe it.” (Carlos Mendes, a lawyer) [\[261\]](#)

- “At a certain moment, the sun seemed to stop and then began to move and dance.” (Ti Marto, father of Francisco and Jacinta Marto)

- “However, the sun stops, only to begin the strange dance again after a brief interruption, whirling upon itself, giving the impression of approaching or receding.” (Dr. Pereira Gens of Batalha) [\[262\]](#)

- “Then suddenly, one heard a clamor, a cry of anguish breaking from all the people. The sun, whirling wildly, seemed to loosen itself from the firmament and advance threateningly upon the earth, as if to crush us with its huge and fiery weight. The sensation during those moments was terrible.” (Dr. Almeida Garrett) [\[263\]](#)

- “At a certain moment, the sun seemed to stop and then began to move and dance until it seemed that it was being detached from the sky and was falling on us. It was a terrible moment.” (Ti Marto) [\[264\]](#)

- “It suddenly seemed to come down in a zig-zag, menacing the earth. Terrified, I ran and hid myself among the people, who were weeping and expecting the end of the world to come at any moment.” (Fr. Lourenco, who witnessed the Miracle as a schoolboy.) [\[265\]](#)

- “I looked at the sun and saw it spinning like a disc, rolling on itself. I saw people changing color. They were stained with colors of the rainbow. The sun seemed to be falling from the sky...The people said that the world was going to end...They were afraid and screaming.” (Antonio de Oliveira, farmer) [\[266\]](#)

- “I saw the sun turn upon itself; it seemed to fall from the sky...The people around me were crying that the world was going to end.” (Maria dos Prazeres, widow) [\[267\]](#)

- “The sun started to roll from one place to another and changed to blue, yellow—all colors. Then we saw the sun coming towards the children. Everyone was crying out. Some started to confess their sins because there was no priest around here...My mother grabbed me to her and started to cry, ‘It is the end of the world!’ And then we see the sun come right into the trees...” (Dominic Reis, in a 1960 television interview) [\[268\]](#)

- “Suddenly the rain stopped and a great splendor appeared and the children cried, ‘Look at the sun!’ I saw the sun coming down, feeling that it was falling to the ground. At that moment, I collapsed.” (Maria Candida da Silva) [269]

- “I looked and saw that the people were in various colors—yellow, white, blue. At the same time, I beheld the sun spinning at great speed and very near to me. I at once thought: I am going to die.” (Rev. Joao Menitra) [270]

- “The sun at its zenith whirled upon itself; it detached itself in descending towards the right, all the while whirling with sudden movements never seen before, to the right and the left; having almost arrived at the horizon line, it went back up to the zenith on the left, tracing a sort of winding ellipse as it went.” (Baron de Alvaiazere) [271]

The frightened people, watching the sun return to its place in the heavens, had not yet noticed that their drenched and mud-soaked clothing was now clean and dry. Certainly, one can ponder even this prodigy, which reminds us of God’s abiding Providence. So many pilgrims had for days traveled to Fatima, and then faced a downpour that led them through mud up to two feet deep. Their shoes and lower apparel were caked with mud, their hair and clothes soaked, their bodies thoroughly chilled—and then within the ten to twelve minutes during the Miracle of the Sun, they were spotless, warm, dry, restored. This wonder, however, was not what moved them to instinctively raise their voices in an ecstasy of exultation.

“What could be more overwhelming in impact than the sun plunging like fire from Heaven while tens of thousands lay writhing in the mud, screaming for mercy, convinced that the end of the world had arrived?” asked Francis Johnston, a Catholic writer on Marian apparitions. “At Fatima, we have 100,000 eyewitnesses of all faiths and none, united in their conviction that this indeed was the end of the world. And afterwards, when they found themselves alive and safe, but quivering with fear, they were seized by the realization that God had stamped His Mother’s words with a colossal preview of His Second Coming. Why then should we not ponder their unanimous testimony and take seriously to heart the crucial message which the solar Miracle so heavily underscored?” [272]

“We have seen the Sign of God!” the crowd cried in joy and thanksgiving, “spontaneously using the most exact biblical term, which also evokes the mysterious prophecy of the Apocalypse...A great sign appeared in heaven, a woman clothed with the sun...(Apoc.12:1)” [273]

Virgin of Fatima and the Apocalypse: The Great Sign in Heaven

The apocalyptic verse above continues "...and the moon under her feet, and on her head a crown of twelve stars. And being with child, she cried travailing in birth, and was in pain to be delivered. And there was seen another sign in heaven: and behold a great red dragon, having seven heads, and ten horns: and on his head seven diadems: And his tail drew the third part of the stars of heaven, and cast them to the earth: and the dragon stood before the woman who was ready to be delivered; that, when she should be delivered, he might devour her son. And she brought forth a man child, who was to rule all nations with an iron rod: and her son was taken up to God, and to his throne." [274]

"Before the eyes of the Seer [St. John], a great sign, the first of the 'signs,' a portent of something momentous, appears in the Church. It is a sign of divine origin," explains Rev. Herman Bernard Kramer in The Book of Destiny. [275] Previously, it was explained that, in apocalyptic symbolism, the word "heaven" (in the singular sense) means "the Church," which is the kingdom of God on earth. [276] It follows that the great sign of "a woman clothed with the sun" appears in the Church.

It shall also be repeated that, throughout salvation history, the signs of God indicate various purposes. A true sign can possess any one or more of the following seven functions: It confirms God's Word, His goodness, authenticates prophesy, verifies God's blessings and His intervention for the sake of the elect, strengthens the faithful with hope, insures or testifies to God's Presence, or declares His judgment upon sin.

"Signs in prophetic terminology are ominous revelations of what is about to happen," as Rev. Kramer wrote in his commentary on Apocalypse, Chapter 12. "Therefore the apostles asked Our Lord for the 'sign' of His coming. [277] The Pharisees demanded 'a sign from Heaven' as a proof of Our Lord's claim to divinity." [278] In the sense intended by the Pharisees, a sign is a miracle from Heaven. [279] However, Rev. Kramer adds a sobering insight: "The word furthermore denotes the wonders wrought by evil powers." [280]

In considering Rev. Kramer's phrasing, along with the seven purposes of signs as they are given in the Scriptures, [281] three things are understood, as follows: 1) signs, in and of themselves, are either good or evil, the good coming from God but the evil only permitted by God, 2) signs are "ominous," a word which can mean "portentous, significant, promising, ill-omened, threatening, or boding evil," and 3) the actual appearance of the sign reveals “what is about to happen.”

Rev. Kramer continued, “In the Septuagint, the word is used for celestial phenomena. [282] The sign [of “a woman clothed with the sun”] appearing here is GREAT, because it will indicate the time of the judgment that shall proclaim the ‘Great Day’ of Almighty God. It will herald the near approach of the events narrated in chapters eleven and thirteen. Appearing in heaven, it will point to the center of the whole desperate struggle for the possession of the world by Satan and his hordes. When this sign appears in the Church, the advent of Antichrist is near...The interpretation of this ‘sign’ is thus very important.” [283]

Since the Apocalypse is not necessarily written as a chronology—that is, as an exact order of events—Fr. Kramer’s view that the great sign of Apocalypse Chapter 12:1 precedes those matters recorded in Chapters 11 and 13 leads us to note that Chapter 11 foretells the measuring of the temple and the appearances of the two witnesses, commonly believed to be Enoch and Elias. Chapter 13 prophesies the beast with the seven heads and ten horns, coming out of the sea, as well as the second beast, “coming up out of the earth, and he had two horns, like a lamb, and he spoke as a dragon.” A horn (or horns) are the biblical symbol for either a man or an object consecrated to God; they are also the sign of what the Bible calls “kings” who possess spiritual and/or earthly authority over a nation or nations. (For example, see Exod. 27:2; Lev. 4:7; Ps. 74:11; Daniel 7:24, Dan. 8:20, Amos 6: 14, Zach. 1:21, but there are many others.) Kings may be good or evil, as the Bible has often shown.

Our resurrected Lord in Heaven is described by St. John in Apocalypse 5:6 in the following manner: “And I saw: and behold in the midst of the throne and of the four living creatures, and in the midst of the ancients, a Lamb standing as it were slain, having seven horns and seven eyes: which are the seven Spirits of God, sent forth into all the earth.” The descriptive number of seven indicates God’s spiritual perfection, because He is God, the King of kings.

In a word, horns are Scriptural emblems of power, authority, dominion, glory, intensity, or ferocity. The “two horns, like a lamb” are very telling; they infallibly predict a living man who holds a high office of authority, who poses as a lamb (a Christian) but who speaks as “a dragon,” meaning his doctrines are those of hell. That said, it seems apparent that this man will be either one of two things: an ordained bishop or a cardinal (both wear “two-horned” mitres which denote spiritual authority) or he might be the leader of a nation (a lay person) who holds a position of great authority in the world and who presents himself to the world as a Christian leader. St. John relates in his Gospel (Jn. 21: 15-17) that Our resurrected Lord, when speaking to St. Peter, twice told the Prince of the Apostles, “Feed my lambs,” Christ’s reference to the laity, and then “Feed my sheep,” Jesus’ reference to the other apostles, the hierarchy. Whoever will be this “lamb” with authority, he will speak “as a dragon” because he is a liar and a traitor to the Lord.

A Royal Woman, Clothed with the Sun

Whom or what is represented by “a woman clothed with the sun”? That the woman is royal is evident—she is clothed with the sun, she wears a crown of twelve stars, and she stands upon the moon. As we already know, there is found within the Church two main interpretations: one claims that she is the Virgin Mary and another believes that she personifies the Church. We shall see that she is both.

For example, Pope St. Pius X declared to the bishops of the Church, “Everyone knows that this woman signified the Virgin Mary, the stainless one who brought forth our Head. The Apostle continues: ‘And, being with child, she cried travailing in birth, and was in pain to be delivered.’ (Apoc.12: 2). John therefore saw the Most Holy Mother of God already in eternal happiness, yet travailing in a mysterious childbirth. What birth was it? Surely it was the birth of us who, still in exile, are yet to be generated to the perfect charity of God, and to eternal happiness. And the birth pains show the love and desire with which the Virgin from heaven above watches over us, and strives with unwearying prayer to bring about the fulfillment of the number of the elect.” [\[284\]](#)

In defining the dogma of the Assumption of the Virgin Mary, Pope Pius XII pronounced: “Moreover, the scholastic Doctors have recognized the Assumption of the Virgin Mother of God as something signified, not only in various figures of the Old Testament, but also in that woman clothed with the sun whom John the Apostle contemplated on the Island of Patmos.” [\[285\]](#)

In the Douay-Rheims Bible, an accompanying footnote for the Apocalypse, Chapter 12:1, summarizes another interpretation, one that favors “a woman” as a symbolic image of the Church: “‘A woman’...The church of God. It may also, by allusion, be applied to Our Blessed Lady.

The church is clothed with the sun, that is, with Christ: she hath the moon, that is, the changeable things of the world, under her feet: and the twelve stars with which she is crowned, are the twelve apostles: she is in labour and pain, whilst she brings forth her children, and Christ in them, in the midst of afflictions and persecutions.”

Since the Blessed Virgin Mary painlessly brought forth only one Child, [286] Who is the Christ, the Lord and Savior of the world, it seems reasonable that “ancient interpreters beginning with Hippolytus and Methodius understood this [‘a woman clothed with the sun’ who is in pain to be delivered] to be a figure of the Church.” [287]

However, if the woman represents the Church and only the Church, the latter interpretation raises a necessary question, as follows:

Why would St. John describe, in symbolic language, the Church (“a woman clothed with the sun”) as appearing in the Church (“in heaven”)? In other words, why would the Church appear as a “great sign” within herself?

The Great Sign at Enmity with the Dragon

Likewise considering that the whole of Scripture contains figure-types [288] of New Testament archetypes (such as Christ, Our Lady, or the just versus the reprobates), is it not possible that this “great sign” foretells the age in which Mary (assumed into Heaven), appears in the Church?

It is already known that the Virgin Mary is herself a sign from God. In the Old Testament, the infallible Scriptures reveal: “Therefore, the Lord Himself shall give you a sign. Behold a virgin shall conceive and bear a son and His name shall be called Emmanuel.” [289]

The Virgin Mother is also “Woman,” the title by which Jesus Christ called His Virgin Mother. [290] He called her “Woman” at Cana, and He immediately performed His first miracle at her request. As He was dying on the Cross, He again called her “Woman,” saying, “Woman, behold thy son.” Then speaking to John, He said simply, “Behold thy mother.” Our Lord’s last directive from the Cross entrusted the Virgin Mary to St. John as Mother, for St. John in his person represented the faithful of the Church. (Additionally, might we momentarily consider that St. John was the only one of the Apostles to stand with the Virgin at the Foot of the Cross, the only Apostle privileged to care for Christ’s Mother, and the only Apostle who beheld the great visions which he was instructed by Heaven to write, a record which became known as the Apocalypse?)

By calling His Mother “Woman,” another mystery of grace is revealed:

The Word Incarnate [291] revealed by His Word that His Mother, the Virgin Mary, is “the Woman” foretold in the proto-evangelium (the first Good News) of Genesis 3:15. God Himself pronounced to the serpent (the devil) that HE (the Lord) would place enmities (i.e., hostilities, antagonisms, animosities) between the evil one and “the woman.” God made clear His Holy Will that the “the woman” is the one who crushes the head of the serpent and all his plots: “I will put enmities between thee and the woman, and thy seed and her seed: she shall crush thy head, and thou shalt lie in wait for her heel.” [292]

Illustrating that the Church’s Tradition has long recognized the Virgin Mary as the Woman of Genesis, Blessed Pope Pius IX quoted the first eight words of Genesis 3:15, when defining the Immaculate Conception. [293] More than a century before that solemn definition, St. Louis de Montfort (the great saint who so well taught true devotion to Jesus through Mary), fully grasped the true meaning of “the woman” prophesied in the proto-evangelium of Genesis 3:15, writing:

“God has established only one enmity—but it is an irreconcilable one, which will last and even go on increasing to the end of time. That enmity is between Mary, His worthy Mother, and the devil, between the children and the servants of the Blessed Virgin and the children and followers of Lucifer.”

“Thus the most fearful enemy that God has set up against the devil is Mary, His holy Mother. From the time of the earthly paradise, although she existed then only in His mind, He gave her such a hatred for His accursed enemy, such ingenuity in exposing the wickedness of the ancient serpent and such power to defeat, overthrow and crush this proud rebel, that Satan fears her not only more than angels and men but in a certain sense more than God Himself. This does not mean that the anger, hatred and power of God are not infinitely greater than the Blessed Virgin’s, since her attributes are limited. It simply means that Satan, being so proud, suffers infinitely more in being vanquished and punished by a lowly and humble servant of God, for her humility humiliates him more than the power of God.” [294]

The Woman and the Church

Our Lady, as “the woman,” is God’s chosen one who shall crush the serpent’s head, which means she is victorious over the very same entity typified as the red dragon of the Apocalypse. As “the woman,” the Virgin Mary is the Immaculate and living archetype of the authoritative, infallible, and indefectible Church. [295] As the Mother of God the Son and Spouse of the Holy Ghost, she is also the Mother of the Church.

The Church, as “a woman clothed with the sun,” is the Spotless Bride of Christ. As such, the eternal Church is given unique attributes. She herself is sinless, but her impeccability is slandered by the sins of those who profess to be her children and by those who boldly hate her. Like the Virgin Mary, the eternal Church is sinned against by those whom she would save, her name and all of her divinely-given prerogatives trampled and blasphemed, and she, too, is in constant battle with the dragon.

The Woman who appeared at Fatima was described by Sr. Lucia, eldest of the three shepherd children, as “a Lady all dressed in white. She was more brilliant than the sun, and radiated a light more clear and intense than a crystal glass filled with sparkling water, when the rays of the burning sun shine through it.” [296] Lucia’s account of the Beautiful Lady who “appeared in heaven” (the Church) is very close to that of “a woman clothed with the sun.”

“And let it be noted, at the very moment when, as a consequence of the Bolshevik victory, the ‘Red Dragon’ emerged at one extremity of Europe in Leningrad, which then was still Petrograd, at the other extremity of Europe, at Fatima...there appeared the ‘Woman Clothed with the Sun’, the Immaculate Heart of Mary,” as we have already seen explained by Fr. Joseph de St. Marie, Professor of Theology at the Pontifical Faculty of Saint Theresa in Rome. [297]

Just as the Apocalypse foretold, in 1917 it was the Woman who first appeared as “a great sign” in the Church. “And there was seen another sign in heaven—and behold, a great red dragon, having seven heads, and ten horns: and on his head seven diadems.” This sign is not “a great sign” like the Woman clothed with the sun, but it is another sign, one that is in stark contrast against the woman, an ominous sign that appears in the Church. This infallible warning appears to indicate that Satan will both persecute and infiltrate the Church, just as he persecuted the first twelve apostles; he also infiltrated them by drawing Judas further into his own weak inclinations and Judas, as we know, unwittingly betrayed Christ and then died by his own hand.

This terrible sign of “a great red dragon” with seven heads, ten horns (leaders of nations), and seven diadems reminds us that Our Lady said Russia will spread her errors (plural) throughout the world. The great red dragon is the spirit of anti-Christ already risen, the spirit behind the heresy of universal salvation which redefines the word catholic (i.e., universal) as it applies to the true Church, the spirit behind the creation of a universal world-government that seeks to totally abolish the Social Reign of Christ the King, and the spirit behind a “new order” which inverses the order of God’s Church and God’s world. It is the spirit paving the way for the actual person of anti-Christ. To counter that evil spirit, the Fatima Virgin asked specific requests of the entire Church, one being that the Pope and the hierarchy make an act of solemn, collegial consecration of Russia to her Immaculate Heart.

Only at Fatima did the Lord, through the Virgin Mary, perform a public miracle so great that those who saw it called it “the sign of God.” [298] The child Lucia had asked Our Lady for a sign, not for herself but for the scoffing unbelievers, like those who challenged Our Lord, “What sign therefore dost thou shew, that we may see, and may believe thee? What dost thou work?” [299]

To see and to believe—the faithful believe without seeing, but unbelievers always demand a sign. For the sake of the Message and the Great Secret, which are given for the conversion of sinners, Our Lady of Fatima assured Lucia and her two younger cousins, “In October, I will tell you who I am and what I want, and I will perform a miracle for all to see and believe.” [300]

On October 13, 1917, the Woman who is more brilliant than the sun kept her promise with the Miracle of the Sun. Witnessed by at least 70,000 people, the “great sign” was seen in the heavens, recalling Rev. Kramer’s observation: “In the Septuagint, the word [sign] is used for *celestial phenomena.” [301]

Thus, it seems there does exist a dual-symbolism in Apocalypse, Ch. 12:1, in which the Virgin Mary not only appears as “a great sign” in the Church, in order to assist the Church as her prophesied travail approaches—but she, through the power of God, also gave “a great sign” to those who live in these very troubled times.

The Message and the Miracle: A Private Revelation?

The Miracle of the Sun is “the great eschatological sign, the answer of God to the errors of the present time,” said Bishop Rudolf Graber of Regensburg. Pope Paul VI said of the falling sun at Fatima, “It was eschatological in the sense that it was like a repetition or an annunciation of a scene at the end of time for all humanity assembled together." [302]

Eschatology is the study of the end of days, which is also called the day of judgment, the latter days, the great and terrible day, the last days of the world. Therefore, in reflecting that the Miracle is "the great eschatological sign," it is necessary to keep in mind that the Great Secret of Fatima (in three parts) and the Great Miracle (in three phases) are Heaven's responses to the ongoing Great Revolt (in three stages), which rebels against God and His one, holy, Catholic, and apostolic Church. It is also important to recall the revelations of the Sacred Heart at Paray-le-Monial, stressing the necessity of mankind's repentance and reparation for sin, and the Lord's desire to grant us Divine Mercy rather than chastisement. Finally, one cannot forget Our Lady's many intercessions since the year 1830 to save souls.

It is likewise reasonable and prudent to reflect and assent to the truth that Fatima (in its signs witnessed for five successive months, in its entire message, its Great Secret and Great Miracle) is not a mere "private revelation" which can be airily dismissed with the alleged excuse that Catholics need only adhere to Divine Revelation (Tradition and Scripture), otherwise known as the Deposit of Faith. Such a claim is not reasonable because it actually contradicts Divine Revelation.

No Pope has ever insisted that Fatima is a private revelation but rather, as this book's first chapter noted, Pope Benedict XVI spoke of Fatima's "prophetic mission" and Pope John Paul II said, "Fatima places an obligation on the Church." [303] Before them, Pope Pius XII had said that the time for doubting Fatima was past, and that it was time to take action. Again, Popes do not say such things of "private revelations." The Scriptures themselves proclaim: "Extinguish not the spirit. Despise not prophecies. But prove all things; hold fast to that which is good." (1 Thess. 5:19-20)

"Frequently, objections are made to Fatima as being a sort of magic word in theology," said Bishop Rudolf Graber on September 23, 1973 in his address to the Fatima Congress at Freiburg, Germany. "Fatima, they say, is after all only a private revelation and is therefore not binding in conscience, except for the person to whom it was given. [People claim] we only accept the great revelation of God [i.e., Divine Revelation of Tradition and Scripture] which ended definitively with Christ and the Apostles. Why then such an outcry against Fatima?

“It is to be noted that this objection comes principally from those who neither respect the great revelation of God, nor of Christ, and who even want to eliminate some fundamental truths of Faith, such as the virgin birth of Jesus, His Resurrection, His miracles, and even His very Divinity...It is absolutely certain that revelation as such was completed with Christ and His Apostles. What happens then if these private revelations confirm and emphasize certain truths that are found in this great revelation?

“This is exactly what happens with Fatima. Fatima confirms the existence of angels and demons that Modernists try to eliminate. Fatima confirms the mystery of the Eucharist which Modernists have stripped of all meaning. Fatima confirms the existence of Hell, which is simply denied today. Fatima requires prayer and sacrifice, values to which people today feel themselves far superior and from which they consequently dispense themselves. Nevertheless, all through the Old and New Testament, this penance is spoken of...Today, much is spoken about fraternity, which naturally is not understood so much on a supernatural level, but almost exclusively in the social field and in technical developments.

“Once again, we affirm that revelation proper ended with Christ and His Apostles. But does that mean that God has to remain silent, that He can no longer speak to His elect? Does it mean, as some believers think, that He should remain apart and leave the world abandoned to itself? Would not this be a very strange kind of God indeed! Did He not expressly say through His prophet that He would ‘pour forth of His Spirit on all flesh, that sons and daughters would prophesy, that old men would have visions in dreams? Even upon servants and handmaids, He would pour forth His spirit.’ (Acts 2:17; John 3:1-5) Is such a prophecy to be limited only to the first Pentecost? Certainly not. Wherefore hear the word of the Prophet Amos: ‘The trumpet sounds in the street, men do well to be afraid; if peril is afoot in the city, doubt not it is of the Lord’s sending. Never does he act, but His servants, the prophets, are in the secret.’ (Amos 3:6) Should we not thank God with our whole heart, Who even today speaks to us, especially when any danger is approaching?

“At an opportune moment,” the bishop continued, “an eminent theologian called attention to the fact that we ought to distinguish exactly between private revelations which are given only to a privileged person, and others that contain a message for the Church or even for the whole world. We need not preoccupy ourselves with the first kind, but we should take serious account of the latter, since to reject them or not to be interested in them would mean a reprehensible despising of the Word of God, and a grave lack of responsibility towards the world. For these the word of the prophet holds good: ‘But what if the sentry, when he sees the invader coming, sounds no alarm to his neighbor to warn his neighbor? Here is some citizen overtaken by the enemy; well, his guilt deserved it. But for his death, I will hold the sentry accountable.’ (Ezekiel 33:6)”

It was then that Bishop Graber said that Miracle of Fatima represents “the great eschatological sign, the answer of God to the errors of the present time. The world finds itself on the eve of tremendous happenings breaking forth from the East. Hell seems to be let loose. The maternal Heart of Mary offers to save the world...May this depreciatory allegation that ‘these are only private revelations’ not become the norm for dismissing the subject. Naturally, Mary’s words at Lourdes and Fatima are not on the same level as the general (Divine) revelation...But this does not mean that God and Mary are prohibited from speaking again. God speaks once more today and in a manner all the more intelligible as His Second Coming draws nearer, and this is precisely what Fatima seems to indicate.” [\[304\]](#)

Another theologian, Fr. G. Van Noort, wrote in his book Dogmatic Theology (Vol. 3, p. 215): “Such a revelation ought to be believed by both the one who receives it and by those for whom it is destined. The rest of the faithful cannot outrightly deny it without some sort of sin.” (This, of course, is after the local bishop has investigated the event and only if he has judged it to be “worthy of belief.”) [\[305\]](#)

“There are other things besides the solemn teaching authority of the Church that bind a person to accept something,” declared Fr. William A. Hinnebusch, O.P. of the Dominican House of Studies in Washington, D.C., in a letter published by the Northern American Voice of Fatima (November 10, 1963). “A creature endowed with reason is obliged by his own intelligence to bow to evidence when it is present. To resist evidence is obstinately anti-intellectual. Furthermore, when reliable witnesses testify to an event or fact which seems incontrovertible, a reasonable man must give assent. To say he may refuse assent without blame is a questionable position. When a person of such outstanding authority as the late Pope Pius XII says ‘the time for doubting Fatima is past; it is now time for action,’ then reasonable men must stop and question whether good evidence offered by reliable witnesses is behind the conviction. For a Catholic to deliberately close his mind to such a statement can hardly be without blame...a reasonable man accepts the evidence of reliable witnesses. When he refuses to do so, he does violence to his own reason.” [\[306\]](#)

“As a professional philosopher, what I find most remarkable in the event of Fatima is that it is a heavenly intervention in the history of mankind in order to redirect history,” wrote Abbé André Richard, D.D., of Paris in Soul magazine’s January-February 1979 issue. “Fatima is...an intervention to change the march of the entire caravan of mankind, which is on the road to a precipice over which it would inevitably fall unless its route is changed. Fatima concerns not only the pious Christian, but the man in the street –every man in the world. And as a theologian, what impresses me about Fatima is its reaffirmation of the entire Gospel and its emphasis on the source of moral evil: offenses against God which today mount even to the ultimate offense of militant atheism...How can any of us fail to be conscious of Our Lady appearing in the sky, reminding us of the great sign in chapters 11 and 12 of the Apocalypse? How can any of us consider Fatima to be less than the presentation of that apocalyptic message of Our Lady, dressed with the sun and announcing her triumph over Satan?”

Commenting on the Fatima miracle and the Apocalypse, Fr. Louis Kondor, S.V.D, the vice-postulator for the causes of canonization for Francisco and Jacinta (who are now Blessed) and editor of the book, Fatima in Lucia’s Own Words, wrote in his regular bulletin, Seers of Fatima (July-August 1975), “In view of this similarity, which seems a telling fulfillment of Apocalypse 12, who would venture any longer to speak of a private revelation? Fatima is...an eschatological sign that reveals the saving victory of the 12th chapter of the Apocalypse.” Later in the same bulletin, he also stated that “we can consider Fatima as the great eschatological sign given by God to our times, so that we will not deserve the rebuke that Our Lord made to the Jews: ‘You know how to read the face of the sky, but you cannot read the signs of the times.’ (Matt. 16:4) Fatima is a sign of the times. The lightning flash that preceded each of Mary’s apparitions at Fatima is an announcement of the lightning that will flash from east to west before the coming of the Son of Man. (Matt. 24:27) And the remaining atmospheric phenomena which belong to the complexity of Fatima are a presage of those signs in the sun, in the moon and the stars that Our Lord speaks of in His eschatological discourse. (Luke 21:25) Fatima is a great sign of the times.”

Finally, the dogmatic Vatican I council affirmed that “in order that the ‘obedience’ of our faith should be ‘consonant with reason’ [cf. Rom. 12:1], God has willed that to the internal aids of the Holy Spirit there should be joined external proofs of His revelation, namely: divine facts, especially miracles and prophecies which, because they clearly show forth the omnipotence and infinite knowledge of God, are most certain signs of a divine revelation, and are suited to the intelligence of all.” This same council also condemned those who insist “that divine revelation cannot be made credible by external signs” and “that miracles are not possible, and hence all accounts of them...are to be banished among the fables and myths; or, that miracles can never be known with certitude.” [\[307\]](#)

The signs and secrets of Fatima are one, integral whole and cannot be separated. Fatima was proven by the Church to be worthy of belief, and so its “miracles and prophecies...are most certain signs of a divine revelation.” As we have also seen in this section, certain men within the Church hierarchy referred to the Great Miracle of the Sun as a “sign of the times” and an “eschatological sign,” thus opposing liberal “theologians” who have, for decades, tried in diverse ways to trivialize or dismiss the whole of the Fatima Message and the Miracle. The Miracle was the clear, wondrous, and then terrifying sign given by God so that all would believe and heed the Virgin’s messages; therefore, it is directly connected to the Great Secret in its three distinct parts. To further explore these matters, however, we must also examine a sign seen only by the children—the Star of Esther on the Virgin’s floor-length tunic.

PART 10

Hidden Revelations: The Star of Esther & the Secrets of Fatima

“In the end, My Immaculate Heart will triumph.”
–Our Lady of Fatima, July 13, 1917

It is said that the best place to hide something is in plain sight.

When Sr. Lucia, the last Fatima visionary, was called into eternity on February 13, 2005, both the Catholic and mainstream media sought the significance of the date. Most sources tied-in to May 13, noting the “13” in the anniversary date of the Fatima apparitions (1917), the papal assassination attempt (1981), and John Paul II’s world consecrations and entrustments to the Immaculate Heart (1982, 1984, and 2000). Ultimately, the mainstream efforts implied that Sr. Lucia’s death was a sign that Fatima is finished. Yet when an incredible Scriptural connection to February 13th and Fatima is examined as a whole, the opposite conclusion is made: While the date of Lucia’s death is definitely a sign, it is one alerting the world that we have reached the most critical chapter of the Fatima revelations.

Heretofore, it was never noticed that the date of Sr. Lucia’s passing links to a small yellow star, worn by Our Lady of Fatima. This star is a profound symbol long recognized by tradition as the “Star of Esther.” It points to an Old Testament history called The Book of Esther, which relates the story of a Jewish queen whose intercession saved her people from annihilation. Queen Esther’s mediation allowed the ancient Hebrews “to gather themselves together, and to stand for their lives” on “the 13th day of Adar.”

Until Lucia’s passing, the magnitude of “the 13th of Adar” could not be realized, even by Fatima scholars. Her death signals that, like the Jews who stood for their lives on the 13th of Adar, our own great battle against annihilation is begun. The secret significance of Lucia’s date of death has been right before our eyes all the time: It occurred exactly 40 minutes before sunset, [\[308\]](#) on the 13th of February [\[309\]](#) of the Gregorian calendar—but in the Hebrew month of Adar. [\[310\]](#)

P.S. to the Message of Fatima

Thus it seems that even Lucia’s death accentuated the entire Fatima message, manifesting a kind of heavenly post-script: “Hear, O foolish people, and without understanding: who have eyes, and see not: and ears, and hear not.” [\[311\]](#)

In the Scriptures, the 13th day of Adar is one with historical portent. First, it marks the battle throughout the Persian Empire during the reign of Esther (Esther 9:1); second, it was the date of the Machabees’ liberation of the Holy Land after a four-year combat (1 Mach. 7:3), and third, it is the eve of the anniversary of the infant Moses’ circumcision (through whom God would give His law and whom the Jews have always revered; because he freed his people from centuries of bondage, Moses is a figure-type of Christ). [\[312\]](#)

The theme becomes obvious: An epic battle of God’s ecclesia against her enemies.

Because there are no insignificancies in God’s designs, there are great reasons for the Star of Esther adorning Our Lady of Fatima. On February 13, 2005, its purpose was again emphasized when God willed that Lucia should leave this world on a date directing our attention to both Esther and Our Lady of Fatima.

Figure Types:

Of Mary, There is Never Enough

Just as the star adorning Our Lady of Fatima points to The Book of Esther, so does The Book of Esther point to all of the Fatima revelations. Esther’s theme centers on secrets and revelations, suggesting that The Book of Esther is a figure-type for the Apocalypse (Greek for Revelations).

The Book of Esther appears to encapsulate what Fatima highlights about both the Virgin’s and the Church’s singular office in salvation history. Esther’s Star on Our Lady’s gown directs the Church to “the history of Queen Esther, who was herself a great [figure] type of our Queen Mary!” as St. Alphonsus de Liguori reiterated. [\[313\]](#)

But first, what is meant by a figure-type? In its application to the whole of Scripture, an Old Testament figure-type is a person, place, thing or event foreshadowing a New Testament archetype (a perfect model or type). The New Testament archetype is always greater than its Old Testament figure-type. [\[314\]](#)

Our Lord Himself plainly alluded to Scriptural figure-types when, after His Resurrection, He appeared to two disciples on the road to Emmaus. “And beginning at Moses and all the prophets, he expounded to them in all the scriptures the things that were concerning him.” Our Lord used similar words when He subsequently appeared to the Apostles. [\[315\]](#)

So, too, "Mary appears on every page of the Old Testament," said St. Bernard. [316] As we have already seen, in Genesis 3:15, God Himself literally prophesied Our Lady as "the woman," but she is foreshadowed in many figure-types—including but not limited to Miriam, Sarah, the foot-shaped cloud of Mt. Carmel, Ruth, Anna, Judith, and Esther; in the Gebirah (queen mothers of the Davidic kings); in the mother of the seven Machabees; in the spouse of the Canticle of Canticles, the daughter of Zion, the burning bush on Mt. Sion, the Ark of the Covenant, the Root of Jesse, the City of God, and the Temple of Jerusalem.

In the Apocalypse, the Woman (the Virgin Mary) is prefigured by a "type within type"—"a woman clothed with the sun, with the moon under her feet, and on her head a crown of twelve stars." [317] This woman is a type of the Church, but the eternal Church is herself a type of Mary. With these examples, one begins to see what is meant by "types within types."

The Book of Esther and the Book of Revelations

Among the many women who are figure-types of the Virgin, Esther is foremost for three reasons: she interceded for her people; her Star appeared on Our Lady's dress; and the number "13" is central to her history. There exist depths in The Book of Esther's figure-types, who were living persons in history. However, the following comparisons are those most pertinent for the purposes of this study.

In the Old Testament, the fourth chapter of The Book of Esther relates the history of a "fair and exceedingly beautiful" virgin named Edissa, "who by another name was called Esther." [318] In the Old Testament of the Hebrew text, her name was Hádássah—meaning myrtle, a white, five-pointed, star-shaped flower. [319]

- An orphan, Esther was raised by her uncle Mardochai, whose immediate ancestors were carried away from Jerusalem to Persia at the onset of the Babylonian Exile. Esther was in her uncle's care from the time she was a "little one" [320]—a "figure-type" phrase foreshadowing the Virgin Mary's sublime humility.

- Mardochai himself is an enigmatic "type within type." He seems to embody in his person the faithful in exile, St. Joseph (chaste guardian of the Virgin) but also a "vizier" or vicar, if not the Vicar of Christ. Esther and Mardochai lived in Susan, Persia's capital city. The Persian king was Assuerus (a figure-type for God) and his queen was Vasthi.

The Book of Esther, permeated with figure-types, opens with the historical narration of the king's feast. To grasp the types, one must understand that the first chapter of Esther alludes to the glory of the heavenly kingdom, the hierarchy of creation, the princes of the kingdom (the angels), and the Garden of Paradise, even to the first woman, Eve:

"Now in the third year of his reign, he made a great feast for all the princes, and for his servants, for the most mighty of the Persians, and the nobles of the Medes, and the governors of the provinces, that he might show the riches of the glory of his kingdom, and the greatness, and boasting of his power, for a long time, to wit, for a hundred and fourscore days. And when the days of the feast were expired, he invited all the people that were found in Susan, from the greatest to the least: and commanded a feast to be made seven days, in the court of the garden, and of the wood, which was planted by the care and the hand of the king."[\[321\]](#)

At the time, "Vasthi the queen made a feast for the women in the palace, where the king Assuerus was used to dwell."[\[322\]](#) However, on the seventh day of the second feast, she disobeyed the king's solitary command "to show her beauty to all the people and the princes; for she was exceedingly beautiful. But she refused, and would not come at the king's command."[\[323\]](#)

Vasthi, the first queen, is a historical figure-type for the Lady Eve, queen of the earthly Paradise where God Himself "used to dwell." Like Eve, Vashti forever lost her office when she refused the King's singular command. No more is said of Vasthi's fate other than the words of an edict proclaiming she could "come in no more to the king, but another, that is better than her, be made queen in her place."[\[324\]](#)

"After this, when the wrath of King Assuerus was appeased, he remembered Vasthi, and what she had done and what she had suffered."[\[325\]](#) In the Old Testament, a phrase like "he remembered" signaled that the very next action, no matter how innocuous or unconventional, is an immediate manifestation of God's mercy. This Divine intervention looks like a natural human event, but it is always God Who is behind it. Knowing this helps us understand why one moment the king remembered Vasthi but, in the very next sentence, he issued an edict summoning all the most beautiful virgins of the land, so that he might select a new bride. The virgins were brought to the capital, and "were delivered to Egeus the eunuch; Esther also among the rest of the maidens were delivered to him to be kept in the number of the women."[\[326\]](#)

Figure-types within Figure-types

It was not until the twelfth month that “every virgin’s turn came to go in to the king, after all had been done for setting them off to advantage.” [327] This “going in to the king” represents spiritual union “in God,” which requires grace, time and merits. The Book of Esther relates that the virgins were given a year’s preparation before “going in to” the king, “so that for six months they were anointed with oil of myrrh, and for [sic] other six months they used certain perfumes and sweet spices.” [328] All of the virgins underwent this preparation. As shall be seen, a total of four years passed from the time of the king’s edict before Esther’s turn arrived.

The maidens, who typify the entire line of the Old Testament’s holy women, were prepared for a total of 12 months, which is the symbolic number of completion (12 patriarchs from Adam to Jacob, 12 tribes of Israel, 12 loaves of proposition, 12 judges of Israel, 12 months of the year. Additionally, the New Testament, especially The Book of Apocalypse, is replete with the number 12: Twelve apostles, 12 legions of angels to whom Jesus refers in the Garden of Gethsemane, 12 fruits of the Holy Ghost, 12 foundation stones in the New Jerusalem and, of course, Apocalypse 12:1, prophesying the “great” sign who wears a crown of 12 stars: “And a great sign appeared in heaven: A woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and on her head a crown of twelve stars.”) Like the virgins presented to and accepted by Asseurus, the holy women of God were accepted by the Lord, and yet they were not chosen as His queen.

Again, we see figure-types within figure-types. In the Old Testament, myrrh is first mentioned in The Book of Exodus and it is used in the “oil of unction,” which God commanded Moses to prepare immediately before the building of the Ark of the Covenant, another figure-type of the Virgin Mary. Myrrh (Arabic, “bitter”) was used for the healing of wounds and bruises. Myrrh was also a symbol of self-sacrifice. [329]

How striking, then, is the six month’s anointing with oil of myrrh during the virgins’ preparation. Likewise, the other perfumes and sweet spices in the second six months’ preparation are reminiscent of the ingredients in the holy incense, which God ordered Moses to set before the tabernacle of the testimony. In all of the Fatima revelations, the need for prayer and sacrifice was stressed repeatedly.

When Esther’s turn came to “go in to the king...she sought not women’s ornaments, but whatsoever Egeus the eunuch the keeper of the virgins had a mind, he gave to adorn her. For she was exceedingly fair, agreeable and amiable in the eyes of all...And the king loved her more than all the women, and she had favor and kindness before him above all the women, and he set the royal crown on her head, and made her queen instead of Vasthi.”

This event took place “in the tenth month which is called Tebeth, in the seventh year of the king’s reign.” [330] Thus, since the king’s feast took place in the third year of his reign, we know that four years passed and a great number of maidens were presented to the King until Esther’s appearance before him.

In this passage, we can easily see why Esther is a figure-type of the Virgin Mary, she who is “full of grace” and blessed amongst all women. [331]

- The time between Vasthi’s fall to Esther’s appearance before the king is a span of four years. These four years prefigure the four centuries of Advent. [332]

- Tebeth correlates with the Gregorian calendar’s twelfth month of December, [333] the month in which we commemorate the Feast of the Immaculate Conception.

- When Our Lady, Esther’s archetype, appeared at Fatima, she also wore no adornments other than those symbolizing that with which God Himself adorned her.

The Secrets of the Star

Thus Esther became the Queen of Persia, but for a reason established by the Lord. In obedience to her uncle, Mardochai, she revealed to the king neither her ancestry, nor her Hebrew name, nor their kinship. The Hebrew texts relate that she gave her name as Hester (in Persian, Esther—which means “star.”). As we shall see, this change in name was more than a translation.

- The alteration from Hádássah to Hester refers to a secret, because Hester (emphasis on the letter “H”) translates to “hidden [meaning of the] star.” [334] Esther had three secrets, as does Our Lady of Fatima.

- The Hebrew name for The Book of Esther is Megillat Hester—e.g., “revelation of [that which is] hidden.” [335] By displaying the Star of Esther, it seems Our Lady of Fatima not only wishes to “discreetly suggest a hidden and sublime aspect of her unique vocation” [336] as Mediatrix but also “secrets within secrets” or “revelations within revelations.”

- The word play of Megillat Hester suggests another meaning: God is hiding His Face. The Hebrew text of The Book of Esther, which ends with Ch. 10:3, lacks any mention of God's name. Jewish scholars refer to the Lord's role as Hester Panim or "hidden Face." [337] Clearly, the implications for our own times are staggering.

The plot in Esther builds because her uncle Mardochai did not attend her marriage banquet; rather, he "stayed at the king's gate." [338] This one reference is a figure-type of some depth: The royal marriage banquet foreshadows the Virgin as the Bride of the Divine Spouse and the Church as the Bride of Christ; it reminds us of St. Joseph, the chaste husband of the Virgin Mary (the Eastern Gate, the King's Gate) and the Child Jesus, who is the King of Kings. Mardochai standing at the king's gates typifies he who guards the kingdom of God on earth, as well as the faithful in the kingdom; the gates themselves refer to both the Virgin (Gate of Heaven) and the Church (the Narrow Gate).

So it was that by lingering at the gate, Mardochai overheard a conspiracy to kill the king. He told Esther, who told the king in Mardochai's name, thus saving the king's life. [339]

Soon afterward, the king advanced Aman, of the race of Agag (a race which was at perpetual enmity with the Jews), setting him above all the princes. The king's servants bent their knees and worshiped Aman—all but Mardochai. Aman became so obsessed with Mardochai's fidelity to the First Commandment that he plotted revenge against him and all the Jews. [340]

Cunningly employing his position in the royal court, Aman issued a decree that all Jews living throughout Persia would be massacred on one day, down to the last man, woman, and child. To choose the month of this annihilation, lots were cast into an urn. The month chosen was the twelfth month, called Adar. [341] Some believe that it was Aman (an anti-Christ figure) who chose the day—the 13th day, [342] possibly in homage to the demon-god Nergal. [343]

The Intercession of the Queen

The Scriptures relate that Mardochai asked Esther to intervene with the king, but Esther explained that the king had proclaimed none could enter his inner court without being called; those who dared were immediately put to death unless the king showed his clemency by holding out his golden scepter. Mardochai reminded her, "Think not that thou mayest save thy life only, because thou art in the king's house, more than all the Jews...And who knoweth whether thou are not therefore come to the kingdom, that thou mightest be ready in such a time as this?” [344] This passage also foreshadows Christian doctrine, for the Virgin Mary is placed above all others for the sake of all.

Hearing Mardochai’s plea, Esther for the first time commanded her uncle, saying, “Go...gather together all the Jews...and pray ye for me. Neither eat nor drink for three days and three nights: and I with my handmaids will fast in like manner, and then I will go in to the king, against the law, not being called, and expose myself to death and danger.” [345]

Thus Esther, her maidens, and the faithful throughout all of Persia prayed and fasted. How tragically apt to our own day are these words from Esther’s prayer for the people:

“...We have sinned in thy sight, and therefore thou hast delivered us into the hands of our enemies, for we have worshiped their gods. Thou are just, O Lord. And now they are not content to oppress us with most hard bondage, but attributing the strength of their hands to the power of their idols, they design to change thy promises, and destroy thy inheritance, and shut the mouths of them that praise thee, and extinguish the glory of thy temple and altar...” [346]

In the meantime, Aman planned Mardochai’s death, preparing a gibbet upon which he would be hanged. Aman had every reason to believe he would succeed, but his secret goal was the king’s usurpation. However, armed with prayers and sacrifices to God and the king’s love for her, Esther revealed her secrets to Assuerus, denounced Aman, and pled for her people. [347] “If I have found favor in thy sight, oh king, give me my people for which I request.” [348]

“But the king being angry rose up from the place of the banquet into the garden set with trees.” Aman also rose up to entreat Esther the queen for his life, for he understood that evil was prepared for him by the king. And when the king came back...he found Aman was fallen upon the bed on which Esther lay...” [349] Seeing this and thinking that Aman’s audacity knew no limits, the king ordered his death on the very gibbet prepared for Mardochai. [350] Assuerus then placed Mardochai in Aman’s place, making him second in authority after the king—another emphasis that Mardochai is the figure-type of a “vicar,” who is the steward of a king. [351]

Aman, as a figure-type, suggests a high-level infiltration within the kingdom (the Church), which plots to overthrow the King by first executing the steward of the monarch (the Pope, Vicar of Christ the King). To accomplish this, he and others lay plans to also destroy the king's true allies (the elect who, in Esther's time, were the faithful Jews but who are, since Jesus' death and Resurrection, the loyal Catholics). Aman's act of throwing himself upon Esther implies a great offense against the Virgin, resulting in the wrath of God.

The Faithful Must Stand for Their Lives

To save the Jews, the king gave Mardochai liberty to issue a new edict commanding the Jews "to gather themselves together, and to stand for their lives." [352]

After the battle of the 13th of Adar, the king was told the number of those slaughtered and then asked Esther, "What wilt thou have me to command to be done?" [353] Esther asked that it be granted to the Jews "to do to morrow in Susan as they have done this day and that the ten sons of Aman may be hanged on gibbets." [354] So it was that the Jews defended themselves in the capital city on both the 13th and 14th days of Adar. But in other areas of Persia, the battle occurred only on the 13th. [355]

From the human standpoint, the requests of Mardochai and Esther appear vindictive but, when understood as figure-types, we better follow the meanings. The Jews represent the ecclesia of the Old Dispensation saved from annihilation. Esther's request to the king signifies the Virgin's desire to completely eradicate all of the heresies afflicting the Catholic City; the death of Aman and his ten sons suggest the defeat of the apocalyptic anti-Christ and the ten horns of the Beast. [356]

The doctrine of Mediatrix of all Graces is foreshadowed in Esther, the mediatrix of her people. Thus, Esther is a great figure-type for the Virgin Mary, especially under her title Our Lady of Fatima.

Like Esther, the Virgin of Fatima acts to save her people from annihilation, first asking that the pope, bishops and the lay faithful heed all of her requests. Unlike Esther, however, the Virgin Mary does not need our prayers and sacrifices for her own sake, but for ours.

Sr. Lucia and the 13th of February

In the Biblical sense, the date, day and time of Lucia's death on February 13, 2005 are three great signs from heaven. As we've already seen, February 13 directs us to the history of Queen Esther, and all that it signifies. The third sign is the day of Lucia's passing, which fell just before sunset on the first Sunday in Lent, the liturgical season dedicated to prayer and self-sacrifice. (According to the Gregorian calendar month, the date was February 13, which on the Jewish lunar calendar of that year was the 4th of Adar II. In this day and month, we see a “meshing” of dates in salvation history because, with few exceptions, today the Gregorian calendar is utilized throughout the world. With Lucia’s passing, it seems that God wished to again draw attention to at least three things: 1) Sunday, the Sabbath, which is the day that the Lord commanded the elect to keep holy; 2) the 13th day, which is associated with both Our Lady of Fatima and Queen Esther’s history; and 3) the connection in Esther’s story to the Hebrew month of Adar, the month chosen by lot to destroy the Old Testament’s elect.) Surely, Our Lady’s words to the child Lucia have proven true in every aspect: “Jesus wishes to use you to make me known and loved. He wants to establish in the world devotion to my Immaculate Heart. To whoever embraces this devotion, I promise salvation; these souls shall be dear to God, as flowers placed by me to adorn His throne.” [\[357\]](#)

This devotion throughout the world has not yet occurred, because there has been no solemn collegial consecration of Russia to the Virgin’s Immaculate Heart. For this singular, constant offense against her request, Heaven has already warned that what awaits us is a horrific victory of the incessant Revolt against the Church and the Holy Father. The culmination is rapidly approaching.

Certain words of Our Lord’s to Sr. Lucia strongly indicate that the ominous portent of the Third Secret of Fatima may occur within fifteen years’ time (by June 13, 2029, which marks the centenary of Our Lady’s return to Lucia to tell the Holy Father that the “the moment” had come when God Himself asked for the collegial consecration of Russia, promising to save that country by this means.). This probable tragedy alone should inspire those who possess confidence in Our Lady of Fatima to courageously accept our collective obligation to declare the entire Fatima message throughout the Catholic world.

A particular warning of Our Lord’s to Sr. Lucia about the collegial consecration brings to our attention the apparitions of the Sacred Heart to St. Margaret Mary Alacoque in Paray-le-Monial, France. Through this saint, Our Lord gave the world the devotion of the Nine First Fridays with its Twelve Promises. Yet there is another serious matter surrounding these apparitions to the saint, one which is very little known.

St. Margaret Mary was told by the Lord that she was to "inform the King of France, 'Eldest son of His Sacred Heart,' that the Sacred Heart wished 'to reign in his palace, to be painted on his standard, to be engraved on his arms,' and that it [the Sacred Heart] will make him 'triumphant over all the enemies of Holy Church,' if the King obeyed Christ's command on these matters. However, as history relates, “Either Louis XIV never received the letter or he refused to reply. But the command still stands.” [\[358\]](#)

On June 17, 1689, Our Lord also told the saint to tell the Catholic King Louis XIV that France must be solemnly consecrated to His Sacred Heart. This command, too, was ignored by the king and his heirs. As a result, France, called “the first daughter of the Church” because it was the first country in which the Catholic Faith was recognized as the nation’s religion, succumbed to the “enemies of the Church.”

The Time Limit Expired

Exactly one hundred years later, on June 17, 1789, the godless “Third Estate” declared itself a national assembly, lawlessly stripping the reigning Catholic monarch (Louis XVI) of his authority. Thus the Reign of Terror went into full motion; the king, his queen, and other innocents were martyred. Due to the ravenous “Mademoiselle Guillotine” and her devotees, the streets literally ran ankle-deep in blood because apostasy reigned. [\[359\]](#)

To think of what France—and with it, the Church—could have been spared, if only one of the reigning kings had obeyed the simple command of Our Lord!

Christ our King wished to establish the public consecration and devotion to His Sacred Heart in order to save France, "First Daughter of the Church," and with it, Christendom. As we now know through the apparitions to Sr. Lucia of Fatima, the Sacred Heart also wills the collegial consecration of Russia to the Immaculate Heart of Mary—this time to save the entire world from the punishments it deserves for its many sins.

Our Lord also made it known to Sr. Lucia that He wishes to have the whole world acknowledge that Russia and the world will be saved by the collegial consecration, so that the Immaculate Heart of His Mother will honored beside His Sacred Heart.

If You Love Me, Keep My Commandments

In briefly reviewing the tragic history of the French Revolution, especially the fates of the Catholic monarchs and thousands of innocents, we fully understand how the Lord's apparitions and requests at Paray-le-Monial are linked to Our Lady's requests at Fatima.

On July 13, 1917, Our Lady said to the child Lucia: "...I shall come to ask for the consecration of Russia to My Immaculate Heart, and the Communion of Reparation on the First Saturdays. If My requests are heeded, Russia will be converted and there will be peace; if not, she will spread her errors throughout the world, causing wars and persecutions of the Church. The good will be martyred, the Holy Father will have much to suffer, various nations will be annihilated. In the end, My Immaculate Heart will triumph. The Holy Father will consecrate Russia to Me, and she will be converted, and an era of peace will be granted to the world." [\[360\]](#)

She kept her promise that she would return to formally ask for the two acts mentioned above, but she did so on two separate occasions. First, on December 10, 1925, Our Lady appeared to Lucia, showing her a Heart encircled by thorns. By Her side on a luminous cloud stood the Child Jesus, Who said: "Have compassion on the Heart of your Most Holy Mother, covered with thorns, with which ungrateful men pierce it at every moment, and there is no one to make an act of reparation to remove them."

Then the Virgin spoke to Lucia: "Look, my daughter, at My Heart, surrounded with thorns with which ungrateful men pierce Me at every moment by their blasphemies and ingratitude. You at least try to console Me and say that I promise to assist at the hour of death, with the graces necessary for salvation, all those who, on the first Saturday of five consecutive months, shall confess, receive Holy Communion, recite five decades of the Rosary, and keep Me company for fifteen minutes while meditating on the fifteen mysteries of the Rosary, with the intention of making reparation to Me."

Eleven years, eleven months after her first notification in 1917, the Virgin again appeared to Lucia—on June 13, 1929—to make the formal request regarding the consecration of Russia. Sr. Lucia was making a Holy Hour from 11 p.m. until midnight from Thursday to Friday. Alone in the chapel, Lucia said, "The only light was from the sanctuary lamp."

"Suddenly a supernatural light illumined the whole chapel and on the altar appeared on a cross of light which reached to the ceiling.

"In a brighter part could be seen, on the upper part of the Cross, the face of a man and His body to the waist. On His breast was an equally luminous dove. And nailed to the cross, the body of another man.

“A little below the waist, suspended in mid-air, was to be seen a Chalice and a large Host onto which fell some drops of Blood from the face of the Crucified and from a wound in His breast. These drops ran down over the Host and fell into the Chalice.

“Under the right arm of the Cross was Our Lady with her Immaculate Heart in her hand. (It was Our Lady of Fatima with her Immaculate Heart, in her left hand, without a sword or roses, but with a crown of thorns and flames.)

“Under the left arm [of the Cross] some big letters, as it were of crystal clear water running down over the Altar, formed these words: ‘Grace and Mercy.’

“I understood that it was the mystery of the Holy Trinity that was shown to me, and I received lights about this mystery which I am not permitted to reveal.”

“Then Our Lady said to me:

‘The moment has come when God asks the Holy Father to make, in union with all the bishops of the world, the consecration of Russia to My Immaculate Heart, promising to save it by this means.’

‘So numerous are the souls which the Justice of God condemns for sins committed against me, that I come to ask for reparation. Sacrifice yourself for this intention and pray.’

Lucia then related, “I gave an account of this to my confessor, who ordered me to write what Our Lord willed to be done.” [\[361\]](#)

Two years passed, but Sr. Lucia’s endeavors proved fruitless. Those with the authority to fulfill the command would not comply.

In August 1931, Our Lord Himself spoke to Sr. Lucia, referring to His command for the collegial consecration of Russia. By the choice of God's own words, He left no doubt that the request of His Mother was also His own command and Will:

“Make it known to My ministers that given they follow the example of the King of France in delaying the execution of My request, they will follow him into misfortune. It will never be too late to have recourse to Jesus and Mary.” [\[362\]](#)

With only the release of the Third Secret Vision (which did not include Our Lady’s words elucidating it), Our Lord's warning to Sr. Lucia in 1931 makes itself tragically clear...

Like the Kings of France who for 100 years disobeyed the heavenly

King's command by delaying the solemn consecration of France to the Sacred Heart, the Savior Himself has warned that His religious ministers who do the same in regard to the collegial consecration of Russia to the Immaculate Heart of Mary "will follow the French king into misfortune."

Like the countless numbers who also followed the King of France and his family "into misfortune" by their deaths at the guillotine, the Third Secret Vision of Fatima makes it clear that, "if my (Our Lady's) requests are not heard, "a bishop dressed in white" (generally understood to be the Bishop of Rome, the Pope) will die at the hands of soldiers who bear both guns and arrows, followed by a long line of faithful Catholics from all states in life. [\[363\]](#)

In regard to the long-awaited collegial consecration of Russia to the Immaculate Heart, is it not possible that Our Lord was also telling us that, "like the King of France," He will again allow exactly 100 years for His ministers to completely obey Him? If so, will the 100 years conclude either on July 13, 2017 (the anniversary of the Great Secret of Fatima, when the Virgin said she would, in the future, come to ask for the consecration, as well as for the First Five Saturdays of Reparation) or on June 13, 2029 (the centenary of the date when Our Lady returned to request the collegial consecration)? Should the 100 years close on the latter date (and reason concludes it to be so, since it was on June 13, 1929 that the Virgin said, "The moment has come"), the time limit expires only 15 years hence from the May, 2014 publication of this book.

PART 11

The Signs and the Traces of Hidden Things

“The light and the sun rose up, and the humble were exalted...”
-Esther 11:11

At Fatima, Our Lady’s distinct words provided Heaven’s counsel and admonition, while the accompanying signs and symbols fulfilled all seven purposes that authentic prodigies may hold. While scholars examine the text from and about Fatima in regard to the Third Secret and the collegial consecration, we must also study the Fatima signs. That God wills the elect to understand His signs, at the proper time, is supported by inerrant Scripture: “For the Lord knoweth all knowledge, and hath beheld the signs of the world, he declareth the things that are past, and the things that are to come, and revealeth the traces of hidden things.” [\[364\]](#)

The Seven Purposes of Signs

Part 3 of this book stated: “Throughout salvation history, the signs of God indicate various purposes. A true sign can possess any one or more of the following seven functions: It confirms God’s Word, His goodness, authenticates prophesy, verifies God’s blessings and His intervention for the sake of the elect, strengthens the faithful with hope, insures or testifies to God’s Presence, or declares His judgment upon sin.” [\[365\]](#) The signs of the world oppose the Catholic City, both in her human and divine nature, leading souls to revolt against God, mimicking but falsifying God’s Word, undermining true prophecy, weakening or destroying the virtues by employing their imitators as replacements, and working contrary to God’s Will. [\[366\]](#) In sum, God’s signs and the world’s signs contradict each other. This explains why “the whole truth about Fatima,” [\[367\]](#) specific to the salvation of souls living in this era, remains contradicted by the world.

Fatima follows the pattern of Scriptural prophecy, which is given by visions, words, types and signs. Regarding the Church’s practice as it concerns Scriptural interpretation, the usual course is to first seek the literal meaning of the text of its prophecy and only then seek its symbolic meaning. As most Catholic biblical exegetes agree, “When the generations for whom it was chiefly intended would come into being, the true author of all true prophecy, the Holy Spirit, would in his own ways allow his elect to take from the text the knowledge that had from the beginning been concealed therein. In this, then, is to be found the reason why the magisterium of the Church, which is based directly on tradition in all matters of faith and morals, must depend largely on experience and the interpretation of signs when there is a question of unfulfilled or only partially fulfilled prophecy.” [368]

What St. Justin the Martyr said in relation to the Old Testament which prophesied Jesus as the Son of God can also be applied to the public revelation and prophecies of Fatima: We are “compelled to belief by those who prophesied before the events. With our own eyes, we are witness to things that have happened and are happening, just as they were predicted. And this, we think, will appear to you as the strongest and surest proof.” [369]

Fatima, judged by the Church as “worthy of belief,” [370] prophesied “things that have happened and are happening.” Above all, Fatima has proven to be in perfect accord with Church dogma and doctrine, which is the supreme test of any revelation. The validity of the Virgin’s merciful message and apocalyptic warnings—and, principally, the solution to avert the latter from fulfilment—was authenticated by miraculous signs, from the seemingly small to the stupendous.

The Mother of God vs. Modernism

The Virgin Herself is a sign: “Therefore the Lord himself shall give you a sign. Behold a virgin shall conceive and bear a son and his name shall be called Emmanuel.” [371] Our Lady is the same Woman foretold in Genesis who will crush the serpent and his plots: “I will put enmities between thee and the woman, and thy seed and her seed: she shall crush thy head, and thou shalt lie in wait for her heel.” [372]

This same Virgin, who came to Fatima, concisely underscored dogma, doctrine, sacred history and Scriptural prophecy in the dates she appeared, the place she chose, the distinct dress and adornments she wore, the succinct words she uttered, the visions and secrets she revealed, and the many signs she gave. Together they form a consistent whole, fortifying the Secret given in three parts, applying to: first, the salvation of souls; second, the salvation of the nations and of Christendom, which shall result in the peace of the world; and third, the preservation of the Catholic Faith and the salvation of the Church. For, as previously stated: “These three themes, which are joined by an indissoluble bond, reveal to us the extraordinary mystical, moral, political, ecclesial, and dogmatic implications of the Secret of Fatima.” [373]

Not long before the first Fatima apparition, Pope St. Pius X had issued Pascendi Dominici Gregis (1907) against the modernists and Our Apostolic Mandate (1910), in which within the latter document the sainted Pope declared:

“We must repeat with the utmost energy in these times of social and intellectual anarchy when everyone takes it upon himself to teach as a teacher and lawmaker—the City cannot be built otherwise than as God has built it; society cannot be set up unless the Church lays the foundations and supervises the work; no, civilization is not something yet to be found, nor is the New City to be built on hazy notions; it has been in existence and still is: it is Christian civilization, it is the Catholic City. It has only to be set up and restored continually against the unremitting attacks of insane dreamers, rebels and miscreants. OMNIA INSTAURARE IN CHRISTO. (To restore all things in Christ)” [374]

Because the heresy of Modernism is insubordinate to Tradition and Scripture, it redefines everything pertaining to sacred dogma and doctrine, leaving no stone of the Catholic City unturned. It is especially defiant against Vatican I, which affirmed the “sacred dogmas must be perpetually maintained, which Holy Mother Church has once declared; and there must never be a recession from that meaning under the pretext of a deeper understanding.” [375] As the prophetic Pascendi expounded, modernism pretends that dogmas are merely symbols instead of absolute truths. “Thus the way is open to the intrinsic evolution of dogma. Here we have an immense structure of sophisms [false reasoning] which ruin and wreck all religion.” [376]

Modernism, the “synthesis of all heresies,” [377] is an insidious sign of apostasy that lives in the souls of men, wherein should reside the kingdom of God. [378] It is the heresy of inversion, spawned by the same evil entity behind liberalism, which brought forth the “Enlightenment,” the French Revolution, and “The Age of Reason.” However, throughout salvation history, when the elect are (or soon shall be) insidiously besieged, God manifests His Divine Intervention in diverse ways—as did the Sacred Heart in the visions of Paray-le-Monial before liberalism and rationalism began to sweep Christian Europe.

The year 1830 initiated the prelude to “The Age of Mary,” in which the Virgin Mother of God herself began to earnestly entreat Her children, giving us a repeated message of prayer and penance, and sacramentals like the Medal of the Immaculate Conception, the Badge of the Immaculate Heart (the Green Scapular), and the miraculous water at Lourdes. Yet Fatima is the crown of all, with its message and its signs to the world, culminating in the Miracle of the Sun.

The First Sign:
Immaculate Spouse of the Holy Ghost,
Figure of the New Israel, the Church

The smallest of the Fatima signs are two adornments of the Virgin. The ornaments, however, speak for themselves, if only we have the eyes to see: “For it is good to hide the secret of a king, but honourable to reveal and confess the works of God.” [379]

The first symbol was a waist-length yellow necklace, from which hung a luminous orb or ball of light; the orb shone even brighter than the radiating light of Our Lady’s risen and glorious body. [380] The second ornament was a small yellow star, suspended on Our Lady’s long gown between knee and hem. [381] There is no extant record that Our Lady or Sr. Lucia, the last surviving visionary who died in 2005, ever explained these two adornments, although Lucia obviously described their appearance. Might her silence on them be connected to the Third Secret?

Of the necklace and the shining orb, Fatima historian and expert Frère Michel of the Holy Trinity wrote, “... in the light of the liturgy, itself completely saturated with Holy Scripture, it seems to us that we can easily guess the symbolic meaning of this ornament. Does it not remind us of the ‘jewels,’ the traditional attribute of the spouse? Sicut sponsam ornatum monilibus suis—‘As a bride adorned with her jewels,’ continues the canticle of Isaiah, which the Church places on the lips of the Immaculate One.”

“Is it not in this sense that we must look for the most profound significance of this mysterious jewel described by Lucia? Several verses of the Canticum seem to invite us to do so; thus the divine Spouse [is] speaking to the Bride, the figure of Israel and of the Church, personified in the Blessed Virgin: ‘You have ravished my heart, my sister, my bride, you have ravished my heart with a glance of your eyes, with one jewel of your necklace. How sweet is your love, my sister, my bride!’ (Cant. 4:9-10)” [382]

The Second Sign:

The Mediatrix of All Graces

The meaning of the jewel and necklace is intertwined with the little yellow star, which we have already seen is “The Star of Esther,” and which “points to a particular Old Testament history called The Book of Esther, which relates the story of a Hebrew queen whose intercession saved her people from annihilation...Just as the star adorning Our Lady of Fatima points to The Book of Esther, so does The Book of Esther point to all of the Fatima revelations. Esther’s theme centers on secrets and revelations, suggesting [it] is a figure type for The Apocalypse (Greek for Revelations) ...The Book of Esther appears to encapsulate what Fatima highlights about both the Virgin’s and the Church’s singular office in salvation history.”

Centuries ago, St. Alphonsus agreed with St. Albert who noted Queen Esther [383] as a figure type of the Virgin Mary. Since the Star of Esther was one of the Fatima Virgin’s adornments, it is clear that The Book of Esther calls for a thoroughly traditional, theological study. That said, it must also be noted that no Church Doctor ever attempted a complete examination of this canonical, historical book. For those of us living in the Fatima era, the proper interpretation of Esther is vital. The interpretation must be in accord with Church dogma and doctrine, the constitution of the Church, apostolic tradition, and the study of history with a “Catholic conscience.” [384] Such a venture includes “studies into the spiritual, moral, social, political, educational, economic and cultural conditions of the times,” [385] employing the truths of Faith and scholastic reason.

Both of the Virgin’s adornments reveal the “secrets” of Mary and about Mary, which are carefully hidden in the Old Testament and apocalyptic figure types. As to the method prescribed for the interpretation of Scripture (which, with Tradition, is one of the two sources of Revelation), Pope Pius IX clarified that “the rules which the holy Synod of Trent salutarily decreed concerning the interpretation of Divine Scripture in order to restrain impetuous minds, are wrongly explained by certain men. We, renewing the same decree, declare this to be its intention: that, in matters of faith and morals pertaining to the instruction of Christian Doctrine, that must be considered as the true sense of Sacred Scripture which Holy Mother Church has held and holds, whose office it is to judge concerning the true understanding and interpretation of the Sacred Scriptures; and, for that reason, no one is permitted to interpret Sacred Scripture itself contrary to the sense, or even contrary to the unanimous agreement of the Fathers...” [386] Regarding the literal and mystical sense of Scripture, Pope Pius XII taught, “In this work, let interpreters keep in mind that their greatest care should be to discern and define what the so-called literal sense of the Bible is.” [387] In obedience to Trent’s decree, this examination of The Book of Esther will hold to the sense held by the Church and the Fathers, recalling what St. Augustine stated: “What lies hidden in the Old Testament, is made manifest in the New.” [388]

The Central Figures in Esther

Before continuing, a brief recap on the story of Esther is necessary. Almost five hundred years before Christ, God raised up a Hebrew virgin, an orphan adopted and educated by her uncle Mardochai, to save the Israelites from annihilation. Through an unusual series of events, she became the queen of ancient Persia, living in its capital city of Susan.

The very name of this Hebrew queen, who was loved by the king above all others, refers to “hidden things.” To repeat from the previous section, she was “named Edissa, ‘who by another name was called Esther.’ In the Old Testament of the Hebrew text, her name was Hádássah—meaning myrtle, a white, five-pointed, star-shaped flower. The Hebrew texts also relate that she gave her name as Hester (in Persian, Esther—which means ‘star.’)...The alteration from Hádássah to Hester refers to a secret, because Hester translates to ‘hidden [meaning of the] star.’” In addition, the “Hebrew name for The Book of Esther is Megillat Esther—e.g., “revelation of [that which is] hidden.”

Intriguing as a figure type is Assuerus, Esther’s spouse, the unfathomable Persian monarch apparently serving as a figure type of God. Modern-day Iran is the heart of ancient Persia, even to the city of Susan (Susa). Is it not possible that Our Lady’s choices to appear at Fatima, a village named after a Mohammedan woman who converted to Catholicism, and to display of Esther’s Star provide many traces of the Third Secret’s hidden things? For The Book of Esther centers on secrets and revelations, a plot among nations against one kingdom and the elect, prayer and sacrifice, and the final triumph of the Queen.

Esther’s history may prefigure the world’s punishments by further persecutions of the Church and the Holy Father in the form of war against crumbling Christendom by Mohammedanism, as well as by nations under the influence of Russia, which has “spread her errors throughout the world.” [389] Also contemplate the description of the Third Secret Vision, which depicts soldiers bearing “guns and arrows” [390] and consider which soldiers today use both of these weapons. Like Esther who softened the Persian king’s wrath and changed his heart, we can be confident that Our Lady of Fatima will, after the collegial consecration of Russia to her Immaculate Heart and the papal promulgation of the Five First Saturdays, also convert many souls, including the hearts of those who now hold to Islam.

In The Book of Esther, however, Assuerus’ Persian kingdom appears to represent the kingdom of God on earth but also the heavenly kingdom. His first queen, Vasthi, represents Eve while Esther, his second queen, prefigures the Virgin Mary. Mardochai, uncle of Esther, is “an enigmatic ‘type within type.’ He seems to embody in his person the faithful in exile but also a ‘vizier’ or vicar, if not the Vicar of Christ.” [391] As Esther’s guardian, he is also figurative of St. Joseph, guardian and chaste spouse of the Virgin, archetype of Esther and the Church. As we know, St. Joseph briefly appeared during the Miracle of the Sun at Fatima to bless the world with the Christ Child.

Finally, there is Mardochai’s nemesis, Aman “of the race of Agag.” [392] This reference is yet another trace—this time to the struggles between Esau and Jacob, the twin sons of Isaac and Rebecca (another type of the Virgin). These brothers prefigure two nations or “cities”—the first of reprobates and the second of Jesus Christ and the elect. [393] The race of Agag are also known as Amalcites and Edomites (descendants of Esau [394]), about whom God Himself prophesied “the war of the Lord shall be against Amalec, from generation to generation.” [395] Due to their pride and treachery against Jacob, God revealed in a vision to Abdias the eventual destruction of Esau’s line. As punishment, the Edomites would never experience a final triumph over Jacob; [396] rather, they would be eventually reduced to “stubble,” until there “shall be no remains of the house of Esau.” [397] Astonishingly, in Abdias’ vision, the Lord asked, “How have they searched Esau, how have they sought out his hidden things?” [398]

Returning to Aman, King Assuerus’ first vizier, he was called “our father” and “was worshipped by all as the next man after the king,” [399] a worship that defies the First Commandment in lieu of appropriate honor of a high office. However, from the beginning of his appointment, Aman secretly schemed, first against the king and later, due to his personal hatred of Mardochai the Jew, against the entire nation of the Hebrews.

It follows that Aman also appears to serve as a “a type within type” of treason against God and His Kingdom—e.g., as Lucifer-turned-Satan (the highest angel in the hierarchy of angels who revolted against God and tried to ascend to His throne), an anti-Christ figure, and one who gains and then abuses the authority of his high position by plotting against “the three necessary societies”—the family, civil society, and the Church. [400] As illustrated in the Old Testament, his perfidious qualities—including lying, conspiracy, hypocrisy, soothing words, deceit, feigned indulgence and favor—are always those of the traitor. [401] These traits are also descriptive of Judas, [402] once Christ’s apostle and friend, as well as of many Christians in the end times. [403]

In a word, Aman prefigures treachery “not from without but from within” [404] the earthly kingdom of God, against the Lord and His people. In relation to Fatima and the Star of Esther, his role as nemesis against the elect must be taken seriously. The Old Testament makes clear that the Israelites were the elect, but today’s elect are the faithful Catholics. As St. Justin the Martyr explained, since the time of Christ, “The true spiritual Israel, descendants of Judah and Jacob and Isaac and Abraham...are we who have been led to God through this crucified Christ.” [405]

The Consolation of the Elect

The imagery found in Esther and the Apocalypse, both among the Church’s infallible canonical books, bear great similarities. Esther appears to prefigure the Apocalypse, which “is chiefly the grand finale of the Kingdom of God on earth, the completion of all prophecies in a final synthesis.” [406] Both books console the elect “in the hardships of a virtuous life and in the dangers of practicing their religion with persecutions facing them.” [407] In Esther, the dream of Mardochai relates:

“Behold there were voices, and tumults, and thunders, and earthquakes, and a disturbance upon the earth. And behold two great dragons came forth ready to fight one against another. And at their cry all nations were stirred up to fight against the nation of the just. And that was a day of darkness and danger, of tribulation and distress, and great fear upon the earth. And the nation of the just was troubled fearing their own evils, and was prepared for death. And they cried to God: and as they were crying, a little fountain grew into a very great river, and abounded into many waters.”

“The light and the sun rose up, and the humble were exalted, and they devoured the glorious. And when Mardochai had seen this, and arose out of his bed, he was thinking what God would do: and he kept it fixed in his mind, desirous to know what the dream should signify.” [408]

This dream was later interpreted by Mardochai, who waited a decade before its meaning was made manifest:

“The little fountain which grew into a river, and was turned into a light, and into the sun, and abounded into many waters, is Esther, whom the king married, and made queen. But the two dragons are I and Aman. The nations that were assembled are they that endeavoured to destroy the name of the Jews. And my nation is Israel, who cried to the Lord, and the Lord saved his people: and he delivered us from all evils, and hath wrought great signs and wonders among the nations: And he commanded that there should be two lots, one of the people of God, and the other of all the nations. And both lots came to the day appointed already from that time before God to all nations: And the Lord remembered his people, and had mercy on his inheritance.” [409]

Since Esther is a great Marian figure type, should we not carefully consider the “types within types” of Mardochai’s dream, especially the parts which he later understood symbolized the Queen? Note also that it was only when in terror and preparing for death that the nation of the just first “cried to God,” and it was as they were crying that this little fountain grew into a great river. Might this dream prefigure what will happen in our own day? Must the Third Secret Vision come to pass before the nation of the just cry to God for His intercession, which must be accomplished through the Mediatrix of All Graces?

The Holy Spirit says of the Virgin: “My sister, my spouse, is a garden enclosed, a fountain sealed up.” [410] In the Scriptures, a fountain symbolically prefigures fear of the Lord, wisdom, the law of the wise, understanding, God’s blessings, or the Virgin Mary. [411] A river may designate the prosperity of the saints, affliction, Christ or the Virgin, God’s Presence, the Holy Ghost, and God’s Love. [412] The Sun or its light indicates grace, God’s Presence, His Glory and Justice, or the glory of the just. [413] At Fatima, the Virgin—the Fountain Enclosed, the River of Grace—shone with a light more brilliant than the sun, and it was she who gave the spectacular sign of the Miracle of the Sun.

Finally, the first sentence describing Mardochai’s dream includes the elements:

- “Behold there were voices, and tumults, and thunders, and earthquakes, and a disturbance upon the earth.” [414]

So does the very last sentence of the Apocalypse’s eleventh chapter mention the elements, immediately before “a woman clothed with the sun” is seen:

• “And the temple of God was opened in heaven: and the ark of his testament was seen in his temple, and there were lightnings, and voices, and an earthquake, and great hail.” [415]

There are other parallels between Esther and the Apocalypse, with the following only a sampling: allusions to the kingdom of God; all the classes of mankind; the patience of the elect in exile; a wedding feast, persecutions of the elect by other nations (the reprobates); false worship; apostasy; penance and sackcloth; the ancient Persians (modern-day Iranians); great signs and wonders among the nations; “a woman” of royalty; a dragon or dragons (one in the Apocalypse, “a great red dragon,” but two in Esther, which Mardochai eventually understood represented he and Aman); water; the sun; voices, tumults, tribulations, thunder; and earthquakes.

The Continuing Tale of Two Cities

In fine, both books tell “the tale of two cities” from the beginning of the world—Esther in abridged form, The Apocalypse in its entirety. As St. Augustine wrote:

“Accordingly, two cities have been formed by two loves: the earthly by the love of self, even to the contempt of God; the heavenly by the love of God, even to the contempt of self. The former, in a word, glories in itself, the latter in the Lord. For the one seeks glory from men; but the greatest glory of the other is God, the witness of conscience. The one lifts up its head in its own glory; the other says to its God, ‘Thou art my glory, and the lifter up of mine head.’”

“In the one, the princes and the nations it subdues are ruled by the love of ruling; in the other, the princes and the subjects serve one another in love, the latter obeying, while the former take thought for all. The one delights in its own strength, represented in the persons of its rulers; the other says to its God, ‘I will love Thee, O Lord, my strength.’”

“And therefore the wise men of the one city, living according to man, have sought for profit to their own bodies or souls, or both, and those who have known God ‘glorified Him not as God, neither were thankful, but became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened; professing themselves to be wise,’—that is, glorifying in their own wisdom, and being possessed by pride,—‘they became fools, and changed the glory of the incorruptible God into an image made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and four-footed beasts, and creeping things.’

“For they were either leaders or followers of the people in adoring images, and worshipped and served the creature more than the Creator, who is blessed for ever.’ But in the other city there is no human wisdom, but only godliness, which offers due worship to the true God, and looks for its reward in the society of the saints, of holy angels as well as holy men, ‘that God may be all in all.’” [\[416\]](#)

Only the Lady Queen Can Help You

We recall that, once Esther was aware of Aman’s decree to annihilate the entire Jewish nation throughout Persia, she privately sent a message to Mardochai—a command to him and all the people to pray and fast for her intention, taking no food or water for three days, before she interceded with the king. [\[417\]](#) She and her maidens did likewise.

In her prayer to God, the Queen acknowledged that the punishments so far forthcoming were due to the apostasy among her people. [\[418\]](#) But now they were faced with total annihilation, and their only hope was the Queen—just as Our Lady of the Rosary at Fatima said of herself in the third person, “Only she can help you.” Thankfully, the king heard Esther’s plea and the elect were saved.

In light of Fatima, we must wonder—what would have happened if the elect had ignored the Queen’s command? What if they doubted that she could intercede with the king for their sake?

At the conclusion of The Book of Esther, we find the probable outcome to those questions in the king’s letter, favoring the Jews and condemning the executed Aman, who was once second after the king. If the people disregarded Esther’s command for prayer and penance, which allowed her to intercede and soften the king’s heart, the ultimate outcome would have been the elect annihilated and the kingdom overtaken by secret enemies. [\[419\]](#)

Sr. Lucia once referred to chapters 8-13 of the Apocalypse, which exhibits the same theme of treachery, apostasy (that begins “at the top” [\[420\]](#)), and a final attempt to annihilate the Church and the elect, in order to usurp the Kingdom of God. It is also strongly suggested in the Vision of the Third Secret with the martyrdom of “a bishop dressed in white” and all the faithful who die in the same manner. As Sr. Lucia revealed, when asked about the Third Secret, “It’s in the Gospel and the Apocalypse. Read them!”

[\[421\]](#)

PART 12

Fatima and the Great Et Cetera: Traces of the Third Secret Message

“Truly, it is the greatest of errors to neglect the business of eternal salvation.”

–St. Eucherius

That the entire Third Secret, given in July 1917, remains hidden is clear to many Catholics. The disclosure of the Third Secret’s Vision contradicts those who claim that the “veil is removed from the greatest mystery of the twentieth century” [\[422\]](#) and that events leading to the Third Secret “now seem a part of the past.” [\[423\]](#) Despite various papal consecrations of the world and acts of entrustment made from 1942 to 2013, at least three of the Fatima prophecies have come to pass, while the third—the martyrdom of the good—continues. Daily news reports alone should convince all Catholics that to avoid the fulfillment of the Third Secret, the Holy Father and the world’s bishops must consecrate Russia to the Immaculate Heart of Mary.

Our Lady’s messages and prophecies to the Church are too often treated by clergy and laity as a few redundant reminders. Casually dismissed is the truth that the Three Secrets of Fatima are firmly founded on Divine Revelation and authentic prophecy. Based on Faith and facts, the following is apparent: 1) world-wide devotion to the Immaculate Heart of Mary (which includes the papal promulgation of the Five First Saturdays of Reparation) has not come to fruition, 2) the collegial consecration of Russia has not been made 3) the entire Third Secret Message is not yet revealed, and 4) if the first three requests are not heeded, the tragedies of the past century will reach their apex in the Third Secret Vision’s fulfillment and the annihilation (the complete destruction) of various nations.

It is reasonable—although painfully so—to reach these conclusions because there are objective, coinciding reasons for them. First, there has been no papal promulgation of the Five First Saturdays, although there is sometimes mention of praying the Rosary. Second, there has never been any specific mention of Russia in any papal consecration or entrustment. Third, the world’s bishops did not join the popes who made those acts. Fourth, the world has not yet experienced the prophesied “era of peace” promised by

Our Lady. So let us look once more for the “traces of hidden things.”

Fatima and the Significance of the 13th

Catholics may wonder why Our Lady first appeared at Fatima on May 13, as well as the 13th day of each month through October, 1917 (with the singular exception of August 19, 1917, due to the Fatima visionaries’ imprisonment on August 13).

- First and foremost, May 13 was originally dedicated to Our Lady of the Martyrs. On May 13, 609 A.D., Pope St. Boniface IV (608-615), [\[424\]](#) converted the Roman Pantheon into a basilica, dedicating the edifice to Our Lady under her title, St. Mary of the Martyrs.

In 1561, this basilica, [\[425\]](#) built in the very heart of the Baths of Diocletian (an emperor by whom the early Christians suffered the most vicious persecutions and martyrdoms), “received its [current] official name, St. Mary of the Angels and the Martyrs.” [\[426\]](#)

Correlation: Both the date and place of Our Lady’s first Fatima appearance silently emphasized her title as St. Mary of the Angels and the Martyrs, for the Cova da Iria (the Cove of Irene) appears to be named for the virgin martyr, St. Irene of Tomar. [\[427\]](#) It was on July 13 that Our Lady gave the Three Secrets, warning that if her requests were not heeded, “the good will be martyred, various nations will be annihilated.” [\[428\]](#) The description of the Third Secret Vision also includes two angels who gather the blood of martyrs. [\[429\]](#)

- There is another striking link between the basilica named in honor of St. Mary of the Angels and the Martyrs and the appearances of Our Lady of Fatima, which have to do with the sun. Almost one thousand years after the basilica’s dedication, Pope Clement XI [\[430\]](#) (reigning 1700-1721), the same Vicar of Christ who declared the Feast of the Immaculate Conception as a holy day of obligation, commissioned Francesco Bianchini—an astronomer, mathematician, archeologist, historian, and philosopher—to build inside the church a “meridian line” for the city of Rome. (A beautiful example of science combined with Catholic culture, this meridian line is known as “The Clementina,” named after the pope who ordered its construction).

To track the path of the sun, Bianchini made careful calculations, then created a small hole in the southern wall of the basilica, and laid into the marble floor the meridian line, which runs exactly north to south. The result is that, when the sun reaches its zenith (called solar noon or solar time), light shines through the hole on the wall, casting its light on the meridian line. By the clock, however, this event [431] takes place near 12:15 p.m. (1:15 p.m. in the summer). [432]

The meridian lines' purpose was to check the parameters [433] of the solar-based "Gregorian Calendar," so named after Pope Gregory XIII, who advanced the Catholic Restoration after the Protestant Revolt. To exactly predict Easter, which is based on the vernal equinox, Pope Gregory XIII also revised the Julian solar-based calendar. However, the Gregorian calendar is "so nearly exact that there will be an error of one day only in 35 centuries." [434] Pope Gregory officially promulgated the solar-based calendar, which took effect on October 4, 1582, thus immediately advancing the calendar date by 11 days.

Correlation: The first basilica ever named after Our Lady of the Martyrs also tracks the sun, which is a symbol of the Sun of Justice, Our Lord Jesus Christ. At Fatima, Our Lady always appeared at the noon hour, an hour of great significance, since it is the time in which Our Lord was actually crucified and hung on the Cross. The noon hour may also indicate how much time is left before the world's sunset. That Sr. Lucia died 40 minutes before sunset, on February 13, 2005—in the Hebrew month of Adar—is another sign. [435]

On October 13th, the day of the Miracle of the Sun, witnesses stated that Our Lady appeared exactly at solar noon—not by the clock's time but by the sun's time. [436] Both the adjusted Gregorian calendar dates and the time of the Virgin's appearances at solar noon prove that heaven acknowledged Pope Gregory's authority in the calendar reform. This acknowledgement also underscores the pope's authority, as the Vicar of Christ, to command the collegial consecration of Russia to the Immaculate Heart of Mary. That heaven acknowledged the Gregorian calendar is also proven by the next fact.

- Centuries earlier, on May 13, 1391 (before the Gregorian reform of the calendar) Pope Boniface IX (reigning 1389-1404) acquiesced to the request of King John I of Portugal and ordered that all Portuguese cathedrals should be named in honor of the Virgin. [437] On August 13, 1385, the Virgin had previously answered the King's prayer, made at Fatima, for his smaller army to reign victorious against a much larger force; now the King wished to further honor the Virgin throughout all of Portugal. [438]

Correlation: Exactly 526 years later, the Virgin first appeared at Fatima on May 13, 1917—on the "new" May 13 of the Gregorian calendar. Coincidentally, the length of time in years between these two events (526) equals "13" when the numbers are added as individual digits (i.e., 5+2+6=13).

- May 13 was also the Feast of Our Lady of the Blessed Sacrament. [\[439\]](#) This salutary title of the Blessed Mother's became more well-known due to St. Peter Julian Eymard and a mission given to him by the Virgin Mary. She made him aware that no religious order was named in honor of her Divine Son's Real Presence in the Blessed Sacrament. With the encouragement of Pope Pius IX, the saint founded the Congregation of the Most Blessed Sacrament in Paris, France on May 13, 1856. In 1921, the Sacred Congregation of Rites authorized May 13 as the annual solemn commemoration of The Feast of Our Lady of the Blessed Sacrament.

Correlation: Before Our Lady appeared at Fatima, the children were granted visions of an angel who taught them special prayers of adoration and supplication to the Holy Trinity and the Blessed Sacrament.

- October 13 (the day of the wondrous yet terrifying Miracle of the Sun in 1917) is believed by many scholars to be the actual date of St. Peter's martyrdom in Rome under the tyrant Nero, who is unquestionably a figure-type of the anti-Christ. The date's conclusion is based on the detailed research of Margherita Guarducci (+1999), a remarkable epigraphologist and archeologist, who participated in the study of excavations which were ordered by Pope Pius XII on June 28, 1939.

It was Guarducci who first realized that certain bones found were those of Peter, the first Pope; she was also the first to establish October 13, 64 A.D. as the date of the martyred saint's crucifixion. In 1960, her outstanding book, The Tomb of St. Peter, was translated into English and published. Eight years later, another of her written works, "The Date of Peter's Martyrdom," was published in Naples (in the original Italian) in Words from the Past in the Antiquity Studies Review, No. 267. That latter work was summarized in 1996 by Giovanni Ricciardi and published in "30 Days" magazine, Issue No. 3. For the purposes of this book, the following excerpts of Ricciardi's synopsis of Guarducci's 1968 work are included:

"The most authoritative text informing us of Peter's martyrdom in Rome is the first letter of Saint Clement the Roman to the Corinthians, generally dated at about 96 AD. In its turn, Clement's letter cannot be read apart from one famed passage of Tacitus' 'Annales' (XV, 38-45), in which the historian speaks of the famous fire that flared in Rome on the night of July 18-19, 64 and of its consequences. A comparison of these two testimonies seems to show that Peter was martyred during the anti-Christian persecution campaign unleashed by Nero after the fire and that the place of his martyrdom was the Vatican's 'horti.' The information Tacitus provides is undoubtedly very authoritative because the author of the 'Annales' was writing not long after the events and he was able to quote eyewitnesses as well as from first-hand documents, such as the 'Acta senatus' and the 'Acta diurna'—respectively the minutes of Senate sessions and the official diaries of the Roman State.

“According to Tacitus, then, the Christians whom he—as others do—describes as a ‘considerable multitude’ (‘multitudo ingens’), were condemned to death not so much for causing the fire but because they were guilty of ‘hatred towards the human race’ (‘odium human,’ generic). This was a serious charge because the identification of the human race with the empire itself meant that anyone so charged was considered an enemy of the empire.”

(Author’s Note: In 1996, when Ricciardi wrote this summation of Guarducci’s written research, it could not be foreseen that before 20 years had passed, the term “hate crime” would be coined and hurled by liberals of all types against Catholics who loyally adhere to Christ and His Church’s traditional doctrines, dogmas, articles of faith, and traditional views on moral issues; this malevolent phrase is also used against anyone who holds to “old-fashioned” values. Shockingly, the term “hate crime” appears to be a modern-day resurrection of Nero’s false judgment against the early Catholics of “hatred towards the human race,” which resulted in the subsequent penalty of a cruel death.)

To continue: “The execution of the condemned, according to Tacitus’ information, took place during grandiose circus spectacles (‘circense ludicrum’), for which Nero made available his own circus in the Vatican that was the principal adornment of his ‘horti.’ It is true, too, that the Vatican circus would have been a natural choice since, after the fire, it was the only area left in Rome for the kind of spectacle Nero desired. In fact, the Circus Maximus—the usual venue for Rome’s ‘circensia ludrica’—could not be used because of fire damage.

“Tacitus goes on to add an interesting detail: Nero himself honored the Vatican spectacles with his presence, mixing with the crowd disguised as a chariot driver and racing around the circus track. The spectacles lasted for several days. The question now was establishing exactly when they were held.”

As for the month of October in the year 64 (A.D.):

“Tacitus has no hesitation in establishing the year 64 for these events. If we look at the series of events the historian lists as having happened between the fire of Rome (July 18-19) and the end of the year, we can establish that the Vatican spectacles took place in the first half of October. Nor is it difficult to prove that between the end of 64 and Nero's death on June 9, 68 [A.D.], there are no other periods in which there was anti-Christian persecution of the type that Tacitus and Clement describe. It is also useful to note that the period between the end of September 66 [A.D.] and the beginning of 68 [A.D.] can be excluded without doubt since that was the period of Nero's travels in Greece.

“But, confirming the dating proposed for the circus spectacles and, therefore, for Peter's martyrdom, are two other important, anonymous, texts in Greek contained in a papyrus conserved in Vienna today. They are the Apocalypse of Peter and the Ascension of Isaiah. I believe that these texts (belonging to the so-called ‘apocraphal literature,’ a very common category between the end of the first century and the first half of the second which used prophetic and symbolic language to interpret historical events of the time) are so well informed on the history of the Neronian period that they must have been written not long after events in 64 (not after the year 80, perhaps). I also believe that they are the fruit of the same Judeo-Christian environment. After addressing Nero's infamies, the authors of the two texts announce his punishment as imminent. According to the author of the Apocalypse [of Peter], it would be none other than Peter's martyrdom that would mark the beginning of the emperor's end. This statement is echoed in the Ascension [of Isaiah] text which affirms that Nero's kingdom would last for ‘three years, seven months and 27 days’ after the apostle's death. If we calculate three years, seven months and 27 days from Nero's death (June 9, 68), we arrive at the year 64 [A.D.] and October 13 to be precise: this date falls perfectly within the period in which, according to the Tacitus passage, we have set the unleashing of Nero's persecutions.”

On Nero's dies imperii

“The date calculated chronologically three years, seven months and 27 days after Nero's death is confirmed by another decisive point. October 13 was not just any ordinary day. It was the anniversary of Nero's ascent to the throne, his dies imperii. Moreover October 13, 64 [A.D.] was the tenth anniversary of his reign (decennalia, October 13, 54/October 13, 64).

“The dies imperii was an important date in the Romans' official calendar at the time of the empire. Numerous sources certify that between the first and fourth centuries, it was celebrated more or less solemnly with sacrifices, feasts, contests and donations to the public by the emperor. Regular features of these festivities were sacrifices and exhibitions of bloodletting according to the ancient belief that bloodshed was to the advantage of the living. In fact, it has been pointed out that in Rome the most important feasts concerning the person of the emperor—birthdays (dies natalis) for example, and anniversaries of his ascent to the throne—often coincided with exhibitions of bloodletting, gladiator fights, displays of the condemned (venationes). It has also been noted that it was on the occasion of these anniversaries that Jews and Christians would often be sacrificed. Thus for example, Jews of Alexandria were sacrificed on Caligula's dies natalis. Saint Polycarp's martyrdom coincides with the dies imperii of Antoninus Pius and that of the Christians of Lyons with the dies imperii of Marcus Aurelius. It is highly likely, then, that the Emperor Nero, who loved manifestations to be as spectacular as possible, would have promoted cruel spectacles for his decennalia (a feast when, in the person of the emperor made a god, the majesty of the Roman Empire was exalted). It is highly likely that he would have organized the execution of Christians who were already condemned on charges of being enemies of the empire.

“From a study of this whole series of testimonies, we can draw two significant conclusions. Firstly the hypothesis, founded on Tacitus' testimony that Nero's persecution in which Peter also suffered martyrdom happened in October 64, is confirmed. Secondly, it appears extremely likely that we must set the date of the martyrdom of the Prince of the Apostles at October 13 that year.”

In addition, there is the following and alarming observation made by Margherita Guarducci in her book, The Tomb of St. Peter, wherein she noted “a singular coincidence” that she discovered in the two apocryphal works, the Apocalypse of Peter and the Ascension of Isaiah:

“This latter work deals with the Emperor Nero. In language which is symbolic but sufficiently clear, he is portrayed as possessed by the devil and resolved to persecute the Twelve Apostles of Christ, one of whom (Peter) will eventually fall into his hands. There are other allusions to the misdeeds suggested by Lucifer to the Emperor, and finally two little sentences appear, little for sure, but how precious! I quote them from the French translation of the Ethiopian text, given by Cardinal Eugene Tisserant:

‘And he will set up his image in the sight of all the cities. And he will rule for three years, seven months and twenty-seven days.’

“What could be the meaning of this particular indication of three years, seven months and twenty-seven days?” Guarducci rhetorically asks, and she answers: “The images set up in every city are certainly the statues of the Emperor customarily erected in the various cities of the Empire.”

Then came Guarducci’s surprising yet reasonable conclusion: “And so the Ascension of Isaiah led me back to the first half of October 64 [A.D.], the very same when, according to my other research, the Vatican spectacle and Peter’s martyrdom would have taken place. But what is the significance of this date of October 13, which is presented as the day of the Apostle’s martyrdom? In the other prophetic book, the Apocalypse of Peter, this martyrdom is regarded as the beginning of the ruin of Nero. ‘There we have it,’ I said to myself, ‘the beginning and the end of the three year, seven month and twenty-seven day period of calamities! It opens with the martyrdom of Peter, the culminating point of the persecution, and closes with the death of the tyrant.’”

Correlation: October 13 was the day of the final apparition at Fatima, Portugal. It was the day on which occurred the Miracle of the Sun in 1917 and, as we have seen, there is good cause to believe it is also the anniversary of the first Pope’s martyrdom, which an innumerable number of faithful also suffered with him on that same day in the year of Our Lord 64. In the “Great Secret” given to the children on July 13, 1917, the Third Secret’s Vision revealed a half-ruined city (which might be Rome), the bodies of the dead, the souls for whom “a bishop dressed in white” prayed as he made his halting, painful way, the death (by gunshots and arrows) of the Holy Father (who may or may not be the same bishop dressed in white), and a countless number of people who are killed in the same manner as the Holy Father.

Thus we recognize themes in regard to the 13th:

First, May 13 reinforces the dogma of the “hidden Jesus,” as the Fatima children called the True Presence of Jesus—Body, Blood, Soul and Divinity –in the Blessed Sacrament of the altar.

Second, May 13 signifies Our Lady as Queen of Angels and of Martyrs, underlining the Virgin's prophecies at Fatima if she is not heeded, especially that “the good will be martyred.”

Third, this is also seen with the date of October 13, which is the likely date of Pope St. Peter's martyrdom (as well as the many faithful), under the Emperor Nero, one of the most infamous, historical figure-types of anti-Christ, the son of perdition. In sum, the 13th day stresses great charity (in prayer, sacrifice, and action) to the Triune God and for one's neighbor –which sums up the Two Great Commandments.

Finally, the history of May 13, in relation to the Gregorian calendar and heaven's acknowledgement of it, reinforces the pope's special prerogatives, not only as bishop of Rome but as the reigning Supreme Pontiff of Christ's kingdom on earth, the Catholic Church.

Five Scourges, Five Blasphemies, Five First Saturdays

Since “the very nature of true prophecy is that it unerringly predicts what comes to pass,” [\[440\]](#) we must also recall that authentic prophecy from God is given for our edification and instruction. As St. Paul taught, we must “despise not prophecy, but prove all things; hold fast that which is good.” [\[441\]](#) The Church found Fatima “worthy of belief,” [\[442\]](#) and its prophecies have proven true. Therefore, we must hold fast to the requests the Mother of God made at Fatima, and despise not the prophecies she gave to the Church.

Too, we cannot forget Our Lady foretold that, if her requests were ignored—a circumstance that could only happen due to the hierarchy's dismissal of them—five scourges would afflict the world. The first three of the following five sufferings have unquestionably occurred:

1. Russia will spread her errors throughout the world.
2. A second and worse war, which will begin during the reign of Pius XI (World War II).
3. The good will be martyred.
4. Persecutions of the Church and of the Holy Father.
5. The annihilation of nations.

The five points above are one example of how, for a mysterious reason, the number “five” plays an important role of the Fatima Message. To illustrate, Our Lady of Fatima first appeared in May, which is the fifth month of the year. May 13, 1981 marked the assassination attempt against Pope John Paul II, a terrible example of the hatred held against the Church and her Vicar. The pope attributed Our Lady of Fatima's intercession for saving his life, an admission that "definitively removed the Fatima apparitions from the so-called 'private revelation' by a series of papal acts." [443] In the fifth year of the new century, first Sr. Lucia and then Pope John Paul II passed away, and Pope Benedict XVI (now Bishop Emeritus of Rome who may be, as we shall see, the "bishop dressed in white" of the Third Secret Vision) ascended the chair of Peter.

In sum, Our Lady asked or showed she wanted five things of all the faithful: prayers of the daily Rosary (with each mystery containing five decades), the wearing of the Brown Scapular, the faithful accomplishment of daily duty as Catholics and in our states of life, sacrifice for sinners, and the Five First Saturdays. Specific to the Holy Father, she asked that he command and lead the collegial consecration of Russia to her Immaculate Heart.

On the night of May 29-30, 1930, Our Lord revealed to Sr. Lucia five reasons for the Five First Saturdays of Reparation:

"My daughter, the reason is simple. There are five kinds of offenses and blasphemies uttered against the Immaculate Heart of Mary:

- "Blasphemies against the Immaculate Conception."
- "Blasphemies against Her perpetual Virginity."
- "Blasphemies against Her divine Maternity, while refusing at the same time to recognize Her as Mother of men."
- "The blasphemies of those who publicly seek to place in the hearts of children indifference or scorn, or even hatred towards this Immaculate Mother."
- "The offenses of those who outrage her directly in her holy images."

[444]

Two Means to Save the Church Militant

Exactly sixty-eight years before (May 30, 1862), St. John Bosco related his incredible dream, noted as "The Two Columns in the Sea," [445] in which frequent Communion and Marian devotion are the Church's pillars and to which the Barque of Peter—after many battles and much confusion—securely ties itself.

In his dream, the details of which should not be glossed over, St. Bosco stood on an isolated rock, unable to see any other patch of land other than under his feet. From this spot, he saw "a vast sheet of water" with "an innumerable fleet of ships in battle array. The prows of the ships are formed into sharp, spear-like points so that, wherever they are thrust, they pierce and completely destroy. These ships are armed with cannons, with lots of rifles, with incendiary materials, with other arms of all kinds, and also with books, and they advance against a ship very much bigger and higher than themselves and try to dash against it with the prows or burn it or in some way to do it every possible harm.”

“As escorts to the majestic, fully equipped ship, there are many smaller ships, which receive commands by signal from it, and carry out movements to defend themselves from the opposing fleet.”

In the sea’s midst stood “two mighty columns of great height.” Upon the taller pillar rested a Host of great size, the “Salvation of the Faithful,” and upon the shorter one stood a statue of the Immaculate Virgin, “Help of Christians.” The saint also related, “The Supreme commander on the big ship is the Sovereign Pontiff.”

After the pontiff calls a council, the captains of the smaller ships board his vessel and hold a meeting, but “the wind and the waves gather in storm, so they are sent back to control their own ships. There comes a short lull; for a second time, the pope gathers the captains together around him, while the flag-ship goes on its course. But the frightful storm returns. The pope stands at the helm and all his energies are directed to steering the ship toward those two columns, from the top of which and from every side of which are hanging numerous anchors and big hooks, fastened to chains.”

The great ship’s adversaries maintain a relentless battle to stop and sink the great ship. At times, the great ship suffers “large, deep gaps in its side,” but “a gentle breeze blows from the two columns and the cracks close up and the gaps are stopped immediately.” The enemies’ weapons are blown up or broken, and many of their ships shatter or sink. “Then, the frenzied enemies strive to fight, hand-to-hand, with fists, with blows, with blasphemy and with curses.”

“All at once, the pope falls gravely wounded. Immediately those who are with him run to help him and they lift him up. A second time the pope is struck; he falls again and dies. A shout of victory and of joy rings out amongst the enemies; from their ships an unspeakable mockery arises. But hardly is the Pontiff dead than another pope takes his place. The pilots, having met together, have elected the pope so promptly that the news of the death of the pope coincides with the news of the election of the new successor.”

It is the immediately-elected pope who puts the enemies to route and “guides the ship right up to the two columns and comes to rest between them,” securely fastening the barque—first to the pillar of the Host and then to the pillar of the Virgin.

St. John Bosco asked Fr. Rua, one of his fellow priests, his opinion of the dream. Fr. Rua responded, “It seems to me that the pope’s ship might mean the Church; of which he is the head; the ships, men; the sea, this world. Those who defend the big ship are the good, lovingly attached to the Holy See; the others are her enemies, who try with every kind of weapon to annihilate her. The two columns of salvation seem to be devotion to Mary Most Holy and to the Blessed Sacrament and the Eucharist.”

“You are right!” said St. Bosco. “Only I ought to correct one expression. The enemy ships are persecutions. The most serious trials for the Church are near at hand. That which has been so far is almost nothing in the face of that which must befall. Her enemies are represented by the ships that tried to sink the principal ship if they could. Only two means are left to save her amidst so much confusion: DEVOTION TO MARY MOST HOLY and FREQUENT COMMUNION, making use of every means and doing our best to practice them and having them practiced everywhere and by everybody.”

Next to consider is Fatima’s Third Secret Vision, wherein “the Holy Father passed through a big city half in ruins and half trembling with halting step, afflicted with pain and sorrow, he prayed for the souls of the corpses he met on his way; having reached the top of the mountain, on his knees at the foot of the big Cross he was killed by a group of soldiers who fired bullets and arrows at him, and in the same way there died one after another the other Bishops, Priests, men and women Religious, and various lay people of different ranks and positions. Beneath the two arms of the Cross there were two Angels each with a crystal aspersion in his hand, in which they gathered up the blood of the Martyrs and with it sprinkled the souls that were making their way to God.” [\[446\]](#)

The fate of a future pope was also related by none other than Pope St. Pius X: “I saw one of my successors by name fleeing over the corpses of his brethren. He will flee to a place for a short respite where he is unknown; but he himself will die a cruel death.” [\[447\]](#) halting step,” indicating advanced age. As for Pope St. Pius X’s vision, it may be that a future pope will take the name of Pius, but there is another consideration: Pope St. Pius X’s baptismal name was Giuseppe Sarto; in Italian, Giuseppe means Joseph—the baptismal name of Joseph Ratzinger, who became Pope Benedict XVI and, after abdicating the papal throne, is now Bishop Emeritus of Rome—a bishop who dresses in white.

In the Third Secret Vision, the pope walks “half trembling and with

Revealing Remarks about the Third Secret and the Consecration

Comparing what is known of the public Fatima revelations to the visions of two great saints, at least three themes appear: the Holy Eucharist and Marian devotion; increasing persecutions of the Church and the Holy Father, with the last one likened to hand-to-hand combat; and a pope’s death at the hand of enemies. Current world circumstances—including an elderly bishop, who resigned from the papal office but appears as “a bishop dressed in white” and whose baptismal name is Joseph—are additional indicators that we are now in the final stages leading to Fatima’s Third Secret Vision.

What we can reasonably conclude about the Third Secret Message, still undisclosed, issues from commentary by Sr. Lucia and others in a position to know:

Cardinal Eugenio Pacelli (the future Pope Pius XII), who was the Vatican Secretary of State in 1931 when he wrote the following in a letter (published in Pie XII Devant L'Histoire, pp. 52-53): “I am worried by the Blessed Virgin Mary’s messages to Lucia of Fatima. This persistence of Mary about the dangers which menace the Church is a divine warning against the suicide of altering the Faith, in her liturgy, her theology, and her soul.” Note that there is nothing in any known part of the Great Secret addressing these themes, and yet the Vatican Secretary of State said his concerns came from the Virgin’s messages to Lucia, and that Our Lady was persistent “about the dangers which menace the Church,” etc. His words reiterate what is now known of the Fatima history: Sr. Lucia was still acting as Heaven’s messenger, and the message was urgent.

Pope John Paul II, 1980: “Given the seriousness of the contents, my predecessors in the Petrine office diplomatically preferred to postpone publication so as not to encourage the world power of Communism to make certain moves. On the other hand, it should be sufficient for all Christians to know this: if there is a message in which it is written that the oceans will flood whole areas of the earth, and that from one moment to the next millions of people will perish, [448] truly the publication of such a message is no longer something to be desired...”

“We must prepare ourselves to suffer great trials before long, such as will demand of us a disposition to give up even life, and a total dedication to Christ...With your prayer and my prayer, it is possible to mitigate this tribulation, but it is no longer possible to avert it, because only thus can the Church be effectively renewed. How many times has the renewal of the Church sprung from blood? This time, too, it will be otherwise. We must be strong and prepared, and trust in Christ and His Mother, and be very, very assiduous in praying the Rosary.” [449] (Author’s note: Of course, it is possible to avert this great trial, by means of the collegial consecration of Russia to the Immaculate Heart.)

Sr. Lucia, May 13, 1980, when asked during an interview, “Has Our Lady ever spoken to you about the consecration of the world to her Immaculate Heart?” responded: “No... Never! At the Cova da Iria in 1917, Our Lady had promised: *I shall come to ask for the Consecration of Russia...*In 1929, at Tuy, as she had promised, Our Lady came back to tell me that the moment had come to ask the Holy Father for the consecration of that country (Russia).” [450]

Sr. Lucia, March 19, 1983 confirmed in the presence of three witnesses, including the Papal Nuncio, Archbishop Portalupi, that Pope John Paul II’s 1982 world consecration did not fulfill Our Lady’s request. As reported in an article by Father Pierre Caillon of Centre Saint Jean 61500 Sees, (Orne) France, and which was published by the monthly periodical Fidelite Catholique of Auray Cedex, France, Sr. Lucia explained: “In the act of offering of May 13, 1982, Russia did not appear as being the object of the consecration. And each bishop did not organize in his own diocese a public and solemn ceremony of reparation and Consecration of Russia. Pope John Paul II simply renewed the consecration of the world executed by Pius XII on October 31, 1942. From this consecration we can expect some benefits, but not the conversion of Russia.”

Sr. Lucia, March 22, 1984, who had already received and read the text of the pope’s consecration formula planned for March 25, 1984, when asked about it, made a negative sign and declared, “That consecration cannot have a decisive character.” [451]

Pope John Paul II, March 25, 1984, immediately following his “act of offering” the world to Our Lady, said: “Enlighten especially the peoples of which you yourself are awaiting our consecration and confiding.” [\[452\]](#)

These words clearly reveal the pope’s awareness that Russia had neither been explicitly consecrated to the Immaculate Heart nor in the way Our Lady requested.

Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger, late 1984 on why the Third Secret was still not made public: “Because, according to the judgment of the Popes, it adds nothing to what a Christian must know from Revelation – i.e., a radical call for conversion; the absolute importance of history; the dangers threatening the faith and the life of the Christian and therefore the world. And also the importance of the last times...But the things contained in this Third Secret correspond to what is announced in Scripture and are confirmed by many other Marian apparitions, beginning with the Fatima apparitions themselves in their known contents. Conversion, penance are essential conditions to salvation.” [\[453\]](#)

Cardinal Silvio Oddi, March 17, 1990 said of the Third Secret: “The Blessed Virgin was alerting us against apostasy in the Church.” [\[454\]](#)

Cardinal Luigi Ciappi, 1995, serving for 40 years as papal theologian to all the popes from Popes Pius XII through John Paul II: “In the Third Secret it is foretold, among other things, that the great apostasy in the Church begins at the top.” [\[455\]](#)

Pope Benedict XVI, May 11, 2010: “Beyond this great vision of the suffering of the Pope, which we might in essence attribute to John Paul II, there is indicated that the reality of the future of the Church which will gradually develop and demonstrate itself. Namely, it is true that beyond the moment indicated in [the Third Secret] vision, it is spoken, it is shown...” [\[456\]](#) In other words, the former Pope definitely revealed that there are words (“it is spoken”) that accompany the Third Secret Vision (“it is shown”).

The Dogma of the Faith and the Great “Et Cetera”

In 1943, when asked about the contents of The Third Secret, Sr. Lucia said, “In a certain way, I have already revealed it.” [\[457\]](#) How so? In her Fourth Memoir, she implicitly disclosed it in a sentence of substantial importance: “In Portugal, the dogma of the Faith will always be preserved, etc.” [\[458\]](#) This sentence, which ends with the intriguing “et cetera,” is the prelude to the Third Secret Message—the part of the secret still hidden.

“The dogma of the Faith” is a telling phrase, one which addresses the Church’s primary dogma, thrice-defined: “Outside the Church, there is no salvation.” [459] Today, this singular dogma about the Church is either unknown or rejected within the Church, which is another sign of Fatima’s veracity, lending further credence that the Third Secret’s smothered Message centers on “an apocalyptic crisis of the faith in the Church starting from the top” [460]—namely, the revolt [461] which St. Paul said must come first.

“In” Portugal, Not “Throughout” Portugal

In light of Our Lady’s promise, the faithful are confused by unfolding religious and political events in Portugal, including the desecration of the original, majestic Fatima basilica—accomplished with its rector’s awareness and permission—and the construction of a concrete monstrosity, a “colossal monument dedicated to diabolic disorientation.” [462]

How can such things happen, when Our Lady prophesied, “In Portugal, the dogma of the Faith will always be preserved, etc.?”

It is because even the faithful have interpreted Our Lady’s opening phrase, “In Portugal” to mean “Throughout Portugal.” Previously understanding that the sentence indicated apostasy throughout the rest of the world, we now begin to more deeply grasp its meaning: Only parts of Portugal will preserve the dogma of the faith, while many other formerly Catholic countries will abandon this foremost dogma—a terrible indictment to how widespread the apostasy has become.

Why is this so? Our Lord revealed to Sr. Lucia certain chastisements of Portugal, previously protected from the ravages of WWII because the country’s bishops collegially consecrated it to the Immaculate Heart in 1931, renewing the act in 1938 and 1940:

“But in spite of this, the Hearts of Our Good Lord and Our Good Mother are sad and grieved. Portugal in its majority does not correspond either to Their graces or love. They [the Holy Hearts of Jesus and Mary] frequently complain about the sinful life of the majority of the people, even of those who call themselves practical Catholics. But above all, They complain very much about the lukewarm, indifferent and extremely comfortable life of the majority of the priests and members of religious congregations.”

“The number of souls He meets through sacrifice and intimate life of love is extremely small and limited. These confidences lacerate my heart, mainly because I am one of those unfaithful souls. Our Lord doesn't restrain Himself in setting me there, showing me the mountain of my imperfections that I recognize with huge confusion..."

"Nevertheless, Our Lord goes on communicating with my soul. He seems concerned about the destiny of some countries and wishes to save Portugal, but she is guilty, too." [\[463\]](#)

This revelation is a startling testimony to the doctrine of the Mystical Body of Christ. It reminds us of a previous declaration of the universal Church, "The times in which we live demand action—but action which consists entirely in observing with fidelity and zeal the divine laws and the precepts of the Church, in the frank and open profession of religion, in the exercise of every kind of charitable works, without regard to self-interest or worldly advantage." [\[464\]](#)

The entire Church Militant must follow Our Lady's five requests. The Holy Father and the bishops must effect the solemn, public consecration of Russia to the Immaculate Heart, and all must respond to the other four requests, recalling that "the Church is built of living stones. It is built of saints. And saints are made only by the grace of God and the infused virtues and gifts of the Holy Ghost, not by speeches and publicity and campaigns, which are all doomed to sterility without the essentials of prayer and sacrifice." [\[465\]](#)

PART 13

Our Lady of Akita and the Third Secret of Fatima

“...it is necessary for each one of us to begin to reform himself spiritually. Each person must not only save his own soul but also the souls that God has placed on our path.”

–Sr. Lucia of Fatima

Cardinal Ratzinger (now Bishop Emeritus of Rome) once made an astonishing remark that the messages of Fatima and Akita “are essentially the same.” [\[466\]](#) It was not the first time that someone in a position to know provided such crucial hints. By examining certain aspects concerning the Fatima and Akita revelations, we will find abundant proof that the entire message of Fatima—especially the Third Secret Message, a text still concealed by the Vatican—is of universal and apocalyptic proportion.

Foremost amongst the proofs are the prudent but urgent disclosures of Sr. Lucia. Refusing to disclose the Third Secret on her own authority, in various ways she pointed to an unimaginable crisis for the Church and the world. On two different occasions, Lucia’s response intimated the Third Secret’s connection to Divine Revelation when she stated it was in the Gospel and the Apocalypse—“Read them!” [\[467\]](#)

In another encounter, she was unexpectedly open about the Third Secret’s contents when she specified chapters 8-13 of the Apocalypse. Three years before the Third Secret’s anticipated 1960 release, Lucia was consulted by Father Augustin Fuentes, postulator of the causes for beatification of Francisco and Jacinta, who later published a report of this candid interview with “every guarantee of authenticity and episcopal approval, including that of the Bishop of Fatima.” [\[468\]](#) In this revealing interview, Sister Lucia introduced new concepts that can only be the essence of the Third Secret, even as she recalled “the essence” of the First and Second Secrets. [\[469\]](#)

“This is the third part of the Message of Our Lady, which will remain secret until 1960,” Lucia concluded after frankly remarking, “Father, how much time is there before 1960 arrives? It will be very sad for everyone, not one person will rejoice at all if beforehand the world does not pray and do penance. I am not able to give any other details because it is still a secret.”

Lucia also spoke of Our Lady’s sadness “because no one has paid any attention to her Message, neither the good nor the bad. The good continue on their way but without giving any importance to her Message. The bad, not seeing the punishment of God actually falling upon them, continue their life of sin without even caring about the message. But believe me, Father, God will chastise the world and this will be in a terrible manner. The punishment from Heaven is imminent.” [470]

During the interview, Sr. Lucia mentioned worldwide but conditional scourges, both spiritual and material, due to mankind’s constant offenses against God: the annihilation of nations, a diabolical attack on consecrated souls which also affects the laity, and the grave danger of the eternal loss of souls due to obstinate sins. “Tell them, Father,” said Lucia, “that many times the Most Holy Virgin told my cousins Francisco and Jacinta, as well as myself, that many nations will disappear from the face of the earth. She said that Russia will be the instrument of chastisement chosen by Heaven to punish the whole world if we do not beforehand obtain the conversion of that poor nation.” [471]

Lucia made mention of “the fall of religious and priestly souls,” which so afflict the Hearts of Jesus and Mary: “The devil wishes to take possession of consecrated souls. He tries to corrupt them in order to lull to sleep the souls of laypeople and thereby lead them to final impenitence. He employs all tricks, even going so far as to suggest the delay of entrance into religious life. Resulting from this is the sterility of the interior life, and among the laypeople, coldness regarding the subject of renouncing pleasures and the total dedication of themselves to God.” [472]

The Cause of Our Lady’s Sadness

Again Lucia mentioned Our Lady’s sadness, which was the reason behind the great sacrifices of her cousins Francisco and Jacinta, “because in all the apparitions of the Most Holy Virgin, they always saw her very sad. She never smiled at us. This sadness, this anguish which we noted in her, penetrated our souls. This sadness is caused by the offenses against God and the punishments which menace sinners...The other thing which sanctified these children was to see the vision of hell.”

“Father, that is why my mission is not to indicate to the world the material punishments which are certain to come if the world does not pray and do penance beforehand. No, my mission is to indicate to everyone the imminent danger we are in of losing our souls for all eternity if we remain obstinate in sin.” [473]

Lucia spoke of the dire need for each soul's spiritual reform and conversion. She urged that "we should not wait for an appeal to the world to come from Rome" to do penance. We should not wait for a call to penance from the Holy Father, the bishops, or religious congregations because "Our Lord has already very often used these means and the world has not paid attention. That is why now, it is necessary for each one of us to begin to reform himself spiritually. Each person must not only save his own soul but also the souls that God has placed on our path...The devil does all in his power to distract us and to take away from us the love of prayer; we shall be saved together or we shall be damned together." [\[474\]](#)

Near the end of the interview, Lucia spoke of "the last times of the world," saying, "Father, the Most Holy Virgin did not tell me that we are in the last times of the world but she made me understand this for three reasons." As will be seen, these three reasons correspond with certain remarks made 27 years later by Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger when he was asked why, in 1984, the Third Secret had still not been made public.

Although he appeared to dismiss its importance, he encapsulated its essence by connecting it to Divine Revelation: "Because, according to the judgment of the Popes, it adds nothing to what a Christian must know from Revelation—i.e., a radical call for conversion; the absolute importance of history; the dangers threatening the faith and the life of the Christian and therefore the world. And also the importance of the last times... But the things contained in this Third Secret correspond to what is announced in Scripture and are confirmed by many other Marian apparitions, beginning with the Fatima apparitions in their known contents. Conversion and penance are essential conditions to salvation." [\[475\]](#)

What are the three reasons that made Lucia understand we are in the last times?

"The first reason," said Lucia, "is because she told me that the devil is in the mood for engaging in a decisive battle against the Virgin. And a decisive battle is the final battle where one side will be victorious and the other side will suffer defeat. Hence from now on we must choose sides. Either we are for God or we are for the devil. There is no other possibility."

"The second reason is because she said to my cousins as well as to myself that God is giving two last remedies to the world. These are the Holy Rosary and the Devotion to the Immaculate Heart of Mary. These are the last two remedies which signify that there will be no others."

“The third reason is because in the plans of Divine Providence, God always, before He is about to chastise the world, exhausts all other remedies. Now, when He sees that the world pays no attention whatsoever then, as we say in our imperfect manner of speaking, He offers us, with a certain trepidation, the last means of salvation, His Most Holy Mother. It is with a certain trepidation because if you despise and repulse this ultimate means, we will not have any more forgiveness from Heaven because we will have committed a sin which the Gospel calls the sin against the Holy Spirit. This sin consists of openly rejecting, with full knowledge and consent, the salvation which He offers.”

"Let us remember that Jesus Christ is a very good Son and that He does not permit that we offend and despise His Most Holy Mother. We have recorded through many centuries of Church history the obvious testimony which demonstrates, by the terrible chastisements which have befallen those who have attacked the honor of His Most Holy Mother, how Our Lord Jesus Christ has always defended the honor of His Mother.”

Finally, Lucia emphasized that “the two means to save the world are prayer and sacrifice,” another reference to the spiritual efforts of individual souls as well as to the prayers and the Sacrifice of the Mass. Implicitly underlining the doctrine of Mary as Mediatrix of All Graces, Lucia stated, “Look, Father, the Most Holy Virgin in these last times in which we live has given a new efficacy to the recitation of the Rosary...There is no problem, no matter how difficult it is, that we cannot resolve by the prayer of the Holy Rosary. With the Holy Rosary, we will save ourselves. We will sanctify ourselves. We will console Our Lord and obtain the salvation of many souls.”
[\[476\]](#)

Further Hints of the Third Secret Message

On February 8, 1960 (coincidentally or not, the date then commemorated the Feast of the Most Pure Heart of Mary) [\[477\]](#) the Portuguese news agency, A.N.I. [\[478\]](#) at Rome, released a communiqué from anonymous Vatican sources who declared “the Secret of Fatima will never be disclosed” and “that it is most likely that the letter will never be opened, in which Sister Lucia wrote down the words which Our Lady confided as a secret to the three little shepherds in the Cova da Iria.” [\[479\]](#) This announcement verifies that the Third Secret is not only a Vision but also includes a Message (“the words which Our Lady confided”). It is also indicative of an internal Church struggle, already existing, since no Vatican source publicly assumed authority for the statement or ever denied it. Still, the Vatican silently confirmed A.N.I.'s announcement because the Third Secret was not released in 1960.

Within the course of the 12 years following 1960, various remarks (of which the following are a mere handful) made by Sr. Lucia and others provide further insights into the Third Secret (with all emphasis below mine):

- Sr. Lucia would emphasize, “We must pray a great deal and beg God not to chastise us and save us in time and for eternity.” [480] She would also write “many times to reliable witnesses of a ‘diabolical disorientation’ in the Church and the world of which Our Lady warned her.” [481]

- Pope Paul VI would lament, “Through some crack, the smoke of Satan has entered the temple of God.” [482]

- Bishop Venancio, the bishop of Leira-Fatima, would issue a pastoral letter for the July 1966 Fatima Jubilee, alluding to “a Church...continually threatened by the mystery of iniquity ‘which is already at work.’ (II Thess. 2, 7)” [483]

- Providing astute commentary on the Third Secret Message, which opens with Our Lady’s words, “In Portugal, the dogma of the Faith will always be preserved, etc.,” Fr. Joaquin Alonso, official Fatima archivist, would say, “The phrase most clearly implies a critical state of Faith...In the period preceding the great triumph of the Immaculate Heart of Mary, terrible things are going to happen. These form the content of the third part of the Secret. What are they?”

“If ‘in Portugal the dogma of the Faith will always be preserved,’” he continued, “...it can be clearly deduced from this that in other parts of the Church these dogmas are going to be obscure or even lost altogether. Thus it is quite possible that in this intermediate period which is in question (after 1960 and before the triumph of the Immaculate Heart of Mary), the text [of the Third Secret Message] makes concrete references to the crisis of the Faith of the Church and to the negligence of the pastors themselves.”

“One conclusion does indeed seem to be beyond question: the content of the unpublished part of the Secret does not refer to new wars or political upheavals, but to happenings of a religious and intra-Church character, which of their nature are still more grave.” [484]

- At yet another time, Fr. Alonso wrote “...Does the unpublished text speak of concrete [e.g., tangible, actual] circumstances? It is very possible that it speaks not only of a real crisis of the faith in the Church during this in-between period but, like the secret of LaSalette, for example, there are more concrete references to the internal struggles of Catholics or to the fall of priests and religious. Perhaps it even refers to the failures of the upper hierarchy of the Church. For that matter, none of this is foreign to other communications Sister Lucia has had on this subject.” [\[485\]](#)

From Fatima to Akita:

Part of the Third Secret Revealed

As previously mentioned, Lucia had spoken of the Fatima Virgin’s anguish and sadness “caused by the offenses of God and the punishments which menace sinners.” In 1973, Our Lady would also speak of the cause of her sadness, this time to a nun long afflicted by various illnesses and almost totally deaf, Sister Agnes Katsuko Sasagawa in Akita, Japan: “The demon will be especially implacable against souls consecrated to God. The thought of the loss of so many souls is the cause of my sadness. If sins increase in number and gravity, there will be no longer pardon for them.” [\[486\]](#)

After a thorough investigation of eight years by Bishop John Shojiro Ito, the Akita apparitions and events, which center around a three-foot high statue of Our Lady placed in the chapel of the Eucharistic Handmaids of the Sacred Heart, were found to be of supernatural origin. In addition to the messages, the statue perspired, wept tears, and issued blood from its right hand—in total 101 times. This same bishop, who authorized the veneration of the Blessed Virgin Mary of Akita, later said, “The message of Akita is the message of Fatima.” [\[487\]](#)

What, then, is the Message of Akita? Like Fatima, it is comprised of three distinct parts, but at Akita Our Lady did not impart them as secrets. Like Fatima, each sentence and manifestation reveals profound doctrinal or dogmatic depths, especially in regard to the Mystical Body of Christ. Perhaps most incredible is that Akita’s Third Message is either a part of or central to Fatima’s Third Secret Message.

Our Lady of Akita’s First Message addresses reparation for the sins of men, the True Presence of Jesus in the Blessed Sacrament, and consecration to Jesus through Mary, emphasizing Our Lady’s role as Mediatrix of All Graces. [\[488\]](#)

The Second Message again asks for reparation and refers to Mary as Mediatrix but also mentions “a great chastisement” from the Heavenly Father:

"If you love the Lord, listen to what I have to say to you. It is very important; you will convey it to your superior. Many men in this world afflict the Lord. I desire souls to console Him to soften the anger of the Heavenly Father. I wish, with my Son, for souls who will repair by their suffering and their poverty for the sinners and ingrates. In order that the world might know His anger, the Heavenly Father is preparing to inflict a great chastisement on all mankind. I have intervened so many times to appease the wrath of the Father. I have prevented the coming of calamities by offering Him the sufferings of the Son on the Cross, His Precious Blood, and beloved souls who console Him forming a cohort of victim souls. Prayer, penance and courageous sacrifices can soften the Father's anger..." [\[489\]](#)

The Third Message of Akita, given on October 13, 1973 (the 56th anniversary of the Miracle of the Sun at Fatima, Portugal), is tragically compatible with the evidence, already examined, that the last Fatima Secret foretells widespread apostasy throughout the Church and the world, an apostasy centering on "the dogma of the Faith," consequently evoking even greater retributions from God. It also explains why the Vatican refuses to release the text of the Third Secret Message. Even further, Akita's third message simultaneously corresponds with Sr. Lucia's warning, "God will chastise the world and this will be in a terrible manner" as well as Fr. Alonso's thesis, "In the period preceding the great triumph of the Immaculate Heart of Mary, terrible things are going to happen. These form the content of the third part of the Secret."

Thus follows the third Message of Akita:

"As I told you, if men do not repent and better themselves, the Father will inflict a terrible punishment on all humanity. It will be a punishment greater than the deluge, such as one will never have seen before. Fire will fall from the sky and wipe out a great part of humanity, the good as well as the bad, sparing neither priests nor faithful. The survivors will find themselves so desolate that they will envy the dead. The only arms that will remain for you will be the Rosary and the Sign left by My Son. Each day recite the prayers of the Rosary. With the Rosary, pray for the Pope, the Bishops, and the Priests."

"The work of the devil will infiltrate even into the Church in such a way that one will see cardinals opposing cardinals, bishops against bishops. The priests who venerate me will be scorned and opposed by their confreres. Churches and altars will be sacked; the Church will be full of those who accept compromises and the demon will press many priests and consecrated souls to leave the service of the Lord."

“Pray very much the prayers of the Rosary. I alone am able to save you from the calamities which approach. Those who place their confidence in me will be saved.” [490]

The opening lines of the third Akita message directly tie to the oft-overlooked opening of Fatima’s Third Secret Vision, wherein Lucia wrote “at the left of Our Lady and a little above, we saw an Angel with a flaming sword in his left hand; flashing, it gave out flames that looked as though they would set the world on fire; but they died out in contact with the splendour that Our Lady radiated towards him from her right hand: pointing to the earth with his right hand, the Angel cried out in a loud voice: ‘Penance, Penance, Penance!’” [491] As can be seen, the Akita message reinforces the Fatima revelations.

In the Third Secret of Fatima Vision, Our Lady’s right hand signifies the great power of her intercession because the angel, while thrice crying the word “Penance,” is already prepared to set the world on fire with the sword of Divine Justice.

At Akita, on July 6, 1973, the statue’s right hand issued blood. Before that, on the vigil of the Feast of the Sacred Heart in June, Sister Agnes received a cross-shaped stigmata in her left hand, causing her great pain and suffering. (On that same occasion, Sr. Agnes’ guardian angel appeared to her, and taught her a prayer she had never before heard. Later, she would learn it was the “O my Jesus” prayer which Our Lady of Fatima said was to be prayed after every Rosary decade: “O my Jesus, forgive us our sins, save us from the fires of hell. Lead all souls to heaven, especially those with the greatest need of Thy mercy.” At that time in Japan, the prayer was not well-known. Through the Akita apparitions, the “Fatima Decade Prayer” spread throughout the country.)

That Sr. Agnes and the chapel statue of the Virgin, now known as Our Lady of Akita, bore similar marks on opposite hands must be a sign of theological implications. Of the blood issuing from the Akita statue’s right hand, Sr. Agnes was told by an angel, “This flowing of blood is significant. It will be shed for the conversion of men and in reparation for sins. To the devotion to the Sacred Heart, add the devotion to the Precious Blood.” [492] The prophecy that “blood will be shed for the conversion of men and in reparation for sins” reveals that the Fatima Virgin’s warning that “good people will be martyred” will continue unabated and most likely increase, culminating in the martyrdoms seen in the Third Secret Vision, when an even greater massacre of Catholics occurs after “a bishop dressed in white” is killed—all because the Virgin’s simple requests at Fatima remain ignored.

The Hidden, Bitter Star

It cannot be denied that Our Lady of Akita’s description of a fiery, worldwide cataclysm which destroys a large part of humanity literally indicates an apocalyptic chastisement. As we’ve already seen, further lights on the Third Secret and “the seriousness of the contents” were expressed by the late Pope John Paul II who, when speaking to a select group in Fulda, Germany, surprised everyone by describing a devastating and universal deluge, saying, “...it should be sufficient for all Christians to know this: if there is a message in which it is written that the oceans will flood whole areas of the earth, and that from one moment to the next millions of people will perish, truly the publication of such a message is no longer something to be desired...” [\[493\]](#)

Consider three things: 1) The Third Secret Vision describes an angel with a flaming sword, 2) the Akita message warns that “fire will fall from the sky,” 3) but John Paul II, when asked about the Third Secret, specifically mentioned flooding. What could be the cause of both worldwide fire and flood? Recalling the movements of the “day star” of the celestial heaven (the Miracle of the Sun at Fatima), and also bearing in mind Lucia’s specificity that the Third Secret can be found in the Gospel and the Apocalypse, we take into account the following Scriptures:

- “And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations by reason of confusion of the roaring of the sea and of the waves; Men withering away for fear, and expectation of what shall come upon the whole world. For the powers of heaven shall be moved...” [\[494\]](#)

- “And the second angel sounded the trumpet: and as it were a great mountain, burning with fire, was cast into the sea, and the third part of the sea became blood: And the third part of those creatures died, which had life in the sea, and the third part of the ships was destroyed. And the third angel sounded the trumpet, and a great star fell from heaven, burning as it were a torch, and it fell on the third part of the rivers, and upon the fountains of waters: And the name of the star is called Wormwood. And the third part of the waters became wormwood; and many men died of the waters, because they were made bitter.” [\[495\]](#)

Too, there exist various prophecies that appear to foretell the onset of a comet (suggested at Akita), and those which definitely predict a pope's exile (as seen in the Third Secret Vision), of which only two shall here be mentioned:

“A powerful wind will rise in the North carrying heavy fog and the densest dust by divine command, and it will fill their throats and eyes so they will cease their savagery and be stricken with great fear... Before the comet comes, many nations, the good excepted, will be scourged by want and famine... By its tremendous pressure, the comet will force much out of the ocean and flood many countries, causing much want and many plagues. All coastal cities will live in fear, and many of them will be destroyed by tidal waves, and most living creatures will be killed, and even those who escape will die from horrible diseases. For in none of those cities does a person live according to the laws of God.” (St. Hildegard, 12th century) [\[496\]](#)

And the second:

“For seven days, the great star shall be seen,
As if two Suns in the sky should appear.
The big Mastiff (Islamic or Arab powers) shall be howling all night
When the Pontiff shall go into exile.”

–Michel de Nostredame, “Michael of Our Lady” [\[497\]](#)

Although we cannot be certain, an asteroid or comet of great magnitude seems to be the plausible explanation for these prophecies of a devastating star. In Greek, “aster” or “astro” is etymologically rooted to “ester,” calling to mind the Star of Esther on Our Lady of Fatima's dress. Again, this star directs us to The Book of Esther, providing “the traces of hidden things.” [\[498\]](#) of Fatima as an annunciation of Divine Revelation as found in the Gospel and the Apocalypse. It has been mentioned repeatedly that Queen Esther is a great figure type for the Virgin—especially as the Fatima Virgin. However, the main facts bear repeating, since they may indicate another surprising link to the Third Secret.

Once more we will recall that, in the Old Testament of the Hebrew text, Esther's birth name of Hádássah referred to myrtle, a star-shaped flower. The word myrtle shares the same etymological root as myrrh (“bitter”). [\[499\]](#) The Hebrew text relates that Esther (in Persian, “star”), who became queen of Persia, changed her name to Hester, which translates to “hidden star” or “hidden [meaning of the] star.” Together, the various philological traces of Esther's name also indicate “hidden bitter star.”

Thus, in addition to all else that it means to the Church, the Star of Esther may also symbolize the “hidden bitter star” which the Apocalypse names as Wormwood. If so, it reinforces the Fatima message that the Pope, the bishops and the entire Church must do their duty and heed all of the requests of the Morning Star, who wishes to grant an era of peace to mankind—or soon face the chastisement of God’s avenging star.

In concluding this section, these are the main factors to take into account:

- The revelations of the Sacred Heart at Paray-le-Monial, stressing the necessity of mankind’s repentance and reparation for sin and the Lord’s desire to grant us Divine Mercy rather than chastisement;
- All of the incredible “hidden revelations” inherent in the Star of Esther which adorned the Fatima Virgin’s gown;
- The Book of Esther itself, which “centers on secrets and revelations, a plot among nations against one kingdom and the elect, prayer and sacrifice, and the final triumph of the Queen;”
- The themes found in The Book of Esther suggest it is a figure type for The Apocalypse, reinforcing Sr. Lucia’s statement that the Third Secret of Our Lady of Fatima may be found in the Gospel and Chapters 8-13 of the Apocalypse. [\[500\]](#)
- Too, there is the Hebrew name for The Book of Esther (Megillat Hester), which translates to “revelation [of that which is] hidden” or “hidden revelation” but also “hidden revelation of the star.” Thus, the book’s name is itself an indication that the star on the Fatima Virgin’s gown is another trace to the Apocalypse.
- The opening lines describing the Third Secret Vision of Fatima (“an Angel with a flaming sword in his left hand”); [\[501\]](#)
- The later prophecy of Our Lady of Akita (“Fire will fall from the sky”); [\[502\]](#)
- And so, “in addition to all else it means to the Church, the Star of Esther may also symbolize the ‘hidden bitter star’ which the Apocalypse names as Wormwood.”
- At Fatima, Our Lady made use of the great Star of Heaven (the sun) as a reminder of God’s greatness but also as an image of the end of the world. [\[503\]](#)

In studying the Apocalypse’s chapters 6-11, we find it “portrays the great distress among the nations on account of the calamities which the Lamb allows to overtake the world in punishment for unbelief,” as Fr. R. Gerald Culleton explained. “These calamities are in origin terrestrial (Ch. 6), celestial (Ch. 8), and infernal (Ch 9). Even a foretaste of hell is given to mankind before the great day of reckoning. Also in St. Luke's eschatological chapter, there is a clear distinction made between ordinary wars and insurrections on the one hand, and universal war, calamity, famine, and death on the other. The latter is the sign of the coming judgment. (Lk. 21:9-11)"

He continued, "The period of great distress coincides with the 'Major Apostasy' of 2 Thess. 2:3 and with the end of the 'Time of the Gentiles.' After describing the destruction of Jerusalem, Jesus said: 'And Jerusalem will be trodden down by the Gentiles until the times of the nations to be fulfilled.' (Luke 21:24) The great distress brought physical death to many on earth, but like the days of the flood (see 1 Peter 3:20), many found repentance before death and washed their robes in the blood of the Lamb, and an innumerable crowd remained faithful to Him until death (Apoc. 7: 9-14)." [\[504\]](#)

It is no small wonder that the last words of Our Lady on October 13, 1917 were the motherly plea: "Do not offend the Lord our God any longer. He is already deeply offended." At present, the world is already chastised with a terrible terrestrial calamity—the Great Revolt, which still runs its course. Its three historical stages directly link to the reasons Our Lady came to Fatima, the Great Secret's three distinct parts, and the Great Miracle's three-fold dance.

As for the celestial calamity foretold in the Apocalypse, it also seems prefigured in the "dancing" Star of Heaven, which advanced and receded three times before its final, soul-shaking tumble. The Scriptures are clear that the sun or its light indicate God's Grace, His Presence, His Glory and Justice, or the glory of the just. [\[505\]](#) Symbol of the Sun of Justice, the sun at Fatima was shaken from its heavenly moorings, revolving like "a captive ball of fire," suddenly plunging to the very horizon line, and finally "tracing a sort of winding ellipse as it went" back to its zenith—suggesting the path of an asteroid in the heavens. Was the sudden fiery plummet, so like a "wheel of fire," the sensible sign of the celestial chastisement of the Apocalypse's "bitter" star, Wormwood? Did it portend Our Lady of Akita's warning that came exactly 56 years later to the day, "Fire will fall from the sky..."? [\[506\]](#)

Each of us must make this heartfelt prayer our own: "I must ardently desire to have Him as my Savior, Whom I am unable to withstand as my Judge." [\[507\]](#) The Church [that is, her human element] and the world still have a choice between repenting and asking for God's Mercy or remaining obstinate in sin and facing His Wrath. Each of us can do our part, following and spreading the whole truth about Fatima and the meaning of its magnificent Miracle. We must pray, sacrifice and work for the happy day of triumph, when Russia is collegially consecrated to the Virgin's Immaculate Heart. Through it all...

“Look to the Star! Call Mary!” (St. Bernard of Clairvaux)

-SECTION III-

PART 14

What Pope Benedict XVI Revealed: The Third Secret is Spoken

“In all ages, men have been divinely instructed in matters expedient for the salvation of the elect...and in all ages there have been persons possessed of the spirit of prophesy, not for the purpose of announcing new doctrines, but to direct human actions.”

-St. Thomas Aquinas,
*Summa Theologica II-II, Q. 174, Art. 6.

Three simple but remarkable words from Pope Benedict XVI during an in-flight interview reveal that there is more to the Third Secret of Fatima than a startling but inexplicable Vision. A careful examination of the Pope’s response to a question, asked and answered in Italian, show that—not once, but twice—the Pope made clear that the Third Secret is also spoken. [\[508\]](#)

Flying en route to Portugal on May 11, 2010, Pope Benedict made a crucial revelation to a group of journalists, the press corps of the papal entourage. As is the usual practice, Vatican protocol asks correspondents who will travel with the Pope to submit their questions days in advance. [\[509\]](#)

Of all the inquiries, the Pope chose to answer only three, all of which were formally presented by Vatican spokesman Fr. Frederico Lombardi. On the same day, the complete question-and-answer session (an exchange made and published in Italian) was quickly transcribed by journalist Gian Guido Vecchi for Corriere della Sera. [\[510\]](#)

As it turned out, the last of these pre-selected questions was actually a three-part inquiry about the Fatima apparitions and the Third Secret, the last of three distinct parts of “the Great Secret” given by the Virgin Mary to three shepherd children on July 13, 1917.

In comparing the various English renditions of the on-board press conference, one will find a few inaccuracies or mistranslations. To a certain degree, this is understandable, as any translator would attest. On the other hand, some things lost in translation are too important to lose. My research into the original Italian articles discovered that the English translations were askew; as a result, I published the correct translation on my blog because every single journalist, in print or online, had missed something both startling and imperative.

What follows, then, is my literal translation [\[511\]](#) from Italian-to-English of the Fatima/Third Secret question and the incredibly relevant section of the Pope's response (all following emphasis mine):

[Author's translation begins]: "Holiness, what significance have we today for the apparitions of Fatima? And when you presented the text of the Third secret (sic), in the Vatican Press Office, in June 2000, it was asked if the Message could be extended ["broadened" or "widened"], beyond the attack on John Paul II, also to the additional [or "other"] sufferings of the popes? And is it possible, in your opinion [or "according to you"], to frame also in that vision the sufferings of the Church of today for the sins of the sexual abuse of minors?" [\[512\]](#)

Pope Benedict XVI's Response: "Beyond this great vision of the suffering of the pope, which we might in essence attribute to John Paul II, there is indicated the reality of the future of the Church which [will] gradually develop and demonstrate [itself]. Namely [also rendered as either "That is" or "In other words"] it is true that beyond the moment indicated in the vision, it is spoken, it is shown [there is] the necessity of the passion of the Church which, naturally [or "of course"], is reflected in the person of the Pope, but the Pope is in the Church, and therefore it is the sufferings of the Church that are announced..." [\[513\]](#) [End of author's translation]

The remainder of this substantial section of the Pope's response to the Third Secret question is as follows, "As for the new things we may find today in this message, it is also that the attacks on the Pope and the Church not always come from the outside, but the sufferings of the Church actually come from within the Church, from the sin that exists in the Church. This has always been known, but today we can see it in a really terrifying way: the greatest persecution of the Church does not come from outside enemies, but it is from sin within the Church. And the Church now has a deep need to relearn penance, accept purification, learn to forgive, but also a need for justice." [\[514\]](#)

In those preceding words, one discerns a slight echo of Pope St. Pius X in his landmark encyclical, Pascendi Dominici Gregis, on the doctrine of the modernists: "...they put into operation their designs for her undoing, not from without but from within. Hence, the danger is present almost in the very veins and heart of the Church, whose injury is the more certain from the very fact that their knowledge of her is more intimate." [\[515\]](#)

The Third Secret: "It is spoken..."

- First, closer attention must be paid to the pivotal sentence: “Namely, it is true that beyond the moment indicated in the vision, it is spoken (the briefest pause, almost as if the Holy Father caught himself), it is shown...” and later in the same sentence he stated “...it is the sufferings of the Church that are announced.”

In highlighting that one sentence alone, Pope Benedict XVI made a staggering and critical revelation. In June of 2000, [\[516\]](#) the Vatican released a description of the Third Secret Vision, but not the Virgin’s words that pertain to it.

Since that time, less than a handful of influential Vatican prelates insist there is nothing left to reveal of the Third Secret, evoking a collective, common-sense response from many Catholics: “That’s it?” This includes Mother Angelica, the founder of EWTN (Eternal World Television Network), who, when speaking to a priest on her program on May 16, 2001, said: “As for the Secret [the Third Secret of Fatima], well, I happen to be one of those individuals who thinks we didn’t get the whole thing. I told you! I mean, you have the right to your own opinion, don’t you, Father? There, you know, that’s my opinion. Because I think it [the Third Secret] is scary.”

Then, in May 2010, Pope Benedict XVI submitted a crucial piece of evidence that there is more to the Third Secret, when he unexpectedly admitted that “beyond...the vision...it [the Third Secret] is spoken.”

- Second, one critical fact cannot be forgotten: Pope Benedict XVI was the first pope to ascend the papal throne, already possessing full knowledge of the Third Secret of Fatima. [\[517\]](#) In light of the fact that Benedict XVI had at least 27 years (if not longer) to ponder the full Third Secret, the manner in which the Pope expressed himself on May 11, 2010 indicates either a purposefully discreet admission or a momentary slip.

To provide a brief summary: During a 1984 interview, Cardinal Ratzinger (who became Pope Benedict XVI in 2005) disclosed that he had already read the Third Secret. However, he did not say when or under what circumstances the Secret was made known to him. It was also in 1984 that Cardinal Ratzinger, when asked why the Third Secret had still not been revealed, provided an amazing six-point summary of its contents, a topic addressed in the next section.

- Third, the specific inquiry about the Third Secret initially asked “if the Message could be extended...to the additional sufferings of the popes.”

Initially, it should be noted that Pope Benedict did not object to the plural word, “popes.” Moreover, the Holy Father’s reply also reveals that the pope of the Third Secret Vision is not necessarily the late Pope John Paul II: “Beyond this great vision of the suffering of the pope, which we might in essence attribute to John Paul II...”

The entire “Great Secret,” in fact, addresses the role of the Holy Father many times. The papacy is absolutely central to complete the Virgin Mary’s requests to, and on behalf of, the Church. While the Secret concerns (meaning “is of concern to”) the Holy Father, it is not only about the Holy Father. These two points are made clear by Our Lady’s words in the Second Fatima Secret, by Heaven’s later and repeated insistence to Sr. Lucia, and, logically, by the hidden text of the Third Secret, which the Virgin wanted revealed to the world no later than 1960.

The “person of the pope,” mentioned by Benedict XVI, means the individual in the office of the papacy, whether past, present, or future. Uncomfortable as it is to admit, the “other sufferings of the popes” is of their own tragic making, due to their purposefully obtuse and tragic refusal to obey the explicit commands of God, given by Our Lady of Fatima.

Furthermore, John Paul II was not the only pope to be victimized by a murderous attack. The Holy Father seen in the Third Secret Vision “is killed by a group of soldiers who fired bullets and arrows at him.” [\[518\]](#) Surely, Benedict XVI knew “the attack in 1981 [an assassination attempt made against John Paul II] stands with respect to that vision exactly as the other attempts suffered by popes—for example, the attack on Paul VI on November 27, 1970, when he was stabbed in the abdomen by a lunatic in Manila.” [\[519\]](#) Furthermore, bullets and arrows together were not used against either Paul VI or John Paul II.

Still, even in hindsight, no Vatican prelate attributed the lethal attempt against Paul VI as a fulfillment of the Third Secret, but only to John Paul II. Now Benedict’s recent words refute that interpretation.

- Fourth, Pope Benedict XVI never clarified that the Third Secret’s indicated “reality of the future of the Church” is conditional, whether for good or for evil.

In accord with Divine Revelation, the Virgin Mary qualified these conditions in the Second Part of “the Great Fatima Secret”: “If what I say to you is done...”–“To prevent this...” and “If My requests are heeded, Russia will be converted and there will be peace”–but, “If not, she [Russia] will spread her errors throughout the world, causing wars and persecutions against the Church. The good will be martyred. The Holy Father will have much to suffer. Various nations will be annihilated.” [520]

Our Lady’s words, then and later, left no doubt of God’s will. In fact, due to the incomplete 1942 consecration of Russia made by Pope Pius XII, Sr. Lucia “would say more than once, and with deliberate emphasis, ‘What Our Lady wants is that the Pope and all the bishops in the world shall consecrate Russia to her Immaculate Heart on one special day. If this is done, she will convert Russia and there will be peace. If it is not done, the errors of Russia will spread through every country in the world.’” [521]

In July 1917, the Mother of God also promised, “In the end, My Immaculate Heart will triumph. The Holy Father will consecrate Russia to Me, and she will be converted, and a period of peace [era of peace, in another translation] will be granted to the world.” [522] This is the Promise in which all must keep hope.

As previously mentioned, credible Fatima scholars agree, as would anyone who understands the rules of grammar, that the Promise concludes the Second Secret, and the Third Secret begins with Our Lady’s next sentence, “In Portugal, the dogma of the Faith will always be preserved, etc.”—the etc. added by Sr. Lucia, who indicated that explanatory words followed.

• Fifth, Benedict XVI said there is “need for the passion of the Church, which naturally reflects itself on the person of the pope...”

To the contrary, it was precisely to avoid this ongoing passion (beginning anew with the post-WWI era) that Our Lady came to Fatima, there to warn against many future dangers and give the means to avoid them all.

Again, the Virgin at Fatima repeatedly emphasized through her requests and prophecies (especially in the still unexplained but ominous Third Secret Vision) that the present and future are fully dependent upon the Church’s fidelity to Divine Revelation. That fidelity, however, depends on “the person of the pope,” the man whose office is entrusted by God with the duty and obligation to guard the Deposit of Faith and faithfully transmit it to Christ’s flock.

In the words of the great saint, Pope St. Pius X, “One of the primary obligations assigned by Christ to the office divinely committed to Us of feeding the Lord’s flock is that of guarding with the greatest vigilance the deposit of the faith delivered to the saints, rejecting the profane novelties of words and the gainsaying of knowledge falsely so called.” [523]

Tragically, waning papal vigilance has marked the past decades of Church history. God, Who knows all things, foresaw the failure of those hierarchs who simply would not wholly fulfill all of Heaven’s directives given at Fatima. Part of Lucia’s mission was to transmit God’s commands to the hierarchy, which they in turn were to fulfill for the benefit of the universal Church and the world.

From the beginning, however, her first superior, Bishop de Silva, repeatedly rejected the responsibility of the Third Secret placed upon him. This bishop was given the authority to read and disseminate the Third Secret, but he obstinately refused to do so. [524]

As a result, various misunderstandings and capitulations rippled throughout the hierarchy in regard to many important facets of Fatima. The consecrations of Pope Pius XII, Paul VI, and Pope John Paul II were incomplete; the other popes (Pius XI and John XXIII) did not even make the attempt. Sadly, Benedict XVI also did not attempt the required collegial consecration.

An appropriate observation was made by Antonio Socci, author of The Fourth Secret of Fatima, who wrote, “All of the history of Fatima and of this century resides in this dramatic incapacity of Peter, of the men of the Church, and of humanity to entrust themselves fully to she who is ‘omnipotent by grace’—the incapacity to trust in her truly and totally, almost as if the possibility of salvation could come from Peter (alone) by his own initiatives, from Vatican politics.”

• Sixth, Benedict XVI subsequently remarked, “...but the Pope is in the Church, and therefore it is the sufferings of the Church that are announced.” These words accomplish two things: 1) they make a second verification that the Third Secret is indeed spoken, and 2) they express a vital truth of Catholic doctrine regarding the Pope and the Church.

Jesus Christ said to the first pope, “And I say to thee: Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I shall build my Church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.” [525] Since the meaning of individual words is significant, this essay now turns to the connotation of the word “church,” as explained by the Catholic priest and scholar, Msgr. Joseph Clifford Fenton:

“What Our Lord promised, and what He actually accomplished, was thus the continuation of a social unit which had been in existence since the beginnings of the human race, but a continuation of this unit in a new status and under new conditions. In this new status, the ecclesia was to be established or founded upon St. Peter. In other words, this man and his successors were to be the source of the unity and stability of this ecclesia of the new dispensation. The society of Our Lord's disciples was the 'Church' of the new dispensation. It was and, until the end of time, it will continue to be the assembly of the chosen people, the people of the covenant, the kingdom of God in this world. By reason of its association with Our Lord, it is designated as His Mystical Body." [\[526\]](#)

With this definition in mind, the entire Church, from the Holy Father to the laity, must recall the great yet terrible "secret of the Catholic City," as it is taught in the infallible Scriptures:

"Unless the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it. Unless the Lord keep the city, he watcheth in vain that keepeth it." [\[527\]](#)

THE SIX THEMES OF THE THIRD SECRET OF FATIMA

“We had enough exhortations to be silent. Cry out with a hundred thousand tongues! I see that the world is rotten because of silence.”

–St. Catherine of Siena

We have seen how, in choosing to answer a “Third Secret question,” which was really a three-part inquiry, Pope Benedict XVI unexpectedly revealed that the Third Secret consists of both a verbal Message from Our Lady as well as a Vision. In fact, when the Pope said the Third Secret is spoken and shown, his words correlate with other proofs that this last Secret is comprised of two parts.

To cite only one example, let us momentarily turn to what was said decades ago by Fr. Joseph Schweigel. This priest, upon his return from an important mission given to him by Pope Pius XII to make inquiries of Sr. Lucia about unfulfilled parts of the Fatima Message (the Third Secret, the consecration of Russia, etc.), was briefly questioned by a curious colleague about the Third Secret. Fr. Schweigel responded in the following manner:

“I cannot reveal anything of what I learned at Fatima concerning the third Secret, but I can say that it has two parts: one concerns the Pope. The other, logically—although I can say nothing—would have to be the continuation of the words: In Portugal, the dogma of the Faith will always be preserved.” [\[528\]](#)

The colleague pressed a little further, asking, “The present Pope or the next one?” However, as the interrogator himself attested in a written letter, “To this question, Fr. Schweigel made no reply.” [\[529\]](#)

Only a few years later, Fr. Schweigel would also say that the Third Secret “seems to suppose a victorious, triumphant, but difficult and heroic decision” of a Pope’s. [\[530\]](#) In considering the purpose of Fr. Schweigel’s papally-directed mission in questioning Sr. Lucia and in light of the tragic circumstances in which the Church Militant finds itself today, one can reasonably presume that, sometime in the future, a Pope will make a “difficult and heroic decision” under circumstances in which he faces vehement, if not physically violent, opposition to his unique prerogatives in his office as Vicar of Christ when he decides to comply with at least one, if not all, of Our Lady’s unfulfilled requests at Fatima.

Since Our Lady still awaits three particular actions to be made by the Pope and the bishops of the Catholic Church, it appears that Fr. Schweigel's description of a "victorious, triumphant, but difficult and heroic decision," made by the present Pope or a future one, lends further insight into Our Lady's promise, "In the end, My Immaculate Heart will triumph."

Because they deserve repeating, what are these three things in which the Queen of the Catholic City so gently insists? Our Lady first asks the Pope to command (not invite) and lead the world's bishops in a public and solemn collegial consecration of Russia to the Immaculate Heart of Mary. Secondly, the Virgin Mary also desires the release of the complete Third Secret Message (which will then make clear the meaning of the Third Secret Vision). Third, the Pope must promulgate the Five First Saturday devotions, which are acts of reparation for five specific blasphemies against the Immaculate Heart of Mary.

What must never be forgotten is that the last Secret of Fatima, like the first Two Secrets, is intended by God to be publicly disseminated to the entire Church and likewise followed, for it also is given for the salvation of souls living in these days of great peril. To insist on the release of the Third Secret and the other two things for which the Virgin Mary asks is neither a matter of satisfying mere curiosity nor is it one of overly sentimental piety; these are matters of obedience to God Himself, Who sent the Immaculate Virgin Mother to Fatima with an apocalyptic warning and the means to avoid its fulfilment.

To grasp the general idea "of what" the Third Secret consists, it is entirely appropriate to attentively review an earlier disclosure by Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger, made many years before he became the Pope.

It has been previously mentioned that in a 1984 interview with Vittorio Messori, Cardinal Ratzinger was asked if he had read the Third Secret of Fatima. When he answered, "Yes, I have read it," it was then inquired as to why the Secret had still not been released. A careful examination of the Cardinal Ratzinger's answer reveals a total of six "themes" to the Third Secret:

"Because, according to the judgment of the Popes, it adds nothing (literally: "nothing different") to what a Christian must know concerning what derives from Revelation: i.e., a radical call for conversion; the absolute importance of history; the dangers threatening the faith and the life of the Christian, and therefore of the world. And then the importance of the 'novissimi' [the last events at the end of time]. If it is not made public—at least for the time being—it is in order to prevent religious prophecy from being mistaken for a quest for the sensational (literally: 'for sensationalism'). But the things contained in this 'Third Secret' correspond to what has been announced in Scripture and has been said again and again in many other Marian apparitions, beginning with the Fatima apparitions in their known contents. Conversion and penitence are the essential conditions for 'salvation.'" [\[531\]](#)

Since Cardinal Ratzinger spoke of the “Novissimi” (the last events at the end of time), one might ask: Could these six themes of the Third Secret direct our attention to one or more of the ‘six signs’ of the last times, given by Christ Himself?

When Our Lord prophesied to His Apostles the destruction of Jerusalem (which occurred in 69 A.D. but also serves as a figure-type for the end of the world), He said, “These things which you see, the days will come in which there shall not be left a stone upon a stone that shall not be thrown down. And they asked him, saying: Master, when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign when they shall begin to come to pass? Who said: Take heed you be not seduced; for many will come in my name, saying, I am he; and the time is at hand: go ye not therefore after them. And when you shall hear of wars and seditions, be not terrified: these things must first come to pass; but the end is not yet presently. Then he said to them: Nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom. And there shall be great earthquakes in divers places, and pestilences, and famines, and terrors from heaven; and there shall be great signs.” [\[532\]](#) Those infallible words of Our Lord’s are the last six events of the end times.

Consider, then, the six themes found in Cardinal Ratzinger’s disclosure about the Third Secret’s contents:

1.) The Third Secret of Fatima adds “nothing different” to what derives from Divine Revelation (of which the two sources are Tradition and Scripture). Of course, this remark might be considered superfluous, because the Church cannot approve any apparition or locution as “worthy of belief” unless it is in perfect accord with Divine Revelation. However, if a Church-approved revelation adds “nothing” different from Revelation,” then it must be derived from either Tradition or Scripture , or both.

2.) The Third Secret is a “radical” (i.e., a drastic, profound, or extreme) call for conversion and penance. As the Church’s long history proves, whenever God chose to make such a “radical” call through His chosen prophets, that same call was always intended to be given to His people for their salvation. God's message to a prophet is never solely intended for the prophet alone.

For example, St. John the Evangelist was commanded by God, "What thou seest write in a book, and send to the seven churches..." [533] As we know, the beloved disciple also wrote what he heard in that same collection of writings, now known as the Apocalypse. This example again reminds us that Sr. Lucia herself said that the Third Secret is in the Gospel and the Apocalypse.

3.) The Third Secret refers to "the absolute importance of history," which the Church refers to as either "sacred history" or "salvation history." Sacred history centers on two things: The Incarnation of Christ, when Our Lord came to offer Redemption and Mercy to fallen mankind, and His Second Coming, when He will come as Just Judge. Sacred history records the unfolding of events, which depend on mankind's acceptance or rejection of God's Will.

4.) The Third Secret alerts the Church and the world "to the dangers threatening the Faith, the life of the Christian, and therefore the world." What "dangers" are seen in the Third Secret Vision that could simultaneously threaten the Faith, a Christian's life, and the entire world? As tragic as the Vision appears to be, the events in the "half-ruined city" (which might be Rome) cannot threaten the entire world—or can they? If so, then how so? The missing words of Our Lady are the only explanation for Cardinal Ratzinger's words in 1984. The omitted text of the Virgin's must be about the spiritual and material dangers of "the revolt," foretold by St. Paul, which he said must come first before "the man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition" (2 Thess. 2:3). Surely, then, the nature of these unknown threats revealed in the Third Secret Message is most grave, since Cardinal Ratzinger appeared to suggest their essence in the next point.

5.) The Third Secret relates "the importance of the Novissimi," a theological term with two "simultaneous" definitions: the four "last things" as they pertain to every human soul (death, judgment, heaven, hell) and "the last things" (meaning the last events at the end of time), in which all peoples will witness the Second Coming of Christ, the universal judgment, and the literal ending of the material world. The Novissimi could also pertain to the time immediately preceding Christ's Second Coming—the days of the great apostasy, which are then followed by the "son of perdition," the anti-Christ.

As Cardinal Ratzinger used the term in 1984, the Novissimi is not only about each soul's individual death, judgment, and final fate, for that would have no bearing on the importance of salvation history, or the "dangers threatening the Faith, the life of the Christian, and, therefore, the world."

6.) Although it could be mistaken for sensationalism, the Third Secret is a "religious prophecy corresponding to Scripture and confirmed by many other Marian apparitions," beginning with the Fatima revelations in their "known contents."

This last point is Cardinal Ratzinger's final affirmation that the Third Secret is in accord with Scripture (and also corresponds with Sr. Lucia's declaration, mentioned previously, that the Third Secret is in the Gospel and the Apocalypse)—but it is also confirmed as well by other "private" Marian revelations, starting with what is already publicly known of Fatima but was not then, in 1984, or later, in 2000, fully revealed. The Cardinal summarized these Church-approved apparitions by stating them in their most basic but essential message: "Conversion and penitence are the essential conditions for salvation."

One may reasonably ask: Where are seen those six themes in the Third Secret Vision, the only part of the Third Secret finally released 40 years after its final due date of 1960? Perhaps the fourth theme is represented, but the others are not. Cardinal Ratzinger's words in 1984 confirm that the Secret later revealed in June, 2000 was not the entire Third Secret. Again, the whole of Fatima is complete, from the first message to the Miracle of the Sun. It makes no sense to opine, as some do, that the Mother of God left the third part of the Great Secret unexplained and, as it were, hanging, while expecting the men of the Church to interpret only the Third Secret but not the first Two Secrets. As with the vision of hell, the Virgin must have stated more which completes both the opening sentence of the Third Secret Message, "In Portugal, the dogma of the Faith will always be preserved, etc." and the Third Secret Vision that opens with an angel and a flaming sword of justice. Let's again consider the description of the Third Secret Vision:

"...at the left of Our Lady and a little above, we saw an Angel with a flaming sword in his left hand; flashing, it gave out flames that looked as though they would set the world on fire; but they died out in contact with the splendour that Our Lady radiated towards him from her right hand: pointing to the earth with his right hand, the Angel cried out in a loud voice: 'Penance, Penance, Penance!'"

“And we saw in an immense light that is God: ‘something similar to how people appear in a mirror when they pass in front of it;’ a Bishop dressed in White ‘we had the impression that it was the Holy Father.’ Other Bishops, Priests, men and women Religious going up a steep mountain, at the top of which there was a big Cross of rough-hewn trunks as of a cork-tree with the bark; before reaching there the Holy Father passed through a big city half in ruins and half trembling with halting step, afflicted with pain and sorrow, he prayed for the souls of the corpses he met on his way; having reached the top of the mountain, on his knees at the foot of the big Cross he was killed by a group of soldiers who fired bullets and arrows at him, and in the same way there died one after another the other Bishops, Priests, men and women Religious, and various lay people of different ranks and positions. Beneath the two arms of the Cross there were two Angels each with a crystal aspersorium in his hand, in which they gathered up the blood of the Martyrs and with it sprinkled the souls that were making their way to God.”

Finally, of the relatively few Church-approved Marian revelations since the time of Fatima, it must be remembered that it was Cardinal Ratzinger who said that the two messages of Fatima and Akita (with its very serious subject matter, including warnings of an apocalyptic nature) “are essentially the same.” [\[534\]](#)

In considering all that he knows, it is no small wonder that Benedict XVI (who resigned from the papacy in 2013) said on May 13, 2010 (the 93rd anniversary of the first Fatima apparition): “We would be mistaken to think that Fatima’s prophetic mission is complete.” [\[535\]](#)

OUR LADY AND THE APOSTLES OF THE LATTER TIMES

“One must strive to maintain a strong spiritual life. If one lacks this, one lacks everything.”

–St. Vincent de Paul

The Church will soon observe the 100th anniversary of the 1917 Fatima apparitions, in what we hope shall be a wondrous and universal celebration commemorating the Triumph of Mary’s Immaculate Heart. The year 2029 (only fifteen years hence from the date of this book’s digital publication) will mark the centenary of the day the Virgin returned to say that the moment had come when the Lord God Himself asked the Holy Father to command and lead the consecration of Russia to the Virgin’s Immaculate Heart. Today, however, as the human race descends into a chaos unparalleled in world history, one wonders what the coming years will bring. Are these the times foretold by St. Louis de Montfort, the days which will bring forth “the apostles of the latter times”? [\[536\]](#)

Thirty years after Our Lady gave the Great Secret of Fatima, the Church canonized St. Louis Marie de Montfort, the apostle of “true devotion to Jesus through Mary.” [\[537\]](#) “The mainspring of his apostolic ministry,” as Pope Pius XII said at the canonization, “his great secret of attracting and giving souls to Jesus, was his devotion to Mary. All his activity was founded upon her, all his confidence rested in her. In opposition to the joyless austerity, melancholy, fear and depressing pride of Jansenism, he promoted the filial, trustful, ardent and expansive love-in-action of a slave of Mary.” [\[538\]](#)

St. Montfort, now a candidate to be recognized as a Doctor of the Church, authored True Devotion to Mary, The Secret of Mary, and The Secret of the Rosary. Even before his canonization, St. Montfort’s writings positively influenced three popes—Pope Leo XIII, Pope St. Pius X, and Pope Pius XII. In fact, Pope St. Pius X granted an Apostolic Blessing to all who read True Devotion to Mary, stating, “There is no surer or easier way than Mary in uniting all men in Christ.” [\[539\]](#)

Parallels: Our Lady of Fatima and St. Louis de Montfort

St. Louis de Montfort “knew that Mary is the pathway to her Son, leading souls quickly and securely to Jesus Christ, the Eternal Wisdom.”

[540] In a most striking parallel two hundred years after the saint's death, Our Lady herself said at Fatima, "Don't lose heart. I will never forsake you. My Immaculate Heart will be your refuge, and the path that leads you to God." [541]

Too, there are other interesting similarities in religious authorities' acceptance or resistance toward St. Montfort's mission and the later Fatima revelations (especially the third part of the Great Secret, the collegial consecration of Russia to the Immaculate Heart, and the papal promulgation of the Five First Saturday devotions in reparations for sins of blasphemy against the same Immaculate Heart). For example:

- Modernism, the greatest of all heresies, is the central obstruction to the Fatima Virgin's six requests—the particular cause explaining the resistance against the collegial consecration of Russia to her Immaculate Heart. Although the modernist heresy has been condemned by many popes (and vehemently so by Pope St. Pius X [542] over 100 years ago), there is still an overwhelming number of people in all states and ranks of life who have embraced it.

Similarly, St. Montfort's "greatest problem was the opposition he encountered from the propagators of the Jansenist heresy...Although Jansenism had been condemned by the Church twice even before St. Louis de Montfort's birth, its teachings continued to spread and to influence people for a century."

- At Fatima, Our Lady prophesied what would happen, dependent upon whether or not her requests were heeded. Ardent promoters and defenders of the whole truth of Fatima are pitted in a constant battle against detractors who either insist that ongoing historical events leading to the Third Secret "now seem a part of the past" [543] or who implicitly persecute Our Lady by casting various doubts upon the witness of Sr. Lucia (now Servant of God), the last Fatima visionary, who died in 2005.

Likewise, St. Montfort during his lifetime was "at once persecuted and venerated everywhere," [544] because his "preaching, his writing and his conversation were all impregnated with prophecy and with anticipations of the later ages of the Church." [545]

- Finally, there exists overwhelming evidence that the Third Secret of Fatima is not yet "fully" released. [546] While the Third Secret Vision may now be known (but obfuscated with various interpretations, with none of them binding on the faithful), its accompanying Message, which explains the Vision, remains buried by Vatican officials who still refuse to obey the Mother of God.

In a similar fashion, St. Montfort prophesied about his treatise, True Devotion to Mary, “I clearly foresee that raging brutes will come in fury to tear with their diabolical teeth this little writing and him whom the Holy Ghost has made use of to write it; or at least to envelop it in the silence of a coffer, in order that it may not appear.” [\[547\]](#)

“This prediction was fulfilled to the letter,” explains one of four introductions and prefaces to True Devotion. “Throughout the whole 18th century, the spiritual sons of St. Louis de Montfort were persecuted by the Jansenists for their zeal in spreading this devotion; the precious manuscript of de Montfort remained hidden during the troubled times of the French Revolution and was brought to light only in 1842, when it was found in a chest of old books by a Montfort Father.” [\[548\]](#)

For the reasons stated above, it may be no coincidence that only 13 years after St. Montfort’s canonization, the Bishop of Leiria, Msgr. Joao Venancio, blessed and installed a statue of the saint on October 13, 1960 (the 43rd anniversary of the Miracle of the Sun). This statue “now stands above the colonnade of the [original Fatima] basilica,” commemorating the bishop’s appeal to his brother bishops throughout the world, “inviting them to organize days of prayer and penance on October 12 and 13, in union with the pilgrims to the Cova da Iria, in a spirit of reparation and consecration to the Holy Hearts of Jesus and Mary.” [\[549\]](#)

Mary Forms the Great Saints of the Consummation

In concluding this brief introduction to St. Louis Marie de Montfort, it would be impossible to fully cover his emphasis and devotion to the Incarnation of Christ (which is also the first Rosary mystery, the Annunciation) or his explanations as to why the Virgin Mary is necessary to God’s plan for the salvation of souls. What follows, then, is an “overview” of sorts, illustrating key points of what St. Montfort taught about Our Lady and her “apostles of the latter times” in his book, True Devotion to Mary:

•“It was only through Mary that God the Father gave His only-begotten Son to the world...The world was unworthy, says St. Augustine, to receive the Son of God directly from the Father’s hands. He gave Him to Mary in order that the world might receive Him through her.” [\[550\]](#)

Explaining the action and conduct of each Divine Person of the Holy Trinity toward Mary in regard to the Incarnation and the first coming of Jesus Christ, the saint wrote, “They still pursue [it] daily, in an invisible manner, throughout the whole Church, and They will pursue it even to the consummation of ages in the last coming of Christ.” [551]

- “Mary has produced, together with the Holy Ghost, the greatest thing which has been or ever will be—a God-Man; and she will consequently produce the greatest saints that there will be in time. The formation and the education of the great saints who shall come at the end of the world are reserved for her.” [552]

- “It is Mary alone who has found grace before God (Lk. 1:3) without the aid of any other mere creature; it is only through her that all those who have since found grace before God have found it at all, and it is only through her that all those who shall come afterward shall find it.” [553] (Here we might observe that St. Bernard said something similar, explaining that when the angel greeted Mary at the Incarnation, he said “thou hast found grace with God,” meaning she who was previously addressed as “full of grace” had also found grace for the conversion of sinners.) [554]

- “It was through Mary that the salvation of the world was begun, and it is through Mary that it must be consummated. Mary hardly appeared at all in the first coming of Jesus Christ, in order that men, as yet but little instructed and enlightened on the Person of her Son, should not remove themselves from Him in attaching themselves too strongly and too grossly to her...But in the Second Coming of Jesus Christ, Mary has to be made known and revealed by the Holy Ghost in order that, through her, Jesus Christ may be known, loved and served. The reasons which moved the Holy Ghost to hide His spouse during her life, and to reveal her but very little since the preaching of the Gospel, exist no longer.” [555]

- “Being the way by which Jesus came to us the first time, she will also be the way by which He will come the second time, though not in the same manner.” (This anticipated era before Our Lord’s Second Coming is one which many call “The Age of Mary.”) [556]

- “Mary must shine forth more than ever in mercy, in might and in grace, in these latter times: in mercy, to bring back and lovingly receive the poor strayed sinners who shall be converted and shall return to the Catholic Church; in might, against the enemies of God, idolaters, schismatics, Mahometans, Jews and souls hardened in impiety, who shall rise in terrible revolt against God to seduce all those who shall oppose them and to make them fall by promises and threats; and finally, she must shine forth in grace, in order to animate and sustain the valiant soldiers and faithful servants of Jesus Christ, who shall battle for His interests.” [557]

- “And lastly, Mary must be terrible to the devil and his crew, as an army arranged in battle, principally in these latter times, because the devil, knowing that he has but little time, and now less than ever, to destroy souls, will every day redouble his efforts and his combats. He will presently raise up cruel persecutions and will put terrible snares before the faithful servants and true children of Mary, whom it gives him more trouble to conquer than it does to conquer others.” [558]

- “But the power of Mary over all the devils will especially shine forth in the latter times, when Satan will lay his snares against her heel; that is to say, her humble slaves and her poor children, whom she will raise up to make war against him. They shall be little and poor in the world’s esteem, and abased before all like the heel, trodden underfoot and persecuted as the heel is by the other members of the body. But in return for this, they shall be rich in the grace of God, which Mary shall distribute to them abundantly. They shall be great and exalted before God in sanctity, superior to all other creatures by their lively zeal, and so well sustained with God’s assistance that, with the humility of their heel, in union with Mary, they shall crush the head of the devil and cause Jesus Christ to triumph.” [559]

- “In a word, God wishes that His holy Mother should be at present more known, more loved, more honored than she has ever been. This, no doubt, will take place if the predestinate enter, with the grace and light of the Holy Ghost, into the interior and perfect practice which I will disclose to them shortly. Then they will see clearly, as far as faith allows, that beautiful Star of the Sea. They will arrive happily in harbor, following its guidance, in spite of the tempests and the pirates....they will have recourse to her in all things, as to their dear advocate and Mediatrix with Jesus Christ. They will know what is the surest, the easiest, the shortest and the most perfect means of going to Jesus Christ; and they will give themselves to Mary, body and soul, without reserve, that they may thus belong entirely to Jesus Christ.”

- “But who shall those servants, slaves, and children of Mary be?

They shall be the ministers of the Lord who, like a burning fire, shall kindle the fire of divine love everywhere. They shall be ‘like sharp arrows in the hand of the powerful’ Mary to pierce her enemies. (Ps. 126:4)” and closely adhering to God (1 Cor. 6:17), who shall carry the gold of love in their heart, the incense of prayer in their spirit, and the myrrh of mortification in their body. They shall be everywhere the good odor of Jesus Christ to the poor and to the little, while at the same time, they shall be an odor of death to the great, to the rich and to the proud worldlings.”

“They shall be sons of Levi, well-purified by the fire of great tribulation,

“They shall be clouds thundering and flying through the air at the least breath of the Holy Ghost; who, detaching themselves from everything and troubling themselves about nothing, shall shower forth the rain of the Word of God and of life eternal. They shall thunder against sin; they shall storm against the world; they shall strike the devil and his crew; and they shall pierce through and through, for life or for death, with their two-edged sword of the Word of God (Eph. 6:17), all those to whom they shall be sent on the part of the most High.”

• “They shall be the true apostles of the latter times, to whom the Lord of Hosts shall give the word and the might to work marvels and to carry off with glory the spoils of His enemies. They shall sleep without gold or silver and, what is more, without care, in the midst of the other priests, ecclesiastics, and clerics (Ps. 67:14); and yet they shall have the silvered wings of the dove to go, with the pure intention of the glory of God and the salvation of souls, wheresoever the Holy Ghost shall call them. Nor shall they leave behind them, in the places where they have preached, anything but the gold of charity, which is the fulfillment of the whole law. (Rom. 13:10)”

“In a word, we know that they shall be true disciples of Jesus Christ, walking in the footsteps of His poverty, humility, contempt of the world, charity; teaching the narrow way of God in pure truth according to the Holy Gospel, and not according to the maxims of the world; troubling themselves about nothing; not accepting persons; sparing, fearing and listening to no mortal, however influential he may be...”

“These are the great men who are to come; but Mary is the one who, by order of the Most High, shall fashion them for the purpose of extending His empire over that of the impious, the idolaters and the Mahometans. But when and how shall this be? God alone knows.”

And so we pray and sacrifice for the triumph of the Immaculate Heart via the obedience of the Pope, the bishops, and the laity to the Virgin’s requests at Fatima. With St. Louis Marie de Montfort, we too can say, “As for us, we have but to hold our tongues, to pray, to sigh, and to wait: ‘With expectation I have waited.’ (Ps. 39:2)” [\[560\]](#)

PART 15

Fatima's Foremost Request

“Make it known to the Holy Father that I am always awaiting the Consecration of Russia to My Immaculate Heart. Without the Consecration, Russia will not be able to convert, nor will the world have peace.”

–Our Lady of Fatima to Sr. Lucia, May, 1952

October 13, 2017 will mark the 100th anniversary of the Miracle of the Sun at Fatima, the most-well known of all true Marian apparitions of the Modern Age. In August, 2013, most Catholics heard that on October 13, 2013, the 96th anniversary of the Miracle, Pope Francis would repeat the consecration of the world (but not Russia, specifically) to the Immaculate Heart of Mary. That news brought forth a world-wide flurry of wasted commentary because, ultimately, Pope Francis neither consecrated the world nor Russia. Rather, his words of “entrustment” indicated that he (and perhaps those present who wished to unite themselves with him) offered a prayer of appeal to the “Blessed Virgin Mary of Fatima,” which, while laudatory, is not the required response to the Holy Mother’s consistent request for a collegial act of solemn consecration of Russia to her under the specific title, “Immaculate Heart of Mary.”

As mentioned above, it began on August 13, 2013 when the Fatima Sanctuary’s official website published the following announcement, which again was erroneously translated because the word “consecration” did not appear in the original Portuguese: “In response to the desire of Holy Father Francis, the Statue of Our Lady of the Rosary of Fatima, venerated in the Little Chapel of Apparitions, will be brought to Rome on October 12/13 to be present at the Marian Day promoted by the Pontifical Council for the Promotion of the New Evangelization. On October 13, next to the Statue of Our Lady, Pope Francis will make the consecration of the world to the Immaculate Heart of Mary.”

“[The] Marian Day is one of the great pontifical events marked down on the calendar of celebrations of the Year of Faith which will bring to Rome hundreds of movements and institutions connoted with Marian devotion.”

“In a letter addressed to Bishop Antonio Marto, of Leiria-Fatima, the President of the Pontifical Council for the Promotion of the New Evangelization, [Archbishop] Rino Fisichella, informs that ‘all ecclesial entities of Marian spirituality' are invited to take part in this Marian day, a gathering which includes, on the 12th, a pilgrimage to the tomb of Apostle St. Peter and other moments of prayer and meditation and, on the 13th, a Mass presided over by Pope Francis, in St. Peter's Square."

"In that letter, [Archbishop] Fisichella wrote: 'The Holy Father strongly desires that the Marian Day may have present, as a special sign, one of the most significant Marian icons for Christians throughout the world and, for that reason, we thought of the beloved original Statue of Our Lady of Fatima.'"

"Therefore, the Statue of Our Lady will depart from the Shrine of Fatima on the morning of October 12 and return on the afternoon of October 13. Scheduled to take its place in the Little Chapel of Apparitions is the first Pilgrim Statue of Our Lady of Fatima, which is enthroned in the Basilica of Our Lady of the Rosary since December 8, 2003." [\[561\]](#)

On the internet, online news sources repeated the report above, and the inquiries and comments immediately began. One question that consistently arose was similar to the following: "But what about Russia? The world has already been consecrated to the Immaculate Heart of Mary, but Our Lady specifically said Russia." The second was: "What about the bishops? Are they going to join in the consecration? Will any of them tell the Pope that it is Russia they together must solemnly consecrate?"

For example, one comment to a news article stated: "Pope Francis' consecration of the world to the Immaculate Heart of Mary in October, is another repetition of the consecrations of the world to the Immaculate Heart of Mary, made by John Paul II in 1982, 1984 and again in 2000. If these previous acts of consecration of the WORLD met the requirements of heaven to consecrate RUSSIA, where is the promised Triumph of Mary and WORLD PEACE? It is outrageous to suggest that heaven accepted the acts of consecration by John Paul II as valid, but God then failed to fulfill the promises attached to a valid act of consecration. If Our Lady desired the CONSECRATION OF THE WORLD, WHY DID SHE ASK FOR THE CONSECRATION OF RUSSIA? Surely, the Mother of God knows the difference between the two? Why the disconnect between heaven's request and the response of the Popes? And, since the previous consecrations of the world didn't produce the promises attached to a valid consecration of Russia, why is this one going to be any different?" [\[562\]](#)

These questions are just and reasonable. Both Pope Pius XI (in 1930 and again in 1937) and Pius XII (in April 1940) learned through Sr. Lucia of the Virgin's specific requests. In those ten years, she was met with silence, so that her superior, Bishop de Silva, suggested that she change the conditions to consecrating the world, with a special mention of Russia. Although she resisted the concept, she eventually mentioned it but made it clear that it was the bishop's idea and not Our Lady's request.

On October 31, 1942, "the Church and the peoples of the world" were consecrated to the Immaculate Heart of Mary in a "Radio Address" by Pope Pius XII. A decade later, in his Apostolic Letter to the Peoples of Russia (July 7, 1952), he wrote that "just as a few years ago, We consecrated the entire human race to the Immaculate Heart of the Virgin Mary, Mother of God, so today We consecrate and in a most special manner We entrust all the peoples of Russia to this Immaculate Heart," etc. It's clearly evident that neither a radio address nor an apostolic letter is a solemn and public act of consecration, much less a collegial one.

Pope Pius XII's 1942 consecration of the Church and the peoples of the world (which occurred near the height of World War II) shortened what Our Lord called "the current distress" (the war), but it did not bring about the promised conversion of Russia, which is exactly what Christ had forewarned Lucia would occur since the Pope did not do exactly as he was asked. WWII ended three years later—which makes one wonder how much longer it would have lasted without the benefit of the uncalled-for consecration of the world, or how much faster the war would have ended, not to mention how quickly Russia's conversion and the world-wide era of peace would have commenced – if only the Pope and bishops followed Our Lady's very simple "request" to consecrate Russia to her Immaculate Heart. Instead, three more years passed before WWII's terrible conclusion, during which time millions had died in service, in battles on ground, ship, or plane, and in blitzes on civilian cities, and by atrocities in concentration camps. Finally—lest we forget—WWII only came to an end with not one but two atomic bombs on civilians in Hiroshima and Nagasaki, Japan.

As would be later reported by Il Pellegrinaggio Della Meravigle in Rome, 1960, published under the auspices of the Italian episcopate, two months before Pius XII made the July 1952 "consecration," Our Lady appeared to Sr. Lucia, saying, "Make it known to the Holy Father that I am always awaiting the Consecration of Russia to My Immaculate Heart. Without the Consecration, Russia will not be able to convert, nor will the world have peace.” The report also affirms that this message was communicated to Pope Pius XII in June but, for reasons never understood, he chose not to heed it. Seven years after this report became public, in 1967, Canon Barthas mentioned the May, 1952 apparition in his communication (De Primoridiis cultus mariana, Acta congressus mariologici-mariana in Lusitania anno 1967 celebrati, p. 517) to the Mariological Congress of Lisbon-Fatima.

The sufferings of the 1930’s, World War II and all following wars, the contagion of the modernist heresy, the spread of false religious sects, the persecution of Christians, the immoral culture in which we are now forced to live and from which we all suffer, the increasing family dissensions and the sorrows that come with them, and so much more, could have been avoided if only Pope Pius XI or Pope Pius XII had done exactly what the Virgin asked in 1929.

Those Popes are not alone. Other Popes followed suit, making solitary acts of consecration (or entrustment) of the world (but never Russia) to the Immaculate Heart of Mary and without the participation of the world’s bishops. None of those deeds were what the Virgin asked of a Pope, and so the ultimate grace of Russia’s conversion and a world-wide era of peace have not yet been granted.

Tragically, the October 13, 2013 papal act did not even consecrate the world, as news sources around the globe had earlier announced. That which was done by Pope Francis was again not the fulfillment of Our Lady’s repeated requests that the Pope and the bishops solemnly consecrate Russia to her Immaculate Heart. In fact, it was even less. It was a kind of “entrustment,” but it was not a consecration, which is an act of blessing a person (as when a priest is consecrated as a bishop), place (like a church), or thing (like an altar and its vessels) because it will be set aside for a sacred purpose in the service and worship of God. That said, Vatican Radio posted the text of Pope Francis’ 2013 entrustment, which is translated as follows:

“Blessed Virgin Mary of Fatima, with renewed gratitude for Your maternal presence we unite our voice with that of all the generations who call You blessed.”

“We celebrate in You the great works of God, Who never tires to incline with mercy on humanity, afflicted by evil and wounded by sin, to heal it and save it.”

“Accept with the compassion of a Mother the act of entrustment which today we make with confidence, before this Your image to us so dear.”

“We are certain that each one of us is precious to Your eyes and that nothing which dwells in our hearts is unknown to You.”

“Let us reach Your sweet gaze and receive the consoling caress of Your smile. Guard our life in Your arms: bless and strengthen every good desire; revive and foster faith; sustain and illumine hope; create and enliven charity; guide all of us in the path of holiness.”

“Teach us Your same preferential love for the small and the poor, for the excluded and the suffering, for sinners and the lost: gather all under Your protection and give all of us to Your beloved Son, Our Lord Jesus. Amen.”

[\[563\]](#)

As one can see by the words above, not once was the title “Immaculate Heart” or the word for world (“mundo”) expressed by the Pope. The “act of entrustment” was a personal one and had nothing to do with the Virgin’s requests at Fatima, other than the selected date of October 13 and the transportation of the Pilgrim Virgin statue. Thousands had flocked to Fatima on that day, happy and ecstatic in expecting, at the least, a renewal of previous world consecrations made by previous popes. Even that did not happen. Simply stated, Our Lady of Fatima has waited almost 100 years for the Vicar of Christ to heed her requests for the following:

- Worldwide devotion to the Immaculate Heart of Mary.
- Papal promulgation of the Five First Saturdays of Reparation for the five major blasphemies committed against the Virgin’s Immaculate Heart.
- The public dissemination of the Third Secret Text.
- The solemn and public collegial consecration of Russia (and Russia alone) to the Immaculate Heart of Mary.

Individual Catholics can and do respond to the other requests made by the Blessed Mother at Fatima (daily Rosary, daily duty offered in penance, making sacrifices for the conversion of sinners, the wearing of the Brown Scapular, conscientiously striving not to offend the Lord our God any longer, and taking part in First Saturday devotions where they might be offered, or otherwise privately making the intention of reparation to the Immaculate Heart of Mary at a Saturday Mass when the intention is not publicly stated by the priest; the requirements include Confession, Holy Mass, Rosary, and 15 additional minutes on the 15 Rosary Mysteries of the Redemption).

However, only a Pope can take action to fulfill the other requests of the Virgin. Only a Pope can command and lead the bishops to join him in a solemn, public act of consecration of Russia to Our Lady's most pure Heart. Only a Pope can universally promote the Five First Saturday devotions, and now (at this point in history, since in 1957 the Vatican ordered Lucia's bishop, who was entrusted to release the Third Secret in 1960, to send it and all other Fatima documents to Rome) only a Pope can ensure that the Third Secret Text is fully released to the entire world.

Red Herrings:
Flotsam and Jetsam
in the Mainstream

In response to inquiries about the collegial consecration of Russia, the usual red herring remarks arose like flotsam and jetsam swirling through the Catholic mainstream's news, blog articles, and commentary. What is most curious is the amount of time devoted and the consistent hardline resistance made by those who, in one way or the other, employ the most unreasonable pretexts to summarily reject the Virgin's specific requests.

Despite the facts of history and the mounds of documentation (spanning from 1917 to the present), critics who are provided with all the proofs which objectively counter their erroneous claims decide to ignore them, instead choosing to refute the facts with ad hominem attacks. Those who are familiar with and keep abreast of the ongoing debate over the collegial consecration of Russia to the Immaculate Heart can easily anticipate the usual red herrings:

- "The Pope [meaning John Paul II] said he did it." (Actually, Pope John Paul II never made such a statement. Others tried to imply it, but he himself never said it. Furthermore, this same claim that only John Paul II's actions matter implicitly deems as irrelevant the world consecrations to the Immaculate Heart made by Pope Pius XII and Paul VI.)

- "You're disobedient to the Pope!" (That is a judgmental conclusion concerning the state of another's soul, which Christ Himself forbade. One usually finds that this accusation is an ad hominem tactic used by those who do not know the entire history regarding the Fatima apparitions and aren't interested in learning it, but still wish to debate its most important points. Too, such critics are otherwise quick to claim "thou shalt not judge" when discussing Catholic moral issues with which they disagree. Their stance also shows a tragic ignorance of the Church's defined dogma on papal infallibility. And again, no pope ever stated that he fulfilled the Virgin's requests.)

- “This is the stuff of conspiracy theorists (or malcontents).” (This is a negative emotional response. The consecration discussion is usually divided between those who can objectively—that is, impartially, fairly, neutrally—examine facts and those who allow their emotions to rule over their reason. Furthermore, faithful Catholics will never disregard the words of the Mother of God uttered in apparitions which the Church approved as worthy of belief, or the accolades of many Popes for Our Lady of Fatima, or the words of Lucia who, both as a child and as a cloistered nun, proved herself a faithful witness.)

- “Lucia said it was done.” (Also not true; the claim contradicts decades of her testimony, including her remarks made before and after the consecrations of the 1980’s. Furthermore, Lucia was commanded to absolute silence from 1958 (after her revealing interview with Fr. Fuentes) until her death on February 13, 2005. She was not allowed to have visitors without the Pope’s explicit permission. Even her confessor was halted from seeing her. If all was done as Our Lady of Fatima requested, there was no need to keep Sr. Lucia smothered by such an extreme command of silence or required permission for visitors, anymore than that which was included in the Rule of the Carmelites. Like those who dared to put words in Pope John Paul II’s mouth, others have made false claims on Lucia’s behalf.

“I’m convinced that Sister Lucia continued to have conversations, or whatever you want to call them: apparitions, visions, inner locutions, with Our Lady. She had them for decades, all through the eighties and beyond,” states Cardinal Bertone in his book, Last Secret of Fatima, published in 2008. One can reasonably ask: If everything was done with Pope John Paul II’s consecrations and entrustments, then why did Heaven continue to communicate with Lucia all through the 1980’s and beyond? Furthermore, Cardinal Bertone said, “During our meetings, she referred to a whole sequence of dates between 1985 and 1989.”[\[564\]](#)

A whole sequence is a chain or succession of events, which apparently for Sr. Lucia began anew in 1985, the year following the March 1984 consecration of the world but a year before the 1986 pan-religious Assisi, Italy event. This particular sequence continued for at least four years, but it should be kept in mind that the Cardinal also said Lucia had messages “beyond” this time. First consider that it was immediately after publicly reciting the text prepared for the 1984 consecration that Pope John Paul II spontaneously added a revealing sentence, saying, “Enlighten especially the peoples whose consecration and entrustment by us you are still awaiting.” Within the following year, John Paul II, waiting for the era of peace to arrive due to his previous acts, decided he needed to do something more. That conclusion resulted in his arrangement and participation of the 1986 Assisi pan-religious, “ecumenical” prayer meetings with world leaders of false religions, which scandalized many in Rome and elsewhere in the Church. Although Bertone claimed that Lucia revealed she had a “whole sequence” of heavenly apparitions and/or locutions between 1985 and 1989, he soon followed it with a curious remark that Lucia was “evasive about her continuing conversations with Mary, and she would change the subject whenever it was brought up.” This, of course, makes little sense, but Cardinal Bertone has previously shown himself confused about many things regarding the Third Secret and the need for the collegial consecration of Russia to the Virgin’s Immaculate Heart.)

- “Russia is included in the world, so to insist that Russia must be specifically mentioned is hair-splitting.” (Russia is part of the world, but the world is not a part of Russia, and Russia alone is the nation to be consecrated.)

- “The era of peace is on its way because John Paul II did what he could; we just have to do our part” or “Russia is converting; see how it is trying to instill Christian values?” (Sadly, perhaps even blasphemously, this view makes a liar of the Virgin, the Queen of Prophets. She was quite clear about the specific conditions that would fulfill her promise of Russia’s conversion to the Roman Catholic Faith, ushering in the era of peace and the triumph of her Immaculate Heart.)

- “Fatima is a private revelation so we aren’t obligated to believe in it or act on the requests.” (Incorrect, on many counts, and which this book covers elsewhere. However, a few points shall here be mentioned: First, we have to consider the comments of popes about Fatima, from Pius XII, “The time for doubting Fatima is past; it is time to take action” to John Paul II’s “Fatima places an obligation on the Church” to Benedict XVI’s stunning 2010 remark that Fatima’s prophetic mission is not complete. Second, six popes have publicly recognized Fatima, with two of them, Pope John Paul II and Pope Benedict XVI, traveling there in public homage to the Mother of God. Furthermore, Fatima’s “prophetic mission,” as Benedict XVI called it, warns of the commencement of certain apocalyptic chapters, but it also offers a specific remedy with particular directions to the Church hierarchy to save the visible Church and therefore save even more souls in the world.)

The two most recent “short baits” added to the bucket of red herrings are rather incorrigible assertions against the Virgin’s words that the collegial consecration of Russia will bring about that nation’s conversion and an era of peace for the world. The first absurdity claims that to believe a collegial consecration of Russia can do “all that” is akin to believing in magic (“Abracadabra and Hocus Pocus! Whoosh, now Russia is converted!” as one commentator phrased it) and second, Russia never asked any pope for any such consecration, which invalidates the Virgin’s request.

Conspicuously missing are similar remarks about “magic” or “invalidity” when a Pope decides to consecrate the world to Mary’s Immaculate Heart. Why, then, are they made when given the reminder of Our Lady’s request that Russia is to be consecrated by the Pope and the bishops?

For example, what is conveniently (and consistently) overlooked (even when reminded) are decades of evidence proving Our Lady’s insistence that her requests are heeded. In fact, one notes a “heavenly determination” from both Christ and the Virgin regarding the collegial consecration of Russia to the Immaculate Heart. Of all the requests, the collegial consecration of Russia is one which Heaven kept repeating.

What is also ignored is that which was mentioned above—the late Pope John Paul II’s remark that “Fatima places an obligation on the Church” and the revelation made in May 2010 by Benedict XVI, now Bishop Emeritus of Rome: “We would be mistaken to think that Fatima’s prophetic mission is complete.” [\[565\]](#) And while there are superfluous claims that Sr. Lucia said the world consecrations fulfill Our Lady’s request (another untruth), what is never acknowledged are Sr. Lucia’s frequent remarks about the “diabolical disorientation” afflicting the world, including those within the Church. In a word, presented facts are ignored because, as St. Thomas Aquinas said, “Against a fact, there is no argument.”

The Meaning of Consecration

For the purposes of this section, I will not set out to prove that Fatima does not fall into the realm of private revelation but is a fulfillment of Divine Revelation and so it is what some describe as a prophetic and public revelation. Again, that topic was previously covered in this book. Nor shall I here respond in-depth to any of previous red herrings since many other objective authors have previously done so. Instead, let’s briefly look at the last two counter-claims that insist that any belief in swift and positive results from the requested consecration is akin to believing in magic, and that Our Lady's request regarding Russia cannot be valid because Russia has not asked for that honor.

Unfortunately, those who contribute such bizarre commentary against the facts that the Virgin's insistence on the collegial consecration of Russia to her Immaculate Heart remain unfulfilled clearly do not understand that Christ is King and Mary is Queen and that both have dominion over the Church and the world. They do not grasp that a reigning Pope is the Vicar of Christ, the Steward of the Church, which is God's kingdom on earth, and that the Catholic bishops are princes of the same Church. Since Mary is Queen, and not only a Queen Mother (which would mean, at least in the earthly sense, that hers is only an honorary title with no real authority), she has the right to make requests of her Son's Steward and princes, and she has the right to expect their obedience.

It therefore follows that objectors to the collegial consecration of Russia cannot grasp the four following issues regarding the Virgin's requests: 1) The Virgin's office in salvation and her right to ask for devotion to her Immaculate Heart (which includes understanding the depths of that title and all else that such devotion implies), 2) the nature, duty, authority, jurisdiction, and scope of the Pope's leadership as Christ's Steward on earth; and 3) the duty and authority of the bishops who are joined in union with the Pope and subject to him, and 4) the Catholic definition of the word "consecration." In a brief response to these four points:

1) "Jesus is King of the Eternal Ages by nature and by right of conquest; through Him, with Him, and subordinate to Him, Mary is Queen by grace, by divine relationship, by right of conquest and by singular election. And her kingdom is as vast as that of her Son and God, since nothing is excluded from her dominion." [566] (These two topics—Jesus as King, Mary as Queen—are included later in this book.)

2) A reigning Pope possesses supreme authority (because only God possesses absolute authority). "Not only did Christ constitute St. Peter head of the Church but in the words 'Whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth, it shall be bound also in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth, it shall be loosed in heaven,' He indicated the scope of this leadership." [567] Furthermore, "The Church is a perfect society. She is not dependent on the permission of the State for her existence, but holds her charter from God. As a perfect society, she has a right to all those means which are necessary for the attaining of her end." [568]

The Church has the right to exist because Jesus Christ, Lord and Savior, founded her. What is the purpose of the Church? To save souls. Therefore to protect herself, her children, and those in the world who may yet be spiritually saved, the Church has the duty and the corresponding right to obey the Virgin of Fatima and consecrate Russia to the Immaculate Heart of Mary, without asking anyone's permission. This, of course, always applies to the reigning Pope, who has the duty and its corresponding right to order the world's bishops to join him in the necessary act of consecration without asking for either their consent or Russia's. After all, the few previous popes who made solitary attempts to consecrate the world did not ask for the approval of every nation in the world.

3) "Bishop is the title of an ecclesiastical dignitary who possesses the fullness of the priesthood to rule a diocese as its chief pastor, in due submission to the primacy of the pope." [569] The Pope, as Bishop of Rome, is not only "first among the bishops" in the sense of being the eldest brother, but he is the supreme head of the Church; the Supreme Pontiff, the Vicar of Christ, the monarch of Our Lord's kingdom on earth. Heaven wants every bishop, from the Pope in Rome to the bishop of the most humble diocese, to participate in a literally universal (which in Greek means Catholic) act so that the entire world will know of it. When a Pope finally commands the world's Catholic bishops to join him in the "collegial" consecration of Russia to the Immaculate Heart, the bishops must obey him, just as he, as Steward, will be obeying the command of God, given through the Queen through her chosen messenger, Sr. Lucia. Should some bishops choose not to obey the Holy Father, the fault will be theirs, but not the Pope's. Despite the chance of such disobedience, the Supreme Pontiff still must carry through with the bishops who yet submit to him and, together with them, undertake the solemn and public consecration of Russia to the Virgin's Immaculate Heart.

4) The word "consecration" literally means "to associate with the sacred." The Catholic Encyclopedia explains: "Consecration, in general, is an act by which a thing is separated from a common and profane to a sacred use, or by which a person or thing is dedicated to the service and worship of God by prayers, rites, and ceremonies." [570] Any nation that is thus consecrated by the Pope and the world's bishops to the Virgin's Immaculate Heart should humbly consider itself as highly favored to be placed under the Mother of God's protection and intercession before the Most Holy Trinity.

Finally and to repeat: Among all of Our Lady's requests, it is clear that a Pope who commands and leads the collegial consecration of Russia is the most imperative act. It cannot be foreseen which will come first—the collegial consecration, exactly as Our Lady requested it, or the fulfilment of her other requests (the public release of the entire Third Secret, meaning the words of Our Lady that accompanied it; worldwide devotion to her Immaculate Heart; the Five First Saturdays of Reparation, etc.). That said, it is reasonable to conclude that the consecration must come first for the rest to follow, including Russia's conversion to the Roman Catholic Faith and the promised era of universal peace.

What we do know with certainty is that both Christ and the Virgin many times repeated the necessity of the consecration of Russia by the Pope and the world's bishops. Such insistence on the part of God and His Holy Mother makes it clear that the consecration is Heaven's foremost request. As Our Lord said in 1931 to Sr. Lucia (and through her, to us), “Pray much for the Holy Father. He will do it, but it will be late. Nevertheless, the Immaculate Heart of Mary will save Russia. It has been entrusted to her.”

THE WOMAN AND THE BATTLE OF THE LATTER DAYS

“For those who believe in God, no explanation is necessary.
For those who do not believe in God,
no explanation will suffice.”

Now and in the days ahead, the Church Militant must not place its faith in mere human means to restore the Church. “Modern times are dominated by Satan and will be more so in the future,” said St. Maximilian Kolbe. “The conflict with hell cannot be engaged by men, even the most clever. The Immaculate alone has from God the promise of victory over Satan.” [\[571\]](#)

Those words echo the revelations of the Queen of Heaven, who came to Fatima, revealing in essence that Christ reserves to her the final triumph in the battle of the latter days. In that combat, all that the children of Mary need do is heed the requests of Our Lady—it is as simple as that.

To quote the character of Lord Elrond in The Fellowship of the Ring, “This quest may be attempted by the weak with as much hope as the strong. Yet such is oft the course of deeds that move the wheels of the world; small hands do them because they must, while the eyes of the great are elsewhere.” [\[572\]](#)

Two Handmaidens to Sanctity

When events and circumstances leave us feeling helpless, we may find ourselves saying, “There is nothing I can do but pray,” momentarily forgetting that prayer and sacrifice are the lot of the elect. Prayer and sacrifice are the two spiritual handmaidens to sanctity; they are always the conditions required by God Himself to obtain favors.

Our Lord foresaw that, for the faithful of the Modern Age, daily life would become burdensome. Throughout our sacred history, it is always the same story—an age of increased sin, affecting not only the sinner but everyone. The difference between our age and former times is that mortal sin is prevalent, officially endorsed by almost all governments and, tragically, encouraged and committed even by those within the Church.

Our Blessed Mother’s constant intercession for this sinful age is the reason Heaven made clear that the prayer of our times must be the Rosary. It seems nothing can stop the madness, for the Church’s human element is infiltrated with the sins of modernism—and that reality explains why Our Lord said that life as a faithful Catholic would be our true penance.

When on a great scale mankind abandons God and tempts Him to turn His face from us, Our Lady’s continual intercession is the last means to save souls; that is the reason why God wishes to establish devotion to the Immaculate Heart. When we are tempted to think we have nowhere to go for help, we cannot forget Our Lady of Fatima’s consoling words, “My Immaculate Heart will be your refuge, and the path that leads you to God.”

Our Mother, Mediatrix, and Queen

Numerous are the battlefronts in the great spiritual war of the latter days. The world news worsens with tragic reports—martyrdoms of the faithful, scandals, murders, terrible accidents, thefts, and increasing revolts against the Church and the Holy Father. Too, the number of “natural” cataclysms like earthquakes, floods, and volcanic eruptions seem to be rising.

The faithful may continue to fight the good fight, declaring their outrage against the persecutions of their fellows, signing petitions, writing letters of protest against all kinds of scandals, joining marches in defense of morality, and engaging those who ardently resist the Tridentine Rite’s restoration in every parish and diocese. Still, despite our best efforts, we must admit that, as Pope Pius IX once declared, “up till now reasonable demands and repeated protests have availed nothing to remove these evils.” [\[573\]](#)

Our Lady also wants conversions, which includes advancement in the interior life of the soul. The Rosary prayers and the sacrifices of the faithful have not yet been enough to bring worldwide devotion to the Immaculate Heart. Only that devotion, with the collegial consecration of Russia to the same Pure Heart, will bring the era of peace to all mankind and the conversion of Russia, who has spread her errors throughout the world.

Our own efforts are not enough, perhaps due not only to our lack in numbers but also to our lack of confidence. As Our Lady said at Akita, “Those who place their confidence in me will be saved.” [\[574\]](#) Why?

She is Our Mother and Mediatrix: “With a heart that is truly a mother's does she approach the problem of our salvation,” wrote Blessed Pope Pius IX, “and is solicitous for the whole human race; made Queen of heaven and earth by the Lord...standing at the right hand of her only Son, Jesus Christ Our Lord, she intercedes powerfully for us with a mother's prayers, obtains what she seeks, and cannot be refused.” [\[575\]](#)

She loves us and desires our salvation: As Pope St. Leo declared, “It has been her unremitting concern to see to it that the Catholic Faith stands firmly lodged in the midst of the people, there to thrive in its fertile and undivided unity.” [\[576\]](#)

She is the cause of salvation: Pope Pius XII quoted St. Irenaeus in saying, “she has been constituted the cause of salvation for the whole human race.” [\[577\]](#)

She is the Virgin Queen and Mother of the King: “Because the Virgin Mary was raised to such a lofty dignity as to be the mother of the King of kings,” held St. Alphonsus Liguori, “it is deservedly and by every right that the Church has honored her with the title of ‘Queen.’” [\[578\]](#)

She is the Queen of Peace: As Blessed Pius IX urged, “Whoever, therefore, reverences the Queen of heaven and earth—and let no one consider himself exempt from this tribute of a grateful and loving soul—let him invoke the most effective of Queens, the Mediatrix of peace; let him respect and preserve peace...to its safeguarding and growth the gentle urgings and commands of the Virgin Mary impel us.” [\[579\]](#)

Our Lady came to Fatima as Mother, Mediatrix and Queen, there to affirm the Church’s central doctrines. With a supreme and royal dignity, she also gave commands in the gentle way befitting our true Lady and Queen.

The Virgin’s specific requests, while simple, give us frequent opportunities to practice the virtues we need most: 1) The daily Rosary, 2) daily duty as true penance, 3) sacrifice for the conversion of sinners, 4) the Five First Saturdays devotion, and 5) the necessity of wearing the Brown Scapular (the Scapular of Our Lady of Mt. Carmel), since Our Lady held it out during the Miracle of the Sun.

Incidentally: The Scapular should be blessed (or the recipient enrolled in the Confraternity of Our Lady of Mt. Carmel by a Catholic priest; when enrolled, this means that each new Scapular need not be blessed since the blessing is carried by the person, who still must wear the Scapular). To obtain the Sabbatine Privilege associated with the Brown Scapular (wherein Our Lady promised centuries ago, “I, the Mother of Grace, shall descend on the Saturday after their death and whomsoever I shall find in Purgatory, I shall free, so that I may lead them to the holy mountain of life everlasting”), there are three conditions: 1) it must be worn (within reason; one can remove it when taking a bath or shower, for example), 2) live chastely according to one’s state in life, and 3) Pray the Little Office of Our Blessed Mother, which can be substituted by the Rosary with a Catholic priest’s permission.

There is also the sixth request, comprised of two parts. For the Holy Father and the bishops of the world, God Himself commands the collegial consecration of Russia to the Immaculate Heart of Mary. The request’s second part is the universal establishment of the Communion of Reparation (the Five First Saturdays Devotion), which is founded on Confession, the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass, the Rosary and meditation on the Psalter’s 15 mysteries in reparation for blasphemies against Our Lady’s Immaculate Heart.

The solemn act of consecration will bring the era of peace and world-wide conversion, because it will firmly establish true devotion to Our Lady’s Pure Heart, that path that will lead us to God. No one but the Holy Father can order the bishops to join him in that solemn act, so we must always pray and sacrifice for that intention. As for the Five First Saturdays of Reparation, we ourselves can make this devotion every month of the year for those who do not, as Sr. Lucia did all of her life.

The Virgin said, “If My requests are heeded, Russia will be converted and there will be peace; if not, she will spread her errors throughout the world, causing wars and persecutions of the Church. The good will be martyred, the Holy Father will have much to suffer, various nations will be annihilated... In the end, My Immaculate Heart will triumph. The Holy Father will consecrate Russia to Me, and she will be converted, and an era of peace will be granted to the world.” [\[580\]](#)

To save souls from hell in this age of spiritual chaos, the Lady revealed that God “wills to establish in the world devotion to My Immaculate Heart... To whoever embraces this devotion, I promise salvation; those souls will be cherished by God, as flowers placed by Me to adorn His throne...If what I say to you is done, many souls will be saved and there will be peace.” [\[581\]](#)

The Sacred and Immaculate Hearts

The Immaculate Heart devotion has long been willed by Christ. Almost seven centuries ago, the Sacred Heart made clear to St. Mechtilde (Matilda) that He Himself is “the herald of this devotion [to His Mother’s Heart], which He teaches to us both by word and example.” [582] In modern times, Our Lord told Sr. Lucia the reason why the solemn, public collegial consecration of Russia to the Virgin’s Heart is His Will: “Because I want My whole Church to acknowledge that Consecration as a triumph of the Immaculate Heart of Mary so that it may extend its cult later on and put the devotion to this Immaculate Heart beside the devotion to My Sacred Heart...” [583]

Many saints have insisted that devotion to the Sacred Heart is itself a sign of the last days. As St. Gertrude once said, “The love of the Incarnate Word as exemplified by His Divine Heart is reserved for the last ages to be made known, so that the world, carried away by follies, may regain a little of the warmth of early Christian charity by learning of the love of the Sacred Heart.” [584]

The Fatima revelations are also a sign of what Sr. Lucia, Servant of God, called “the last times of the world.” It is not hard to see with eyes of Faith that Scriptural prophecy came to pass at Fatima when “a great sign appeared in Heaven: a woman clothed with the sun, with the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars.” [585]

We have seen that, in the Apocalypse, “a woman” is a symbol of the Church while, in Genesis 3:15, “the woman” is the Virgin Mary, foretold by God Himself. It was the Woman who appeared at Fatima as the apocalyptic sign that the greatest battle of our own age, the one between “a woman clothed with the sun” (the Virgin Mary and the Church on earth) and the dragon (Satan), had begun. That spiritual battle is one we will never win by our own efforts or designs, but only when all we do is “with Mary, in Mary, through Mary, and for Mary.” [586]

The Woman of Genesis, who came to Fatima, was even brighter than the sun, clad in a white gown and veil, the veil’s light making it appear as if it was trimmed in gold. Here it must be noted that white is considered “the color of mourning” worn only by Catholic queens, while gold is everywhere recognized as the color of royalty.

As already examined, the Lady wore two ornaments, one a long yellow necklace from which dangled a bright orb or jewel, symbolizing her bridal attributes as reigning consort of the Divine Spouse. Her other ornament was the Star of Esther, symbol of the Old Testament’s virgin queen who saved the entire nation of the elect from annihilation.

St. John Eudes explained, “Mary’s peerless heart is a fountain of light, that was foreshadowed in the person of Queen Esther, who is represented in Sacred Scripture as a small fountain that becomes a great light and is turned into the sun. ‘The little fountain which grew into a river and was turned into a light, and into the sun...’ It is the fountain of the sun, fons solis, mentioned in chapters fifteen and seventeen of the Book of Josue.” The saint continued, “Truly the heart of Mary is the foundation of the sun, because Mary is the Mother of the Sun of Justice, and this Divine Sun is the fruit of Mary’s heart.” [587] St. John Eudes’ words give us more to ponder about the Virgin and the Miracle of the Sun, the “Great Sign” that would convince many to believe and again turn to God, thus saving their souls while avoiding the greatest sin threatening mankind, final apostasy.

In his commentary on St. Luke’s eschatological discourse of the great apostasy, St. Ambrose interpreted the symbols of sun, moon and stars in this way: “Many apostatizing from Christianity, the brightness of the Faith will be dimmed by this cloud of apostasy: since the heavenly Sun grows dim or shines in splendour according to my Faith. And as in its monthly eclipse the moon, by reason of the earth coming between it and the sun, disappears from view, so likewise the holy Church, when the vices of the flesh stand in the way of the celestial light, can no longer borrow the splendour of His divine light from the Sun of Christ. And in the persecutions, it was invariably the love of this life that stood in the path of the Divine Sun. Also the stars –that is, men surrounded by the praise of their fellow Christians–shall fall, as the bitterness of persecution mounts up; which must however come to pass, until the number of the faithful be made up; for so the good are proved and the weak made known.” [588]

The Example of St. Joan of Arc

If we genuinely know the whole truth of Fatima, why is there any doubt that Fatima is truly the fulfillment of prophecy from Divine Revelation? Why is it that all the faithful are not following Our Lady’s counsels to restore the Church, but instead fight the battle in ways we prefer?

How much would God be pleased should we imitate St. Joan of Arc, the virgin of Orleans, who was another figure-type of Our Lady.

“To St. Joan’s mind the coronation and anointing of the King of France were ever present, because that anointing did homage to the universal Kingship of Christ,” said Pope St. Pius X. [589]

Like Our Lady who, by God’s will, leads the army of the Church Militant, St. Joan also led an army by God’s command. Like Our Lady, St.

Joan insisted that her soldiers stop offending God, avail themselves of the Sacraments of Confession and Holy Eucharist, pray often and do well their daily duty.

In our turn, we must be like St. Joan, our minds ever fixed on the collegial consecration of Russia to the Immaculate Heart, because it will restore the Social Reign of Christ the King. What each one of us need to do –every day–is heed and promote every request of Our Lady of Fatima.

“Therefore, whilst we have time, let us work good to all men, but especially to those who are of the household of faith.” (Gal. 6:10)

PART 16

The Age of Mary and the Lost Meaning of Conversion

“One purpose for which the Blessed Mother was created Mother of God is that she may obtain the salvation of many who, on account of weakness and wickedness, could not be saved according to the rigor of divine justice, but might be so with the help of this merciful Mother’s powerful intercession.”

-St. John Chrysostom

In these latter days of the Modern Age, Our Lady has appeared on earth more than in any other time in history. [\[590\]](#) As the spiritual war between good and evil intensifies, the Mediatrix of All Graces pleads with us to pray and do penance, even as she continues to intercede for us before the throne of God. In the ongoing epic battle for souls, each true Marian apparition in the Modern Age is, in the chronicles of sacred history, another chapter intended to remind all peoples—from practicing Catholics to those separated from God in diverse ways—of the lost meaning of conversion.

Just over one hundred years ago, the Catholic Encyclopedia provided four definitions to conversion, as follows: “a moral change, a turning or returning to God and to the true religion, in which sense it has passed into our modern languages. (For example, the conversions of St. Paul, of Constantine the Great, and of St. Augustine.) In the Middle Ages, the word conversion was often used in the sense of forsaking the world to enter the religious state. Thus St. Bernard speaks of his conversion. The return of the sinner to a life of virtue is also called a conversion. More commonly do we speak of the conversion of an infidel to the true religion, and most commonly of the conversion of a schismatic or heretic to the Catholic Church.” [\[591\]](#)

Already lost was the fifth and most crucial definition of conversion: the three ages of the interior life. Dom Jean-Baptiste Chautard, author of The Soul of the Apostolate, defined the interior life as “the state of activity of a soul who strives against its natural inclinations in order to regulate them and endeavors to acquire the habit of judging and directing its movements in all things according to the light of the Gospel and the example of Our Lord.”

[\[592\]](#)

As the Dominican theologian Fr. Reginald Garrigou-Lagrance emphatically taught, “The interior life is for all the one thing necessary. It ought to be constantly developing in our souls...The interior life is lived in the depths of the soul...it is important to us not only as individuals, but also in our social relations; for it is evident that we can exert no real or profound influence upon our fellow-men unless we live a truly interior life ourselves.”

[\[593\]](#)

True Conversion in Three Stages

“Scripture often recalls, even to those who are in the state of grace, the necessity of a more profound conversion toward God,” explained Fr. Garrigou-Lagrance. [\[594\]](#) Our Lord, Who desires not the death of the sinner, wills that every soul should travel the path of the three conversions. This is the secret to which the lives of the Apostles and all the saints attest: In all the labors of life, that of the interior life is the most important.

The three stages are transitions or conversions, known as the Purgative Way (beginners), the Illuminative Way (proficients), and the Unitive Way (the perfect). Very simply stated, the three interior conversions might be called an increase in the life of sanctifying grace, which is a gratuitous gift from God and which we will lose when we lack humility, a spirit of mortification, confuse our pride or cowardice with virtues, etc.

The life of grace, said Fr. Garrigou-Lagrance, “is there, hidden within you, like the grain of mustard seed, like the leaven which will cause the whole of the meal to rise, like the treasure hidden in a field, like the source from which gushes a river of water that will never fail.” [\[595\]](#)

He also taught, “We are thus able to appreciate something of the importance of true conversion, by which a man passes from the state of mortal sin to the state of grace.” [\[596\]](#) This is the important first step of conversion, “the entrance into the kingdom of God, where the docile soul begins to reign with God over its own passions, over the spirit of the world and the spirit of evil.” [\[597\]](#)

A great crisis in the soul—which may or may not issue from a crisis in practical life—is the defining mark of transition from one stage to another. St. John of the Cross speaks of the imperfections being winnowed out, especially in the first two stages. Yet not all souls progress when the crisis comes. Many fall back, either by giving up the struggle or in becoming complacent and quite satisfied with Self.

Conversion is neither a one-time matter, nor is it enough to live the exterior life of a practicing Catholic nor even, perhaps, to be involved, even in small ways, in any apostolate. The signs of an advancing interior life have nothing to do with zealous activity, even for a good cause.

Necessary for any Catholic, including those leading or participating in an apostolate, is “to fight against an excessive exteriorization through good works” [598] or, to phrase it another way, to reject “love of action for action’s sake.” [599] The interior life is one of inner recollection of God’s Presence at every moment of the day.

Conversion is an ongoing process; thus, we will recognize how the five meanings of conversion are directly connected to the five ways of sanctification and salvation. St. Louis Marie de Montfort reminds us that these five means are “are laid down in the Gospel, explained by the masters of the spiritual life, practiced by the saints, and necessary to all who wish to be saved and to attain perfection. They are: humility of heart, continual prayer, mortification in all things, abandonment to Divine Providence, and conformity to the Will of God.” [600]

Our Lady: Devotion and Conversion

When the Virgin came to Fatima, God deigned to give the Catholic peoples of the world another incentive toward further conversion of their interior lives or—for those who fell away from or were outside of the Church instituted by Christ—to their initial conversions, the first “age” or “stage” of the life of grace. Through the hands of Our Lady of the Rosary at Fatima came the marvelous and unprecedented sign, the great Miracle of the Sun, so that all would believe and act upon her requests. While the complete Fatima Message, the Great Secret, and the Miracle reveal many dogmatic themes, Fatima’s ultimate thesis, the initial secret which the children at first kept to themselves, is true devotion to the Immaculate Heart of Mary, by which many souls will be converted and saved for all eternity.

“Jesus Christ, the only begotten Son of God, chose the incomparable Virgin Mary from among all creatures to be His Mother and deigned to be nourished and governed by her,” explained St. John Eudes. “In His infinite goodness, He also gave her to us to be our Queen, our Mother and our sure Refuge in all our needs. He therefore wishes us to honor her as He honors her and to love her as He loves her.” [601]

The saint continued, “According to the Apostle Saint Paul, Christ is the Head of His Mystical Body, the Church, and we are the members. [602] We must therefore be animated by His Spirit; we must follow His inspirations, walk the path He has traced, and continue, as it were, His life on earth by practicing the virtues which were His Own. It follows that our devotion to His Holy Mother must be a continuation of His devotion to her.”

Understanding that the “human will is not, however, moved to love a fellow creature unless the intellect first knows what renders it worthy of respect and esteem,” St. John Eudes immediately noted, “The infinite zeal, with which the Son of God is inflamed for all that concerns His dear Mother, has urged Him to reveal to us through the inspired words of Sacred Scripture and through the writings of the Fathers some small measure of the perfections with which He has enriched her. The reality far surpassing our knowledge of her in this vale of darkness will be revealed only in Heaven, the land of unclouded light.” [\[603\]](#)

Particularly compelling is the saint’s initial selection from Sacred Scripture, a passage which he describes as “a compendium of all the great things that can be said or thought of our marvelous Queen.” [\[604\]](#) Moreover, according to the general law of preparation, a term coined by St. Bonaventure to describe the distinctly Catholic doctrine foreshadowed in the Old Testament, it is “God’s Way not to allow the fullness of revealed truth to break upon the world suddenly. There is a long period of adaption, as it were, during which the way is prepared gradually for the final Revelation,” which closed with the death of St. John the Evangelist. [\[605\]](#) Understanding this general law assists those of us who live in the Modern Age to receive a glimmer of understanding in how St. John Eudes’ explanations for this passage (and others) apply to the Immaculate Heart as she manifested herself at Fatima (brighter than the sun) and the sign that she gave (the Miracle of the Sun).

To illustrate the Lord’s revelations about His Virgin Mother, St. John Eudes first chose Apocalypse, Chapter 12:1, “A great sign appeared in Heaven: A woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and on her head a crown of twelve stars.”

“What is this great sign?” the saint queried. “Who is this miraculous woman? Saint Epiphanius, Saint Augustine, Saint Bernard, and many other holy doctors agree that the woman is Mary, the Queen among women, the Sovereign of angels and men, the Virgin of Virgins. She is the woman who bore in her chaste womb the perfect Man, the God-Man. ‘A woman shall compass a man.’” [\[606\]](#)

The “woman” [a woman clothed with the sun] of Apocalypse, as already stated in this work, is a figure-type of the Church, but the eternal Church is herself a type of Mary, who is “the woman” prophesied in Genesis 3:15. In explaining how Apocalypse Ch.12:1 pertains to Our Lady, St. John Eudes outlined the passage’s meaning, of which the following is a brief synopsis.

- The woman appeared in Heaven, because she comes from Heaven; she is Heaven’s masterpiece, its Empress, its joy and glory. [\[607\]](#)

- “She is clothed with the eternal sun of the Godhead and with all the perfections of the divine essence, which surround, fill and penetrate her to such an extent that she has become transformed, as it were, with the power, goodness, and holiness of God.”

- “She has the moon under her feet to show that the entire world is beneath her.” Save the Lord God Himself, none is above her.

- “She is crowned with twelve stars that represent the virtues which shine so brightly in her soul.”

- “But why does the Holy Ghost call Mary ‘a great sign’? It is simply to tell us that everything in her is wonderful, and that the marvels that fill her should be proclaimed to the entire world...”

“Mary is truly admirable in all her perfections and in all her virtues. But what is most admirable in her is her virginal heart. The heart of the Mother of God is a world of marvels, an abyss of wonders, the source and principles of all the virtues which we admire in our Glorious Queen: ‘All the glory of the king’s daughter is within.’” [\[608\]](#) And what does this mean? It is a scriptural allusion to the interior life of the soul and, specifically, the Virgin Mary’s. The glory of the King’s daughter was another of God’s opaque references to one of His great mysteries until He fully revealed it to the Church. That secret is the hidden grace of Mary, the Immaculate Conception.

THE IMMACULATE CONCEPTION: MOTHER OF GOD, MOTHER OF MEN

“Hail, full of grace...”

–The angel Gabriel to the Virgin Mary, Lk. 1:28

Since the foundation of the world, God bound together Our Lady and her Divine Son. The first mystery of Christ is His Virgin Mother, she who is the Immaculate Conception. This dogma reminds us of St. Paul’s teaching in regard to God’s plan for the Redemption: “All things are done for your sakes” [\[609\]](#) to which St. John Eudes adds, “If He created the world, it was for us, if He became Man, it was for us. If He was born in a stable, it was for our sake...For our sake, He died on the Cross, ascended into Heaven, established Holy Church, confided the sacraments to her care and especially the most Holy Sacrament of the Altar where He resides for us...In a like manner, if He willed to have a Mother on earth, it was for our sake.” [\[610\]](#) To the words of the saint must be added, “And if He created His Mother as the Immaculate One, it was for our sake.”

The Divine Revelation that Mary is the Immaculate Conception remains the dogma which is most misinterpreted, misconstrued, and belittled. In treating of the confusion and resulting rejection of this most wondrous truth, an early 20th century Jesuit priest and author, Fr. P.J. Chandlery, S.J., recognized that “amongst the chief reasons why even ‘learned and devout men,’ outside the Church, do not understand the dogma of the Immaculate Conception is because they misunderstand the doctrine of Original Sin. Not knowing the rule, they cannot realize the exception to the rule; not recognizing the penalty, they cannot see the privilege. In other words, not appreciating what we mean by the stain and guilt of Original Sin, they do not and cannot know what is meant by exemption from it.” [\[611\]](#)

“Great indeed was the injury entailed on Adam and all his posterity by his accursed sin,” wrote St. Alphonsus de Liguori. [\[612\]](#) God had bestowed upon our first parents His sanctifying grace, “a gift to which, by nature, they had no claim. Through the sin of Adam, in which Eve bore her share, this gift was lost for all Adam’s children.” [\[613\]](#) In throwing away the gift that would have been his supernatural inheritance, Adam “also forfeited all the other precious gifts with which he had originally been enriched.” [\[614\]](#)

When through his own fault, Adam lost Original Justice, Original Sin took its place, affecting both body and soul. St. Thomas Aquinas taught that while in the state of justice, “the whole body was held together in subjection to the soul” but, with the fall of Adam, all “the powers of the soul were left, as it were, destitute of their proper order, whereby they are naturally directed to virtue,” and this “destitution is called a wounding of nature.” [615]

Barred from the Tree of Life and wounded by the four chief effects of his sin (weakness, ignorance, malice and concupiscence), the first father Adam could bequeath to all of his descendants only his fallen human nature, sullied with the Original Sin.

The New Adam and the New Eve

“But from this general misfortune,” wrote St. Alphonsus de Liguori, “God was pleased to exempt that Blessed Virgin whom He had destined to be the Mother of the second Adam—Jesus Christ—who was to repair the evil done by the first.” [616]

A fundamental doctrinal theme of St. Paul’s is that Our Lord is Adam’s archetype by way of contrast, for Jesus came to undo the work of Adam and to open the gates of Heaven, long closed to the first man’s posterity as a consequence of the Original Sin. [617] St. Paul speaks of “Adam, who is a figure of him who was to come...But not as the offense, so also the gift. For if by one man’s offence, death reigned through one; much more they who receive abundance of grace, and of the gift, and of justice, shall reign in life through one, Jesus Christ.” [618]

The Teaching of the Catholic Church explains, “A man led to our loss of the sanctifying grace of God; a Man gave us back the gift. Death reigned in the race of Adam; through one born of Adam’s race, true Life was restored to men. Death was the punishment decreed for our first father’s sin; when the Redeemer died, death was found to be the one efficacious remedy for our loss.” [619]

The corresponding doctrine that the Blessed Virgin is the archetype of Eve is the teaching of all antiquity, and it was for this reason that St. Ephrem wrote, “Those two innocents, those two simple ones, had been equal the one to the other, but afterward, one became the cause of our death, the other of our life.” [620] Our Lady is “rightly called the second Eve in the same sense that her divine Son is rightly called the second Adam...” [621]

As Adam and Eve were created with sanctifying grace, so were the New Adam and Eve. Our Lord Jesus Christ, the second Adam and the Son of Mary, was always sinless in virtue of the hypostatic union of His sacred humanity with the Person of the Word. The hypostatic union is the mystery of the Incarnation of God; it is the reason for the mystery of the Immaculate Conception, the mystery of the perpetual virginity and sacred Motherhood of Mary, and the mystery of the redeeming Cross.

For the sake of the Incarnation and the Passion of Christ which would offer redemption to the human race, the Lord's Virgin Mother was conceived without sin, "redeemed in the highest way—the way of prevention—from the shipwreck that involved all the other children of Adam, all our race, in dire catastrophe." [\[622\]](#)

The Redemption of the Virgin

St. Alphonsus was careful to observe, "There are two means by which a person may be redeemed, as St. Augustine teaches us: 'the one by raising him up after having fallen, and the other by preventing him from falling,' and this last means is doubtless the most honorable." [\[623\]](#)

The sanctified state of the first man and woman prefigure the Incarnation of Christ and the Immaculate Conception. God created Adam from the virginal earth and imbued him with sanctifying grace; He then created the virgin Eve from the virgin Adam. (Here it should be noted that by virgin is meant purity not only in the material sense of the body, but also of intellect, heart and soul.)

When Adam was in the state of original justice, the Lord God cast a deep sleep upon him and took one of his ribs to form the first woman, Eve. [\[624\]](#) From the very moment of her existence, grace was imparted to the woman, granted by God through the stainless Adam.

In a similar fashion, the Virgin Mary (the New Eve) received at the very moment of her existence the gift of sanctifying grace, communicated from God through the virginal Jesus (the New Adam). How was this done, when Our Lady preceded her Divine Son in historical time?

The answer is found in the mystery of the Holy Trinity. God is present to all things that are, were or shall be. What He is and does, He is and does outside of time. To Him, creatures and events which succeed each other in time are ever present. In the great mystery of the Holy Trinity, which our limited human minds cannot fathom, the three Divine Persons applied to Our Lady the foreseen merits of Jesus, the Word made Flesh. [\[625\]](#)

To quote the illustrious words of St. Bernard of Clairvaux: "One man and one woman have wrought us exceeding harm; nevertheless, thanks to God, through one Man and one Woman all things are restored...and indeed Christ would have sufficed. Surely all of sufficiency is of Him, but it would not have been good for us that Man should be alone. Rather, it was fitting that both sexes should take part in our Reparation, for neither sex had been guiltless in our fall.” [626]

“I have loved, O Lord, the beauty of thy house, and the place where thy glory dwelleth,” [627] said King David, for the Holy Ghost inspired him to speak of his future daughter Mary, the living Temple of God and Ark of the Covenant. For the glory of His name, for the sake of the Incarnation of Christ, and for our sakes, the maiden Mary was prepared for her dignity and office as the Virgin Mother of God, both spiritually and physically, in her soul and in her body. Exempted and preserved from the sin which, as one of Adam’s descendants, she otherwise would have inherited as the naturally generated child of St. Joachim and St. Anne, the Virgin Mary was conceived without sin.

The Immaculate Conception is “the woman,” whose appearance in time commenced the fulfillment of the Lord’s prophecy against the ancient serpent, the devil: “I will put enmities between thee and the woman, and thy seed and her seed: she shall crush thy head and thou shalt lie in wait for her heel.” [628] Created by the Holy Trinity to be the ever-Immaculate Mother of God, Our Lady “was fittingly prepared for the virginal childbearing through which was crushed the serpent’s head.” [629]

“In the Christian religion,” explained Cardinal Billot, “Mary is absolutely inseparable from Christ both before and after the Incarnation: Before the Incarnation in the hope and expectation of mankind; after the Incarnation in the worship and love of the Church. For, indeed, in the primeval prophecy [of Genesis 3:15] we were shown not only Christ, but also the Woman whose Child He is...” [630]

“The Immaculate Conception means the restoration of grace once more to the human race,” [631] wrote Fr. H. O’Lavery, author of The Mother of God and Her Glorious Feasts. “The Immaculate Conception...was the long looked-for event in the history of the world, and from this we may really trace all the good things we have received through the sufferings and death of Christ.” [632]

The Unbreakable Bond of the Woman and Her Seed

“A religion that separates Mary from Jesus—the Woman from her Seed—is neither the religion of the promises and prophecies as we read of in the Old Testament, nor the religion of their fulfillment as we see it in the New,”

[\[633\]](#) explains The Teaching of the Catholic Church.

Christ is Our Divine Savior, and Mary is our holy Mother. Since the first days of the Church, there have always been those who try to separate Our Lord from His Mother. Just as many who forget that the entire human race was not condemned until Adam sinned are blindly inclined to point only to Eve as the reason for mankind's fall, conversely there are those who claim to admit Christ as Lord and Savior but contemptuously dismiss Our Lady's office in the Redemption. Just as the Lord God joined together the first Adam and Eve, whose fates were intertwined, so did He join together the new Adam and Eve in the proto-evangelium of Genesis 3:15.

To further the points of “figure-types” previously made, the historical persons of Adam and Eve can always be positively compared or negatively contrasted to their perfect archetypes, the Lord Jesus and the Lady Mary. Gathered from the Fathers of the Church, the following syllabus clarifies God's binding of the first Adam and Eve and that of “the Woman and her seed”:

- Adam was created before Eve; the Word in Eternity, the Second Person of the Holy Trinity Who said, “Before Abraham came to be made, I am,” [\[634\]](#) preceded His human but sinless mother.

- Adam was formed by God from the virginal earth; Jesus was conceived of the Holy Ghost and born of the Virgin Mary.

- Sanctifying grace was bestowed to Eve through Adam; Mary was conceived in grace through the foreseen merits of the new Adam.

- Eve sinned before Adam; Mary was born before Christ.

- Adam and Eve were created in Original Justice but fell from grace; Jesus and Mary were always full of grace.

- Adam and Eve were intended to be the lord and lady over all the earth; Our Lord Jesus Christ and Our Lady Mary possess dominion over all creation.

- Mary is the cause of our salvation, even as Eve was the cause of our ruin.

- “As Eve was seduced by an angel's word to shun God after having transgressed His Word, so Mary, also by an Angel's word, had the good tidings given her so that, after obeying His Word, she might bear God within her.” (St. Irenaeus) [\[635\]](#)

- Adam, who sinned early in his life, sentenced the entire human race to death; Christ, Who died in the flower of His youth, redeemed us for eternal life.

- Both the Lady Eve and the Lady Mary became “the mother of all the living,” [636] Eve in the natural order, Mary in the order of grace—for the Mother of God is also the Mother of men.

In the third century, St. Proclus wrote of the Immaculate Conception, “Mary is the glory of virgins, the joy of mothers, the support of the faithful, the diadem of the Church, the express model of the true faith, the seat of piety, the robe of virtue, the dwelling-place of the Holy Trinity.” [637]

The Holy Scriptures relate that when the Virgin Mary, already full of grace, gave the angelic messenger her Fiat, “Behold the handmaid of the Lord; be it done to me according to thy word,” [638] she was overshadowed by the Holy Ghost. The Lord of all was made Man, and “the woman” became Theotokos [639] (literally from the Greek, “God-bearer,” or in a variable translation, “God’s mother”). At the moment Our Lady became the Mother of God, she also became the spiritual Mother of all mankind. From that same instant, the new Adam and the new Eve together began the Redemption of mankind.

Those who truly adore Christ also honor the Perpetual Virgin who brought Him forth. In a similar manner, those who possess devotion “to Jesus through Mary” make their own the witness of St. Alphonsus: “The more we honor Mary, the more we shall honor God,” for when Our Lord came to free us all, He did not disdain the humility of the Immaculate Virgin’s womb.

“And she brought forth her first-born son, and wrapped him up in swaddling clothes, and laid Him in a manger; because there was no room for them in the inn.” [640] Born in poverty and adored only by the humble Virgin, St. Joseph, and poor shepherds, the Christ Child would later be sought by wise men from the east, following a star.

“And entering the house, they found the child with Mary, his mother, and falling down they adored him.” [641] So do all the faithful throughout time forever find Christ—always with Mary, His Mother and ours.

THE STAR BEFORE DAWN

“The two truths which stand out like mountain peaks in the chain of revelation concerning Our Blessed Lady, and around which cluster all other truths we hold about her, are her divine maternity and her fullness of grace, both of which are affirmed in the Gospels and in the Councils of the Church.”

–Fr. Reginald Garrigou-Lagrange, *The Mother of the Saviour

St. Bernardine of Siena once said that “to be the Mother of God is the miracle of miracles.” Total consecration to Jesus through Mary paves a faster path for the three interior conversions. It is a shorter way, so to speak, to make the spiritual ascent of Mt. Carmel. At each modern-day apparition and in different ways, the Lady stressed this truth herself, especially the necessity of conversion. It also seems that the “character” of each successive visitation had much to do with the world’s response or rejection of her previous message.

• Mary, Conceived Without Sin: With the first three apparitions of the Modern Age (Paris, 1830, known as Our Lady of the Miraculous Medal; again in Paris in 1840, through which the Church received the sacramental known as the Green “Scapular” Badge, and LaSalette, 1846, where the Virgin appeared weeping), the emerging theme is clear—conversion through the Immaculate Heart of Mary, who always brings us closer to her Divine Son, Jesus Christ. She would also appear at Lourdes (1854), Pontmain (1871), Pellevoisin (1875), and Knock, Ireland (1879), revealing her divinely bestowed privilege as the Immaculate One and as Mediatrix with her Savior and Divine Son, Jesus Christ. At Lourdes, she directed a young girl to a hidden and miraculous spring. At Pontmain, she appeared just as the small village was on the verge of being raided, and there she silently directed attention to the Holy Cross of Jesus but also providing a discreet reference to her Immaculate Heart. At Pellevoisin, she frightened away a demon, cured the dying visionary, and gave the world another sacramental, the Sacred Heart Scapular. At Knock (the final Marian apparition before Fatima), her silent visage and the tableau in which she appeared leads us to the Apocalypse.

It is in our own age that the Secret of Mary is coming to fruition. “It was through Mary that the salvation of the world was begun,” as we recall that which St. Louis Marie noted, “and it is through Mary that it must be consummated. Mary hardly appeared at all in the first coming of Jesus Christ, in order that men, as yet but little instructed and enlightened on the Person of her Son, should not remove themselves from Him in attaching themselves too strongly and too grossly to her...But in the Second Coming of Jesus Christ, Mary has to be made known and revealed by the Holy Ghost in order that through her Jesus Christ may be known, loved, and served. The reasons which moved the Holy Ghost to hide His spouse during her life, and to reveal her but very little since the preaching of the Gospel, subsist no longer.”

[\[642\]](#)

St. Montfort’s inspired prophecy was written in the early 18th Century, in a Europe still reeling from the Protestant Revolt, in a Europe soon to experience the French Revolt against the altar of God and the Catholic throne. The “Catholic conscience of history” (as Belloc coined the term) sees from within; it then understands the series of conflicts were not spontaneous, random events but purposeful advancements of the Great Revolt against God, the Revolt which began in the 1500’s and continues to this day.

The Most Blessed Mother of God chose the 19th century to often make her presence known because in these latter days of the Modern Age, in which the Church Militant is desperately besieged by every heresy, the Holy Ghost is revealing Mary, according to the “general law of preparation,” so that (as St. Louis de Montfort wrote), “through her, Jesus Christ may be known, loved and served.” [\[643\]](#)

THE MIRACULOUS MEDAL: “MEDAL OF THE IMMACULATE CONCEPTION”

“O Mary, conceived without sin, pray for us who have recourse to thee.”
–Prayer of the “Miraculous Medal”

The Virgin Mary first came to Paris, formerly the very heart of the French Revolt where the forces of hell had struck at her heel. She appeared to a postulant of the Daughters of Charity on July 18, 1830, the eve of the Feast of St. Vincent de Paul, co-founder of the community. The Lady allowed the postulant, whom we now know as St. Catherine Labouré, to kneel before her and rest her clasped hands on her lap, just as a young girl would do with her mother. During the 2½ hour visit, the Virgin spoke of the evil times and foretold coming calamities which took place within the next 40 years, and her words proved true.

“But come to the foot of the altar,” said the Virgin. “Here great graces will be poured out upon all who ask them with confidence and fervor. They will be bestowed upon the great and small.”

“My eyes are ever upon you. I shall grant you many graces. Special graces will be given to all who ask them, but people must pray,” were Our Lady’s concluding words at the end of the first apparition. [\[644\]](#)

The message was clear: The Virgin turned the eyes of her children to the Blessed Sacrament, where God so patiently waits. All we have to do is turn to Him and ask Him for His help with “confidence and fervor” because He wants our love and trust. Furthermore, God is no respecter of persons; the graces distributed are not given according to social status, as the spirit of the world thinks. Finally, the Lady made clear that she herself watches and guards over us. As the Mediatrix of All Graces, she also promises graces but with a condition—“people must pray.”

During her second visit to St. Catherine, in Paris where 40 years prior the godless revolutionaries replaced the Madonna’s statue in the Notre Dame Cathedral with the shameless “Goddess of Reason,” the Lady emphasized both a Marian doctrine, which would be defined as a dogma 24 years later, and her intercessory power before God. It was in Paris that she gave to the world the Medal of the Immaculate Conception (commonly known as the Miraculous Medal).

Our Lady appeared over the high altar, standing on a globe—her feet crushing a serpent, which immediately calls to mind the proto-evangelium of Genesis 3:15: “I will put enmities between thee and the woman, and thy seed and her seed; she shall crush thy head and thou shalt lie in wait for her heel.”

The Virgin held a smaller globe with a small cross on top, which she held out as if offering it to God. The Lady explained to Catherine that the ball represented the world, adding, “I am praying for it and for everyone in the world.”

Beautiful rays of many colors and lengths shone from what looked like gems on her fingers. The Virgin said, “The rays are the graces which I give to those who ask for them.” The stones from which no rays came, she said, represented the graces waiting to be bestowed but for which no one asks.

This Vision then changed and an oval frame appeared around Our Lady. She lowered her arms and stretched out her hands, graces pouring in the form of light. Around the oval frame appeared words in gold, “O Mary conceived without sin, pray for us who have recourse to thee.”

“Have a medal made according to this picture,” the Virgin said to St. Catherine Labouré. “All those who wear it when it is blessed will receive many graces, especially if they wear it from their necks.”

Suddenly, the entire Vision seemed to revolve. On the back of the oval, which denoted the reverse side of the Miraculous Medal, St. Catherine saw the letter “M,” surmounted by a cross with a crossbar beneath it. Below the crossbar were two Hearts, one encircled by thorns and the other pierced by a sword. Surrounding the “M” were twelve stars within a golden frame.

The symbolism of the two Hearts emphasizes that the Sacred Heart of Jesus and the Immaculate Heart of Mary are inseparable; the “M” underscores the truth that Mary is the cause of our salvation, for it was with her cooperation that God became Man. The symbolism also emphasizes the Marian doctrine that the Mother of God is the Co-Redemptrix of the human race. The cross and crossbar remind us of the Passion, while the 12 stars within the golden frame symbolize the 12 Apostles commanded by Christ to spread the Gospel and baptize all nations. The 12 stars also symbolize the 12 virtues of Our Lady, and they may also be a divine hint to Apocalypse, Ch. 12: 1, which begins, “A great sign appeared in heaven; a woman clothed with the sun...”

THE GREEN “SCAPULAR” BADGE

OF THE IMMACULATE HEART

“Immaculate Heart of Mary, pray for us now and at the hour of our death.”

–The inscription on the Badge of the Immaculate Heart

In 1840, the Virgin Mary appeared many times in Blangy, Paris, to another Sister of Charity, Sister Justine Bisqueyburu. Our Lady was clothed in a long white robe, over which hung a blue mantle. Her head was unadorned, her hair falling loosely over her shoulders. In her right hand, she held her Immaculate Heart surrounded by flames, with the top of the Heart issuing beautiful rays. In her left hand, she held a badge, a single piece of green cloth suspended from a string of the same color.

On one side of the badge was a miniature replica of the Blessed Virgin, as she revealed herself to Sister Justine. On the other side was a Heart pierced by a sword, surmounted by a cross, and surrounded by an oval inscription: “Immaculate Heart of Mary, pray for us now and at the hour of our death.” Sister Justine described a “heart all ablaze with rays more dazzling than the sun and transparent as crystal”—amazing words which prefigure the description of Our Lady at the Fatima apparitions.

This “Badge of the Immaculate Heart,” which became known as “the Green Scapular” (although it is not truly a scapular), was given to the Church as a new sacramental, and Our Lady said it was “for the conversion of those who had no faith and, above all, to procure for them a happy death.” [645] The Blessed Virgin said the badge must be properly blessed by a priest. It can be worn, or placed in the clothing, on the bed, or simply in the room of the person for whom we are asking the grace of conversion. The prayer on the badge should be offered daily, if not by the one wearing it, then by the one giving it. Graces would be given, she said, in proportion to the confidence in which the favors were asked—a very important matter to remember.

OUR LADY WEPT AT LASALETTE

“Well, my children, you will make this known to all my people.”
–Our Lady of LaSalette

Four years later, on Saturday, September 19, 1846—the eve of Our Lady of Sorrows—the Virgin Mary came to LaSalette, France, there to grant a one-time appearance to two shepherd children. The apparition occurred between two and three in the afternoon, a time of great significance because on this day and during this exact hour, the Divine Office prayers were being offered to the Virgin of Sorrows. [\[646\]](#)

Eleven-year old Maximin Giraud and fifteen-year old Melanie Mathieu were tending cows when there suddenly appeared a globe of dazzling light. The globe opened and they saw a woman seated on stones. The Lady’s elbows rested on her knees, her face was buried in her hands, and she was weeping.

The Lady wore a crystal-white, floor-length gown, its long, broad, and straight sleeves reaching beyond her fingertips. A golden apron descended to the bottom of her dress. Over the gown, the Lady wore a white cape bordered with roses. On her feet were white shoes, encircled by roses. Her head-dress, too, was white, crowned by a royal diadem, wreathed with roses of many-colored hues.

Around the Lady’s neck hung a golden chain and golden crucifix, with a hammer on one side and a pair of pincers on the other, clearly emphasizing the Passion of Jesus.

Each sentence of the known LaSalette Message is intended for all of the Church’s children, regardless of age, and for those outside of the Church, too. The Lady would privately give each child a secret, which they would not reveal to anyone. Eventually they were asked if they would divulge it to the Pope, a suggestion to which both agreed. The two Secrets of LaSalette were entrusted to Pope Pius IX but he never publicly revealed them.

Unlike Sr. Lucia of Fatima, however, Melanie of the LaSalette apparition would later publicly release what she claimed was the secret given to her. While some insist that Melanie became extremely interested in apocalyptic literature which, they further claim, influenced what she revealed as her secret, one must wonder if the opposite is true—that is, if due to the secret given to her, Melanie became interested in apocalyptic writings. Be that as it may, the most startling part of Melanie's secret are the words allegedly uttered by the Virgin Mary: "Rome will lose the Faith and become the seat of anti-Christ."

Note that she did not say the Church herself will become anti-Christ's seat, because Christ promised He would always be with His Church, saying, "...behold I am with you all days, even to the consummation of the world." (Matt. 28:20) However, that promise does not mean that the visible Church will not endure many terrible things, that the city of Rome could not again be overtaken by evil powers, just as it was during the reigns of Caligula, Nero, and Diocletian, or that through the Church's entire history, particular men of the Roman Catholic hierarchy could not apostasize. To the contrary, the Church's human element is comprised of both saints and sinners. Like the Apostle Judas, among the hierarchy there will always be traitors, but such tragedies will never mean the Church herself ceases to exist. Furthermore, in the early days of the infant Church, Catholicism eventually overthrew pagan Rome, so it is to be expected that Satan, who will be the power behind the anti-Christ, wants to reclaim the ancient city that once was his, and which is now the central earthly city of Christ's Church.

Consider the evident lessons taught at LaSalette (although there are many more) in even a quick examination of Our Lady's opening words, reproduced below in exact order:

- "Come near, my children, be not afraid; I am here to tell you great news."

- The Lesson: Our Lady reveals her desire that we approach her in trust, as children approach their Mother.

- "If my people will not submit, I shall be forced to let fall the arm of my Son. It is so strong, so heavy, that I can no longer withhold it."

- The Lesson: When the Virgin spoke of "my people," she spoke as did the queens of old. At the same time she revealed her intercession as the Queen Mother before her Son, Whose arm is raised to punish. The Lady warns the people to submit—that is, to give her Son the love and honor which He rightly deserves as Our Savior.

- "For how long a time do I suffer for you! If I would not have my Son abandon you, I am compelled to pray to Him without ceasing; and as to you, you take not heed of it. However much you pray, however much you do, you will never recompense the pains I have taken for you.”

• The Lesson: Although the blessed in Heaven can no longer suffer, Our Lady uses these words to display the gravity of our sins in God’s eyes. Again, she refers to her Son—implicitly revealing her own identity. Once more, she speaks of her prayerful intercession, for which we have been ungrateful. No mere human being can ever offer enough love and gratitude to her Son in His Passion, by which we were bought at a great price, or to His Mother, Our Lady of Sorrows.

• “Six days I have given you to labor, the seventh I have kept for myself; and they will not give it to me. It is this which makes the arm of my Son so heavy.”

• The Lesson: Here is a great mystery, for Our Lady did not say, “The Lord our God gave you six days to labor;” rather, she spoke in the first person. Her words were a discreet reminder that she is the Perpetual Tabernacle of the Holy Trinity; God chooses to speak through her in these latter days. The Lady had referred to the Third Commandment, “Keep holy the Sabbath day,” which means attending the Sacrifice of the Mass and receiving the Sacraments on Sundays and holy days. This commandment also forbids missing Mass through one’s own fault, unnecessary servile work, public buying and selling, or court trials on the Sabbath.

• “Those who drive the carts cannot swear without introducing the name of my Son. These are the two things which make the arm of my Son so heavy.”

• The Lesson: Our Lady warned of Our Lord’s severe anger when people break the Second Commandment, “Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain.” All should use reverence when speaking of God and holy things or matters, and keep oaths made in the name of God. Blasphemy, irreverent or disrespectful use of God’s name, false oaths, and breaking of vows offend against this Commandment.

In essence, while the Virgin of LaSalette spoke of many other matters, she made clear that the only remedy is conversion—of which the true definition is almost lost in this age: Christ must be the life of the soul.

“Well, my children, you will make this known to all my people.” (Our Lady of LaSalette)

THE LADY OF LOURDES

“I am the Immaculate Conception.”

–The Virgin of Lourdes

In 1858, Our Lady came to Lourdes, France, appearing 18 times to a fourteen year old girl, who is solemnly canonized under her name in religion, St. Marie Bernard Soubirous, but who is commonly known as St. Bernadette. The Virgin’s message for all was as simple as it was direct: “Pray for sinners” and “Penitence! Penitence! Penitence!” When asked her identity, she did not answer until March 25 (the Feast of the Annunciation, the day the Church joyously celebrates the Word incarnated as man in the Virgin’s womb), saying, “I am the Immaculate Conception.” Only weeks before, the Mother of God had instructed the young girl to dig at a spot on the grotto floor. There came forth a spring, hidden until that time, which has bestowed graces of spiritual conversions and physical cures.

Due to the simplicity of the Lourdes message, it is all too easy to overlook it. The life of the chosen messenger, however, shows us the heroic degree to which God wishes us to seek sanctity. Since St. Bernadette was the first 19th visionary who was, during the apparitions, known upon sight and constantly interrogated (unlike St. Catherine, whose identity as visionary of the Miraculous Medal was not known even by her Mother Superior), who reached heroic heights of holiness in a brief 36 years (unlike Melanie and Maximum of LaSalette, who were always faithful Catholics but did not attain Bernadette’s degree of virtue), and whose life was carefully scrutinized when she was still on earth, we will take a slight detour to briefly visit with the spiritually and literally incorruptible maiden of Lourdes.

ST. BERNADETTE: A LIFE OF THE BEATITUDES

“Humility is the secret of God’s glory.”

–St. Bernadette

In reading the lives of the saints, St. Bernadette once mused, ““I think that they ought to point out the faults the Saints had and indicate the means they employed to correct them. That would be helpful to us. We would learn how to set about it. But all that is mentioned is their revelations or the wonders they performed. They cannot serve our advancement.” [647]

However, her most famous biographer, Abbé Trochu, did not quite agree. “She failed to add that, even so, these imperfect authors are to be commended for raising the pre-eminent qualities of the Saints, and that she found in them examples to imitate. The Church in its infallible decisions was one day to adopt the well-founded verdict of a Superior General of Saint-Gildard: ‘It is my own opinion that during her life Sister Marie-Bernarde [the saint’s name in religious life] put into practice the virtues that constitute sanctity.’” [648]

What is sanctity? It is the “state of Christian perfection,” which is the result of a “fervent surrender of one’s self to God and the practice of virtue. It does not require extraordinary works. The Blessed Mother of God, the most holy of mortals, never performed any extraordinary works to excite worldly admiration. ‘Love is fulfilling of the law.’” [649]

A saint is a person who “fulfills all the demands of the law” (Rom. 13:10) which is accomplished by charity, the virtue by which we love God above all things for His own sake, and our neighbors as ourselves. Charity is considered the queen of all virtues, since it is the one virtue that will always exist in Heaven. In the Beatific Vision, souls will no longer possess any need for the other virtues. Charity, however, will remain, since it perfectly unites God and man, just as it perfectly unites man to man. [650] Those souls who are canonized as saints by the Catholic Church are those who were known to practice all of the virtues to a heroic degree—i.e., heroic virtue.

What is meant by heroic virtue? Pope Benedict XIV, “whose chapters on heroic virtue are classical,” thus describes it: “In order to be heroic, a Christian virtue must enable its owner to perform virtuous actions with uncommon promptitude, ease, and pleasure, from supernatural motives and without human reasoning, with self-abnegation and full control over his natural inclinations.” The 1910 Catholic Encyclopedia comments, “A heroic virtue, then, is a habit of good conduct that has become a second nature, a new motive power [that is] stronger than all corresponding inborn inclinations, capable of rendering easy a series of acts each of which, for the ordinary man, would be beset with very great, if not insurmountable, difficulties.” [651]

In reading the lives of the saints, time and prayer are needed to assess, study, and contemplate in them the supernatural virtues and the gifts and fruits of the Holy Ghost. In addition, “the Holy Ghost also grants certain extraordinary gifts, which are given only on rare occasions and to selected persons. Such extraordinary graces are granted principally not only for the benefit of the recipient, but of others.” Among these graces are included the gift of visions, of miracles, and of prophecy.

In St. Bernadette—handmaiden of the Lord’s Handmaiden, the Blessed Virgin Mary—we will discover all of these things: the three theological virtues (faith, hope, and charity); the four cardinal virtues (prudence, justice, temperance, and fortitude); the seven Gifts of the Holy Ghost (wisdom, understanding, counsel, fortitude, knowledge, piety, and fear of the Lord), the twelve Fruits of the Holy Ghost (charity, joy, peace, patience, benignity, goodness, long-suffering, mildness, faith, modesty, continency, and chastity) and the extraordinary graces of visions, miracles, and prophecy. Of St. Bernadette’s many virtues and gifts, only a few examples will be spotlighted—especially her fortitude and long-suffering.

The Saint’s Early Years

Bernadette Soubirous, the firstborn of her parents, was born about two o’clock in the afternoon, as the bell was ringing for Vespers on Sunday, January 7, 1844 in Lourdes, France, a small market town near the Pyrenees in the country’s southwest. Her parents had named her Bernarde Marie, but the priest who baptized her kept referring to her and registered the name as Marie Bernarde. Her father reminded the priest that the child’s name was already registered at the Town Hall as Bernarde-Marie, but history shows that the priest never did change the register. Her family, however, considered her first name to be Bernarde, although she was called by the diminutive of Bernadette.

As for the parents, neither had ever gone to school but they were known to be good Catholics who faithfully carried out their religious duties and respectable people of irreproachable integrity. Of the nine children born of the marriage between Louise Castérot and Francois Soubirous, not all lived to adulthood.

In Bernadette’s sixth year, she began to suffer from asthma, which afflicted her until the end of her life. She was small for her age but she was a happy and lovable child with a sweet smile. She easily took to caring for her younger siblings so her parents could work. She, like her parents, received no education.

By her tenth year in 1854, the family was in serious financial straits. For various reasons, their mill was lacking customers and so the father sought odd jobs, as did her mother. Bernadette remained at home, taking care of her younger siblings. (On an important and related note, it was in this same year that Pope Pius IX defined as a dogma the Immaculate Conception.)

In the saint's 11th year of life, Bernadette became one of many children who were stricken by a cholera epidemic. Since cholera is usually fatal, her recovery truly must have been a miraculous one. In her 12th year, her godmother Aunt Bernarde took her home, where she was fed well but also became nurse-maid to her younger cousins. Once again, her education was neglected. Her aunt would later say that Bernadette knew the Our Father, the Hail Mary, and the Credo. However, she had never been taught to read, so her only prayer book was a small Rosary.

By the winter of 1856, Bernadette insisted on returning to her family. By this time, the Soubirous became so impoverished that they were forced to accept the free lodging of a cold, damp room known as Le Cachot (The Dungeon), once used to hold prisoners. Everyone in the town knew the family's situation, but this "was an age of scant help for the poor. For example, no conference of St. Vincent de Paul was established in Lourdes till 1874 (three years before Bernadette's death). It was a harsh age when too many of the wealthy, lacking pity because they lacked the Gospel, exploited the labour of the poor; and mothers of large families received only ten sous for a whole day's work!" [\[652\]](#)

Bernadette's father found work from day to day with the baker or the horse-and-coach service, while her mother worked in the fields, or gathered wood in the forest and later sold it to buy bread, or did the washing and housework for people in town. Previously, Bernadette and her sister Toinette stayed at home, caring for the younger brothers. Now, however, Toinette at age ten was able to attend school with the Sisters of Charity of Nevers, who had come to Lourdes in 1834.

For her part, the 13 year old Bernadette would often say that books were not meant for her, that the Sisters did not know in which class to put her since she could not read and could hardly scratch out a few letters. There was also her asthma and the fact that she was needed at home. Her only real desire for herself was the reception of her First Holy Communion.

Little Shepherdess of Bartres

Louise Soubirous thought of what seemed to be a good solution. In June of 1857, Bernadette was sent to Bartres, to the household of Marie Lagües, who had been Bernadette's wet-nurse after Louise suffered an unfortunate accident with a candle. As a baby of 10 months of age, Bernadette was brought to live with the Lagües and there she stayed until her 20th month of life. Considering Marie's supposed affection for the child, as well as her home's proximity to church and school, Louise had thought it would be easier for Bernadette to attend school and catechism at Bartres. In reality, however, Bernadette again became a nursemaid, this time to her former "foster mother's" four young children. By August, she was also entrusted with the care of the family's lambs, and so she became a shepherdess. When school opened in September, she was not sent to class. Instead, she was given the additional care of the sheep.

What this meant was that the young girl worked from sunup to sundown, caring for children in the early morning and spending the rest of the day outside, in good weather or bad, with the sheep and lambs. At first, she was allowed to attend some catechism classes and the Sunday Masses and holy days. However, her inability to read and her legitimate exhaustion made it difficult for her to memorize the catechism. Bernadette was a responsible worker, she never complained, she asked for nothing, and she gratefully accepted whatever was given to her. This made it easy to treat her as an unpaid servant, working for her bed and board. The true purpose for which she was sent to her former wet-nurse was neglected. A priest, the brother-in-law of Mr. Lagües, did intervene on Bernadette's behalf, telling his sister's husband that he was not treating Bernadette as one of the family. The reproach had little effect. Rarely was she seen at catechism, and never was she seen in school.

It was during these solitary days as a shepherdess that Bernadette made a stone altar at the foot of an old chestnut tree, setting on top of it a picture of the Blessed Virgin Mary. There she would kneel, praying the Rosary with a gift given to her by her mother—a set of poor black beads, threaded on plain string. She would play with the flock of lambs and then, resting, her eyes would fall on the valley; her ears heard the rustling of the trees, the occasional bird song and the other sounds of nature. "God made all that," she would think to herself. She did not know she was in the very early stages of meditation or that God was already preparing her soul. She was to be another handmaiden of the Immaculate Mother of God.

In early January of 1858, Bernadette's 14th birthday found her still at the house of the Lagües. Circumstances continued as they had since August. She still helped with the children, she still retained the entire responsibility of the flock, and she still was not receiving any form of proper catechesis and education.

In humility, Bernadette did all that was asked of her, and she did it well, but eventually her ardent longing for her First Holy Communion began to manifest itself. At least three times, she asked to be brought home, through verbal messages given to her visiting Aunt Bernarde, a neighbor from Lourdes who was passing through the area, and the Lagües servant who one day took a trip to Lourdes. For the Soubirous, however, the situation was no better, so their daughter's entreaties fell on deaf ears. Finally, Bernadette took matters into her own hands.

On a Sunday near the end of January 1858, she requested permission to go to Lourdes. Although given consent, she was instructed by the Lagües to return the very next day. She came back three days later, humbly yet forthrightly explaining, "I must go home. The parish priest is going to have the children prepared for First Communion, and if I go back to Lourdes, I shall make mine." In this one example, one should easily recognize Bernadette's fortitude, that "moral virtue that ensures firmness in difficulties and constancy in the pursuit of the good. It strengthens the resolve to resist temptations and to overcome obstacles in the moral life. The virtue of fortitude enables one to conquer fear, even fear of death, and to face trials and persecutions. It disposes one even to renounce and sacrifice his life in defense of a just cause." [\[653\]](#)

Within two weeks upon Bernadette's return to Lourdes, the Queen of Heaven would appear to this poor, neglected, and uneducated child. As we have seen, she was obedient, meek, and conscientious. She had never insisted upon anything for herself—until now. Her only longing was a spiritual one, and that was to receive Our Lord in the Holy Eucharist. Bernadette was humble and set her sight not on material riches but only those of the interior life. At the age of 14 years, her brief life was already one of which Our Lord taught in the Beatitudes: "Blessed are the poor in spirit; for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." [\[654\]](#)

The Lourdes Apparitions Begin

"At fourteen, not knowing how to read or write, a complete stranger to the French language and ignorant of the Catechism, Bernadette looked upon herself as the most worthless child of her years." [\[655\]](#) On Thursday, January 28, 1858, the young Bernadette returned to her parents, joyfully exclaiming, "Now at least I shall be able to go to school and Catechism! That's why I've come back.” [\[656\]](#)

Circumstances were no better for the Soubirous family, but her parents gave their promise. The next day, Bernadette was in school. Upon hearing the child’s motive and determination, the Sisters enrolled her as a future communicant.

Coincidentally, on Thursday, February 11, 1858—exactly two weeks after her return because she greatly desired her First Holy Communion—the humble girl was graced to see a “most beautiful Lady.” Bernadette would see this Lady a total of 18 times, the last vision occurring on July 16, 1858 (the Feast of Our Lady of Mt. Carmel).

That particular Thursday was a school holiday, so Bernadette was home with her family. Although a bitterly cold day, the air was still and there was no wind under the sunless sky. Shortly after 11 a.m., Bernadette set out on a necessary, tiresome task, accompanying her sister Toinette and a younger, impulsive classmate, Jeanne Abadie. The trio went in search of two things: fallen branches and twigs that they could rightfully take and use in the Soubirous’ fireplace and old bones to sell to the rag-and-bone man. [\[657\]](#) Their expedition led them into a forest and then over a foot-bridge to the Lafitte family’s property, which formed an island. One side was enclosed by a bend in the Gave River, the other by a canal which powered a saw-mill and flour-mill, called the Savy. The extreme point of the triangle was a tall, rocky formation known as “Massabielle” (Old Hump).

Massabielle was “naturally shaped into an arch from which a cave ran backwards, and to the right, about fourteen feet up, there was a small niche where a wild rosebush was growing.” [\[658\]](#) In the spring season, the bush was “ablaze with white blooms.” This wild outgrowth of rock, with its little oval niche, was also called “the grotto.” In the small space before the grotto, Bernadette was forced to wait, as her healthier companions decided to remove their shoes and stockings, cross the freezing cold stream, and continue their search for dead branches and discarded bones.

They were already on the stream’s other side when, anxious to help, Bernadette resolved to join them. She removed her shoes in anticipation of walking through the water. “I had hardly begun to take off my stocking when I heard the sound of wind, as in a storm.” [\[659\]](#) (Two days later, Fr. Pomian, the assistant priest to Fr. Peyramele, the parish priest at Lourdes, was particularly struck by Bernadette’s mention of the “sound of wind, as in a storm.” It reminded him of Acts 2:2, when the Holy Ghost descended upon the Virgin and the Apostles: “And suddenly there came a sound from heaven, as of a mighty wind coming, and it filled the whole house where they were sitting.”)

Although the trees across the way were not moving at all, Bernadette said, “I had half-noticed, but without paying any particular heed, that the branches and brambles were waving beside the grotto.” She returned to removing her stockings when she again heard the same sound of wind, this time in front of her. She looked up and saw the branches and brambles “underneath the topmost opening in the grotto tossing and swaying to and fro, though nothing else stirred around.”

The Beautiful Lady at the Grotto

It was within the oval niche that Bernadette saw a “golden cloud” and then a beautiful light, instantly followed by “a girl in white, no bigger than myself, who greeted me with a slight bow of the head; at the same time, she stretched out her arms slightly away from her body, opening her hands, as in pictures of Our Lady; over her arms hung a Rosary.” Bernadette described that the Lady was “smiling at me most graciously and seemed to invite me to come nearer. But I was still afraid. It was not, however, a fear such as I have had at other times, for I would have stayed there forever looking at her; whereas, when you are afraid, you run away very quickly.”

The Lady wore “a white dress reaching down to her feet, of which only the toes appeared. The dress was gathered very high at the neck by a hem from which hung a white cord. A white veil covered her head and came down over her shoulders and arms almost to the bottom of her dress. On each foot, I saw a golden rose. The sash of the dress was blue and hung down below her knees. The chain of the Rosary was yellow; the beads white, big, and widely spaced. The girl was alive, very young, and surrounded with light.” [\[660\]](#)

When asked for additional details, Bernadette would also describe the girl’s face as oval in shape and of “an incomparable grace.” The Lady’s eyes were blue, and her voice, “Oh, so sweet!” The Rosary held by the Lady was not the usual length for the Psalter of all 15 decades but a five-decade Rosary. As Bernadette prayed the Rosary, the Lady let her own Rosary slip through her fingers, silently counting the beads with Bernadette. The Lady, however, did not pray the Our Father or the Hail Mary, but she did pray the Glory Be.

Abbé Trochu, St. Bernadette’s foremost biographer, noted: “This last detail, which the little one in her ignorance could not have invented, reveals an accurate and deep theological truth. The Gloria, which is a hymn of praise to the Adorable Trinity, and is Heaven's Canticle, is indeed the only part of the Rosary suitable for her, whose name Bernadette would not learn for another month. The Pater is the prayer of needy mortals, tempted and sinful, on their journey to the Fatherland; as for the Ave, the Angel's greeting (to the Virgin Mary), this could be used only by the visionary, as the Apparition had no need to greet her own self." [661]

Note well that it was at Lourdes that the Queen of Heaven first offered to the people of the Modern Age a "concession," as it were, since she emphasized the daily Rosary, which is only one-third of Our Lady's Psalter.

Centuries before, Our Lady had said to St. Dominic, "Preach my Psalter." By these words, she meant the Angelic Psalter of 15 decades, with each decade—comprised of one Our Father and ten Hail Mary's—prayed while meditating on the 15 Mysteries from the Incarnation of Jesus Christ at the Annunciation of the Virgin to the Coronation of Our Lady, assumed into Heaven.

Why was there, at Lourdes, a silent emphasis on the Rosary of five decades, rather than the Psalter of fifteen? Was it a matter of great significance in Mariology (for St. Bernadette, although illiterate, prayed the Rosary every day)—or had the Merciful Mother of God made allowances for the spiritual sloth of the Modern Age? Perhaps both inquiries form the answer because, many decades later, Sr. Lucia of Fatima would reveal "...the Most Holy Virgin, in these last times in which we live, has given a new efficacy to the recitation of the Rosary... There is no problem, no matter how difficult it is, that we cannot resolve by the prayer of the Holy Rosary. With the Holy Rosary, we will save ourselves. We will sanctify ourselves. We will console Our Lord and obtain the salvation of many souls." [662]

In the first two apparitions, the Lady did not speak to Bernadette, although she greeted the girl with a noble, yet inviting, bow of the head. During the third apparition, the Lady spoke for the first time, asking Bernadette, "Will you do me the favour of coming here for a fortnight?" [663] Bernadette said, "After asking permission from my parents, I will come," to which the Lady replied, "I do not promise to make you happy in this world, but in the other" (a literal French-to-English translation).

As Bernadette would soon understand, the Lady did not state that she herself would always appear. Rather, the request applied only to Bernadette.

A brief summary provided by the first inquiry of the ecclesiastical Commission which later investigated the Lourdes apparitions thus states: “Bernadette was faithful to her appointment: she went most punctually to the grotto for a fortnight. She always obtained the same favours there, except on two days when the Apparitions did not appear.” It was from this time forward that the young Bernadette was “accompanied by an ever increasing crowd. When she had the happiness of seeing the Vision, she forgot everything: she no longer noticed what was taking place around her: she was entirely absorbed.” [\[664\]](#)

This World and the Other

As for the Lady saying, “I do not promise you happiness in this world, only in the other,” her words quickly became self-evident. From the first day of the Apparition and until the end of her brief life, Bernadette would suffer misunderstandings, humiliations, false accusations, open derision, and many other trying circumstances.

For example, when her mother, Louise, first heard the story from the younger sister, Toinette, she questioned Bernadette and then took a rod to discipline both girls. At school, a much younger student slapped Bernadette across the face, while some of the teaching sisters taunted her to learn her catechism from the Lady. For many hours, the secular authorities would discourteously treat her, not even offering her a chair while they interrogated her. Even Fr. Peyramele was, at the first, very gruff with Bernadette.

Throughout her life, Bernadette was many times cross-examined about the Apparitions. In fact, she “wrote and signed numerous accounts of her visions. In addition, she underwent repeated interrogations by both ecclesial and civil authorities, during which her testimony was transcribed. In none of these accounts did she contradict herself; on the other hand, there is no one single version that includes every detail.” [\[665\]](#)

What is consistent is Bernadette’s fidelity to testifying to the Virgin’s message and in living it. In the total of 18 apparitions, the Blessed Mother spoke perhaps a handful of times. Once, she delivered three secrets that were for Bernadette alone—“a commission which, on her deathbed, she [Bernadette] declared she had carried out.” [\[666\]](#) For the public, however, the main message was one of penance, prayer for the conversion of sinners, and a request that the priests build a chapel and that processions come to the grotto. There was also the Lady’s gift, through the hands of Bernadette, of a hidden spring of water where graces of spiritual and bodily healing are to this day bestowed.

When the fortnight ended, the Lady had still not identified herself. During that interim, Bernadette had, at Father Peyramale's insistence, requested two things of the heavenly visitor—her name, as well as a sign to confirm that the Apparition's request for a chapel was truly from God. On Thursday, February 25, 1858, the Lady had already instructed Bernadette, "Go and drink at the spring and wash yourself in it." It was on that day that the miraculous spring of Lourdes came forth. To the request for her name, however, the Lady only gave Bernadette a gentle smile.

After March 4, Bernadette felt no inner call to return to the grotto until March 25, the Feast of the Annunciation. When she arrived, she found the Lady was already waiting for her. On this day, Bernadette thrice implored the Lady for her name. Then came the final confirmation of Lourdes, for the Lady raised her eyes to Heaven as she joined her hands, brought them close to her heart, and said, "I am the Immaculate Conception." After the briefest moment, she then smiled at Bernadette and disappeared.

Life after Lourdes

The Holy Communion so ardently desired by Bernadette was received on the Feast of Corpus Christi. Then, on July 16, the Feast of Our Lady of Mt. Carmel, the Lady appeared to Bernadette one last and unexpected time. To deter pilgrims, civil authorities placed boards around the grotto, including the spring. Bernadette was by the Gave River when suddenly the Lady appeared: "I saw neither the boards nor the Gave. It seemed to me that I was in the grotto, no more at a distance than the other times. I saw only the Holy Virgin. I had never seen her so beautiful." [\[667\]](#)

Bernadette's actions during the apparitions emphasized both the Rosary and humiliating penance for sinners, but the Vision's requests also tested her humble piety, fortitude, spirit of penance, and perseverance. Thus her coming years were foreshadowed, for she would continue to practice and interiorly grow in these and many other virtues.

The future saint was well aware that the grace of seeing the Mother of God did not grant her automatic access to Heaven. She would later write in her spiritual diary: "Often remind yourself of this word that the Most Holy Virgin said to you: Penance! Penance! You should be the first to put it into practice. For this intention, suffer trials in silence so that Jesus and Mary may be glorified..." [\[668\]](#)

Bernadette learned to read, write, embroider, and sew. She became a Sister of Charity and Christian Instruction at Nevers, France, and was given the name of Sister Marie-Bernard. She worked in the infirmary as a nurse's aide, and was later given the lighter task of altar sacristan. In the convent, she lived a life of both interior and physical suffering. She was often ill and frequently misunderstood and humiliated by her superiors and, on occasion, her fellow sisters. Abbé Trochu noted that "for the space of eleven years –much as she was esteemed and loved by her companions –she had been subjected to an undeserved coldness by those in authority over her. She always refused to speak of her suffering, which was a mixture of bewilderment and pain. She put up submissively with being reprimanded in public and more frequently than was her share." [\[669\]](#)

Due to Bernadette's lack of higher education and her frequent illnesses, to cite just two examples, she was called a "good for nothing" and "a lazy lie-abed." Deeply hurt by such uncharitable comments, Bernadette never retaliated, although on occasion she might respond with a brief, appropriate remark. Once, when a passing superior flung a quick jest that the ailing Bernadette needed to arise and get about her business, the saint calmly replied, "It is my business to be ill."

St. Bernadette understood that hers was an apostolate of suffering. A brief glimpse into her diary reveals the concealed gem of her interior life: "My divine Spouse has made me desire a humble and hidden life. Jesus has often told me that I will not die until I have sacrificed all to Him. And to convince me, He has often told me that when it is over, He alone, Jesus crucified, will console me." [\[670\]](#)

At the young age of 35 years, on April 16, 1879, St. Bernadette died an agonizing death from tuberculosis of the bone. She was canonized by Pope Pius XI on December 8, 1933. Enclosed in a glass casket in the convent chapel in Nevers, France, her incorrupt body sleeps, as it awaits its reunion with her holy soul at the final Resurrection.

What was the secret of Bernadette? She tells us in her own words: "To love what God wills always, to will it always, to desire it always, to do it always: this is the great secret of perfection, the key to paradise, the foretaste of the peace of the saints!" [\[671\]](#)

OUR LADY MARY, THE EVENING STAR OF PONTMAIN

“But pray, My children. God will hear you in a short time. My Son allows Himself to be touched.”

–Our Lady of Pontmain

On the cold, snowy and clear starlit night of January 17, 1871, in the little village of Pontmain, the “Evening Star” appeared in France, just as the shadows of night literally and figuratively fell upon the country. What led to this beautiful event is a great lesson to the entire world.

France was suffering a horrendous conflict, the Franco-Prussian War. “The Third Empire of Napoleon III was no match for the Prussians under Bismarck. Paris was surrounded on September 18, 1870. On December 27, the siege began in earnest and the city was under daily bombardment. The Parisians were starving, desperate, and in deadly fear of being blown to bits. People in other parts of France lived in fear of invasion.”[\[672\]](#)

By the New Year of 1871, the Germans occupied two-thirds of France. On January 15th, the Prussians were at the gates of Laval. The panic-stricken farmers hid their food and possessions, expecting further Prussian advances. In addition to the sufferings of war, the deadly diseases of typhoid and smallpox broke out. [\[673\]](#)

In these terrible hours of trial, the faithful gathered by the hundreds to beg the Virgin’s intercession with her Divine Son, Our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ. At Our Lady of Victories, at LaSalette, at Lourdes, in their parish churches and in their homes, the faithful prayed their Rosaries fervently, imploringly.

Not far from Laval, the village priest of Pontmain, Curé Michel Guérin, who held a great devotion to Our Lady, led the weeping, disconsolate people to pray to the Virgin, under her title Our Lady of Hope.

“Let us add penance to our prayers, and then we may take courage,” the Curé urged his small flock. “God will have pity on us. His Mercy will surely come through the Virgin Mary.” [\[674\]](#)

First Phase of the Apparition: A “Grand, Beautiful Lady” and a Triangle of Three Stars

On the evening of January 17, 1871, around 6 p.m. (the hour of the evening Angelus), Mr. Barbedette and his two younger sons, Eugène (12 years) and Joseph (10 years), were working in the barn. When a neighbor lady came to give them news of the war, Eugène walked to the barn door to observe the weather.

Suddenly, the boy stood transfixed. About twenty or twenty-five feet above a neighbor's home, he beheld what he called a “grande, belle Dame” (“a grand, beautiful Lady”).

The Lady appeared to be between 18-20 years old. Her face was small and beautiful. Her long gown was dark blue, much darker than the blue of the surrounding sky. It fell in loose folds; the sleeves were loose and hanging. She wore soft slippers fastened with golden ribbons. Over her head was a soft, black veil upon which rested a golden crown, which widened toward the top, and a red band wound around it. Her arms were at her sides and the palms of her hands were turned outward. The Lady was smiling at the child.

The father and the neighbor could not see anything, but ten-year old Joseph exclaimed, “Oh, I see a beautiful Lady!” and described her dress in detail. The mother, when summoned, also did not see the Lady but, at her suggestion, the family knelt and prayed five Our Father's and five Hail Mary's. Then they went into the house to eat supper. As soon as supper was finished, the boys rushed back to the barn and then fell to their knees. Three orphan girls from the village boarding school were brought without being told why. Two of them saw the Lady, but a third did not.

As events unfolded that night, it became clear that no adults would see the Vision. What the adults could see, however, were three bright stars forming a triangle, exactly where the children beheld the Lady. The children said the highest star was over the Lady's head, while the other two stars were near each of her elbows. Those three stars were seen by everyone that night —but they were never seen again.

Soon, about eighty people from the village had assembled at the barn door. The good Curé arrived, but he did not see the Lady. However, a little boy in ill health, Eugène Friteau, beheld the Vision. Due to his delicate condition, he could not stay long in the cold air. Two months later, he died.

A two year-old girl, the little daughter of Boitin, the shoemaker, clapped her hands as soon as she was at the front of the barn door. “Le Jésus! Le Jésus,” she happily exclaimed. These were the only words she knew to describe such a sight. Thus, the only visionaries out of the six that could later relate what happened numbered four—the two Barbedette boys and the two girls from the Catholic orphanage.

Second Phase of the Apparition:
Symbols and a Message Written in Gold

With the arrival of the Curé, a small red cross appeared over Our Lady's Heart. Then the apparition became surrounded by an oval frame of a blue darker than the robe. Four candle holders were attached to the inside frame, two near the bottom sides and two near the top sides. Each holder held an unlighted candle.

The people talked amongst themselves as the children related these wonders. Suddenly, the children announced that the Lady had stopped smiling and was now looking sad. The Curé said, "If the children only are privileged to behold the celestial vision, it is because they are more worthy than we are." He then suggested that they pray. Everyone knelt down—some in the barn, some outside. No one seemed to mind the cold or the snow. When Sister Marie-Edouard, one of the sisters from the orphanage, led the Rosary and the people joined in prayer, the Lady smiled again.

As the Rosary prayers grew more fervent, the Vision began to grow larger. As the Lady grew taller, the blue frame extended in proportion, and the stars of the sky appeared to move aside, one by one rearranging themselves outside the frame but beneath her feet.

The children counted forty of these stars, stars visible only to them. Then other stars appeared at a distance from the apparition, coming to fasten themselves to the Lady's dress.

"Oh, there are so many stars the Lady will soon be gilt all over," one of the children cried with excited awe.

When the Rosary was completed, Sister Mary Edouard began the Magnificat. Before the first verse was sung, the children exclaimed, "Something is happening!"

A plain white band appeared and unrolled itself across the length of the house's roof. It was about a yard wide. Then a stroke of gold appeared. It was a letter of the alphabet.

"It's an M!" the children cried. "And now there is another letter— it's an A!"

The word Mais was formed. Other letters appeared. Before the Magnificat was concluded, the children read the words aloud: Mais priez, mes enfants ("But pray, my children").

At the exact moment the word priez ("pray") appeared, Joseph Babin, a villager returning from the neighboring town of Erneé and who had heard the singing, came to investigate, saying, “You do well to pray to the good God! The Prussians are at Laval!”

“If they were at the village entrance, we should have no fear now!” several villagers answered. When this man was told of the apparition, he went to his knees and joined the group in their prayers.

At the Curé’s direction, the people now sang the Litany of Loreto. More letters appeared. The next part of the message read: Dieu vous exaucera en peu de temps (“God will hear you in a little while”).

Next, the Inviolata was sung. At the words, ‘O Mater alma Christi carissima,’ a second line of letters appeared on the white banner. The children read aloud the new words they saw: Mon fils (“My son”).

Upon hearing the children call out these two words, many began to weep. “It really is the Blessed Virgin! Yes, yes, it really is she! It is Our Lady!” the people exclaimed.

As the Inviolata ended, the people began to sing the Salve Regina. The rest of the sentence appeared and read: Mon fils se laisse toucher (“My Son allows Himself to be touched”).

Completed now, the entire message read as follows: “But pray, My children. God will hear you in a short time. My Son allows Himself to be touched.” Although she said not a word, Our Lady’s appearance and her golden message, mysteriously written on the white banner, gave hope and consolation to her afflicted children in France.

Third and Fourth Phases of the Apparition: A Mystical Harp, a Red Crucifix and the Holy Name of Jesus

At the Curé’s suggestion, the people sang the canticle, Mère de l’Espérance (Mother of Hope). The smiling Lady lifted her hands to shoulder-level, her fingers delicately moving in time to the hymn, as though she was playing an invisible instrument. At the canticle’s end, the children related that the banner with its golden words faded away.

With the beginning of the next hymn, the Virgin’s face suddenly became sad again. A red crucifix appeared near Our Lady. The Body of Jesus on the Cross, covered with blood, was clearly seen. As the people sang the words, “Spare us, O Lord,” Our Lady took the crucifix in her hands and slightly tilted it toward the children. At the top of the crucifix appeared the words, Jésus Christ, in red letters on a small white banner.

A small star gracefully rose from beneath the Virgin's feet, lighting the candle at the lower left of the frame and then the top one. Passing up and over Our Lady, it then lit the candles on the right side. The star moved outside the blue frame, only to rest over the Virgin's head.

Fifth Phase of the Apparition:

Two White Crosses and a Mysterious Veil

As the crowd sang another hymn—Ave Maris Stella (Hail, Star of the Sea)—the crucifix disappeared and the Vision again assumed the attitude of Our Lady on the Miraculous Medal, with one difference—on each of the Virgin's shoulders appeared a small white cross, both about eight inches high. When the hymn was finished, the Curé said, "Now let us all say our evening prayers."

When the people began the nightly Examination of Conscience, the children noted that a white, scroll-like veil began to rise from beneath the Lady's feet. Little by little, the Virgin was hidden from view, until she disappeared from sight.

It was a quarter past nine. The apparition [\[675\]](#) had lasted more than three hours.

Ten days later, the armistice was signed. [\[676\]](#)

Meanings of the Apparition's Symbolism

Theologically-rich treatises could address each symbol and aspect permeating the Pontmain apparition, including but not limited to:

- The three stars (the Holy Trinity; the three theological virtues of faith, hope, and charity).
- The dark blue of Our Lady's dress (the color signifying fidelity to God),
- The forty stars at Our Lady's feet (recalling the Israelites' forty days in the desert, the Holy Family's forty days of seclusion before the Christ Child's Presentation in the Temple, Our Lord's forty days of fasting, the forty days of Lent).
- The four candles (the four marks of the true Church, which is one, holy, Catholic, and apostolic).
- The simple yet eloquent message written on a white banner in gold letters (the traditional liturgical colors of the Christmas season).
- The changes in the Virgin's countenance and in the apparition's development, in clear response to the people's attitudes, actions, and even to particular prayers and hymns.

- The red crucifix and the Holy Name of Jesus Christ, reminding the people of the priceless value of the Precious Blood of Our Savior.

While there is much more that could be said of each “sign,” only one other facet will be explained in somewhat greater detail.

Our Lady’s seeming play of an invisible instrument recalls the teaching of St. John Eudes, “The mysterious harp of King David...is another symbolic picture of the Holy Heart of Mary...The strings of this royal harp are the virtues of Mary’s Heart.”[\[677\]](#) He further explained, “Sacred Scripture tells us that King David employed his harp on four great occasions and we see Jesus, the Son of David, using His Mystical Harp [His Mother’s Immaculate Heart] to accomplish four infinitely greater achievements.”[\[678\]](#)

- First, the mere sound of David’s harp “put to flight the evil spirit which possessed Saul.” [\[679\]](#) Similarly, Christ uses the virtues of Mary’s Heart to free the human race from the evil dominion of Satan.

- “Second, David used his harp to sing many psalms and canticles to the honor and glory of God.” Likewise, the Immaculate Heart offers “five types of canticles to praise the most Blessed Trinity.” These five canticles are: 1) of love, “the strongest, purest, most perfect love that ever was or shall be,” [\[680\]](#) 2) of praise and thanksgiving “for the benefits of Divine goodness on behalf of all creatures, for the Blessed Virgin Mary did not limit herself to thanking God for the infinite favors she received from His Hand, but she praised Him unceasingly for the graces He pours on all created things,” 3) of sorrow, anguish and bereavement at the sufferings and the death of her Son, 4) of triumph for all the victories won by herself as general of the great King’s armies over His enemies and, we may truly say, over Himself, having so often disarmed divine vengeance when it stood ready to destroy the world and punish it for its innumerable crimes,” and 5) of prophecy, “to announce the great designs of God for the future...” [\[681\]](#)

- Third, King David used his harp to praise God with joy. “In like manner, Christ, the second David, not only attuned His holy Mother’s Heart to praise and bless His divine majesty in every way, but He also induced Mary to seek her joy and bliss exclusively in His praises, and in all the acts she performed for His glory and in His Service.” [\[682\]](#)

- Fourth, King David’s harp “attracted other men to the praise of God, with hearts full of joy and gladness like his own. So, too, Christ the King attracts innumerable souls to the love and praise of His heavenly Father by the sweet sound of His precious harp—that is, by means of the blessed Heart of His glorious Mother.” [\[683\]](#)

The Evening Star, Our Lady of Hope, the Immaculate Heart—Mary chose to implicitly manifest these three titles at Pontmain. The Evening Star guides her children through the darkest nights, so they will not lose their way. Our Lady of Hope teaches us to approach her with confidence. And her Immaculate Heart, as she would later promise at Fatima, is our refuge and the path that leads us to God.

Of Our Lady Mary, the Evening Star, it can be truly said, “May she be a light to you in dark places, when all other lights go out.” [\[684\]](#)

THE VIRGIN OF PELLEVOISIN: LADY OF MERCY,
LADY OF THE SACRED HEART

“I choose the little ones and the weak for my glory.”

–Our Lady of Pellevoisin

“God has willed that all things come to us through Mary,” as St. Bernard of Clairvaux once wrote. That Our Lady always leads us to her Divine Son is proven repeatedly throughout history—in Tradition, in Scripture, and in true apparitions of the Modern Age. Five years after the Virgin came to Pontmain as the Evening Star and Mother of Hope, she again came to France—this time as the Lady of Mercy and of the Sacred Heart.

The story began in Paris when 32 year old Estelle Faguet, lady’s maid to the Countess Arthur de La Rouchefoucauld, fell gravely ill in May, 1875. The diagnosis was pulmonary tuberculosis, acute peritonitis, and an abdominal tumor. [685] Estelle would later speak of her sufferings, not only of body but of the mind. During her long illness, she often made acts of resignation to God’s Will, but then—when worrying about her parents and her orphan niece, of which she was the sole support—she would, as she said, falter in her heart.

“In the first days of September, after having begun alone several novenas, she made what she called her last will,” notes a late 19th century book in which Estelle’s memoirs are included. “A small grotto in honor of Our Lady of Lourdes had just been erected in the park at Poiriers. Estelle wrote a letter to the Blessed Virgin and, as she was unable to take the missive herself, she asked Mademoiselle Reiter to place it at the feet of Our Lady’s statue, concealing it well under the stones.” [686] Fifteen months later, this same letter would be found among the shrine’s stones and brought to Estelle’s employer, the countess. [687]

By December, the doctors had no hope for her. Her employers, carefully tending to her spiritual and physical needs, moved her to one of their homes in Pellevoisin. With a growing abdominal tumor and advanced consumption (tuberculosis), Estelle became so ill that even food and water caused her intense suffering. On February 10, 1876, the doctor said that she had only hours to live. She had already received the last sacraments. Although in great agony, Estelle was perfectly conscious and perfectly resigned. [688]

On Sunday evening, the 13th of February, Estelle requested that a candle be lit for her intentions at the local shrines of Our Lady of Victories and Our Lady of Lourdes. Her requests were honored the next day, Monday, February 14.

When Tuesday morning arrived, the still-suffering Estelle told the parish priest that the Blessed Virgin had come during the night. The priest, knowing that the patient was literally in her last agony, felt she might be hallucinating. On Wednesday, she said the Lady had again returned, this time promising her cure. The priest remained unconvinced. Estelle's anguish continued but, just as she said, it was on Saturday—Our Lady's Day—that she was miraculously cured.

“Fear Nothing;
You are My Daughter”

On February 19, 1876, the very day after her health was completely restored, Estelle wrote of what happened to her in the early hours of February 14: “I was trying to rest when suddenly the devil appeared at the foot of my bed. He was horrible, and at once began to make grimaces at me. I had scarcely perceived him when Our Blessed Lady appeared on the other side, at the corner of my bed. She wore a pure white woolen veil, which fell in three folds. I can never describe how beautiful she was; her complexion white and rose-tint, rather pale. Her sweet gentle eyes reassured me somewhat but not completely, for the devil, seeing the Blessed Virgin, drew back, dragging the curtain and the iron rod of my bed. This increased my terror, which became unendurable. I crouched down in bed. [The demon] did not speak but turned his back on me.” [\[689\]](#)

“The Blessed Virgin spoke to him sharply: ‘What brings you here? Do you not see that she wears my livery and that of my Son?’ He disappeared, gesticulating. Then she turned to me and said gently, ‘Fear nothing; you are my daughter.’ Then I remembered that from the age of fourteen, I had been a Child of Mary. I now felt less fear.”

“Have courage; be patient,” the Lady continued. “My Son will allow Himself to be prevailed upon. You will suffer five days longer in honor of the five wounds of my Son. On Saturday, you will either be dead or be cured. If my Son restores you to life, I wish you to publish my glory.”

During the next night, the Blessed Mother came again, this time to tell Estelle she would be cured on Saturday “because of your resignation and your patience.” However, Our Lady also reproved Estelle for the faults she had previously committed in this regard. They had seemed only small lapses or imperfections, but the grace of the Virgin's presence allowed the sick young woman to understand that any sin offends the good God. Of this revelation regarding her venial sins, Estelle wrote, "I would have longed to cry out for pardon but I could not; my grief overcame me...Oh, how sad I felt."

On the third evening since the first apparition, the Mother of Mercy appeared, again reassuring the mortally-ill Estelle, "By your resignation you have expiated your faults...Your good works and fervent prayers have touched my mother's heart, among others that little letter you wrote to me in September. What moved me were the words, 'See the sorrow of my parents. If I fail them, they are on the eve of begging bread. Remember, then, what you suffered when Your Son Jesus was stretched out upon the Cross.'" [\[690\]](#)

The fourth visitation was very similar to the third. During the fifth appearance of the Virgin Mary, Estelle asked if she should change her state in life.

"One can be saved in every state," the Lady answered. "Where you are, you can do a great deal of good." Then she spoke of what afflicts her most—"the want of respect shown by some people to my Divine Son in Holy Communion and the attitude taken for prayer, when at the same time the mind continues occupied with other things. I say this for people who pretend to be pious." With those words, the Mother of Mercy disappeared—and Estelle found herself cured.

Estelle's Prayer to Our Lady of Mercy

Not only did Estelle immediately write of what transpired in the five days before her wondrous restoration to perfect health, on the same day she also wrote a most beautiful prayer to the Virgin Mary, which we may make our own:

"O my good Mother, behold me in Thy hands. Look with pity on Thy poor servant. Do not permit the designs of Providence toward my unworthy self to be frustrated by my infidelity to grace. May Thy Jesus, Who dwelt in Thy Heart, and Who has this day deigned to visit mine, be my salvation and my only support. May He subdue in me that pride which has so often nearly caused my ruin. May He root out of my heart every evil inclination and completely destroy everything that does not tend to His glory and Thine.

"Most Holy Virgin, Who hast shown Thy power by granting me health of body, heal also my soul, so often the slave of sin. O my powerful Protectress, Thou Who art, after God, my consolation, Thou Who didst soothe my pain, Thou Who art the light of my soul, having revealed all my iniquities to me; Thou Who art my treasure, my strength, my joy, the hope of my life and of my eternal salvation, Thou hast said to me: You are my daughter.

“Thou canst not then reject my prayers. Deign to grant them and to have compassion on me as befits the Mother of my God, Who has shown such love and goodness to men. He is their Father; He has appointed Thee their Mother.

“Since Thou hast deigned to place me among Thy own privileged children, obtain for me all the grace necessary for the salvation of my soul. I promise Thee in return, O my good Mother, to do all in my power to become more worthy of Thy favors. Amen.”

The Messages of Pellevoisin

Estelle would see the Virgin Mary ten more times before the year's end, with the last apparition occurring on December 8, the Feast of the Immaculate Conception. Though no other person beheld the apparitions, Estelle's ecstasies were witnessed by many credible individuals, from lay people of high station to those in religious life.

What is particularly striking about the 15 Pellevoisin apparitions is Our Lady's solicitude for Estelle's person in her trials of soul and body. While the Virgin gently reproved Estelle in regard to her faults, often with a motherly smile, she also impressed upon her daughter the particular virtues she needed to practice. The Lady would insist that Estelle remain calm, by which she meant holy indifference—that is, a total lack of self-interest—in order to instill in the visionary's soul a greater love and confidence in God. In setting before us the example of Estelle, whose long-suffering eventually led to true resignation and ultimately her marvelous cure, the Blessed Mother was again telling the world that Our Lord knows and loves each one of us, so very intimately.

In the first five visits granted to Estelle before her complete healing, Our Lady not only showed herself as the Mother of Mercy, but also as the terror of demons. As St. Alphonsus wrote in a prayer to the Blessed Mother, “I do not fear devils for thou art more powerful than the whole of hell.”

At Pellevoisin, the Virgin Mary again revealed herself as Mediatrix of All Graces. It was in the last few apparitions that Estelle saw drops like rain falling from Our Lady's hands, in a manner similar to the 1830 visions of St.

Catherine Labouré.

Above all, however, the Blessed Mother first pointed to Jesus Christ, for at the first apparition she spoke of “the Five Wounds of My Son,” and by the last apparition, she would give the Church the sacramental known as the Sacred Heart Scapular.

Just as with any of Jesus’ or Mary’s expressions or actions as recorded in the Holy Scriptures, a series of sermons could be preached on every sentence uttered by the Virgin at Pellevoisin. Our Lady’s words, [691] given below in the order in which she spoke them to Estelle Faguet, were also intended for all poor sinners whom the Immaculate leads to Jesus, Our Lord and Savior:

- “If my Son has allowed Himself to be prevailed upon, it is because of your resignation and patience.”
- “I am all merciful and the Mistress [692] of my Son. Your good works and fervent prayers have touched my mother’s heart.”
- “If you want to serve me, be simple, and let your actions correspond to your words.”
- “One can be saved in every state (of life). Where you are, you can do a great deal of good...”
- “What afflicts me most is the want of respect shown by some people to my Divine Son in Holy Communion and the attitude taken for prayer when at the same time the mind continues occupied with other things. I say this for people who pretend to be pious.”
- “They will treat you...as a fool, but pay no attention to that. Be faithful to me; I will assist you.”
- “Be calm, my child, have patience. You will have sorrows, but I will be with you.”
- “His Heart bears so much love for mine, that He cannot refuse me any requests. Through me, He will touch the most hardened hearts.”
- “Is not your cure the proof of my power?” she asked, smiling, and then she added, “I am come especially for the conversion of sinners.”
- “For a long time, the treasures of my Son have been open; let them pray.” Saying this, Our Lady lifted from her breast a white scapular, on which there was the Sacred Heart of Jesus, saying, “I love this devotion.” She paused, and then she said, “It is here that I will be honored.”
- “Let them pray: I show them the example.”
- “I will remember the efforts you have made to be calm. It is not only for you that I ask this, but also for the Church and for France. In the Church, there is not the calm I desire. Let them pray and let them have confidence in me.” Growing sad, the Lady then said, “And France, what have I not done for her? How many warnings, and yet she has refused to listen! I can no longer restrain my Son. France will suffer. ” Then pausing once more, she said, “Courage and confidence. I have arranged all beforehand. So much the worse for those who may not be willing to believe you. Later on, they will recognize the truths of my words.”

- “I choose the little ones and the weak for my glory.”
- “You have not lost time today; you have worked for me.” (Estelle had hand-made a Scapular of the Sacred Heart, duplicating it as it was shown to her during the visions.)
- “My child, remember my words. Repeat them often; may they strengthen and console you in your trials.”
- Of the Sacred Heart Scapular, Our Lady said, “...nothing will be more acceptable to me than to see this livery on each of my children, and that they all must endeavor to repair the outrages received by my Son in the Sacrament of His Love. See the graces I will bestow on those who will wear it with confidence, and who will assist you in propagating it. These graces come from my Son; He can refuse me nothing.”

As the Virgin spoke those last words, Estelle saw an abundance of rain-drops fall from Our Lady’s hands, and in each drop could be read such graces as piety, salvation, confidence, conversion, health, and many others.

“What more proper to excite in our hearts both the contrition of our sins and love of God, than the sight of this (Sacred Heart) Scapular with the crown of thorns, the cross, and the jet of blood and water! Pellevoisin is the complement of Paray-le-Monial [the 16th century apparitions of Jesus to St. Margaret Mary Alacoque, wherein Our Lord Himself asked for devotion to His Sacred Heart]...it is also the echo and resumé of the century in which Our Heavenly Queen came to request prayer and penance.” [\[693\]](#)

VISION OF SILENCE: OUR LADY OF KNOCK AND THE APOCALYPSE

“And when he had opened the seventh seal, there was silence in heaven, as it were for half an hour.”

–Apocalypse 8:1

When during a downpour of rain, the Virgin Mary, St. Joseph, and St. John the Evangelist appeared in the tiny hamlet of Knock, County Mayo, Ireland, the trio said not a word. The date was Thursday, August 21, 1879, the eve of the octave of the Assumption of the Virgin Mary. [694] Emanating a brilliant light that all could see, the one-time apparition took place outside, at the southern gable of a small church dedicated to St. John the Baptist. Any villagers who saw the light and came to the site beheld the vision, the symbolism of which appears to point to Chapter 8 of the Apocalypse.

The Knock events began at seven o'clock that August evening when a 15 year-old girl, Margaret Beirne, was sent to lock the church doors. Upon completing her task, she noticed a brightness over the building. Probably due to the inclement weather, she didn't investigate but hurried home. Mary McLoughlin, the priest's housekeeper, was on her way to visit Margaret's mother, the Widow Beirne, and passed within some distance from the church. Though the skies were grey, she noticed an unusual light by the south gable. In this radiance, she could see three figures of the Virgin, St. Joseph, and a bishop. Walking in the pouring rain to visit the Beirne family, she thought perhaps Fr. Cavanaugh had ordered new statues for the church. While at the Beirne home, she never thought to mention the event.

Between eight and a quarter after the hour, Miss McLoughlin concluded her visit. Mary Beirne, the older sister of the young doorkeeper, offered to walk with her. As they passed the church, Mary Beirne saw the light and the figures, and then asked Miss McLoughlin about the beautiful new statues. As both got closer to the church, Mary noticed the figures were moving and exclaimed, “They are not statues; they are moving. It's the Blessed Virgin!”

“Between the wall enclosing the church grounds and the church itself was an uncut meadow; three persons were seemingly standing on top of the small grass, about a foot or two from the snow-bright gable wall. They could not be statues, as their feet did not press down the meadow grass that supported them.” [695] At the suggestion of the practical housekeeper, the awe-struck Mary Beirne immediately ran home to tell her family. Within the next hour, Miss McCloughlin left the apparition to inform Archdeacon Cavanaugh who, to his life-long regret, did not that evening come to the church.

For his part, Archdeacon Cavanaugh, pastor of the church, was deeply devoted to the Immaculate Conception, and it is said he often referred to the Virgin as “the ever Immaculate Mother of God.” [696] He also had a great devotion to the poor souls in Purgatory, for whom in May of that same year, he “commenced to offer one hundred Masses for them; this act of charity he completed on the very morning of the most memorable day Knock was ever to know.” [697] Later that day, he visited parishioners in outlying districts, but a heavy drizzle began in the afternoon and by 7 p.m. became a downpour. Exhausted and drenched, Fr. Cavanaugh misunderstood his housekeeper. He would always regret it, but he later reflected, “If I had seen the apparition and if I had been the first to speak of it, many things would have been said that cannot now be advanced.” [698]

What the People Saw at Knock

In the small village, word quickly spread, with the result that fourteen people, ranging in age from six to seventy-five, later testified before the Diocesan Commission that they had seen the apparition. Among the fourteen were three children (one girl and two boys), six women, two teenage boys, and three men. A fifteenth witness, Patrick Walsh, lived half a mile away from the church. He reported that about 9 p.m. that night, he saw from his field a great golden light by the church which he did not investigate. When he made inquiries the next day, he was told of the apparition. [699]

What those who did investigate saw that night were three dazzling figures, standing about two feet above the ground but a little distance from the gable. To the left and behind the figures was an altar with a large cross. On the altar, in front of the cross, a young lamb stood, its face toward the west. Around the altar were hovering angels; their wings fluttered and their faces were at all times turned toward the altar and away from onlookers.

Speaking as an official witness, Mary Beirne stated, “The altar was under the window, which is in the gable and a little to the west near the centre, or a little beyond it...The altar appeared to be like the altars in use in the Catholic Church, large and full-sized. It had no linens, no candles, nor any special ornamentations; it was only a plain altar.” [700]

All three figures were clothed in an indescribable silvery white and, as 14 year old witness Patrick Hill phrased it, “the figures were full round as if they had a body and life. They said nothing; but as we approached them, they seemed to go back a little toward the gable.” [701]

“Our Lady’s robe, strikingly white, was covered by a large white cloak that fastened at the throat and fell in ample folds to her ankles. On her head was a brilliant crown surmounted with glittering crosses and over the forehead where the crown fitted the brow was a beautiful rose. She held her hands extended apart and upward, in a position that none of the witnesses could have previously seen in any statue or picture, ‘in the same position as a priest holds his hands when praying at holy Mass,’” as one witness phrased it. [702] Her feet were bare, one was slightly poised ahead of the other. The Virgin’s eyes were cast upward toward heaven; she seemed to be praying.

At Our Lady’s right stood St. Joseph, his hair and beard slightly grey, his head respectfully inclined toward the Virgin. At her left was St. John the Evangelist, vested as a bishop and wearing a short mitre, similar to that of the eastern-rite patriarchs, instead of the taller bishop’s mitre of the western Church. Standing at an angle to Our Lady, St. John was also at the Gospel side of the altar and the lamb. In fact, Mary Beirne said that “his right arm [was] inclined at an angle outwardly, towards the Blessed Virgin.” [703] In his left hand, he held a book, while the index and middle fingers of his right hand were raised, in the manner of a Catholic priest giving a blessing or a speaker who is making a point.

Three of the witnesses (a boy, a young teen man, and a woman) dared to go inside the church wall and right up to the apparition. Young Patrick Hill went up very near to the three figures, later saying: “I distinctly beheld the Virgin Mary, life size, standing about two feet or so above the ground.” After describing her clothes and positioning, he said, “I saw her eyes, the balls, the pupils, and the iris of each.” He moved closer to St. John and looked at the pages of the book, stating, “I saw lines and letters.” [704] The written language he beheld was unknown to him.

During the apparition, none of the witnesses spoke to each other, but each responded to it in their own way. The 20 year-old sacristan Dominic Beirne, a brother of Mary’s, was so moved that manly tears sprang from his eyes. An older woman, Bridget Trench, was so taken with the Virgin that she cast herself at the Lady’s feet, trying to embrace them. But she felt nothing, for her arms seemed to grasp empty air. And so she remained there, on her knees before the Mother of God, praying the Rosary for over an hour.

During the entire time of the apparition, there was no let-up of the teeming rain. Everyone also noticed that the figures themselves and the grass beneath were not wet. Bridget Trench later confirmed she had carefully felt the ground under the Virgin but, despite the downpour and the wind blowing from the south, it was perfectly dry. In addition, unlike other true apparitions, this one did not disappear from sight. Instead, due to the weather and the late hour, the people began to leave, one by one, around 11 p.m. The last to leave was the elderly Bridget who, in her simple faith, did not want to go but believed that the heavenly figures would always remain there.

The Secret of Knock

At Knock, Our Lady appeared as both Queen and Mediatrix. Her hands, as previously mentioned, were raised in the exact manner of a priest saying the Holy Mass. A priest acts as intercessor for the people. At every Marian apparition of the Modern Age, the Virgin has in some way implied her power as Mediatrix. At Knock, so intent was her prayer of intercession, that she kept her eyes uplifted toward the God that she always sees; not once did she look down upon the people.

“The mission of Mary to Knock was not one of rebuke or complaint against the people...Neither was it a call to do penance...No, Mary’s mission to her faithful Irish people that day was rather one of compassion and comfort, with an implied admonition, no doubt, of dangers ahead, and the imperative need of prayer,” wrote the Very Rev. Jarlath Royanne, O.Cist. [705] But this implied admonition, as we shall see, was not only for the good Catholics of Ireland.

“The two saints who appeared with Mary were the two people—next to Our Lord Himself—who were the most closely associated with her while she was in this world.” [706] St. Joseph, her most chaste husband, cared for her and protected her and Jesus. He is the head of the Holy Family, the model of husbands and fathers, protector of virgins, patron of a holy death, and Patron of the Universal Church.

St. John, the only apostle to stand with Our Lady at the Foot of the Cross, was the one to whom Jesus gave His last earthly command, “Behold thy mother.” [707] On the day Our Lord died, St. John represented every disciple of Jesus. And so he took the Virgin Mary to his own. In the Church, St. John is known as the Virgin’s son in the order of grace, the “beloved disciple,” “the one whom Jesus loved,” and the apostle of the Sacred Heart, for which cause St. Ambrose said of him, “It is not strange that St. John should have spoken better of the mystery of the Incarnation than the others did; he lived at the source of heavenly secrets.” [708]

Recall that at Knock, “St. John was garbed as a bishop and reading from a Mass book. He stood next to the altar on which was the sacrificial lamb. St. John was Our Lady’s priest. After the Resurrection, he celebrated Mass for her, renewing the sacrifice of Calvary, bringing her Son down upon the altar.” [709] All of these points are imperative, but there is something more to be considered of St. John’s role at Knock: In his entire manner, the saint seemed to be stressing a matter of great importance, as though he was reading aloud from the book in his hand.

Therefore, if one wishes to understand the message of Knock, one must read the Apocalypse. How is this known? The answer is the living lamb on the altar. Consider that in his Gospel, St. John twice records that Our Lord’s precursor, St. John the Baptist (for whom the church was named), hailed Our Lord as “the Lamb of God.” [710] However, 28 times in the Apocalypse, the Evangelist himself refers to the risen Savior as “lamb.” [711]

The second hint is the silence of the Vision of Knock. Chapter 8 of the Apocalypse opens with this verse: “And when he had opened the seventh seal, there was silence in heaven, as it were for half an hour.” We recall that in the Scriptures, the word “heaven” denotes the kingdom of God on earth, the Church—i.e., there was silence in the Church, as it were for half an hour. The Haydock commentary states [of the words] “there was silence in heaven: which is to represent as it were a general consternation, and an expectation of dreadful events at the opening of the seventh seal, and when seven Angels stood prepared to sound seven trumpets.” [712]

In writing of the Apocalypse and the silent message of Knock, the Rev. Fr. James, O.F.M., Professor of Philosophy at the University College of Cork, observed, “The artistry is that of Mary. She would have us see, in the apocalypse of Knock, the eternal issue of that struggle which is the crisis within every other crisis that takes place in time. There are many who do not even know in what that crisis consists; and that is part of the tragedy of the present situation. But it is nothing less than the eternal struggle of the archenemy of mankind for the possession, body and mind and spirit, of a humanity that belongs to Mary.”

“To the people of that time, emerging out of a dark night when they had proved their fidelity to the Mass, the sacrifice of Redemption, it was given as a consolation and the poor old woman who expressed her gratitude was the voice of Ireland. But to the people of the present time, confronted with a new menace, the apparition at Knock is a challenge. It is no longer a question of offering the sacrifice of Redemption upon a bare rock, without the externals of religion, but of extending this very sacrifice of Redemption into lives that are fully and militantly Catholic. Catholic in the true balance of prayer and action, of contemplation and apostolate; Catholic in their social as well as their individual activities. To be worthy of the faith of our Fathers, and of the Queen of heaven who has come to us, Knock must become a school where we shall learn the secret of true sanctity; then we shall go forth from it in the secure and conscious protection of Mary who is Queen of the Church on earth as she is Queen of the Church in heaven.” [\[713\]](#)

And so we return to Fatima, the crown of all Marian apparitions of the Modern Age, where Our Lady gave a Great Secret, of which Sr. Lucia said was in the Gospel and the Apocalypse, once specifically referring to Apocalypse chapters 8-13. If, as it seems, the silent message and symbols of Our Lady of Knock were also doing the same, the Mother of God was alerting us to the knowledge that the half-hour’s silence in heaven (the Church) would soon begin. It was not until 1917, when the third stage of the Great Revolt against God arrived with the rise of the Bolshevik Revolution in Russia, that the Lord deigned to give the peoples of the world another incentive toward conversion when the Virgin came to Fatima.

Through the hands of Our Lady of the Rosary came the marvelous and unprecedented sign, the Great Miracle of the Sun. While the complete Fatima message, the Great Secret, and the Miracle reveal many dogmatic and doctrinal themes, Fatima’s thesis is true devotion to the Immaculate Heart of Mary who, like her figure-type Queen Esther of old, wishes to save God’s people from spiritual and physical annihilation. It is through this Immaculate Heart that countless souls in Russia and, later, other nations will be converted and saved.

For the sake of our own ongoing conversions and that of our fellow sinners, may we heed Our Lady’s many requests for prayer and sacrifice. As the modern-day battle for souls increases in intensity, it shall certainly be as Sr. Lucia once said, “...the triumph of the Immaculate Heart of Mary will arrive when a sufficient number of people have fulfilled the message.” [\[714\]](#)

PART 17

The Dominion of the King and Queen

“It is certain that only Jesus Christ, God and Man, is King, but Mary as Mother of the King and associated to Him in the work of divine redemption participates in His royal dignity.”

-Pope Pius XII, Radio Message to Fatima on May 13, 1946

Since veneration of Our Lady’s Immaculate Heart honors Our Lord’s Sacred Heart, it is probably no coincidence when at Fatima the Virgin Mary first chose to reveal her Immaculate Heart, cruelly pierced by a circle of thorns, during the second apparition in the month of June, the month of the Sacred Heart. With this singular symbolic imagery, the Queen’s Immaculate Heart identified with that of her Son, Savior, and King. Pope Pius XII expressed the depths of these mysteries of the King and Queen in the following way: “Jesus is king of the Eternal Ages by nature and by right of conquest; through Him, with Him, and subordinate to Him, Mary is Queen by grace, by divine relationship, by right of conquest and by singular election. And her kingdom is as vast as that of her Son and God, since nothing is excluded from her dominion.” [\[715\]](#)

Jesus, King of the Eternal Ages

“We lisp like children when we speak of things divine,” [\[716\]](#) especially when we speak of the very nature of God. Still, because our faith teaches that Divine Revelation is a world of mystery but not of contradiction, we believe all that God has revealed to us, including the truths about Himself. [\[717\]](#)

Jesus is King of the Eternal Ages because in His Divine Nature, He is God, the Second Person of the Holy Trinity, the Alpha and Omega. In the Old Testament, the mystery of the Blessed Trinity was not formally revealed but only foreshadowed, as this book earlier mentioned, in accordance with what St. Bonaventure called “the general law of preparation.” This law refers to the way God provided Divine Revelation to make ready the human race for His “undoing of the awful consequences of Original Sin, taken in conjunction with man’s response to God’s overtures.” [\[718\]](#) This “law of preparation” applies to all the truths of Faith, including the Revelation of the Holy Trinity as well as the Lord's plan of Redemption.

The first implicit hint of the Old Testament's "law of preparation" for the revelation of the Triune God appeared in the history of creation when the Lord said, "Let us make man to our image and likeness." [719] St. Augustine noted similar utterances from God about His plurality: "Behold, Adam is become as one of us," [720] and "Let us go down, and there confound their tongue." [721] The triple Sanctus of Isaias, "Holy, holy, holy, the Lord God of Hosts," and the triple blessing recorded in Numbers, [722] are also opaque heralds of the sublime mystery of the Holy Trinity, but there are many others.

The law of preparation was also heard in paradise lost, with the Lord's veiled promise of "the woman...and her seed." [723] In His curse upon the serpent, the Lord God uttered the prophecy of the proto-evangelium, the first good news: "I will put enmities between thee and the woman, and thy seed and her seed: she shall crush thy head, and thou shalt lie in wait for her heel." [724]

Although our first parents could not know that four thousand years would pass before the fulfillment of the Lord's words, much less understand their full meaning, this first prophecy foretold the Virgin Mary ("the woman") and Jesus Christ ("her seed"). In the proto-evangelium, God bound together Mother and Son, the Mediatrix and the Redeemer of the human race.

Christ is King by Nature as God and Man

Before His Passion, Jesus made clear His Divine Nature when He said, "Before Abraham was made, I am." [725] The Second Person of the Holy Trinity, He is "the Word," the Eternally Begotten, consubstantial with the Father. St. John the beloved Evangelist phrased this mystery very simply: "In the beginning, the Word was with God, and the Word was God." [726]

"It has long been a common custom to give to Christ the metaphorical title of 'King,' because of the high degree of perfection by which He excels all creatures," [727] explained Pope Pius XII, affirming what the Church has always taught: "Christ—our Teacher, our Priest and Redeemer—is our King by reason of His eternal Divinity, but he is also King as man." [728]

When Christ chose to assume a human nature, the Word Incarnate received from the Godhead the royal dignity as the rightful attribute of His humanity. [729]

As the Church also teaches in Quas Primas, Christ is King by right of nature as Man because He gave His Life to offer us Redemption.

Accordingly, He has the right to rule in the hearts and the wills of men because He has purchased us “with a great price.” [730] It is “by His grace and inspiration He so subjects our free will as to incite us to the most noble endeavors.” [731]

“He is the King of hearts, too, by reason of His ‘charity which surpasseth all knowledge.’ (Eph. 3:19)...But if we ponder this matter more deeply, we cannot but see that the title and power of King belongs to Christ as Man in the strict and proper sense, too. For it is only as Man that He may be said to have received from the Father ‘power, and glory, and a kingdom’ (Dan. 7:14), since the Word of God [Jesus]...has all things in common with Him, and therefore has necessarily supreme and absolute dominion over all things created.” [732]

Christ is King also by right of conquest: “But he is King of men by a special title, for we are His subjects by right of conquest. Under the domination of Satan, reduced to the servitude of sin from that fatal moment in which Adam sinned, involving us all in his ruin, we have been freed by Christ from captivity, and we are now justly subject to his salutary rule.” [733]

“The Son of God, Who made us, was made one of us: and He rules us as Our King, because He is our Creator, Who made us,” said St. Augustine. “As King, He fought for us, as Priest He offered Himself for us...In Him, let us rejoice.” [734]

Christ’s Kingdom, As It Should be on Earth

The Kingship of Christ is, above all, spiritual in character and, as Pope Leo XIII declared, it is exercised “by truth, by justice and, above all, charity.” [735] Jesus said His kingdom is “not of this world” but it is both spiritual and temporal. On earth, His Kingdom is the Catholic Church, the One Supernatural, Supra-national Society. The Lord’s Kingdom reigns within each of the Church’s members who live in the state of sanctifying grace: “For lo, the kingdom of God is within you.” [736]

Christ’s Temporal Kingship is also intended to be shared by the rulers of natural governments, because God “wants order in the works of His hands. So the world is meant to mirror forth, however imperfectly, the unity of the Mystical Body in heaven, for the social life [of Heaven] of which we are meant to prepare here on earth,” as explained by Fr. Fahey. “Accordingly, the history of the world...turns around the social acceptance and rejection of the Kingship of Christ, and thus the attitude of States to the one supernatural society and to the Indirect Power of the Catholic Church is the keystone of the arch of the world's social order.” [737]

“We lost supernatural life by original sin and we need Divine Grace that we may live an ordered life,” as Fr. Fahey reminds us, “yet this society proclaims that one can be a good man and true while utterly indifferent to the source of grace, Our Lord Jesus Christ and His Divinity.” [738]

In giving our complete fidelity to Christ, we cooperate with His work because “... it is for Jesus Christ as King, in virtue of the work of Redemption which He must accomplish, to conquer His Kingdom and defend His faithful subjects against the enemies who strive to overthrow His reign here below.” [739] Christ's authority in the temporal order “is not here a question of commanding and legislating in view of conducting human society to its common good in the natural order, which belongs to the civil power, but of opposing everything that could hinder the progress of the supernatural life and the social order consonant with it, and of obtaining from the rulers in the civil order the cooperation necessary therefore. This power forms part of the attributes of the Spiritual Kingship, for it is at its service and is, so to say, its instrument.” [740]

His Spiritual Kingship is also “militant and the struggle against moral evil must go on as long as men remain here below exposed to suffering and death, to corruption and sin. Only in eternity shall the triumph be complete, by the victory of the good and the defeat of the wicked...[but] we must keep in mind the twofold aspect of Christ's Headship: the negative aspect of His combat against sin and His wearing down of evil, which belongs to His Kingship, and the positive one of uniting souls to God, which is the function of His Priesthood.” [741]

Upon Christ, therefore, Who is Mediator, Prophet, Priest, Savior and King, all things converge. All creatures are subject to Him, and He offers His Sacred Humanity and Divinity as King and Priest to the Father. “All things are put upon Him,” says St. Paul, “...and when all things shall be subdued unto Him, then the Son also Himself shall be subject unto Him that put all things under Him, that God may be all in all.” [742]

Why Mary is Queen

Our Lord also gave to the Church and each individual soul His Mother, the Queen of Heaven and the Help of Christians. As Pope Pius XII stated, “Mary is Queen by grace, by divine relationship, by right of conquest and by singular election. And her kingdom is as vast as that of her Son and God, since nothing is excluded from her dominion.”

- Our Lady is Queen by grace because, through the foreseen merits of her Son and Savior, she was preserved from Original Sin from the first moment of her existence. She is the Immaculate Conception, who never committed the slightest actual sin. Our Lady was not only conceived in sanctifying grace, but that grace grew abundantly as her life progressed; it is for this reason that the angel Gabriel saluted her, “Hail, full of grace.”

- She is Queen by divine relationship because God chose her to be His Mother, the cause of salvation. The central and primary truth of Christianity is the fact that “the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us.” [743] That God would become Man was the great secret, “hidden from ages and generations,” [744] until it was manifested at Bethlehem when the Christ Child was found “with Mary his Mother.” [745]

Our Lady’s relationship to each Person of the Holy Trinity explains her divine relationship. She is the first adoptive daughter of God the Father, Who created her highest in grace because she was to be the Virgin Mother of God the Son. She is the Virgin Bride of God the Holy Ghost, Who “infused into her soul the gifts of grace merited by the Son [Rom. 5:5] and miraculously brought about the conception of the Divine Word in her womb.” [746]

- She is Queen by right of conquest and by singular election because Our Lady, the New Eve, gave free consent to her office in the mystery of the Incarnation and in the work of Redemption. The fulfillment of the Genesis 3:15 prophecy of “the woman...and her seed” commenced with the Virgin’s Fiat, “Be it done to me according to Thy Word.”

Of the natural and supernatural unity between the Savior and His Mother, Pope Benedict XV wrote, “To such extent did Mary suffer, and almost die with her suffering and dying Son; to such extent did she surrender her maternal rights over her Son for man’s salvation, and immolated Him—insofar as she could—in order to appease the justice of God, that we may rightly say she redeemed the human race together with Christ.” [747]

Pope Pius XI stated, “From the nature of His work, the Redeemer ought to have associated His Mother with His work. For this reason, We invoke her under the title of Co-Redemptrix. She gave us the Savior, she accompanied Him in the work of Redemption as far as the Cross itself, sharing with Him the sorrows of the agony and of the death in which Jesus consummated the Redemption of mankind.” [748]

For all these reasons and more, Our Lady’s Kingdom is as vast at that of her Son's. "She shares in His kingdom," says St. Albert the Great, "because she shared in His suffering for the human race."

Fr. Garrigou-Lagrange, O.P. echoes the same truth: "Mary was associated with Christ's victory over Satan, sin and death by her union with Him in His humiliations and sufferings. She is, therefore, really associated with Him in His Kingship." [\[749\]](#)

Pope Pius XII declared: "It is certain that only Jesus Christ, God and Man, is King, but Mary as Mother of the King and associated to Him in the work of divine redemption participates in His royal dignity." [\[750\]](#)

The Immaculate Heart, Pattern of the Sacred Heart

It is in Our Lady's Immaculate Heart that Divine Love "gathers all the perfections of His divinity...and brings them together in the heart of the august Queen of all angels. It is fitting that, having chosen Mary to be His Mother and having become her Son, Our Lord should establish such a perfect resemblance between Mother and Son." [\[751\]](#)

As St. John Eudes taught, "In His infinite goodness, He also gave her to us to be our Queen, our Mother and our sure Refuge in all our needs. He therefore wishes us to honor her as He honors her and to love her as He loves her." [\[752\]](#)

Finally, there is another sublime consideration of Our Lady's Queenship: It was from the Immaculate Heart that the Sacred Heart drew its own Likeness. As St. John Eudes stated, "His divine love most perfectly draws its own image in His Mother's amiable heart." [\[753\]](#) What a beautiful truth upon which to contemplate—that Christ traced His very Heart after the Mother He created.

Since Jesus is King of All Hearts, it follows that Mary is Queen of All Hearts because They are united in all things. And since the Kingdom of Jesus Christ also belongs to Our Lady, it is the one and only Immaculate Heart who still says to us today, "Whatsoever He shall tell you, do ye." [\[754\]](#)

THE MYSTERY OF THE SACRED HEART DEVOTION

“Take up my yoke upon you, and learn of Me, because I am meek, and humble of heart: and you shall find rest to your souls.”

–Matt. 11:29

In the month of June, in which the Virgin showed the three children her Sorrowful and Immaculate Heart, the Church honors the Sacred Heart of Jesus, Who wishes us to return His love with our own. The most Holy Heart of Our Lord is so intimately connected with our last end, that He gives us many means “to make reparation to His Heart for the neglect of His love, to pay honour to His Heart, to place our trust in His Heart, to grow in our love for Our Father in heaven, to work to establish and extend the reign of His Heart, and to afford Him the occasion of pouring forth upon men the treasures of His Heart.” [755] In all these things, the Lord once more demonstrates to us the mysteries of His Will—for God Himself usually chooses to act through mankind.

From whence comes the idea of devotion to the Sacred Heart of Jesus? “It is popularly believed that Devotion to the Sacred Heart of Jesus originated with the revelations which Our Blessed Lord granted to St. Margaret Mary Alacoque and that St. Claude de la Colombière, St. Margaret Mary's spiritual director, was the first to preach that devotion to the people. But this is not true. What is true, however, is that the enormous importance of the mission which St. Margaret Mary received from Our Lord Himself and the great zeal with which Father de la Colombière and many other priests of the Society of Jesus labored to fulfill the express desires of the Sacred Heart for spreading of this devotion to the universal Church have unduly obscured the role of St. John Eudes as the Father, Doctor and Apostle of this beautiful devotion.” [756]

As St. Gregory the Great had said, “Just as the dove finds nourishment in hollow places, so the simple soul seeks in the wounds of Christ the food that makes it strong.” [757] Church history shows that saints like Bonaventure, Bernard, Francis of Assisi, Mechtilde (sometimes called Matilda), the Venerable Abbot Louis of Bloys, and Gertrude (of whom the latter strongly promoted religious piety to the Sacred Heart) held a special adoration and love toward Our Lord in His Passion. Their constancy was displayed with interior and exterior acts in veneration of His Five Holy Wounds or His Sacred Body pierced with a lance. In fact, “the faithful followers of Christ realized from very early times that the piercing of the sacred side of Jesus on the Cross by the lance of Longinus bore a deep and mysterious meaning, far beyond the mere physical act of a public executioner to assure himself that his victim is dead.” [758]

“For a long time, however, the mystic significance of this event was associated only with the origin of the Church of Christ. Just as Eve, the spouse of Adam, had come forth from the side of her husband when God had cast a deep sleep upon him, so the Church, the Spouse of Christ, issued from His sacred wounded side when He had slept in death; for, from the sacred side of Jesus wounded by the lance there gushed forth blood and water, symbols of the origin of the Church of Christ and the fulness of redemption and grace which flowed from His Passion and death upon the souls of men ransomed by His Precious Blood and washed in the waters of Baptism. Thus too, the wounding of the heart referred to in the Song of Solomon—‘vulnerasti cor meum’ (Canticles 4:9)—was thought of in this context as the love of Jesus Christ for His Holy Spouse, the Church.” [759]

In the life and mission of St. John Eudes, who studied upon the piety, practices, and doctrines expounded by previous saints, we once again see “the general law of preparation,” in which God unveils His plan of redemption according to mankind’s response. The truth is that, in a remarkable manner, St. John Eudes drew from Divine Revelation the sprouting seeds of this devotion, carefully tending to them so that, at the proper time willed by God, the flower of the Sacred Heart devotion bloomed.

This saint, who from his earliest years held an ardent devotion to what he called “the Admirable Heart of Mary,” was led by the same Immaculate Heart to a closer love for the Sacred Heart of Jesus, Our Savior. This explains why in his writings the saint never separated the two Hearts, and in this he was right. The holy Mother of God always leads souls to her Divine Son. In the words of Cardinal Pie, the Devotion to the Sacred Heart of Jesus is “the very quintessence of Christianity and the substantial summary and compendium of all religion.” [760]

Object and Acts of the Sacred Heart Devotion

“To designate this threefold object of the devotion to the Sacred Heart, St. John Eudes distinguished three Hearts in Jesus, namely, His divine Heart (indicating His uncreated love), His spiritual Heart (indicating the love of His soul, His human will and higher faculties), and His corporeal Heart (indicating the echo of love in the bodily organ which is its symbol and the seat of its emotional warmth). These expressions are no longer in use but they convey a doctrine which has not been altered with the ages. St. John Eudes hastens to add that these three Hearts are but one absolutely single Heart, filled with infinite love for the Holy Trinity and inconceivable charity for mankind; for, he says, the divine Heart of Jesus is the soul, the life and the heart of both His spiritual Heart and His corporeal Heart.” [\[761\]](#)

St. John Eudes summed up four general headings of acts which constitute this devotion, as follows:

- 1) To adore the Sacred Heart of Jesus.
- 2) To praise, bless, glorify and thank Him for His love.
- 3) To ask pardon for our offenses against His great love and to make reparation for them.
- 4) To love Him in return for all His love and beg Him to establish within our hearts the reign of His holy love.

“When all this labor of love had been accomplished and the ground so well prepared for worldwide acceptance of this highly important devotion, Our Blessed Lord appeared to the holy Visitation nun, St. Margaret Mary Alacoque, and confided to her the desires of His most Sacred Heart. Jesus Christ Himself picked this saintly religious to be the divinely appointed instrument for the diffusion of devotion to His Sacred Heart throughout the length and breadth of Christendom...” [\[762\]](#)

“Behold this Heart,
which has so loved men”

In a series of late 17th century apparitions, Our Lord spoke to St. Margaret Mary Alacoque. In the fourth apparition (also referred to as the “Great Apparition”), He showed to her His Heart, opening with these beautiful words, “Behold this Heart, which has so loved men.” For her own part, St. Margaret Mary wrote, “This Heart was shown me as on a throne of flames, more dazzling than the sun and transparent as crystal, with that adorable wound, and surrounded with a crown of thorns which signified the pricks caused by our sins. And above there was a cross, which signified that from the first moment of His Incarnation—that is to say as soon as this Heart was formed—the Cross was planted in It, and which His sacred humanity would have to suffer during His whole lifetime and His sacred Passion.”

[\[763\]](#)

In very human terms, the Sacred Heart of Jesus described to the saint His love for mankind, speaking of a love that makes His Heart glow, a Heart that feels grateful for love returned, a Heart that is “sensitive, suffering, compassionate” and a Heart which expresses other human sentiments, like joy, contentment, affliction, and grief. [764]

As a result, many view that the “Heart of Jesus, then, is to be considered under two aspects: both as glowing with love for men and cruelly offended by their ingratitude.” [765]

Yet there is much more to this devotion, because it is not only for us that Christ died. The Heart of Our Savior teaches us how to love God the Father and God the Holy Ghost. He teaches us how to love the woman whom He chose to be His Virgin Mother. Finally, He teaches us how to love mankind and even ourselves. So often we hear that mankind is evil and that we were not worth Christ’s sacrifice. That is true—we are undeserving. Of ourselves, we are nothing. Still, we are not totally worthless, because we were purchased at a great price. [766] We have no right to squander such a ransom.

Never should we forget our great worth is due only to God Himself, Who “so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son; that whosoever believeth in Him, may not perish, but may have life everlasting.” [767] Jesus is the Word made flesh. We should not forget that the Son’s great love—for His Father and for mankind—caused Him to willingly choose to incarnate as God-made-Man and die in reparation for our sins.

No mere man could ever do what Jesus did, for only God could offer to God such a worthy recompense for the multitude of offenses made throughout all time, by all mankind, against the Lord our God. Jesus Christ—the Second Person of the Holy Trinity—chose to live a life of holy poverty and die a most cruel death for our offenses. By doing so, He offers all of us another chance at eternal life. God the Father lovingly allowed this; and so, He sent His Son into the world, He accepted His Son’s sacrifice and glorified Him. As for us, we can never be grateful enough to the Divine Trinity. We, too, should want to glorify Him.

“Consequently, what we wish to honour in the devotion to the Heart of Jesus is not only His physical Heart but also His spiritual Heart. In other words, His physical Heart, the symbol of His love and of His whole inner life, does not make up the entire object of the devotion; this object also comprises His spiritual Heart, the principle and seat of His love and of His whole inner life.” [768] However, as “the Person of Jesus is the general and ultimate object of the devotion, we may also say: it is devotion to Jesus, considered in His Heart, the symbol, principle, and seat of His love; or [in other words] it is devotion to Jesus, viewed in His love, produced and symbolized by His Heart.” [769] This view is in accord with St. Thomas Aquinas’ principle, which he stated as follows: “Honour is, properly speaking, rendered to the entire person. Even when we honour the foot or the hand of a person, we do not venerate these parts in themselves, but only by reason of the entire person to whom they belong.” [770]

Constancy to the Sacred Heart, Needed More than Ever

“The most striking characteristic of the teaching of St. John Eudes on devotion to the Sacred Heart—as indeed of his whole teaching on the spiritual life—is that Christ is always its centre. Through Christ, with Christ, in Christ —per Ipsum, cum Ipso et in Ipso—all devotion and all piety achieves its end.” [771]

Pope Pius XI, in his 1928 encyclical Miserentissimus Redemptor (On Reparation to the Sacred Heart), explained and reinforced the need for this devotion, but consider how much more, in these days, his insight applies: “Now, how great is the necessity of this expiation or reparation, more especially in this our age, will be manifest to everyone who, as we said at the outset, will examine the world, ‘seated in wickedness’ (1 Jn. 5:19), with his eyes and with his mind. For from all sides the cry of the peoples who are mourning comes up to us, and their princes or rulers have indeed stood up and met together as one against the Lord and against His Church (Cf. Psalm 2: 2). Throughout those regions indeed, we see that all rights both human and Divine are confounded. Churches are thrown down and overturned, religious men and sacred virgins are torn from their homes and are afflicted with abuse, with barbarities, with hunger and imprisonment; bands of boys and girls are snatched from the bosom of their mother the Church, and are induced to renounce Christ, to blaspheme and to attempt the worst crimes of lust; the whole Christian people, sadly disheartened and disrupted, are continually in danger of falling away from the faith, or of suffering the most cruel death. These things in truth are so sad that you might say that such events foreshadow and portend the ‘beginning of sorrows,’ that is to say of those that shall be brought by the man of sin, ‘who is lifted up above all that is called God or is worshipped’ (2 Thess. 2: 4).” [772]

The Pope’s words regarding all that the Church and mankind were already suffering by 1928 bear an uncanny resemblance to that which in 1917 the Virgin of Fatima foretold if her requests were not heeded: “[Russia] will spread her errors throughout the world, causing wars and persecutions of the Church. The good will be martyred, the Holy Father will have much to suffer, various nations will be annihilated.” [\[773\]](#)

At Fatima, in June—the month of the Sacred Heart—the Virgin succinctly stated, “My Immaculate Heart will be your refuge and the path that leads you to God.” [\[774\]](#) Once more, the Virgin Mother “stepped in” as Mediatrix between humanity and her Divine Son.

“If anyone love Me, he will keep My word, and My Father will love him, and We will come to him, and will make our abode with him.” [\[775\]](#) The two Hearts are inseparable. While the central theme of Fatima is devotion to the Immaculate Heart, the Virgin interceded, commanding as our Mother that people must cease offending God and also offer reparation to her Immaculate Heart. Not enough had harkened to the previous loving complaints of Our Lord, Who had kept in reserve for the people of the latter days devotion to His Sacred Heart. And though so many still do not listen, the words of Christ our Saviour will always apply: “If you love Me, keep My commandments.” [\[776\]](#)

THE PRECIOUS BLOOD OF JESUS AND THE GREAT SECRET OF FATIMA

“God’s goodness is at once the most public of all His attributes and, at the same time, the most secret.”

–Fr. Frederick Faber

“Devotion to the Precious Blood is as old as the world, and the devotion to this redemptive and Eucharistic Blood of Jesus is as old as the Church,” wrote the Catholic priest, Fr. M. Waltz, in his early 20th century work on the Precious Blood. [777] At Fatima in 1917, Our Lady chose the month of July to give the Great Secret, in its three distinct parts, in the same month in which the Church commemorates the Precious Blood of Jesus. Is there a connection between each of the three parts of the Great Secret and July, the month of the Precious Blood?

The First Secret, which provides the means to save poor sinners of this era from hell, offers a spiritual remedy—i.e., worldwide devotion to the Immaculate Heart of Mary. The Second Secret tells the Pope and the rest of the Church how to administer the remedy. It includes two specific requests, conditional prophecies, and gives an infallible promise of robust spiritual health and vitality for the Church and the world when the remedy is given. The Third Secret, insofar as only the Vision is known but not Our Lady’s words explaining it, describes what seems to be a particular historic era that will culminate in the Church’s Way of the Cross. Where in all this is the Precious Blood of Jesus?

First, let us look again at the initial supernatural manifestations at Fatima, which began with the appearance of an angel. Three times through the spring and late summer of 1916, the angel appeared to three shepherd children, Lucia dos Santos (now Servant of God) and her two younger cousins, Blessed Francisco Marto and Blessed Jacinta Marto. On his first visit, he identified himself as the Angel of Peace, commanded the children to pray with him, and taught them a brief prayer.

On his second visit, the angel appeared suddenly, during the children’s afternoon rest on an unbearably hot summer day, admonishing them, “What are you doing? Pray! Pray very much! The Hearts of Jesus and Mary have designs of mercy on you. Offer prayers and sacrifices constantly to the Most High!” [778] Telling them that they could make everything they do as a sacrifice offered to God as an act of reparation for the sins by which He is offended, and in supplication for the conversion of sinners, the angel also revealed himself as the Angel Guardian of Portugal. As we have seen in Part I, he did not give his name but we can say with moral certainty that he was the great St. Michael the archangel, the Prince of the heavenly host who for 1,000 years has been invoked as Portugal's guardian. The wondrous St. Michael concluded his visit by saying "Above all, accept and bear with submission the suffering which the Lord will send you." [\[779\]](#)

Years later, Sr. Lucia wrote in her memoirs that on his third and last visit (which took place about a year before the Great Miracle of the Sun), the angel appeared "holding a chalice in his hands, with a host above it, from which some drops of blood were falling into the sacred vessel. Leaving the chalice and the host suspended in the air, the Angel prostrated on the ground and repeated this prayer three times:

'O Most Holy Trinity, Father, Son and Holy Spirit, I adore Thee profoundly. I offer Thee the Most Precious Body, Blood, Soul and Divinity of Our Lord Jesus Christ, present in all the tabernacles of the world, in reparation for the outrages, sacrileges and indifference by which He Himself is offended. And by the infinite merits of His Most Sacred Heart and those of the Immaculate Heart of Mary, I beg of Thee the conversion of all poor sinners.'

"Then, rising, he once more took the chalice and the host in his hands. He gave the host to me, and to Jacinta and Francisco he gave the contents of the chalice to drink, saying as he did so: "Take and eat the Body and drink the Blood of Jesus Christ, horribly outraged by ungrateful men. Make reparation for their crimes and console your God." [\[780\]](#)

Our Lady and the Precious Blood

From the beginning of the Fatima apparitions, focus began with the Holy Trinity, the True Presence of Jesus under the mere appearance of bread and wine, and reparatory prayer and sacrifice. The children were being prepared for lives of increasing atonement for sins, first with sacrifices made of their own accord and later with those which God sent them. This latter type of sacrifice is the kind from which so many people shy away, forgetting that "there is an apostolate of suffering, as well as an apostolate of prayer and labor," [\[781\]](#) as St. Paul reminds Christians: For whom He foreknew, he also predestinated to be made conformable to the image of His Son. [\[782\]](#)

The Holy Trinity prayer (offered three times in succession) is one that we, too, are meant to pray. It is the perfect prayer to offer when in the Presence of the Blessed Sacrament, before or after receiving absolution, when the Host is elevated as Mass, or when at Benediction, before or after our Rosary prayers, and most certainly in thanksgiving after receiving Holy Communion.

The True Presence of Our Lord is the same Jesus Who, in the hypostatic union of true God and true Man, assumed from His Immaculate Mother His own Flesh and Blood. “It is an article of faith that the Blessed Virgin gave to the Son of God that most pure and Precious Blood which the Holy Ghost drew from her virginal veins as from the original source of man’s redemption. This body of the Mother of God, in order of nature, was purer than the rays of the sun and, in the order of grace, purer than the blessed Spirits” (the angels). [\[783\]](#)

The 19th century priest, Fr. Frederick Faber explained, “The Precious Blood was assumed directly to Our Blessed Lord’s Divine Person from His Immaculate Mother. It was not taken merely to His Body, so that His body was directly assumed to the Person of the Word, and His Blood only indirectly or mediately as part of His Body. The Blood, which was the predetermined price of our redemption, rested directly and immediately on the Divine Person, and thus entered into the very highest and most unspeakable degree of the Hypostatic Union—if we may speak of degrees in such an adorably simple mystery. It was not merely a concomitant of the Flesh, an inseparable accident of the Body. The Blood itself as Blood, was assumed directly by the Second Person of the Holy Trinity.” [\[784\]](#)

“It came also from Mary’s blood. Mary’s blood was the material out of which the Holy Ghost, the Third Person of the Most Holy Trinity, the artificer of the Sacred Humanity, fashioned the Blood of Jesus. Moreover,” Fr. Faber continued, “there is some portion of the Precious Blood which once was Mary’s blood, and which remains still in Our Blessed Lord...At this moment in heaven, He retains something which once was his Mother’s...” [\[785\]](#)

Already we receive glimpses of understanding why souls may attain salvation via devotion to the Immaculate Heart, because “the Precious Blood is the fountain of the plenitude of all graces in Mary, but it is also the source of her power to help us.” [\[786\]](#)

The Great Secret Revisited

As this book has already mentioned, the First Secret opened with Our Lady momentarily showing the children a terrifying apparition of hell. Then the Virgin said “so kindly and so sadly: You have seen hell where the souls of poor sinners go. To save them, God wishes to establish in the world to My Immaculate Heart.”

“If what I say to you is done, many souls will be saved and there will be peace. The war is going to end; but if people do not cease offending God, a worse one will break out during the reign of Pius XI. When you see a night illumined by an unknown light, know that this is the great sign given you by God that He is about to punish the world for its crimes, by means of war, famine, and persecutions of the Church and of the Holy Father.” [\[787\]](#)

Then begins the Second Secret, as Our Lady continued, “To prevent this, I shall come to ask for the consecration of Russia to My Immaculate Heart, and the Communion of Reparation on the First Saturdays. If my requests are heeded, Russia will be converted, and there will be peace. If not, she will spread her errors throughout the world, causing wars and persecutions of the Church. The good will be martyred, the Holy Father will have much to suffer, various nations will be annihilated. In the end, My Immaculate Heart will triumph. The Holy Father will consecrate Russia to me, and she will be converted, and a period of peace will be granted to the world.” [\[788\]](#)

A Vision of the Church’s Calvary

Like the First and Second Secrets, the Third Secret of Fatima is literal, not symbolic, and it also has two parts. As we have already seen, the Third Secret begins with the words written in Lucia’s Fourth Memoir, “In Portugal, the dogma of the Faith will always be preserved, etc.” At some point, the children saw another Vision (described below by Lucia), but the Church Militant and the world still await the publication of the Virgin’s words that describe this mystifying Vision. Let us again look at Lucia’s description of it, which indicates a modern-day Calvary for the Church.

“After the two parts which I have already explained, at the left of Our Lady and a little above, we saw an Angel with a flaming sword in his left hand; flashing, it gave out flames that looked as though they would set the world on fire; but they died out in contact with the splendour that Our Lady radiated towards him from her right hand: pointing to the earth with his right hand, the Angel cried out in a loud voice: ‘Penance, Penance, Penance!’. And we saw in an immense light that is God: ‘something similar to how people appear in a mirror when they pass in front of it’ a Bishop dressed in White ‘we had the impression that it was the Holy Father’. Other Bishops, Priests, men and women Religious going up a steep mountain, at the top of which there was a big Cross of rough-hewn trunks as of a cork-tree with the bark; before reaching there the Holy Father passed through a big city half in ruins and half trembling with halting step, afflicted with pain and sorrow, he prayed for the souls of the corpses he met on his way; having reached the top of the mountain, on his knees at the foot of the big Cross he was killed by a group of soldiers who fired bullets and arrows at him, and in the same way there died one after another the other Bishops, Priests, men and women Religious, and various lay people of different ranks and positions. Beneath the two arms of the Cross there were two Angels each with a crystal aspersorium in his hand, in which they gathered up the blood of the Martyrs and with it sprinkled the souls that were making their way to God.”

Truly, the Third Secret Vision is a sobering one. It brings to mind what was said by Our Lord, appearing to St. Margaret Mary Alacoque with His Sacred Heart torn and His Body so grievously wounded: “Behold the state to which I am reduced by My chosen people that should have appeased My justice, and that instead persecute Me. If they amend not, I will chastise them severely. I will withdraw the just and the innocent, and immolate the rest in My just anger, inflamed against them by their sins.” Christ’s warning came to pass in the French Revolution and the 19th century’s subsequent revolutions.

As St. Jean-Marie Vianney once said, “The good God asks not for the martyrdom of our body, but asks for the martyrdom of our hearts and wills.” [789] Fr. Faber noted, “Each age is a stray sheep from God; and the Church has to seek it and fetch it back to Him...Each age needs persuading in a manner of its own,” but as he also observed, “Works of mercy are not attractive to hearts untouched by love.” [790]

Then, only a few years before the Fatima apparitions, Fr. Waltz of esteemed memory also remarked, “In our age of luxury and religious indifference, men do not want to be reminded of moral regeneration, of the necessity of struggling against the flesh, the world, and the devil; they do not want to hear of their obligation to use the means of salvation and thus co-operate with God’s grace.” [791] Finally, St. Paul infallibly stated, “And almost all things, according to the law, are cleansed with blood: and without shedding of blood there is no remission.” [792]

The Third Secret is a serious warning for the Church because the Church is the work of the Precious Blood. As Fr. Faber said, “The salvation of individual souls is dependent on the Church. Hence the building up of the Church is one of the grandest works of the Precious Blood. The conversion of nations, the history of doctrine, the holding of councils, the spread of the episcopate, the influence of the ecclesiastical upon the civil law, the freedom of the Holy See, the papal monarchy of ages past, the concordats of the present day, the filial subordination of Catholic governments—all these things alter the face of the spiritual world.” [\[793\]](#)

For this particular era of history, the Mother of Mercy again intercedes with her Divine Son. She acts on our behalf to satisfy Divine Justice, save souls from hell, and convert millions to the Faith, so that God will grant the entire world an era of peace. Hidden in all of the Fatima Virgin’s requests is the Precious Blood, the secret behind the Great Secret because, as Fr. Faber once wrote, “God’s goodness is at once the most public of all His attributes and, at the same time, the most secret.” The Virgin, fountain of the Precious Blood, is the rightful dispenser of the Precious Blood, the source of all the graces which the Savior channels through the hands of His Virgin Mother. And so it follows that whether for a nation or an individual, it always remains true that “belonging to Mary is a privileged means of belonging to Christ.” [\[794\]](#)

THE EXALTATION OF THE HOLY CROSS: THE SIGN THAT SHALL BE CONTRADICTED

“And Simeon blessed them, and said to Mary his mother: Behold this child is set for the fall, and for the resurrection of many in Israel, and for a sign which shall be contradicted; And thy own soul a sword shall pierce, that, out of many hearts, thoughts may be revealed.”

–Luke 2:34-35

At Fatima, Our Lady promised that her Immaculate Heart shall be our refuge, and that path that leads us to God. Shortly before she appeared at Fatima, the Angel of Peace gave the children Holy Communion, saying to them: “Take and drink the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, horribly outraged by ungrateful men! Make reparation for their crimes and console your God.”

Two thousand years before, St. Simeon’s prophesied “sign of contradiction” was the cross upon which Christ was crucified, sanctifying the very instrument of His torture and death, while piercing the soul of the Immaculate Virgin, so that the thoughts of many would be revealed. It is no coincidence, then, that Our Lady’s appearance at Fatima on September 13, when the cloud thrice formed into a pillar that rose like incense, occurred on the eve of the Exaltation of the Holy Cross.

“ ‘Through Thee the precious Cross is honored and worshiped throughout the world.’ Thus did Saint Cyril of Alexandria praise Our Lady on the morrow of that great day, which saw her Divine Maternity vindicated at Ephesus. Eternal Wisdom has willed that the Octave of Mary’s Birth should be honored by the celebration of this Feast of the triumph of the Holy Cross. The Cross indeed is the standard of God’s armies, whereof Mary is the Queen; it is by the Cross that she crushes the serpent’s head, and wins so many victories over error, and over the enemies of the Christian name.”

[\[795\]](#) St. Cyril was speaking of a day honored since the second century and which should not be forgotten in ours: The Exaltation of the Holy Cross on September 14.

There exists a prevailing Catholic tradition that the aged St. Helene, mother of Emperor Constantine, experienced a dream about the Cross of Christ. As a result, the saint felt she was told it was her mission to find it. She then commenced a royal pilgrimage to Jerusalem and, along the way, the truly pious and charitable saint literally assisted many in need. Upon reaching Jerusalem, she was told by Bishop Macarius that all of the holy sites of Jesus had been covered by pagan Roman shrines almost 200 yrs. previously—i.e., the cave of the Nativity in Bethlehem sported an idol of Adonis; the spot on Calvary where Our Lord was crucified had a large marble bust of the idol goddess, Venus, and over the Holy Sepulcher was the idol Jupiter, the king of all the false Roman gods.

In the name of her son, the Emperor, St. Helene ordered the removal of these idols and had the sites prepared for the building of Catholic churches. The excavations led to the discovery of the True Cross on September 14, 326 A.D. The precious Relic was buried in a pit (also called a cistern), near Golgotha (the Place of the Skull), along with two other crosses and scattered crucifixion nails. With the crosses (but not attached to any of them) was also found the writing ordered by Pontius Pilate to be placed on Jesus' Cross. To discern which one of the three was Christ's Cross, the Bishop of Jerusalem "proposed a sure means of confirming which was the True One. They were taken to the bedside of a distinguished lady who was dangerously ill. As the bishop prayed for a revelation, the touch of the True Cross immediately cured her." [\[796\]](#)

The saint entrusted a portion of the True Cross to Bishop Macarius of Jerusalem, who every year thereafter exposed It for the veneration of the people. The second part of the Cross was sent to her son Constantine, who was in Constantinople, where it also was adored by the people. A third part was sent to Rome. Legend also says that at St. Helene's initiative, Constantine had built a most beautiful Church on the very spot in which the Cross was buried. In that particular edifice was placed the Relic entrusted to Bishop Macarius. This church is known as the Basilica of Calvary. Another building which St. Helene ensured was constructed is the Church of the Holy Sepulcher in Jerusalem. The solemn dedication of Constantine's basilica, which enclosed both Calvary and the Holy Sepulcher, took place on September 14, 335 A.D. [\[797\]](#)

Nearly three centuries later, Chosroes, King of Persia, captured the Holy Relic in 614 A.D. However, it was rescued by Heraclius, King of Judea, in 629 A.D. on the anniversary date of the Relic's discovery and the later consecrations of the two Churches—September 14. According to an adaption of Fr. Gueranger's The Liturgical Year, it is stated, "and on his return to Jerusalem, Heraclius, with great pomp, bore It back on his own shoulders to the Mount whither Our Savior had carried It."

"This event was signalized by a remarkable miracle. Heraclius, attired as he was in robes adorned with gold and precious stones, was forced to stand still at the gate which led to Mount Calvary. The more he endeavored to advance, the more he seemed fixed to the spot. Heraclius himself and all the people were astounded; but Zacharias, the Bishop of Jerusalem, said: ‘Consider, O Emperor, how little thou imitatest the poverty and humility of Jesus Christ, by carrying the Cross clad in triumphal robes.’ Heraclius thereupon laid aside his magnificent apparel, and barefoot, clothed in poor attire, he easily completed the rest of the way, and replaced the Cross in the same place on Mount Calvary, whence It had been carried off by the Persians. From this event, the Feast of the Exaltation of the Holy Cross, which was celebrated yearly on this day, gained fresh luster, in memory of the Cross being replaced by Heraclius on the spot where it had first been set up for Our Savior.” [798]

On a related note, Our Lord Jesus Christ instituted the Eucharist on “the eve of Passover, the 13th day of the moon of the month of Abib or Nisan, after the spring equinox, corresponding to our 6th of April; in the year A.D. 34.” [799] This means that the Messiah was crucified on the 14th day of the moon, according to the Jewish calendar, yet His Holy Cross was found on the 14th day of the month, according to the Julian calendar.

Glorifying the Cross of Christ

Why, then, is September 14 called on the Church’s liturgical calendar the Exaltation of the Holy Cross? “To exalt the Holy Cross is to glorify it. The word ex-altare in Latin means to elevate, to raise to a high place, which is to glorify...It is to proclaim the glory of God in face of the attempt of His enemies to humiliate Him. Our attitude should smash the enemy's attempts to humiliate Our Lord.” [800]

The Cross of Christ is and remains the “sign which shall be contradicted” foretold by the aged Simeon, who spoke to the Virgin Mary under the Holy Ghost’s inspiration. The cross was the instrument of the most brutal condemnation to death, reserved for the vilest of criminals among the slaves and conquered peoples of Rome. Crucifixion was considered so horrific that Roman law forbade such a death sentence to Roman citizens. However, the Son of God, the Word made flesh, allowed mere men to put Him to death in this way, to make an infinite act of reparation to God the Father, and to redeem us from our sins.

The manner of the Lord’s death was foretold by the Old Testament prophets, especially Isaiah, but it was again foretold soon after His Holy Nativity. When the Savior of mankind was only eight days old, He was brought to the Temple by the Virgin Mary and St. Joseph, there to be ransomed from the Lord. The Gospel of St Luke records what happened:

“And behold there was a man in Jerusalem named Simeon, and this man was just and devout, waiting for the consolation of Israel; and the Holy Ghost was in him.

And he had received an answer from the Holy Ghost, that he should not see death, before he had seen the Christ of the Lord. And he came by the Spirit into the temple.”

“And when his parents brought in the child Jesus, to do for him according to the custom of the law, he also took him into his arms, and blessed God, and said: Now thou dost dismiss thy servant, O Lord, according to thy word in peace; Because my eyes have seen thy salvation, Which thou hast prepared before the face of all peoples: A light to the revelation of the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Israel.”

“And his father and mother were wondering at those things which were spoken concerning him. And Simeon blessed them, and said to Mary his mother: Behold this child is set for the fall, and for the resurrection of many in Israel, and for a sign which shall be contradicted; And thy own soul a sword shall pierce, that, out of many hearts, thoughts may be revealed.” [\[801\]](#)

The Holy Bible (Douay-Rheims translation) includes a footnote explaining the words “for the fall” as follows: “Christ came for the salvation of all men; but here Simeon prophesies what would come to pass, that many through their own wilful (sic) blindness and obstinacy would not believe in Christ, nor receive his doctrine, which therefore would be ruin to them: but to others a resurrection, by their believing in Him, and obeying his commandments.”

As St. Andrew of Crete explained in a discourse on the Feast of the Holy Cross: “Had there been no cross, Christ could not have been crucified. Had there been no cross, Life itself could not have been nailed to the tree. And if Life had not been nailed to it, there would be no streams of immortality pouring from Christ’s side, blood and water for the world’s cleansing. The legal bond of our sin would not be cancelled, we should not have attained our freedom, we should not have enjoyed the fruit of the tree of life and the gates of paradise would not stand open. Had there been no cross, death would not have been trodden underfoot, nor hell despoiled.”

“Therefore, the Cross is something wonderfully great and honorable. It is great because through the Cross the many noble acts of Christ found their consummation—very many indeed, for both His miracles and His sufferings were fully rewarded with victory. The Cross is honourable because it is both the sign of God’s suffering and the trophy of his victory. It stands for His suffering because on it He freely suffered unto death. But it is also His trophy because it was the means by which the devil was wounded and death conquered; the barred gates of hell were smashed, and the Cross became the one common salvation of the whole world.”

“The Cross is called Christ’s glory; it is saluted as His triumph. We recognize it as the cup He longed to drink and the climax of the sufferings He endured for our sake. As to the Cross being Christ’s glory, listen to His words: ‘Now is the Son of Man glorified, and in him God is glorified, and God will glorify him at once.’ And again: ‘Father, glorify me with the glory I had with you before the world came to be.’ And once more: ‘Father, glorify Thy name.’ Then a voice came from heaven: ‘I have glorified it and will glorify it again.’ Here He speaks of the glory that would accrue to Him through the Cross. And if you would understand that the Cross is Christ’s triumph, hear what He himself also said: “When I am lifted up, then I will draw all men to myself.” Now you can see that the Cross is Christ’s glory and triumph.” [\[802\]](#)

From His holy Infancy to the choosing and teaching of His Apostles, the whole of Our Lord’s earthly life was in anticipation of the Cross and the birth of His Church, His own kingdom on earth. “Why did the Lord spend His public life wandering from place to place? He wanted to train his Apostles like soldiers, accustom them to hardships, drill them by a severe novitiate, harden their muscles, strengthen their wills, that they might be prepared later to travel through the nations while preaching His Gospel, and to enable them to stand all kinds of trials and hardships, even martyrdom destined for them all, except St. John.” [\[803\]](#) Such is the lot of Christ’s true Apostles and true disciples.

To perpetually remind us of the True Cross, which the world considers “a sign which shall be contradicted,” St. John Chrysostom said: “Do not ever go out of your house without making the Sign of the Cross. It will be for you a shield, a weapon, an inexpugnable tower. Neither man nor demon will ever dare to attack you, if they see you clothed with this armor.” Origen declared: “The Sign of the Cross is the invisible armor of Christians. Soldier of Christ that you are, wear this Armor always during the day, and during the night, and everywhere. Without It, do not undertake any task, whether it be sleeping or traveling, resting or working, eating or drinking, be always clothed with this Protective Armor. Adorn and protect every single one of your members with this Victorious Sign. At the sight of this Sign the infernal powers flee scared and stupefied.” As St. Augustine taught the catechumens: “We must confront the enemy with the Symbol and Sign of the Cross; so that the Christian vested with these weapons may easily triumph over the ancient and prideful tyrant.” St. Athanasius said: “By means of the Sign of the Cross the works of magic are made impotent; all the enchantments lose their efficacy. By means of It, the impetus of the most brutal will is moderated and pacified.” [\[804\]](#)

Finally, may we always remember: “We make the Sign of the Cross to express two important mysteries of the Christian religion, the Blessed Trinity and the Redemption...By means of the Sign of the Cross, we obtain God’s blessing and protection from dangers both spiritual and physical...Since it is a sign of God and His crucified Son, the devil fears it, and it is a shield against temptation. The saints used to make the Sign of the Cross when evil thoughts assailed them; many Catholics today follow their example, and we should do the same. In doing so, we put a seal on our foreheads that proclaims: ‘I belong to Christ, the King of all.’” [\[805\]](#)

We adore You, O Christ, and we bless You, because by Your Holy Cross You have redeemed the world. [\[806\]](#)

THE GREATEST SECRET: OUR IMITATION OF CHRIST

“Love God, serve God; everything is in that.”

–St. Clare of Assisi

At Fatima, the Angel of Peace taught the children this prayer: “O my God, I believe, I adore, I trust and I love Thee! I ask pardon of Thee for those who do not believe, do not adore, do not trust and do not love Thee.” As members of the Catholic City, how often do we consider the great privileges granted us by Christ our King? At the very moment we became citizens of His Kingdom by baptism, we also became His adopted children. As His children, we received the right and the duty to enter the Christian school of perfection, in which we learn how to pray, study, and act. If we are loving children, we become willing students who learn how to “school our own character to a consistent and persevering practice” [807] after that of our King’s, who gave Himself to be our Divine Teacher and Model. Our imitation of Christ in His Life, Passion, Death and Resurrection is the greatest secret of the Catholic City.

The Saints and Their Love of Christ Crucified

“Look at the life of any Saint you like, and you will find an extraordinary devotion to the Passion. It was the distinguishing mark of the Saints; they would not have been Saints without it.” [808] This statement is affirmed by the saints themselves, from whom the following quotes offer only a small collection of their testimony:

- St. Alphonsus di Liguori noted that all the Saints cherished a tender devotion towards Jesus Christ in His Passion, emphasizing that it was the only means by which they sanctified themselves. [809]
- St. Augustine proclaimed, “There is nothing more advantageous, nothing better adapted to ensure our eternal salvation, than daily to contemplate the sufferings which Jesus Christ bore for our sake.” [810]
- St. Paul wrote, “I judged not myself to know anything among you but Jesus Christ and Him crucified” [811] meaning he meditated on “the love that Our Lord has shown us on the Cross.” [812]
- “He who desires to advance from virtue to virtue, from grace to grace, should meditate continually on the Passion of Jesus,” said St. Bonaventure.

[813]

- At another time, St. Bonaventure showed the Angelic Doctor an image of the Crucified Lord, explaining, “This is my book, whence I receive everything I write, and it has taught me whatever little I know.” [814]

- “I found more wisdom in prayer at the feet of the Crucified than in all the books I ever read,” wrote St. Thomas as he penned his famous meditation, “The Crucifix: The Book of Life.” [815]

- St. Francis of Assisi simply stated, “My book is Jesus Crucified,” and often encouraged his brethren to think of the Passion of Jesus. [816]

- St. Terese of Avila said that souls in every state of prayer should think of the Passion. “Life is long and full of crosses and we have need to look on Christ, our pattern, to see how He bore His trials, and even to take example by His Apostles and saints if we would bear our own trials perfectly. Our good Jesus and His most Blessed Mother are too good company to be left [alone]...” [817]

Why the Passion of Christ?

Why did Our Lord choose to suffer so intensely in soul and body? After all, God was under no obligation to assume our nature and to save us. For three principle reasons, the Son of God became Man of His own free will: 1) to make full reparation to the love and justice of His Father, so deeply offended by mankind’s sinfulness and ingratitude; 2) to redeem us from all iniquity, and 3) to show mankind the terrible consequences of sin. It is for these three reasons that the earthly life of Christ, from its humble beginnings to its cruel closing, presented Him with a continual martyrdom. His Divine Heart was ever “mourning within Him, its sorrow above all human sorrow.” [818]

The saints explain that suffering gives a certain intensity to acts of the will, which nothing else can give. An act of the will or of the heart may be strong—but how much stronger it must be in the face of suffering. Human nature shrinks from suffering and dreads it, but not one of the sons of men was ever so sensitive as Our Lord, Jesus Christ, or endured sufferings in any way comparable to His. Our Lord chose the greatest intensity of suffering to prove the reality and depth of His love for us—a love of which we are capable of returning as we learn to subdue Self.

All of us experience moments of spiritual solace, in which we feel the sweetness and joy of belonging to Him. Without realizing it, these consolations become “the only delight we crave.” [819] God then begins to wean us from them, for we must learn to love the God of consolations rather than the consolations of God.

“We would like to serve the Lord, but in our own way, and not as He desires,” [820] as St. Alphonsus notes. To overcome the inclinations of Self, we must pray, study and act on the Passion of Christ. As God weans us with great or small trials, to whatever degree, we soon discover that Self is still strong, with all its subtlety, self-centeredness and weakness—“Self, which stands importunate beside us, protesting, crying, wailing, resisting.” [821]

Then one of two things happens: either we give into that hurt and smarting Self, which complains, grows bitter, and resists fidelity to God or we turn to God in our interior and exterior sufferings. Should we succumb to Self, we deeply hurt Jesus, for as St. Therese the Little Flower said, “What offends Jesus, what wounds Him to the Heart, is want of confidence.” [822]

When we take the right course by choosing to turn to God, we “seize the pain or trouble or bitterness, and offer it, turning it into fuel to feed the flame of our hearts, and so we intensify the act of our union and love...” [823] It is when we are suffering that Christ is very near to us. “We always find that those who walked closest to Christ were those who had to bear the greatest trials,” avowed St. Teresa of Avila.

With our free will, we make the choice whether or not we shall follow in Christ’s footsteps with His grace or with our own grumbling bitterness. Whether we like it or not, carry the Cross we must. Like the two thieves crucified with Christ, what makes the difference between our salvation or our perdition is our disposition and inclination to accept grace.

The contrast between the two thieves explains why St. Ignatius advises us, when we even glance at a Crucifix, to ask for a true compassion of the will. This true compassion is not only of heart, eyes, feelings or tears, which can mislead us – but consists of a higher, effective compassion in which the will is determinedly resigned to whatever God wills or allows. Such a resolve was St. Paul’s intention when he wrote, “I...fill up those things that are wanting of the sufferings of Christ, in my flesh, for His body, which is the Church.” [824] As the Douay-Rheims footnote explains: “There is no want in the sufferings of Christ in Himself as Head: but many sufferings are still wanting, or are still to come, in His Body the Church, and his members the faithful.”

“The perfection of religion is to imitate whom you adore.” [825] That is why, in bearing the pain of our own crosses, our wills can turn to Jesus Crucified and offer Him all that we are enduring. St. Alphonsus wrote, “The best prayer you can say is to resign yourself to the will of God in the midst of your sufferings, uniting your pains to the pains of Jesus Christ and offering them as a sacrifice to God.” [826] If we can make that offering, which is truly an act of the will and not of “feelings,” in the face of all kinds of suffering—grief, abandonment, humiliation, mockery, unjust treatment, illness or infirmity—then never is our love for God so true and meritorious.

Charity: The Height of Virtue, the Perfection of Sanctity

In faithfully making the Morning Offering, we also make our first meditation on the Passion because we immediately offer to God, in union with the Immaculate Heart of Mary, the Most Precious Body, Blood, Soul and Divinity of Our Lord Jesus Christ. To this offering, we then unite our every thought, word, and action of the day.

No matter our state in life, meditation on the Passion of Our Lord is good for all persons. The Passion has power to rouse sorrow and penance in sinners, just as “it gives strength and a most powerful example of virtue to those who are making progress, and it is the most forcible incentive to love for the perfect.” [827]

In the school of Christian perfection, the Passion of Our Lord contains all that is highest and most complete in excellence. All of His virtues, all His instructions, all His doctrine, and all His counsels are preached in His Passion. “All the depth of suffering that anyone can undergo, all the extremities of misery to which anyone may be brought—all are in the Passion: all deliverance from illusion and all learning of the truth are in the Passion; all knowledge, understanding, and heavenly wisdom are to be found in the Passion...” [828]

“O my adorable Master,” says Dom Chautaurd in The Soul of the Apostolate, “there are three sentiments which hold sway in Your Sacred Heart: complete dependence upon Your Father, and therefore perfect humility; then secondly, a burning and universal love for men; and finally, the spirit of sacrifice.” [829]

“All that I can do I will do for them” was Christ’s motto through life. When the hour had come, He did not what benefited Him but what would help us most. Like us in all things except sin, He would meet suffering and death. To be like us in all things, this was His rule from first to last: that having shown Himself like us, He might win us to be *like Him, ready to say in the hour of trial, “Father, if thou wilt, remove this chalice from Me; but yet not My will, but Thine be done.” [830]

“My soul is sorrowful unto death,” [831] Our Lord so piteously mourned. And what was the relief? It was prayer, just as He had admonished the Apostles: “Watch ye, and pray that ye enter not into temptation. The spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh weak.” [832]

The secret of Our Lord’s desire to suffer was His Love, but it was not the suffering itself for which Christ longed. No, it was the result of that suffering –for that joy that was set before Him–for which He willingly endured the Cross.

Like Him, when we suffer, we suffer for a reason but, unlike Him, we may not know why. Still, like the Angel who comforted Christ in the Garden of Gethsemane, He comforts us: “So also you now indeed have sorrow; but I will see you again, and your heart shall rejoice; and your joy no man shall take from you.” [833]

The Holiest of Schools

“It is an excellent and holy practice to call to mind and meditate on Our Lord’s Passion, since it is by this path that we shall arrive at union with God. In this, the holiest of all schools, true wisdom is learned, for it was there that all the saints became wise,” said St. Paul of the Cross. [834]

How strongly and eloquently the Passion defines charity in all its branches: “This is My commandment, that you love one another as I have loved you. Abide in my love...You are My friends, if you do the things that I command you.” [835]

Our Lord Himself said, “Greater love than this no man hath, that a man lay down his life for his friends.” [836] True Christians have no excuse in forgetting this magnificent lesson of charity, since the loving Jesus set the path before us. The Passion of Christ is the culmination of sanctity, the highest exercise of virtue, and the greatest cause of merit. It is in His Sacred Passion that He specially desires to be remembered by us. [837]

“He that loveth not,” says St. John, “knoweth not God, for God is charity. By this hath the charity of God appeared towards us, because God hath sent his only begotten Son into the world, that we may live by him. In this is charity: not as though we had loved God, but because he hath first loved us, and sent his Son to be a propitiation for our sins.” [838]

God loved us first. Charity, the highest of all virtues by which we love God and then our neighbors for love of God, is what moved Jesus Christ to be “conceived by the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary” and become Man. It is because of Christ’s charity that we can truly say: “I live in the faith of the Son of God, who loved me and delivered Himself for me.” [839]

I Love You More...

“The charity of Christ presses us” meaning Jesus’ sacrificial love naturally inspires reciprocation, not to mention gratitude. It is not enough to say we love God because love is proven by deeds and by a pure intention.

“Forget not the kindness of thy Surety, for He hath given His life for thee,” [840] teaches the Holy Ghost. St. Alphonsus posed this same truth in the form of a question, one we should ask ourselves, especially when we think of the Passion of Christ: “And you, Christian soul, what have you done for your Divine Redeemer? What proof of your love have you given Him?” [841]

Perhaps the best answer to these two questions was given by St. Robert Southwell: “God gave Himself to you; now give yourself to God.” By cooperating with grace, by thinking upon the Passion of Jesus, by striving against our natural inclinations, in subduing Self and in returning Christ’s love, we say to Jesus, “I love You more...”—more than this consolation, more than my self-interest, more than my anxiety, more than my grief, or more than this moment of gratification. To pray, to study and to act upon the Passion of Christ means to cultivate charity within our souls.

In our day and age, we often forget the true meaning of charity—that divinely infused virtue by which we prefer God as the sovereign good before all else. It is with charity alone that we can do God’s Will and with charity alone that we are united to Him. Charity is called the “queen of virtues,” because it will rule forever in Heaven— but before we can hope to attain that Heaven, Charity must first become queen of our hearts.

OUR LORD'S ESCORTS ON THE WAY OF THE CROSS

“The crosses with which our path through life is strewn associate us with Jesus in the mystery of His crucifixion.”

–St. John Eudes

At Fatima, St. Michael the archangel said, “Make of everything you can a sacrifice, and offer it to God as an act of reparation for the sins by which He is offended, and in supplication for the conversion of sinners... Above all, accept and bear with submission, the suffering which the Lord will send you.” And who should we look to for the perfect examples of such charity, other than Our Lord and His Virgin Mother?

Three times had Pontius Pilate attempted to save Jesus' life but, in the end, he delivered Our Lord to the will of those demanding His crucifixion. [842] “And in bearing His own Cross, He went to that place which is called Calvary, but in Hebrew Golgotha.” [843]

Along the Via Dolorosa (the Way of Sorrows), Our Lord was accompanied by a great escort of people from all walks of life, each playing a part in Our Lord's Passion. Distinguished from this company are three divisions: 1) Those who load the Savior with the Cross, 2) Those who literally carry the Cross with Him, and 3) Those who spiritually participate with Jesus in bearing the Cross. [844]

- Within the first group are those who lay the cross upon Our Lord. Foremost among this assembly were those responsible for His unjust trial, the tortures that accompanied it, and the death sentence proclaimed against Him. These men, the leaders of the first ecclesia, heard Jesus' holy doctrine, witnessed many of His miracles and signs, and yet refused to acknowledge Him as the Messiah, the Son of God.

On the first Palm Sunday, Christ entered Jerusalem as the city prepared for the Jewish Passover, and all that happened concerning Jesus filled the chief priests and scribes with fury. They were scandalized by the honor shown to Jesus by the multitude, who strewed both their garments and tree boughs before Him and who praised Him, “Hosanna to the Son of David! Blessed is He who comes in the name of the Lord: Hosanna in the highest.” [845]

After Jesus threw the moneychangers from the temple, the lame and blind went to Him and He healed them. “And the chief priests and scribes, seeing the wonderful things that He did, and the children crying in the temple, and saying: Hosanna to the son of David; were moved with indignation.” [846]

The Pharisees and the Sadducees would not leave Christ alone. They demanded explanations from Our Lord. Then they devised various tests for Him, and they asked from whence came His authority. He in turn tested them with His question about the source of John the Baptist’s authority to baptize. To the ongoing exchanges, Jesus added two parables, which further angered them, for they knew He spoke of them. [847] Finally, they tried one last tactic by feigning goodwill toward His mission, while publicly asking Him cunning questions to ensnare Him before all the people, who “were in admiration of His doctrine.” [848]

In their last attempt to trick Him and justify themselves before the people, Jesus severely rebuked them. From that day, as the Gospel of St. Matthew records, no man dared ask Him any more questions. [849]

It was on the latter occasion that Our Lord eight times openly described these men and their disciples (the Herodians) as “hypocrites.” [850] In the same discourse, He also called them “blind guides,” [851] “foolish and blind,” [852] “whited sepulchres, which outwardly appear to men beautiful, but are full of dead men’s bones and all filthiness,” [853] “full of hypocrisy and iniquity,” [854] “sons of them that kill the prophets. Fill ye up then the measure of thy fathers,” [855] and addressed them as “you serpents, generation of vipers, how will you flee from the judgment of hell?” [856]

In their sanctimonious rage, they remained silent—but they chose to act quickly and furtively. Soon “were gathered together the chief priests and ancients of the people into the court of the high priest, who was called Caiphas. And they consulted together, that by subtlety they might apprehend Jesus, and put him to death. But they said: Not on the festival day, lest perhaps there should be a tumult among the people.” [857]

Those Gospel sentences reveal both their craftiness in plotting Christ’s death and their over-riding desire for human respect—for it was not God they feared, but the people! It was they, the elders of God’s first chosen ones, who plotted and carried out the stealthy and illegal arrest of Our Lord, twisting His words to suit their own purposes, allowing servants to spit in His face and strike Him, accusing the Lord Himself of blasphemy, and stirring up the multitude to a murderous frenzy, demanding Christ’s death! Yet, even when they had attained Jesus’ sentence of death by crucifixion, they were still not satisfied. These instigators chose to follow Christ to Golgotha, so as to relish and gloat over every moment of His suffering.

Also among this first group were the soldiers and executioners of Rome. They were not down-trodden servants of the empire, forced to comply with an appalling command against one whom even Pilate, their governor, declared a “just man.” [\[858\]](#) Rather, these were debased men of the world, their interests malicious and sadistic. They delighted in scourging Our Lord almost to the point of death. Then, by their own volition, they clothed Him in purple, crowned Him with thorns, struck His Holy Face with a reed, spat on Him, insolently knelt before Him and contemptuously adored Him, and eagerly led Him out to crucify Him.

In imitating the men described above, those who lay the Cross upon Our Lord only follow the Way of the Cross because they take a malicious delight in abusing Jesus. Accordingly, such people “are all guilty of His Passion, and increase it by their cruelty and mockery.” [\[859\]](#)

They, too, carry a cross, but it is not a cross of faith and virtue. Rather, it is a cross of their own making, formed by their obstinate rejection of grace and loaded with their own sins. They are driven by any one, or more, of the seven deadly sins: pride, anger, envy, greed, gluttony, lust, and sloth. Through their own free will, they become the agents of Satan, “and it is his yoke that they drag along. This is an inglorious cross—a fatal cross, which leads not to redemption, but to eternal death. Whoever does not embrace the Cross of Jesus must bear that of Satan.” [\[860\]](#)

- In the second group are those who literally carry the Cross with Jesus. “And as they led him away, they laid hold of one Simon of Cyrene, coming from the country; and they laid the cross on him to carry after Jesus.” [\[861\]](#) In this escort were also the two thieves who were to be crucified beside Our Lord.

These three men are historical figure-types of souls who initially carry crosses only because exterior forces compel them. The internal reactions of free will to the events on the Way of the Cross determine their individual and eternal fates.

In the case of Simon the Cyrene: This man was returning from the country and had just entered the city gate when the soldiers forced him to take up Our Lord’s Cross. The soldiers did not act from a motivation of mercy, but because Jesus’ weakness and exhaustion was so great that they feared He would die before He was crucified.

Simon had his own plans for the day, not knowing “that grace was lying in wait for him on the road to Calvary—that hidden in the cross of pain and shame was laid up for him the highest honor and never-ending joy.” [862] So, too, we “rise in the morning and make our plans for the day. [But] God has made His for us. Turning a corner, we find the Cross of Christ awaiting us, and with it the grace that, with a little effort on our part, will enable us to bear it bravely after our Master.” [863]

So we understand, “It is for Simon’s sake much more than for His own that Our Lord shared His Cross with him. The virtue that came from its contact with the Son of God went out to him who followed in His footsteps. Quickly Simon learned his lesson. From bearing the Cross reluctantly, he came to bear it patiently, willingly, joyfully, reaching thus the highest perfection of which love is capable on earth.” [864]

As for the two thieves, individuals who spiritually belong to their entourage will interiorly select one of two choices, for there are no others. They will either trace the final steps of the man traditionally known as “Dismas, the Good Thief,” thus saving their souls—or they will stumble after the unrepentant thief, cursing fate and mocking Jesus to their last breaths, and thus die in their sins.

In their final choices, both thieves illustrated the final results of grace received or grace rejected. On the bitter Way of the Cross, both Dismas and the Unrepentant Thief saw Jesus fall three times, watched as Veronica courageously wiped Our Lord’s face, heard Him console the weeping women, and witnessed Christ’s meeting with His Mother, the Virgin Mary.

Both were crucified with Jesus—“And they that were crucified with Him reviled Him.” [865] Still, the last hours of trial and grace were not yet over for them, and how each interiorly met his final moments were quite different.

As the Gospel of St. Luke briefly testifies, the Good Thief’s fellow robber blasphemed Jesus, after all three were crucified: “If thou be Christ, save thyself and us.” [866]

To the Unrepentant Thief, Our Lord did not respond. Jesus, being God, knew this man resisted His grace. Accordingly, this thief possessed neither compunction of heart nor any faith in Him. Yet the mystery of grace was at work, and the Savior waited—but for what? Christ on the Cross, whose very Presence is grace, awaited the free will reaction from “the other”—Dismas, the Good Thief—whose soul was now stirred to perfect contrition.

“But the other answering, rebuked him, saying: Neither dost thou fear God, seeing thou art condemned under the same condemnation? And we indeed justly, for we receive the due reward of our deeds; but this man hath done no evil. And he said to Jesus: Lord, remember me when thou shalt come into thy kingdom. And Jesus said to him: Amen I say to thee, this day thou shalt be with me in paradise.” [\[867\]](#)

In those few sentences, so painfully uttered from his own cross, the Good Thief first reproached the other robber for scorning God and for his lack of pious fear of the Lord, even when death was approaching. With charity and honesty, Dismas included himself when he confessed their sentences as just punishment for their crimes. In doing so, the Good Thief showed his resignation and acceptance of his own cruel end as his penance. He not only defended Jesus as innocent, but he acknowledged Him as the Messiah and called Him “Lord.” Finally, he expressed his hope in Jesus, with his humble request of only Christ’s remembrance when He came into His Kingdom. And then came the Savior’s promise: “Amen, I say to you, this day thou shall be with Me in Paradise.” [\[868\]](#)

But what of the Unrepentant Thief? When rebuked by the Good Thief, the unrepentant one had no more words to hurl against Our Lord. He had no defense at all. Rather than follow the just example of the Good Thief, he instead chose to sink into final despair.

Like the Good Thief, he could have repented and confessed his sins. Like the Good Thief, he could have offered his sufferings as reparation for his crimes. Like the Good Thief, his own cross could have become a source of merit—if only he had accepted God's grace. But he did not. In his soul, he turned away from the Lord, and the final grace offered him was lost.

Two sinners, both given the same grace to die alongside Our Lord, to repent and to confess their sins, to seek pardon, to offer their deaths in reparation for their sins, to receive God's forgiveness after confession, to ask the Lord to remember them, to accept the fruits of the Redemption, and to merit eternal salvation. But only one—Dismas, the Good Thief—earned the Savior’s promise of salvation.

- Finally, there is the third escort: Those who participate in spirit on Our Lord’s Way of the Cross. “And there followed him a great multitude of people, and of women, who bewailed and lamented him.” [\[869\]](#)

In the first part of this division, an immense number felt sympathy for Our Lord’s fate, and the women openly mourned Him. “This expression of their grief was right, and required great courage, since it was made in the presence and the hearing of Our Lord's triumphant foes. What was imperfect about it was that they regarded Our Lord's Passion as pure misfortune, and bewailed it as such." [870]

Of this assembly, the majority are a type of the souls who feel pity for the sufferings of Jesus, but who lack an effective compassion—that is, good deeds. Still, Our Lord receives such tokens of grief and rewards it in His own way, as He did when offering His pity to the women and their children in His prophecy of Jerusalem. [871]

According to Tradition, out of this throng was a woman named Veronica. Of a rare and different type, she displayed her compassion in a small but practical, noble and courageous act. Despite the threatening presence of the first escort, she offered Christ her veil to wipe His beaten and bloody Face. This one service was her confession of faith and fidelity in Jesus, and He rewarded her by miraculously imprinting His Holy Face on the cloth.

Another minority within this group were "all his acquaintance, and the women that had followed him from Galilee, stood afar off, beholding these things." Among them were Joseph of Arimethea, who would beg Pilate for the body of Jesus and laid Him in an untouched sepulchre, and the women who could only show their love for Him in their plans to return to His tomb with spices and ointments. [872]

Finally, we find in this multitude one who stands apart, the holiest of all women—the Virgin Mary, of whom Tradition relates awaited Her Divine Son on the Way of the Cross. "The Son and the Mother meet; but it is as the Redeemer and Co-Redemptrix of the world. The sacrifice that their mutual love increases occupies them entirely...and now His hour has come, the hour of which He had so often spoken to her at Nazareth, the hour that was the subject of such earnest prayer put up together; the hour for which He had promised to strengthen her that, first in privilege as in dignity, she might drink deeper than any other of His chalice." [873]

What, then, do we learn from these escorts on the Way of the Cross? "All of us have a cross to bear, [be it] the cross of sin and passion, the cross of misfortunes permitted by God, or the cross of penance and of love...Whoever we are, willing or unwillingly, we must form part of the escort of our Cross-bearing Savior." [874]

All we have to do is choose the escort to which we wish to belong.

PURGATORY: THE DOCTRINE OF GOD'S MERCY AND JUSTICE

“Out of the depths have I cried to thee O Lord; Lord, hear my voice. Let Thine ears be attentive to the voice of my supplication. If Thou, O Lord, shall observe iniquities; Lord, who shall endure it? For with Thee there is merciful forgiveness; and by reason of Thy law, I have waited for Thee, O Lord. My soul hath relied on his word; my soul hath hoped in the Lord. From the morning watch even until night, let Israel hope in the Lord. For with the Lord there is merciful forgiveness and with Him plentiful redemption. And He shall redeem Israel from all his iniquities.”

–De Profundis, prayer from Psalm 129

In the immediately preceding sections, the topics addressed included the life of ongoing conversion, why there is a need for devotion to the Sacred Heart of Jesus, the Precious Blood, our exaltation of the Holy Cross, our imitation of Christ, and the various escorts of Our Lord during His Passion. Inherent in all this are the four last things: death, judgment, heaven or hell. For the sake of souls living in an age permeated by the modernist heresy, it is not by chance that, at Fatima, Heaven highlighted the Church's doctrines and dogmas so frequently undermined. Perhaps foremost among these ignored truths is Purgatory, a doctrine pertaining to the interior life of the soul and the mercy and the justice of God.

The term, Purgatory, comes from the Latin purgare, which means “to purify” or “to cleanse.” “The word Purgatory is sometimes taken to mean a place, sometimes as an intermediate state between Hell and Heaven,” explains Fr. Schouppe, S.J., author of Purgatory Explained by the Lives and the Legends of the Saints. [875]

“It is, properly speaking, the condition of souls which, at the moment of death, are in the state of grace, but which have not completely expiated their faults, nor attained the degree of purity necessary to enjoy the Vision of God.” [876] Fr. Schouppe continues, “Purgatory is a transitory state which terminates in a life of everlasting happiness. It is not a trial by which merit may be gained or lost, but a state of atonement and expiation.” [877]

The dogma of Purgatory reinforces the necessity of the three conversions of the interior life, for “it forms one of the principal parts of the work of Jesus Christ, and plays an essential role in the economy of the salvation of man.” [878] We may think otherwise, but sanctity is not impossible, for Jesus Himself encourages and instructs us, “Be you therefore perfect, as also your Heavenly Father is perfect.” [879] Neither can we reach spiritual perfection by our own efforts, but “with God, all things are possible.” [880] For the living, each day of earthly life is “a time of trial, a time of merit for the soul,” [881] and at the very moment life ends, the immortal soul remains in the state in which death claimed it.

While we hope that our merits will gain us heaven, we must also remember that what we deem as only trivial faults are not small in God’s eyes. In considering Purgatory, our frail human nature frequently tends to think only of God’s mercy, simultaneously preferring to forget His Justice. Regardless of our personal opinions, God has revealed that His two attributes of Mercy and Justice are never separated.

Like the slightest shadow which must disappear before the sun’s bright light, “no shadow of sin can endure before His Face.” [882] Souls who depart this life in a state of sanctifying grace are saved and will attain Heaven, but if there is any debt still remaining for absolved sins, any slight lack of perfect charity in love for God or neighbor, then God’s Mercy and Justice allows the saved soul to expiate its sins in Purgatory.

Purgatory:

A Teaching from Antiquity

From the ancient tradition of the Jews, to the time of Christ and from the earliest days of His one, holy, Catholic, and apostolic Church, “the people of God had no hesitation in asserting the efficacy of prayers offered for the dead in order that those who had departed this life might find pardon for their sins and the hope of eternal resurrection.” [883]

With infallible examples from the Holy Scriptures and Tradition, the witness of the early Church, the Holy Ghost makes clear that forgiven sins can and will be atoned, either in this life or in the next:

- The Old Testament clearly states in Macabees, “It is therefore a holy and wholesome thought to pray for the dead, that they may be loosed from sins.” [884] This passage tells of an offering of silver “to Jerusalem for sacrifices to be offered for the sins of the dead, thinking well and religiously concerning the resurrection. For if he (Judas of the Macabees) had not hoped that they that were slain should rise again, it would have seemed superfluous and vain to pray for the dead.” [885]

- In Zacharias, the Holy Ghost speaks of the purification of souls in the next life, “I will refine them as silver refined, and I will try them as gold is tried.” [886] Gold and silver are burned in the fire to be freed from dross; similarly, souls are tried and purified in fire by the Lord. [887]

- Our Lord Himself affirms that there is a place of expiation after death, likening it to a prison: “I say to thee, thou shalt not go out from thence till thou repay the last farthing.” [888] Jesus refers not to hell, which is eternal, but teaches “distinctly of a temporary place...of purification, where the souls of the just can be freed...and purified for their entrance into heaven.” [889]

- Our Divine Savior also reveals: “And whosoever shall speak a word against the Son of Man, it shall be forgiven him: but he that shall speak against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, nor in the world to come.” [890]

Repented sins can be forgiven, and expiated in this world or the next, but the sin against the Holy Ghost is the terrible exception of which Christ warned the peoples of all ages—“persistent impenitence, the sin of one who rejects conversion and dies in mortal sin. One guilty of this sin can never obtain forgiveness of God, because at the hour of death he continues to thrust God away from him.” [891] Let us hear it again: The reason this sin is not forgiven in this world or the next is only because the individual person continues to reject God, even at death! Is it any wonder why Our Lady of Fatima so often stressed sacrifice for the conversion of our fellow sinners?

- St. Paul speaks of the exact way by which souls are freed from repented sins not yet atoned: “For other foundation (sic) no man can lay, but that which is laid; which is Christ Jesus...Every man’s work shall be manifest: for the day of the Lord shall declare it, because it shall be revealed in fire, and the fire shall try every man’s work, of what sort it is. If any man’s work abide, which he hath built thereupon, he shall receive a reward. If any man’s work burn, he shall suffer loss: but he himself shall be saved, yet so as by fire.” [892]

The Catholic Encyclopedia (1911) explains, “While this passage presents considerable difficulty, it is regarded by many of the Fathers and theologians as evidence for the existence of an intermediate state in which the dross of lighter transgressions will be burnt away, and the soul thus purified will be saved.” [893]

- St. John the beloved disciple, in offering hope and consolation to those who live in the valley of tears and faithfully endure all of life’s trials and tribulations, reveals: “And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and death shall be no more; nor mourning, nor crying, nor sorrow shall be any more.” [894] In speaking of Heaven, however, St. John also reminds the elect, “There shall not enter into it anything defiled.” [895]

- St. Augustine of Hippo teaches, “That there should be some fire even after this life is not incredible, and it can be inquired into and either be discovered or left hidden whether some of the faithful may be saved, some more slowly and some more quickly, in the greater or less degree in which they loved the good things that perish—through a certain purgatorial fire.” [896]

- Because the doctrine of Purgatory has been held throughout the ages, the Council of Trent declared: “Since the Catholic Church, instructed by the Holy Ghost has, following the sacred writings and the ancient tradition of the Fathers, taught in sacred councils and very recently in this ecumenical council, that there is a Purgatory, and that the souls there detained are aided by the suffrages of the faithful and chiefly by the Acceptable Sacrifice of the Altar, the Holy Council commands the bishops that they strive diligently to the end that the sound doctrine of Purgatory, transmitted by the Fathers and the sacred councils, be believed and maintained by the faithful of Christ, and be everywhere taught and preached.” [897]

At Fatima:

The Fate of Two Souls Revealed

Finally, in recent times, Our Lady Herself referred to Purgatory when, at the first Fatima apparition in May 1917, she was asked by the child Lucia about the souls of two young village ladies who had recently died.

The Virgin answered that the first girl, Maria das Neves, who died when about 16 years of age, was in Heaven. But of Amelia, a young woman of 18 years at her death, Our Lady said, “She will be in Purgatory until the end of the world.” [898]

The latter disclosure about Amelia’s prolonged period of expiation never fails to shock and trouble those who first hear of it. While mere curiosity should not instigate the inquiry, it appears there is one immediate and common question about this revelation:

What did Amelia do? That is, what confessed and forgiven sin(s) committed by a young person (a “teenager” by today’s standards), who lived in a remote village without any modern conveniences or amusements, could lead to a Purgatory of such time and duration?

The only answer upon which we can assuredly rely comes from Sr. Lucia when, years later, she was asked by Fr. Thomas McGlynn, O.P, about certain details regarding Amelia. Sr. Lucia's charitable, prudent, and brief response was befitting of a Servant of God: "Amelia was eighteen years old, Father, and, after all, for one mortal sin a soul may be in Hell forever." [899]

"Just" one mortal sin! Was Lucia's response a delicate hint that it was one mortal sin—obviously repented, confessed, and absolved—for which Amelia would endure a Purgatory incomprehensible to our minds? Did Our Lady make this known to Lucia? If such is the case, it still remains that we do not know the details of Amelia's solitary mortal sin—but neither do we need to know.

Instead, we should consider the reasons why Our Lady allowed to be made public the state of two souls, one who was already in Heaven (a revelation which many overlook) and one who would be in Purgatory until the end of time.

"What is certain is that Our Lady wanted us to know this for our instruction, and it would be foolish presumption to pretend to dispute the judgments of God," observes Fatima historian, Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité. "He alone, Who intimately knows each soul, the abundance of graces He has given to it, the degree of knowledge it had of its fault and the quality of its repentance, is the judge of the gravity of sin." [900]

Frère Michel also wisely notes that we may rarely think about Maria das Neves, the young soul of whom Our Lady said so simply, "She is in heaven." No, we are not inclined to ponder much about Maria, for today we are misled to believe that Heaven is our natural "right." Perhaps, too, we make light-hearted jokes like, "Well, at least in Purgatory, I'll be with friends." Yet the sufferings of Purgatory are not objects of jest, for God is offended by sin, and even confessed and absolved sins must be atoned in this world or the next. The agonies of Purgatory are no joke, especially because the straight and sure path to Heaven is made known to us by Christ: Pick up your cross daily and follow Me. [901]

Should we not first contemplate the teenaged Maria, if only for a few moments, and wonder: How did she fulfill God's Commandments? What heroic virtues did she practice? Did she endure Purgatory at all, or was her soul taken straight to Heaven? Were inquiries ever made about the details of her life or death? Is there anything really known about this young lady, other than her name and age? Or did her hidden and humble interior life—in which (as it seems) no one showed interest, even when her glorious state in Heaven became known—serve as a lesson in itself?

Since it appears no questions about Maria were ever asked, we have no details. What we do have, however, is Our Lady's word that Maria is in Heaven, and that is enough to tell us two simple and beautiful things about Maria—"she was a good girl and a good Christian." [\[902\]](#)

Out of the Depths

I Have Cried to Thee, O Lord...

But we do not forget Amelia, who died in the state of grace and is saved, nor should we forget her. It is, after all, our "sacred duty to pray for and make sacrifices on behalf of the Poor Souls in Purgatory." [\[903\]](#)

We call these souls "poor" because they can do nothing for themselves, relying always on our charity offered on their behalf; we call them "holy" because there is no question that they are among the saved. Cherished by God and assured of their salvation, they can and do intercede for us with their prayers.

However, while the poor souls can pray for us, they can no longer gain merit for themselves, and since the saints in Heaven pray for them but cannot acquire any indulgences for them, those who languish in Purgatory rely on the charity of the living on earth.

This is the beautiful "secret" regarding Purgatory, as St. John Chrysostom reminds us, "Not by weeping, but by prayer and almsgiving are the dead relieved." [\[904\]](#) It is only we, the Church Militant, who can obtain many indulgences (plenary and partial) for the faithful departed. [\[905\]](#)

We have three central means at our disposal to offer them relief and deliverance: The Holy Mass, the Holy Rosary, and almsgiving (fasts, penances, and sacrifices). For the benefit of our own souls and those in Purgatory, there exist many other highly indulgenced prayers and practices, including but not limited to:

The Brown Scapular of Mt. Carmel: To those who wear this Scapular with devotion, Our Lady promises, "Whosoever dies wearing this Scapular shall not suffer eternal fire." Too, a pious kiss given to the Brown Scapular offers 500 days' indulgence, which we can offer for the Poor Souls.

The Sabbatine (Saturday) Privilege, also granted to those who wear the Brown Scapular: "I, the Mother of Grace, shall descend on the Saturday after their death and whosoever I shall find in Purgatory, I shall free, so that I may lead them unto the holy mountain of life everlasting."

A Thousand Souls (the Prayer of St. Gertrude), by which Christ revealed He would release 1,000 souls from Purgatory, each time the prayer is offered: “Eternal Father, I offer thee the Most Precious Blood of Thy Divine Son, Jesus, in union with all of the Masses said throughout the world today—for all the holy souls in Purgatory, for sinners everywhere, for sinners in the universal Church, for those within my own home and within my own family. Amen.” [\[906\]](#)

Since God’s generosity can never be out-done, He not only allows all of our offerings to help the souls in Purgatory, but He also grants that these same actions “gain us merit, an increase in sanctifying grace, a higher degree of charity, closer union with God, and thus a higher degree of glory in Heaven for all eternity.” [\[907\]](#)

There is much more that Our God has revealed about Purgatory, but what is most important is to follow the charitable advice of the eternal Church, and which is so beautifully summarized by St. Augustine: “Forget not the dead and hasten to pray for them!” [\[908\]](#)

Part 18

Secrets of the Devotion to the Immaculate Heart

“To whoever embraces this devotion, I promise salvation; those souls will be cherished by God, as flowers placed by Me to adorn His throne.”

–Our Lady of Fatima

“You have seen hell, where the souls of poor sinners go. To save them, God wishes to establish in the world devotion to My Immaculate Heart.”

[909] Such were the opening words of the Virgin Mother of God when, in July 1917, she revealed to three shepherd children a secret in three distinct parts, known as “The Great Secret of Fatima.”

“If what I say to you is done,” the Lady continued, “many souls will be saved and there will be peace. The war is going to end, but if people do not cease offending God, a worse one will break out during the reign of Pius XI. When you see a night illumined by an unknown light, know that this is the great sign given you by God that He is about to punish the world for its crimes, by means of war, famine, and persecutions of the Church and of the Holy Father.”

“To prevent this, I shall come to ask for the consecration of Russia to my Immaculate Heart, and the Communion of Reparation on the First Saturdays. If my requests are heeded, Russia will be converted, and there will be peace; if not, she will spread her errors throughout the world, causing wars and persecutions of the Church. The good will be martyred, the Holy Father will have much to suffer, various nations will be annihilated.”

“In the end, my Immaculate Heart will triumph. The Holy Father will consecrate Russia to me, and she will be converted, and a certain period [era] of peace will be granted to the world. In Portugal, the dogma of the Faith will always be preserved; etc.” (sic)

To this day, Our Lady’s requests at Fatima are still not heeded throughout the Church. Instead, it is wrongly insisted that what was prophesied at Fatima is in the past and all that remains of the Virgin’s words is a heavily-diluted message: “Pray the Rosary for world peace.” Rare are the parish priests who advocate the daily Rosary or promote the Five First Saturdays of Reparation for the five major blasphemies against the Blessed Virgin (all of which are sins against faith).

The hierarchy of the Church has not, as one collegial body, universally propagated filial devotion to the Mother of God. To eradicate even greater errors (heresies and mortal sins) that would soon spread throughout the world, Our Lady also asked that the Pope and bishops spiritually unite together, on one day, to solemnly consecrate Russia to her Immaculate Heart –but that, too, has not been done. Nor is much attention paid to Our Lady’s revelation of what she wanted, made on the very day of the Miracle of the Sun on October 13, 1917: “Do not offend the Lord our God any longer. He is already deeply offended.” [\[910\]](#)

Centuries ago, Our Lady revealed, “One day, through the Rosary and the Scapular, I shall save the world.” One ponders why the Virgin made no mention of the Holy Sacrifice, which leads one to further wonder if or when the Mass will one day completely disappear. One can only consider how close is that day when the Virgin Mary, Mother of the Church, shall save the world through the Rosary and the Scapular. Awash with confusion, Her Divine Son’s only Church is besieged by the world, where Our Lord is rarely adored in the Holy Tabernacle (if He can be found at all), where the light of Faith is eclipsed, where the faithful cannot easily avail themselves of the Sacraments, where the very words of the infallible Scriptures are revised and updated, where contemporary catechesis is permeated with modernist thought, where mortal sin is rampant, and where heinous crimes are reported daily.

In this insanely inverted world, anything that is even lightly scented as “traditional Catholicism” is odiously distasteful to the olfactory senses of the rationalist, whether it be articles of faith, dogmas, doctrines, sacraments, sacramentals, and other long-standing beliefs, prayers, and practices of the Church. All this is only a part of the Church’s persecutions, which the Virgin foretold at Fatima. History proves that, with the exception of the annihilation of nations and the Third Secret (which may yet be fulfilled), all which Our Lady of Fatima prophesied came to pass.

In different degrees, the Church is everywhere persecuted. Good people are still being martyred, but we do not hear of that in mainstream news. In the more “fortunate” countries, the persecution comes in different forms. Catechesis for the laity and the training of priests, nuns, and other religious has long been doctrinally diluted, with disastrous results. While parishes are closing, bishops and pastors “circle the wagons” against the Tridentine Rite of Liturgy, feigning obedience to the Pope whilst simultaneously seeking loopholes in Summorum Pontificum, Pope Benedict XVI's Motu Proprio of July 7, 2007.

An increasing number of Catholics attend Mass for the “fellowship,” but they do not believe in Transubstantiation—i.e., that Christ is truly present (Body, Blood, Soul, and Divinity) in the Holy Eucharist. Those who do believe in the efficacy of the Sacraments are forced into the uncomfortable position of examining the form, matter, and priestly intent. Many Catholics wrongly disregard their absolute need for the Sacraments of Confession and Holy Communion. On the other side of the same coin, many priests fail to acquiesce to requests for Extreme Unction or the baptism of newborn babies in danger of death [\[911\]](#)—and the list goes on and on.

Attending the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass on Sundays and Holy Days of Obligation are for “those really Catholic” people. Those who do wish to avail themselves of Confession and seek pardon and absolution frequently find the sacrament is available only once a week (and usually allotted to a total of 30 minutes for one priest to hear all those waiting in the confessional line). Catholics who confess on a weekly or bi-weekly schedule may find themselves harshly dismissed by the priest in the confessional and told that their habitual practice of Confession reveals that said penitent does not trust the Lord. Pedophile or otherwise lascivious “priests” are protected but “tradition-friendly” priests, while sought out by the laity, either learn to hide their “leanings” or are inevitably assigned to the most dangerous parts of cities or booted to the boondocks by their bishops.

From the pulpit, the souls of Catholics who receive Our Lord on the tongue are publicly, unjustly and artfully shamed by their own priests who falsely accuse them of possessing “reserved hearts that are closed to others.” Convicted of lacking in charity towards their neighbor (based solely on the reverent position of their hands while receiving Holy Communion), those who physically display a proper attitude of reverence are admonished that they are only concerned about their own relationship with Christ (the accuser conveniently ignoring the first Great Commandment which declares that charity is first aimed toward God and secondly, that God has always taught our first obligation is to save our own souls). Meanwhile, those who receive the consecrated Host in outstretched hands (regardless of the fact that many actually chew the Body of Christ like a piece of gum that must be hastily swallowed) are praised for having “hearts that are open to others.” (And lest we forget, those who kneel for Holy Communion are often maliciously treated by the officiating priest, forced to stand—or otherwise denied the Body of Christ.)

Daily prayer and sacrifice are incorrectly perceived as practices for the overly-pious. Praying the daily Rosary is wrongly considered to be either much too difficult or appeals only to religious fanatics (often called “fundamentalists”). Again, in mainstream Catholic parishes, the First Friday and First Saturday devotions are rarely found. As for wearing the Brown Scapular of Mt. Carmel, the Miraculous Medal, or other Church-approved sacramentals, the faithful are too often and wrongfully told that they are not necessary and/or that those “old-fashioned things” are worn by people who either think they are “holier-than-thou” or are judged by others to be “off the deep end.”

Tragically, many a poor soul succumbs to these and other erroneous notions, conned by a false conception of holy obedience or humiliated into compliance by fear of human respect. Some flee the Church and never return. Others, through some mysterious grace of Faith, endure. Among the latter, God will lead them to learn that everything previously mentioned (traditional catechesis, the Tridentine Rite of Liturgy, prayer, sacrifice, regular reception of the Sacraments, respectful posture and gestures when receiving Christ in the Eucharist, the right use of sacramentals like blessed medals, scapulars, and holy water, the habitual practice of the virtue of charity—first to God, secondly to neighbor—and standing patiently firm against the temptation to conform to the onslaughts of the misinformed or the spiteful) constitutes their fidelity to their daily duty as Catholics.

Is it any wonder, then, that Jesus Christ spoke of “daily duty” to Sr. Lucia, of which she wrote, “He (Our Lord) wishes that it be made clear to souls that the true penance He wants and requires consists first of all in the sacrifice that each one must make to fulfill his own religious and temporal duties”? [\[912\]](#) In other words, Our Lord made it clear that our “true penance” would be the faithful fulfillment of our loving obligations to Him and in our states in life. In this day, to accomplish our daily duty as Catholics means practice of all the virtues to a heroic degree.

Why Devotion to the Immaculate Heart?

What is the cure to these ongoing disasters? Why does the Lord God wish to save poor sinners from eternal perdition by establishing world devotion to the Immaculate Heart of Mary? Our Lady herself gave the answer when she said to the three children (and through them, to each one of us),

“Are you suffering a great deal? I will never abandon you. My Immaculate Heart will be your refuge and the path that leads you to God.” [913]

Mary, the Mother of God, is also the true Mother of all men and Queen of all Hearts. We have already seen that Pope Pius XII expressed the depths of these mysteries of the King and Queen in the following way: “Jesus is King of the Eternal Ages by nature and by right of conquest; through Him, with Him, and subordinate to Him, Mary is Queen by grace, by divine relationship, by right of conquest, and by singular election. And her kingdom is as vast as that of Her Son and God, since nothing is excluded from Her dominion.” [914]

Our Lady Mother and Queen promises each one of us that her Immaculate Heart will be our refuge—i.e., our sanctuary, our safe haven, our place of shelter and retreat. She further promises that this same sanctuary is “the path that leads you to God.” Like the secret that God would become Man was “hidden from ages and generations” [915] until it was publicly manifested at Bethlehem when the Christ Child was found “with Mary his Mother,” [916] the devotion to the Immaculate Heart of Mary is found in the Deposit of Faith. It, too, falls under what St. Bonaventure called “the general law of preparation.”

It has been heretofore mentioned that this law refers to the way God provided Divine Revelation to make ready the human race for His “undoing of the awful consequences of Original sin taken in conjunction with man’s response to God’s overtures.” [917] With those last five words, we are given an important reminder about free will, which is the faculty of choice. At Fatima, Our Lady emphasized that people must stop offending the Lord God. She did not mark any office or class as that which most offends the Holy Trinity; she neither placed all the blame on the hierarchy nor on the laity. She simply said “people,” which includes every human being, especially within the Church, the kingdom of God on earth.

May we daily turn to the Immaculate Heart of Mary, honored by the Church with the Feast of the Immaculate Heart (August 22) which falls on the octave of the holy day of obligation, the Feast of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary (August 15). May we also pray, study and act to save our own souls and that of others by prayer and sacrifice because, as written elsewhere in this work:

When on a great scale mankind abandons God and tempts Him to turn His face from us, Our Lady’s continual intercession is the last means to save souls: that is the reason why God wishes to establish devotion to the Immaculate Heart. When we are tempted to think we have nowhere to go for help, we cannot forget Our Lady of Fatima's consoling words: My Immaculate Heart will be your refuge and the path that leads you to God.

A MYSTERY OF MERCY: THE VIRGIN MARY AS MOTHER

“Mary was raised to the dignity of Mother of God rather for sinners than for the just, since Jesus Christ declares that He came to call not the just, but sinners.”

–St. Anselm

“Why does the Lord God wish to save poor sinners from eternal perdition by establishing world devotion to the Immaculate Heart of Mary?” At Fatima, “Our Lady herself gave the answer when she said to the three children (and through them, to each one of us), ‘Are you suffering a great deal? I will never abandon you. My Immaculate Heart will be your refuge and the path that leads you to God.’ ” [\[918\]](#)

The origins and development of devotion to the Immaculate Heart of Mary are found in the Deposit of Faith (otherwise known as Divine Revelation, which issues from Tradition and Scripture). It, too, falls under what is coined as “the general law of preparation.” This law, so often mentioned because it is so essential in understanding the Deposit of Faith, refers to the way God provided Divine Revelation to make ready the human race for His “undoing of the awful consequences of Original Sin taken in conjunction with man’s response to God’s overtures.” [\[919\]](#)

Throughout the Church’s history, “we find that God in His wisdom and goodness has inspired and directed the minds of men to the clarification of various points of revelation. One after another in a pattern fully understood only by God, these treasures have been brought to the fore by saint and scholar, considered profoundly, and submitted to the infallible magisterium of the Church. Under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, the Church has investigated and explained century after century the many secrets of the Godhead hidden in the depths of Christian revelation. Through this unfolding of the ineffable truths of revelations, souls are drawn to God, the source of every good.” [920] Since our faith teaches that Divine Revelation is a world of mystery but not of contradiction, we believe all that God has revealed to us. [921]

We see the “general law of preparation” in the Old Testament’s opaque revelation of the mystery of the Holy Trinity. As already discussed, the first implicit hint of the Old Testament’s “general law of preparation” for the revelation of the Triune God appeared in the history of creation when the Lord said, “Let us make man to our image and likeness.” St. Augustine noted similar utterances from God about His plurality: “Behold, Adam is become as one of us,” [922] and “Let us go down, and there confound their tongue.” [923] The triple Sanctus of Isaias, “Holy, holy, holy, the Lord God of Hosts,” [924] and the triple blessing recorded in Numbers [925] are also opaque heralds of the sublime mystery of the Holy Trinity. There are, however, many others.

Scriptural prophecies of the coming Savior and His Mother are found throughout the Old Testament. As already discussed, the first prophecy of this was declared by the Holy Trinity and is known to us as the proto-evangelion (the “first Good News”) in Genesis 3:15. From the beginning, then, we see that the Lord God Himself formed an irrevocable union between Jesus Christ and his Mother, full of grace.

Divine Revelation closed with the passing of the last surviving Apostle, St. John the Evangelist, one of the two Apostles whom Jesus called the sons of thunder, [926] in order “to express the strength and activity of their faith in publishing the law of God, without fearing the power of man.” [927] Lest we forget, St. John is called the Apostle of the Sacred Heart, to which the Immaculate Heart is so intimately connected.

He is also known as “the disciple whom Jesus loved,” [928] which is not to say that Our Lord did not love the other Apostles. Rather, St. John is the beloved disciple because he was the Apostle most like Our Lord (and we may also truly say, like Our Lady)—a virgin in mind, body, and soul, a virgin great in charity towards God and man, a virgin strong in faith and hope and yet humble of heart. Due to this Apostle’s great love for Our Lord and His Virgin Mother, St. John was the only member of the newly-established Church hierarchy to stand with Our Lady at the Foot of the Cross. In overcoming his own fears of persecution and possible death, St. John chose to follow Jesus during His Passion and assist Our Lady in her greatest sorrow.

In his Gospel, St. John recorded that Our Lord, looking down at His Mother and the disciple (himself), said: “Woman, behold thy son. After that, he saith to the disciple: Behold thy mother.” [\[929\]](#) St. John continued: “And from that hour, the disciple took her to his own. Afterwards, Jesus knowing that all things were now accomplished, that the scripture might be fulfilled, said: I thirst.” [\[930\]](#)

Let us take special care to note that it was only after Jesus addressed His Mother as “Woman,” and after St. John “took her to his own” that Christ knew “all things were now accomplished, that the scripture might be fulfilled.” In his Gospel, St. John revealed that Jesus first spoke to Mary, His Mother, rather than to him (an Apostle). This is highly relevant because first, Our Lady’s office is even higher than that of the Apostles and, second, because Our Lord’s brief words to the Virgin and St. John are not a matter of only asking the Apostle to take care of Mary.

In speaking of Scriptural fulfillment, St. John recognized the unfolding of “the general law of preparation” found throughout the Old Testament. “For this purpose, the Son of God appeared, that he might destroy the works of the devil,” as St. John would later write. He further grasped the prophecy of Genesis 3:15 about the woman and her seed. Jesus is the Messiah, the promised Savior, and Mary is “the Woman” prophesied—the “Woman” who is to be accepted and honored as Mother. Christ is the only-begotten of the Ages but He is also truly the Son of Mary. The faithful who follow Him also become the “seed” of the “Woman,” Mary. For if Christ is First-born and “Brother,” then Mary is, indeed, Mother. To emphasize this truth, Our Lord stated simply to St. John: “Behold thy Mother.”

As for St. John, who became the living figure-type for all of the elect until this world ends, he took Our Lady “to” (not “for”) his own. St. John heard, believed, and immediately acted upon Christ’s three simple words to him: “Behold thy mother.” He did not hesitate, he did not question, and he did not wrangle with sophistries. Although his own mother lived, he was to accept Mary as Mother, too.

Fully understanding Our Lord’s revelation that Mary is also our Mother in the order of grace, it was “from that hour that the disciple took her to his own.” This fact again points to “the general law of preparation,” the mystery unveiled by Christ on the Cross. Mary is mother to “the disciple whom Jesus loved,” which means she is Mother to all Christians.

Quoting a celebrated writer, St. Alphonsus wrote in The Glories of Mary “‘that it was, properly speaking, on Mount Calvary that Jesus formed His Church;’ and then it is evident that the Blessed Virgin cooperated in a most excellent and especial manner in the accomplishment of this work. And in the same way it can be said, that though she brought forth the Head of the Church, Jesus Christ, without pain, she did not bring forth the body of this Head without very great suffering, and so it was on Mount Calvary that Mary began, in an especial manner, to be the Mother of the whole Church.”

The saint continued, “To say all in a few words, Almighty God, in order to glorify the mother of the Redeemer, has ordained that her great charity should intercede for all those for whom her Divine Son offered and paid the super-abundant ransom of His Precious Blood, in which alone is our salvation, life, and resurrection.” [\[931\]](#)

The Immaculate Heart: A Secret of God

“Secret things to the Lord our God: things that are manifest, to us and to our children forever, that we may do all the words of this law.” [\[932\]](#) Found in the Old Testament’s Book of Deuteronomy, the verse is briefly explained in a footnote of the Douay-Rheims translation of the Holy Bible, as follows: “As much as to say, secret things belong to, and are known to, God alone; our business must be to observe what He has revealed and manifested to us, and to direct our lives accordingly.”

When we look to the Holy Bible (from Genesis through the Apocalypse), we know we shall find both opaque “secrets” about Our Lord, Our Lady, and the future of the Church. Tradition cannot be forgotten, either, since St. Paul is clear that we must hold fast to Tradition and Scripture, the two pillars of Divine Revelation.[\[933\]](#)

Throughout the long centuries since Christ’s Resurrection and Ascension into Heaven, the Lord God has been ever-so-slowly manifesting the Virgin Mary’s office in His plan of Redemption. Four thousand years before Advent, the Woman (Mary) and Her seed (Jesus, the God-Man and Savior, and those who follow Him, who are her children in the order of grace) were prophesied by God Himself. In a similar manner, the doctrine of devotion to the Immaculate Heart of Mary as necessary for salvation is brought to the world when God deems that it is most needed.

“It was through Mary that the salvation of the world was begun,” wrote St. Louis-Marie de Montfort, “and it is through Mary that it must be consummated. Mary hardly appeared at all in the first coming of Jesus Christ, in order that men, as yet but little instructed and enlightened on the Person of her Son, should not remove themselves from Him in attaching themselves too strongly and too grossly to her...But in the Second Coming of Jesus Christ, Mary has to be made known and revealed by the Holy Ghost in order that through her Jesus Christ may be known, loved, and served. The reasons which moved the Holy Ghost to hide His spouse during her life, and to reveal her but very little since the preaching of the Gospel, subsist no longer.” [\[934\]](#)

In his own way, St. Louis-Marie was referring to “the general law of preparation.” The saint specifically mentioned that further knowledge and revelation of Mary (by the Holy Ghost) is the prerequisite to the Parousia –i.e., the Second Coming of Jesus. When we further consider that, in 1917, Our Lady clearly stated, “God wishes to establish throughout the world devotion to my Immaculate Heart,” there is certainly ample reason to pause and consider how late must be the days of this world. However, like St. John the Apostle, we should not hesitate but simply take Mary “to” our own.

In the Gospel of St. Mark, Our Lord forewarned of a time when there would arise false Christs and false prophets, who will show great signs and wonders, “to seduce (if it were possible) even the elect.” [\[935\]](#) St. Matthew’s record of Christ’s words is almost identical to St. Mark’s. However, instead of saying “to seduce,” St. Matthew states “insomuch as to deceive (if possible) even the elect.” [\[936\]](#)

In the Modern Age, wherein every Church dogma, doctrine and article of faith is under attack, wherein Our Lord and His saints—especially Mary, the Virgin Mother of God—are blasphemed, the faithful would do well to not only act by practicing devotion to the Immaculate Heart of Mary, but also to study its history. For, as St. Paul admonished the Ephesians: “Put you on the armor of God, that you may be able to stand against the deceits of the devil.” [\[937\]](#)

THE REMEDY: AN IMMENSE DEVOTION

“The Virgin received Salvation so that she may give it back to the centuries.”

–St. Peter Chrysologus, Sermon 140 (ante A.D. 450)

In the years since the Fatima apparitions, in which Our Lady clearly stated that “God wishes to establish throughout the world devotion to My Immaculate Heart,” the truth remains that “...Mary is not half enough preached. Devotion to her is low and thin and poor. It is frightened out of its wits by the sneers of heresy. It is always invoking human respect and carnal prudence, wishing to make Mary so little of a Mary that Protestants may feel at ease about her. Its ignorance of theology makes it unsubstantial and unworthy. It is not the prominent characteristic of our religion which it ought to be. It has no faith in itself. Hence it is that Jesus is not loved, that heretics are not converted, that the Church is not exalted; that souls, which might be saints, wither and dwindle; that the Sacraments are not rightly frequented, or souls enthusiastically evangelized.” [938]

The quote above was written over 150 years ago, by Fr. Frederick William Faber in his Translator’s Preface to St. Louis Marie de Montfort’s A Treatise on True Devotion to the Blessed Virgin Mary with Preparation for Total Consecration. [939] In the same preface, with words that still apply to the plight of the faithful, Fr. Faber had previously written:

“All those who are likely to read this book love God, and lament that they do not love Him more; all desire something for his glory—the spread of some good work, the success of some devotion, the coming of some good time. One man has been striving for years to overcome a particular fault, and has not succeeded. Another mourns, and almost wonders why he mourns, that so few of his relations and friends have been converted to the faith. One grieves that he has not devotion enough; another that he has a cross to carry, which is a particularly impossible cross to him; while a third has domestic troubles and family unhappinesses, which feel almost incompatible with his salvation; and for all these things, prayer appears to bring so little remedy.”

“But what is the remedy that is wanted? What is the remedy indicated by God Himself?” Fr. Faber understandably asked. “If we may rely on the disclosures of the Saints, it is an immense increase of devotion to Our Blessed Lady; but, remember, nothing short of an immense one.” [940]

A Glimpse at the Devotion's History

The necessary devotion to Our Lady, especially to her Immaculate Heart, is not a spontaneous development in the Church. Like other Marian doctrines in the Deposit of Faith, which closed with the death of St. John the Evangelist, this elevated piety to Mary's Heart is like the tiny bud of a rose, slowly blossoming throughout the centuries. In taking a very brief look at this devotion's history, we must remember the three following things:

- First, the Church and her children will always rely on Divine Revelation, which issues from either long-standing Tradition or Scripture or both;
- Second, we remember that Divine Revelation, given only to the Church founded by Christ and interpreted correctly only by this same Church through the Magisterium (Ordinary and Extraordinary), continues to ensue until the last day of this world's existence;
- Third, we recall "the general law of preparation," which refers to the way God provided Divine Revelation to make ready the human race of His "undoing of the awful consequences of Original Sin, taken in conjunction with man's response to God's overtures." [\[941\]](#) This law spans throughout all of Divine Revelation which, of course, includes the past, the present, and the future.

The question of the proofs of this doctrine (devotion to the Immaculate Heart) are somewhat akin (but not identical) to those which led to the solemn dogmatic definition of the Assumption of Mary. That particular doctrine, as Fr. Garrigou-LaGrange wrote, was "not possible to prove directly from Sacred Scripture nor from primitive documents...it can be proved indirectly from later documents that there was at least an implicit revelation [to the Apostles or at least to one of them] since there are certain facts" that are "explicable in no other way." [\[942\]](#)

Conversely, the doctrine of devotion to the Immaculate Heart of Mary can be indirectly proved from both Holy Scripture and Tradition, which includes commentaries on the Canticles from Church Fathers like St. Hippolytus of Rome (170-235 A.D.), St. Ephrem (306-373 A.D.), St. Ambrose (340-397 A.D.), St. Gregory of Nyssa (335-395 A.D.), St. Peter Chrysologus (560-636 A.D.), and St. John Damascene (676-749 A.D.).

In recent times, Pope Pius XII alluded to the historical fact that "remote vestiges of the devotion to the Immaculate Heart of Our Blessed Mother are to be found in the commentaries of the Fathers on the Sponsa [Spouse] of the Canticle of Canticles...for the bride of the Canticle, adorned with the beauty of spotless purity and deep affection for her spouse, is a figure [type] most appropriate to the Mother of God.” [943] In addition, there are “innumerable passages in the Canticle of Canticles which the Fathers apply to the Singula Anima Fidelus, or adoring soul,” which certainly applies to the Virgin Mary, the “most perfect of all souls and the most worthy to be called the spouse of the Bridegroom.” [944]

Even further, the Canticle includes two verses which mention the Heart of the Beloved, as follows: “I sleep, and my heart watcheth: the voice of my beloved knocking: Open to me, my sister, my love, my undefiled” (Cant. 5:2). Of this verse, St. Isidore of Seville (560-636 A.D.) said it means, “Open to me, that is, reveal to me thy heart, my sister, my undefiled, because you alone are worthy of my sight.” [945] Alain de l’Isle (1128-1203 A.D.) understood the same verse as referring to the Blessed Virgin before the Incarnation of Christ, believing that “I sleep” referred to Our Lady’s complete freedom from motherly anxieties and concerns, while the words “and my heart watcheth” refers to her constant contemplation of the Divine. [946]

“Put me as a seal upon thy heart, as a seal upon thy arm” (Cant. 8:6). The afore-mentioned Alain de l’Isle’s commentary on this verse states the Virgin Mary so carried Christ as a seal upon her Heart that through imitation of Him, she came more and more to resemble Him. [947] Of the words “...he set in order charity in me” (Cant. 2:4), he wrote, “In whom was charity formed, if not in the Virgin Mary; who loved Christ from the depths of her heart...” [948]

We know that almost every page of the Old Testament includes prophecy, figure-types, and attributes applicable to the Holy Mother of God. In the Psalms, she appears as the Sanctuary and in the Book of Wisdom, she is the “first-born daughter of God” and the “heavenly Queen of the world,” but there are many other examples. When we look to the New Testament, however, we find a few explicit references to her which possess deep and precious meaning. Specifically, in the Gospel of St. Luke, it is found that, three times, the word “heart” is used in connotation to Mary.

- At the Nativity, upon hearing the shepherds reveal how angels directed them to find the Christ Child: “...all who heard marveled at the things told them by the shepherds. But Mary kept all these words, pondering them in her heart. (Luke 2:19)

- At the Presentation of the Divine Infant in the Temple, Simeon the Prophet said to the Virgin Mary: Behold this Child is set for the fall and for the resurrection of many in Israel and for a sign which shall be contradicted. And thy own soul a sword shall pierce, that out of many hearts thoughts may be revealed. (Luke 2:35)

- After the three day disappearance of the Christ Child, and the mysterious words He spoke to Our Lady: And he went down with them and came to Nazareth and was subject to them. And his mother kept all these words in her heart. (Luke 2:51)

Hence, we see that twice do the Scriptures declare that Mary “kept” these words in her Heart, while once, the Holy Ghost inspired St. Simeon to speak to Our Lady, prophesying that the thoughts of many hearts shall be revealed by the piercing of her own soul. In this one heavenly-inspired announcement, Christ is proclaimed to Israel by the Holy Ghost—and so is Mary’s office in the Redemption, for otherwise why should the piercing of her soul possess any power to reveal the thoughts “out of many hearts”? We know Simeon’s words are not literal in every aspect, because neither Scripture nor Tradition subsequently teach that a sword ever touched Mary’s body; the prophecy specifically speaks of her soul, not her Heart. How, then, should these mysterious allusions to Mary’s heart and soul be properly understood? The astounding answer is given by the Church Fathers, who “depict Mary’s Heart as the receptacle or tabernacle for the divine mysteries and augments of faith.” [\[949\]](#)

Furthermore, in describing the eight meanings of the word “heart” in Sacred Scripture, St. John Eudes explained, “We must understand by the word ‘heart’ that highest part of the soul which theologians call the point of the spirit. It is the seat of contemplation, which consists in turning the mind directly toward God and viewing Him in all simplicity, without discursive reasoning or multiplicity of thoughts. The Fathers of the Church apply to this power of the soul those words which the Holy Ghost puts in the mouth of the Blessed Virgin Mary: ‘I sleep, and my heart watcheth.’ According to St. Bernadine of Siena and several other writers, sleep and rest of the body did not prevent Mary’s holy heart—that is, the highest part of her mind—from being always united to God in sublime contemplation.” [\[950\]](#)

The Slowly-Germinating Seeds

Like the blue spruce tree, with its very slow growth rate but which, upon reaching its full maturity, will live and stand magnificently for centuries, the same fact of slow maturation applies to devotion to the Immaculate Heart of Mary. In the time-span between the Patristic era and the twelfth century, wherein the greatest saints of the Church began to arise, there are scant references to Mary's Heart. The seeds of the devotion to Mary's Immaculate Heart are found in the Scriptures, but the first signs of their germination are found in Tradition.

Not long before St. Bernard's time, there exist a few references to the joys and sorrows of Mary's Heart; St. Anselm links the Immaculate Heart of Mary with her role as Co-Redemptrix, but it is St. Bernard, in his sermon Dominica Infra Octavam Assumptionis B. V. Mariae, who left a historical record of particular devotion to the Heart of Mary. Then came St. Bernadine of Siena and later, St. John Eudes and St. Alphonsus di Liguori, who strikingly stand out in their propagation of profound piety to the Heart of Mary or the glories of Mary. Church history proves that devotion to Our Lady reached its peak in the Middle Ages. It would seem, then, to be no coincidence that, as devotion to Our Lady's Heart grew, so did the number of saints.

Tragically, this devotion began to wane, due in great part to the Protestant and French Revolts—and the terrible effects are not only still with us, but they have grown stronger and are increasingly widespread. Don Sharkey, author of The Woman Shall Conquer, noted, "The leaders of the Protestant Revolt, in their hatred for everything Catholic, struck especially at Our Lord in the Blessed Sacrament and at devotion to the Blessed Virgin. These, ironically, are the very things we need most in our struggle for salvation." [\[951\]](#)

Countless are the number of Catholics who knew these truths and were martyred, simply because they resisted Martin Luther, the Catholic priest who, after Judas, may be the world's most infamous apostate. They also resisted the princes who were rather delighted with Luther's blasphemous and boorish tirades. The faithful Catholics of England resisted King Henry VIII, the once-Catholic king who, due to his unbridled lust and pride, became an adulterer, a heretic, and a mass-murderer of his wives and his subjects. The Catholics who did not acquiesce to the king's demands (or those of his illegitimate daughter, Elizabeth, when she became queen) were martyred.

Next on the historical scene came the "progressivists" of the so-called Enlightenment, with their insane ideas of a "Man" with a "new order," a "new paradigm," and a "new era," a "Man" who does not need God. These prideful ideas were inevitably followed by the French Revolt, with its outright, wholesale denial of God, His Church, and Divine Revelation, all of which led to the vicious persecutions and martyrdoms of the royal Catholic family of France and the faithful from all walks of life.

There is much more history that could be mentioned, but may it suffice to say this: For almost five centuries now, the Catholic Faith, which is what made Europe and made “Western Civilization,” is suffering from the most insidious forms of heretical attacks. With the Church, the whole world suffers for, as the old maxim declares, “As Rome goes, so goes the world.” And so we return to the question, asked by Fr. Faber only 150 years ago:

“But what is the remedy that is wanted? What is the remedy indicated by God Himself? If we may rely on the disclosures of the Saints, it is an immense increase of devotion to Our Blessed Lady; but, remember, nothing short of an immense one.” [\[952\]](#)

A MYSTERY OF SALVATION: THE SYNTHESIS OF ALL DEVOTIONS

“If I have found favor in thy sight, oh king, give me my people for which I request.”

–Book of Esther 7:23

Most of us understand that when we say of another, “She has a good heart,” we are referring to the interior goodness of the person, a moral integrity perceived by an individual’s words and actions. It follows that when we speak of Mary’s Immaculate Heart, we are truly speaking of her whole person. Therefore, devotion to the Immaculate Heart means a filial devotion to the person of the Virgin Mary, the Mother of God who is assumed body and soul into Heaven. The synthesis of all devotions to the Virgin Mary is found in devotion to her Immaculate Heart, which includes (but is not limited to) the praying of the Holy Rosary.

“The Church says of her person that Mary is ‘the temple of the Lord, the sanctuary of the Holy Ghost,’” as St. John Eudes wrote, “and we can apply these words with still better reason to her Admirable Heart, having seen that it is the source of all the qualities and excellences with which she is adorned.” [953] What St. John Eudes called “the Admirable Heart of Mary” is the Immaculate Heart of Mary, “the receptacle or tabernacle for the divine mysteries and augments of faith.” [954]

St. Louis de Montfort taught, “Mary is the sanctuary and the repose of the Holy Trinity, where God dwells more magnificently and more divinely than in any other place in the universe...Neither is it allowed to any creature, no matter how pure, to enter into that sanctuary without a great and special privilege.” [955] At Fatima, however, Our Lady expressly said that God wills the universal devotion to her Immaculate Heart. Since this same Heart is the tabernacle of God, can we even begin to understand the “great and special privilege” that is offered to us when Our Lady invites us to take refuge in her Immaculate Heart?

“Then rose up her children.” [956] Richard of St. Laurence, commenting on Proverbs, remarked that one cannot be a child of Mary who does not first rise from the iniquity into which he has fallen. To this he added, “The sons of Mary are her imitators in chastity, humility, meekness, mercy.” As the ultimate tonic to eradicate the rising errors of the modernist heresy and those of atheistic Russia, Our Lady came to Fatima, there to implore her children to rise up, amend their lives, and cease offending God, Who is already much offended.

Why the Virgin Mary Draws Our Attention

“In the person of Mary, a daughter of Adam like ourselves, God sets before us an accomplished model, but one more adapted to our weakness.” [957] What is it in the Virgin Mary that appeals to our human weaknesses? She attracts us because she is a mother, the embodiment of all that is loving, self-sacrificing, compassionate, understanding, graceful and strong, interceding and protecting. She draws us because, like us, she is fully human, and yet she alone is “the most perfect master-piece which nature and grace combined have ever formed of a simple creature.” [958]

Grace and mercy are what we inherently perceive in the Virgin Mary. “Wherefore St. Anselm well remarks that when we implore the Holy Virgin to obtain graces for us, it is not that we distrust the divine mercy, but rather that we distrust our own unworthiness, and commend ourselves to Mary that her merits may compensate for our unworthiness,” as St. Alphonsus de Liguori wrote. [959] Centuries later, Fr. Garrigou-Lagrange [960] stated, “Theologians note that she does not seem to share in any special way in the royal judicial power of inflicting punishment for sin, for Tradition calls her not the Mother of Justice but the Mother of Mercy, a title which is hers in virtue of her mediation of all graces. [961] Jesus seems to have kept to Himself the reign of justice [962] as is becoming [of] Him who is the ‘judge of the living and the dead.’” [963]

“The Church, in devotion to the Immaculate Heart, does not exclude Mary’s extraordinary love for God in celebrating in a special way her maternal love for men; thus we might summarize the spiritual element in our devotion as the charity of Mary toward God, her love for Christ, and especially her love for us as her spiritual children.” [964] As the Virgin full of grace who is also Mother Most Merciful, Our Lady Mary is the flawless human image of her Creator. Her Immaculate Heart reflects the glory and virtues of Christ’s Sacred Heart. In all these truths are glimpsed the mysteries of salvation for, prior to His Incarnation, the Word created His own Mother. He created her Immaculate, not only free from Original Sin but also full of grace.

Jesus Christ had no human father, so it is from the Virgin Mother that He formed His Body. From her beautiful countenance came the masculine form of His Holy Face. Her blood is the source of Our Lord's Precious Blood, by which all mankind is offered redemption. Her Immaculate Heart, as previously mentioned, was the pattern from which Our Lord traced His Sacred Heart. Jesus is the source of our salvation, but the sinless Virgin Mary is the cause due to the Fiat ("Let it be done") of her own free will. It is for these reasons that St. Bonaventure wrote in such simple and beautiful words, "All salvation springs from Mary's Heart." [965]

Secrets in the Order of Grace

De Maria nunquam satis! [966] St. John Eudes asks: "How much more, then, should we not honor and magnify Our Savior in the Heart of His Blessed Mother?" [967]

"To be devout to you, O holy Virgin," says St. John Damascene, "is an arm of salvation which God gives to those whom he wishes to save." [968] St. Alphonsus boldly declared that "the intercession of Mary is necessary to salvation." In a similar manner, St. Louis de Montfort taught, "Our Blessed Lady is the means Our Lord made use of to come to us. She is also the means which we must make use of to go to Him." [969] Fr. Garrigou-Lagrange, writing on Mary's role in the Redemption, the Church, and the interior life of the soul, stated: "God has continued to make use of Mary for the sanctification of souls." [970]

"We must choose, therefore, among all the devotions to the Blessed Virgin, the one which draws us more towards death to ourselves, inasmuch as it will be the best and the most sanctifying," concluded St. Louis de Montfort, the apostle of True Devotion to Jesus through Mary. "As there are secrets of nature to do in a short time, at little cost and with facility, natural operations, so also in like manner there are secrets in the order of grace to do in a short time, with sweetness and facility, supernatural operations, such as emptying ourselves of self, filling ourselves with God, and becoming perfect." [971]

These "secrets in the order of grace" are discovered in devotion to the Immaculate Heart of Mary, the synthesis of all devotions "to Jesus through Mary." In a succinct manner, Our Lady herself said the same at Fatima: "My Immaculate Heart will be your refuge, and the path that will lead you to God." Fr. Garrigou-Lagrange explains the reasons for this devotion, "The cult [972] offered to Mary in the Church confirms in a general way the foundations of our faith since it derives from the Redemptive Incarnation. Thereby it destroys heresies: 'Cunctas haereses interemist in universe mundo.' The same cult leads to holiness by suggesting the imitation of Mary's virtues, and it glorifies the Son by honoring the Mother." [973]

This devotion is an "interior and perfect practice," as St. Louis de Montfort describes, meaning any external practices are intended for the life of the soul. Fr. Garrigou-Lagrange offers a summation of the saint's teaching on personal consecration to Mary: "Like the other Christian virtues, true devotion grows in us with charity, advancing from the stage of the beginner to that of the more proficient, and continuing up to the stage of the perfect." [974]

In speaking of personal consecration to Our Lady, which St. de Montfort taught is the third degree of Marian devotion, Fr. Lagrange added that it is "a practical form of recognition of her universal mediation and a guarantee of her special protection...In the practice of this complete dependence on Mary, there may be included the resignation into Mary's hands of everything in our good works that is communicable to other souls, so that she may make use of it in accordance with the will of her Divine Son and for His glory." [975]

At every Fatima apparition, the Blessed Virgin asked for the daily Rosary, which is itself is a synthesis of the Redemption history and of prayers taught by Jesus (the Our Father), St. Gabriel and, with him, the Church (the Hail Mary). Unchanged for centuries, Our Lady herself made one seemingly small but imperative addition with the "O my Jesus prayer." [976] Thus, the Rosary is the foundation of devotion to the Immaculate Heart. We gain through the Rosary that which we spiritually need because, as St. Robert Bellarmine noted, "that which is daily required must be asked for every day." [977] Without prayer, we lose final perseverance, which we cannot merit but only gain by daily asking for it as a gift from God.

The Rosary helps us practice the virtues of Jesus and Mary. Fr. Garrigou-Lagrange said of the Psalter: "The fifteen mysteries of the Rosary thus divided into three groups are but different aspects of the three great mysteries of our salvation: The Incarnation, the Redemption, Eternal Life...Thus, the Rosary is a Credo...It is the whole of Christian dogma in all its splendor and elevation...The joyful mysteries lead to the Passion, and the Passion to the door of Heaven...The Rosary, well understood is, therefore, a very elevated form of prayer which makes the whole of dogma available to all." [978]

Moreover, the eminent theologian compared the Rosary to the four ends of the Liturgy of the Mass when he wrote, "The Rosary is more than a prayer of petition. It is a prayer of adoration inspired by the thought of the Incarnate God, a prayer of reparation in memory of the Passion of Our Savior, a prayer of thanksgiving that the glorious mysteries continue to reproduce themselves in the uninterrupted entry of the elect into glory.” [\[979\]](#)

Willed by God and revealed by Him, devotion to the Immaculate Heart of Mary is intended for these days, which are the latter days. St. Louis de Montfort foresaw that this devotion “would come to pass particularly at the end of the world, and indeed presently [as in “soon”] because the Most High with His holy Mother has to form for Himself great saints, who shall surpass most of the other Saints in sanctity...” [\[980\]](#)

To fully eradicate modernism, which is a synthesis of all spiritual evils, the Virgin Mary came to Fatima. There she requested a spiritual solution, a mystery of salvation that overcomes the mystery of iniquity. Willed by God, the offered remedy is a “synthesis of all devotions”—the universal devotion to Mary’s Immaculate Heart.

THE ULTIMATE REASON FOR FATIMA: THE ONE THING NECESSARY

“In the end, My Immaculate Heart will triumph. The Holy Father will consecrate Russia to Me, and she will be converted, and an era of peace, will be granted to the world.”

—Our Lady of Fatima, July 13, 1917

July 13 marks an important date in salvation history. It is the date when, in 1917, Our Lady addressed essential matters of Divine Revelation in a way never before known in the Church’s chronicles. With the third stage of the Great Revolt against God already commencing, the Virgin Mary came to Fatima to remind each person throughout the world of the one thing necessary: The salvation of our individual souls through devotion to her Immaculate Heart. That is truly the center of the Great Secret because in June, she had already showed her Heart to the children, saying specifically to Lucia: “Jesus wishes to make use of you to make me known and loved. He wants to establish in the world devotion to my Immaculate Heart.”

The Promises and the Prophecies:

A Pattern of Three’s

“In the whole cycle of the apparitions, that of July 13 is unquestionably the most important,” wrote Fatima historian Frère Michel. “It is the central apparition which the two previous ones prepared for and the three subsequent ones were to confirm.” [981] He continued, “The history and the content of this extraordinary message is unprecedented in all the history of the Church...” [982] It is also the apparition in which we see a pattern of three’s, possibly to implicitly remind us of the Holy Trinity, Who is one God in Three Divine Persons—the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost.

Our Lady chose the third apparition in July—the month in which the Church especially honors the Most Precious Blood of Jesus shed for our redemption—to disclose four matters of import: 1) a three-fold promise for October, including a miracle which, when fulfilled, occurred in three stages, 2) the prophecies of the Great Secret, comprised of three distinct parts, 3) a prayer of sacrifice, with three pleas to Jesus, and 4) an addition after each Rosary decade, a prayer of three entreaties to Our Savior.

The Three-fold Promise: “In October, I will tell you who I am and what I want, and I will perform a miracle for all to see and believe.” [983]

The Lady made this promise a mere moment before revealing the Great Secret.

The Miracle, as Frère Michel notes, “would guarantee the divine origin of the secret, as well as the fulfillment of this prophetic secret. Thus the great miracle of October 13 was closely associated, by the Blessed Virgin herself, not only with the whole of her message, but especially with the prophetic text of July 13.” [\[984\]](#)

The Sacrifice Prayer with three intentions: The Lady, who from the beginning of the apparitions displayed consistent concern for sinners, said: “Sacrifice yourselves for sinners, and say many times, especially whenever you make some sacrifice: O Jesus, it is for love of You, for the conversion of sinners, and in reparation for the sins committed against the Immaculate Heart of Mary.” [\[985\]](#) In this brief offering, we recognize three points: A prayer addressed to Jesus which speaks of love for Him, offers sacrifice for the souls of others, and makes an act of reparation for sins.

Although this book has previously shared what is known of the Great Secret’s contents, it is efficacious for our souls to read it again, meditate upon Our Lady’s words, and consider why Heaven gave this Great Secret in three distinct parts:

The First Part of the Great Secret: In speaking those last words, Our Lady opened her hands...from which “rays of light seemed to penetrate the earth, and we saw as it were a sea of fire,” Sr. Lucia wrote. “Plunged in this fire were demons and souls in human form, like transparent burning embers, all blackened or burnished bronze, floating about in the conflagration, now raised into the air by the flames that issued from within themselves together with great clouds of smoke, now falling back on every side like sparks in huge fires, without weight or equilibrium, amid shrieks and groans of pain and despair, which horrified us and made us tremble with fear. The demons could be distinguished by their terrifying and repellant likeness to frightful and unknown animals, black and transparent, like burning coals. Terrified and as if to plead for succor, we looked up at Our Lady...” [\[986\]](#)

Unexpectedly, the very first part of the Great Secret, given to three young children, was this momentary but soul-searing glimpse of hell. Terrifying as it was, the Vision of Hell was truly one of Heaven’s last recourses of mercy to a world already steeped in sin. This frightening vision further transformed the increasingly holy interior lives of the three Fatima children, who would valiantly fulfill their roles as faithful witnesses and selfless victims of reparation. The children's unswerving fidelity to the Lady and the entire Message of Fatima, and their great sacrifices for the sake of others, testify to the reality of eternal hell—a reality which Heaven saw fit to reveal to them in the First Part of the Great Secret.

The Second Part of the Great Secret: “If What I Say to You is Done...” Our Lady then gave the Second Secret, “You have seen hell, where the souls of poor sinners go. To save them [poor sinners], God wishes to establish in the world devotion to My Immaculate Heart. If what I say to you is done, many souls will be saved and there will be peace.”

“The war [WWI] is going to end; but if people do not cease offending God, a worse one will break out during the reign of Pius XI. When you see a night illumined by an unknown light, know that this is the great sign given you by God that He is about to punish the world for its crimes, by means of war, famine and persecutions of the Church and of the Holy Father.” [\[987\]](#)

“To prevent this, I shall come to ask for the consecration of Russia to My Immaculate Heart and the Communion of Reparation on the First Saturdays. If My requests are heeded, Russia will be converted and there will be peace. If not, she will spread her errors throughout the world, causing wars and persecutions of the Church. The good will be martyred, the Holy Father will have much to suffer, various nations will be annihilated.”

The following sentence which, as far as we now know, concludes the Second Secret, also follows the pattern of threes: “In the end, My Immaculate Heart will triumph. The Holy Father will consecrate Russia to Me, and she will be converted, and a period of peace [era of peace, in another translation] will be granted to the world.” [\[988\]](#)

The Third Secret begins with the words, “In Portugal, the dogma of the Faith will always be preserved, etc.” [\[989\]](#) All that is currently known is the Third Secret Vision, which Lucia described as follows:

“After the two parts which I have already explained, at the left of Our Lady and a little above, we saw an Angel with a flaming sword in his left hand; flashing, it gave out flames that looked as though they would set the world on fire; but they died out in contact with the splendour that Our Lady radiated towards him from her right hand: pointing to the earth with his right hand, the Angel cried out in a loud voice: ‘Penance, Penance, Penance!’”

“And we saw in an immense light that is God: ‘something similar to how people appear in a mirror when they pass in front of it;’ a Bishop dressed in White ‘we had the impression that it was the Holy Father.’ Other Bishops, Priests, men and women Religious going up a steep mountain, at the top of which there was a big Cross of rough-hewn trunks as of a cork-tree with the bark; before reaching there the Holy Father passed through a big city half in ruins and half trembling with halting step, afflicted with pain and sorrow, he prayed for the souls of the corpses he met on his way; having reached the top of the mountain, on his knees at the foot of the big Cross he was killed by a group of soldiers who fired bullets and arrows at him, and in the same way there died one after another the other Bishops, Priests, men and women Religious, and various lay people of different ranks and positions. Beneath the two arms of the Cross there were two Angels each with a crystal aspersorium in his hand, in which they gathered up the blood of the Martyrs and with it sprinkled the souls that were making their way to God.” [\[990\]](#)

While at least a part of the Third Secret Vision is now known, the Virgin’s Message relating to it remains yet concealed. Bishop Emeritus Benedict XVI, however, knows the remaining words Our Lady spoke in the “Third Secret” of Fatima, for he read them when he was still a Cardinal of the Church.

It shall be mentioned once more that in 1984, after admitting he [Cardinal Ratzinger] had read the Third Secret, he was asked why it was still not released. His response revealed that the Third Secret possesses the following “six themes” (mysteriously correlating with the same number of times Our Lady appeared at Fatima): 1) It is in accord with Divine Revelation, 2) It demands a radical call to conversion and penance, 3) It refers to the absolute importance of history, 4) It alerts the Church and the world to the dangers threatening the faith, the life of the Christian and therefore the world, 5) It is integral to the importance of the last times, and 6) Although it could be mistaken for sensationalism, it is nevertheless a religious prophesy corresponding to Scripture and confirmed by many other Marian apparitions.

And so it is asked again: Could these six themes of the Third Secret direct our attention to one or more of the “six signs’ [\[991\]](#) of the last times, given by Christ Himself? They, too, fall within the realm of “the absolute importance of history,” for salvation history centers on two things: The Incarnation of Christ, when Our Lord came to offer Redemption and Mercy, and His Second Coming, when He will come as Just Judge.

The Rosary Decade Prayer, with three intentions: To return to the sequence of events during the July apparition, Our Lady said, “When you pray the Rosary, say after each mystery: O my Jesus, forgive us our sins, save us from the fires of hell. Lead all souls to Heaven, especially those with the greatest need of Thy Mercy.” [\[992\]](#)

Of the latter part of this prayer—“especially those with the greatest need of Thy Mercy”—Sr. Lucia would years later humbly explain “that Our Lady was referring to the souls in the greatest danger of damnation.” [\[993\]](#)

In October, the Lady kept all three of her promises. With her first sentence, she revealed two of three things she wanted, as well as her title: “I want to tell you that a chapel is to be built here in My honor, for I am the Lady of the Rosary. Continue always to pray the Rosary every day.” [\[994\]](#)

Those unadorned words verify the Virgin’s statement in June that her Immaculate Heart leads us to God—for every Catholic chapel contains the Hidden Presence of Jesus. By praying the Rosary every day, we cultivate the practice of prayer and meditation on the lives of Christ and His Virgin Mother, we gain all 15 promises Our Lady gave to those faithful to her Rosary, we grow further confident in Jesus and Mary, and we may gain a daily plenary indulgence (under the proper conditions).

The final desire of Our Lady of the Rosary—given just before opening her hands to initiate the Great Miracle of the Sun—was made known in the form of a most solemn and grieved command: “People must amend their lives and ask pardon for their sins. They must not offend Our Lord any more, for He is already too much offended.” [\[995\]](#)

A Mystical Doctrine

“Fatima is indeed a mystical doctrine or, so to speak, a devotion completely centered on the Immaculate Heart of Mary, and the consecration and reparation due it. It is also the fully traditional conception of religion and theology, completely oriented toward the last ends without any compromise with the world, or the idle dreams of Christian progressivism...it is a politics of Christendom which invites the Church to stand up resolutely to the gravest peril of the hour...” [\[996\]](#) The whole Message of Fatima, including the Great Secret and the Great Miracle of the Sun, plumbs oceanic depths of the Faith which this little work can merely outline:

- The Lady’s gentle but insistent command to the Pope to consecrate Russia, in union with the world’s bishops, to her Immaculate Heart is intended to save the Church’s human element, convert sinners, and remind the Vicar of the dignity, the authority, and the duties of his high office. As reigning Steward of the Catholic City, the Pope’s role, which safeguards the Deposit of Faith, is intended for the salvation of souls.

- The Virgin Mother of God also wishes the Vicar of Christ to universally promulgate the Five First Saturdays of Reparation for the blasphemies made against her Most Amiable Heart. With her specific requests to the Pope, Our Lady desires that the Vicar of her Divine Son's Church recalls his solemn obligation to preserve the Faith, whole and intact, in "restoring all things in Christ." [997] As Steward, he is guardian of the Church. As such, it is the Pope's honor and duty to obey the Queen of the Catholic City, just as He must obey the King, Our Lord Jesus Christ.

- The Virgin's insistence that the bishops must join the Holy Father in the Collegial Consecration reminds the princes of the Church that their offices, while elevated, remain subordinate to the Holy Father; they, too, must obey his lawful commands. With the Pope—whose responsibility is even greater than theirs—they are accountable to God for the souls placed under their care.

- The Blessed Mother stated succinctly, "God wishes to establish in the world devotion to My Immaculate Heart"—a devotion to the Mediatrix of all Graces, the final recourse to save "poor sinners" from hell. Decades have passed since the Virgin Mary uttered those words, and still we do not see this devotion universally practiced, much less promulgated by the Church's pastors.

While we cannot be certain which will come first—the Collegial Consecration of Russia or the worldwide devotion to Our Lady's Heart—we do know that we should follow Our Lady's five requests for all of the faithful, addressed to each and every one of us, from the Pope in Rome to the least of God's little ones.

Finally, we should also remember that the five things of which the Lady of the Rosary asked of us are as straightforward as they are profound. Intended to sanctify us and keep us on the path of ongoing conversion (the secret of the interior life), these five practices must be well-memorized, shared with others and, above all, practiced. They are as follows: 1) The daily Rosary, 2) Faithful accomplishment of daily duty (as Catholics and also in our states in life), 3) Sacrifices for the conversion of sinners, 4) The wearing of the Brown Scapular of Our Lady of Mt. Carmel, and 5) Our practice of devotion via the Five First Saturdays of Reparation.

In heeding these five requests of the Mother of God, we shall deepen devotion to the Immaculate Heart in our own lives and that of our families, hopefully make further steps in the three conversions of the interior life, assist God (Who usually acts through people) in the conversion of our fellow sinners, and attain salvation.

The “Business” of Salvation

In its entirety, then, the Fatima Message is given for the sake of all who must battle for their souls in the most dangerous of times—the age of the great apostasy. The Message, Miracle and Secret rest on a central theme of salvation in three parts. “First is the salvation of souls; second is the salvation of the nations and of Christendom, the peace of the world; and third is the preservation of the Catholic Faith and the salvation of the Church.” [\[998\]](#)

“Truly, it is the greatest of errors to neglect the business of eternal salvation,” said St. Eucherius, a truth upon which St. Alphonsus de Liguori further elaborated by saying “it is an error that exceeds all others, for to lose the soul is a mistake without a remedy.” [\[999\]](#)

“One thing is necessary,” wrote St. Alphonsus as he emphatically quoted the Gospel of St. Luke, “the salvation of our souls...For this God has placed us here: not to acquire honors, riches, or pleasures, but to acquire by our good works the eternal kingdom that is prepared for those who, during this present life, fight against and overcome the enemies of their eternal salvation.” [\[1000\]](#)

With this truth in mind, as we pray and sacrifice for the triumph of the Most Pure Heart of Mary, may we always keep confidence in the Virgin’s words at Fatima: “Don’t lose heart. I will never forsake you. My Immaculate Heart will be your refuge, and the path that will lead you to God.” [\[1001\]](#)

FIVE SIMPLE STEPS TO SANCTITY

“The world must conform to Our Lord, not He to it.”

–Fr Denis Fahey

“We must pray a great deal and beg God not to chastise us and save us in time and for eternity,” Sr. Lucia once urged in carefully guarded yet revealing terms, as she spoke about the third part of Fatima’s Great Secret. [1002] Compare those words of the Servant of God to the novel and empty mottos of our own times. In response to the senseless rhetoric and in hopes of restoring the social order of Christ the King, Catholics of good will are asking their fellows to make some changes of their own. Whatever changes must be made, however, must be in accord with God’s Will. In fact, it is past time for a universal epiphany amongst all true Catholics: In our homes, parishes, and Catholic apostolates, our common cause must be the public and solemn Collegial Consecration of Russia and devotion to the Immaculate Heart of Mary.

Right and just is the recent clarion call from Catholics asking other members of the Mystical Body of Christ to work together to “restore all things in Christ” [1003] for the eternal Church, upholding the teaching of St. Thomas Aquinas, maintains: “Each one is under obligation to show forth his faith, either to instruct and encourage others of the faithful, or to repel the attacks of unbelievers.” [1004] As the Angelic Doctor also explained, “In all ages, men have been divinely instructed in matters expedient for the salvation of the elect...and in all ages there have been persons possessed of the spirit of prophesy, not for the purpose of announcing new doctrines, but to direct human actions.” [1005] Such was the purpose of the Fatima revelations.

The Five Point Defense of the Catholic City

In praying and working for the Restoration of the Social Reign of Christ the King, all our actions as the Church Militant should be placed under the supreme battle plan given by Our Lady of Fatima, She who “cometh forth as the morning rising, fair as the moon, bright as the sun, terrible as an army set in array.” [1006] Her battle plan is intended for each one of us, on an individual basis as a beloved child of God, a dutiful citizen of the Catholic City, and a stalwart soldier of Christ.

As children of God, we should approach Our Lord and Our Lady as little ones approach their parents on earth, full of love, confidence and hope.

As citizens of the Catholic City, we follow the Royal Road because it was first trod by Christ the King and His Virgin Mother, for as Our Lord taught, “If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow Me.” [\[1007\]](#)

As soldiers of Christ, our best defense is a good offense. The victorious “peaceful battle strategy” to “save us in time and for eternity,” as Sr. Lucia phrased it, has been given to every single member of the Church Militant at Fatima by Our Mother and Mediatrix, Conqueror of Heresies. So important are they that once more shall they be repeated:

- 1) The daily Rosary,
- 2) Faithful accomplishment of daily duty (as Catholics and in our states in life),
- 3) sacrifice for the conversion of sinners,
- 4) The Brown Scapular of Our Lady of Mt. Carmel,
- 5) The Five First Saturdays of Reparation.

Specific to the Pope, Steward of the Catholic City, Our Lady requested the Consecration of Russia to her Immaculate Heart in union with all the bishops of the world.

May God Save Us in Time and in Eternity

Lest we think the term “peaceful battle” an oxymoron, let us also recall the Church’s counsel as explained by Pope Pius XI, “Certainly there is the greatest need now of such valiant soldiers of Christ who will work with all their strength to keep the human family safe from the dire ruin into which it would be plunged were the teachings of the Gospel to be flouted, and that order of things permitted to prevail which tramples underfoot no less the laws of nature than those of God. The Church of Christ, built upon an unshakable rock, has nothing to fear for herself, as she knows for a certainty that the gates of hell shall never prevail against her...”

“Venerable Brethren and Beloved Sons, let us not permit the children of this world to appear wiser in their generation than we who by the Divine Goodness are the children of the light. We find them, indeed, selecting and training with the greatest shrewdness alert and resolute devotees who spread their errors ever wider day by day through all classes of men and in every part of the world. And whenever they undertake to attack the Church of Christ more violently, We see them put aside their internal quarrels, assembling in fully harmony in a single battle line with a completely united effort, and work to achieve their common purpose.”

“Surely there is not one that does not know how many and how great are the works that the tireless zeal of Catholics is striving everywhere to carry out, both for social and economic welfare as well as in the fields of education and religion. But this admirable and unremitting activity not infrequently shows less effectiveness because of the dispersion of its energies in too many different directions. Therefore, let all men of good will stand united, all who under the Shepherds of the Church wish to fight this good and peaceful battle of Christ; and under the leadership and teaching guidance of the Church let all strive according to the talent, powers, and position of each to contribute something to the Christian reconstruction of human society ...seeking not themselves and their own interests, but those of Jesus Christ, not trying to press at all costs their own counsels, but ready to sacrifice them, however excellent, if the greater common good should seem to require it, so that in all and above all Christ may reign, Christ may command to Whom be ‘honor and glory and dominion forever and ever.’” [\[1008\]](#)

In heeding the Fatima Virgin’s gentle commands, we can do more than imitate “the children of this world” who “put aside their internal quarrels, assembling in fully harmony in a single battle line with a completely united effort, and work to achieve their common purpose.” In our own private lives, in our homes, and in our various Catholic apostolates, we are already united because we are members of the Mystical Body of Christ. For what other common purpose should we spiritually join forces other than to accomplish what Our Lady of Fatima asked, by praying the daily Rosary and sacrificing for the conversion of sinners, and asking always for the collegial consecration of Russia to the one and only Immaculate Heart?

Our Lady and Catholic Action

We can take other important Catholic steps, from homeschooling our children to participating in various volunteer efforts, subscribing to tried-and-true traditional Catholic papers, and much more. At the same time, we must realize that these worthy efforts, which can save individuals and perhaps whole families for eternity, will not bring forth worldwide conversion—which in turn will save hundreds of millions of souls. Our actions alone can neither destroy modernism (the synthesis of all heresies), nor effect the conversion of Russia nor grant an era of peace to mankind. Those are miracles reserved by God for Our Lady, who revealed at Fatima that only she can help us and who also said at Akita, “Those who place their confidence in me will be saved.”

“But seek ye first the Kingdom of God and His justice, and all these things shall be added unto you,” [\[1009\]](#) as Christ Our Lord taught. “My Immaculate Heart will be your refuge and the path that will lead you to God,” said Our Lady at Fatima. These words of Christ and His Virgin Mother complement each other, for as St. Bernadine of Siena explained, “Every grace that is communicated to this world has a threefold course. For by excellent order, it is dispensed from God to Christ, from Christ to the Virgin, from the Virgin to us.”

The Virgin and a Mystery of the Holy Trinity

The Rosary is the storehouse of blessings, wrote Blessed Alan de La Roche. Today, as Sr. Lucia revealed “... the Most Holy Virgin in these last times in which we live has given a new efficacy to the recitation of the Rosary... There is no problem, no matter how difficult it is, that we cannot resolve by the prayer of the Holy Rosary. With the Holy Rosary, we will save ourselves. We will sanctify ourselves. We will console Our Lord and obtain the salvation of many souls.” [\[1010\]](#)

In the following excerpts from Sr. Lucia’s private letters, [\[1011\]](#) we may gain beautiful insights about the Rosary:

“Our Lady requested and recommended that the Rosary be prayed every day, having repeated this [request] in all the Apparitions, as if forewarning us that in these times of diabolical disorientation, we must not let ourselves be deceived by false doctrines that diminish the elevation of our soul to God by means of prayer.”

“For certain, it is not necessary that during the celebration of the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass that one pray the Holy Rosary, [for] besides time set aside for the Holy Mass, we must also put aside time for praying the Holy Rosary. We can and should take part in the one without forsaking the other.”

“The Rosary is, for the majority of souls who live in the world, their daily spiritual bread; and to deprive them or draw them away from this prayer is to decrease in their minds the appreciation and good faith with which they pray...”

“All the prayers that we say in the Rosary are prayers that form part of the Sacred Liturgy. More than a prayer directed to Our Lady, it is a prayer directed to God:

- “The Our Father was taught to us by Jesus Christ, Who said, ‘Pray thus, Our Father Who art in heaven...’ ”

- “Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost is the hymn sung by the Angels who were sent by God to announce the birth of His Word, God-made Man.”

- “The Hail Mary, when well understood, is nothing less than a prayer directed to God: ‘Hail Mary, full of grace, the Lord is with Thee.’ I hail Thee, Mary, because the Lord is with Thee! These words were most certainly dictated by the Father in heaven to the Angel when He sent him to earth, in order that with these words he (the angel) should greet Mary.”

“So this salutation [Hail Mary] is an act of praise addressed to God: Blessed art Thou amongst women because Blessed (sic) is the fruit of Thy womb; and because Thou are the Mother of God-made Man. In Thee, we adore God as in the first Tabernacle in which the Father enclosed His Word; as on the first Altar, Thy lap; as in the first Monstrance, Thy arms, before which the Angels, shepherds and kings knelt to adore the Son of God made Man!”

Sr. Lucia also alluded to a mystery of the Holy Trinity, as well as a mystery of Our Lady’s earthly life and her life in heaven when she wrote, “Since Thou art a Tabernacle, a Monstrance, a living Temple, permanent home of the Holy Trinity, Mother of God and Our Mother—‘pray for us poor sinners, now and at the hour of our death.’ ”

Although previously mentioned in this book, it bears repeating, for what a breathtaking contemplation it is to always keep in mind, especially as we pray the Rosary—in Heaven and in eternity, Our Lady is the Perpetual Tabernacle of the Holy Trinity! Volumes might be written about this Mariophany but, for now, let it suffice to ask ourselves: Is it any wonder that to save us “in these last days” that the Rosary, which is an act of praise to God, is given a new efficacy? Or that Our Lady asked us to pray it every day? Or that Jesus wills Russia’s consecration to His Mother’s Immaculate Heart, so that one day the whole world will honor her Heart next to His own Sacred Heart?

After the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass, the Rosary is the most highly indulgenced prayer of the Church, which grants a plenary indulgence (the complete remission of temporal punishments of confessed sins) every day of the year to those who pray the Rosary in a church, oratory, or with members of the family, in a religious Community, or in a pious association. [\[1012\]](#)

“Therefore, it is necessary to pray the Rosary in cities, in towns and in villages, in the streets, on the road, while traveling or at home, in churches and in chapels!” wrote Sr. Lucia. “It is a prayer that is accessible to all and everyone can and should pray. There are many who do not attend the liturgical prayer of the Holy Mass on a daily basis. If they do not pray the Rosary, what praying do they accomplish? And without prayer, who can be saved? ‘Watch and pray that ye enter not into temptation.’ ”

“It is necessary, then, to pray and pray always,” Sr. Lucia concluded. “This means that all our activities and labors should be accompanied by a great spirit of prayer. It is in prayer that the soul meets God. In this meeting, grace and strength are received, even when one’s prayers are accompanied by distractions. Prayer always brings an increase of Faith to souls, even if it be no more than a momentary remembrance of the Mysteries of our Redemption –recalling the Birth, Death and Resurrection of Our Savior; and God will dismiss and pardon those distractions attributed to human weakness, ignorance and littleness.”

“That Thy Kingdom come, let the reign of Mary come,” wrote St. Louis Marie de Montfort. The reign of Mary is the reign of Christ, the same era of peace promised by Our Lady of Fatima. It was to save us “in time and for eternity” that the Mother of God came to Fatima, giving God’s five-point “peaceful battle plan” to all of the Church’s children, while appointing a special task to the Vicar of the Church and the bishops.

It is a sanctifying strategy we can share with others as we ourselves live it, always making our foremost intention the Collegial Consecration of Russia to the Virgin’s Immaculate Heart. By these means we can follow the sound spiritual advice of Sr. Lucia, confidante of Heaven: “It is necessary for each one of us to begin to reform himself spiritually. Each person must not only save his own soul but also help to save all the souls that God has placed on our path.”

WHY DAILY DUTY SANCTIFIES US

“Our Lord does not care so much for the importance of our works, as for the love with which they are done.”

–St. Teresa of Avila

Daily duty, prayer and sacrifice, and the interior life—what do these things really mean? God, Who knows all things, knew that the Modern Age would be one of increased sin and danger. Having already given us the means to sanctity, He gave a new efficacy to “simple things,” like the Rosary. Through the Fatima revelations, which are in perfect accord with Divine Revelation, Our Lord also made it known that the sacrifice He now requires of each one of us is the faithful accomplishment of daily duty. The means are prayer and sacrifice, by which the interior life may become perfect in God, because “in divine things the most simple...are also the loftiest and the most profound.”[\[1013\]](#)

Like Tradition and Scripture, prayer and sacrifice are inseparable to the spiritual life of the soul. The Rosary is the prayer Our Lady asked us to offer every day. It is a great spiritual help to know a few more reasons why we should pray the daily Rosary.

At Fatima, Our Lady often responded to the people’s supplications, saying it was necessary for them to pray the daily Rosary in order to obtain these graces throughout the year.[\[1014\]](#) At other times, She said the request would be granted within the year if the Rosary was prayed every day. As in all things, the Virgin’s response is for God’s glory and the salvation of souls.

To pray the Rosary, every day for a year, is to practice perseverance in prayer. Our Lord said, “All things whatsoever you ask in prayer, believing, you shall receive.” [\[1015\]](#) The daily Rosary gives us greater faith, hope and charity. It increases our belief, our adoration, our trust, our confidence and our love for God and His Virgin Mother. It multiplies sanctifying grace and helps us avoid mortal sin—even venial sin. The 15 Rosary Promises, given centuries ago to Blessed Alan de la Roche, are intended to lead us to her Divine Son. And so we begin to understand why, at every Fatima apparition, Our Lady asked for the daily Rosary.

With the Rosary there is daily duty, which Our Lord called “the true penance” He now requires. Daily duty has always been the obligation of the faithful Catholic; it is the normal path to sanctification. As Sr. Lucia wrote concerning what Jesus said in this regard, “He wishes that it be made clear to souls that the true penance He wants and requires consists first of all in the sacrifice that each one must make to fulfill his own religious and temporal duties.” [\[1016\]](#)

What is Daily Duty?

It means faithfully fulfilling our obligations to God and in our states in life with supernatural charity, the virtue summed up by Christ Himself: “Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with thy whole heart, and with thy whole soul, and with thy whole mind. This is the greatest and the first commandment. And the second is like to this: Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments dependeth the whole law and the prophets.” [\[1017\]](#)

How we accomplish daily duty is the secret of the interior life, which is also called “the life of the elect” or “the spiritual life.” The interior life is defined as “the state of activity of a soul which strives against its natural inclinations in order to regulate them, and endeavors to acquire the habit of judging and directing in movements in all things according to the light of the Gospel and the example of Our Lord.” [\[1018\]](#)

When we offer our every thought, word and action of the day to Jesus through Mary, our souls gain spiritual merit. “The chief fruit of sanctifying grace is merit—a claim or right to receive an increase of sanctifying grace, together with a claim to a corresponding measure of glory and happiness in heaven,” the Baltimore Catechism explains. “We can increase in heavenly merit indefinitely. Not only works which are by their nature good, such as prayer and the reception of the sacraments and attendance at Mass, but even the ordinary works of our day, such as the taking of our meals, study, our games and amusements, can become meritorious if we perform them under the proper conditions. These conditions are very easy—we must be in the state of grace and offer our works to God out of love for Him. We do not have to make this offering with each work we perform. It is sufficient to make it from time to time, particularly every morning...” [\[1019\]](#)

It was for this reason that Sr. Lucia, the last Fatima visionary (whose cause for canonization has been opened), assisted in composing what is known as the Fatima Morning Offering. As soon as we awaken, we may give our thoughts to God and consecrate the day to Him by praying the Morning Offering:

O my God, in union with the Immaculate Heart of Mary (here kiss the Brown Scapular [\[1020\]](#)), I offer Thee the Most Precious Body, Blood, Soul and Divinity of Our Lord, Jesus Christ, joining with it my every thought, word and action of this day.

O my Jesus, I desire today to gain every indulgence and merit I can, and I offer them, together with myself, to Mary Immaculate, that she may best apply them to the interests of Thy Most Sacred Heart. Precious Blood of Jesus, save us! Immaculate Heart of Mary, pray for us! Most Sacred Heart of Jesus, have mercy on us. Amen.

This particular offering means we give everything to God, “to Jesus through Mary.” It is the shorter way of spiritual perfection, as taught by St. Louis de Montfort, an interior life of simplicity. “In divine things,” wrote the eminent theologian, Fr. Garrigou-Lagrange, O.P, “simplicity is united to depth and elevation, for divine things that are highest in God and deepest in our hearts are simplicity itself.” [\[1021\]](#)

“Do your duty and all will go well” was a favorite saying of Pope St. Pius X, by which he meant all will go well with the life of the soul. Daily duty, justly accomplished when we cooperate with grace, leads to infused contemplation, but only if there is “progress in the acquired virtues, the infused virtues, and the seven gifts of the Holy Ghost in interior souls truly detached from themselves and almost continually united to God.” [\[1022\]](#) To accomplish daily duty means practice of all the virtues to a heroic degree. Such is the path to sanctity.

Pitfalls on the Path

Daily duty accomplished with love, but “dying to self,” is not an easy process. Although “the charity of God presseth us” [\[1023\]](#) to return His love, there is good reason that the Scriptures warn we must work out our salvation in fear and trembling. [\[1024\]](#) A holy fear of the Lord means we love Him and do not want to offend Him, just because we love Him. We should always fear ourselves because, due to the effects of Original Sin, we bear four wounds –ignorance, weakness, malice and disordered desire. These four wounds are the causes of our faults, which we so carefully hide from ourselves, but they are overcome when we use God’s graces well. That is why Our Lord made it clear that our daily duty should be offered up in true penance.

Due to our spiritual weaknesses, we are easily swayed into thinking we have pleased God, especially when we fulfill our religious obligations. We must guard against outward shows of piety (to garner attention for ourselves) while simultaneously fearing to do as we ought (because we are afraid of what others may think of us). Nor should we revel in spiritual consolations, for two reasons: They do not signify sanctity and they are fleeting. In fact, God eventually withdraws such consolations to help us overcome pride and whatever else may be our predominant fault.

Pride, the root of all sin, is very cunning, because it hides itself under the guise of virtue. Although we are in a state of grace, we are not “safe” from the seven deadly sins; indeed, the devil works against us even more so. His ultimate aim is to find our weak spots, blind us to our faults, retard our progress, or cause us to fall so many times that we are tempted to despair. Interior troubles often begin with temptations to pride.

Both the Old and New Testaments provide copious examples of pride, the particular danger to the faithful. For example, we recall St. Peter’s over-confidence that he would never abandon Christ. Yet only hours after receiving the very first Holy Communion, he and all of the Apostles fled from Christ’s persecutors. Then the first Vicar of Christ publicly denied the Lord three times. For this great fault, St. Peter wept and sincerely repented for the rest of his life. This one, painful failure was a great lesson to him and to all the Church’s members throughout time: We can never be sure of ourselves, only of God and those with Him in Heaven.

Even after the Resurrection and Ascension, the Apostles’ faith remained weak until the Descent of the Holy Ghost. Pentecost brought to them the second interior conversion, with the result that St. Peter fearlessly and publicly proclaimed Christ. Although greatly persecuted, they never again denied Our Lord. Despite this fidelity, human respect was the cause of St. Peter’s second great public sin.

His first public offense was against God; his second was against his neighbor. The second wrong-doing seemed a very small matter at the time, but it displayed a serious hidden fault. St. Peter caused a great scandal to the faithful when he would not sit with the Gentile converts (who were not circumcised) for fear of the Jewish converts (who were circumcised). [\[1025\]](#) St. Peter, who thought it prudent to momentarily avoid the Gentiles, committed an act of cowardice, which artfully disguises itself as the virtue of prudence.

On the path of sanctity, our predominant fault is overcome if and when we truly love God above everything else. As trustworthy spiritual advisors like Fr. Garrigou-Lagrange point out, we (like St. Peter) usually learn of our hidden faults by trials, sufferings and humiliations. On the other hand, not all trials are due to our sins, for some are meant to perfect us while others allow us to practice greater charity in reparation for the sins of others.

Charity, the queen of virtues, is the reason why daily duty can be offered to God as “true penance.” When we submit to all that God allows or wills in our lives, thinking only of Him in our joys and sufferings, we imitate Christ, Who loved us enough to live—and die—for us.

“Pick Up Your Cross Daily and Follow Me”

The sacrifice of daily duty, then, is our cross. The Cross is “all that goes against self. All that it costs to subdue self—to act on principle, submit to authority, to follow common life, to accommodate ourselves to others, to bear correction, to be faithful to irksome duties, to be submissive and humble during sickness, to struggle against self-indulgence and the softness of our times, preserving attention to the rules of modesty, to be energetic in attention to our weak point, to bear up against failure and monotony of daily routine, to be resigned when all seems to go wrong, whatever is contrary to our liking in circumstances, our health, the way things are done, the way things turn out—all that is our cross.” The truth is that “true holiness does not consist in not feeling the Cross, but in bearing the pain with true conformity to God’s will.” [\[1026\]](#)

“Whatever you do, think not of yourself, but of God.” (St. Vincent of Ferrer)

WHY SATURDAY IS OUR LADY'S DAY

“In danger, in anguish, in uncertainty, think of Mary, call on Mary. May she never be far from your lips, from your heart; and thus you will be able to obtain the help of her prayer, never forget the example of her life. If you follow her, you cannot go astray; if you pray to her, you cannot despair; if you think of her, you cannot be mistaken. If she sustains you, you cannot fall; if she protects you, you have nothing to fear; if she guides you, do not tire; if she is propitious to you, you will reach the goal ...”

–St. Bernard of Clairvaux,

Hom. II super "Missus est," 17: PL 183, 70-71

Some may wonder why the Virgin Mary specifically chose Saturday as a day of reparation. Why Saturday and not another day, other than the Lord's day?

“To you it is given to know the mystery of the Kingdom of God,” [\[1027\]](#) Our Lord revealed to His Apostles, but how much more do His words apply to Our Lady, whose singular office surpasses that of the disciples. Theologians are accustomed to point out that when God calls a human being to any office, He gives that person all the graces needed to fulfill its obligations. [\[1028\]](#) Naturally, that teaching applies to Our Lady and never was it truer than on the first Holy Saturday, when the grieving Blessed Mother alone remained constant in faith. [\[1029\]](#) It is for this reason that Saturday, especially Holy Saturday, is considered by the Church as Our Lady's Day.

When the Jewish Sabbath began at sunset on Good Friday and all through Saturday, Our Lady and Jesus' disciples, including the Holy Women, were prostrate with sorrow. Amongst all of them, only the Virgin Mary fully understood her Son's promise of His Resurrection, keeping its unwavering hope in her Sorrowful and Immaculate Heart.

Think of all that must have transpired in the Heart and Soul of the Virgin Mother as she remembered those most dreadful hours of her Son's Passion. The mere thought of a beloved child, enduring such suffering and abuse, would bring to the heart of any other human mother deep pangs of grief. Imagine the sorrow of the Immaculate Heart of the Mother of God! How much Our Lady endured—for us!

Throughout the Sabbath, the Blessed Mother recalled the betrayal, saw again the most grievous Passion, and once more heard the contemptuous words that insulted and blasphemed Our Lord. Tortured and ridiculed from all sides, Jesus was never given a moment's peace from the second that His Passion began. God is not mocked, [1030] but He allowed Himself to be mocked as a prophet who said that He could raise the destroyed temple in three days, mocked in His quality of Son of God, mocked as a miracle-worker who healed others but could not help Himself, mocked for His sanctity and confidence in God, mocked as the Messiah and mocked as the King of the Jews.[1031]

Loving and grieving witnesses of the Passion, Our Lady and the few who had been with her at the Foot of the Cross must have later told the other Apostles of Our Lord's last words:

His First Plea to God the Father: "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." [1032]

To the Good Thief: "Amen, I say to thee: This day thou shalt be with me in Paradise." [1033]

To His Virgin Mother and St. John: "Woman, behold thy son... son, behold thy Mother." [1034]

A Second Cry to God the Father: "Eli, Eli, lamma sabacthani? That is, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" [1035]

Through parched lips: "I thirst." [1036]

For all to hear: "It is consummated." [1037]

A Third Prayer to God the Father: "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit. And saying this, he gave up the ghost." [1038]

As if it was not enough to remember Jesus' cruel sufferings during His Passion and at His Death, they saw again Our Lord's side not only pierced but opened wide by a lance, His Sacred Heart laid bare and gushing forth blood and water. For Our Lady, witnessing this last and vicious sacrilege of her beloved Son's Body, Simeon's prophecy came to pass: And thy own soul a sword shall pierce that, out of many hearts, thoughts shall be revealed. [1039]

Ancilla Domini

(Handmaiden of the Lord)

In those after-hours, the Virgin Mary would repeatedly behold in her memory Jesus' Sacred Body removed from the Cross and the withdrawing of the cruel nails and the Crown of Thorns, feeling again His Holy Form, torn to shreds, and lying limp in her arms. Transfixed by the uttermost sorrow, Our Lady was silent in her anguish, but how the others must have wept at the sight of His beautiful and Holy Face, now so pale and disfigured. Relived once more was the rushed, distressing burial in a freshly-hewn and donated tomb.

Above the deep heartache of the faithful St. John and St. Mary Magdalene, the Apostles and the Holy Women, Our Lady's immaculate soul was crucified when her Son was crucified, which is why the Immaculate Heart is also the Sorrowful Heart of the Virgin Mother.

It was during the Passion that the Lady, full of grace, rose to the supreme and most terrible Sacrifice. Her prayer then consisted of the same words she spoke to the Angel Gabriel thirty-four years before: Ecce Ancilla Domini –that is, “Behold the handmaid of the Lord; be it done to me according to Thy word.” [1040] During the terrible Passion and Death of her Divine Son, the overflowing graces and virtues of this humble Maiden never allowed her to even once doubt what the Angel said to her long ago: The Lord will give Him the throne of David His father, and He shall be King over the house of Jacob forever, and of His kingdom there shall be no end. [1041]

City of God:

The Glories and Sorrows of Mary

“I am the mother of fair love, and of fear, and of knowledge, and of holy hope. In me is all grace of the way and of the truth, in me is all hope of life and virtue.” [1042] In explaining these words from the Old Testament, St. Alphonsus taught, “As the Blessed Virgin is the mother of holy love and hope, so also is she the mother of faith.” [1043]

“Hope takes its rise in faith,” the saint continued, “for God enlightens by faith to know His goodness and the promises He had made, that by this knowledge we may rise by hope to the desire of possessing Him. Mary, then, having had the virtue of faith in its highest degree, had also hope in the same degree of excellence, and this made her say with David, But it is good for me to adhere to my God, to put my hope in the Lord God.” [1044]

In all of the joyful, sorrowful, and glorious events of her life, Our Lady “stood alone, in a position apart, in her relation to the Redeemer and to His work of Redemption.” [1045] As St. Alphonsus also taught, “the most holy Virgin had more faith than all men and angels. She saw her Son in the crib of Bethlehem, and believed Him the Creator of the world. She saw him fly from Herod, and yet believed Him the King of Kings. She saw him born and believed Him eternal. She saw Him poor and in need of food, and believed Him the Lord of the universe. She saw Him lying on straw, and believed Him omnipotent. She observed that He did not speak, and She believed Him infinite Wisdom. She heard Him weep, and believed Him the joy of Paradise. In fine, she saw Him in death, despised and crucified and, although faith wavered in others, Mary remained firm in the belief that He was God.”

[\[1046\]](#)

It may seem that such things were effortless for the Blessed Mother because she is the Immaculate One. It is true that she was full of grace from the very first moment of her existence, but it was through her continual efforts and merits that grace overflowed in her soul—making her the aqueduct of grace for all souls. In me is all grace...

“Among the many beautiful qualities attributed by the Holy Ghost to the Blessed Virgin Mary, one stands out preeminently,” wrote St. John Eudes. “It is contained in these words of the eighty-sixth Psalm, which Holy Church and her Doctors apply to the Mother of God, ‘Glorious things are said of thee, O city of God.’” [\[1047\]](#)

“Mary is indeed the great and glorious city of God, the holy city, the city of Jerusalem, the city of peace, the royal city, ‘the city of the Great King.’ [\[1048\]](#) The King of Kings built this city with His own hands; He exempted her entirely from the infamous tribute of sin; He honored her with countless great and extraordinary privileges; He enriched her with inestimable gifts and treasures and He established His first and most glorious abode within her heart...Thou are not only the city of the great King, O Incomparable Virgin, thou art also His royal and eternal palace...Now if Mary is the palace of the King of Kings, her Heart must be the King’s imperial throne.” [\[1049\]](#)

The Virgin always cooperated with her Spouse for “in Mary is the fullness of the gifts of the Holy Ghost; plenitude of all the interior gifts; plenitude of the gifts of Wisdom and Understanding, plenitude of the gifts of Counsel and Knowledge, plenitude of the gifts of Piety and Fortitude, and of the Fear of the Lord; plenitude of all the exterior gifts, the gifts of miracles, healing, prophecy, and of tongues.” [\[1050\]](#)

St. John Eudes also testified, “St. Bernadine of Siena expressly stated that Our Lady...knew all these things in God, as in their first and universal cause...She saw God in all things, and all things in God.” [\[1051\]](#) This is the great gift of grace that, when cooperated with, creates great saints; and it was this great grace which mainly sustained the Virgin Mary in all the mystical and mysterious events of her life, especially during the Lord’s Way of the Cross and His Crucifixion.

Five Means and Mysteries of the City of God

In the Good Friday Passion and during the desolate hours in which Our Lord laid in the tomb, the faithful Virgin Mother—like her Divine Son, throughout His Life and Death—did not abandon even one of the five means of salvation and sanctification, in order to be the holiest of models for us to follow. St. Louis Marie de Montfort reminds us that these five means are known to all and that “they are laid down in the Gospel, explained by the masters of the spiritual life, practiced by the saints, and necessary to all who wish to be saved and to attain perfection. They are: humility of heart, continual prayer, mortification in all things, abandonment to Divine Providence, and conformity to the Will of God.” [\[1052\]](#)

Conceived Immaculate and always full of grace, still Our Lady carefully guarded the gifts bestowed on her by the Holy Trinity. St. John Eudes affirmed that “the Holy Virgin’s heart exercised perpetual vigilance over her own thoughts, words, and actions, over her passions and inclinations, over all her interior and exterior senses, and over all the powers of her soul, that she might drive far away from herself anything that could possibly displease God and to use her faculties as perfectly and as virtuously as possible.” [\[1053\]](#) In her Immaculate Heart, she pondered many things, and it was her Immaculate Heart, the highest faculty of her soul, that was pierced by a mystical sword of sorrow.

Since all the glories of Mary are for the sake of her Divine Son, as John Cardinal Newman once said in a sermon, [\[1054\]](#) the same can be said of her sorrows. “She had lived of her Son’s life, and when He died on the Cross, she died with Him,” a holy abbot once said. [\[1055\]](#) “Both Mother and Son were nailed to the Cross, the Son in the Body, the Mother in her Heart,” exclaims St. Lawrence Justinian. [\[1056\]](#) “Could not Mary die in her Heart, as Jesus died in His Body?” St Bernard asked. [\[1057\]](#)

Nevertheless, the Virgin did not perish with her beloved Son, but it was “only by a miraculous interposition on the part of God that she did not die.” [\[1058\]](#) Her mission on earth was not yet fully accomplished, for the Passion and Death of Our Lord was the means by which Christ offered us Redemption and by which, in the order of grace, Our Lady became Our Mother.

Virgin Most Faithful

When Our Lady retired on Good Friday night, the evening of the Jewish Sabbath, she did so to occupy herself solely with the thought of her Divine Son. “Having cooperated in the Incarnation of the Son of God by the ardor of her love, the fervor of her desires, and the power of her prayers, Mary’s Heart also contributed to His Resurrection...” [\[1059\]](#)

As the Queen of Martyrs, Our Lady followed her Son and stood at the Cross, her love and humility far overshadowing the public shame of being Mother to the One crucified as the lowest of criminals. As Queen of Prophets, the Blessed Mother stood apart from all others for only she foresaw and kept hope in the Resurrection throughout the Sabbath. It was to the gracious Virgin Mary that the Apostles and the Holy Women turned to on the Sabbath, flying to the Mother of Mercy, Mother of God and Mother of the Church.

Holy Tradition relates that Christ, having risen from dead about 3 a.m. on Easter Sunday morning, first appeared to His Virgin Mother. Scripture supports that tradition, for Our Lady was not with the Holy Women who went to Christ’s tomb later on the same morning. Why was it that the faithful Mother—who stood at the Foot of the Cross, held her deceased Son in her arms, and hurriedly prepared Him for burial before the Sabbath began—did not return to Jesus’ sepulcher to properly anoint His Body, according to the Jewish custom? It was because not only had she anticipated His Resurrection, but she knew He had risen.

Just as the Virgin preceded her Divine Son in historical time, so does “Lady’s Day” (Saturday) precede the Lord’s Day (Sunday). St. Thomas Aquinas explains: “Since the Resurrection took place on a Sunday, we keep holy this day instead of the Sabbath as did the Jews of old. However, we also sanctify Saturday in honor of the glorious Virgin Mary who remained unshaken in faith all day Saturday after the death of her Divine Son.” [\[1060\]](#)

Not only on Holy Saturday but on each Saturday of the year, faithful Catholics might also recall these words of St. Bernard’s: “In Mary alone did the faith of the Church remain steadfast during the three days that Jesus lay in the tomb. And although everyone else wavered, she who conceived Christ in faith, kept the faith that she had once for all received from God and never lost. Thus could she wait with assured hope for the glory of the Risen Lord.” [\[1061\]](#)

Our Lady’s Sorrowful and Immaculate Heart teaches us how to commemorate the death of Our Lord, Jesus Christ. At His Incarnation, Our Lady was the Lord’s first Tabernacle. During His Passion and Crucifixion, the Sorrowful and Immaculate Heart of Mary became the living Altar on which the Lamb offered Himself for the sins of the world. But it was on Holy Saturday that the Sorrowful and Immaculate Heart first reigned, because the Virgin Mother solitarily trusted in the Resurrection of her most beloved Son, Our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

“Teach souls to love the Heart of My Mother, pierced by the very sorrow which pierced Mine...The Heart of My Mother has the right to be called Sorrowful, and I wish this title to be placed before that of Immaculate, for she won it herself.” (Our Lord to Berthe Petit)

In the following pages of this book, you are invited to read the Supplement section, which includes information about how to participate in The Five First Saturdays Devotion, or how to pray the various Fatima prayers. Also included is The Little Crown of the Twelve Stars of the Blessed Virgin Mary, the 15 Rosary Promises given by Our Lady to Blessed Alan de la Roche, the Holy Rosary According to the Method of St. Louis de Montfort, the 15 Rosary Mysteries for Beginners, and How to Pray the Rosary \(For Beginners\).

If you liked this book, you may also enjoy another work written by the same author:

Guadalupe, Secrets of the Image

Also now available from KIC is the Catholic classic, now digitally republished:

Divine Parables Explained by Fr. Prachensky

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Marianna is the author of Guadalupe, Secrets of the Image and the monthly columnist for “Secrets of the Catholic City,” which appeared in Catholic Family News. A wife and homeschooling mother, she was the founding publisher of The Catholic Family’s Magnificat! Magazine, as well as the first home education editor of Sursum Corda (which later merged with Latin Mass magazine). Her contributors included Fr. John Hardon, S.J. (now Servant of God), Dr. Mary Kay Clark, Laura Berquist, and many others.

After establishing Keeping It Catholic–The Faith, Family and Home Education Network, Marianna became the author of the Keeping It Catholic Home Education Guides, The Return of the King Study Guide, The Age of Mary Study Guides, and the editor of The Keepsake Collection. The driving force behind three Catholic support groups (local, state, and national), Marianna also gained valuable online experience as the Homeschooling Forum Moderator for CRNET (the Catholic Resource Network, later acquired by EWTN), where many of her magazine’s articles are archived. Since 1995, she has served as the main moderator of “the KIC List” (the Keeping It Catholic email group) for Catholic families. Readers are always welcome to visit Keeping It Catholic-The Blog! as well as KeepingItCatholic on Facebook or “tweet” Marianna at KICtheBlog.

THE FIVE FIRST SATURDAYS

I. The History and the Text of the Promise

As explained by Sr. Lucia and documented by Frere Michel de la Sainte Trinite: “On December 10, 1925, the Most Holy Virgin appeared to Sister Lucia (then a postulant of the Institute of the Dorothean Sisters at Pontevedra, Spain) and by Her side, elevated on a luminous cloud, was the Child Jesus. The Most Holy Virgin rested Her hand on her shoulder and as She did so, She showed Her Heart encircled by thorns, which She was holding in her other hand.

“At the same time, the Child said: ‘Have compassion on the Heart of your Most Holy Mother, covered with thorns, with which ungrateful men pierce it at every moment and there is none to make an act of reparation to remove them.’

“Then the Most Holy Virgin said: ‘Look, my daughter, at My Heart, surrounded with thorns with which ungrateful men pierce Me at every moment by their blasphemies and ingratitude. You at least try to console Me and announce in My name that I promise to assist, at the moment of death, with all the graces necessary for salvation, all those who:

- (1) on the first Saturday of five consecutive months,
- (2) shall confess,
- (3) receive Holy Communion,
- (4) recite five decades of the Rosary and
- (5) keep Me company for fifteen minutes while meditating on the fifteen mysteries of the Rosary,
- (6) with the intention of making reparation to Me.’”

II. Some Precisions on the Conditions of the Promise

(I) WHY FIVE FIRST SATURDAYS?

Our Lord Himself gave the answer to Sister Lucia:

“My daughter, the reason is simple. There are five types of offences and blasphemies committed against the Immaculate Heart of Mary:

- 1–Blasphemies against the Immaculate Conception;
 - 2–Blasphemies against Her Virginity;
 - 3–Blasphemies against Her Divine Maternity, in refusing at the same time to recognise Her as the Mother of men;
 - 4–The blasphemies of those who publicly seek to sow in the hearts of children, indifference or scorn or even hatred of this Immaculate Mother;
 - 5–The offences of those who outrage Her directly in Her holy images.
- Here, my daughter, is the reason why the Immaculate Heart of Mary inspired Me to ask for this little act of reparation. (May 29,1930)

(2) THE CONFESSION

Sister Lucia asked Our Blessed Lord: “My Jesus! Many souls find it difficult to confess on Saturday. Will Thou allow a confession within eight days to be valid?

He replied:

“Yes. It can even be made later on, provided that the souls are in the state of grace when they receive Me on the First Saturday and that they had the intention of making reparation to the Sacred Heart of Mary.”

Lucia then asked, “My Jesus! And those who forget to form this intention?”

“They can form it at the next confession, taking advantage of their first opportunity to go to confession.” (February 15, 1927)

In brief, therefore (a) the confession should be made as close as possible to the First Saturday; (b) we must be sorry for our sins, not only because we have offended God but also with the intention of making reparation to the Sacred Heart of Mary.

(3) THE HOLY COMMUNION

Father Goncalves, Lucia's confessor, asked her in a letter of May 29, 1930 if one cannot fulfil all the conditions on a Saturday, can it be done on Sunday? People in the country, for example, will not be able very often because they live quite far away. Our Lord gave the answer to Sister Lucia during the night of May 29–30:

“The practice of this devotion will be equally acceptable on the Sunday following the First Saturday when My priests, for a just cause, allow it to souls.”

Let us note that it is to His priests, and not to the individual conscience, that Jesus gives the responsibility of granting this additional concession.

(4) THE ROSARY

Since it is a question of repairing for offences committed against the Immaculate Heart of Mary, what other vocal prayer could be more pleasing to her than that which she requested the people to recite every day?

(5) THE 15 MINUTE MEDITATION

This is in addition to the recitation of the Rosary. It requires, in Lucia's own words, to keep Our Lady company for fifteen minutes while meditating on the mysteries of the Rosary. It is not required to meditate on all fifteen mysteries. To meditate on one or two is sufficient.

(6) THE INTENTION OF MAKING REPARATION

"You, at least, try to console Me." Without this general intention, without this will of love which desires to make reparation to Our Lady, to console Her, all these external practices are worth nothing for the Promise. This is clear.

III. The Promises Attached to this Devotion

(I) THE SALVATION OF OUR OWN SOUL

"To all those who, on the First Saturday of five consecutive months... fulfil all the conditions requested, I promise to assist them at the hour of death with all the graces necessary for the salvation of their soul." This little devotion practised with a good heart, is then enough to procure infallibly for us...ex opere operato, so to speak—as with the sacraments—the grace of final perseverance, of eternal salvation! And this promise is without any exclusion, limitation, restriction. "To all those... I promise" Heaven for eternity for five Holy Communions!

(2) THE SALVATION OF SINNERS

"So numerous are the souls which the justice of God condemns for sins committed against me that I come to ask for reparation. Sacrifice yourself for this intention and pray." (Our Lady to Sister Lucia at Tuy, June 13, 1929.)

"In consideration of this little devotion, They (Jesus and Mary) wish to give the grace of pardon to souls who have had the misfortune of offending the Immaculate Heart of Mary,” wrote Sister Lucia in a letter of May, 1930.

(3) PEACE IN THE WORLD

“Whether the world has war or peace depends on the practice of this devotion, along with the consecration of Russia to the Immaculate Heart of Mary. This is why I desire its propagation so ardently, especially because this is also the will of our dear Mother in Heaven.” (Sister Lucia, March 19, 1939.)

(Source: Frere Michel de la Sainte Trinite, The Whole Truth about Fatima: The Secret and the Church, Vol. II, pp. 245-277.)

FATIMA PRAYERS

I. PRAYERS TAUGHT BY ST. MICHAEL

PRAYER OF ADORATION

“My God, I believe, I adore, I trust, and I love Thee. I beg pardon for those who do not believe, do not adore, do not trust, and do not love Thee.”

PRAYER TO THE HOLY TRINITY IN REPARATION AND FOR THE CONVERSION OF SINNERS

“O Most Holy Trinity, Father, Son and Holy Spirit, I adore Thee profoundly, and I offer Thee the most precious Body, Blood, Soul and Divinity of Jesus Christ, present in all the tabernacles of the world, in reparation for the outrages, sacrileges and indifference with which He Himself is offended. And, through the infinite merits of His most Sacred Heart, and the Immaculate Heart of Mary, I beg of Thee the conversion of all poor sinners.”

PRAYER TO THE HOLY TRINITY IN THE MOST BLESSED SACRAMENT

“O most Holy Trinity, I adore Thee! My God, my God, I love Thee in the Most Blessed Sacrament.”

II. PRAYERS TAUGHT BY THE VIRGIN MARY

ROSARY DECADE PRAYER REQUESTED BY OUR LADY OF FATIMA

“O my Jesus, forgive us our sins, save us from the fires of hell. Lead all souls to Heaven, especially those with the greatest need of Thy Mercy.”

FATIMA SACRIFICE PRAYER

“O my Jesus, it is for love of Thee, for the conversion of sinners, and in reparation for the sins committed against the Immaculate Heart of Mary.”

III. FATIMA MORNING OFFERING

COMPOSED BY SR. LUCIA, SERVANT OF GOD

“O my God, in union with the Immaculate Heart of Mary (here kiss the Brown Scapular), I offer Thee the Most Precious Body, Blood, Soul and Divinity of Our Lord, Jesus Christ, joining with it my every thought, word and action of this day.

O my Jesus, I desire today to gain every indulgence and merit I can, and I offer them, together with myself, to Mary Immaculate, that she may best apply them to the interests of Thy Most Sacred Heart. Precious Blood of Jesus, save us! Immaculate Heart of Mary, pray for us! Most Sacred Heart of Jesus, have mercy on us. Amen.”

THE LITTLE CROWN OF
THE TWELVE STARS
OF THE BLESSED VIRGIN MARY

(As taught by St. Louis de Montfort)

I. CROWN OF EXCELLENCE

(To honor the Divine Maternity of the Blessed Virgin, her ineffable Virginity, her purity without stain and her innumerable virtues.)

1.) Our Father, Hail Mary.

Blessed art thou, O Virgin Mary, who didst bear the Lord, the Creator of the world; thou didst give birth to Him Who made thee, and remainest a Virgin forever.

Rejoice, O Virgin Mary; Rejoice a thousand times!

2.) Hail Mary.

O holy and immaculate Virgin, I know not with what praise to extol thee, since thou didst bear in thy womb the very One Whom the Heavens cannot contain.

Rejoice, O Virgin Mary; Rejoice a thousand times!

3.) Hail Mary.

Thou are all fair, O Virgin Mary, and there is no stain in thee.

Rejoice, O Virgin Mary; Rejoice a thousand times!

4.) Hail Mary.

Thy virtues, O Virgin, surpass the stars in number.

Rejoice, O Virgin Mary; Rejoice a thousand times!

Glory be to the Father.

II. CROWN OF POWER

(To honor the royalty of the Blessed Virgin, her magnificence, her universal mediation and the strength of her rule.)

5.) Our Father, Hail Mary.

Glory be to thee, O Empress of the world! Bring us with thee to the joys of Heaven.

Rejoice, O Virgin Mary; Rejoice a thousand times!

6.) Hail Mary.

Glory be to thee, O treasure house of the Lord's graces! Grant us a share in thy riches.

Rejoice, O Virgin Mary; Rejoice a thousand times!

7.) Hail Mary.

Glory be to thee, O Mediatrix between God and man! Through thee may the Almighty be favorable to us.

Rejoice, O Virgin Mary; Rejoice a thousand times!

8.) Hail Mary.

Glory be to thee who destroyest heresies and crushest demons! Be thou our loving guide.

Rejoice, O Virgin Mary; Rejoice a thousand times!

Glory be to the Father.

III. CROWN OF GOODNESS

(To honor the mercy of the Blessed Virgin toward sinners, the poor, the just and the dying.)

9.) Our Father, Hail Mary.

Glory be to thee, O refuge of sinners! Intercede for us with God.

Rejoice, O Virgin Mary; Rejoice a thousand times!

10.) Hail Mary.

Glory be to thee, O Mother of orphans! Render the Almighty favorable to us.

Rejoice, O Virgin Mary; Rejoice a thousand times!

11.) Hail Mary.

Glory be to thee, O joy of the just! Lead us with thee to the joys of Heaven.

Rejoice, O Virgin Mary; Rejoice a thousand times!

12.) Hail Mary.

Glory be to thee who are ever ready to assist us in life and death! Lead us with thee to the kingdom of Heaven!

Rejoice, O Virgin Mary; Rejoice a thousand times!

Glory be to the Father.

Let Us Pray:

-Hail, Mary, Daughter of God the Father;

-Hail, Mary, Mother of God the Son;

-Hail, Mary, Spouse of the Holy Ghost;

-Hail, Mary, Temple of the most Holy Trinity;

-Hail, Mary, my Mistress, my treasure, my joy, Queen of my heart; my Mother, my life, my sweetness, my dearest hope—yea, my heart and my soul!

I am all thine and all that I have is Thine, O Virgin blessed above all things! Let thy soul be in me to magnify the Lord; let thy spirit be in me to rejoice in God.

Set thyself, O faithful Virgin, as a seal upon my heart, that in thee and through thee I may be found faithful to God.

Receive me, O gracious Virgin, among those whom thou lovest and teacheest, whom thou leadest, nourishest and protectest as thy children.

Grant that for love of thee, I may despise all earthly consolations and ever cling to those of Heaven until, through the Holy Ghost, thy faithful Spouse, and through thee, His faithful spouse, Jesus Christ thy Son be formed in me for the glory of the Father. Amen.

THE 15 ROSARY PROMISES

(Given by Our Lady to Blessed Alan de la Roche)

1. Whoever shall faithfully serve Me by the recitation of the Rosary shall receive signal graces.

2. I promise My special protection and the greatest graces to all who shall recite the Rosary.

3. The Rosary shall be a powerful armor against hell. It will destroy vice, decrease sin, and defeat heresies.

4. It will cause virtue and good works to flourish; it will obtain for souls the abundant mercy of God; it will withdraw the hearts of men from the love of the world and its vanities, and it will lift them to the desire of eternal things. Oh, that souls would sanctify themselves by this means!

5. The soul which recommends itself to Me by the recitation of the Rosary shall not perish.

6. Whoever shall recite the Rosary devoutly, applying himself to the consideration of its sacred mysteries, shall never be conquered by misfortune. God will not chastise Him in His justice; he shall not perish by an unprovided death; if he be just, he shall remain in the grace of God and become worthy of eternal life.

7. Whoever shall have a true devotion for the Rosary shall not die without the Sacraments of the Church.

8. Those who are faithful in reciting the Rosary shall have during their life and at their death the light of God and the plenitude of His graces; at the moment of death, they shall participate in the merits of the saints in Paradise.

9. I shall deliver from Purgatory those who have been devoted to the Rosary.

10. The faithful children of the Rosary shall merit a high degree of glory in Heaven.

11. You shall obtain all you ask of Me by the recitation of the Rosary.

12. All those who propagate the Holy Rosary shall be aided by Me in their necessities.

13. I have obtained from My Divine Son that all the advocates of the Rosary shall have for intercessors the entire celestial court during their life and at the hour of death.

14. All we who recite the Rosary are My sons and brothers of My only Son, Jesus Christ.

15. Devotion to My Rosary is a great sign of predestination.

THE HOLY ROSARY ACCORDING TO THE METHOD OF ST. LOUIS DE MONTFORT

Introductory Prayer of St. Louis de Montfort

I unite with all the saints in Heaven, with all the just on earth, and with all the faithful here present. I unite with Thee, O my Jesus, in order to praise worthily Thy holy Mother and to praise Thee in her and through her. I renounce all the distractions I may have during this Rosary, which I wish to say with modesty, attention, and devotion, just as if it were to be the last of my life.

We offer Thee, O most Holy Trinity, this Creed in honor of all the mysteries of our Faith; this Our Father and these three Hail Mary's in honor of the unity of Thy Essence and the Trinity of Thy Persons. We ask of Thee a lively faith, a firm hope, and an ardent charity. Amen.

Apostle's Creed, Our Father, 3 Hail Mary's, Glory Be.

THE FIVE JOYFUL MYSTERIES

First Joyful Mystery:

The Annunciation

We offer Thee, O Lord Jesus, this decade in honor of Thy Incarnation in Mary's womb, and we ask of Thee, through this Mystery and through her intercession, a profound humility. Amen.

One Our Father, 10 Hail Mary's, one Glory Be. At the end of the Glory Be, pray the "Fatima Decade prayer, as requested by Our Lady of the Rosary at Fatima:

O my Jesus, forgive us our sins. Save us from the fires of hell. Lead all souls to Heaven, especially those with the greatest need of Thy mercy.

Conclude the mystery: May the grace of the Mystery of the Annunciation come down into our souls. Amen.

Second Joyful Mystery:

The Visitation of the Virgin

We offer Thee, O Lord Jesus, this decade in honor of the Visitation of Thy holy Mother to her cousin St. Elizabeth and the sanctification of St. John the Baptist in the womb, and we ask of Thee, through this Mystery and through the intercession of Thy holy Mother, charity toward our neighbor. Amen.

One Our Father, 10 Hail Mary's, one Glory Be, and O my Jesus.

Conclude the mystery: May the grace of the Mystery of the Visitation come down into our souls. Amen.

Third Joyful Mystery:

The Nativity of Our Lord

We offer Thee, O Lord Jesus, this decade in honor of Thy Nativity in the stable of Bethlehem, and we ask of Thee, through this Mystery and through the intercession of Thy holy Mother, detachment from the things of the world, contempt of riches, and love of holy poverty. Amen.

One Our Father, 10 Hail Mary's, one Glory Be, and O my Jesus.

Conclude the mystery: May the grace of the Mystery of the Nativity come down into our souls. Amen.

Fourth Joyful Mystery:

The Presentation in the Temple

We offer Thee, O Lord Jesus, this decade in honor of Thy Presentation in the Temple and the Purification of Mary, and we ask of Thee, through this Mystery and through the intercession of Thy holy Mother, purity of body and soul. Amen.

One Our Father, 10 Hail Mary's, one Glory Be, and O my Jesus.

Conclude the mystery: May the grace of the Mystery of the Presentation in the Temple come down into our souls. Amen.

Fifth Joyful Mystery:

The Finding of the Christ Child in the Temple

We offer Thee, O Lord Jesus, this decade in honor of Mary's finding Thee in the Temple, and we ask of Thee, through this Mystery and through her intercession, the gift of true wisdom. Amen.

One Our Father, 10 Hail Mary's, one Glory Be, and O my Jesus.

Conclude the mystery: May the grace of the Finding of Our Lord in the Temple come down into our souls. Amen.

THE FIVE SORROWFUL MYSTERIES

First Sorrowful Mystery:

The Agony in the Garden

We offer Thee, O Lord Jesus, this decade in honor of Thy Agony in the Garden of Olives, and we ask of Thee, through this Mystery and through the intercession of Thy holy Mother, contrition for our sins. Amen.

One Our Father, 10 Hail Mary's, one Glory Be, and O my Jesus.

Conclude the mystery: May the grace of the Mystery of the Agony in the Garden come down into our souls. Amen.

Second Sorrowful Mystery:

The Scourging at the Pillar

We offer Thee, O Lord Jesus, this decade in honor of Thy bloody Scourging, and we ask of Thee, through this Mystery and through the intercession of Thy Holy Mother, the grace of mortifying our senses. Amen.

One Our Father, 10 Hail Mary's, one Glory Be, and O my Jesus.

Conclude the mystery: May the grace of the Mystery of the Scourging come down into our souls. Amen.

Third Sorrowful Mystery:

The Crowning of Thorns

We offer Thee, O Lord Jesus, this decade in honor of Thy being crowned with thorns, and we ask of Thee, through this Mystery and through the intercession of Thy holy Mother, contempt of the world. Amen.

One Our Father, 10 Hail Mary's, one Glory Be, and O my Jesus.

Conclude the mystery: May the grace of the Mystery of the Crowning with Thorns come down into our souls. Amen.

Fourth Sorrowful Mystery:

The Carrying of the Cross

We offer Thee, O Lord Jesus, this decade in honor of Thy carrying of the Cross, and we ask of Thee, through this Mystery and through the intercession of Thy holy Mother, patience in bearing our crosses. Amen.

One Our Father, 10 Hail Mary's, one Glory Be, and O my Jesus.

Conclude the mystery: May the grace of the Mystery of the Carrying of the Cross come down into our souls. Amen.

Fifth Sorrowful Mystery:

The Crucifixion of Our Lord

We offer Thee, O Lord Jesus, this decade in honor of Thy Crucifixion and ignominious death on Calvary, and we ask of Thee, through this Mystery and through the intercession of Thy holy Mother, the conversion of sinners, the perseverance of the just, and the relief of the souls in Purgatory. Amen.

One Our Father, 10 Hail Mary's, one Glory Be, and O my Jesus.

Conclude the mystery: May the grace of the Mystery of the Crucifixion come down into our souls. Amen.

THE FIVE GLORIOUS MYSTERIES

First Glorious Mystery:

The Resurrection of Our Lord

We offer thee, O Lord Jesus, this decade in honor of Thy glorious Resurrection, and we ask of Thee, through this Mystery and through the intercession of Thy holy Mother, love of God and fervor in Thy service. Amen.

One Our Father, 10 Hail Mary's, one Glory Be, and O my Jesus.

Conclude the mystery: May the grace of the Resurrection come down into our souls. Amen.

The Second Glorious Mystery:

The Ascension of Our Lord into Heaven

We offer Thee, O Lord Jesus, this decade in honor of Thy triumphant Ascension, and we ask of Thee, through this Mystery and through the intercession of Thy holy Mother, an ardent desire for Heaven, our true home. Amen.

One Our Father, 10 Hail Mary's, one Glory Be, and O my Jesus.

Conclude the mystery: May the grace of the Resurrection come down into our souls. Amen.

The Third Glorious Mystery:

The Descent of the Holy Ghost on Mary and the Apostles

We offer Thee, O Lord Jesus, this decade in honor of the Mystery of Pentecost, and we ask of Thee, through this Mystery and through the intercession of Thy holy Mother, the coming of the Holy Ghost into our souls. Amen.

One Our Father, 10 Hail Mary's, one Glory Be, and O my Jesus.

Conclude the mystery: May the grace of the mystery of Pentecost come down into our souls. Amen.

The Fourth Glorious Mystery:

The Assumption of the Virgin Mary

We offer Thee, O Lord Jesus, this decade in honor of the resurrection and triumphant Assumption of Thy Holy Mother into Heaven, and we ask of Thee, through this Mystery and through her intercession, a tender devotion for so good a Mother. Amen.

One Our Father, 10 Hail Mary's, one Glory Be, and O my Jesus.

Conclude the mystery: May the grace of the mystery of the Assumption come down into our souls. Amen.

The Fifth Glorious Mystery:

The Coronation of the Blessed Virgin

We offer Thee, O Lord Jesus, this decade in honor of the Coronation of Thy Holy Mother, and we ask of Thee, through this Mystery and through her intercession, perseverance in grace and a crown of glory thereafter. Amen.

One Our Father, 10 Hail Mary's, one Glory Be, and O my Jesus.

Conclude the mystery: May the grace of the mystery of the Coronation of the Blessed Virgin come down into our souls. Amen.

Concluding Prayer

Hail Mary, beloved Daughter of the Eternal Father, admirable Mother of the Son, faithful Spouse of the Holy Ghost, august Temple of the Most Holy Trinity!

Hail, Sovereign Princess, to whom all owe subjection in Heaven and on earth!

Hail, sure Refuge of Sinners, Our Lady of Mercy, who hast never refused any request.

All sinful though I am, I cast myself at thy feet and beseech thee to obtain from Jesus, thy beloved Son, contrition and pardon for all my sins, as well as the gift of divine wisdom.

I consecrate myself entirely to thee with all that I have. I choose thee today for my Mother and Mistress. Treat me, then, as the least of thy children and the most obedient of thy servants.

Listen, my princess, listen to the sighs of a heart that desires to love and serve thee faithfully. Let it never be said that of all who have had recourse to thee, I was the first to be abandoned.

O my hope, O my life, O my faithful and Immaculate Virgin Mary, defend me, nourish me, hear me, teach me, and save me. Amen.

THE ROSARY MYSTERIES FOR BEGINNERS

A Rosary is one-third of Our Lady's Psalter. The Psalter is comprised of all 15 "decades" (meaning ten Hail Mary's, which are preceded by an Our Father and followed by the Gloria, otherwise known as the Glory Be) while meditating on the Joyful, Sorrowful, and Glorious Mysteries in succession. A Rosary, however, includes only one set of Mysteries while praying five decades.

Traditionally, each day of the week is set apart for a particular Rosary Mystery, as follows:

THE ROSARY MYSTERIES

THE JOYFUL MYSTERIES (Monday and Thursday)

- First Joyful Mystery*
 - The Annunciation of Gabriel to the Virgin Mary
- Second Joyful Mystery*
 - The Visitation of Mary to Elizabeth
- Third Joyful Mystery*
 - The Nativity of Our Lord
- Fourth Joyful Mystery*
 - The Presentation of the Infant Jesus
- Fifth Joyful Mystery*
 - The Finding of the Child Jesus

THE SORROWFUL MYSTERIES (Tuesday and Friday; also on all Sundays of Advent and Lent)

- First Sorrowful Mystery*
 - Agony of Jesus in the Garden
- Second Sorrowful Mystery*
 - Jesus is Scourged at the Pillar
- Third Sorrowful Mystery*
 - Jesus is Crowned with Thorns
- Fourth Sorrowful Mystery*
 - Jesus Carries His Cross
- Fifth Sorrowful Mystery*

–The Crucifixion of Jesus

THE GLORIOUS MYSTERIES (Wednesday and Saturday; also on all Sundays after Easter, inclusive—but not on Sundays during Advent and Lent because they are penitential seasons of the Church)

–First Glorious Mystery

–The Resurrection of Jesus

–Second Glorious Mystery

–The Ascension of Jesus

–Third Glorious Mystery

–The Descent of the Holy Ghost

–Fourth Glorious Mystery

–The Assumption of the Virgin

–Fifth Glorious Mystery

–The Coronation of Mary

HOW TO PRAY THE ROSARY (FOR BEGINNERS)

- 1. While holding the Crucifix, make the Sign of the Cross and pray:

In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit. Amen.

- 2. While still holding the Crucifix, next pray the Apostles Creed:

I believe in God, the Father Almighty, Creator of heaven and earth; and in Jesus Christ, His only Son, Our Lord; Who was conceived by the Holy Spirit, born of the Virgin Mary, suffered under Pontius Pilate, was crucified, died, and was buried. He descended into hell; the third day He arose again from the dead. He ascended into heaven, and sits at the right hand of God, the Father Almighty; from thence He shall come to judge the living and the dead. I believe in the Holy Spirit, the Holy Catholic Church, the communion of Saints, the forgiveness of sins, the resurrection of the body and life everlasting. Amen.

- 3. Pray the Our Father on the first large bead.

Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed by Thy name. Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us, and lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. Amen.

- 4. Pray the Hail Mary on each of the next three beads, asking for an increase in the virtues of faith, hope and charity.

Hail Mary, full of grace, the Lord is with thee; blessed art thou among women, and blessed is the fruit of thy womb, Jesus. Holy Mary, Mother of God, pray for us sinners, now and at the hour of our death. Amen.

- 5. Pray the Gloria (the Glory Be) on the large, middle bead between each 10 beads.

Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Spirit. As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be, world without end. Amen.

6. Announce the first Rosary Mystery and pray the Our Father on the same middle bead.

7. On each of the ten following small beads (also referred to as a decade) recite a Hail Mary while reflecting on the mystery.

8. At the end of each mystery, pray the Fatima Prayer requested by the Virgin of Fatima.

O my Jesus, forgive us our sins, save us from the fires of hell. Lead all souls to Heaven, especially those with the greatest need of Thy mercy.

9. On the next large bead between the decades pray the Gloria:
Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost. As it was in the beginning, is now and ever shall be, world without end. Amen.

10. Repeat all the steps above for each mystery.

11. When the fifth mystery is completed, again pray the Fatima Prayer and the Gloria. The Rosary is then customarily concluded with the Hail, Holy Queen, followed by the prayer to God and then three prayers for the intentions of the Holy Father. This last part is just as important, since the prayers for the Pope complete the requirements to gain a plenary indulgence. Customarily, the three prayers are one Our Father, one Hail Mary, and one Gloria, as follows in Step 12.

12. HAIL, HOLY QUEEN

Hail, holy Queen, mother of mercy, our life, our sweetness and our hope. To thee do we cry, poor banished children of Eve. To thee do we send up our sighs, mourning and weeping in this valley of tears. Turn then, most gracious Advocate, thine eyes of mercy towards us, and after this our exile, show unto us the blessed fruit of thy womb, Jesus.

O clement, o loving, o sweet Virgin Mary!

Pray for us, o holy Mother of God, that we may be made worthy of the promises of Christ.

O God, whose only begotten Son, by His life, death, and Resurrection, has purchased for us the rewards of eternal life, grant we beseech Thee that by meditating upon these mysteries of the Most Holy Rosary of the Blessed Virgin Mary, we may imitate what they contain, and obtain what they promise. Through the same Christ, Our Lord. Amen.

Then make the following request: “For the intentions of the Holy Father and to ask for the plenary indulgence” (acquired when praying a Rosary with the family, in a church group, etc., each person who prays the Rosary may also offer the plenary indulgence to the Poor Souls in Purgatory). If praying privately, this sentence can still be said aloud. What is necessary is that the three following prayers should be offered with the explicit purpose of praying for the current Pope’s intentions (that is to say, to offer prayers so that he may fulfill the duties of the papal office in accordance with God’s most holy Will):

Conclude with one Our Father, one Hail Mary, one Gloria.

NOTES

PART I FATIMA'S PROPHETIC MISSION

- [1] Pope: we would be mistaken to think that Fatima's prophetic message is complete, Asia News, May 13, 2010
[<http://www.asianews.it/news-en/Pope:-we-would-be-mistaken-to-think-that-Fatima%C3%A2%E2%82%AC%E2%84%A2s-prophetic-mission-is-complete-18398.html>]
- [2] Pope Benedict XVI, Sermon at Fatima, May 13, 2007. [Emphasis added.]
- [3] Ratzinger, Cardinal Joseph, as quoted by Vittorio Messori, "Here is Why the Faith is in Crisis," Jesus Magazine, November 11, 1984: p. 79.
- [4] "My Catholic Encyclopedia." The Family Rosary Edition of the Holy Bible [Chicago, IL: The Catholic Press, Inc., 1952]: p. 211. [Emphasis added.]
- [5] Ibid., p. 166.
- [6] The Concise Catholic Dictionary. [Kansas, MO: The Angelus Press, 1992. Republished from the original 1943 edition, with Nihil Obstat and Imprimatur]: p. 223.
- [7] "My Catholic Encyclopedia," loc.cit. [Emphasis in the original.]
- [8] Ibid. [Emphasis in the original.]
- [9] Jn. 3: 17, 5:23; 6:39, 58; Gal. 4:4.
- [10] Jn. 14:26; 15:26; 16:7.
- [11] Apoc. 1:11.
- [12] Sr. Mary Lucia of the Immaculate Heart. Fatima in Lucia's Own Words: Sister Lucia's Memoirs. [Fatima, Portugal: Postulation Centre, 1976]: pp. 62, 64.
- [13] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité, The Whole Truth about Fatima, Science and the Facts, Vol. I. [Buffalo, NY: Immaculate Heart Publications, 1989]: pp. 93-95.
- [14] Ibid., p. 71.
- [15] Pope, Hugh. "Angels." The Catholic Encyclopedia. Vol. 1. [New York: Robert Appleton Company, 1907]
[<http://www.newadvent.org/cathen/01476d.htm>].
- [16] Ps. 102:20; Matt. 4:11; 13:49; 26:53.
- [17] Dan. 10:13; Apoc. 12:7.

[18] Jude 1:9.

[19] Butler, Alban. Lives of the Saints. (Forgotten Books): p. 372. Cited in “St. Michael (Roman Catholic),” Wikipedia.

[http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Saint_Michael_%28Roman_Catholic%29#cite_1 Alban_Butler_page_372-13]

[20] 2 Pet. 2:4.

[21] Dan. 8: 15-26; 9: 21-27.

[22] Dan. 10:1. [Emphasis added.]

[23] Dan. 10:2.

[24] Dan. 10:11. [Emphasis added.]

[25] Dan. 10: 12.

[26] Dan. 10:13-14.

[27] Eph. 6: 11-12. [Emphasis added.]

[28] Mt.12: 43-45. [Emphasis added.]

[29] Dan.10:21.

[30] Dan. 12:1.

[31] Jude 1:9.

[32] Origen. De Principiis III. 2.2. Cited in Holweck, Frederick. “St. Michael the Archangel.” The Catholic Encyclopedia, Vol. 10. [New York: Robert Appleton Company, 1911.]

[<http://www.newadvent.org/cathen/10275b.htm>].

[33] Apoc. 12:7.

[34] Holweck, Frederick. “St. Michael the Archangel.” The Catholic Encyclopedia, Vol.10. [New York: Robert Appleton Company, 1911] [<http://www.newadvent.org/cathen/10275b.htm>]

[35] Kramer, Rev. Herman Bernard. The Book of Destiny. [Rockford, IL: TAN Books & Publishers, 1975. Originally published in 1955 by Buechler Publishing Co., Belleville, IL. Reprinted in 1972 by Apostolate of Christian Action, Fresno, CA using entirely new type set under the author’s supervision, from which TAN’s 1975 printing was made]: p. 200.

[36] Ibid., p. 288.

[37] Butler, loc. cit.

[38] Gen. 3:24.

[39] Num. 22:22.

[40] 2 Kings 19:35.

[41] Holweck, loc. cit.

[42] Ibid.

[43] Apoc. 12:1.

[44] McGlynn, O.P., Thomas. Vision of Fatima. [Boston: Little Brown and Co., 1949]: pp. 28-29.

[45] Walsh, William Thomas. Our Lady of Fatima. [Image Book: New York, May 1990. First Image edition published 1954]: pp. 207-209.

[46] Sister Mary Lucia of the Immaculate Heart. Fatima in Lucia's Own Words: Sister Lucia's Memoirs. [Fatima, Portugal: Postulation Centre, 16th Edition, July 2007]: pp. 70-71.

[47] Ibid., p. 159.

PART 2

THE SIGNS AT FATIMA, MAY-SEPTEMBER 1917

[48] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité. The Whole Truth about Fatima: Science and the Facts, Vol. I. [Buffalo, NY: Immaculate Heart Publications, English translation 1989]: p. 238.

[49] Ibid., pp.112-113.

[50] Ibid, p.112.

[51] Sister Mary Lucia of the Immaculate Heart. Fatima in Lucia's Own Words: Sister Lucia's Memoirs. [Fatima, Portugal: Postulation Centre, 16th edition, 2007]: p. 162.

[52] McGlynn, O.P., Fr. Thomas. Vision of Fatima. [Boston: Little Brown & Co., 1949]: p. 64.

[53] Ibid., pp. 68-69.

[54] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité, op. cit., p.161.

[55] McGlynn, loc. cit.

[56] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité, loc. cit., pp. 160-161. Also see John de Marchi, I.M.C, The True Story of Fatima [Constable, NY: The Fatima Center. Republished from the 1947 edition]: p. 23.

[57] Ibid.

[58] Ibid, p. 160.

[59] Sister Mary Lucia of the Immaculate Heart. Fatima in Lucia's Own Words: Sister Lucia's Memoirs. [Fatima, Portugal: Postulation Centre, 16th edition, 2007]: p. 222.

[60] Sister Mary Lucia of the Immaculate Heart. Fatima in Lucia's Own Words: Sister Lucia's Memoirs [Fatima, Portugal: Postulation Centre, 1976 edition]: p. 165.

[61] Estimates of the number of individuals who came to Fatima, Portugal on July 13, 1917 vary from 800 to 5,000. Clearly, such a disparity is revealing, depending on the veracity or the ulterior motives of witnesses. Be that as it may, the events of July 13—including the announcement of a “sign” that would be given in October—resulted in an estimated 70,000-100,000 people present at Fatima on October 13, 1917, the day of the Miracle of the Sun. See Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité, The Whole Truth about Fatima, Vol. 1: pp. 185, 214.

[62] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité, op. cit., p. 183.

[63] Ibid.

[64] Walsh, William Thomas. Our Lady of Fatima. [Image Book: New York, May 1990. First Image edition published 1954]: p. 80.

[65] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité, loc.cit.

[66] Ibid.

[67] Ibid.

[68] This was the aurora borealis on the night of January 25th to 26th, 1938, which Lucia considered to be the God-given sign of which the Virgin warned if her requests were not heeded. This unusual sign occurred shortly before Adolph Hitler illegally annexed Austria to Germany.

[69] The Message of Fatima, as issued by the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith. Vatican website.

[http://www.vatican.va/roman_curia/congregations/cfaith/documents/rc_con_fatima_en.html]

[70] de Marchi, I.M.C, John. The True Story of Fatima [Constable, NY: The Fatima Center. Republished from the 1947 edition]: p. 37.

[71] Sister Lucia, op. cit., p. 163.

[72] de Marchi, loc.cit.

[73] Ibid.

[74] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité, op. cit., p. 224.

[75] Ibid., p. 223.

[76] Ibid., p. 224.

[77] Ibid.

[78] Ibid., p.235.

[79] Ibid., p. 257.

[80] Ibid., p. 260.

[81] Barthas, Canon C. Cited by Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité, op. cit., p. 284.

PART 3
THE CLOUD,
SIGN OF THE HOLY TRINITY

[82] For examples, please see Heb. 2:3-4; Ps. 96:17, Judg. 6:17; Josh. 24: 15-17; Isa. 7:14; Exod. 3:12; Num. 17:20.

[83] The Concise Catholic Dictionary [Kansas City, MO: Angelus Press, with 1943 Nihil Obstat and Imprimatur]: p.331.

[84] “Theophany.” Wikipedia.
[<http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Theophany>].

[85] Ibid.

[86] Gambero, S.M., Luigi. Mary and the Fathers of the Church [San Francisco: Ignatius Press, 1999]: p. 211, Tractatus de Psalmo 77, 14: CCL 78, 72.

[87] “Ambrose.” Theotokos: A Theological Encyclopedia of the Blessed Virgin Mary, Second Edition, s.v., p. 18.

[88] Palmer, S.J., Paul F., Mary in the Documents of the Church [London: Burns & Oats, 1953]: p. 27.

[89] de Liguori, St. Alphonsus. The Glories of Mary. [Brooklyn, NY: Redemptorist Fathers, reprinted in 1931]: p. 261.

[90] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité. The Whole Truth about Fatima: Science and the Facts, Vol. I. [Buffalo, NY: Immaculate Heart Publications, English translation 1989]: p. 265.

[91] Ibid.

[92] Ibid.

[93] de Montfort, St. Louis. True Devotion to Mary. [Translated from the original French by Fr. Frederick William Faber, D.D. Edited and Annotated by The Fathers of the Company of Mary. Republished in Rockford, IL: TAN Books and Publishers, 1985 from the 1941 copyright edition with Imprimi Potest, Nihil Obstat, and Imprimatur, 1949]: #5.

[94] Ibid., #218.6.

[95] Ibid.

PART 4
SIGNS FROM THE EAST

[96] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité, The Whole Truth about Fatima: Science and the Facts, Vol. I. [Buffalo, NY: Immaculate Heart Publications, English translation 1989]: p. 238.

[97] As stated elsewhere in this book: “A true sign can possess one or more of the following seven functions: it confirms God’s word, His goodness, authenticates prophecy, verifies God’s blessings and His intervention for the sake of the elect, strengthens the faithful with hope, insures or testifies God’s Presence, or declares His judgment upon sin.”

[98] “In brief, ‘Mariophany’ may be defined as ‘appearances of Mary’ to man. Like the word ‘theophany,’ however, there are rich, deeper meanings to this one term. ‘Mariophany’ refers to the apparitions of Mary when She, already assumed body and soul into Heaven, appears visibly to a person (or persons) to remind all of mankind to return to God, Who is Lawgiver, Judge, and Prophet. ‘Mariophany’ can also mean the manifestation of Mary in which God emphasizes Her office throughout all of salvation history, from Genesis to the Apocalypse. Finally, ‘Mariophany’ signifies God’s Triune Presence in the Immaculate Virgin, through whom he reveals Himself via ‘sensible signs.’”

[99] Frère Michel, loc. cit., p. 265.

[100] O’Lavery, B.A., Fr. H. The Mother of God and Her Glorious Feasts. [Rockford, IL: TAN Books and Publishers, reprinted in 1987 under its new title. Originally published between 1908 and 1915, under the title The Mother of God’s Glorious Feasts. First reprinted in 1925 and later reprinted again in 1977 by Marian Publications, South Bend, Indiana]: p. 145.

[101] In Annunt s.1. Cited by St. Alphonsus di Liguori, The Glories of Mary [Brooklyn, NY: The Redemptorist Fathers, p. 1931]: p. 239.

[102] de Liguori, St. Alphonsus, The Glories of Mary [Brooklyn, NY: Redemptorist Fathers, 1931]: p. 239.

[103] O’Lavery, op. cit., p. 157.

[104] Matt. 2: 2,9.

[105] Jth. 15:10.

[106] de Montfort, St. Louis. True Devotion to Mary. [Translated from the original French by Fr. Frederick William Faber, D.D. Edited and Annotated by The Fathers of the Company of Mary. Republished in Rockford, IL: TAN Books and Publishers, 1985 from the 1941 copyright edition with Imprimi Potest, Nihil Obstat, and Imprimatur, 1949]: #262.

[107] Damascene, St. John [c. 675-c.749 A.D.]. Cited by Michael Davies, The Catholic Sanctuary and the Second Vatican Council. Catholic Tradition website [<http://www.catholictradition.org/Eucharist/sanctuary1.htm>]

[108] “Signs and Symbols,” Catholic Tradition website

[<http://www.catholictradition.org/Saints/signs3.htm>]

PART 5
STARS AT HIGH NOON
OUR LORD, OUR LADY,& THE CHURCH

[109] Frère Michel of the Holy Trinity. The Whole Truth about Fatima: Science and the Facts, Vol. I. [Buffalo, NY: Immaculate Heart Publications, English translation 1989]: p. 238.

[110] Ibid., p. 273.

[111] Ibid., p. 257.

[112] Ibid., p. 258. [Emphasis added.]

[113] Septuagint: The ancient Greek translation of the Hebrew Scriptures (i.e., the Old Testament), approved by the Catholic Church but rejected by orthodox Jews and Protestant sects.

[114] Kramer, Rev. Herman Bernard. The Book of Destiny. [Rockford, IL: TAN Books & Publishers, 1975. Originally published in 1955 by Buechler Publishing Co., Belleville, IL. Reprinted in 1972 by Apostolate of Christian Action, Fresno, CA from which the 1975 printing was made]: p. 276.

[115] For example, see 2 Pet. 1:19.

[116] Chrysostom, St. John. "Homily 6 on Matthew." Translated by George Prevost and revised by M.B. Riddle. From Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers, First Series, Vol. 10. Edited by Philip Schaff. [Buffalo, NY: Christian Literature Publishing Co., 1888.] Revised and edited for New Advent website by Kevin Knight.

[<http://www.newadvent.org/fathers/200106.htm>. [Emphasis added.]

[117] Commentator Prefaces to The Book of Psalms, Ch. 18, and The Book of Job, Ch. 8, in the Holy Bible, Douay-Rheims-Challoner translation.

[118] Kramer, op. cit., p. 282.

[119] Num. 24:14; Isa.14:12.

[120] Kramer, op. cit., p. 122.

[121] "The Christian law...has necessarily its priesthood to carry out the Divine Service, the principle act of which is the Eucharistic Sacrifice, the figure and renewal of that of Calvary. This priesthood has two degrees; the first, total and complete, the second an incomplete participation of the first. The first belongs to the bishop. This bishop is truly a priest (sacerdos), and even a high-priest; he has chief control of the Divine worship (sacrorum antistes), is the president of liturgical meetings; he has the fullness of the priesthood, and administers all the sacraments. The second degree belongs to the priest (presbyter), who is also a sacerdos, but of the second rank; by his priestly ordination he receives the power to offer sacrifice (i.e., to celebrate the Eucharist), to forgive sins, to bless, to preach, to sanctify, and in a word to fulfill the non-reserved liturgical duties or priestly functions. In the exercise of these functions, however, he is subject to the authority of the bishop to whom he has promised canonical obedience; in certain cases he even requires not only authorization, but real jurisdiction, particularly to forgive sins and to take care of souls. Moreover, certain acts of the sacerdotal power, affecting the society of which the bishop is the head, are reserved to the latter—e.g., Confirmation, the final rite of Christian initiation, ordination...and the solemn consecration of new temples to God. Sacerdotal powers are conferred on priests by priestly ordination, and it is this ordination which puts them in the highest rank of the hierarchy after the bishop.” August Boudinhon, "Priest," The Catholic Encyclopedia, Vol. 12. [New York: Robert Appleton Company, 1911.)

[<http://www.newadvent.org/cathen/12406a.htm>]

[122] de Montfort, St. Louis. True Devotion to Mary. [Translated from the original French by Fr. Frederick William Faber, D.D. Edited and Annotated by The Fathers of the Company of Mary. Republished in Rockford, IL: TAN Books and Publishers, 1985 from the 1941 copyright edition with Imprimi Potest, Nihil Obstat, and Imprimatur, 1949]: #235.

[123] de Liguori, St. Alphonsus. The Glories of Mary. [Brooklyn, NY: Redemptorist Fathers]: pp. 121-122.

[124] 2 Pet. 1:19.

[125] Peters, Sister Danielle. “The Most Holy Name of Mary” Marian Library International Marian Research Institute website

[<http://campus.udayton.edu/mary/mostholyname.html>]

[126] Ibid.

[127] Ibid.

[128] Ibid.

[129] Ibid.

[130] Kramer, Rev. Herman Bernard. The Book of Destiny. [Rockford, IL: TAN Books & Publishers, 1975. First published by Buechler Publishing Co., Belleville, IL. Reprinted in 1972 by Apostolate of Christian Action, Fresno, CA from which the 1975 printing was made]: pp. 15, 400.

[131] Eudes, St. John. The Admirable Heart of Mary. [Buffalo, NY:

Immaculate Heart Publications]: p. 32.

[132] de Montfort, St. Louis. True Devotion to Mary. [Translated from the original French by Fr. Frederick William Faber, D.D. Edited and Annotated by The Fathers of the Company of Mary. Republished in Rockford, IL: TAN Books and Publishers, 1985 from the 1941 copyright edition with Imprimi Potest, Nihil Obstat, and Imprimatur, 1949]: p. 200.

[133] Ibid, pp. 200-202.

[134] Frère Michel, op. cit., p. 183.

[135] Ibid.

[136] Ibid.

[137] Ibid. p. 224.

[138] Walsh, William Thomas. Our Lady of Fatima. [Image Book: New York, May 1990. First Image edition published 1954]: p. 80.

[139] Ibid.

[140] de Marchi, I.M.C, John. The True Story of Fatima. [Constable, NY: The Fatima Center. Republished from the 1947 edition]: p. 37.

[141] Sister Mary Lucia of the Immaculate Heart. Fatima in Lucia's Own Words: Sister Lucia's Memoirs. [Fatima, Portugal: Postulation Centre, 1976]: p. 163.

[142] de Marchi, loc.cit.

[143] Frère Michel, op. cit., p. 260.

PART 6

SIGNS OF GRACE:

THE SILENT PARABLES OF FATIMA

[144] Prachensky, Fr. Joseph. Divine Parables Explained. [South Bend, IN: Marian Publications, 1973. Reprinted from the 1890 edition]: pp. 15-16.

[145] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité. The Whole Truth about Fatima: Science and the Facts, Vol. I. [Buffalo, NY: Immaculate Heart Publications, English translation 1989]: p. 183.

[146] Barthas, Canon C. Fatima 1917-1968, Histoire complète des apparitions et de leurs suites [Fatima Publications, 1969]: p. 146. Cited by Frère Michel, The Whole Truth about Fatima: Science and the Facts, Vol. I. [Buffalo, NY: Immaculate Heart Publications, English translation 1989]: p.160.

[147] Zach. 6:15.

[148] Frère Michel, loc. cit., p. 183.

[149] Sister Mary Lucia of the Immaculate Heart. Fatima in Lucia's Own Words: Sister Lucia's Memoirs. [Fatima, Portugal: Postulation Centre, 1976]: p. 165.

[150] Kramer, Rev. Herman Bernard. The Book of Destiny. [Rockford, IL: TAN Books & Publishers, 1975. Originally published in 1955 by Buechler Publishing Co., Belleville, IL. Reprinted in 1972 by Apostolate of Christian Action, Fresno, CA using entirely new type set under the author's supervision, from which TAN's 1975 printing was made]: p. 192.

[151] de Montfort, St. Louis. True Devotion to Mary. [Translated from the original French by Fr. Frederick William Faber, D.D. Edited and Annotated by The Fathers of the Company of Mary. Republished in Rockford, IL: TAN Books and Publishers, 1985 from the 1941 copyright edition with Imprimi Potest, Nihil Obstat, and Imprimatur, 1949]: #56-59.

[152] Sr. Mary Lucia, op. cit., p. 115.

[153] Exod. 25:17.

[154] de Liguori, St. Alphonsus. The Glories of Mary. Fourth Revised Edition. [Brooklyn, NY: Redemptorist Fathers, 1931 reprint]: p. 111.

[155] Kramer, op. cit., p. 278.

[156] Apoc. 21:10.

[157] Apoc. 21: 18, 21.

[158] Frère Michel, loc. cit.

[159] For examples, see Esther 11:8; Job 15:23; Joel 2:2; and Sophonias 1:15.

[160] Amos 5:18.

[161] Ibid., p. 206.

[162] Kramer, op. cit., p. 207.

[163] Lk. 23: 44-45.

[164] de Liguori, op. cit., p. 214.

[165] Cant. 6: 9.

[166] Sr. Mary Lucia, op. cit., p. 159.

[167] 1 Pet. 2:9.

[168] Walsh, William Thomas. Our Lady of Fatima. [Image Book: New York, May 1990. First Image edition published 1954]: p. 80.

[169] 3 Kings 19: 9.

[170] 3 Kings 19:10.

[171] 3 Kings 19: 11-13.

[172] de Montfort, St. Louis. True Devotion to Mary. [Translated from the original French by Fr. Frederick William Faber, D.D. Edited and Annotated by The Fathers of the Company of Mary. Republished in Rockford, IL: TAN Books and Publishers, 1985 from the 1941 copyright edition with Imprimi Potest, Nihil Obstat, and Imprimatur, 1949]: #261.

[173] Apoc. 7: 16-17.

PART 7

MOTHER OF GOD, REFUGE OF SINNERS

[174] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité. The Whole Truth about Fatima: Science and the Facts, Vol. I. [Buffalo, NY: Immaculate Heart Publications, English translation 1989]: p. 238.

[175] de Marchi, I.M.C, John. The True Story of Fatima. [Constable, NY: The Fatima Center. Republished from the 1947 edition]: p. 37.

[176] Sister Mary Lucia of the Immaculate Heart. Fatima in Lucia's Own Words: Sister Lucia's Memoirs. [Fatima, Portugal: Postulation Centre, 1976]: p. 163.

[177] 2 Kings 22: 14. Also see Exod. 9:23; 1 Kings 2:10; 1 Kings 7:10; 1 Kings 12:17-18; Job 26:14; Job 37: 4-5; Job 40:4; Eccles: 43:18.

[178] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité, op. cit., p. 235.

[179] Apoc. 11:13.

[180] Exod. 19:6.

[181] Ps. 76:19.

[182] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité, loc.cit.

[183] Isa. 29:6.

[184] Mt.27-54; 28:2.

[185] Acts 16:26.

[186] Apoc.4:5; 8:5; 11:19; 16:8.

[187] Apoc. 6:12; 8:5; 11:13; 11:19; and 16:8.

[188] Apoc. 4:5.

[189] Apoc. 8:5.

[190] Apoc. 11:1.

[191] Apoc. 11: 3-13.

[192] Apoc. 11:18-19.

[193] Kramer, Rev. Herman Bernard. The Book of Destiny. [Rockford, IL: TAN Books & Publishers, 1975. Originally published in 1955 by Buechler

Publishing Co., Belleville, IL. Reprinted in 1972 by Apostolate of Christian Action, Fresno, CA using entirely new type set under the author's supervision, from which TAN's 1975 printing was made]: p. 266.

[194] Sister Mary Lucia of the Immaculate Heart, op. cit., p. 162.

[195] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité, op. cit., p. 224.

[196] Apoc. 4: 1-3. [Emphasis added.]

[197] de Liguori, St. Alphonsus. The Glories of Mary. Revised Fourth Edition. [Brooklyn, NY: Redemptorist Fathers]: p. 203.

[198] Gen. 9:13.

[199] Apoc. 10: 1-3.

[200] Kramer, op. cit., pp. 239-240.

[201] Meagher, D.D., Fr. James L. How Christ Said the First Mass.

[Rockford, IL: TAN Books & Publishers, 1984. Reprinted from the 1906 edition by Christian Press Association Publishing Co., NY, Reprinted several times, beginning in 1975, by Marian Publications, South Bend, IN]: p.139.

[202] Kramer, op cit., p. 51.

PART 8

A SHOWER OF PETALS: OUR LADY OF THE ROSARY, MEDIATRIX OF ALL GRACES

[203] O'Laverty, B.A., Fr. H. The Mother of God and Her Glorious Feasts. [Rockford, IL: TAN Books & Publishers. Originally published between 1908 and approx.. 1915 under the title, The Mother of God's Glorious Feasts. Reprinted under new title in 1987 by TAN]: p. 185.

[204] Jn. 15:15.

[205] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité. The Whole Truth about Fatima: Science and the Facts, Vol. I. [Buffalo, NY: Immaculate Heart Publications, English translation 1989]: p. 260.

[206] Stokes, Jr., John S. "Flower Theology." Catholic Culture website. [http://www.catholicculture.org/culture/library/view.cfm?recnum=5855]

[207] Prophecy of Isaias 35:2.

[208] de Montfort, St. Louis. True Devotion to Mary. [Translated from the original French by Fr. Frederick William Faber, D.D. Edited and Annotated by The Fathers of the Company of Mary. Republished in Rockford, IL: TAN Books and Publishers, 1985 from the 1941 copyright edition with Imprimi Potest, Nihil Obstat, and Imprimatur, 1949]: #218.

- [209] Pope Leo XIII, Octobri Mense (On the Rosary, September 22, 1891): para. 4.
- [210] O'Lavery, op. cit., p. 183.
- [211] Eccles. 29: 17-19. [Emphasis added]
- [212] de Montfort, op. cit., #261; p. 164. [Emphasis added.]
- [213] Newman, Blessed John Henry. "Meditations on the Litany of Loreto, for the month of May: On the Immaculate Conception, Meditation #5: Mary is the 'Rosa Mystica,' the Mystical Rose." Newman Reader: Meditations and Devotions website
[<http://www.newmanreader.org/works/meditations/meditations1.html>]
[Emphasis added.]
- [214] Ibid. [Emphasis added.]
- [215] Cant. 4:12.
- [216] de Liguori, St. Alphonsus. The Glories of Mary. Revised Fourth Edition. [Brooklyn, NY: Redemptorist Fathers]: p. 306.
- [217] Newman, Ioc cit.
- [218] de Liguori, op. cit., p. 93.
- [219] Rom. 8:14.
- [220] Baltimore Catechism and Mass #3, Lesson 25: Confirmation, #330.
- [221] de Liguori, op. cit., p. 203.
- [222] Cant. 6:7, as cited by St. Alphonsus de Liguori, Ibid., p. 307.
- [223] de Liguori, op. cit., p. 307.
- [224] Commentator Prefaces to The Book of Psalms, Ch. 18, and The Book of Job, Ch. 8, in the Holy Bible, Douay-Rheims version.
- [225] "In Genesis, the patriarchs, head of the twelve tribes of Israel, are also called stars. And the words of Daniel (VII.10) cannot be restricted to the priests only of the Antiochean persecution but surely embrace all martyrs of that ordeal. If the chosen people of the Old Testament are called stars, much more appropriately so the true believers of the Church of Jesus Christ." Kramer, Rev. Herman Bernard, The Book of Destiny [Rockford, IL: TAN Books & Publishers, 1975. Originally published in 1955 by Buechler Publishing Co., Belleville, IL. Reprinted in 1972 by Apostolate of Christian Action, Fresno, CA from which the 1975 printing was made]: p. 282.
- [226] Apoc. 2: 26-29; 22:16.
- [227] Apoc. 1:20.
- [228] Apoc. 12:1.
- [229] Morrow, Bishop Louis LaRavoire. My Catholic Faith: A Manual in Religion. [Kansas City, MO: Sarto House. Republished from the 1954 edition by Sarto House, January 2000]: p. 396.

PART 9

OCTOBER: THE PROMISED SIGN

[230] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité. The Whole Truth about Fatima: Science and the Facts, Vol. 1. [Buffalo, NY: Immaculate Heart Publications, 1989 English translation copyright by the author]: p.181.

[231] Ibid., p. 262.

[232] de St. Marie, Fr. Joseph (Professor of Theology, Pontifical Faculty of Saint Theresa, Rome). “Our Lady of Fatima is the Fulfillment of Biblical Prophecy.”

[<http://www.worldenslavementorpeace.com/e1cp2.asp>]

[233] Ibid.

[234] Ibid.

[235] “The Hour of Reparation,” Home with God website.

[<http://our.homewithgod.com/sacredheart/sacred4/>]

[236] Vennari, John. The Permanent Instruction of the Alta Vendita .

[Rockford IL: TAN Books and Publishers; Copyright 1999 by the author]: p. 14.

[237] Ibid., p. 38.

[238] de St. Marie, loc. cit.

[239] Ibid.

[240] Gheon, Henri, “The Secret of Saint Margaret Mary,” Secrets of the Saints. [Garden City, NY: Image Books: 1963] Republished on the Catholic Information Network (CIN) website. [<http://www.cin.org/sstmargm.html>]

[241] Ibid.

[242] 2 Thess. 2.

[243] Chojnowski, Dr. Peter. “The Miracle of the Sun as Proclamation of the Universal Queenship of Mary.” Catholic Family News, November 2007: p.16.

[244] de St. Marie, loc. cit.

[245] Eudes, St. John. “Divine Mercy Mirrored in Mary’s Heart,” excerpted from The Admirable Heart of Mary, Part Five, Chapter I.

[246] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité, op. cit., p. 287.

[247] Johnston, Francis. Fatima: The Great Sign. [TAN Books, an imprint of St. Benedict Press, Reprint of the 1980 edition. With Nihil Obstat, Fr.

Vincentius Codina, C.M.F. and Imprimatur, Alberto Cosme de Amartal, Bishop of Fatima]: p. 61.

[248] Sr. Mary Lucia of the Immaculate Heart, Fatima in Lucia's Own Words [Fatima, Portugal: Postulation Centre, 1976]: pp. 172-173.

[249] Ibid.

[250] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité, op. cit., p. 260.

[251] Sr. Maria Lucia of the Immaculate Heart, "Letter on the Rosary," April 12, 1970. Published by S. Martina dos Reis, Uma Vida: pp. 372-373. Cited in Frère Michel, The Whole Truth about Fatima, Vol. 1: p. 284.

[252] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité. The Whole Truth about Fatima: The Secret and the Church, Vol. II. [Buffalo, NY: Immaculate Heart Publications, English translation copyright 1989 by the author]: pp.461-500.

[253] Johnston, op. cit., p. 70.

[254] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité. The Whole Truth about Fatima: Science and the Facts, Vol. 1. [Buffalo, NY: Immaculate Heart Publications, English translation copyright 1983 by the author]: pp.293-294.

[255] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinite, op. cit., p. 292.

[256] Johnston, op cit., pp. 62-63.

[257] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinite, op. cit. pp. 323-324.

[258] Ibid., p. 336.

[259] Johnston, op. cit., p. 63.

[260] Ibid.

[261] Ibid., pp. 63-64.

[262] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinite, op. cit., p. 337-338.

[263] Ibid., p. 339.

[264] Ibid.

[265] Ibid., p. 343.

[266] Johnston, op. cit., p. 64.

[267] Ibid.

[268] Ibid.

[269] Ibid.

[270] Ibid.

[271] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinite, op. cit., p. 340.

[272] Johnston, loc. cit., pp. 69-70.

[273] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinite, loc. cit., p. 356.

[274] Apoc. 12: 1-4. (Douay-Rheims Bible).

[275] Kramer, Rev. Herman Bernard. The Book of Destiny. [Rockford, IL:

TAN Books & Publishers, 1975. Originally published in 1955 by Buechler Publishing Co., Belleville, IL. Reprinted in 1972 by Apostolate of Christian Action, Fresno, CA using entirely new type set under the author's supervision, from which TAN's 1975 printing was made]: p. 275.

[276] Ibid., p. 200.

[277] Mt. 24:3.

[278] Mc. 8:11; Mt. 16:1, as footnoted by Rev. H. Kramer, op. cit.

[279] Lk. 11:16.

[280] Kramer, loc. cit.

[281] For New Testament examples, see Mt. 12: 39; Mt. 24:30; Mt. 26:48; Lk. 2:12., Lk. 2:34; Lk. 11:30; Rom. 4:11; 1 Cor. 14:22; Apoc. 9:4; Apoc. 15:1. There are many others in the Old Testament.

[282] Gen. I: 14.

[283] Kramer, loc. cit.

[284] Pope St. Pius X, Ad Diem Illum Laetissimum (On the Immaculate Conception, Feb. 2, 1904): para. 24.

[285] Pope Pius XII, Munificentissimus Deus (Apostolic Constitution Defining the Dogma of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary, Nov. 1, 1950): para. 27.

[286] Brookby, Peter, ed. Virgin Wholly Marvelous: Praises of Our Lady from the Popes, Councils, Saints, and Doctors of the Church [Cambridge, MA: The Ravengate Press, 1981]. Cited in "Woman Clothed with the Sun," Just for Catholics website in quoting Pope Alexander III as speaking about the virginal conception of Our Lord, the painless birth of Christ, and the Virgin's departure from this life without corruption: "Mary conceived without detriment to her virginity, gave birth to her Son without pain, and departed hence without being subject to corruption."

[<http://www.justforcatholics.org/a131.htm>]

[287] Kramer, op. cit., p. 276.

[288] In the Old Testament, a figure-type is a person, place, thing or event foreshadowing a New Testament archetype (a perfect model or type). The New Testament archetype is always greater than its Old Testament figure-type.

[289] Isa. 7:14.

[290] Jn. 2:4, Jn. 19:26.

[291] Jn. 1:1.

[292] Gen. 3:15.

[293] Pope Pius IX, Ineffabilis Deus (Apostolic Constitution Defining the Dogma of the Immaculate Conception, December 8, 1854): para. 52.

[294] de Montfort, St. Louis. True Devotion to Mary. [Translated from the original French by Fr. Frederick William Faber, D.D. Edited and Annotated by The Fathers of the Company of Mary. Republished in Rockford, IL: TAN Books and Publishers, 1985 from the 1941 copyright edition with Imprimi Potest, Nihil Obstat, and Imprimatur, 1949]: #52.

[295] Authoritative: By the authority of the Catholic Church is meant that the Pope and the bishops, as the lawful successors of the apostles, have power from Christ Himself to teach, to sanctify, and to govern the faithful in spiritual matters. Infallibility of the Church: By the special help of the Holy Ghost, the Church cannot err when it defines a matter of faith or morals to be held by all the faithful. [See Vatican Council I, Session 4, Chapter 4–“The Infallible Teaching Authority of the Roman Pontiff”];

Indefectible; meaning the Church, as Christ founded it, will last until the end of time. [Mt. 16:18; Matt. 28:20; 1 Cor.11:26] For further explanations, see Denzinger, The Sources of Catholic Dogma or The Baltimore Catechism #3, Part One: The Creed, “Lesson 12: The Marks and Attributes of the Church.”

[296] Sr. Mary Lucia of the Immaculate Heart, Fatima in Lucia’s Own Words: Sister Lucia’s Memoirs [Fatima, Portugal: Postulation Center, 1976]: p. 159.

[297] de St. Marie, Fr. Joseph (Professor of Theology, Pontifical Faculty of Saint Theresa, Rome). “Our Lady of Fatima is the Fulfillment of Biblical Prophecy.”

[<http://www.worldenslavementorpeace.com/e1cp2.asp>]

[298] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité, The Whole Truth about Fatima: Science and the Facts, Vol. 1. [Buffalo, NY: Immaculate Heart Publications, 1989]: p. 356.

[299] Jn. 6:30.

[300] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité, op. cit., p.181.

[301] Kramer, op. cit.

[302] Johnston, loc. cit., p. 69. [Emphasis added.]

[303] Pope John Paul II, Sermon at Fatima, May 13, 1982.

[304] Johnston, op. cit., pp. 3-4.

[305] Ibid., p. 4.

[306] Ibid.

[307] Denzinger, Henry. The Sources of Catholic Dogma. [London: B.

Herder Book Co., 1957]: #1790, #1812, #1813.

PART 10
HIDDEN REVELATIONS:
THE STAR OF ESTHER
AND THE SECRETS OF FATIMA

[308] Sunrise and Sunset in Coimbra, timeanddate.com

[<http://www.timeanddate.com/worldclock/astronomy.htm>]

[309] “Last Fatima Witness Sister Lucia Dies at 97.” CathNews.

[<http://www.cathnews.com/news/502/80.php>]

According to the Portuguese news agency Lusa, Sr. Maria Lucia of the Immaculate Heart, born in 1907 as Lucia de Jesus dos Santos, died of old age at the Carmelite convent of St. Teresa of Coimbra in central Portugal, at 5:25 pm local time.

[310] Hebrew Date Converter

[<http://www.hebcal.com/converter/>] Let it be noted that the Gregorian calendar is solar-based, while the Hebrew (or Jewish) calendar is lunar-based. In October of 1582, Pope Gregory XVI advanced the solar calendar date by 11 days. Thus, according to the Gregorian calendar, which is used almost universally, Lucia died on the 13th of February. By the Jewish lunar calendar of 2005, she died on the 4th of Adar II. It is the author’s conjecture, which is submissive to the Church’s ultimate judgment, that God wished to highlight the 13th day of the universal Gregorian calendar, which would call the attention of Catholics familiar with the story of Our Lady of Fatima. However, by calling Lucia’s soul from this life in the Hebrew month of Adar, He also called attention to the sign of the Star of Esther on the robe of Our Lady of Fatima.

[311] Jer. 5:21.

[312] “Timeline: Adar in Jewish History.” Wikipedia.

[<http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Adar>]. Also see “Moses.” Jewish Encyclopedia.

[<http://www.jewishencyclopedia.com/articles/11049-moses>] and Janicki, Tobi. “eRosh Blog: The Birth and Death of Moses.”

[http://ffoz.org/blogs/2008/02/erosh_blog_the_birth_and_death_1.htm]

[313] de Liguori, St. Alphonsus. The Glories of Mary. Fourth Reprint Revised. [Brooklyn, NY: Redemptorist Fathers, 1931]: p. 39.

[314] Stanley, Bob. “Types, Antitypes, Signs and Shadows are Absolutely Indispensable for Proper Scriptural Interpretation.” Catholic Treasure Chest.

[<http://www.thecatholictreasurechest.com/type.htm>]

[315] Lk. 24:27.

[316] Stokes, Jr., John S. "Bible Gardens Revisited." Republished on the Mary Gardens website.

[<http://www.mgardens.org/JS-BGR-MG.html>]

[317] Apoc. 12:1.

[318] Esther 2:7.

[319] "Myrrh...Mor...Mordechai." Excerpts from Philip Goodman, The Purim Anthology. [Philadelphia: Jewish Publication Society, 1988 pages]: 126-27. Jewish Heritage Online Magazine.

[<http://www.jhom.com/calendar/adar/names.html>]

[320] Esther 2:20.

[321] Esther 1:5.

[322] Esther 1:9.

[323] Esther 1:11-12.

[324] Esther 1:19.

[325] Esther 2:1.

[326] Esther 2:8.

[327] Esther 2:12.

[328] Ibid.

[329] Exod. 30: 23.

[330] Esther 2:15-17.

[331] Lk. 1:28.

[332] Lk. 1:3, 2:16.

[333] "Introduction to the Jewish Calendar." JewishGen.

[http://www.jewishgen.org/InfoFiles/m_calint.htm]

[334] "Girls Names." Jewish Literacy.

[http://www.aish.com/literacy/lifecycle/Girls_Names.asp]

[335] "Purim." Wikipedia.

[<http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Purim>]

[336] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité, The Whole Truth about Fatima: Science and the Facts, Vol I. [Buffalo, NY: Immaculate Heart Publications, Revised edition 2003]: 147

[337] Levanon, Rabbi David Dov. "Ester and the Dawn." The Torah World Gateway.

[<http://www.yeshiva.org.il/midrash/shiur.asp>]

[338] Esther 2:19.

- [339] Esther 2: 21-22.
- [340] Esther 2:6.
- [341] Esther 3: 7.
- [342] Esther 3:12.
- [343] “Nergal.” Wikipedia
[<http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Nergal>]
- [344] Esther 4:12, 14.
- [345] Esther 4: 15-17.
- [346] Esther 14: 6-9.
- [347] Esther 7: 5-6.
- [348] Esther 7:23.
- [349] Esther 7: 7-8.
- [350] Esther 10.
- [351] Esther 8:2.
- [352] Esther 11.
- [353] Esther 9: 11-12.
- [354] Esther 13.
- [355] Esther. 7-18.
- [356] Apoc. 13:1.
- [357] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité, op. cit., pp. 158-159.
- [358] Ghéon, Henri. “The Secret of Saint Margaret Mary,” Secrets of the Saints. [Garden City, NY: Image Books, 1963] Republished on the Catholic Information Network (CIN) website.
[<http://www.cin.org/sstmargm.html>]
- [359] Laux, M.A., Fr. John. Church History. [Rockford, IL. TAN Books and Publishers, republished from the original 1930 edition]: pp. 522-526.
- [360] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité, op. cit., pp. 182-183.
- [361] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité. The Whole Truth about Fatima, Vol. II. [Buffalo, NY: Immaculate Heart Publications, Revised edition 2003]: pp. 463-464.
- [362] Ibid., pp. 543-544.
- [363] The Message of Fatima, as issued by the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, June 26, 2000. Vatican website.
[http://www.vatican.va/roman_curia/congregations/cfaith/documents/rc_con_fatima_en.html]

PART 11

FATIMA: THE SIGNS AND TRACES OF HIDDEN THINGS

[364] Eccles. 42:19.

[365] Heb. 2:3-4; Ps. 96: 17; Judg. 6:17; Josh. 24:15-17; Isa. 7:14; Exod. 3:12; Num. 17:20.

[366] Pope Pius XII, Humani Generis (Concerning Some False Opinions Threatening to Undermine Christian Doctrine, August 12, 1950).

[367] The writer here employs as a paraphrase the title of a three-volume book set, referencing the works of Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité, The Whole Truth about Fatima: Volumes I, II, and III.

[368] Kramer, Rev. Herman Bernard. The Book of Destiny. [Rockford, IL: TAN Books & Publishers, 1975. Originally published in 1955 by Buechler Publishing Co., Belleville, IL. Reprinted in 1972 by Apostolate of Christian Action, Fresno, CA using entirely new type set under the author's supervision, from which TAN's 1975 printing was made]: p. 40. [Emphasis added.]

[369] Jurgens, William A. The Faith of the Early Fathers, Vol. One. [Collegeville, MN: The Liturgical Press, 1970]: p. 53.

[370] De Marchi, I. M.C., John. Fatima from the Beginning. [Missões Consolata, Fátima, 1986]: p. 227.

[371] Isa. 7:14.

[372] Gen 3:15.

[373] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité. The Whole Truth about Fatima: The Secret and the Church, Vol. II. [Buffalo, NY: Immaculate Heart Publications, Revised edition 2003]: pp.9-10.

[374] Pope St. Pius X, Our Apostolic Mandate (Letter to the French Bishops and Archbishops on the "Sillon," August 25, 1910): para.11.

[375] Vatican Council I, can. 3.

[376] Pope St. Pius X, op. cit., para. 12-13.

[377] Ibid., para. 39.

[378] Lk. 17:21.

[379] Tob. 12:7.

[380] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité. The Whole Truth about Fatima: Science and the Facts, Vol I. [Buffalo, NY: Immaculate Heart Publications, Revised edition 2003]: p. 145.

[381] Ibid., p. 149.

[382] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité, op. cit.,146.

- [383] de Liguori, St. Alphonsus. The Glories of Mary. Fourth Reprint Revised. [Brooklyn, NY: Redemptorist Fathers, 1931]: p. 39.
- [384] Belloc, Hilaire. Europe and the Faith. [Rockford, IL: Tan Books and Publishers; retypeset and republished 1992. Originally New York: The Paulist Press, 1920]: p. 3.
- [385] Kramer, op cit., p. 17.
- [386] Denzinger. The Sources of Catholic Dogma. “Pius IX,” #1788. [Fitzwilliam, NH: Loreto Publications, 1954]: p. 444.
- [387] Ibid., “Pius XII,” #2293; p. 621.
- [388] Pope, Hugh T. “Angels,” The Catholic Encyclopedia, Vol. 1. [New York: Robert Appleton Company, 1907]
[<http://www.newadvent.org/cathen/01476d.htm>]
- [389] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité, op. cit., pp. 182-183
- [390] The Message of Fatima, as issued by the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, June 26, 2000. Vatican website.
[http://www.vatican.va/roman_curia/congregations/cfaith/documents/rc_con_faith_en.html]
- [391] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité, loc. cit., p. 15.
- [392] Esther 3:1.
- [393] de Montfort, St. Louis. True Devotion to Mary. [Translated from the original French by Fr. Frederick William Faber, D.D. Edited and Annotated by The Fathers of the Company of Mary. Republished in Rockford, IL: TAN Books and Publishers, 1985 from the 1941 copyright edition with Imprimi Potest, Nihil Obstat, and Imprimatur, 1949]: #185-#212.
- [394] Gen. 36: 1-43; Jer. 49: 7-8.
- [395] Exod.17: 14-16.
- [396] Abdias 1.
- [397] Abdias 17.
- [398] Abdias 6.
- [399] Esther 16:11.
- [400] Pope Pius XI, Divini Illius Magistri (On the Christian Education of Youth, December 31, 1929): para.3.
- [401] Gen. 34: 13-31; Jud. 9:1-5; 1 Sam. 18: 17-19; Dan. 6:1-8.
- [402] Lk. 6:16.
- [403] 2 Tim. 3:4.
- [404] Pope St. Pius X, op cit., para: 3.
- [405] Jurgens, op.cit; p.59.

- [406] Culleton, op. cit. p. 6.
- [407] Culleton, loc. cit., pp. 8-9.
- [408] Esther 11: 5-12.
- [409] Esth. 10: 6-12.
- [410] Cant. 4:12.
- [411] Prov. 14: 27; Prov. 16:22; Prov. 18: 4, Jer. 2:13; Cant. 4:12.
- [412] Ps. 1:3; Ps. 124:4; Isa. 32: 1, 2; Isa. 33:21; Jn. 7: 38,39; Apoc. 22: 4-5.
- [413] Ps. 19: 4-7; Mt. 17:2; Mt. 13:43.
- [414] Esther 11: 5-12.
- [415] Apoc. 11: 19.
- [416] St. Augustine. The City of God. "Excerpts on the Two Cities." Medieval Sourcebook website.
[<http://www.fordham.edu/halsall/source/aug-city2.html>]
- [417] Esther 4: 15-17.
- [418] Esther 14: 6-9.
- [419] Esther 16: 3-16.
- [420] Kramer, Fr. Paul. The Devil's Final Battle. [Terryville, CT: The Missionary Association. Copyright Good Counsel Publications, 2002]: pp. 33, 100. Fr. Kramer notes the testimony of "Cardinal Mario Luigi Ciappi, who was nothing less than Pope John Paul II's own personal papal theologian. In a personal communication to a Professor Baumgartner in Salzburg, Cardinal Ciappi revealed that 'In the Third Secret it is foretold, among other things, that the great apostasy in the Church will begin at the top.'"
- [421] Fellows, Mark. Fatima in Twilight. [Niagara Falls, U.S. and Canada: Marmion Publications, 2003]: p. 295.

PART 12

FATIMA AND THE GREAT ET CETERA: TRACES OF THE THIRD SECRET MESSAGE

- [422] Bertone, Cardinal Tarcisio (with Giuseppe De Carli). The Last Secret of Fatima. [New York: Doubleday, English translation copyright 2008]: p.162.
- [423] The Message of Fatima (English edition). Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith. [Vatican City: Liberia Editrice Vaticana, 2000]: p. 43.
- [424] Oestereich, Thomas. "Pope St. Boniface IV." The Catholic Encyclopedia, Vol. 4. [New York: Robert Appleton Company, 1907]
[<http://www.newadvent.org/cathen/02660c.htm>]

[425] “From Antiquity to the Present,” The Basilica of St. Mary of the Angels and the Martyrs Official Website

[http://www.santamariadegliangeliroma.it/paginamastersing.html?codice_url=antiquity_to_present&ramo_home=Basilica&lingua=INGLESE]

[426] Loc cit., “Basilica”

[http://www.santamariadegliangeliroma.it/paginamastersing.html?codice_url=basilica&lingua=INGLESE&ramo_home=Basilica]

[427] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité. The Whole Truth about Fatima, Vol. 1. [Buffalo, NY: Immaculate Heart Publications, Revised edition 2003]: p. 123.

[428] The Message of Fatima, as issued by the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, June 26, 2000. Vatican website.

[http://www.vatican.va/roman_curia/congregations/cfaith/documents/rc_con_fatima_en.html]

[429] Ibid.

[430] Loughlin, James. “Pope Clement XI.” The Catholic Encyclopedia, Vol. 4. [New York: Robert Appleton Company, 1908]

[<http://www.newadvent.org/cathen/04029a.htm>]

[431] “Santa Maria degli Angeli e dei Martiri,” Wikipedia

[http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Santa_Maria_degli_Angeli_e_dei_Martiri]

[432] In January, 1972, CUT, replacing Greenwich Mean Time, introduced a “leap second” at irregular intervals, in which one minute becomes 61 seconds, to compensate for the earth’s slowing rotation. “Coordinated Universal Time,” Wikipedia.

[http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Coordinated_Universal_Time]

[433] “Science with the Clementine Gnomon.” The Basilica of St. Mary of the Angels and the Martyrs Official Website

[http://www.santamariadegliangeliroma.it/paginamastersing.html?codice_url=science_with&ramo_home=La_Meridiana&lingua=INGLESE]

[434] Laux, M.A., Fr. John. Church History. [Rockford, IL: TAN Books and Publishers, republished from 1930 original text]: p. 486.

[435] Please again refer to Part 10 of this book, “Hidden Revelations: The Star of Esther and the Secrets of Fatima.”

[436] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité, op. cit., p. 332.

[437] Just, S.J., Ph.D., Felix. An Overview of Christian History website.

[<http://catholic-resources.org/Courses/Christianity-Gilles.htm>]

[438] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité, op. cit., p. 9.

- [439] O'Laverty, B.A., Fr. Hugh. The Mother of God and Her Glorious Feasts. [Rockford, IL: TAN Books and Publishers. First published between 1908-1915; republished by TAN in 1987]: p. 125.
- [440] Ferrara, Christopher. The Secret Still Hidden. [Pound Ridge, NY: Good Counsel Publications, 2008]: p. 11.
- [441] 1 Thess. 5: 20-23.
- [442] De Marchi, I. M.C., John. Fatima from the Beginning. [Missões Consolata, Fátima, 1986]: p. 227.
- [443] Ferrara, op. cit., p. 14.
- [444] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité. The Whole Truth about Fatima: The Secret and the Church, Vol II. [Buffalo, NY: Immaculate Heart Publications, Revised edition 2003: p. 265.
- [445] Bacchiarello, S.D.B, Fr. J. Forty Dreams of St. John Bosco, the Apostle of Youth. [Rockford, IL: TAN Books and Publishers, 1996. With Nihil Obstat from E. Gutierrez, S.D.B., August 21, 1969 and Imprimatur by Stephan Ferrando, S.D.B., D.D., September 21, 1969]: pp. 205-211.
- [446] The Message of Fatima, Ibid.
- [447] Culleton, Rev. R. Gerald. The Prophets and Our Times. [Rockford, IL: TAN Books and Publishers, 1974; originally published by the author in 1941 and 1943]: p. 216.
- [448] These words call to mind those of Our Lady of Akita on Oct. 13, 1973: "As I told you, if men do not repent and better themselves, the Father will inflict a terrible punishment on all humanity. It will be a punishment greater than the deluge, such as one never seen before. Fire will fall from the sky and will wipe out a great part of humanity, the good as well as the bad, sparing neither priests nor faithful. The survivors will find themselves so desolate that they will envy the dead." The Akita apparitions were approved by Bishop Ito as authentic.
- [449] Stimme Des Glaubens (Voice of Faith), October 1981.
- [450] L'Osservatore Romano, May 12, 1982 edition.
- [451] Des Anges, (Frère) Francois de Mari. Fatima: Intimate Joy World Event, Book IV: Fatima: Tragedy and Triumph. [Buffalo, NY: Immaculate Heart Publications, 1994]: pp. 167-168.
- [452] Ibid., March 26, 1984 edition.
- [453] Jesus Magazine, November 11, 1984 issue, p. 79.
- [454] Il Sabato, Rome, March 17, 1990, cited in Ferrara, p. 42.
- [455] Miguel, Aura. Totus Tuus: Il Segreto di Fatima nel Pontificato de

Giovanni Paolo II [Itaca: Castel Bolognese, 2003]: p. 137, cited in Ferrara, p. 43.

[456] English translation by the author (M. Bartold) from the original Italian article by Gian Guido Vecchi, “Le Parole del papa: <<Nonostante la famoso nuvola siami qui...>>,” Corriere della Sera, May 11, 2010.

[457] Alonso, Fr. Joaquin. La verdad sobre el Secreto de Fátima, p. 61; see also The Whole Truth about Fatima, Vol. III, p. 684, cited in Ferrara, p. 19.

[458] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité, op. cit., pp. 749-750.

[459] Pope Innocent III, Fourth Lateran Council, 1215; Pope Boniface VIII, the bull Unam Sanctam, 1302; Pope Eugene IV, the bull Cantate Domino, 1442.

[460] Socci, Antonio. Il Quarto Segreto di Fatima (The Fourth Secret of Fatima), p. 82, cited in Ferrara, op. cit., p. 223.

[461] 2 Thess 2:3.

[462] Vennari, John. “A Colossal Monument to Diabolic Disorientation.” Catholic Family News, November 2007.

[463] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité, loc. cit.

[464] Pope St. Pius X, E Supremi (On the Restoration of All Things in Christ, October 4, 1903): para. 14.

[465] Chautard, O.C.S.O., Dom Jean-Baptiste. The Soul of the Apostolate. [Garden City, NY: Image Books, 1961]: p.17.

PART 13

OUR LADY OF AKITA

AND THE THIRD SECRET OF FATIMA

[466] Catholic World News, October 11, 2001. In 1998, Howard Dee, the former Philippine ambassador to the Vatican, revealed that “Bishop Ito was certain Akita was an extension of Fatima, and Cardinal Ratzinger personally confirmed to me that these two messages are essentially the same.”

[467] Fellows, Mark. Fatima in Twilight. [Niagara Falls, U.S. and Canada: Marmion Publications, 2003]: p. 295.

[468] Alonso, Fr. Joaquin. La verdad sobre el Secreto de Fatima, pp. 110-112. Cited in Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité, The Whole Truth about Fatima, Vol. III. [Buffalo, NY: Immaculate Heart Publications, Revised edition 2001]: p. 503.

[469] Ibid., p. 508.

[470] Ibid., p. 504.

- [471] Ibid., p. 505. [Emphasis added.]
- [472] Ibid., p. 505. [Emphasis added.]
- [473] Ibid., pp. 503-505. [Emphasis added.]
- [474] Ibid., p. 506. [Emphasis added.]
- [475] Jesus Magazine, November 11, 1984 issue, p. 79. [Emphasis added.]
- [476] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité, op. cit., pp. 507-508.
- [477] Holweck, Frederick. "Feast of the Most Pure Heart of Mary." The Catholic Encyclopedia, Vol. 10. [New York: Robert Appleton Company, 1911.]
- [<http://home.newadvent.org/cathen/10600a.htm>]
- [478] Agência Nacional de Informação.
- [479] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité, op. cit., p. 578.
- [480] Ibid., p. 509.
- [481] Ferrara, Christopher. The Secret Still Hidden. [Pound Ridge, NY: Good Counsel Publications, 2008]: p. 35.
- [482] Pope Paul VI, June 29, 1972 (Feast of St. Peter and Paul).
- [483] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité, op. cit., p. 778. Bishop Venancio's pastoral letter stated, "Fatima has not yet said its last word...Neither has Fatima come to give reason to the prophets of imaginary world catastrophes. Fatima cannot be reduced to sensational prophecies of frightful wars...We affirm that Fatima is something much more serious than all that. Fatima, really, in this too, 'actualizes' the whole evangelical meaning of a Church launched eschatologically towards a future which is, to be sure, most assuredly in God's hands, but which, however, is continually threatened by the mystery of iniquity 'which is already at work.'" (II Thess. 2, 7).
- [484] Alonso, op. cit., p. 70. Cited in Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité, The Whole Truth about Fatima, Vol. III, p. 687.
- [485] Alonso, Fr. Joaquin. The Secret of Fatima: Fact and Legend. Cited in Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité, The Whole Truth about Fatima, Vol. III, p. 705.
- [486] "Sr. Agnes Sasagawa," EWTN Online
[<http://www.ewtn.com/library/MARY/AKITA.HTM>]
- [487] "Our Lady of Akita," Holy Mother Mary website.
[<http://www.holymothermary.org/apparitions/akita.htm>]
- [488] Ibid.
- [489] "A Terrible Warning: The Message of Our Lady of Akita (1973-1981)." Our Lady of the Rosary Library.

[<http://www.olrl.org/prophecy/akita.shtml>]

[490] “Our Lady of Akita,” Ibid.

[<http://www.holymothermary.org/apparitions/akita.htm>]

[491] The Message of Fatima, as issued by the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, June 26, 2000. Vatican website.

[http://www.vatican.va/roman_curia/congregations/cfaith/documents/rc_con_fatima_en.html]

[492] “Our Lady of Akita,” loc.cit.

[493] Stimme Des Glaubin (Voice of Faith), October 1981.

[494] Lk. 21:25-26.

[495] Apoc. 8: 8-11.

[496] Dupont, Yves. Catholic Prophecy: The Coming Chastisement.

[Rockford IL, TAN Books and Publishers, 1973]: pp. 16-17.

[497] Ibid., p. 108.

[498] Eccles. 42:19.

[499] Online Etymology Dictionary. See Myrrh: O.E. myrre, from L.

[<http://www.etymonline.com/index.php?l=m&p=26>]

[500] Fellows, Mark. Fatima in Twilight. [Niagara Falls, U.S. and Canada: Marmion Publications, 2003]: p. 295.

[501] The Message of Fatima, Ibid.

[502] “Our Lady of Akita,” loc. cit.

[503] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinite, op. cit., p. 364.

[504] Culleton, Rev. R . Gerald. The Reign of Antichrist: A Sourcebook of Catholic Prophecies About “The Man of Sin.” [Rockford, IL: TAN Books and Publishers, 1974; originally issued in 1951]: pp. 6-7.

[505] Ps. 19:4-7; Matt. 17:2; Matt. 13:43.

[506] “Our Lady of Akita,” loc. cit.

[507] Prayer of St. Ambrose.

PART 14

WHEN POPE BENEDICT XVI REVEALED:

THE THIRD SECRET IS SPOKEN

[508] Bartold, Marianna. “Pope Benedict on the Third Secret: ‘It is Spoken,’” Keeping It Catholic–The Blog!, May 27, 2010.

[<http://keepingitcatholic.blogspot.com/2010/05/pope-benedict-on-third-secret-it-is.html>]

[509] Allen, Jr., John L. “On the Crisis, Benedict Changes the Tone.”

National Catholic Reporter website May 11, 2010.

[<http://ncronline.org/blogs/examining-crisis/crisis-benedict-xvi-changes-tone>]

[510] Vecchi, Gian Guido. “Le Parole del papa: ‘Nonostante la famosa nuvola siami qui...’”. Corriere della Sera, May 11, 2010 issue.

[511] Please note that, in order to make better sense of the exact English-language translation, bracketed words or phrases in my translation indicate either an alternative meaning of the preceding word or phrase, or a necessary grammatical English structure not explicitly expressed in the original Italian.

[512] English translation by the author (M. Bartold) from the original Italian article by Gian Guido Vecchi, “Le Parole del papa: <<Nonostante la famoso nuvola siami qui...>>,” Corriere della Sera, May 11, 2010. [Emphasis added] The original inquiry, in Italian, was phrased as follows: “Santità, quali significato hanno oggi per noi le apparizioni di Fatima? E quando lei presentò il testo del Terzo segreto, nella stampa vaticana, nel giugno 2000, le fu chiesto se il messaggio poteva essere esteso, al di là dell’attentato a Giovanni Paolo II, anche alle altre sofferenze dei papi. È possibile secondo lei, inquadrare anche in quella visione le sofferenze della Chiesa di oggi per i peccati degli abusi sessuali sui minori?”

[513] English translation by the author (M. Bartold) from the original Italian article by Gian Guido Vecchi, loc. cit. Pope Benedict’s original response, in Italian, was phrased as follows: “Oltre questa grande visione della sofferenza del Papa, che possiamo in sostanza riferire a Giovanni Paolo II sono indicate realtà del futuro della Chiesa che man mano si sviluppano e si mostrano. Cioè è vero che oltre il momento indicato nella visione, si parla, si vede la necessità di una passione della Chiesa, che naturalmente si riflette nella persona del Papa, ma il Papa sta nella Chiesa e quindi sono sofferenze della Chiesa che si annunciano.”

[514] Vennari, John. “Pope Resurrects Third Secret.” Posted on Catholic Family News website, May 19, 2010, and subsequently published in the June issue of Catholic Family News. [Emphasis added.]

[<http://www.cfnews.org/b16-3rd-sec.htm>]

[515] Pope Pius X, “Pascendi Dominici Gregis” (On the Doctrines of the Modernists, September 8, 1907): para. 3.

[516] “The Message of Fatima,” as issued by the Sacred Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, June 26, 2000.

[517] Cardinal Ratzinger, who became Pope Benedict XVI, was interviewed by Vittorio Messori on August 15, 1984. It was on this date that he disclosed that he had indeed read the Third Secret, although he never stated when he read it, so he may have known of its contents a number of years before the 1984 interview. The August 1984 interview was later published in Jesus magazine, November 1984, p. 79.

[518] “The Message of Fatima,” loc. cit.

[519] Socci, Antonio. The Fourth Secret of Fatima. [Loreto Publications: Fitzwilliam, NH, 2009]: p. 33.

[520] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité. The Whole Truth about Fatima, The Secret and the Church, Vol. II. [Buffalo, NY: Immaculate Heart Publications, English translation copyright 1989]: pp. 281-282.

[521] Walsh, William Thomas. Our Lady of Fatima [Image Book published by Doubleday: May 1990, reprinted from the first Image edition published in 1954 by special arrangement with The Macmillan Company.]: p. 221. [Emphasis added.]

[522] Sister Mary Lucia of the Immaculate Heart, Fatima in Lucia’s Own Words: Sister Lucia’s Memoirs [Fatima, Portugal: Postulation Centre, 1976]: p. 165.

[523] Pope Pius X, loc. cit., para. 1.

[524] The details of these events are fully documented in the monumental works of Frère Michel, The Whole Truth about Fatima, Volumes I, II, and III. One particular example of Bishop de Silva’s refusal is found in Vol. II, The Secret and the Church [Buffalo, NY: Immaculate Heart Publications, Revised Edition 2001]: p. 40.

[525] Matt. 16:18.

[526] Fenton, Msgr. Joseph Clifford. “The Meaning of the Name ‘Church.’” The American Ecclesiastical Review, Vol. CXXXI, No. 4, October 1954: p. 272.

[527] Ps. 126:1.

[528] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité. The Whole Truth about Fatima: The Third Secret, Vol. III. [Buffalo: New York, Revised edition published 2001]: p. 710. [Emphasis added.]

[529] Ibid.

[530] Loc. cit., p. 351, footnote 39.

[531] Ratzinger, Cardinal Joseph as quoted by Vittorio Messori, “Here is Why the Faith is in Crisis,” Jesus Magazine, November 11, 1984: p. 79. [Emphasis added.]

[532] Lk. 21: 6-11. [Emphasis added.]

[533] Apoc. 1:11.

[534] Catholic World News, October 11, 2001. Howard Dee, the former Philippine ambassador to the Vatican, revealed in 1998 that “Bishop Ito was certain Akita was an extension of Fatima, and Cardinal Ratzinger personally confirmed to me that these two messages are essentially the same.”

[535] Pope: we would be mistaken to think that Fatima’s prophetic message is complete, Asia News, May 13, 2010.

[<http://www.asianews.it/news-en/Pope:-we-would-be-mistaken-to-think-that-Fatima%C3%A2%E2%82%AC%E2%84%A2s-prophetic-mission-is-complete-18398.html>]

[536] de Montfort, St. Louis. True Devotion to Mary. [Translated from the original French by Fr. Frederick William Faber, D.D. Edited and Annotated by The Fathers of the Company of Mary. Republished in Rockford, IL: TAN Books and Publishers, 1985 from the 1941 copyright edition with Imprimi Potest, Nihil Obstat, and Imprimatur, 1949]: p. 34.

[537] St. Louis-Marie de Montfort was canonized on July 20, 1947 by Pope Pius XII.

[538] Pope Pius XII, A.A.S., 39, 413.

[539] Museo San Pio X website.

[<http://www.museosanpiox.it/>]

[540] From editor’s brief introductory chapter, “About True Devotion to Mary,” added to St. Louis de Montfort, op. cit., p. xiii.

[541] Sister Mary Lucia of the Immaculate Heart, Fatima in Lucia’s Own Words: Sister Lucia’s Memoirs [Fatima, Portugal: Postulation Centre, 1976]: p. 163.

[542] Pope St. Pius X, Pascendi Dominici Gregis (On the Doctrines of the Modernists, Sept. 8, 1907).

[543] The Message of Fatima (English edition). Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith. [Vatican City: Liberia Editrice Vaticana, 2000]: p. 43.

[544] Fr. Faber in St. Louis de Montfort, loc. cit., Preface, p. xix.

[545] From editor’s brief introductory chapter entitled “About True Devotion to Mary,” added to St. Louis de Montfort, Ibid., p. xx.

[546] See Antonio Socci, The Fourth Secret of Fatima and Christopher Ferrara, The Secret Still Hidden.

[547] From editor’s brief introductory chapter entitled “About True Devotion to Mary,” added to St. Louis de Montfort, loc. cit., p. xx.

[548] From editor’s brief introductory chapter entitled “About True Devotion to Mary,” added to St. Louis de Montfort, loc. cit., p. xii.

[549] Brother François de Marie des Anges of the Little Brothers of the Sacred Heart. The Whole Truth of Fatima, Vol. IV.

[<http://www.catholicvoice.co.uk/fatima4/>] On May 17, 1960, the “Bishop of Leiria, Msgr. Joao Venancio, launched an appeal to all the bishops of the world, inviting them to organise [sic] days of prayer and penance on October 12 and 13, in union with the pilgrims to the Cova da Iria, in a spirit of reparation and consecration to the Holy Hearts of Jesus and Mary... About three hundred bishops responded to his appeal. This was scarcely fifteen per cent of the world episcopate. Nevertheless their letters indicated that, in numerous countries, people would be uniting themselves with the ardent supplications of the pilgrims in Fatima.”

[550] de Montfort, op. cit., p. 11.

[551] Ibid., p. 14.

[552] Ibid., p. 21.

[553] Ibid., p. 25.

[554] St. Bernard, cited by St. Alphonsus de Liguori, The Glories of Mary. [Brooklyn, NY: The Redemptorist Fathers, 1931], p. 73.

[555] de Montfort, op. cit., p. 28.

[556] Ibid., p. 29.

[557] Ibid., p. 30.

[558] Ibid.

[559] Ibid., all quotes from this point are found on pp. 32-35.

[560] de Montfort, Ibid., p. 35.

PART 15

FATIMA’S FOREMOST REQUEST

[561] “Imagem de Nossa Senhora de Fátima será levada à Jornada Mariana a pedido do Papa,” Santuário de Fátima website.

[<http://www.santuario-fatima.pt/portal/index.php?id=66425>; English translation posted on the Rorate Caeli blog, “In October, at the Vatican, Pope Francis will consecrate the world to the Immaculate Heart of Mary,” <http://rorate-caeli.blogspot.com/2013/08/in-october-at-vatican-pope-francis-will.html>]

[562] “Pope Francis to Consecrate the World to Mary’s Immaculate Heart.” Catholic News Agency.

[<http://www.ncregister.com/daily-news/pope-francis-to-consecrate-the-world-> to-marys-immaculate-heart#ixzz2f2YIGp80]

[563] “Santa Messa Celebrata Dal Santo Padre Francesco Per La ‘Giornata Mariana’ in Occasione dell’Anna Della Fede.” News. VA, Official Vatican Network.

[<http://www.news.va/it/news/151094>]

[564] Bertone, Cardinal Tarcisio, with De Carli, Guiseppe. The Last Secret of Fatima. [New York: Doubleday, English translation copyright 2008.

Originally published in Italy as L’Ultima veggente di Fatima by RCS Libri S.p.A., Milan, in 2007. Copyright 2007 by RCS Libri S. p A., Milano. This edition published by arrangement with RCS Libri S.p.A.]: p. 83.

[565] Pope: we would be mistaken to think that Fatima’s prophetic message is complete, Asia News, May 13, 2010.

[<http://www.asianews.it/news-en/Pope:-we-would-be-mistaken-to-think-that-Fatima%C3%A2%E2%82%AC%E2%84%A2s-prophetic-mission-is-complete-18398.html>]

[566] Pope Pius XII, Radio Message to Fatima, May 13, 1946, Bendito seia, AAS 38.266. [Emphasis added]

[567] Joyce, George. “The Pope.” The Catholic Encyclopedia, Vol. 12. [New York: Robert Appleton Company, 1911]

[<http://www.newadvent.org/cathen/12260a.htm>].

[568] Joyce, Ibid. [Emphasis added.]

[569] Van Hove, Alphons. “Bishop.” The Catholic Encyclopedia, Vol. 2. [New York: Robert Appleton Company, 1907]

[<http://www.newadvent.org/cathen/02581b.htm>]

[570] Schulte, Augustin Joseph. “Consecration.” The Catholic Encyclopedia. [Vol. 4. New York: Robert Appleton Company, 1908]

[<http://www.newadvent.org/cathen/04276a.htm>]. [Emphasis added.]

[571] Sharkey, Don. The Woman Shall Conquer. [Kenosha, WI: Prow Books/Franciscan Marytown Press, revised 1976]: Backcover.

[572] Tolkien, J.R.R., The Fellowship of the Ring. [New York: Ballantine Books, published by arrangement with the Houghton Mifflin Company, 1982]: p.323.

[573] Pope Pius IX, bulla Ineffabilis Deus (The Immaculate Conception, December 8, 1854). Cited by Pope Pius XII, Ad Caeli Reginum (On Proclaiming the Queenship of Mary, Oct. 11, 1954): para. 50. [Emphasis added.]

[574] “Our Lady of Akita,” Holy Mother Mary website.

[<http://www.holymothermary.org/apparitions/akita.htm>]

[575] Blessed Pius IX, Ibid., para. 42.

[576] Pope Leo XIII, Adiutricem (On the Rosary. Sept. 5, 1895), para. 11.

[577] Pope Pius XII, Ingruentium Malorum (On Reciting the Rosary, Sept. 15, 1951), para. 6.

[578] de Liguori, St. Alphonsus. Le glorie de Maria (The Glories of Mary), p. I, c. I, §1. Cited by Blessed Pius IX, Ad Caeli Reginum, para. 25.

[579] Pope Pius XII, Ad Caeli Reginum (On Proclaiming the Queenship of Mary, Oct. 11, 1954): para. 51.

[580] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité, The Whole Truth about Fatima: Science and the Facts, Vol I. [Buffalo, NY: Immaculate Heart Publications, Revised edition 2003]: pp. 182-183.

[581] Ibid., p. 182.

[582] Eudes, St. John. The Admirable Heart of Mary. [Buffalo, NY: Immaculate Heart Publications, under license from Loreto Publications, Fitzwilliam, NH]: p.101.

[583] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité, The Whole Truth about Fatima, Vol. II. [Buffalo, NY: Immaculate Heart Publications, Revised edition 2003]: pp. 543.

[584] Culleton, Rev. R. Gerald. The Prophets and Our Times [Rockford, IL: TAN Books and Publishers, 1974. Originally published by the author in 1941 and 1943]: p. 151.

[585] Apoc. 12:1.

[586] de Montfort, St. Louis. The Secret of Mary. [Bay Shore, NY: Montfort Publications, Revised Edition, 1993. With Imprimi potest, Nihil Obstat, and Imprimatur, June 1947]: p. 35.

[587] Eudes, op. cit., p. 42.

[588] St. Ambrose, cited in The Sunday Sermons of the Great Fathers. [<http://books.google.com/books?id=MCX6nTwu8U8C>].

Also see SS. Peter and Paul Roman Catholic Mission.

[http://www.saintspeterandpaulrcm.com/weekly_bulletin.htm] [Emphasis added.]

[589] Pope St. Pius X. Discourse on the Beatification of St. Joan of Arc. Cited by Rev. Denis Fahey, C.S. SP., B.A., D. PH., D.D., The Kingship of Christ: According to the Principles of St. Thomas Aquinas [Palmdale, CA: Christian Book Club of America, 1990 republication. First published in 1931.]: p.164.

PART 16
THE AGE OF MARY AND THE LOST MEANING OF CONVERSION

- [590] Sharkey, Don. The Woman Shall Conquer. [Kenosha, WI: Prow Books/Franciscan Marytown Press, 1976]: p. 5.
- [591] Guldner, Benedict. "Conversion." The Catholic Encyclopedia, Vol. IV. [New York: Robert Appleton Company, 1908]
- [592] Chautard, O.C.S.O., Dom Jean-Baptiste. The Soul of the Apostolate. [Garden City, NY: Image Books, 1961]: p. 34.
- [593] Garrigou-Lagrange, Fr. Reginald. The Three Conversions in the Spiritual Life [Rockford, IL: TAN Books and Publishers, 1977. Reprinted from the original; copyright 1938 by Burnes Oates & Washbourne Ltd.]: p. 1.
- [594] Garrigou-Lagrange, Fr. Reginald. The Three Ages of the Interior Life, Volume Two [Rockford, IL: TAN Books and Publishers. Reprinted from the original; copyright 1948 by B. Herder Book Co., St. Louis and London]: p. 21.
- [595] Lagrange, op. cit., p. 15.
- [596] Ibid., p. 16.
- [597] Ibid., p. 17.
- [598] Chautard, op. cit., p. 28.
- [599] Ibid., p. 42.
- [600] de Montfort, St. Louis Marie. The Secret of Mary. [Bay Shore, NY: Montfort Publications, Revised Edition 1993]: p.11.
- [601] Eudes, St. John. The Admirable Heart of Mary. [Buffalo, NY: Immaculate Heart Publications, under license from Loreto Publications, Fitzwilliam, NH]: p. 3.
- [602] 1 Cor. 12, 27; Eph. 5, 30. Cited by St. John Eudes, Ibid.
- [603] Eudes, loc.cit.
- [604] Ibid., p. 4.
- [605] St. Bonaventure notes this law, which refers to the way God provided Divine Revelation to make ready the human race for His "undoing of the awful consequences of Original Sin, taken in conjunction with man's response to God's overtures." Also see Smith, D.D., Ph.D., Canon George D. The Teaching of the Catholic Church: A Summary of Catholic Doctrine, Vol. I [New York: The MacMillan Co., 1959]: p.115.
- [606] Jer. 31:22.

- [607] Eudes, loc. cit., p. 4.
- [608] Ibid., p. 5.
- [609] 2 Cor. 4, 15.
- [610] Eudes, St. John. The Admirable Heart of Mary. [Buffalo, NY: Immaculate Heart Publications, under license from Loreto Publications, Fitzwilliam, NH]: p. 80.
- [611] Chandlery, S.J., P.J. Mary's Praise on Every Tongue. [London: Manresa Press, 1919]. Archived at <https://archive.org/details/maryspraise00chanuoft>
- [612] St. Alphonsus de Liguori, The Glories of Mary. [Brooklyn, NY: The Redemptorist Fathers, 1931]: p. 287.
- [613] Smith, D.D., Ph.D., Canon George D. The Teaching of the Catholic Church: A Summary of Catholic Doctrine, Vol. I. [New York: The MacMillan Co., 1959]: p.526.
- [614] de Liguori, loc.cit.
- [615] Aquinas, St. Thomas. The Summa Theologica. Second and Revised Edition, 1920. First Part of the Second Part, Question 85.
- [616] de Liguori, loc.cit.
- [617] 1 Cor. 15: 44-49.
- [618] Rom. 5:14,17.
- [619] Smith, op.cit., p. 523.
- [620] St. Ephrem, Op. Syr., tom.ii, p. 325. Cited by Canon Smith, op. cit., p. 531.
- [621] Smith, op.cit., p. 524
- [622] Ibid., p. 528. [Emphasis added.].
- [623] de Liguori, op.cit., p. 303.
- [624] Gen. 2:21-22.
- [625] Jn. 1:14.
- [626] St. Bernard, Sermo de Duodecim praerogativis B.V.M., I, 2. Cited by Smith, op.cit., p. 530.
- [627] Ps. 25:8.
- [628] Gen. 3:15.
- [629] Smith, op.cit., p. 526.
- [630] De Verbo Incarnato, p. 401 (Rome, 1912). Cited by Smith, op.cit., p. 530.
- [631] O'Laverty, B.A., Fr. H. The Mother of God and Her Glorious Feasts. [Rockford, IL: TAN Books and Publishers, 1987; republished from the 1908-1915 edition]: p. 4.

[632] Ibid.

[633] Smith, loc.cit.

[634] Jn. 8:58.

[635] Haer. V.19

[636] Gen. 3:20.

[637] St. Proclus, Patriarch of Constantinople (d. 446), Orat. 6. Cited by P.J. Chandlery, S.J., op. cit., Section IX.

[638] Lk. 1:38.

[639] The dogma that Mary is Theotokos, because Her Son Jesus is one Person but with two natures (divine and human; the hypostatic union), was formally defined at the Third Ecumenical Council of Ephesus in 431 A.D.

[640] Lk. 2:7.

[641] Matt. 2:11.

[642] de Montfort, op. cit., #49.

[643] Ibid.

[644] Sharkey, Don. The Woman Shall Conquer. [Kenosha, WI: Prow Books/Franciscan Marytown Press, 1976]: pp.16-17.

[645] Ibid., p. 25.

[646] The Seven Sorrows (Dolors) of Mary, once celebrated in the Church twice a year, are symbolized as seven mystical swords piercing the Immaculate Heart. In 1727, the feast day was added to the Roman Calendar on the Friday before Palm Sunday. It was also commemorated on the third Sunday of every September, until 1913 when Pope St. Pius X moved the feast to September 15, immediately following the Feast of the Holy Cross on September 14th, emphasizing the connection between Our Lord's Passion and Our Lady of Sorrows.

[647] Trochu, Abbé Francois. St. Bernadette Soubirous: 1844-1879.

[Rockford, IL: TAN Books and Publishers, 1985. Translated and adapted by John Joyce, S.J. First published in France under the same title by Librairie Catholique Emmanuel Vitte, Paris, 1954. English edition copyright 1957 by Longmans, Green and Co. Ltd., London. Published by TAN in arrangement with Longman Group Limited, London. Nihil Obstat and Imprimatur, June 21, 1957]: p. 346.

[648] Ibid.

[649] Morrow, Bishop Louis LaRavoire. My Catholic Faith: A Manual in Religion. [Kansas City, MO: Sarto House. Republished from the 1954 edition by Sarto House, January 2000]: p. 85.

[650] Ibid., p.83.

[651] BENEDICT XIV, De servorum Dei beatificatione et beatorum canonizatione, chs. xxxi-xxxviii, in Opera omnia, III (Prato, 1840); DEVINE, Manual of Mystical Theology (London, 1903); SLATER, A Manual of Moral Theology (London, 1908); WILHELM AND SCANNELL, Manual of Catholic Theology (London, 1906). Cited by Wilhelm, Joseph. "Heroic Virtue." The Catholic Encyclopedia, Vol. 7. [New York: Robert Appleton Company, 1910. Accessed June 6, 2014.

[<http://www.newadvent.org/cathen/07292c.htm>].

[652] Trochu, op cit., p. 17.

[653] "Divine Mysteries: The Four Cardinal Virtues: Prudence, Justice, Fortitude, and Temperance," Legion of Mary website.

[<http://www.legionofmarytidewater.com/news/news07/may/divinemysteries.h>

[654] Matt. 5:3.

[655] Trochu, op. cit., p. 36.

[656] Ibid.

[657] Bones were used "for knife handles, toys and ornaments, and when treated, for chemistry. The grease extracted from them was also useful for soap-making." Rag-and-bone man, Wikipedia.

[http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Rag-and-bone_man]

[658] Foley, Donal Anthony. Marian Apparitions, the Bible, and the Modern World. [Herefordshire, England: Gracewing, 2002. Nihil Obstat and Imprimatur]: p. 159.

[659] Trochu, op. cit., p. 42.

[660] Loc. cit., pp. 42-43.

[661] Loc. cit., p. 44.

[662] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité, The Whole Truth about Fatima, Vol. III. [Buffalo, NY: Immaculate Heart Publications, Revised Edition 2001]: pp. 507-508.

[663] A fortnight is 15 consecutive days.

[664] Trochu, op. cit., p. 63.

[665] McEachern, Ph.D., Patricia A. A Holy Life: The Writings of St. Bernadette of Lourdes. [San Francisco, CA: Ignatius Press, 2005. Kindle Edition]: Loc. 116.

[666] Foley, op. cit., p. 160.

[667] McEachern, op. cit., Loc. 2354.

[668] Ibid., Loc. 573.

[669] Op. cit., Loc. 284.

[670] Op. cit., Loc. 330.

[671] Op cit., Loc. 542.

[672] Sharkey, op. cit., p. 57.

[673] “The Story of the Pilgrimage.” Sanctuary of Pontmain website.

[<http://sanctuaire-pontmain.com/en/1-01.html>]

[674] Sharkey, loc. cit. It will be noted that all direct quotes and pertinent facts about the Pontmain apparition are taken from the same work (pp.57-63), with supplemental information from the Sanctuary of Pontmain website at [<http://sanctuaire-pontmain.com/en/index.html>]

[675] A year later, on Candlemas (Feb. 2, 1872), the bishop of Laval confirmed the apparition as supernatural, also approving devotion to Notre Dame d’Espérance de Pontmain (Our Lady of Hope of Pontmain). As Sharkey, op. cit, further explains: “The Barbedette barn was converted into an oratory. A great twin-spired church rose on the spot of the apparition, and pilgrims went there in great numbers. As is usual in places where a true apparition from Heaven occurs, cures and conversions took place.”

[676] The Prussians, only a few short miles away, never reached Pontmain. For inexplicable reasons, they turned back. The armistice, a prelude to a peace treaty, was signed on January 27, 1871, exactly ten days after the Pontmain apparition. Paris surrendered the next day, and eventually The Treaty of Frankfurt was signed May 19, 1871. France, under Napoleon III, initiated the war with Prussia (Germany) and lost it, paying a heavy indemnity, but the bloodshed was over.

[677] Eudes, op. cit., pp. 73.

[678] Ibid. [Emphasis added.]

[679] Ibid.

[680] Ibid.

[681] Ibid, pp. 73-74.

[682] Ibid.

[683] Ibid.

[684] Tolkien, J.R.R. The Fellowship of the Ring. [New York: Ballantine Books, 1982 renewed copyright by Christopher R. Tolkien]: p. 444. Here the author paraphrases a line uttered by the character of Lady Galadriel, the Mary-like figure who gave to Frodo a gift of the Evening Star’s light, saying to him, “May it be a light to you in dark places, when all other lights go out.”

[685] Mary of Nazareth website.

[<http://www.mariedenazareth.com/7955.0.html?&L=1>]

[686] Faguet, Constance Estelle. Mary All Merciful—Our Lady of Pellevoisin. [Outremont near Montreal: Juvenile of the Clerics of St. Viator, ca.1900; Imprimatur 1898]. Edited by the rector of Pellevoisin, Arthème A. Salmon. Contains also the statutes of the Archconfraternity of Our Lady of Pellevoisin and a Brief of Pope Leo XIII. Main page to access the scanned online book: Early Canadiana Online.

[<http://www.canadiana.org/cgi-bin/ECO/mtq?doc=90956>]: p. 6.

[687] Ibid., p. 57.

[688] Ibid., p. 7.

[689] Sharkey, op. cit., p. 66.

[690] Ibid., p. 67.

[691] Faguet, op. cit., pp. 22-51.

[692] Here the term “Mistress” is defined by its archaic form—i.e., as a courtesy title for a lady who is held in high esteem and possesses great authority. Our Lady was stating, in a simple manner, the great regard which Her Divine Son has for her.

[693] Faguet, op. cit., p.60.

[694] August 21 is now also the eve of the feast of the Immaculate Heart of Mary.

[695] Delaney, John J. A Woman Clothed with the Sun. [New York, NY: Image Book published by Doubleday, 1990]: p. 153.

[696] Ibid., p. 149.

[697] Ibid, p.150.

[698] Ibid., p. 161.

[699] Sharkey, op. cit., p.78.

[700] The Knock Shrine Official Website.

[<http://www.knockshrine.ie/witnesses-accounts>]

[701] Sharkey, loc. cit.

[702] Ibid.

[703] The Knock Shrine, Ibid.

[704] Sharkey, loc. cit., p. 79.

[705] Ibid., p. 83.

[706] Ibid., p. 84.

[707] Jn. 19:27.

[708] St. Ambrose, De Institutione Virginia, c. ix.

[709] Sharkey, loc. cit. The author believed the book held by St. John was a Mass book, but none of the witnesses made that specific statement. They only said a book; in fact, one account said the letters were written in gold. Therefore, it is also possible that the book held by St. John was the Holy Bible and that he was pointing to the Apocalypse, as the Apparition's symbolism strongly indicates.

[710] Jn. 1:29, 1:36.

[711] Apoc.5:6; 5:8; 5:12; 5:13; 6:1; 6:16; 7:9; 7:10; 7:14; 7:17; 12:11; 13:8; 13:11; 14:1; 14:4; 14:10; 15:3; 17:14; 19:7; 19:9; 21:9; 21:14; 21:22; 21:23; 21:27; 22:1; 22:3; 22:14.

[712] Haydock's Catholic Bible Commentary, 1859 edition
[<http://haydock1859.tripod.com/id294.html>]

[713] James, OFM, Rev. Fr. James. "The Story of Knock. The Apparition at Knock, 21st August, 1879." The article was written in 1950 for "Knock Shrine Annual" by the late V. Rev. Fr. James, O.F.M. Cap., M.A., Ph.D., D. Litt., Agrege, Louvain, Professor of Philosophy in University College, Cork. Printed in the Republic of Ireland by FNT-MAYO NEWS. A text edition is archived at

[<http://www.ewtn.com/library/MARY/KNOCK.HTM>]

[714] Haffert, John M. Russia will be Converted. [Washington, NJ: AMI Press, the publishing arm of The Blue Army, 1956]

PART 17

THE DOMINION OF THE KING AND QUEEN

[715] Pope Pius XII, Radio Message to Fatima, May 13, 1946, Bendito seia, AAS 38.266. [Emphasis added.]

[716] Smith, D.D., Ph.D., Canon George D. The Teaching of the Catholic Church: A Summary of Catholic Doctrine, Vol. 1. [New York: The MacMillan Company, 1959]: p. 41.

[717] Herbermann, Charles George. The Catholic Encyclopedia, an International Work of Reference [Universal Knowledge Foundation, 1913. Original from the New York Public Library, digitized August 15, 2006]: p. 219.

[<http://books.google.com/books?id=FmgQAAAAIAAJ>]

[718] St. Bonaventure notes this law, which refers to the way God provided Divine Revelation to make ready the human race for His “undoing of the awful consequences of Original Sin, taken in conjunction with man’s response to God’s overtures.” Also see Smith, D.D., Ph.D., Canon George D. The Teaching of the Catholic Church: A Summary of Catholic Doctrine, Vol. I [New York: The MacMillan Co., 1959]: p.115.

[719] Gen 1:26 [Emphasis added.]

[720] Gen. 3: 22 [Emphasis added.]

[721] Gen. 11:7 [Emphasis added.]

[722] Num. 7: 24-26.

[723] Gen. 3:15.

[724] Ibid.

[725] Jn. 8:58 [Emphasis added]

[726] Jn. 1:1.

[727] Pope Pius XI, Quas Primas (On the Feast of Christ the King, December 11, 1925): para. 7.

[728] Smith, op. cit., p. 63. [Emphasis added.]

[729] Ibid. [Emphasis added.]

[730] Pius XI, Ibid.

[731] Loc cit.

[732] Loc cit. [Emphasis in the original.]

[733] Smith, op. cit., p. 64.

[734] St. Augustine’s Commentary on Ps. CXLIX.

[735] Pope Leo XII, Annum Sacrum, cited by Canon George D. Smith in The Teaching of the Catholic Church: A Summary of Catholic Doctrine, Vol. 1. [New York: The MacMillan Company, 1959]: p. 64.

[736] Lk. 17:21.

[737] Fahey, op cit., pp. 34-35.

[738] Ibid., p. 88.

[739] Ibid., p. 22.

[740] Ibid., p. 25.

[741] Ibid., p. 23.

[742] 1 Cor. 15: 28.

[743] Jn. 1:14.

[744] Matt. 2: 11.

[745] Lk 2:16.

[746] Duffner, O.P., Fr. Paul A. “The Queenship of Mary.” The Rosary Light & Life, Vol. 45, No 4, July-Aug. 1992.

[<http://www.pacifier.com/rosary-center.org/1145n4.htm>]

[747] Apostolic Letter “Inter Sodalicia,” cited by Father Paul A. Duffner in “The Queenship of Mary.”

[748] Pope Pius XI, Allocution to Pilgrims from Vicenza assembled in Rome for the Jubilee of the Redemption, Nov. 30, 1933.

[749] Ibid.

[750] “The Queenship of Mary,” TIME Magazine, November 8, 1954. [<http://www.time.com/time/magazine/article/0,9171,857668,00.html>]

[751] Eudes, St. John. The Admirable Heart of Mary. [Buffalo, NY: Immaculate Heart Publications, under license from Loreto Publications, Fitzwilliam, NH]: p. 107.

[752] Ibid., p. 106.

[753] Ibid., p. 3.

[754] Jn. 2:5.

[755] Verheylezoon, S.J., Fr. Louis. Devotion to the Sacred Heart: Object, Ends, Practice, Motives [Rockford, IL: TAN Books and Publishers, 1978]: p. 52.

[756] Eudes, St. John. The Sacred Heart of Jesus. [New York, NY: P.J. Kenedy and Sons, 1946]: Introduction, xxi.

[757] Migne, Comm. in Cant. Cantico, P.L. 79:499.

[758] Ibid, p. xix.

[759] Ibid.

[760] Cardinal Pie, Oeuvres Episcopales, 3, 37.

[761] Eudes, Ibid., op. cit., Introduction, p. xxvii.

[762] Ibid., p. xxiii.

[763] Ibid, pp. 2, 17.

[764] Ibid, p. 35.

[765] Verheylezoon, op. cit., p. 15.

[766] 1 Cor. 6:20.

[767] Jn. 3:16.

[768] Ibid, p. 26.

[769] Ibid., p. 31.

[770] Aquinas, St. Thomas. Summa Theologica. Part III, q. 25, art. 1.

[771] Eudes, loc. cit, Introduction, p. xxix.

[772] Pope Pius XI, Miserentissimus Redemptor (On Reparation to the Sacred Heart, May 8 1928): para. 15.

[773] Ibid.

[774] Sister Maria Lucia of the Immaculate Heart, Fatima in Lucia's Own Words: Sister Lucia's Memoirs [Fatima, Portugal: Postulation Centre, 1976]: p. 163. [Emphasis added.]

[775] Jn. 14:23.

[776] Jn. 14:15.

[777] Walz, Rev. M. F. Why is Thy Apparel Red? Or Glories of the Precious Blood, [Collegeville, IN: St. Joseph's Printing Office, 1914]: Kindle location 266.

[778] Sr. Maria Lucia of the Immaculate Heart, op. cit., p.156.

[779] Ibid.

[780] Ibid. p. 157.

[781] Walz, op. cit., Kindle location 1490.

[782] Rom. 8:29.

[783] Walz, op. cit., Kindle location 87.

[784] Faber, Fr. Frederick William. The Precious Blood or the Price of Our Salvation. [Baltimore, MD: John Murphy and Co., 1860 reprint, 10th American Edition]: Kindle location 470.

[785] Faber, Ibid.

[786] Waltz, op. cit., Kindle location 109.

[787] Sr. Lucia, op. cit., p. 167.

[788] Ibid.

[789] Vianney, St. Jean Marie. Cited by Fr. Waltz, Kindle location 1486.

[790] Faber, op. cit., Kindle location 914.

[791] Waltz, Loc. 334.

[792] Heb. 9:9.

[793] Faber, op. cit., Kindle location 1686, 1688.

[794] Murphy, John F. "The Immaculate Heart" in Mariology, Vol. III.

[795] "The Traditional Catholic Liturgy," adapted from The Liturgical Year by Abbot Gueranger, Exaltation of the Holy Cross—September 14.

[<http://www.salvemariaregina.info/SalveMariaRegina/SMR-161/Exaltation.html>]

[796] Birley, A.R. "St Helena—Discoverer of the True Cross (250-330)."

[http://www.brown.edu/Research/Breaking_Ground/bios/St.%20Helena_Flavi

[797] There are, of course, variations in the legend and some historians today question every part of its veracity. Consistent in all of them is St. Helen's role in the discovery of the True Cross.

[798] "The Traditional Catholic Liturgy," Ibid.

[799] Meagher, Fr. James L. How Christ Said the First Mass [Rockford, IL: TAN Books and Publishers, Copyright 1906 by Christian Press Association Publishing Co., NY. Reprinted several times, beginning in 1975, by Marian Publications, South Bend, IN]: p. 317.

[800] de Oliveira, Prof. Plinio Corrêa. "The Exaltation of the Holy Cross." Tradition in Action website.

[http://www.traditioninaction.org/SOD/j194sd_ExaltationCross_9-14.html]

[801] Lk. 2: 26-35.

[802] St. Andrew of Crete. "Triumph and Exaltation of the Holy Cross." Crossroads Initiative website.

[http://www.crossroadsinitiative.com/library_article/237/Triumph_and_Exalta]

The website states: "St. Andrew of Crete shows that the feast of the victory and exaltation of the holy cross of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ was celebrated even in the era of the Early Church Fathers. This excerpt from one of St. Andrew's discourses (Oratio 10 in Exaltatione sanctae crucis: PG 97, 1018-1019, 1022-23) is used in the Roman Catholic Office of Readings on September 14, the Feast of the Exaltation of the Holy Cross. The corresponding biblical reading is taken from St. Paul's Letter to the Galatians (Gal 2:19-3:7-14 and 6:14-16)."

[803] Meagher, op. cit., p. 252.

[804] "The Sign of the Cross-III." Traditional Catholicism website.

[<http://traditionalcatholicism83.blogspot.com/2007/05/sign-of-cross-iii.html>]

[805] Morrow, Bishop Louis LaRavoire. My Catholic Faith: A Manual in Religion. [Kansas City, MO: Sarto House. Republished from the 1954 edition by Sarto House, January 2000]: p. 377. [Emphasis in the original]

[806] Prayer from the traditional Stations of the Cross.

[807] Walsh, O.P., Rev. Reginald, Editor. Meditation on the Passion.

[Westminster, MD: The Newman Press, reprinted February, 1963. Compiled from various sources associated with the nuns of the Institute of the Blessed Virgin Mary, with an Introduction by Rev. Reginald Walsh, O.P. Nihil Obstat and Imprimatur, Feb. 23, 1922]: p. 3.

[808] Ibid., p. 6.

[809] Ibid., p. 1.

[810] Ibid., p. v, Introduction.

- [811] 1 Cor. 2:2.
- [812] Walsh, op. cit., p. 5.
- [813] Ibid., p. 4.
- [814] Ibid, p. 5.
- [815] Ibid, p.6.
- [816] Liguori, St. Alphonsus. The 12 Steps to Holiness and Salvation. Subtitled From the Works of St. Alphonsus Liguori. [Adapted from the German of Rev. Paul Leick by Rev. Cornelius J. Warren, C.S.S.R. Boston, MA: Mission Church Press under the title The School of Christian Perfection. Retypeset and published under new title in Rockford, IL: TAN Books and Publishers, 1986]: p. 58.
- [817] St. Terese of Avila. The Interior Castle. [<http://www.sacredtexts.com/chr/tic/tic24.htm>]: p. 226.
- [818] Jer. 8:18.
- [819] Walsh, op. cit., p. 1.
- [820] Liguori, op. cit., p. 193.
- [821] Loc cit., p. 2.
- [822] Thoughts of Saint Therese: The Little Flower of Jesus, Carmelite of the Monastery of Lisieux. [New York: P.J. Kennedy and Sons, 1915. Retypeset in Rockford, IL: TAN Books and Publishers]:p. 82.
- [823] Ibid.
- [824] Col 1: 24.
- [825] Pope Pius XII, Mediator Dei [November 20, 1946]: para.146.
- [826] Liguori, op. cit., p. 193.
- [827] Walsh, op. cit., p. 2.
- [828] Ibid., p. 3.
- [829] Chautard, O.C.S.O, Dom Jean Baptiste. The Soul of the Apostolate [Garden City, NY: Image Books Edition 1961]: p. 228. [Emphasis in the original.]
- [830] Lk. 22: 42.
- [831] Matt 26: 38.
- [832] Matt 26:41.
- [833] Jn. 16: 22.
- [834] "Paul of the Cross." (January 3, 1694–October 18, 1775) Taken from a letter written by St. Paul of the Cross. [http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Saint_Paul_of_the_Cross#An_excerpt_from_a_l]
- [835] Jn. 15:12,14.

- [836] Jn. 15:1.
- [837] Walsh, op. cit., p. v, Introduction.
- [838] 1 Jn. 4: 8-10.
- [839] Gal 2: 20.
- [840] Eccles. 29:19.
- [841] Liguori, op. cit., p. 54.
- [842] Lk. 23: 1-15.
- [843] Jn. 19:17.
- [844] Walsh, O.P., Rev. Reginald, Editor. Meditation on the Passion.
[Westminster, MD: The Newman Press, reprinted February, 1963. Compiled from various sources associated with the nuns of the Institute of the Blessed Virgin Mary, with an Introduction by Rev. Reginald Walsh, O.P. Nihil Obstat and Imprimatur, Feb. 23, 1922]: p. 228.
- [845] Matt. 21: 8-10.
- [846] Matt. 21: 15. [Emphasis added.]
- [847] Matt. 21: 28-46.
- [848] Matt. 22:33.
- [849] Matt. 22: 46.
- [850] Matt. 22:18. See also Matt. 23: 13-15, 23, 25, 27, 29.
- [851] Matt. 23: 16, 24
- [852] Matt. 23: 17.
- [853] Matt. 23: 27.
- [854] Matt. 23: 28.
- [855] Matt. 23: 31-32.
- [856] Matt. 23: 33.
- [857] Matt. 26: 3-5.
- [858] Matt. 27: 24.
- [859] Walsh, loc. cit.
- [860] Ibid.
- [861] Lk. 23: 26.
- [862] Walsh., op.cit., p. 231.
- [863] Ibid.
- [864] Ibid., p. 230.
- [865] Mk. 15:32.
- [866] Lk. 23:39.
- [867] Lk. 23:40-43, [Emphasis added.]
- [868] Lk. 23:43, [Emphasis added.]

- [869] Lk. 23:27.
[870] Walsh, op.cit., p. 231.
[871] Lk. 23: 28-31.
[872] Lk. 23: 50-56.
[873] Walsh, loc.cit.
[874] Ibid.

PART 18
SECRETS OF THE DEVOTION TO THE IMMACULATE HEART

- [875] Schouppe, S.J., Fr. F.X. Purgatory Explained by the Lives and Legends of the Saints [Rockford, IL: TAN Books and Publishers, 1986. Republished from the original 1893 edition]: p. 6.
[876] Ibid., p.7. [Emphasis in the original.]
[877] Ibid.
[878] Ibid., p. 3.
[879] Matt. 5:48
[880] Matt 19: 26.
[881] Ibid.
[882] Schouppe, op cit., p. 4.
[883] Hanna, Edward. "Purgatory." The Catholic Encyclopedia, Vol. 12. [New York: Robert Appleton Company, 1911]
[884] 2 Mach. 12:46.
[885] 2 Mach. 12:43-45.
[886] Zach. 13:9.
[887] "Sermons for the Feast Days of the Year." The Sermons of the Curé of Ars [Long Prairie, MN: The Neumann Press. Republished from the original 1901 edition, 1991]: Part II, p.10.
[888] Matt. 5: 26.
[889] "Sermons for the Feast Days of the Year," op. cit., Part II: p. 11.
[890] Matt. 12: 32.
[891] Morrow, Bishop Louis LaRavoire. My Catholic Faith: A Manual in Religion. [Kansas City, MO: Sarto House. Republished from the 1954 edition by Sarto House, January 2000]:p. 151.
[892] 1 Cor. 3: 11-15. [Emphasis added.]
[893] Hanna, loc. cit.
[894] Apoc. 21:4.

[895] Apoc. 21: 27.

[896] St. Augustine of Hippo, cited by William A. Jurgens, The Faith of the Early Fathers, Vol. 3. [Collegeville, MN: The Liturgical Press, 1979]: p. 149.

[897] “Decree Concerning Purgatory.” The Council of Trent, Session XXV (December 4, 1563). Also see Denzinger, “Enchiridion”, #983.

[898] Sister Mary Lucia of the Immaculate Heart. Fatima in Lucia’s Own Words: Sr. Lucia’s Memoirs [Fatima, Portugal: Postulation Centre, 1976]: p. 161.

[899] Delaney, John J. (Editor). A Woman Clothed with the Sun [New York: Image Edition, published by Doubleday, 1990]: p. 184. [Emphasis added.]

[900] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité, The Whole Truth about Fatima: Science and the Facts, Vol. I. [Buffalo, NY: Immaculate Heart Publications, English translation copyright by the author, 1989]: p. 128.

[901] Lk. 9:23, Matt. 16:24, Mk. 8:34. (paraphrased)

[902] Frère Michel, op. cit., p. 129.

[903] Schouppe, op. cit., Publisher’s Preface, p. xxviii. [Emphasis in the original]

[904] Morrow, op. cit. p. 159.

[905] An indulgence is the remission before God of the temporal punishment due to sins whose guilt has already been forgiven. A plenary indulgence remits all punishment; a partial indulgence remits some part of it. That the Church has the power and authority to grant indulgences is a matter of faith, defined at the Council of Trent, Session XXV, December 4, 1563.

[906] Approval and recommendation signed by M. Cardinal Pahiarca at Lisbon, Portugal, March 4, 1936.

[907] Schouppe, op. cit., Publisher’s Preface, p. xxix.

[908] “Sermons for the Feast Days of the Year,” op. cit., Part II, p. 13. [Emphasis in the original.]

[909] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité, op. cit., pp. 182-183.

[910] Our Lady of the Rosary at Fatima, October 13, 1917, as recorded by the visionary Sr. Mary Lucia of the Immaculate Heart, Fatima in Lucia’s Own Word: Sister Lucia’s Memoirs [Fatima, Portugal: Postulation Center, 1976]: p. 173.

[911] Many Catholics do not know that in an emergency, lay people (Catholic or not) may baptize another with regular water (if holy water is not available), as long as the one baptizing shares the Church’s intent to baptize, the water is poured over the recipient’s forehead, and the proper words are said as the water is administered, “I baptize thee in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.”

[912] Frère Michel, The Whole Truth of Fatima: The Third Secret, Vol. III. [Buffalo, NY: Immaculate Heart Publications, Revised edition 2001]: pp. 20-21.

[913] Sr. Mary Lucia of the Immaculate Heart, op. cit., p. 163.

[914] Pope Pius XII, Radio Message to Fatima, May 13, 1946, Bendito seia, AAS 38.266. [Emphasis added.]

[915] Matt. 2:11.

[916] Lk. 2:16.

[917] St. Bonaventure. Cited by Smith, D.D., Ph.D., Canon George D. The Teaching of the Catholic Church: A Summary of Catholic Doctrine, Vol. I. [New York: The MacMillan Co., 1959]: p.115.

[918] Sr. Mary Lucia of the Immaculate Heart, loc. cit.

[919] St. Bonaventure, loc. cit.

[920] Murphy, John F. Mary’s Immaculate Heart—The Meaning of the Devotion to the Immaculate Heart of Mary. [Milwaukee: The Bruce Publishing Co., 1951]: p. 1.

[921] Herbermann, Charles George. The Catholic Encyclopedia, an International Work of Reference [Universal Knowledge Foundation, 1913. Original from the New York Public Library, digitized August 15,2006]: p. 219.

[922] Gen. 1:26 [Emphasis added.]

[923] Gen. 3:22 [Emphasis added.]

[924] Gen. 11:17 [Emphasis added.]

[925] Num. 6: 24-26.

[926] Mk. 3:17.(The other son of thunder is St. James, the brother of St. John, who was the first Apostle to die as a martyr.)

[927] Butler, Rev. Alban. “December 27, St. John the Apostle and Evangelist.” The Lives of the Saints, Vol. XII: December. Published in 1866. Digitized at Bartleby.com, Great Books Online
[<http://www.bartleby.com/210/12/271.html>]

[928] Jn. 13: 23; Jn. 19:26: Jn. 20:2; Jn. 21:7: Jn. 21: 20.

[929] Jn. 19: 26-27.

[930] Jn. 19:27-28. [Emphasis added.]

[931] de Liguori, St. Alphonsus. The Glories of Mary [Brooklyn, NY: Redemptorist Fathers, Fourth Reprint Revised, 1931]: pp. 25-26.

[932] Deut. 29:29.

[933] Thess. 2:2:14.

[934] de Montfort, St. Louis Marie. True Devotion to Mary. [Translated from the original French by Fr. Frederick William Faber, D.D. Edited and annotated by The Fathers of the Company of Mary. Republished in Rockford, IL: TAN Books and Publishers, 1985, from the 1941 copyright edition with Imprimi Potest, Nihil Obstat, and Imprimatur, 1949): #49.

[935] Mk. 13: 22.

[936] Matt. 24:24. [Emphasis added]

[937] Eph. 6:11. [Emphasis added]

[938] de Montfort, St. Louis. True Devotion to Mary. [Translated from the original French by Fr. Frederick William Faber, D.D. Edited and Annotated by The Fathers of the Company of Mary. Republished in Rockford, IL: TAN Books and Publishers, 1985 from the 1941 copyright edition with Imprimi Potest, Nihil Obstat, and Imprimatur, 1949]: Father Faber's Preface, pp. xix-xxiii.

Father Faber's Preface

[939] On May 12, 1854, Rome decreed that the writings of St. Louis de Montfort were free from all error which could bar his canonization, so that by 1862, Fr. Faber first translated True Devotion from the original French into English.

[940] Faber, Ibid. [Emphasis in the original.]

[941] St. Bonaventure. Cited by Smith, D.D., Ph.D., Canon George D. The Teaching of the Catholic Church: A Summary of Catholic Doctrine, Vol. I [New York: The MacMillan Co., 1959]: p.115.

[942] Garrigou-Lagrange, O.P., Fr. R. The Mother of the Savior and our Interior Life [Charlotte, NC: TAN Books, 1993. Reprinted from 1948 edition by B. Herder Book Company, St. Louis, Missouri]: pp. 130-131.

[943] Pius XII, "Urbis et Orbis," AAS, XXXVII, 1945, p. 50.

[944] St. Ambrose, Commentarius in Cantica Cantic. (PL, 15, 1919); see also St. Gregory the Great, Super Cantica Canticorum Expositio (PL, 79, 517 and 541). Cited by John Murphy, Mary's Immaculate Heart—The Meaning of the Devotion to the Immaculate Heart of Mary [Milwaukee, WI: The Bruce Publishing Co., 1951]: p. 3.

[945] St. Isidore of Seville, Appendix VI, Exposito in Canticum Canticorum (PL, 83, 1125).

[946] Alanus de Insulis (Alain de l'Isle), Op. cit. (PL, 210, 85). [Emphasis added.]

[947] Ibid. (PL, 210, 105).

[948] Ibid. (PL, 210, 65).

[949] St. Ambrose, Expositionis in Lucam, Lib. II (PL, 15, 1654): “Discamus sanctae Virginis in omnibus castittem, quae, non minus ore pudica quam corpore, arguments fidei conferebat in corde.” St. Gregory Thaumaturgic (Dubius), Hom. 2 In Annntiat. Virgin Mariae (PG, 10, 1169-70):

“Sancticissima porro Dei Genetrix conservabat Omnia verba haec, conferens in corde suo; velut quae omnium mysteriorum vas ac receptaculum esset.”

Cited by John Murphy, op. cit.]: p. 8. [Emphasis added.]

[950] Eudes, St. John. The Admirable Heart of Mary. [Immaculate Heart Publications: Buffalo, NY. Under license from Loreto Publications, Fitzwilliams, NH]: p. 9. [Bolded word is my emphasis, italics are the saint’s.]

[951] Sharkey, Don. The Woman Shall Conquer. [Kenosha, WI: Prow Books/Franciscan Marytown Press, 1976. Third Printing]: pp. 7-8.

[952] Faber, loc. cit. [Emphasis in the original.]

[953] Eudes, St. John. The Admirable Heart of Mary. [Buffalo, NY: Immaculate Heart Publications, Reprinted from the 1947 edition. Under license from Loreto Publications, Fitzwilliam, NH]: p. 82.

[954] St. Ambrose, Expositionis in Lucam, Lib. II (PL, 15, 1654): “Discamus sanctae Virginis in omnibus castittem, quae, non minus ore pudica quam corpore, arguments fidei conferebat in corde.” St. Gregory Thaumaturgic (Dubius), Hom. 2 In Annntiat. Virgin Mariae (PG, 10, 1169-70):

“Sancticissima porro Dei Genetrix conservabat Omnia verba haec, conferens in corde suo; velut quae omnium mysteriorum vas ac receptaculum esset.”

Cited by John Murphy, Mary’s Immaculate Heart–The Meaning of the Devotion to the Immaculate Heart of Mary [Milwaukee, WI: The Bruce Publishing Co., 1951: p. 8. [Emphasis added.]

[955] de Montfort, St. Louis. True Devotion to Mary. [Translated from the original French by Fr. Frederick William Faber, D.D. Edited and Annotated by The Fathers of the Company of Mary. Republished in Rockford, IL: TAN Books and Publishers, 1985 from the 1941 copyright edition with Imprimi Potest, Nihil Obstat, and Imprimatur, 1949]: #6.

[956] Prov.31:28; the commentary of Richard of St. Laurence appears to be a paraphrase of this passage.

[957] “Devotion to the Immaculate Heart of Mary.” Messenger of the Sacred Heart of Jesus (1876).

[958] Ibid.

[959] St. Anselm. Cited by St. Alphonsus de Liguori, The Glories of Mary [Kindle Edition]: Location 1587.

[960] Fr. Garrigou-Lagrange, O.P., Mother of the Savior and Our Interior Life. [Charlotte, NC: TAN Books & Publishers, 1993. Republished from the first U.S. publication by B. Herder Book Company, St. Louis, MO, 1948.]: p. 229.

[961] Mariale, q. 43, 2. Cited by Fr. Garrigou-Lagrange, Ibid.

[962] Jn. 5:22-27. Cited by Fr. Garrigou-Lagrange, Ibid.

[963] Acts 10:42; cf. IIIa., q. 59, a.1. Cited by Fr. Garrigou-Lagrange, Ibid. [Emphasis added.]

[964] Murphy, John. Mary's Immaculate Heart—The Meaning of the Devotion to the Immaculate Heart of Mary [Milwaukee, WI: The Bruce Publishing Co., 1951]: p. 83.

[965] In. Psalt. B. Virgin, p. 79. Cited by St. John Eudes, op. cit., p. 43.

[966] “Of Mary, there is never enough”—meaning that one could never give enough praise, filial devotion, or explanation of the Virgin Mary, Mother of God.

[967] Eudes, op. cit., p. 81. [Emphasis in the original.]

[968] Damascene, St. John. Cited by St. Louis-Marie Grignon de Montfort, op. cit., Location 614.

[969] de Montfort, op. cit., #76

[970] Garrigou-Lagrange, op. cit., p. 245.

[971] Montfort, loc. cit., #82.3. [Emphasis added.]

[972] “Cult in general means honor paid in a spirit of submission and dependence to a superior because of his excellence...Created persons who have a certain excellence are entitled to the cult called dulia: a cult of respect. Thus, in the natural order respect is due to parents, kings, teachers; in the super natural order it is due to the saints, the heroicity of whose virtues has been recognized. The latter cult paid to God’s servants honors God Himself who is revealed to the world in the saints and draws us by them to Himself. It is commonly taught in the Church that the Blessed Virgin is entitled to a cult of hyperdulia, or supreme dulia, because of her eminent dignity as Mother of God.” Fr. Garrigou-Lagrange, op. cit., pp. 240-241. [Second emphasis in this definition added.]

[973] Garrigou-Lagrange, Ibid., pp. 243-244.

[974] Ibid., p. 251.

[975] Ibid., p. 252.

[976] “O my Jesus, forgive us our sins. Save us from the fires of hell. Lead all souls to heaven, especially those with the greatest need of Thy mercy.” This is the prayer which Our Lady of Fatima instructed to add after every Rosary decade.

[977] Bellarmine, St. Robert. Cited by St. Alphonsus de Liguori in The Glories of Mary [The Redemptorist Fathers: Brooklyn, NY, 1931]: p. 88.

[978] Garrigou-Lagrange, loc. cit. pp. 246-247.

[979] Ibid., pp. 247-248.

[980] de Montfort, loc. cit., #47, 48.

[981] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité. The Whole Truth about Fatima: Science and the Facts, Vol. I. [Buffalo, NY: Immaculate Heart Publications, 1989]: pp. 185-186.

[982] Ibid., p. 187.

[983] Ibid., p.181.

[984] Ibid., p.187.

[985] Sister Mary Lucia of the Immaculate Heart, Fatima in Lucia's Own Words: Sister Lucia's Memoirs [Fatima, Portugal: Postulation Centre, 1976]: p.165.

[986] Ibid., p. 167.

[987] “This was the aurora borealis on the night of January 25-26, 1938, which was unusual, and always regarded by Lucia as the God-given sign which had been promised.” Cited in Fatima in Lucia's Own Words by editor Fr. Louis Kondor, SVD: p. 190.

[988] Sister Mary Lucia, loc. cit.

[989] Ibid.

[990] The Message of Fatima, as issued by the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, Vatican website.

[http://www.vatican.va/roman_curia/congregations/cfaith/documents/rc_con_fatima_en.html]

[991] Lk. 21: 10-11; Matt. 7: 7, 11, 14.

[992] Sr. Mary Lucia, op. cit., pp. 17-168.

[993] Frère Michel, op. cit., footnote 29: p. 212.

[994] Sister Mary Lucia, op. cit., p. 172.

[995] Frère Michel, op. cit., p. 291.

[996] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinite. The Secret and the Church, Vol. II.

[Buffalo, NY: Immaculate Heart Publications, 1989]: pp. 770.

[997] Ephes. 1:10.

[998] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité, op. cit., pp. 9-10.

[999] de Liguori, St. Alphonsus. The Way of Salvation and Perfection.

[Brooklyn, NY: Redemptorist Fathers, 1926]: p. 254.

[1000] Ibid., p. 42.

[1001] Sr. Mary Lucia, op. cit., p. 163.

[1002] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité, The Whole Truth about Fatima, Vol. III. [Buffalo, NY: Immaculate Heart Publications, Revised edition 2001]: p. 509.

[1003] Pope St. Pius X (Our Apostolic Mandate on the Sillon, August 25, 1910): para. 11

[1004] Pope Leo XIII, Sapientiae Christianae (On Christians as Citizens, January 10, 1890): para. 14.

[1005] Aquinas, St. Thomas. Summa: 2:2:174: Res. et ad 3.

[1006] Cant. 6:9.

[1007] Lk. 9:23.

[1008] Pope Pius XI, Quadragesimo Anno (Reconstruction of the Social Order, May 15, 1931): para. 144, 146-147.

[1009] Lk. 12:31.

[1010] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité, op. cit.: pp. 507-508.

[1011] Quotes from Sr. Lucia come from A Little Treatise by the Seer on the Nature and Recitation of the Rosary, a collection of excerpts from Sr. Lucia's letters written between 1969-1971. It was originally published in Uma vida ao service de Fatima with an Imprimatur from the Bishop of Leiria, Fatima, Dom Joao Venancio, May 13, 1971.

[1012] Norms for Indulgences, 3rd Edition (May 18, 1986): The Other Types of Indulgences Grants, #5.

[1013] Garrigou-Lagrange, O.P., Fr. Reginald. The Three Stages of the Interior Life, Vol. II. [Copyright 1948 by B. Herder Book Co, St. Louis, MO. Republished in Rockford, IL: TAN Books and Publishers, 1989]: p.165.

[1014] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité, The Whole Truth about Fatima: Science and the Facts, Vol. I [Buffalo, NY: Immaculate Heart Publications, English Translation Copyright 1989]: p. 181.

[1015] Matt. 21: 22.

[1016] Frère Michel de la Sainte Trinité, The Whole Truth about Fatima: The Third Secret, Vol III. [Buffalo, NY: Immaculate Heart Publications, Revised edition 2001]: pp. 20-21.

[1017] Mt 22: 36-40.

[1018] Walsh, O.P., Rev. Reginald, Editor. Meditation on the Passion.

[Westminster, MD: The Newman Press, reprinted February, 1963. Compiled from various sources associated with the nuns of the Institute of the Blessed Virgin Mary, with an Introduction by Rev. Reginald Walsh, O.P. Nihil Obstat and Imprimatur, Feb. 23, 1922] p. 17.

[1019] Baltimore Catechism and Mass #3, The New Confraternity Edition, Revised [Washington, D.C: The Catholic University of America, 1949], Important Truths about the Holy Ghost and Grace: p. 65.

[1020] A partial indulgence of 500 days is granted each time the Brown Scapular of Mt. Carmel is piously kissed. An individual who wears this sacramental should be either enrolled in the Confraternity of the Brown Scapular (which imparts a perpetual blessing on the wearer, so that new Scapulars need not be blessed) or otherwise ensure that each new Brown Scapular is properly blessed by a priest.

[1021] Garrigou-Lagrange, loc. cit.

[1022] Ibid.

[1023] 2 Cor. 5: 14.

[1024] Phil. 2: 12.

[1025] Gal. 2: 11-14.

[1026] Walsh, op cit., p. 222.

[1027] Mk. 4:11.

[1028] Smith, D.D., Ph.D., Canon George D. The Teaching of the Catholic Church: A Summary of Catholic Doctrine, Vol. 1. [New York: The MacMillan Company, 1959]: p. 538.

[1029] de Liguori, St. Alphonsus. The Glories of Mary. Fourth Reprint Revised. [Brooklyn, NY: Redemptorist Fathers, 1931]: p. 602.

[1030] Gal 6:7.

[1031] Walsh, op. cit., p. 249.

[1032] Lk. 23: 34

[1033] Lk. 23: 43.

[1034] Jn. 19: 26–27.

[1035] Matt. 27: 46.

[1036] Jn. 19: 28.

[1037] Jn. 19: 30.

[1038] Lk. 23: 46.

- [1039] Lk. 2:35.
- [1040] Lk. 1: 38.
- [1041] Lk. 1:32.
- [1042] Eccles. 24:24-25.
- [1043] de Liguori, op. cit., p. 564.
- [1044] Ibid., p. 568.
- [1045] Smith, op. cit., p. 528.
- [1046] Loc. cit., p. 565.
- [1047] Ps. 86: 3.
- [1048] Ps. 47.
- [1049] Eudes, op. cit., p. 77.
- [1050] Rosary Crusade Clarion, June 2001 (Issue 6)
[http://www.sspcx.ca/Rosary_Crusade/issue_06.htm]
- [1051] Serm. 13 de Exalt. BV in Gloria; cited by St. John Eudes, p. 116.
[Emphasis added.]
- [1052] de Montfort, St. Louis de Montfort. The Secret of Mary. [Bay Shore, NY: Montfort Publications, Revised Edition 1993]: p. 11.
- [1053] Eudes, op. cit., pp.164-165.
- [1054] Smith, op. cit., p. 513.
- [1055] Eudes, op. cit., p. 97.
- [1056] Ibid.
- [1057] Ibid.
- [1058] de Liguori, op. cit., pp. 527-528.
- [1059] Eudes, loc cit.
- [1060] Hardon, S.J., Fr. John. "Fatima in the Light of History." The Real Presence website.
[http://www.therealpresence.org/archives/Mariology/Mariology_030.htm]
- [1061] Ibid.

Guadalupe: Secrets of the Image

Marianna Bartold

Guadalupe: Secrets of the Image

Marianna Bartold

All Scriptural quotations were taken from the Holy Bible, Douay-Rheims translation, with revisions and footnotes (in the text in italics) by Bishop Richard Challoner, 1749-52. Taken from a hardcopy of the 1899 Edition by the John Murphy Company. IMPRIMATUR: James Cardinal Gibbons, Archbishop of Baltimore, September 1, 1899.

Cover by Michael M. Bartold

© 2013 Marianna Bartold. All Rights Reserved.

KIC: Lapeer, MI

Table of Contents

SECTION I

Part I

Behold Your Mother: The One Who Crushes the Serpent

- Did She Say “Guadalupe”?
- A Portrait that Speaks a Thousand Words

Part II

The Face That Reveals the Heart

- The Answer to a Bishop's Prayer
- The Intercession of "the One Who Crushes the Serpent"
- The Virgin's Face on the Tilma

Part III

The Image of Salvation History

- Photo: The Miraculous Image as It Appears Today
- The Maiden
- The Aureole of Golden Rays
- The Cloud and the East
- The Rose Tunic
- The Flowers and the Offering of the Virgin who is a Mother
- The Cross on the Jade Brooch
- The Message of Life
- The Angel before the Moon

Part IV

Our Lady of Guadalupe and the Apocalypse:

The Silent Signs of Prophecy

- A Discovery about the Stars on Guadalupe's Mantle
- The Stars and Constellations on the Mantle

Part V

Virgin of the Ages: The Message on the Mantle

-Decoding the Message on the Mantle

-Illustration of Stars and Constellations

The Mantle's Right Side

--Ophiucus

--Scorpio

--Libra

--Pi from the Hydra Constellation

--Lupus

--Centaurus

--Southern Cross

--Procyon from Canis Minor

The Mantle's Left Side

--Boötes

--Diadem from Coma Berenices

--Ursa Major

--Canes Venatici

--Lynx

--Thuban from Draco \(the Dragon\)

--Auriga, the She-Goat

--Taurus

SECTION II

Part I

-In Tilmatzintli–The Original Account of the Tilma

-Nican Mopohua: “Here It is Told”-English Translation

Part II

Guadalupe is the Immaculate Conception

-Feast of the Immaculate Conception by Dom Gueranger

-On Praying to Our Lady

-The Rosary: Historically Established by St. Dominic

-Roses and Prayers: A Speech by Bishop Sheen

Part III

Various Prayers in Honor of Our Lady of Guadalupe

-The Psalter and the Symbolic Number 153

-The Rosary Mysteries

-How to Pray the Rosary

-Memorare to Our Lady of Guadalupe

-Prayer to the Perpetual Virgin, Mother of God and Mother of the Church

-Five Day Novena to Our Lady of Guadalupe

-Nine Day Novena to Our Lady of Guadalupe #1 \(One Prayer for Nine days\)

-Nine Day Novena to the Virgin of Guadalupe #2 \(Different Prayers for Nine Days\)

-Prayer to Our Lady of Guadalupe, Mystical Rose \(Approved by the pope, St. Pius X\)

-Chaplet of Our Lady of Guadalupe: In Honor of the Four Apparitions to St. Juan Diego

Part IV

-Before and After the Apparitions and the Miracle: A Chronology

-Internet Links on the Virgin of Guadalupe

About the Author

Notes

Part I
Behold Your Mother:
The One Who Crushes the Serpent

“Call me and my image the Perfect Virgin Mary, Holy Mother of God, the one who crushes the serpent.”

—Our Lady, giving her name in 1531 to Juan Bernardino, uncle of St. Juan Diego

During the season of Advent almost five hundred years ago, a great sign was given to the Church and the world. This sign still exists and it continues to unfold its wonders. It is a miraculous sign testifying to all mankind that a new age had begun. As the centuries pass, it becomes increasingly apparent that the marvels of the apparitions, the messages, and the Miraculous Image known as Our Lady of Guadalupe are not only for Mexico, or both of the American continents, but for the entire world.

Every Saturday and Sunday, in order to attend the morning Mass and afterward receive catechetical instruction, a 57-year old widower and convert of six years known as Juan Diego (now a canonized saint) arose in the middle of the night and on each of those days walked a round-trip totaling 18 miles and 7 hours. At dawn on Saturday, December 9, 1531 the Mother of God appeared to this most humble and pious man as he reached a hill called Tepeyac, the site of a destroyed Aztec goddess temple, situated on the outer perimeter of the Aztec capital Tenochtitlan (today's Mexico City). It was the first recorded Marian apparition in the “new land” of the Americas and of the Modern Age.

The Apparition occurred at daybreak. One can only imagine St. Juan's reaction when he heard beautiful singing from the hillcrest, like fine bird-song. According to the Nican Mopohua, the original written account in Nahuatl (the native language of the Aztecs and some Mayans) by Antonio Valeriano (an educated noble Indian who was also proficient in Latin and Spanish), it becomes clear this bird song was supernatural: “When at times their voices quieted, the hillside seemed to echo in response. Their singing, very soft and pleasant, surpassed that of the coyoltototl and tzinizcan and other fine song birds.” Evidently, there was something unique about this daybreak, since Juan questioned himself, “Could I be worthy of what I am hearing? Am I dreaming? Am I arising from sleep? Where am I? Perhaps in the earthly paradise of flowers and corn about which our ancestors spoke? Maybe already in heaven?"

The account states that as he looked east, toward the summit, the heavenly singing stopped, and silence fell. Then he heard, from the top of the hill, a voice calling him by his baptismal name, "Juanito, my dearest Juan Diego." (In his own language, the voice used a diminutive which in Spanish is rendered "Juanito." The Virgin called him by his Christian name but Juan's birth name, before he was baptized as a Roman Catholic, was Cuauhtlatohuac, meaning "Eagle Who Speaks.")

The Nican Mopohua continues: "He then climbed the hill in the direction of the voice, not at all frightened, but rather, feeling extremely happy. Upon reaching the summit, he saw a Lady standing there who told him to come closer. He was filled with awe and admiration by her splendor. Her clothing was radiant like the sun; the crag on which her foot was resting was giving off rays of light, and looked like a bracelet of precious stones; even the earth glistened like the mist of a rainbow. The mesquite bushes, prickly pears, and other lowly herbs and grasses which usually grow there seemed like emeralds, the foliage like fine turquoise, and the branches and thorns like shining gold."

"He bowed before her, hearing her very gentle, polite words which were delivered as to someone very respected. She said, 'Listen, Juan, my dearest and youngest son, where are you going?' He answered, 'My Lady, my Queen and my little Girl, I am going to your house in Mexico-Tlatilolco to continue the study of the divine mysteries taught us by the images of Our Lord, our priests.'" [\[1\]](#)

This scene is already a charming one, and it first must be understood according to Juan's culture. First, the beauty of birds in their song and feathers and the beauty of music held specific meanings to those of the Nahuatl culture, for flower and song meant access to (or experience of) the divine truths. Second, the Lady lovingly called to Juan in his language, calling him "Juantzin" or "Juandiegotzin" which in Spanish translated to "Juanito" and "Juan Diego." However, in the native Nahuatl language, the ending (-tzin) is used as a sign of reverence and respect, while the ending (-ito) is a diminutive form, commonly used among family and friends. Third, the Virgin received him standing, an unexpected surprise since, among the Aztec, Mayan, and Spaniards, the nobility remained seated when subordinates approached. [2] Fourth, Juan immediately recognized this beautiful Lady's identity because he rightly called her "my Lady" and "my Queen," but he also addressed her as "my little Girl," which was a natural response from a man who was clean of heart. He literally saw her as a very young woman, so it was becoming for an older man to cordially and yet tenderly address her as "my little Girl" (also rendered as "my little child").

In this initial Apparition to St. Juan, Our Lady's words are astounding when carefully read. She revealed that she is the Perpetual Virgin, the Mother of God, the Mother of the Church, and the Mediatrix of All Graces:

"Know and be assured, my dearest son, that I am the Perfect Ever Virgin, Holy Mary, the Mother of the one True God, of Ipalnemohuani [the One through whom all live], of Teyocoyani [the Creator of human beings], of Tloque Nahuaque [the Lord of nearness and closeness], of Ilhuicahua Tlaltipaque [the Lord of Heaven and of Earth]. I greatly desire that my beloved sacred house should be built here, in order to show Him to you all, to exalt Him, to present Him to the peoples, He who is all my love, He who is my compassionate gaze, He who is my help, He who is my salvation. Because I am truly honored to be the compassionate Mother of all, both you and all the peoples here in this land, and still others who are my beloved, who call to me, seeking me, those who honor me, trusting in my intercession." [3]

After giving her message, she told St. Juan to "go to the palace of the Bishop of Mexico. Tell him I myself send you as my representative to convey to him the great desire I have that he raise up for me in this place a sanctuary. Everything I will tell you, with all the details, you will tell him: all you have seen and heard." [4]

It was not easy for St. Juan to see the Bishop, but he patiently waited to be admitted. Bishop Fray Juan de Zumárraga, for his part, listened to St. Juan's message and said he would carefully think about it. St. Juan hurried back to the Virgin and reported the Bishop's response. In all humility, he then asked Our Lady to send another person, one of importance whom the Bishop would believe. The Lady said she had many servants, but it was Juan himself whom she chose to carry out her requests.

She told him to return to the Bishop the next day, Sunday, and again make the request. This time, the Bishop asked St. Juan for a sign that it really was the Virgin Mary. Disheartened, Juan Diego made his way back and again met the Virgin. He told her all that occurred. Our Lady instructed Juan to return to the same hill on the next day and she would give him the Bishop's sign. Upon returning to his home, Juan Diego found his uncle, Juan Bernardino, seriously ill and near death. Juan Diego tended to his uncle and then went in search of a doctor, but to no avail. Sometime after nightfall, his uncle asked him to return to Tlatelolco (on the outskirts of Mexico City), there to ask a Catholic priest to come to him, in order to hear his confession and prepare him for death. With a heavy heart, the saint anxiously set out on December 12, in the dark hours before dawn.

St. Juan Diego purposely went around the eastern side of the Tepeyac hill, instead of his usual route on the western side, in order to avoid the Mother of God. He did not want to disappoint her, but he also wished to brook no delay in fulfilling his dying uncle's request for a priest. It was his intention to first see to his uncle's spiritual need, and then he would return to the Lady.

Then the unexpected happened. As Juan approached Tepeyac, the Virgin descended the hill on the western side. Juan bowed before her and explained his actions. In short, she assured him all would be well, and then she instructed him to gather the flowers he would find at the top of Tepeyac hill and bring them to her. Juan already knew that Tepeyac was stony ground where nothing ever grew but weeds, thistles, and growth of similar type. Despite the cold season, when frost killed everything, Juan trusted in the Lady's words. He found blooming and fragrant flowers of all kinds, covered with unusual dew that gleamed like pearls. An accompanying legend states that among all these flowers, there were also Castilian roses (which grew only in Spain); these he also brought to the Virgin. Arranging the flowers herself within his tilma (a mantle or cloak), Our Lady instructed him to show them only to the Bishop.

"Therefore the Lord himself shall give you a sign. Behold a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son..." (Isaiah 7:4) When Juan's tilma was opened before the Bishop, perhaps no one was more surprised than the messenger. The miraculous flowers, as it turns out, were not the only sign. On St. Juan's tilma was a "living image" of the Maiden who had sent the humble man as her emissary.

Meanwhile, Our Lady had also appeared to Juan Bernardino, the saint's mortally ill uncle, whom she cured. Bernardino had known nothing of the apparitions, because his prudent nephew had not said a word. Unbeknownst to Bernardino, his nephew had another task to carry out, and Juan was already on his way to the Bishop, carefully carrying a bundle of roses and other flowers. To the unsuspecting Bernardino, the Lady gave him a baffling message for the Bishop: “Call me and my image the Perfect Virgin Mary, Holy Mother of God, the one (or she) who crushes the serpent.” Such were the words of the Virgin Mary under her well-known title, Our Lady of Guadalupe.

Did She Say “Guadalupe”?

For many years, it was believed the Virgin Mary had said, “Call me and my image the Perfect Virgin Mary, Holy Mary of Guadalupe.” There currently exists a credible assertion that, due to an error of hearing and/or an error of language translation, Bishop Zumárraga thought the last word of Our Lady’s sentence was “Guadalupe,” the name of a famous shrine in the prelate’s native Spain. If, however, the language commentators of the last centuries are correct in believing that the Holy Mother of God did not say “Guadalupe,” then what did she say? It seems that the Virgin uttered something that is, in the Catholic sense of the word, of universal scope.

The Nican Mopohua records that the Lady Mary instructed Juan Bernardino to tell the Bishop that she and her image were to be called: “Cenquizla Ichpochtzintli Santa Maria de Guadalupe (The Perfect Virgin, Holy Mary of Guadalupe)” Intriguing to those who know or study the language of Nahuatl (the native language of Juan Diego, his uncle, and the Aztecs), there are no letters (or sounds) for “g” and “d.” (At their baptisms, Juan and his uncle received Catholic names which, only in Spanish, did include these two letters.)

Did she say “Guadalupe” or something else that sounds like it? This very question was first asked during the Apostolic Proceedings of 1666 by participant Luis Becerra Tanco, considered among the foremost Guadalupan scholars of that era. He concluded that the Virgin Mary used the word “Tequantlaxopeuh” (pronounced as “Tea-quantla-show-pay”), meaning “who saves us from the devourer.” In Spanish, the language of the Bishop, it is rendered “la que pisa la serpiente” (in English, “she who steps on the serpent”). [5] Tanco had a point, but the sounds of the two phrases are not close enough.

In 1895, Professor Marioano Jacobo Rojas of Tepoztlan, Morelos, head of the Department of Nahuatl in the National Museum of Archaeology, History and Ethnography, took up again “the idea that Our Lady had asked that her image be venerated under a Nahuatl title. Rojas proposed the term ‘Coatlaxopeuh’ meaning ‘The one [feminine form] who crushed the serpent's head.’ ”[6]

In a word, “It is believed that the name ‘Guadalupe’ came about because of the translation from Nahuatl to Spanish of the words used by the Virgin during the Apparition to Juan Bernardino, the ailing uncle of Juan Diego. It is believed that Our Lady used the Aztecs’ Nahuatl word of coatlxopeuh which is pronounced ‘quatlasupe’ and which sounds remarkably like the Spanish word ‘Guadalupe.’ Coa means serpent, tl being the noun ending which can be interpreted as ‘the,’ while xopeuh means ‘to crush or stamp out.’ So Our Lady must have called herself the one ‘who crushes the serpent.’ ” [7]

In 1955, Helen Behrens, to whom we who speak English owe a great deal because she was among the first to ardently promote Guadalupe among us, offered another consideration. As an authority on the Image who studied the word “Guadalupe,” and assisted by a Nahuatl scholar Byron MacAfee, she published a book entitled, America’s Treasure: The Virgin Mary de Guadalupe. In her research, she stated, “Neither Bishop Zumárraga nor any other Spanish prelate has been able to explain why she wished her image to be called de Guadalupe. The reason must be that she did not say the phrase at all. She spoke in the native language, and the combination of words she used must have sounded like de Guadalupe to the Spaniards.”

Behrens suggested that the Nahuatl “te coatlxopeuh” has a similar sound, the “te” part meaning stone. Thus in Behrens’ estimation, the Virgin said something akin to “she who breaks, stamps, or crushes the stone serpent.” [8]

Why a stone serpent? From the very beginning of her apparitions in Mexico, the words and the very appearance of Mary, as described by St. Juan and as she appears on the tilma, showed her as one more mighty than the most important gods of the Aztecs. The Virgin Mary appeared on the hill of Tepeyac, a desolate place full of boulders, bracken, and weeds. Before the Spanish Catholic conquistadors arrived, Tepeyac had been the site of the temple of the pagan goddess Tonantzin, the “mother god” of the Aztecs. The “mother god” was portrayed as a head composed of snakes’ heads and with writhing snakes as her garment. In addition to Tonantzin, “Quetzalcoátl, primary god of the Aztecs represented as a stone serpent, had to be appeased by live human sacrifice, sometimes thousands in one day.” [9]

Within a decade of the “Guadalupe” apparitions and the miraculous sign of the Virgin Mary’s holy Image, an enormous number of conversions (an estimated number of seven to ten million people) took place. “Through Aztec eyes and Judeo-Christian tradition, remarkable aspects of Guadalupe emerge and explain the massive conversions. The summit of a high place, even a hill like Tepeyac, represents a point of contact with the divinity. Dawn is the beginning, the start of something new. Song, along with the presence of flowers, was a sign of an imminent divine communication to the Aztecs. St. Juan Diego hears his name called, as did Abraham (Gn. 22:1). Resplendent light is also typical of divine manifestation...” [10]

Whether or not an error in translation took place, these questions have again come to light in the latter part of the Modern Age. Surely the Lord God, Who knows and sees all times, places, and events, knew what would happen. Reason illuminated by Faith tells us that it is very likely Our Lady did say, “the one (or she) who crushes the serpent.” The Miraculous Image itself speaks to people of goodwill. The truth of the latter part of the Woman’s title would be revealed in a time when it was sorely needed.

A Portrait that Speaks a Thousand Words

The Virgin’s message is intended for the entire world, for she identified herself to St. Juan Diego as the Mother of God and the mother of all who seek her. However, in her message to the saint’s uncle which he was instructed to give to the Lord Bishop, the Blessed Mother of God reiterates in one simple sentence the doctrines and dogmas of faith concerning her person.

Consider her instructions to the Bishop; she wishes to be called “The Perfect” (Immaculate Conception) “Virgin Mary” (Perpetual Virginity), “Holy Mother of God” (Theotokos, the God-bearer, full of grace and therefore holy), “the one who crushes the serpent” (a reference to Genesis 3:15: “I will put enmities between thee and the woman, and thy seed and her seed: she shall crush thy head, and thou shalt lie in wait for her heel.”)

In the 1950’s, a man named Coley Taylor, whose study of the Image of Guadalupe resulted in his conversion to the Catholic faith, wrote, “There is another important point: she did not ask Juan Diego to build the church, or simply ask that a church be built in her honor. She sent him to the Bishop, to the head of the Church in that land new to Christianity. She was giving an order to the Catholic Church.”

In addition, Taylor drew on other sources and succinctly explained the meaning of the Miraculous Image on the St. Juan’s tilma: “To the Mexicans, who then had no written language, but made their historical and literary records in a symbolic picture-writing, her Portrait had much to say. Since she was standing in a nimbus of light, with rays representing those of the sun, she was greater than the sun; she was standing on the new moon, and therefore was greater than the moon; and her robe, like the sky, was sown with stars. All these heavenly bodies had long been worshipped, with a god for each, in their pagan pantheon. The Lady was greater than these, and said she was the Mother of all.”

“Since an Angel was at her feet, she was greater than other heavenly creatures. Yet she was no goddess, for her hands were clasped in prayer. And at her throat was a golden brooch, a circle enclosing a black cross—the Christian symbol on the Spanish banners, on the Christian altars, and set up before their mission churches. Her Portrait and its symbolic teaching, far more than the work of the score of missionary priests and brothers, converted the largely pagan Mexico to the Christian Faith. And its symbolism as picture-writing continues to teach and convert...She speaks for herself to all who come to look at her image.”[\[11\]](#)

Burdened as we may be by sorrow, or worry, or pain, or serious illness, Our Lady assures each one of us as she did St. Juan Diego as he hurried to Mexico City, seeking for his dying uncle’s benefit a Catholic priest: “Do not let your heart be troubled...Do not fear this illness, nor any other form of illness or pain. Am I not here, I who am your Mother? Are you not under my shelter? Are you not held in my arms? Is there anything else you need? Now let nothing else disturb you...” [\[12\]](#)

To the Church hierarchy, she gave her title that they, too, must not forget as they preach the Gospel to all nations:

“Call me and my image the Perfect Virgin Mary, Holy Mother of God, the one who crushes the serpent.”

Part II

The Face that Reveals the Heart

“I am the mother of fair love, and of fear, and of knowledge, and of holy hope. In me is all grace of the way and of the truth, in me is all hope of life and virtue.”

– Eccles. 24: 24-25

To this day, the seemingly inexplicable Portrait of the Virgin Mary borne on St. Juan Diego’s tilma (mantle) continues to unfold its secrets. Commentators on Guadalupe (a commonly used short-hand form of address for the Image itself), seem to agree that its entire aspect is a synthesis of European and Aztec/Mexican culture. As one book expressed it, “Guadalupe emerged in a society with a huge language gap.” [13] However, the Image of the Woman, with all of the accompanying symbolic imagery, silently expressed to both the pagan meso-American peoples and the Catholic Spaniards its divine origin.

To the Spanish-born Bishop to whom the Image was first revealed, the Portrait was the sign that proved true the identity of the Woman who had sent St. Juan Diego. Initially, Bishop Fray Juan de Zumárraga doubted St. Juan, but the flowers, the Castilian roses and, above all, the Portrait on the tilma removed all uncertainties. The extraordinary signs granted to him by God also provided another confirmation. The Virgin’s Image silently consoled and encouraged Bishop Zumárraga, highly alarmed by the increasingly violent clashes between the Spanish conquistadors and the indigenous people.

The Answer to a Bishop’s Prayer

Before St. Juan Diego had even approached him, the Bishop had prayed for the intercession of the Virgin Mary, asking for her assistance in his mission. Among the Catholic missionaries present in South America, not enough of them were yet proficient in Nahuatl, the language of the Aztecs. Although the Catholic Spaniards rescued the Aztecs from daily ritual murder, made in sacrifice to appease false gods, it was not long before the dark side of human nature – pride in the superiority of self or of one’s race – manifested itself against the native peoples.

Not all of the Spanish were guilty, but a few in positions of power took ruthless advantage. One in particular was Don Nuno de Guzman, who was the head of the First Audience – a group of five administrators appointed as governors in 1528 by King Charles V of Spain. To the meso-Americans, Guzman quickly proved to be vicious and cruel. So deep were his prejudices and so greedy his desires that he did not even consider the native peoples to be human beings. His treatment of them was as savage as the human sacrifices that the other Spanish Catholics rightly deplored. To the native peoples, he offered two choices – abandonment of their villages or slavery. He branded them on their faces; he tortured them; he sold them in exchange for cattle. In addition to these horrors, he controlled everything to such a degree that there was no way for the Spanish to appeal to their king. Nuno de Guzman had set up a blockade between Mexico City and Vera Cruz, the only port by which ships with cargo and letters were sent to Spain. He searched and censored everything, even confiscating the Bishop's letters to the king. In a word, de Guzman was an absolute dictator.

A compilation of the history of the years 1528-1531 states: "To offset the First Audience, the King appointed Franciscan Friar Juan de Zumárraga as the first Bishop of Mexico City and Protector of the Indians in December of 1528. He accomplished much in his 25 years as Bishop, which included the establishment of the first grammar school, library, printing press, and the first college, Colegio de la Santa Cruz at Tlatelolco. One of the first teachers at the College was the Franciscan Fray Bernardino de Sahagún, author of the Florentine Codex, a study of the Aztec Náhuatl language and culture."

"Bishop Zumárraga spent much of his first year in Mexico objecting to the ruthless treatment of the Indians by de Guzman, who by then had sold 15,000 Indians into slavery. The First Audience applied strict censorship, and forbade both Indians and Spaniards from bringing complaints to the Bishop. The Bishop countered with stern sermons against their use of military force, torture, and the imprisonment of Indians. Finally, in 1529, some Indians secretly smuggled a protest to Bishop Zumárraga concerning the heavy taxes and slave conditions in nearby Puebla. Bishop Zumárraga managed to send a message hidden in a crucifix back to Spain, and de Guzman was recalled. A Second Audience proved judicial to the Indians, but did not arrive in Mexico until 1531."

"However, the Conquistadors and the First Audience had done grave damage to their relationship with the native population. The Indians were fed up with Spanish occupation, and resentment had reached a flash point. Isolated outbreaks of fights with the Spaniards had become inevitable, and Bishop Zumárraga feared a general insurrection. Such was the setting when the event of Tepeyac took place.”[14]

According to Dan Lynch, National Guardian of the Missionary Image of Our Lady of Guadalupe, “Bishop Zumárraga prayed for Our Lady to intervene to prevent an uprising, to reconcile the Spanish and the natives and to bring peace. He asked that he would receive roses native to his homeland of Castile, Spain as a sign that his prayer would be answered.” [15] Our Lady literally answered the Bishop’s prayer, but also in a totally unexpected way. In a humble man’s tilma, an array of flowers, including the fresh Castilian roses for which he asked, were delivered to him on December 12, 1531. The roses and other flowers also left a full-color Imprint of Our Lady.

Before and during those dark years, there were a few true conversions (like St. Juan Diego’s). However, the majority of Aztecs tenaciously clung to their pagan gods and it is said that some of them still secretly offered human sacrifice. Others felt their gods had abandoned them. Due to the barbaric actions of some of the conquistadors, there were no mass conversions to the Catholic Faith. The Virgin Mary, whose Image broke the cultural and language barriers, accomplished that.

The Intercession of “the One Who Crushes the Serpent”

For the Bishop, a missionary struggling with a culture once terrorized by a demonic force but also a culture strongly resistant to embracing the Catholic Faith, the Image served as a reaffirmation of Christ’s words to His disciples: “Go forth and teach ye all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and behold I am with you all days, even to the consummation of the world.” [16]

To the Aztecs, it is claimed, the Woman on the tilma was replete with cryptography (hidden or secret writing, using techniques for secure communication in the presence of a third party, usually an adversary). At least one source likens the Image to an “icon” since it is sacred art, “written” in symbols to express a topic of theology. [17] Others state that the “imprinted image of Our Lady of Guadalupe contains codices. A codex is a book or manuscript with ancient symbols and words; thus the miraculous ‘painting’ of Our Lady of Guadalupe is a story in pictures.” [18]

However else one may consider the written Nahuatl language, there is no doubt that it is symbolic, and therefore it is rich in meaning. It has been described as a “simple language, direct, smooth, precise, elegant, resounding, beautiful, significant, and even sublime.” Another important aspect of the language is its use of disfrasismos, “a way of communicating the most profound thought or feeling using a complementary union of two words or symbols which express one meaning. Connected with this is the importance of numerology for the Nahuatl people.” [19]

The symbolic aspects of their culture and language played a great role in the Virgin’s Image, her words to St. Juan Diego, and the resulting mass conversions. In Nahuatl thought, ideas expressed in twos meant a new beginning and an inherent duality. Three inferred intercession. Four symbolized perfection. Five was the center of all things, where God is found.

Every part of the Lady’s speech to St. Juan followed the Nahuatl pattern of numerical groupings. For example, when she revealed to Juan Diego her identity, she referred of herself in three ways, signifying intercession: “I am the Perfect Ever Virgin, Holy Mary, Mother of God.” When she spoke of God, she made four specific references to Him, which mirrored His wholeness and perfection. When she consoled St. Juan, anxious to find a priest for his uncle, she did so with five questions. Simultaneously, she reminded him of two things (exemplifying the duality factor in their language): First, that God was the center of all things and second, that she is the motherly intercessor, the Mediatrix between the only Mediator (her divine Son, Jesus Christ) and mankind.

Moreover, all the native peoples easily “read” the iconography of “Guadalupe” and the hidden message within the Image. The Aztecs not only heard the message as St. Juan related it, but they saw for themselves that the Lady on the tilma was also speaking directly to them.

The Virgin’s Face on the Tilma

And speak She did. With a first glance at the Image’s face, hands, the rose color of her gown and the turquoise color of her mantle, it is believed that the Aztecs and other indigenous peoples immediately understood that the Woman’s origins are earthly, and yet she came from Heaven.

In her 2001 book on Guadalupe, Manuela Testoni explained, “The Virgin’s head inclines to the right and her hands are joined in prayer, indicating she is not a goddess, but that there is One greater than she. The celestial signs taken as a whole show that she came from the heavens, yet she also belongs to the earth as evidenced by the rose color of her gown, the color of dawn in the Valley of Mexico.” [20] Turquoise, many claim, was the Aztec color of divinity and royalty.

Because the Woman on the tilma did not stare at the viewer directly, as did vain images of their pagan gods, it is likely that the Aztecs first paid attention to her face. A few modern-day studies claim that, for the indigenous peoples, a person's face held great importance. The native peoples believed “that through the face, one could come to understand the inner person.” [21]

It is further opinioned that, in the Aztec culture, “[t]he person was considered to be born faceless and with a nameless heart. It was through education that the child was introduced into the tradition of the group and thus his face was gradually formed, and he received individuality by the unique way in which he assimilated unto himself the tradition of the group. Thus the face could be defined as the embodiment of self as it had been assumed and developed through education. Face and heart (rostro y corazón) then, for the Nahuatl, could then be approximated by our contemporary notion of personality. The face reflected the internal physiognomy [characteristics] of the person.” [22]

After analyzing the Image on the tilma in February 1979, [23] entomologist- biophysicist Phillip S. Callahan from the University of Florida later published a paper, writing: “The head of the Virgin of Guadalupe is one of the great masterpieces of artistic facial expression. In subtleness of form, simplicity of execution, hue and coloring, it has few equals among the masterpieces of the world. Furthermore, there are no portraits that I have ever observed which are executed in a similar manner...The expression suddenly appears reverent yet joyous, Indian yet European, olive-skinned yet white of hue. It is a face that intermingles the Christianity of Byzantine Europe with the overpowering naturalism of New World Indian; a fitting symbol for all the peoples of the great continent.” [24]

The facial features, shape, and coloring of the Virgin are neither wholly Aztec nor entirely Spanish but appear as a combination of both, a person known as a mestiza (a Spanish term meaning a person of two different races). A mestiza was the child of a Spanish father and an Aztec mother. Tragically, as hostilities between the two races increased, the mestiza children were viewed as the lowest on the social scale. The Woman on the tilma contradicted that prejudice. In her face alone, the Virgin showed herself as Mother to all peoples.

Her eyes, as previously mentioned, attracted special attention. They were cast down, an aspect offering two interpretations: The Woman's humility before the unseen One Who is greater than she, yet simultaneously her eyes are lowered in the gentle glance of motherly solicitude. In contrast, the Mayan gods of the indigenous people were portrayed as impersonal, while the Aztec gods were carved or drawn to imperiously stare straight into the viewer's eyes.

"Mercy and truth shall go before thy face." [25] In a word, the countenance and coloring of the Virgin's face served a dual purpose. To the Spanish conquistadors, Our Lady's visage of a mestiza reminded them that she is the Mother to all persons, regardless of race or social standing - those who know both her and Her Divine Son, and those who are still seeking Them. The Virgin's face prompted them to recall and live by the Great Commandment to love God with all the strength of mind, heart, and soul and also to love one's neighbor as one's self. It also reminded them of St. Paul's infallible teaching: "For you are all the children of God by faith, in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized in Christ, have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek; there is neither bond nor free: there is neither male nor female. For you are all one in Christ Jesus." [26]

To the unconverted Aztecs, deceived and tyrannized by demon forces and later brutalized by disgraceful conquistadors who also succumbed to the wiles of hell, her motherly and compassionate face delivered an urgent yet gentle invitation of conversion to the one, true God of whom she was Mother: "I am the mother of fair love, and of fear, and of knowledge, and of holy hope. In me is all grace of the way and of the truth, in me is all hope of life and virtue." [27]

As we shall see, the almost 500 year-old Image of "Guadalupe" is a miracle for the Modern Age, not only for its remarkable preservation against the ravages of time. In one extraordinary Portrait, the Virgin of Guadalupe taught the Church's key doctrines of salvation in a language understood by Catholics and the indigenous peoples of Mexico. She revealed herself as "the Woman" of Genesis and the Apocalypse but also "the Woman" of Catholic Tradition. In other words, "Guadalupe" is a missive of God's Divine Revelation.

Part III

The Image of Salvation History

“For I have chosen, and have sanctified this place, that my name may be there forever, and my eyes and my heart may remain there perpetually.”

– II Paralipomenon 7:16

The second part of this work explained that, to the Aztecs and other indigenous peoples, “the Woman on the tilma was replete with cryptography (hidden or secret writing, using techniques for secure communication in the presence of a third party, usually an adversary). The Image is also considered an ‘icon’ since it is sacred art, ‘written’ in symbols to express a topic of theology.” So not only does Guadalupe “speak” to the indigenous peoples of South America but also to the people of Europe and the East. Indeed, she is the Mother of all peoples.

Intriguingly, the view that Guadalupe is an icon was also the opinion of a Russian Orthodox priest, Fr. A. Ostrapovim, Dean of the Chair of Church Archeology in Moscow, who was presented a copy of “Our Lady of Guadalupe” for his appraisal. Possessing no knowledge of the Image’s history, he deduced it as a Byzantine-type icon, presumably of Eastern-Asiatic origin. Moreover, it was his view that “the painter of this Icon deviated from the very severe canons of icon painting and introduced much of himself into it. How accurate his analysis was!” [28]

Others state that the “imprinted image of Our Lady of Guadalupe contains codices. A codex is a book or manuscript with ancient symbols and words; thus Our Lady of Guadalupe is a story in pictures.” In other words: “To a people accustomed to communicate by means of painted symbols, Our Lady of Guadalupe provides an image that is as clear for the Indians in its symbolism as it is comprehensible to the [Spanish Catholic] missionaries.” [29]

The previous section also described what the Virgin’s facial features said to both the Spanish and Aztecs (and other meso-Americans). Then as now, even a quick but encompassing glance from top-to-bottom observes the Lady’s entire form, with a golden halo or “aureole” of rays emanating behind her, her overly-long rose robe covered with golden flowers which unfurls itself over her feet, the mantle of stars covering her head and flowing past her feet, the crescent moon, and the upper-torso of an angel with the wings of an eagle. A second glance may take notice that at her neck hangs a jade brooch with a black cross on it. On the very outer rim of the Image, a white cloud is seen.

The following picture is the Image as it appears today.

The Maiden: While looking at her face, an Aztec gazing at the Image recognized that her hair, parted in the middle and freely flowing, was their cultural hairstyle for maidens (because married women bound up their hair). The Spanish Catholics in the New World immediately grasped the identity of the Woman on St. Juan Diego's tilma: She is the Virgin Mary, Mother of God. Although her face bore the features of a mestiza (half Spanish and half Aztec), she was dressed neither in the fashion of a 16th century Aztec woman nor as a 16th century European Catholic woman. Rather, her apparel is that of a Jewish woman of Christ's time.

Since Catholic art often portrayed the Virgin standing over the untouchable moon (as a symbol of her sinless-ness and her perpetual virginity), the Spanish Catholics recognized the miraculous Image on the tilma as the Immaculate Conception, "the woman" foretold in Genesis 3:15, "the woman" who is the "new Eve." Further credence is given to this opinion because the Lady of Guadalupe first appeared to St. Juan Diego on December 9, the day on which Catholics of that time period celebrated the feast of the "Holy Conception of Mary." (The feast day was later moved to December 8; however, it was not until 1854 that a pope infallibly defined and promulgated the dogma of the Immaculate Conception.)

The Aureole of Golden Rays: In the same Image, the Catholic missionaries also saw a partial fulfillment of the depiction of the Woman in the Apocalypse: "And a great sign appeared in heaven: A woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and on her head a crown of twelve stars." [30] As already mentioned, in the prodigious "Portrait" of Guadalupe, the Virgin stands before the rays of the sun (and is therefore "clothed with the sun"), and the moon is beneath her feet. The only thing "obviously" missing from the apocalyptic description is the crown of twelve stars upon her head. [31] For their part, the Aztecs interpreted the Woman's position before the sun's rays to mean that she was greater than their sun god; the Spanish understood the aureole surrounding her entire figure to signify the Virgin's holiness to be of the highest degree.

Centuries later, Bishop Sean O'Malley would write, "In the last book of the Bible, the Apocalypse, we read about the woman about to bring forth a male child and of another portent which appeared in the sky, 'a huge red dragon.' The dragon represents Satan, the personal power of evil, as well as the powers of evil at work in history and opposing the mission of Christ and His Church." Can there be much doubt between the identities of the Woman of the Apocalypse and the Woman who appeared in the Mexico of 1531, identifying herself as "the Perfect Virgin Mary, Mother of God, the one who crushes the serpent"? [32]

The Cloud and the East: Outside of the golden aureole is a surrounding cloud, the manifestation of the unseen God. For the Aztecs, “it is certain that the Lady came down from heaven because the rays of the sun surround her, piercing the cloud; the stars adorn her mantle, and her feet rest on the crescent moon. She comes from the east [33] and puts the cosmos in order; otherwise it would not be possible that the stars would be properly paired.” [34]

The Rose Tunic: The Woman on the tilma wears a very light-rose colored transparent tunic or robe, seemingly embroidered with gold-threaded floral designs, standing out in relief. Under the tunic is a white undergarment. The robe also possesses an “unusual luminosity” [35] which naturally captivated the Spanish Catholics and the Aztecs.

The rose tunic covers the Virgin’s feet and unfolds itself over the crescent moon. [36] One expert claimed that rose was the color of Huitzilopochtli, the sun god who gave and preserved life but who was likewise nourished with human blood. The Aztecs believed their sun god daily sacrificed his life for the people, after sunset falling into the underworld which he battled, while hoping to gain enough strength to rise once more into the sky. In return, the people sacrificed their lives, offering their blood to replenish their sun god.

The Virgin’s rose tunic revealed to the indigenous peoples that she possessed within herself the Precious Blood necessary to life. Yet this Maiden was married and she was expecting a Child. How did they know? The answer is intertwined with the following details.

The Flowers and the Offering of the Virgin who is a Mother: With the position of her hands, the flowers, and the color of her tunic, the Woman on the tilma revealed much. According to Fr. Virgilio Elizondo, “Her hands are not poised in the traditional Western style of prayer, but in an Indian manner of offering, indicating that something is to come from her.” [37]

Over the Woman’s womb is a small flower called Nahui Ollin (“Four Movement”), the quincunx, which to the people meant the Flower of the Sun. A four-petaled flower, it is the only one of its kind among what at first appear to be nine large, triangular flowers. When closely examined, the rose robe reveals a total of 57 flowers and 13 buds on the Virgin’s tunic. The Nahui Ollin (identified as a jasmine) is the “symbol of plenitude, representing as it did the four compass directions of the world, with heaven and the underworld vertically encountering earth in the center...in the navel of the moon, as they called the Valley of Mexico. The quincunx was the central organizing concept of their society. Placed over Mary's womb, the four-petaled flower announced that even though their fifth Sun had died, the Sixth Sun was to be born of Mary of Guadalupe and had been born of her; Jesus Christ, the great Sun of Justice announced in Malachi, would be born to them liturgically at Christmas and could be born in them with Baptism." [38] Since the meso-Americans understood the sign as marking for them the beginning of a new era which, as history has shown, occurred at the same time Europe was being divided by the schism of the Protestant Revolt, perhaps this "sixth sun" was heaven's sign that the entire world was entering a new period of spiritual battle between the Virgin and the serpent. (In 1917 - almost four hundred years after the Guadalupe apparitions - Our Lady of Fatima appeared six times.)

It is believed that, initially, the nine large flowers (one on each sleeve, one on the bosom, and six below the sash) symbolized the still-beating hearts of the human sacrificial victims. The indigenous people would understand that since she, an expectant mother, wore them, she was telling them that her Son was the final victim. This is because the Aztecs believed their underworld had nine levels and the nine flowers on the Virgin's dress signified that all the levels were now filled; human sacrifice was not needed.

Furthermore, while Guadalupe's hands form the Aztec gesture of making an offering, her arms are positioned in the usual manner of an expectant mother. [39] The barely-noticeable waist cincture, the tips of which are seen just below her hands, was the married Aztec women's sign of maternity.

Together, these signs told the Indians this Woman was a Virgin and yet a married Mother. The rose of her tunic and the turquoise of her mantle had already revealed that she was from heaven and yet also of earth. The offering came from her but was made to the God to Whom she humbly inclined her head; simultaneously, her motherly glance said her offering was also given for them – the people!

For the Aztecs, a Virgin Mother was not beyond the realm of possibilities, since Tepeyac Hill was the former temple site for the pagan virgin-mother goddess, Tonantzin. This goddess, whose hair and garments were covered in snakes, had required human blood sacrifices (primarily desiring women and babies). In contrast, the Virgin Mother on Juan Diego's mantle symbolically told them she was not only more powerful than all of their gods and goddesses, but that she and the Child in her womb did not demand their blood sacrifices.

The Cross on the Jade Brooch: For the Spanish, the brooch spoke for itself. For the Aztecs, jade was a symbol of life. When a woman gave birth to a son, her husband gave her a gift made of jade, [40] and since the Woman on the Image wore a jade brooch, the Aztecs knew that this Maiden was married and also the Mother of a Son. That this jade brooch bore the imprint of the Cross also told the Aztecs that the Spanish missionaries were indeed teaching them of the true God, Who had died on a cross and is now risen.

The Message of Life: In fact, via every symbol of the rose-colored tunic, the all-encompassing message is summarized in one Nahuatl word: xihuitl, life. The people recognized the symbols of life “in the vegetation of her tunic, life in the five great streams of living water represented as the stems of the heart-shaped flowers, stems which were adaptations of the Nahuatl sign for atl, water.” [41] Instead of demanding the sacrifice of their lives, this gentle Virgin Mother was offering them eternal life. She prodded them to the life-giving waters of Baptism, the same Sacrament of which the Catholic missionaries taught, which meant conversion to the Triune God of Whom they spoke.

“Needless, then, were the vain attempts to prolong life on earth by feeding the Aztec sun god Huitzilopochtli with human blood, the divine liquid which he needed if he was to be strong enough to battle his way through the underworld and rise anew each day to cross the sky. Needless were their liturgies involving infant sacrifice” which they had previously and secretly continued. Again, the native meso-Americans recognized on the Virgin’s tunic the nine large magnolia blossoms, which were “their symbols for the yolloxochitl, the Heart Flower, which had formerly been a metaphor to them of the hearts of their countless sacrificial victims. [42]

The Angel before the Moon: At first glance, the angel with the eagle feathers seems to carry the Woman. His tunic is red, a symbol of his love for the Woman. His red, white, and blue feathered wings are the emblems of loyalty, faith, and fidelity. [43] According to Antonio Valeriano’s description of the Image, “the angel comes forth from a cloud” which, for the “Indians,” symbolized water and rain or the one true God, Ometéotl.

To the Aztecs, the angel signified that the Woman was a Queen and a great heavenly being, because in their culture both royalty and deities were carried. In addition, being held aloft by a bearer signified to the people that she came to Juan Diego (and through him, to them) of her own volition, because heavenly beings and royalty always told their bearers where to carry them.

A closer look reveals that one of the angel's hands holds the bottom of the Virgin's mantle (representative of heavenly life), while the other holds the bottom of her robe (symbolic of earthly life). The Aztec culture did not have an image of angels with wings, but their hieroglyphic codex easily identified him as a messenger and as the bearer of the noble lady. [\[44\]](#)

To the Catholics of the 16th century and beyond, perhaps the angel with the eagle's wings also allude to another mystery in the Apocalypse: “And there were given to the woman two wings of a great eagle, that she might fly into the desert unto her place, where she is nourished for a time and times, and half a time, from the face of the serpent.” [\[45\]](#) Since God sent Our Lady to Mexico, since Juan Diego's birth name meant “Eagle Who Speaks,” and since Mexico's emblem is an eagle devouring a snake on a cactus, perhaps God has a special plan for Mexico. It might be the place where the woman (the Virgin and the Church) will be nourished during the great apostasy foretold by St. Paul.

Part IV

Our Lady of Guadalupe and the Apocalypse: The Silent Signs of Prophecy

“For the invisible things of him, from the creation of the world, are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made; his eternal power also, and divinity: so that they are inexcusable.”

—Romans I: 20

Perhaps the greatest wonder of the Image of Our Lady of Guadalupe is its inexplicable preservation spanning almost five centuries. It has already been ascertained that the wondrous Portrait’s codex and cryptography is a missive of Divine Revelation, delivering the history of Redemption to the peoples of the past. Since the Image is miraculously sustained and it symbolically tells the whole story of salvation history, it seems credible that - for the people of the future - Guadalupe also contains a divine message.

Since the Virgin stands on the moon, before the sun, and wears a mantle donned with 46 stars, Father Miguel Sanchez - a 17th century Spaniard priest who first published in Spanish an account of the apparitions [46] - saw the Lady of Guadalupe as the woman described in Apocalypse, Chapter 12. [47] As the Holy Scriptures attest, the Lord uses the lights of heaven for signs: “And God said: Let there be lights made in the firmament of heaven, to divide the day and the night, and let them be for signs, and for seasons, and for days and years: To shine in the firmament of heaven, and to give light upon the earth. And it was so done. And God made two great lights: a greater light to rule the day; and a lesser light to rule the night: and the stars.” (Genesis 1:14-16)

According to Fr. Miguel Guadalupe, who wrote an in-depth study on the Image’s symbols, the ancient Hebrews understood that, through the Genesis verse, God revealed that He designed the lights of heaven to serve many purposes. Fr. Miguel writes, “In Hebrew, the word ‘season’ is ‘moed’ and signifies an appointed or fixed time,” further explaining that the Hebrews used a different word to indicate the seasons of spring, summer, fall, or winter. He continues, “‘Signs’ and ‘seasons,’ used by God with respect to the mission of the stars, were to indicate ‘happenings’ and the ‘periods of time’ pertaining to them, specifically for prophetic reasons, especially that of signifying historical incidents at chosen times as the plan of salvation unfolded.” [48] In addition, Fr. Bernard Kramer, an expert on the Apocalypse and author of The Book of Destiny, states: “In the Septuagint, [49] the word [sign] is used for celestial phenomena.” [50]

In brief, then, God uses the sun, the moon, and the stars as silent signs of prophecy. All of these signs appear on the Image of Guadalupe, and all of them except the stars have been previously addressed. Like the prophesied star of Jacob [51] which foretold Christ’s birth, the stars on Guadalupe’s mantle anticipate a particular era and events already foretold in Divine Revelation. It is reasonable to conclude that the Virgin of Guadalupe is directing mankind’s attention to the eschatological texts (referring to the last days) of the Gospels and the Apocalypse.

A Discovery about the Stars on Guadalupe’s Mantle

For centuries, no scholar or expert on the Image of Guadalupe investigated the meaning of the stars on Our Lady’s outer mantle. Then, after the 1981 publication of Phillip Callahan’s infra-red study [52] of St. Juan’s tilma, Fr. Mario Rojas Sánchez of Hidalgo, Mexico [who, in 1978, published his own translation of the Nican Mopohua into Spanish [53] wondered if the mantle’s stars were constellations that had appeared in the December 1531 winter sky. He had already discovered that the whole Portrait constituted a codex which, as previously mentioned, is a book or manuscript with ancient symbols and words to be deciphered. [54]

Callahan, it is said, was a devout Catholic who was granted permission to study the miraculous tilma. He took at least 40 infrared photographs of the Image. Later, he wrote in his report: “Infrared photography is recommended before any restoration or cleaning is attempted on old paintings. It is most important because one can often detect undersketching accomplished before the artist applied paint to the canvas. Infrared photography also enables one to determine the nature of the sizing under the paint, provided the layers are not too thick. No study of art work can be considered complete until the techniques of infrared photography have been utilized, and certainly no valid scientific study is complete without such an analysis.”

His conclusions regarding the Image of Guadalupe sparked a modern-day debate. He wrote that the infrared shows that the tilma has no sizing underneath and the original Image itself has no visible brushstrokes, commenting that certain sections of the painting (for want of a better word) were “inexplicable.” However, Callahan also claimed that the Image was heavily embellished with human additions. Others consider that the questioned elements were not additions but original elements of the Miraculous Image that were later “touched up.”

Admittedly, it is disturbing to think that anyone would dare to “retouch” a Miraculous painting. Still, parts of the painting are flaking, which seems to delight those who eschew miracles and heavenly apparitions. However, under the flakes are seen what appear to be original elements, especially the rays surrounding the Virgin. Furthermore, there are also sections of the Image which are not flaking, cracking, or showing any other signs of deterioration: the Virgin’s face, the rose robe, the hands, and the blue-green turquoise of the mantle (except for a small section on the bottom called the Aztec fold, which may have been “touched up” due to water damage).

At any rate, it was Callahan who also wrote on page 15 of his infrared report on the Image of Guadalupe: “The original figure, including the rose robe, blue mantle, hands and face...is inexplicable. In terms of this infrared study, there is no way to explain either the kind of color luminosity and brightness of pigments over the centuries. Furthermore, when consideration is given to the fact that there is no underdrawing, sizing, or over-varnish, and the weave of the fabric is itself utilized to give portrait depth, no explanation of the portrait is possible by infrared techniques. It is remarkable that after more than four centuries, there is no fading or cracking of the original figure on any portion of the agave tilma, which – being unsized – should have deteriorated centuries ago. Sometime after the original image was formed, the moon and the tassel were added by human hands, perhaps for some symbolic reason since the moon and the tassel were important to both Moorish-Spanish and Aztec mythologies. Sometime after the tassel and the moon were added, the gold and black line decorations, angel, Aztec fold of the robe, sunburst, stars and background were painted, probably during the 17th century. The additions were by human hands and impart a Spanish Gothic motif to the painting. In all probability, at the same time the tilma was mounted on a solid support, the orange coloring of the sunburst and white fresco were added to the background. The entire tilma for the first time was completely covered with paint. It seems unlikely that Juan Diego could have worn a tilma stiffened with fresco on the fabric to the Bishop’s palace. Therefore, the original must have been the simple figure on the cloth...”

“It is known that during the great flood of 1629 the Holy Portrait was taken from the Hermitage chapel by canoe to the cathedral in Mexico City, and that His Excellency Archbishop Don Francisco de Manzoyzuniga promised not to return the Virgin to the Hermitage until he could take her back with ‘dry feet’...The Image was returned in 1634...”

“In all probability the Holy Image, especially at the bottom and around the edges, suffered some water damage, and the angel and other decorations, as well as the outer fresco white, were added to cover up the damage. This is in no way different from the patches added to the Shroud of Turin to cover the fire damage to the Holy Relic.”

In the interest of transparency, encouraged by the Church because she allows these studies, it is possible that Callahan’s conclusions are correct. Reason would conclude, however, that some records or oral tradition would still exist if so many additions had been made. In fact, some historical records and events strongly indicate that the questioned elements were on the Image from the moment it appeared. Others contend that these same facts indicate the additions were made by some of the native artists in the early years of the miraculous Portrait’s existence. Since the Image is flaking only in certain areas, there are questions asking why. Was it touched up or were additions made (like a crown which is mentioned in old accounts but is not visible today) and then later removed?

To cite a few examples, Antonio Valeriano, a contemporary of St. Juan Diego’s who wrote the first Nican Mopohua, also penned a short work entitled In Tlmatzintli (The Tilma) in which he describes the Miraculous Image. (An English translation of the Nican Mopohua is included in Section II of this book.) All of the currently questioned elements are mentioned in his document. However, there are a few differences between Valeriano’s record and the Image as it appears today, which are as follows: The cincture is violet (not black); there is no mention of the crescent moon’s color (it is currently black because it seems to have been painted or painted over in real silver; silver always tarnishes) but he stated that the crescent moon’s points faced upward. Valeriano also specifically mentioned one hundred golden rays, some very long and others short, like flames, with twelve of them surrounding the Virgin’s face and head, and “some fifty” in all on either side. In addition, he alluded to a fact that above the veil there is a crown of gold with spires tapering upwards that are wider at the base. At this point in time, the crown is not visible, which indicates that it was “erased” later with paint, presumably because it was an addition and not a part of the original Image. The latter assumption is also strongly indicated because Valeriano stated that the crown was above the veil; he did not say it was resting on the Virgin’s head.

In fact, the fifth page of Callahan’s report may have inadvertently given a reason why certain parts of the Image were possibly humanly enhanced when he wrote: “It is a simple fact that if one stands close to the painting the face is very disappointing as far as depth and coloring are concerned. At a distance of six or seven feet, however, the skin tone becomes what might best be described as Indian-olive (gray-green) in tone. It appears that somehow the grey and ‘caked’ looking white pigment of the face and hands combines with the rough surface of the unsized tilma to ‘collect’ light and diffract from afar the olive-skinned hue. Such a technique would be an impossible accomplishment by human hands. It often occurs in nature, however, in the coloring of bird feathers and butterfly scales, and on the elytra of brightly colored beetles. Such colors are physically defracted colors and do not depend upon absorption and reflection from molecular pigments but rather on the surface-sculpturing of feathers or butterfly scales. The same physical effect is quite evident in the face and is easily observed by slowly backing away from the painting until the details of the imperfections in the tilma fabric are no longer visible. At a distance where the pigment and surface sculpturing blend together, the overwhelming beauty of the olive-colored Madonna emerges as if by magic.” As mentioned earlier, the Face of the Virgin is untouched, but it might be that elaborations were made to the stars, moon, angel, rays, etc. if it was judged that from a distance their depth or coloring were also “disappointing.”

There is another fact which, ironically, can either support the stance that the Image’s questioned elements were always a part of the prodigy on the tilma or that that they were very early additions. In 1570 (39 years after the miracle and almost 60 years before the 1629 flood), the new prelate, Archbishop Montufár, sent King Philip II of Spain a beautiful oil painting which was a copy of the Image. The oil painting is identical to the miraculous Portrait, including the moon, sun rays, angel, cloud, stars on the mantle, etc. This means that if any additions were made to the original Image, they were done long before 1570.

It thus becomes somewhat evident why Fr. Mario Rojas Sánchez had questions regarding Callahan's infrared report. Having already discovered some of the Aztec symbolism on the Image, Father decided to investigate the stars on the mantle.

He shared his intuition with a friend, Dr. Juan Homero Hernández Illescas, a medical doctor and a serious "amateur" astronomer. Dr. Illescas had an astronomical observatory on his roof, a Spitz Planetarium, an array of computer software that can calculate the positions of heavenly bodies at any time and in any century. He also possessed a collection of astronomical books, journals, and charts published by researchers and universities. [55]

Together, the two men discovered that the constellations on the Virgin's mantle are a "reverse" or "mirror image" of the stars' positions over Mexico City, just before sunrise on December 12, 1531 A.D. [56] The time and date are the very hour of Our Lady's last appearance to St. Juan Diego on the western side of Tepeyac Hill. It was also the same hour in which she appeared to his dying uncle, Juan Bernardino (who was miles away from Tepeyac Hill), cured him, and instructed him to tell the Bishop: "Call me and my image the Perfect Virgin Mary, Holy Mother of God, the one who crushes the serpent."

"What we see on the Image is the position of the stars as seen from above: God looks upon all of creation through Mary, the Immaculate One. He gives us the Gospel through her," as Fr. Miguel Guadalupe stated it. [57] Janet Barber, I.H.M., an authority on Guadalupe who translated the Nican Mopohua into English, said the stars appear on the Virgin's mantle as if Our Lady was looking down upon earth "from outside the dome of the heavens." [58]

In another work, she wrote that when the "image is reflected on a properly curved mirror to condense and 'straighten things out,' the image is reversed. Many, many galaxies and star clusters can be interpolated on the Image, just as the constellations can." [59] Barber further relates: "After I had poured over sky charts for weeks in Los Angeles, verifying the two men's identifications of each star, my traveling companion, Eilene Berg, I.H.M., and I were privileged to meet Dr. Hernández [Illescas] at his home in Mexico City, where he and his wife Doña Gloria showed us his original work on the project. We gasped when he held to the light a sky map corrected for 'reverse' anamorphosis [60] and Doña Gloria suddenly placed a photostatic copy of the Image behind it. The correspondences were overwhelming.” [61]

It is also important to note that, on the Image’s mantle, the distance between the stars and constellations is compacted, closer than they appear in the heavens. They are, as previously mentioned, in the correct positions as they would be viewed from Mexico City, an hour before dawn on December 12, 1531. The east/west axis (instead of the commonly accepted north/south axis) and the stars’ closer proximities are the most likely explanation as to why it is only in the past 30+ years that the arrangement of the mantle’s stars was not seriously investigated.

The Stars and Constellations on the Mantle

Guadalupe’s mantle displays 46 eight-pointed stars. (Coincidentally, eighteen of them correspond to twenty-four of the brightest stars viewed from earth, which naturally attract our attention.) To understand the stars’ placement on the Virgin’s mantle, imagine one is standing before the Image. Her face is turned to the viewer’s left, and the left tip of the crescent moon is slightly higher than the right side. Of the 46 stars on the Image, 24 are on the right and 22 are on the left. To first see an illustration of the stars and constellations, please click here.

The discovery of the Image’s east-west axis means the northern sky’s main winter constellations are instead seen on the mantle’s right (south) side. From the top right of Our Lady’s mantle, the 24 stars (either alone or as part of constellations) are as follows:

- Four stars in an almost straight-descending line, from the constellation Ophiucus (on the side of the Virgin’s head).
- Four stars from the constellation Scorpio (on the Virgin’s shoulder).
- All three major stars of the constellation Libra (closest to Her Immaculate Heart).
- Directly below Libra is a single star, Pi, the Hydra constellation’s tail.
- Almost directly across from the lone star Pi, on the outer right of the mantle, are two stars from the constellation Lupus (the Wolf).
- Below Lupus are five stars found in the constellation Centaurus.
- Below Centaurus is the complete four-starred Southern Cross.
- In the triangular fold of the mantle, just above the right tip of the crescent moon, is a single star, Procyon, the alpha star in the constellation

Canis Minor (the Lesser Dog, commonly known as the Little Dog). Here it should be noted that some Guadalupe illustrations confuse Procyon with Sirius.

On the mantle's left side, it is possible to view the Southern winter solstice constellations as they were viewed from Tepeyac Hill. From the mantle's left (top to bottom), the following 22 stars are seen:

- Four stars (including the alpha star Arcturus) in the constellation Boötes (the Herdsman).
- One star, the alpha star Diadem from the constellation Coma Berenices (Berenice's Hair).
- All seven stars in the constellation Ursa Major (the Great Bear).
- To the right of Ursa Major, two stars of the constellation Canes Venatici (the Hunting Dogs).
- Just below Ursa Major, two stars of the Lynx constellation.
- One star, the alpha star Thuban from the constellation Draco (the Dragon).
- Two stars from the constellation Auriga, the “she-goat” (one star above the bending fold in the mantle, and one star below it).
- Three stars on the mantle's bottom right, hanging like a priest's maniple, from the constellation Taurus.

“Different pointed stars have different meanings,” explained Abbot Dom Columban Hawkins of the Trappist Abbey of Our Lady of Guadalupe in Lafayette, Oregon. “An eight pointed star [as found on Guadalupe] means Holy Baptism and the regeneration-gifts God gave the Indians in such profusion through Our Lady.” [\[62\]](#) Moreover, eight is the symbolic number for the mystery of Christ as both God and Man, through Whom we receive the salvific sacraments, and/or it represents the Holy Trinity (because when the number “eight” is perfectly written, it has no beginning and no end, like God, the Alpha and the Omega, Who has no beginning and no end).

As we pursue decoding the stellar significance, may we keep in mind that the apparitions, the messages, and the Image itself are the first of heaven's interventions in the Modern Age. It is not a coincidence that, since biblical times, no era has witnessed such prodigies as have the last five centuries, and we should ask ourselves why.

When Our Lady personally came to Mexico in 1531, a great battle for souls was already underway. In that same year, Europe's Protestant Revolt resulted in the foundation of an anti-Catholic, anti-imperial alliance, which accelerated the already-existing religious, political and social revolution against Christ and His Church. [63] Dom Gueranger, author of the magnificent work The Liturgical Year, wrote:

“In the sixteenth century, even amidst their many divergences, the so-called Reformers agreed in utterly rejecting all the honors paid by the Catholic Church to the Blessed Virgin Mary, on the grounds that such veneration of the Mother detracted from the supreme worship due to her Divine Son. Four centuries have more than sufficed to show the result of so doing: the Son has followed the Mother! The descendants of those who refused to Mary the title and rights of Theotokos - Mother of God - refuse to Jesus the title of Son of God in the traditional sense of the term. Many reject His Godhead altogether, placing Him merely at the head of the line of great moral and social world-teachers; others still retain the word ‘divinity’ with respect to Him, but for them it is no longer synonymous with ‘deity.’” Since that century, the Modern Age has sprung one revolution after another, all of them demanding license from all authority, especially God's, under the guise of liberty.

Beginning in 1531, all true Marian apparitions are counter-signs against Satan, who constantly goads the pride of men to revolt against God. Satan's ultimate aim is mankind's seduction into the great apostasy, a time so evil that it gives rise to the anti-Christ, the one whom St. Paul called “the man of sin...son of perdition.” [64] In God's plan of Redemption, He wishes to crush Satan's pride under the feet of the humblest woman He created, the Immaculate Conception. This is the other title by which Guadalupe is recognized, but it should not be forgotten that by whatever title we address her, she is still the one and only “Perfect Virgin Mary, Holy Mother of God, the one who crushes the serpent.” [65] Just as in Mexico, Our Lady still converts people to Christ and His one, holy, Catholic, and apostolic Church, revealing her identity in such a way that the Church and the world should never forget her name or her office.

The Immaculate Conception is also the Woman of the Apocalypse (12:1), of whom St. John the Evangelist wrote “a great sign appeared in heaven: a woman clothed with the sun...” After her appearance in heaven (wherein “heaven” is the symbolic word for “the Church,” as biblical exegetes seem to agree), the apocalyptic red dragon openly manifests himself on the world scene, instigating revolts, insurrections, and persecutions against the Woman, her Son, and all of her other children in the order of grace. The last five centuries attest to the apocalyptic prophecy. “The various revolutions, then, represent the peaks of activity in what appears to be a steadily downward trend away from truth and goodness, although clearly God’s goodness, although clearly God’s grace is always at work in a hidden way, and [H]e is able to bring good out of apparent evil,” remarks Donal Anthony Foley, author of a work on Marian apparitions since the time of Guadalupe.

When objectively reflecting upon the last 500 years of world history, the consideration arises that perhaps God preserves St. Juan’s tilma because the Virgin’s Image is the apocalyptic “great sign in heaven” (that is, a great sign in the Church) that all mankind has entered the “last days.” With the incessant major rebellions against God since the 16th century, “it seems fair to say that these revolutions have been the major battles in a long-drawn-out war that has been going on for centuries now, a war that will go on until the end of time and the second coming of Christ.” [\[66\]](#)

Part V

Virgin of the Ages: The Message on the Mantle

“But neither will the Holy Virgin ever cease to succor us in our trials, however grave they be, and to carry on the fight fought by her since her conception, so that every day we may repeat: ‘Today the head of the serpent of old was crushed by her.’”

-Pope St. Pius X, Ad Diem Illum Laetissimum #25 (1904)

The last four sections explained that in her 1531 apparitions near Mexico City, Our Lady identified herself as “the one who crushes the serpent” and left an Image of herself, known as the Virgin of Guadalupe. Describing how the Image is a codex or form of cryptography, the preceding parts of this book reiterated that Guadalupe is a miraculously sustained Portrait, symbolically telling the whole story of salvation history. In this missive of Divine Revelation, the stars portrayed on the Image appear to be a very particular “message on the mantle.”

The previous section further explained that “God uses the sun, the moon, and the stars as silent signs of prophecy. All of these signs appear on the Image of Guadalupe, and all of them except the stars have been previously addressed. Like the prophesied star of Jacob which foretold Christ’s birth, the stars on Guadalupe’s mantle anticipate a particular era and events already foretold in Divine Revelation. It is reasonable to conclude that the Virgin of Guadalupe is directing mankind’s attention to the eschatological texts (referring to the last days) of the Gospels and the Apocalypse.” [\[67\]](#)

In concluding the examination of the Image’s message, it shall first be stated that this brief study on Guadalupe’s stars is not one of astrology. Rather, it is a commentary on signs in the biblical sense. As an earlier part of this work clarified, the Lord God said that all of the lights in the firmament of heaven are “for signs, and for seasons, and for days and years.” [\[68\]](#) The word “season” signifies an appointed or fixed time, as Fr. Miguel Guadalupe explained. He also wrote, “ ‘Signs’ and ‘seasons,’ used by God with respect to the mission of the stars, were to indicate ‘happenings’ and the ‘periods of time’ pertaining to them, specifically for prophetic reasons, especially that of signifying historical incidents at chosen times as the plan of salvation unfolded.”[69] Finally, it is important to also repeat what Fr. Bernard Kramer, an expert on the Apocalypse and author of The Book of Destiny, stated: “In the Septuagint, the word [sign] is used for celestial phenomena.”[70]

Decoding the Message on the Mantle

When the stars on Guadalupe’s mantle were matched to those in the heavens, a breath-taking discovery was made. Other stars and constellations intersect with the Image. High over the Virgin’s womb appears the constellation Leo, representing the Lion of Judah, the scriptural figure-type of Christ. [71] Intriguingly, the sun’s year (“the daystar” of the Scriptures, representing Christ) begins in the constellation of Virgo (the Virgin) and ends in Leo (the Lion), thus representing the cause and end of our redemption. Also worthy of note is the intersecting star, Regulus (Greek for “Little King”), which is the brightest star in the Leo constellation.

As Janet Barber, I.H.M. described the stellar intersections with the mantle, “the great Northern Crown, the Corona Borealis, lies invisibly at her temples; Virgo, the Virgin, on her virginal heart; [Gemini] the Twins, Castor and Pollux, on her knees, and Orion on the angel.” [72] With the exception of the last two, these interpolating constellations are self-explanatory. In my opinion, Gemini intersecting at the Virgin’s lap first signifies her Divine Son’s hypostatic union (both God and man), and it also bears simultaneous testimony that she is the mother of God and mankind. As for Orion, the “Hunter” constellation, its ancient Hebrew name is “coming forth as light,” and possibly signifies the Second Coming of Christ. [73]

Of all the constellations represented or partly intersecting with Guadalupe, the Holy Scriptures unquestionably mention three. Named thrice is Arcturus [74], which is the alpha star in the constellation Boötes and appears on the Virgin’s mantle), named twice is Orion [75], and named once is “the winding serpent” [76] which is the constellation Hydra, represented by one star on the mantle.

As previously mentioned, of the 46 stars on the Image, 24 are on the right and 22 are on the left, all of them representing 21 total constellations - seven on the right, seven on the left, and seven that intersect on the red robe (7 x 3). Here we see great symbolic significance because, in Divine Revelation, seven is the number of God’s spiritual perfection and three is the number of the Holy Trinity. In addition, 18 of these 46 stars are the brightest from earth's view. The Catholic Encyclopedia clarifies that it should "be understood that the numerical value of the Greek letters iota and eta, the first letters of the Holy Name [of Jesus, which in Greek is rendered Iesous], is 10 and 8 [the sum of which is] 18." [77] It seems, then, that the 18 brightest stars seen on every clear night declare the name of Jesus.

Since the number 46 is the product of 2×23 , one interpretation says the number "2" (represented by the two visible sides of the mantle) "is symbolic of the Church's witness of the Gospel [78] while 23 is symbolic of God's judgment on mankind. [79] In Scripture, the stars in collapse often symbolize the end of the world and the coming of Christ." [80] The stars on Guadalupe are in the correct positions for the pre-dawn hours of December 12, 1531 over Mexico City, but on the Image they are "in collapse" and much closer together than they actually appear in the night sky.

The next page illustrates the constellations which appear on the mantle, as well as other stars which invisibly intersect with the entire Image. The graphic was made by Dr. Juan Homero Hernández Illescas, the friend of Fr. Sánchez who helped him investigate the stars on the mantle.

The Mantle's Right Side

As shall be seen, the stars closer to the inner part of the mantle usually seem to represent the “good” constellations. Those on the outer edge presumably symbolize malicious ones. When looking at the Image, from the top right of Our Lady's mantle, the 24 stars (either alone or as part of constellations) are as follows:

- Four stars in an almost straight-descending line, from the constellation *Ophiucus (on the side of the Virgin's head). In Catholic symbolism, the number four represents universality or completion (for example, there are four marks of the Church – one, holy, Catholic, and apostolic). Ophiucus is called the serpent-holder, possibly symbolizing the masculine force (perhaps the office of the papacy) prophesied by St. Paul: “For the mystery of iniquity already worketh; only that he who now holdeth, do hold, until he be taken out of the way.” [81] Since the Protestant Revolution, the papacy has been under constant attack. St. Paul foretells that this masculine office or force is the only power that holds back the mystery of iniquity, for it was Christ Himself who instituted the papacy as the stewardship over His Church, and the Lord gave to it an authority that no other on earth holds.

- Four stars from the constellation *Scorpio (on the Virgin’s shoulder). When drawing out the entire constellation, its head faces the Virgin and its tail is poised to strike. Since Satan is the ape of God, these four stars may represent his universal demonic influence in the false religious assemblies which steal souls from the true Church. Moreover, the Apocalypse prophesies that those “who have not God’s sign on their foreheads” shall suffer a torment “as the torment of a scorpion,” also foretelling the four angels that shall be loosed from the Euphrates River “to kill the third part of men.” [82] Furthermore, Scorpio, Draco, and Hydra form a trio (an “unholy trinity”), indicating the apocalyptic dragon, the beast and the false prophet. [83]

- All three major stars of the constellation *Libra (closest to Her Immaculate Heart). Since the number three represents the Holy Trinity (Father, Son, and Holy Ghost), Libra’s measuring scales seem to indicate God’s justice. Intersecting with the Image, the scales are tilted, possibly acting as a shield against Scorpio in defense of the Virgin’s Immaculate Heart. The upturned scales may also serve as a three-point reminder that Jesus is Our Lord, Saviour, and Judge.

- Directly below Libra is a single star, Pi, the Hydra constellation’s tail. Taking almost 7 hours to fully rise from the horizon, “Hydra is the largest constellation in the sky. It is associated with a serpent, snake, or a dragon...Despite its appearance, Hydra is not a serpent or a dragon, he is a multi-headed monster.” [84] However, “the celestial Hydra is depicted with only one head, presumably the immortal one.” [85] On the Image, Hydra’s head lies beneath Guadalupe’s womb, as if waiting to devour the child that is born of her, directing our attention to Apocalypse 12:4.

- Almost directly across from the lone star Pi, on the outer right of the mantle, are two stars from the constellation Lupus (the Wolf). Always seeking to devour, the wolf is the natural enemy of man and beast. It may represent Satan's relentless pursuit for the ruin of souls. [86]

- Below Lupus are five stars found in the constellation Centaurus. The mythological Centaur was half man and half-horse. It possibly represents those among mankind who refuse to rise above their base natures, comprising the wicked on earth. [87]

- Below Centaurus is the complete four-starred Southern Cross. Clearly representing the sign of Christ's Cross, its Hebrew name of "Adom" literally means "cutting off." Initially, it seems to represent the race of Adam, which was "cut off" from God and the Beatific Vision until Christ the Messiah came to offer to the human race the gift of Redemption. It is also possibly a message that ancient Israel was "cut off" when it rejected Christ and the gift given to the Gentiles. Gentiles were pagans but they received and accepted the good news of the Gospel, and they then became God's inheritance (the new Israel) until their time is fulfilled. The Southern Cross also signifies the life of Christ, Who allowed His life to be "cut off" in the flower of His manhood.

- In the triangular fold of the mantle, just above the right tip of the crescent moon, is a single star, Procyon, the alpha star in the constellation *Canis Minor (in Latin, the "Lesser Dog"). In the night sky, Procyon is among the eighteen brightest stars. Procyon (from the Greek, meaning "before [the] dog") forms the Winter Triangle with two other bright stars, Sirius in Canis Major and Betelgeuse in Orion. Procyon is also a part of the Winter Hexagon, a more complex asterism with vertices at Aldebaran in Taurus, Capella in Auriga, Castor and Pollux in Gemini, Rigel in Orion and Sirius in Canis Major. [88]

In the Scriptures, the dog was always considered unclean. Even the etymology and the ancient stories of Procyon hold many negative or debased meanings. Therefore, Procyon, "the lesser dog," could represent the prophesied "little horn," the future anti-Christ. [89] solstice constellations, as they were seen from Tepeyac Hill in the pre-dawn hours of December 12, 1531. [90] From the mantle's left (top to bottom), the following 22 stars are observed:

The Mantle's Left Side

On the mantle's left side, it is possible to view the Southern winter

- Four stars (including the alpha star Arcturus) in the constellation Boötes (the Herdsman). Guadalupe's eyes seem to rest on this constellation, which represents Jesus, the Good Shepherd. [91] The constellation's shape is the Hebrew "tau," the letter which signifies the Cross and ransom atonement for sins. In the Greek, Boötes is the sign of "the coming one" and, since Christ has already come the first time, this constellation on the Image may be prophesying the second and final coming of Christ. [92]

- One star, the alpha star Diadem from the constellation Coma Berenices (Berenice's Hair). Its alpha star Diadem is considered the "gem" of the constellation, just as the Virgin Mary is the "jewel" of the human race. Coma means "the desired one." [93] In Greek, Berenice means "bringer of victory." Hence, "the desired one, the bringer of victory" points to the Genesis 3:15 prophecy of "the woman" (the Virgin Mary) and her seed (Christ). The constellation's name also brings to mind one of the Virgin's titles, Our Lady of Victories.

- All seven stars in the constellation Ursa Major (the Great Bear). This constellation's name literally means "great wild beast." In the Apocalypse (13:1-2) the beast "coming up out of the sea, with seven heads and ten horns" is described with "feet as the feet of a bear." In biblical prophecy and visions, the sea (due to its salt) represents the human race, conceived with Original Sin (the only exception among all humans is the Virgin Mary; who received from God the singular grace of being free from all sin from the first moment of her conception. This grace was granted to her because she was chosen to be the Mother of Our Savior, Jesus Christ.). The sign of the Great Bear is a warning against Satan's works accomplished through men. [94] In our own time, the Great Bear is a well-known symbol for Russia.

- To the right of Ursa Major, two stars of the constellation Canes Venatici (the Hunting Dogs). As previously mentioned, the Scriptures do not speak well of dogs; in fact, a great insult is meant when a biblical character refers to himself as a dog or is called one. To cite one example, the Lord God spoke through the prophet Isaiah, castigating the watchmen of Israel as "dumb dogs not able to bark" who meet with "impudent dogs." [95]

Those words expressed God's indictment against the spiritual shepherds (the watchmen) who were entrusted with guarding against all dangers to the sheepfold and also to seek (or hunt) those who strayed and bring them back to safety. The Lord God accused the Israelite watchmen of failing at their appointed task, and judged them as "dumb dogs" (silent dogs) which are "not able to bark" due to the silencing of their own consciences. Instead of guarding the ancient Faith, they instead consorted with "impudent dogs" (the brazen and presumptuous who would audaciously force themselves into the sheepfold in order to render and destroy it).

For these reasons, there is a sensible conjecture that Canes Venatici represents the shepherd's staff and his authority in the Church [96], which refers to the guidance and authority of every Catholic priest. The highest authority is always the Pope, who is the Shepherd of shepherds. On the Virgin's mantle, the close proximity of Canes Venatici to Ursa Major (the great wild beast, or bear) may serve as a reminder that, since the great beast is always looking for a chance to strike, the Pope and shepherds of the Church must be ever-vigilant in their duties to God and His people. The closeness of Ursa Major to Canes Venatici may also foretell the religious shepherds who do fail to rightly use their authority to teach, govern, and sanctify God's people.

- Just below Ursa Major, two stars of the Lynx constellation.

According to the Harvard Observatory, "Lynx is one of the more recently recognized constellations, having been named by astronomer Johannes Hevelius in the 17th century. The constellation was supposedly named because it was claimed to be so dim that it could only be seen by a person with the eyes of a lynx." [97]

Lynx may refer to the risen Christ's words to Thomas the Apostle, "blessed are they that have not seen and have believed." [98] Its two stars on the mantle may also indicate "the two olive trees and the two candlesticks that stand before the Lord of the earth" [99] foretold in the Apocalypse. (Representing God's mercy and light, these two individuals are believed to be Enoch and Elias, who shall return during the time of Anti-Christ to both encourage those who are faithful to Jesus Christ and convert unbelievers).

What is very interesting about Lynx is that, although it had no name at the time of the Guadalupe apparitions, it nonetheless appears on the Image. The constellation has eight stars (eight is Christ's symbolic number) but so far, only the fourth brightest has a name: Alsciaukat (from the Arabic, meaning “thorn”), also known as Mabsuthat, “the outstretched” (supposedly referring to a paw). [100]

- One star, the alpha star Thuban from the constellation Draco (the Dragon). In drawing the entire constellation, the head of Draco comes within a short space of Our Lady’s head. It is significant that Draco’s alpha star appears on the mantle, symbolizing the eternal enmity between the Virgin and the devil. [101]

- Two stars from the constellation Auriga, the “she-goat” (one star above the bending fold in the mantle, and one star below it). Since ancient times, Auriga is said to be a shepherd holding a she-goat. In the Old Testament, one sin offering was an unblemished she-goat, a considerable sacrifice since the prize female animals built the herd. [102]

The true Church is always referred to as a “she” since she is the Bride of Christ, and the Church’s children are called sheep and lambs, but never are they referred to as goats. It seems likely that a “she-goat” represent all spiritual forces which oppose Christ and His true Church. It may then indicate a false church or “religion” opposed to the Roman Catholic Church (and this did indeed happen with many schisms prior to the “Great Schism” of the Protestant Revolt, which was well underway when the Virgin appeared to St. Juan Diego). Because the she-goat is on the lap of a shepherd, it seems to specifically indicate a false church with a false shepherd. This could further symbolize an “anti-Church” that outwardly imitates the Roman Catholic Church but teaches false doctrines or perhaps a subversive infiltration into the true Church; the many sects which wrongly believe they are Christian but are, objectively speaking, heretical, and other false religions which have dreadfully forceful but persuasive leaders. According to another possible interpretation, the goat represents those who rejected the Lamb and are eternally lost. [103]

- Three stars on the mantle’s bottom right, hanging like a priest’s maniple, from the constellation Taurus. Orion’s bow points at Taurus, the bull. One view is that Orion opposing Taurus signifies the final battle between St. Michael and his angels and the dragon and his angels. [104] This is because the bull, a ferocious and large animal, attacks and gores anything it perceives as a threat.

In Aztec cryptology, however, this part of the turquoise mantle, with the “number” of its color (10) and the stars (3), announced the Aztec year of Guadalupe’s appearance: 13 Acátl, also known as “Thirteen Reed.” [105] Thirteen is the representative number for Christ and the 12 Apostles. It also became the central date for the Fatima apparitions, where once more Our Lady appeared as “a woman clothed with the sun.” [106]

In a word, “Our Lady of Guadalupe really is the great sign of Apocalypse 12. She is the irrefutable promise of the consummation of all things.” [107] The Image attests to the Scriptures which declare that the final judgment of the human race will be accompanied by astronomical events which include the stars. [108] Salvation history continues to unfold, as does the Message on the miraculous Image known as the Virgin of Guadalupe, who instructed the Church: “Call me and my image the Perfect Virgin Mary, Holy Mother of God, the one who crushes the serpent.”

In Tilmatzintli
“The Tilma”
by Antonio Valeriano

The following account of the tilma and the miraculous Image on it was written by Don Antonio Valeriano, a contemporary of St. Juan Diego. He was a well-known Indian convert to the Catholic Faith who became a scholar. He could read and write the Nahuatl language, Latin, and Spanish. It is said that Don Valeriano was a relative of the Emperor Montezuma, and that he personally knew St. Juan Diego. It is he who also wrote the Nican Mopohua, the original chronicle of the Tepeyac apparitions and the Miracle of the Flowers and the Image of the Immaculate Virgin, which is also included in this section.

The tilma on which the image of the Lady from heaven was miraculously imprinted was the ayate of Juan Diego, a coarse material but well sewn. The ayate was the garment worn by poor Indians; only nobles and the warriors wore garments made of cotton. The tilma worn by Juan Diego was made from ichtli, or threadlike strands from the maquey plant. The tilma on which the image of the Ever Virgin, our Queen, appeared was made of two pieces of cloth sewn together at one end with a fine thread and worn over the shoulders, with the two lengthy pieces hanging down the front and back.

The height of the blessed image, from the feet to the little crown on her head measures four feet nine inches. Her beautiful face is serious and noble but somewhat dark. Her posture is humble and her hands are folded in front of her chest, at the height of her cincture. The cincture itself is violet in color. Only the right foot reveals the toe of the shoe, which is ash-colored. Her tunic, so far as it is visible, is pink, but in the shaded areas it is bright red or ruby. The pattern of the tunic is that of various flowers, all in bloom, outlined in gold. At her neck she wears a round, golden brooch with black lines surrounding it and a cross in the center. Another soft, white garment can also be seen underneath which encircles the wrists snugly and has a highly embroidered pattern. The outside of her mantle is sky-blue, and it flows down from the top of her head to her feet, without ever covering her face. The mantle is pulled back, as it were, to reveal the front of the tunic. Its border is relatively wide and is of gold, with approximately forty-six gold stars scattered throughout.

Her head is inclined to the right, and on top of her head, above the veil, is a crown of gold with spires tapering upwards that are wider at the base. The crescent moon is under her feet, with its points facing upward. Her image is in the center of the sun, which sends forth its rays from behind the Lady, surrounding her entirely. There are one hundred golden rays, some very long and others short, like flames. Twelve surround her face and head, and some fifty on either side. Around the periphery there is a white cloud which follows the outline of the whole.

This precious image moves supported by an angel, whose figure terminates at the waist and nothing is seen of its lower body. It is as if the angel is emerging from the cloud. The extremities of the mantle and clothing of the Lady, which reach all the way down to her feet, are held up by the hands of the angel, who is dressed up in a red tunic with a gold collar. His outspread wings are covered up with brightly-colored long feathers. The hands of the angel hold up and support the Virgin and he seems quite content to thus carry the Queen of heaven.

Nican Mopohua: “Here It is Told”

An English Language Translation

Don Antonio Valeriano, as mentioned previously, was a famous Indian convert. It is believed that he wrote the following account between 1540 and 1555 A.D. Originally written in the symbolic Nahuatl, the spoken language of the Aztecs, this account was eventually translated into Spanish and later into English. Brother Francis Mary Kalvelage, F.I., editor of “A Handbook on Guadalupe,” notes that the phrase “Holy Mary of Guadalupe” is found in the earliest accounts of the Nican Mopohua, adding, “However, it seems unlikely that she used the Spanish, Santa Maria de Guadalupe, since the Indians had a difficult time in pronouncing the ‘g’ and ‘d’ sounds, which were unknown to them.” He also adds that “the Spanish were notorious in not being able to pronounce Nahuatl words. They would naturally changes names of people, places, etc. into Spanish words having a similar sound.”

There are many English translations of the Nican Mopohua, and none of them are identical. The version below utilizes several English translations for the account – but with one difference. In order to be as authentic as possible, the words of Our Lady are a literal translation from the Spanish to English, a work done by Janet Barber, I.H.M. She wrote the English translation below from a Nahuatl to Spanish translation made by the Nahuatl scholar, Fr. Mario Rojas Sánchez. It was he who made the discoveries about the stars on the mantle, as well as the Aztec comprehension of the Image.

Here follows a carefully ordered account of the marvelous manner in which the Ever Virgin Holy Mary, Mother of God, Our Queen, recently appeared on Tepeyac Hill, known as Guadalupe. She first appeared to a poor Indian, worthy of respect, Juan Diego; and afterwards her beautiful Image appeared [on his tilma] in the presence of the new Bishop, Friar Don Juan de Zumárraga.

Ten years after the fall of the city of Mexico, when arrows and shields were put aside and there was peace in the villages, the faith and knowledge of the true God, Author of life, had begun to put forth shoots and blossom. At that time, in the year 1531, a few days after the beginning of December, there was a humble man of the people, Juan Diego, a native of Cauhtitlan, who worshipped at the chapel of Tlatilolco.

He was on his way to pursue the study of God and His Commandments at the small church in Tlatilolco. It was still dark on Saturday when he set out. Dawn was breaking as he arrived at the foot of Tepeyac Hill. He heard singing from the crest of the hill, which sounded like the song of many birds. When at times their voices quieted, the hillside seemed to echo in response. Their singing, very soft and pleasant, surpassed that of the coyoltototl and tzinizcan and other fine song birds. Juan Diego stopped to look and thought, "Could I be worthy of what I'm hearing? Am I dreaming? Am I arising from sleep? Where am I? Perhaps in the earthly paradise of flowers and corn, about which our ancestors spoke? Maybe already in heaven?" He was looking toward the summit and to the dawning of the east of the foothill to see the source of the beautiful heavenly singing, when suddenly it stopped and silence fell, and he heard someone calling him from the top of the hill, saying "Juan, dearest Juan Diego."

He then climbed the hill in the direction of the voice, not at all frightened but, rather, feeling extremely happy. Upon reaching the summit, he saw a lady standing there who told him to come closer. He was filled with awe and admiration by her splendor. Her clothing was radiant like the sun; the crag on which her foot was resting was giving off rays of light, and looked like a bracelet of precious stones; even the earth glistened like the mist of a rainbow. The mesquite bushes, prickly pears, and other lowly herbs and grasses which usually grow there seemed like emeralds, the foliage like fine turquoise, and the branches and thorns shining like gold.

He bowed before her, hearing her very gentle, polite words which were delivered as to someone very respected. She said: "Listen, Juan, my dearest and youngest son, where are you going?" He answered, "My Lady, my Queen and my little Girl I am going to your house in Mexico-Tlatilolco to continue the study of the divine mysteries taught us by the images of Our Lord, the priests." She spoke then, revealing her blessed will, saying:

"Know, know for sure, my dearest, littlest, and youngest son, that I am the perfect and ever Virgin Holy Mary, Mother of the God of truth through Whom everything lives, the Lord of all things near us, the Lord of heaven and earth. I want very much to have a little house built here for me, in which I will show Him, I will exalt Him and make Him manifest. I will give Him to the people in all my personal love, in my compassion, in my help, in my protection: because I am truly your merciful Mother, yours and all the people who live united in this land and of all the other people of different ancestries, my lovers, who love me, those who seek me, those who trust in me. Here I will hear their weeping, their complaints and heal all their sorrows, hardships and sufferings. And to bring about what my compassionate and merciful concern is trying to achieve, you must go to the residence of the Bishop of Mexico and tell him that I sent you to show him how strongly I wish him to build me a temple here on the plain; you will report to him exactly all you have seen, admired and what you have heard.

Know for sure I will appreciate it very much, be grateful and reward you. And you? You will deserve very much the reward I will give you for your fatigue, the work and trouble that my mission will cause you. Now, my dearest son, you have heard my breath, my word; go now and put forth your best effort.”

At this, he bowed low before her and said, “My Lady, I am going now to carry out your charge; for the present, I, your poor servant, take leave of you.” He then descended the hill, intent on fulfilling her command, and continued on along the causeway which goes directly to Mexico City. Once inside the city, he went without delay to the residence of the Bishop, a new prelate, who had only recently arrived. His name was Friar Don Juan de Zumárraga, a religious of St. Francis. As soon as he got there he tried to see him, begging the servants to announce him. After a long while they came to call him, the Bishop having ordered that he should enter.

Upon entering, he bowed and knelt before him and immediately gave him the message of the Lady from heaven, telling him everything he had admired and had seen and heard. After hearing the story and the message, the Bishop didn’t seem to believe him and said, “You will come again, my son, and I will hear what you have to say at greater leisure; I shall look into the matter carefully from the very beginning and give much thought and consideration to the request you have brought me.” He left feeling sad, because the message entrusted to him was not immediately accepted. He returned that same day, heading directly to the crest of the hill and found the Lady from heaven waiting for him on the very spot where he first saw her. He fell to his knees before her, saying:

“My dearest little Mistress, Lady, and Queen, my littlest Daughter, my dear little Girl, I went where you sent me to carry out your order. Although it was difficult for me to enter the Bishop's quarters, I saw him and explained your message exactly as instructed. He received me kindly and listened with attention; but as soon as he answered, it was apparent that he did not believe it; he said, "You will come back some other time, and I shall listen to what you say at greater leisure; and I shall examine it from the very beginning and think about the request you have delivered."

"The way he answered me I could clearly see that he thinks I made have made it up, about your wanting a little house built for you here, or that it is not from you. So I beg you, my Lady, Queen, and my little Girl, to send one of the nobles who are held in high esteem and respected with the message, so that it will be believed; for I am a man of no importance, a backframe, a follower. You are sending me to a place that I am not used to spending my time, my little Virgin, my youngest Daughter, my Lady. Forgive me if I grieve you and you are angry with me."

The Most Holy Virgin, worthy of all honor and veneration, answered:

"Listen to me, my youngest and dearest son, know for sure that I do not lack servants and messengers to whom I can give the task of carrying out my words, who will carry out my will. But it is very necessary that you plead my cause and, with your help and through your mediation, that my will be fulfilled. My youngest and dearest son, I urge and firmly order you to go to the Bishop again tomorrow. Tell him in my name and make him fully understand my intention that he start work on the chapel I'm requesting. Tell him again that I am the ever Virgin, Holy Mary, the Mother of God, who is sending you."

Juan answered, "My Lady, Queen, my little Girl; I do not wish to give you anguish, pain, or grieve your heart; I shall go very gladly as you command; I shall by no means give up, nor do I consider it any trouble. I shall go to fulfill your wish; but I may not be heard or, if heard, still not believed. Tomorrow afternoon, when the sun goes down, I shall return to give you an account of the Bishop's answer. I must now take leave of you, my youngest Daughter, little Maiden, my little Girl and Lady. Rest well in the meantime." Then he went to his home to rest.

The following day was Sunday and in the very early dawn he left his house going directly to Tlatilolco for religious instruction. He arrived just before ten o'clock and heard Mass, keeping his mission in mind. Once the crowd had dispersed, he set out for the Bishop's residence. As soon as he got there, he insisted on seeing the Bishop, and after many difficulties was allowed in. Kneeling down before him, he repeated sadly and tearfully the demand he brought from the Lady from heaven. He was extremely anxious to be believed and that the Bishop comply with the wish of the Perfect Virgin that a place of worship be erected on the spot she had clearly indicated.

The Bishop, in order to verify the matter, asked many questions. Where had he seen her? What was she like? He gave a full account of everything. But even though he recounted with great exactitude what she was like and all he had seen and marveled at, and the Bishop saw that it was the Perfect Virgin, Mother of the Saviour, he was unable to act without further evidence. He said he could not carry out the order only on his word and request, but that it was necessary to give him a sign that the message had come from the Lady from heaven herself. As soon as he heard that, Juan Diego said, "Lord Bishop, what kind of sign do you require? I shall go and request it of the Lady from heaven who sent me."

When the Bishop saw that he confirmed everything and did not hesitate or doubt in the slightest, he dismissed him. He had him followed by members of the household whom he trusted so that they could watch and see where he went, whom he saw and spoke to. This they did. When Juan Diego came directly to the causeway, those who were following him lost sight of him on the wooden bridge where the brook comes out near Tepeyac; and although they looked everywhere, there was no trace of him to be found. So they turned back, annoyed not only because he had slipped out of sight, but because he had frustrated their attempt in shadowing him. After telling the Bishop what had happened, they urged him not to believe his story, that Juan was lying, making up a story, dreaming or imagining the whole thing.

They agreed that if he should ever come back, they would grab him and punish him severely so that he would never tell lies nor get the people all excited. In the meantime, Juan Diego was with the Most Holy Virgin giving her the Bishop's reply. Upon hearing it, she said:

"That is fine, my youngest and dearest son; you will return here tomorrow so that you may take the sign he asked for. Then, he will believe and no longer doubt or be suspicious of you; and know, my dear son, I shall reward your care, work and fatigue on my behalf. Go now; tomorrow, I shall be here waiting for you."

Upon arriving home Sunday, he found his uncle, Juan Bernardino, seriously ill and in danger of death. First, he went for the native healer who treated him, but he was too late. The next day, Monday, when Juan Diego was to take the sign to the Bishop in order to be believed, he did not return. During the night, the uncle begged him to go to Tlatilolco to bring a priest to hear his confession and prepare him for dying, knowing that his time had arrived, and that he would never get well.

Early in the morning of Tuesday, in the middle of the night, Juan Diego was already on his way to Tlatilolco for a priest. As he approached the road that passes at the side of the foothill of Tepeyac toward the west, which was his usual route, he thought, "If I take the direct path, the Lady may see me and I must not be detained by the sign she wished to give me. I must hurry to get a priest first, since my poor uncle is anxiously waiting for him." So Juan Diego took another path around the hill which crosses toward the east side in order to reach Mexico more quickly and not be detained by the Queen of Heaven. He thought this would prevent his being seen by her, but she was watching him from where she saw him before.

She came down the hill and blocked his way and said to him:

"What is happening, dearest and youngest of my sons? Where are you going? Where are you headed?"

And he, regretful, ashamed, and fearful, prostrated himself before her and said in greeting:

"My little Maiden, my youngest Daughter, my Girl, I hope that you are happy. How are you this morning? Do you feel well? Although it grieves me and may cause you anguish, I must tell you that one of my servants, my uncle, is very ill. A terrible sickness has struck him down and he will die soon.

"And now I hurry to your little house in Tlatilolco to call on the beloved ones of Our Lord, our priests, to hear his confession and prepare him for death. For we all are born for that and await the difficult day of our own death. Although I go, I shall return right away to take care of your message, my Lady and my little Maiden. I beg you to forgive me, be patient with me a little longer, because I am not deceiving you, my youngest Daughter, my little Girl. Tomorrow without fail, I will return as fast as possible." After hearing Juan Diego's words, the most merciful Virgin spoke:

"Listen, put it into your heart, my youngest and dearest son, that the thing that disturbs you, the thing that afflicts you, is nothing. Do not let your countenance, your heart be disturbed. Do not fear this sickness of your uncle or any other sickness, nor anything that is sharp or hurtful. Am I not here, I whom am your Mother? Are you not under the shadow of my protection? Am I not the source of your joy? Are you not in the hollow of my mantle, in the crossing of my arms? Do you need anything more? Let nothing else worry you, disturb you. Do not let your uncle's illness worry you, because he will not die now. You may be certain that he is already well." [And at that moment the uncle was restored to health, as they were to learn later.]

When Juan Diego heard this from the Queen of Heaven, he felt better, was comforted and at peace. He begged her to send him to the Bishop without delay with some sign that he would be believed. The Lady from heaven told him:

"Go up, my dearest son, to the top of the hill, to where you saw me and received my directions and you will find different kinds of flowers. Cut them, gather them, put them all together, then come down here and bring them before me."

Juan Diego went up the hill immediately and, upon reaching the crest, was astonished to find so many beautiful, exotic varieties of fine, full-bloomed flowers since it was out of season, being the time of the biting frost. They were very fragrant and covered with night dew, which gleamed like precious pearls. He went around cutting and gathering them and placed them inside the fold of his tilma. The top of the hill was no place for flowers to grow; it was stony and full of nothing but thistles, thorns, prickly pears, and mesquites. At times grass grew there, but this was the month of December when frost kills everything. He hurried down the hill, taking the flowers to the heavenly Maiden. She took them into her precious hand and rearranged them in his tilma, saying:

"My youngest and dearest son, these different kinds of flowers are the proof, the sign that you will take to the Bishop. You will tell him from me that he is to see in them my desire, and therefore he is to carry out my wish, my will. And you, who are my messenger, in you I place my absolute trust. I strictly order you not to unfold your tilma or reveal its contents until you are in his presence. You will relate to him everything very carefully: how I sent you to the top of the hill to cut and gather flowers, all you saw and marveled at in order to convince the Governing Priest so that he will then do what lies within his responsibility so that my house of God which I requested will be made, will be built.”

After the Lady from heaven had finished her instructions, he set out along the causeway leading directly to Mexico City. Happy now, and feeling sure that this time everything would go well, he held his precious burden close to protect it and prevent any of its contents from falling out, while delighting in the fragrance of the beautiful flowers. When he arrived at the residence of the Bishop, the doorkeeper and the other servants stepped out to meet him. He begged them to inform the Bishop how urgent it was that he see him, but they all refused pretending they did not hear him, either because it was still dark, or because they knew him from his other visits and felt he was giving them trouble with his repeated visits.

Also, they had already been informed by their companions of how he had slipped from their sight the time they had been ordered to follow him. When they saw him standing there a long time, head lowered, doing nothing in case he should be called, they noticed that he seemed to be carrying something. Out of curiosity, they went over to him and tried to see what it was that he was carrying.

When Juan Diego saw that he couldn't hide what he carried, and fearing that they would continue to damage the flowers, he opened the folds of his tilma a bit to give them a peek. When they saw that it contained exquisite, different, blooming flowers out of season, they were awed. They were impressed how fresh they were, how open their corollas were, how good they smelled, and how beautiful. They dared to snatch some of them away from him three times but they could not succeed. They no longer saw real flowers, but flowers which seemed to be painted, embroidered on the tilma.

They went right away to tell the Bishop what they had seen and informed him about the humble Indian who had come before and was waiting a long time to see him. Hearing this, the Bishop realized that Juan had the proof he needed to convince him to carry out Our Lady's wish. He immediately ordered them to show him in. Upon entering, Juan Diego prostrated himself before the Bishop as he had done the other times, reporting everything he had seen and marveled at, and repeating her message. He said:

“Your Excellency, I did as you ordered, telling my Mistress, the Heavenly Maiden, Holy Mary, the Beloved Mother of God, that you were asking for proof so that you could believe me, so that you could build her sacred little house that she requested. I told her that I had promised to bring you some sign of proof just as you requested. She listened carefully to your word and was pleased to receive your request for a sign, so that her beloved will could be carried out. Today, while it was still night, she ordered me to see you again. I asked for the proof, so that I would be believed, and she kept her promise immediately, sending me up a hill where I had seen her before to cut various roses and other flowers.

Although I knew very well that the top of the hill wasn't the place where flowers grow, because it is full of craggy rocks, thorns, spiny acacias and mesquite bushes, I didn't doubt or hesitate one minute to do her bidding. When I arrived at the crest of the hill, it seemed as if I were in paradise, because there in one place was a great variety of different precious flowers, all exquisite and sparkling with dew, which I set about gathering. After I brought them down to her, she took them in her holy hands and rearranged them in the hollow of my ayate for me to bring and present to you in person. She told me to give them to you from her so that you would recognize the sign you requested and comply with her wishes, and also to show you that I was truthful. Here they are, please receive them."

He then opened his white mantle which held the flowers and, as the different precious flowers fell to the floor, then and there the beloved Image of the Perfect Virgin, Holy Mary, Mother of God, suddenly appeared in the form and figure in which it remains to this day and is preserved in her chapel at Tepeyac called Guadalupe. Upon seeing it, the Bishop and all those present fell to their knees full of awe and reverence, greatly affected and moved by what they saw. They then grew sad, they wept, and their hearts and minds were in ecstasy.

The Lord Bishop prayed in tears begging forgiveness for not having immediately carried out her will to do what she wanted. He rose to his feet, and untied the mantle from around Juan Diego's neck on which the Heavenly Queen's Image was imprinted, and took it to his private chapel. He detained Juan Diego, who remained another day at the Bishop's house. The following day he said: "Come, let us go to see the place where the Lady from heaven wants her temple to be built." People were immediately invited to build her 'sacred little house.' As soon as Juan Diego had pointed out where the Lady from heaven wanted her chapel to be built, he asked permission to leave. He wanted to see his uncle who had been gravely ill when he left for Tlatilolco to call the priest to confess him and prepare him for dying.

But they didn't let Juan Diego go alone; a number of people went with him to his house. Upon arriving, they saw the uncle was well and happy without ache or pain. He was surprised to see his nephew accompanied by so many people and inquired as to the cause for so much honor and attention. The nephew explained that when he had left to bring the priest to hear his confession and prepare him for dying, the Lady from heaven had appeared to him on Tepeyac, and that she had consoled him greatly by telling him not to worry because his uncle was already restored to health. She then had sent him to Mexico City to ask that a house be erected for her on Tepeyac.

The uncle then revealed that it was indeed at that same moment he was suddenly restored to health, when she appeared in much the same way as she had appeared to his nephew. She related too that she had sent Juan to see the Bishop in Mexico. At the same time, the Lady told Juan Bernardino that as soon as he saw the Bishop, he must reveal to him the miraculous manner in which she had effected his cure and that he should convey to him the proper name for her blessed Image, The Perfect Virgin, Holy Mary of Guadalupe.

Then they took Juan Bernardino before the Bishop so he might speak to him and give him his testimony. Both Juan Bernardino and his nephew stayed at the Bishop's residence several days, until the chapel of the little Queen of Tepeyac was erected where she revealed herself to Juan Diego. The Reverend Bishop had the Holy Image of the beloved heavenly Maiden transferred from the oratory to the main church, so that all the people could see and admire it. Absolutely, the whole city came to see and admire her precious Image and pray before it. They marveled at the miraculous way it had appeared, since absolutely no one on earth could have painted her beloved Image.

Guadalupe is the Immaculate Conception

“Raise up your heads, then, ye children of Adam, and shake off your chains!”

Feast of the Immaculate Conception, December 8

By Dom Gueranger

When Our Lady first appeared to St. Juan Diego, she chose the daybreak on her own Feast Day, the Immaculate Conception. Just as the morning star appears before the sun rises, the Virgin Mary is also appearing before the Second Coming of her Son, Jesus Christ, Our Lord. The wondrous dogma of the Immaculate Conception was infallibly defined by Blessed Pope Pius IX in 1854. The dogma defines that the Virgin Mary, from the first moment of her existence, was conceived without sin. She isn't the immaculate result of conception but she is the Immaculate Conception. The Immaculate Conception is not a miracle of God to ponder only during Advent. The Holy Trinity granted this singular grace to the Virgin because she was chosen by God to be the Mother of God, the woman foretold in Genesis 3:15 who will crush the serpent's head. In his essay below, Dom Gueranger explains how this mystery of God occurred, which will be understood by people of goodwill.

At length, on the distant horizon, rises, with a soft and radiant light, the aurora of the Sun which has been so long desired. The happy Mother of the Messiah was to be born before the Messiah Himself; and this is the day of the Conception of Mary. The earth already possesses a first pledge of the Divine mercy; the Son of Man is near at hand. Two true Israelites, Joachim and Anne, noble branches of the family of David, find their union, after long barrenness, made fruitful by the Divine omnipotence. Glory be to God, Who has been mindful of His promises, and Who deigns to announce, from the high heavens, the end of the deluge of iniquity, by sending upon the earth the sweet white dove that bears the tidings of peace!

The feast of the blessed Virgin's Immaculate Conception is the most solemn of all those which the Church celebrates during the holy time of Advent; and if the first part of the cycle had to offer us the commemoration of some one of the mysteries of Mary, there was none whose object could better harmonize with the spirit of the Church in this mystic season of expectation. Let us, then, celebrate this solemnity with joy; for the Conception of Mary tells us that the Birth of Jesus is not far off.

The intention of the Church, in this feast, is not only to celebrate the anniversary of the happy moment in which began, in the womb of the pious Anne, the life of the ever-glorious Virgin Mary; but also to honor the sublime privilege, by which Mary was preserved from the Original stain, which, by a sovereign and universal decree, is contracted by all the children of Adam the very moment they are conceived in their mother's womb. The faith of the Catholic Church on the subject of the Conception of Mary is this: that at the very instant when God united the soul of Mary, which He had created, to the body which it was to animate, this ever-blessed soul did not only not contract the stain, which at that same instant defiles every human soul, but was filled with an immeasurable grace which rendered her, from that moment, the mirror of the sanctity of God Himself, as far as this is possible to a creature. The Church with her infallible authority declared, by the lips of Pius IX, that this article of her faith had been revealed by God Himself. The Definition was received with enthusiasm by the whole of Christendom, and the eighth of December of the year 1854 was thus made one of the most memorable days of the Church's history.

It was due to His Own infinite sanctity that God should suspend, in this instance, the law which His Divine justice had passed upon all the children of Adam. The relations which Mary was to bear to the Divinity could not be reconciled with her undergoing the humiliation of this punishment. She was not only daughter of the eternal Father; she was destined also to become the very Mother of the Son, and the veritable bride of the Holy Ghost. Nothing defiled could be permitted to enter, even for an instant of time, into the creature that was thus predestined to contract such close relations with the adorable Trinity; not a speck could be permitted to tarnish in Mary that perfect purity which the infinitely holy God requires even in those who are one day to be admitted to enjoy the sight of His Divine majesty in Heaven; in a word, as the great Doctor St. Anselm says, "it was just that this holy Virgin should be adorned with the greatest purity which can be conceived after that of God Himself, since God the Father was to give to her, as her Child, that only-begotten Son, Whom He loved as Himself, as being begotten to Him from His own bosom; and this in such a manner, that the selfsame Son of God was, by nature, the Son of both God the Father and this blessed Virgin. This same Son chose her to be substantially His Mother; and the Holy Ghost willed that in her womb He would operate the conception and birth of Him from Whom He Himself proceeded.”

Moreover, the close ties which were to unite the Son of God with Mary, and which would elicit from Him the tenderest love and the most filial reverence for her, had been present to the Divine thought from all eternity: and the conclusion forces itself upon us that therefore the Divine Word had for this His future Mother a love infinitely greater than that which He bore to all His other creatures. Mary's honor was infinitely dear to Him, because she was to be His Mother, chosen to be so by His eternal and merciful decrees. The Son's love protected the Mother. She, indeed, in her sublime humility, willingly submitted to whatever the rest of God's creatures had brought on themselves, and obeyed every tittle of those laws which were never meant for her: but that humiliating barrier, which confronts every child of Adam at the first moment of his existence, and keeps him from light and grace until he shall have been regenerated by a new birth - oh! this could not be permitted to stand in Mary's way, her Son forbade it.

The eternal Father would not do less for the second Eve than He had done for the first, who was created, as was also the first Adam, in the state of original justice, which she afterwards forfeited by sin. The Son of God would not permit that the woman, from whom He was to take the nature of Man, should be deprived of that gift which He had given even to her [Eve] who was the mother of sin. The Holy Ghost, Who was to overshadow Mary and produce Jesus within her by His Divine operation, would not permit that foul stain, in which we are all conceived, to rest, even for an instant, on this His Bride. All men were to contract the sin of Adam; the sentence was universal; but God's Own Mother is not included. God Who is the author of that law, God Who was free to make it as He willed, had power to exclude from it her whom He had predestined to be His Own in so many ways; He could exempt her, and it was just that He should exempt her; therefore, He did it.

Was it not this grand exemption which God Himself foretold, when the guilty pair, whose children we all are, appeared before Him in the Garden of Eden? In the anathema which fell upon the serpent, there was included a promise of mercy to us. “I will put enmities,” said the Lord, “between thee and the Woman, and thy seed and her seed; she shall crush thy head, and thou shalt lie in wait for her heel.” [Gen. 3:15] Thus was salvation promised the human race under the form of a victory over Satan; and this victory is to be gained by the Woman, and she will gain it for us also. Even granting, as some read this text, that it is the Son of the Woman that is alone to gain this victory, the enmity between the Woman and the serpent is clearly expressed, and She, the Woman, with her own foot, is to crush the head of the hated serpent. The second Eve is to be worthy of the second Adam, conquering and not to be conquered. The human race is one day to be avenged not only by God, made Man, but also by the Woman miraculously exempted from every stain of sin, in whom the primeval creation, which was in justice and holiness [Eph 4:24] will thus reappear, just as though the Original Sin had never been committed.

Raise up your heads, then, ye children of Adam, and shake off your chains! This day the humiliation which weighed you down is annihilated. Behold! Mary, who is of the same flesh and blood as yourselves, has seen the torrent of sin, which swept along all the generations of mankind, flow back at her presence and not touch her: the infernal dragon has turned away his head, not daring to breathe his venom upon her; the dignity of your origin is given to her in all its primitive grandeur. This happy day, then, on which the original purity of your race is renewed, must be a feast to you. The second Eve is created; and from her own blood (which, with the exception of the element of sin, is the same as that which makes you to be the children of Adam), she is shortly to give you the God-Man, Who proceeds from her according to the flesh, as He proceeds from the Father according to the eternal generation.

And how can we do less than admire and love the incomparable purity of Mary in her Immaculate Conception, when we hear even God, Who thus prepared her to become His Mother, saying to her, in the Divine Canticle, these words of complacent love: “Thou art all fair, O my love, and there is not a spot in thee!” [Cant. 4:7] It is the God of all holiness that here speaks; that eye, which sees all things, finds not a vestige, not a shadow of sin; therefore does He delight in her, and admire in her that gift of His Own condescending munificence. We cannot be surprised after this, that Gabriel, when he came down from Heaven to announce the Incarnation to her, should be full of admiration at the sight of that purity, whose beginning was so glorious and whose progress was immeasurable; and that this blessed spirit should bow down profoundly before this young Maid of Nazareth, and salute her with, “Hail, O full of grace!” [Luke 1:28] And who is this Gabriel? An Archangel, that lives amidst the grandest magnificences of God's creation, amidst all the gorgeous riches of Heaven; who is brother to the Cherubim and Seraphim, to the Thrones and Dominations; whose eye is accustomed to gaze on those nine angelic choirs with their dazzling brightness of countless degrees of light and grace; he has found on earth, in a creature of a nature below that of Angels, the fullness of grace, of that grace which had been given to the Angels measuredly. This fullness of grace was in Mary from the very first instant of her existence. She is the future Mother of God, and she was ever holy, ever pure, ever Immaculate.

This truth of Mary's Immaculate Conception - which was revealed to the Apostles by the Divine Son of Mary, inherited by the Church, taught by the holy fathers, believed by each generation of the Christian people with an ever increasing explicitness - was implied in the very notion of a Mother of God. To believe that Mary was Mother of God, was implicitly to believe that she, on whom this sublime dignity was conferred, had never been defiled with the slightest stain of sin, and that God had bestowed upon her an absolute exception from sin. But now the Immaculate Conception of Mary rests on an explicit definition dictated by the Holy Ghost. Peter has spoken by the mouth of Pius; and when Peter has spoken, every Christian should believe; for the Son of God has said: "I have prayed for thee, Peter, that thy faith fail not." [Luke 22:32] And again: "The Holy Ghost, Whom the Father will send in My name, He will teach you all things, and bring all things to your mind, whatsoever I shall have said to you." [John 14:26]

The Symbol of our faith has therefore received not a new truth, but a new light on a truth which was previously the object of the universal belief. On that great day of the definition, the infernal serpent was again crushed beneath the victorious foot of the Virgin-Mother, and the Lord graciously gave us the strongest pledge of His mercy. He still loves this guilty earth, since He has deigned to enlighten it with one of the brightest rays of His Mother's glory. How this earth of ours exulted! The present generation will never forget the enthusiasm with which the entire universe received the tidings of the definition. It was an event of mysterious importance which thus marked this second half of our century; and we shall look forward to the future with renewed confidence; for if the Holy Ghost bids us tremble for the days when truths are diminished among the children of men, He would, consequently, have us look on those times as blessed by God in which we receive an increase of truth; an increase both in light and authority.

The Church, even before the solemn proclamation of the grand dogma, kept the feast of this eighth day of December; which was, in reality, a profession of her faith. It is true that the feast was not called the Immaculate Conception, but simply the Conception of Mary. But the fact of such a feast being instituted and kept, was an unmistakable expression of the faith of Christendom in that truth. St. Bernard and the angelical doctor, St. Thomas, both teach that the Church cannot celebrate the feast of what is not holy; the Conception of Mary, therefore, was holy and immaculate, since the Church has, for ages past, honored it with a special feast. The Nativity of the same holy Virgin is kept as a solemnity in the Church, because Mary was born full of grace; therefore, had the first moment of Mary's existence been one of sin, as is that of all the other children of Adam, it never could have been made the subject of the reverence of the Church. Now, there are few feasts so generally and so firmly established in the Church as this which we are keeping today.

On Praying to Our Lady

by F.J. Sheed

The Catholic prays to Our Lady, but not as he prays to God. Following the four-fold division of prayer, we can see the difference.

-Adoration - which for the Christian is a compound of supreme homage, supreme love - is for God alone as the Infinite Being upon Whom all things and all persons [including Our Lady] depend. But all God's works are good with the goodness He has given them and we honour Him by honoring them: the more goodness He has given them, the better they mirror His Own infinite perfection, the more honour, veneration, we give them. Our Lady is His master-work: we honour her more than any other of the creatures of God: and we tell her so. God loves her more than He loves any other creature He has made-because she has more goodness in her, because she loves Him better. God loves her more; so do we, and we tell her that, too.

-Thanksgiving - all good gifts are from God. We thank Him primarily. But, under God, human beings can give us good gifts too. We thank them secondarily. No creature ever gave us so good a gift as the Virgin who gave us Christ: whenever we remember that gift, we remember our gratitude to her: it would be churlish not to tell her so. We do tell her so. There are other gifts from her to us, as we shall see in a moment. We thank her for those too.

-Sorrow for Sin - we confess our sinfulness to God, for it is only because sins offend Him that they are sins, and it is only He Who can forgive them. But we confess our sinfulness to Our Lady too. Why? Because our sins caused the bitter suffering of her Son on the Cross. There is another reason. Listen to the Confiteor, as the priest says it at Mass:

I confess to Almighty God, to Blessed Mary Ever-Virgin, Blessed Michael the Archangel, Blessed John the Baptist, the holy Apostles Peter and Paul, all the Saints and you, brethren, that I have sinned exceedingly in thought, word and deed, through my fault, through my fault, through my most grievous fault.

Once we have confessed to God, as we do in the first clause, what is the point of confessing to those others? The Confiteor concludes:

Therefore I beseech the Blessed Mary Ever-Virgin, Blessed Michael the Archangel, Blessed John the Baptist, the holy Apostles Peter and Paul, all the Saints and you brethren, to pray to the Lord our God for me.

-Petition - only God can forgive our sins. Only God can give us any good, spiritual or material. But God will give them to one person because another has asked Him to. So we ask Our Lady to pray to God that we may not be destroyed by our sins - and we ask not only Our Lady but Michael and John and Peter and Paul and all the Saints: and not only all the Saints but all the sinners too - everyone can pray for others; everyone's prayer can profit others.

We know this by one totally conclusive fact - that when Our Lord gave us the prayer that was to be the model of all prayers, He put it in the plural: not "give me this day my daily bread, forgive me my trespasses ...deliver me from evil," but give us, forgive us, deliver us. By Our Lord's instruction, a man prays for bread, forgiveness, deliverance, not for himself only but for others. Therefore [to put it mathematically] one man's prayer may help others to obtain material and spiritual good. Therefore we ask others to pray for us. So did St. Paul. For instance, he asked his converts to pray for him, that he might be delivered from importunate and evil men [2 Thess. 3: 1]. Nor does this take anything from the one mediatorship of Christ. Indeed St. Paul [1 Tim. 2] uses the fact that "there is one mediator of God and man, the man Christ Jesus" as a reason why we should pray for one another: because man and God are thus linked by Christ, man's prayers can avail with God.

There is an organic principle involved. Christians are members of one body, the Mystical Body of Christ, and the strength of one can avail for the weakness of another. On a lesser but still real level, all men are linked in the brotherhood of the human race. In showing us that we are to pray for one another and seek one another's prayers. God is reminding us of that double solidarity.

The last word hardly needs saying. If any person's prayers have power with God, Our Lady's has - for she is the holiest of God's creatures and so the most pleasing to God - and she is the Mother of all men and so most ready to come to men's aid.

The Rosary: Historically Established by St. Dominic

The “Rosary” is a prayer that is, at the very least, 900 years old, if not older. In recent times, the word “Rosary” has become a common term used in place of “The Psalter” (a briefer way to say “The Angelic Psalter”), which is comprised of 15 decades while meditating on three mysteries of Christ’s life. By the year 1912, The Catholic Encyclopedia explained:

"The Rosary," says the Roman Breviary, "is a certain form of prayer wherein we say fifteen decades or tens of Hail Marys with an Our Father between each ten, while at each of these fifteen decades we recall successively in pious meditation one of the mysteries of our Redemption." The same lesson for the Feast of the Holy Rosary informs us that when the Albigensian heresy was devastating the country of Toulouse, St. Dominic earnestly besought the help of Our Lady and was instructed by her, so tradition asserts, to preach the Rosary among the people as an antidote to heresy and sin. From that time forward this manner of prayer was "most wonderfully published abroad and developed [promulgari augerique coepit] by St. Dominic whom different Supreme Pontiffs have in various past ages of their apostolic letters declared to be the institutor and author of the same devotion." That many popes have so spoken is undoubtedly true, and amongst the rest we have a series of encyclicals, beginning in 1883, issued by Pope Leo XIII, which, while commending this devotion to the faithful in the most earnest terms, assumes the institution of the Rosary by St. Dominic to be a fact historically established. (Thurston, Herbert, and Andrew Shipman. "The Rosary." The Catholic Encyclopedia, Vol. 13. New York: Robert Appleton Company, 1912)

Roses and Prayers

by Bishop Fulton J. Sheen

The following text was presented by Bishop Fulton J. Sheen in his speech given on February 11, 1951 (Feast of Our Lady of Lourdes). At Lourdes, France, in the year 1858, the Virgin Mary appeared to St. Bernadette Soubirous, who was 14 years of age. When asked her name, the Lady clasped her hands together as her eyes looked heavenward and she responded, "I am the Immaculate Conception."

No human who has ever sent roses to a friend in token of affection, or ever received them with gladness, will be alien to the story of prayer. And a deep instinct in humanity makes it associate roses with joy. Pagan peoples crowned their statues with roses as symbols of their own hearts. The faithful of the early Church substituted prayers for roses. In the days of the early Martyrs - "early" because the Church has more Martyrs today than it had in the first four centuries - as the young virgins marched over the sands of the Coliseum into the jaws of death, they clothed themselves in festive robes and wore on their heads a crown of roses, bedecked, fittingly, to meet the King of Kings in Whose name they would die. The faithful, at night, would gather up these crowns of roses and say their prayers on them - one prayer for each rose. Far away in the desert of Egypt the anchorites and hermits were also counting their prayers, but in the form of little grains or pebbles strung together into a crown --- a practice which Mohammed took for his Moslems. From this custom of offering spiritual bouquets arose a series of prayers known as the Rosary, for Rosary means "crown of roses."

Not always the same prayers were said on the Rosary. In the Eastern Church there was a Rosary called the Acathist (Akathistos), which is a liturgical hymn recited in any position except sitting. It combined a long series of invocations to the Mother of Our Lord, held together by a scene from the Life of Our Lord on which one meditated while saying the prayers. In the Western Church, St. Brigit of Ireland used a Rosary made up of the Hail Mary and the Our Father. Finally, the Rosary as we know it today began to take shape.

From the earliest days, the Church asked its faithful to recite the one hundred and fifty Psalms of David. This custom still prevails among priests, who recite some of these Psalms every day. But it was not easy for anyone to memorize the one hundred and fifty Psalms. Then, too, before the invention of printing, it was difficult to procure a book. That is why certain important books like the Bible had to be chained like telephone books; otherwise people would have run off with them. Incidentally, this gave rise to the stupid lie that the Church would not allow anyone to read the Bible, because it was chained. The fact is it was chained so people could read it. The telephone book is chained, too, but it is more consulted than any book in modern civilization!

The people who could not read the one hundred and fifty Psalms wanted to do something to make up for it. So they substituted one hundred and fifty Hail Marys. They broke up these one hundred and fifty, in the manner of the Acathist, into fifteen decades, or series of ten. Each part was to be said while meditating on a different aspect of the Life of Our Lord. To keep the decades separate, each one of them began with the Our Father and ended with the Doxology of Praise to the Trinity. St. Dominic, who died in 1221, received from the Blessed Mother the command to preach and to popularize this devotion for the good of souls, for conquest over evil, and for the prosperity of Holy Mother Church and thus gave us the Rosary in its present classical form.

Practically all the prayers of the Rosary, as well as the details of the Life of Our Saviour on which one meditates while saying it, are to be found in the Scriptures. The first part of the Hail Mary is nothing but the words of the Angel to Mary; the next part, the words of Elizabeth to Mary on the occasion of her visit. The only exception is the last part of the Hail Mary, namely, "Holy Mary, Mother of God, pray for us sinners, now, and at the hour of our death. Amen." This was not introduced until the latter part of the Middle Ages. Since it seizes upon the two decisive moments of life: "Now, and at the hour of our death," it suggests the spontaneous outcry of people in a great calamity. The Black Death, which ravaged all Europe and wiped out one-third of its population, prompted the faithful to cry out to the Mother of Our Lord to protect them, at a time when the present moment and death were almost one.

The Black Death has ended. But now the Red Death of Communism is sweeping the earth. In keeping with the spirit of adding something to this prayer when evil is intensified, I find it interesting that, when the Blessed Mother appeared at Fatima in 1917 because of the great decline in morals and the advent of godlessness, she asked that, after the "Glory be to the Father, Son and Holy Spirit," we add, "O my Jesus, forgive us our sins, save us from the fires of Hell, lead all souls to Heaven, especially those who are most in need of Thy mercy."

It is objected that there is much repetition in the Rosary because the Lord's Prayer and the Hail Mary are said so often; therefore it is monotonous. That reminds me of a woman who came to see me one evening after instructions. She said, "I would never become a Catholic. You say the same words in the Rosary over and over again, and anyone who repeats the same words is never sincere. I would never believe anyone who repeated his words, and neither would God." I asked her who the man was with her. She said he was her fiancé.

I asked: "Does he love you?"

"Certainly, he does."

"But how do you know?"

"He told me."

"What did he say?"

"He said: 'I love you.' "

"When did he tell you last?"

"About an hour ago."

"Did he tell you before?"

"Yes, last night."

"What did he say?"

"'I love you.' "

"But never before?"

"He tells me every night."

I said: "Do not believe him. He is repeating; he is not sincere."

The beautiful truth is that there is no repetition in, "I love you." Because there is a new moment of time, another point in space, the words do not mean the same as they did at another time or space. A mother says to her son: "You are a good boy." She may have said it ten thousand times before, but each time it means something different; the whole personality goes out to it anew, as a new historical circumstance summons forth a new outburst of affection. Love is never monotonous in the uniformity of its expression. The mind is infinitely variable in its language, but the heart is not. The heart of a man, in the face of the woman he loves, is too poor to translate the infinity of his affection into a different word. So the heart takes one expression, "I love you," and in saying it over and over again, it never repeats. It is the only real news in the universe. That is what we do when we say the Rosary, we are saying to God, the Trinity, to the Incarnate Saviour, to the Blessed Mother: "I love you, I love you, I love you." Each time it means something different because, at each decade, our mind is moving to a new demonstration of the Savior's love: for example, from the mystery of His Love which willed to become one of us in His Incarnation, to the other mystery of love when He suffered for us, and on to the other mystery of His Love where He intercedes for us before the Heavenly Father. And who shall forget that Our Lord Himself in the moment of His greatest agony repeated, three times within an hour, the same prayer?

The beauty of the Rosary is that it is not merely a vocal prayer. It is also a mental prayer. One sometimes hears a dramatic presentation in which, while the human voice is speaking, there is a background of beautiful music, giving force and dignity to the words. The Rosary is like that. While the prayer is being said, the heart is not hearing music, but it is meditating on the Life of Christ all over again, applied to his own life and his own needs. As the wire holds the beads together, so meditation holds the prayers together. We often speak to people while our minds are thinking of something else. But in the Rosary, we not only say prayers, we think them. Bethlehem, Galilee, Nazareth, Jerusalem, Golgotha, Calvary, Mount Olivet, Heaven - all these move before our mind's eye as our lips pray. The stained-glass windows in a Church invite the eye to dwell on thoughts about God. The Rosary invites our fingers, our lips, and our heart in one vast symphony of prayer, and for that reason is the greatest prayer ever composed by man. The Rosary has a special value to many groups: (1) the worried, (2) the intellectual and the unlearned, (3) the sick.

1. The Worried. Worry is a want of harmony between the mind and the body. Worried people invariably keep their minds too busy and their hands too idle. God intended that the truths we have in our mind should work themselves out in action. "The Word became flesh" - such is the secret of a happy life. But in mental distress, the thousand and one thoughts find no order or solace within and no escape without. In order to overcome this mental indigestion, psychiatrists have taught soldiers suffering from war shock how to knit and do handicrafts, in order that the pent-up energy of their minds might flow out through the busy extremities of their fingers.

This is, indeed, helpful, but it is only a part of the cure. Worries and inner distress cannot be overcome by keeping the hands alone busy. There must be a contact with a new source of Divine Energy and the development of confidence and trust in a Person Whose essence is Love. Could worried souls be taught the love of the Good Shepherd Who cares for the wayward sheep, so that they would put themselves into that new area of love - all their fears and anxieties would banish. But that is difficult. Concentration is impossible when the mind is troubled; thoughts run helter-skelter; a thousand and one images flood across the mind; distracted and wayward, the spiritual seems a long way off. The Rosary is the best therapy for these distraught, unhappy, fearful, and frustrated souls, precisely because it involves the simultaneous use of three powers: the physical, the vocal, and the spiritual, and in that order. The fingers, touching the beads, are reminded that these little counters are to be used for prayer. This is the physical suggestion of prayer. The lips move in unison with the fingers. This is a second or vocal suggestion of prayer. The Church, a wise psychologist, insists that the lips move while saying the Rosary, because She knows that the external rhythm of the body can create a rhythm of the soul. If the fingers and the lips keep at it, the spiritual will soon follow, and the prayer will eventually end in the heart.

The beads help the mind to concentrate. They are almost like the self-starter of a motor; after a few spits and spurts, the soul soon gets going. Every airplane must have a runway before it can fly. What the runway is to the airplane, that the Rosary beads are to prayer - the physical start to gain spiritual altitude. The very rhythm and sweet monotony induce a physical peace and quiet and create an affective fixation on God. The physical and the mental work together if we give them a chance. Stronger minds can work from the mind outward; but worried minds have to work from the outside inward. With the spiritually trained, the soul leads the body; with most people, the body has to lead the soul. Little by little the worried, as they say the Rosary, see that all their worries stemmed from their egotism. No normal mind yet has ever been overcome by worries or fears who was faithful to the Rosary. You will be surprised how you can climb out of your worries, bead by bead, up to the very throne of the Heart of Love Itself.

2. The Intellectual and the Unlearned. The spiritual advantages which one derives from the Rosary depend upon two factors: first, the understanding that one has of the joys, sorrows, and glory in the Life of Christ; and second, the fervor and love with which one prays. Because the Rosary is both a mental and a vocal prayer, it is one where intellectual elephants may bathe, and the simple birds may also sip.

It happens that the simple often pray better than the learned, not because the intellect is prejudicial to prayer, but because, when it begets pride, it destroys the spirit of prayer. One always ought to love according to knowledge, for Wisdom and Love of the Trinity are equal. But as husbands who know they have good wives do not always love according to that knowledge, so too the philosopher does not always pray as he should, and thus his knowledge becomes sterile .

The Rosary is a great test of faith. What the Eucharist is in the order of Sacraments, that the Rosary is in the order of sacramentals - the mystery and the test of faith - the touchstone by which the soul is judged in its humility. The mark of the Christian is the willingness to look for the Divine in the flesh of a babe in a crib, the continuing Christ under the appearance of bread on an altar, and a meditation and a prayer on a string of beads.

The more one descends to humility, the deeper becomes the faith. The Blessed Mother thanked her Divine Son because He had looked on her lowliness. The world starts with what is big, the spirit begins with the little, aye, with the trivial! The faith of the simple can surpass that of the learned, because the intellectual often ignore those humble means to devotion, such as medals, pilgrimages, statues, and Rosaries. As the rich, in their snobbery, sneer at the poor, so the intelligentsia, in their sophistication, jeer at the lowly. One of the last acts of Our Lord was to wash the feet of His Disciples, after which He told them that Out of such humiliation true greatness is born.

When it comes to love, there is no difference between the intellectual and the simple. They resort to the same token of affection and the same delicate devices, such as the keeping of a flower, the treasuring of a handkerchief or a paper with a scribbled message. Love is the only equalizing force in the world; all differences are dissolved in the great democracy of affection. It is only when men cease to love that they begin to act differently. Then it is that they spurn the tiny little manifestations of affection which make love grow.

But if the simple and the intellectual love, in the human order, in the same way, then they should also love God in the Divine order, in the same way. The educated can explain love better than the simple, but they have no richer experience of it. The theologian may know more about the Divinity of Christ, but he may not vitalize it in his life as well as the simple. As it is by the simple gesture of love that the wise man enters into the understanding of love, so it is by the simple acts of piety that the educated also enter into the knowledge of God.

The Rosary is the meeting ground of the uneducated and the learned; the place where the simple love grows in knowledge and where the knowing mind grows in love. As Maeterlinck has said: "The thinker continues to think justly, only if he does not lose contact with those who do not think at all!"

3. The Sick. The third great value of the Rosary is for the sick. When fever mounts and the body aches, the mind cannot read; it hardly wants to be spoken to, but there is much in its heart it yearns to tell. Since the number of prayers one knows by heart is very limited, and their very repetition becomes wearisome in sickness, it is well for the sick to have a form of prayer in which the words focus or spearhead a meditation. As the magnifying glass catches and unites the scattered rays of the sun, so the Rosary brings together the otherwise dissipated thoughts of life in the sickroom: into the white and burning heat of Divine Love.

When a person is healthy, his eyes, are, for the most part, looking to the earth; when he is flat on his back, his eyes look to Heaven. Perhaps it is truer to say that Heaven looks down on him. In such moments when fever, agony, and pain make it hard to pray, the suggestion of prayer that comes from merely holding the Rosary is tremendous - or better still, caressing the Crucifix at the end of it. Because our prayers are known by heart, the heart can now pour them out, and thus fulfill the Scriptural injunction to "pray always." Prisoners of war during the last World War have told me how the Rosary enabled men to pray, almost continuously, for days before their death. The favorite mysteries then were generally the sorrowful ones, for by meditating on the suffering of Our Saviour on the Cross, men were inspired to unite their pains with Him, so that, sharing in His Cross, they might also share in His Resurrection.

The Rosary is the book of the blind, where souls see and there enact the greatest drama of love the world has ever known; it is the book of the simple, which initiates them into mysteries and knowledge more satisfying than the education of other men; it is the book of the aged, whose eyes close upon the shadow of this world, and open on the substance of the next. The power of the Rosary is beyond description. And here I am reciting concrete instances, which I know. Young people, in danger of death through accident, have had miraculous recoveries --- a mother, despaired of in childbirth, was saved with the child --- alcoholics became temperate --- dissolute lives became spiritualized --- fallen-aways returned to the faith --- the childless were blessed with a family --- soldiers were preserved during battle --- mental anxieties were overcome --- and pagans were converted.

I know of a Jew who, in World War I, was in a shell hole on the Western Front with four Austrian soldiers. Shells had been bursting on all sides. Suddenly, one shell killed his four companions. He took a Rosary from the hands of one of them and began to say it. He knew it by heart, for he had heard others say it so often. At the end of the first decade, he felt an inner warning to leave that shell hole. He crawled through much mud and muck, and threw himself into another. At that moment a shell hit the first hole, where he had been lying. Four more times, exactly the same experience; four more warnings, and four times his life was saved! He promised then to give his life to Our Lord and to His Blessed Mother if he should be saved. After the war more sufferings came to him; his family was burned by Hitler, but his promise lingered on. Recently, I baptized him - and the grateful soldier is now preparing to study for the priesthood.

All the idle moments of one's life can be sanctified, thanks to the Rosary. As we walk the streets, we pray with the Rosary hidden in our hand or in our pocket; driving an automobile, the little knobs under most steering wheels can serve as counters for the decades. While waiting to be served at a lunchroom, or waiting for a train, or in a store; or while playing dummy at bridge; or when conversation or a lecture lags - all these moments can be sanctified and made to serve inner peace, thanks to a prayer that enables one to pray at all times and under all circumstances. If you wish to convert anyone to the fullness of the knowledge of Our Lord and of His Mystical Body, then teach him the Rosary. One of two things will happen. Either he will stop saying the Rosary - or he will get the gift of faith.

VARIOUS PRAYERS IN HONOR OF OUR LADY OF GUADALUPE

The Psalter and the Symbolic Number 153

Since Our Lady chose flowers, including Castilian roses, as one of her signs for the Bishop, what better “flower” to offer her then praying the daily Rosary, “the crown of roses”?

As Bishop Fulton Sheen explained, the Rosary is a prayer of many centuries. It is at least 900 years since Our Lady instructed St. Dominic, “Preach my Psalter” in order to defeat the Albigensian heresy. In this way, the Virgin “codified” what had been, up to that point, the organic growth of the Psalter. By St. Dominic’s time, the “Psalter” had reached its maturity and would grow no more, which is proven by the Virgin’s simple words to the saint, “Preach my Psalter.” To the Psalter, Our Lady made no additions.

Properly speaking (and as Bishop Sheen also explained), the Angelic Psalter is comprised of 15 decades (150 Hail Mary’s) which follow the number pattern of the Psalms of David. In the Psalter, the total number of Hail Mary’s prayed are 153, because there are 3 “introductory” Hail Mary’s in which the faithful ask God, through the intercession of the Virgin, for an increase in the virtues of faith, hope, and charity.

Furthermore, 153 is the symbolic number of the Church, which cannot offer redemption to souls without Christ. The Church Fathers understood this about the number 153 from the Gospel of St. John, wherein the Apostle relates the third appearance of Christ after His resurrection. St. Peter decided to go fishing and eight disciples decided to join him. All night they labored but they had no success. When the morning came (presumably a reference to the daybreak, like the apparition of Our Lady of Guadalupe), a man appeared and asked them, “Children, have you any meat? They answered him: No.” (John 21:5) In other words, the man (who was Christ) asked if they were successful in their fishing but, even though they labored together, they had to answer in the negative.

He instructed them to again cast their nets on the right side of the ship into the lake. (Our Lord sits on the right side of His Father in heaven.) St.

John says at this instruction he immediately recognized Jesus, and he spoke aside to St. Peter, telling him it was the Lord. This last section of St. John's Gospel is incredibly full in doctrinal teaching: "Simon Peter went up, and drew the net to land, full of great fishes, one hundred and fifty-three. And although there were so many, the net was not broken." (John 21:11) The entire section is clear that Peter is the head of the Church, that the other disciples must work in accordance with him, and that a rich harvest of souls awaits - but that no work is fruitful without Christ. The Scriptures are clear that the number 153 is symbolic of the Church, established by Christ and which He builds through Peter. It was, after all, Peter who pulled up the 153 fish. This is why the Psalter of Our Lady is comprised of 153 Hail Mary's, and why the Psalter is a meditation on the entire work of Redemption, offered by Jesus Christ Our Lord and made possible by the cooperation of the Virgin Mary, who is called "the cause of our salvation."

A Rosary, as we call it now, is one-third of the Psalter. Heaven asked for no changes to the Psalter until Our Lady of Fatima instructed a small addition at the end of each Rosary decade, the "O my Jesus" prayer. This prayer is not a radical change to the Psalter; in fact, it can be likened to the budding of a flower on a mystical tree that has stood for ages.

THE ROSARY MYSTERIES

The Joyful Mysteries (Monday and Thursday)

- First Joyful Mystery - The Annunciation of Gabriel to Mary
- Second Joyful Mystery - The Visitation of Mary to Elizabeth
- Third Joyful Mystery - The Birth of Jesus
- Fourth Joyful Mystery - The Presentation of Jesus in the Temple
- Fifth Joyful Mystery - Finding Jesus in the Temple

The Sorrowful Mysteries (Tuesday and Friday; also, on all Sundays of Advent and Lent)

- First Sorrowful Mystery - Agony of Jesus in the Garden
- Second Sorrowful Mystery - Jesus is Scourged at the Pillar
- Third Sorrowful Mystery - Jesus is Crowned with Thorns
- Fourth Sorrowful Mystery - Jesus Carries His Cross
- Fifth Sorrowful Mystery - The Crucifixion of Jesus

The Glorious Mysteries (Wednesday and Saturday; also on all Sundays after Easter, inclusive – but not on Sundays during Advent and Lent because they are penitential seasons of the Church)

- First Glorious Mystery - The Resurrection of Jesus
- Second Glorious Mystery - The Ascension of Jesus
- Third Glorious Mystery - The Descent of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost
- Fourth Glorious Mystery - The Assumption of Mary into Heaven
- Fifth Glorious Mystery - The Coronation of Mary as Queen of Heaven and Earth

HOW TO PRAY THE ROSARY

1. While holding the Crucifix, make the Sign of the Cross and pray: In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit. Amen.

While still holding the Crucifix, also pray the Apostles Creed:

I believe in God, the Father Almighty, Creator of heaven and earth; and in Jesus Christ, His only Son, our Lord; Who was conceived by the Holy Spirit, born of the Virgin Mary, suffered under Pontius Pilate, was crucified, died, and was buried. He descended into hell; the third day He arose again from the dead. He ascended into heaven, and sits at the right hand of God, the Father Almighty; from thence He shall come to judge the living and the dead. I believe in the Holy Spirit, the Holy Catholic Church, the communion of Saints, the forgiveness of sins, the resurrection of the body and life everlasting. Amen.

2. Pray the Our Father on the first large bead.

Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed by Thy name. Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us, and lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. Amen.

3. Pray the Hail Mary on each of the next three beads, asking for an increase in the virtues of faith, hope and charity.

Hail Mary, full of grace, the Lord is with thee; blessed art thou among women, and blessed is the fruit of thy womb, Jesus. Holy Mary, Mother of God, pray for us sinners, now and at the hour of our death. Amen.

4. Pray the Gloria on the next large bead.

Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Spirit. As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be, world without end. Amen.

5. Announce the first Rosary Mystery and pray the Our Father on the next large bead.

6. On each of the adjacent ten small beads (also referred to as a decade) recite a Hail Mary while reflecting on the mystery.

7. At the end of the mystery, pray the Fatima Prayer requested by the Virgin.

O my Jesus, forgive us our sins, save us from the fires of hell. Lead all souls to Heaven, especially those with the greatest need of Thy mercy.

8. On the next large bead between the decades pray the Gloria.

Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost. As it was in the beginning, is now and ever shall be, world without end. Amen.

9. Repeat all the steps above for each mystery.

10. When the fifth mystery is completed, again pray the Fatima Prayer and the Gloria. The Rosary is then customarily concluded with the Hail, Holy Queen, followed by the prayer to God and then three prayers for the intentions of the Holy Father. This last part is just as important, since the prayers for the Pope complete the requirements to gain a plenary indulgence. Customarily, the three prayers are one Our Father, one Hail Mary, and one Gloria.

Hail, holy Queen, mother of mercy, our life, our sweetness and our hope. To thee do we cry, poor banished children of Eve. To thee do we send up our sighs, mourning and weeping in this valley of tears. Turn then, most gracious Advocate, thine eyes of mercy towards us, and after this our exile, show unto us the blessed fruit of thy womb, Jesus.

O clement, o loving, o sweet Virgin Mary!

Pray for us, o holy Mother of God, that we may be made worthy of the promises of Christ.

O God, whose only begotten Son, by His life, death, and Resurrection, has purchased for us the rewards of eternal life, grant we beseech Thee that by meditating upon these mysteries of the Most Holy Rosary of the Blessed Virgin Mary, we may imitate what they contain, and obtain what they promise. Through the same Christ, Our Lord. Amen.

Then state “For the intentions of the Holy Father and to ask for the plenary indulgence” (acquired when praying a Rosary with the family, in a church group, etc.). If praying privately, this sentence can still be said aloud. What is necessary is that the three following prayers should be offered with the explicit purpose of praying for the current Pope’s intentions (that is to say, to offer prayers so that he may fulfill the duties of the papal office in accordance with God's most holy Will):

One Our Father, one Hail Mary, one Gloria.

MEMORARE TO OUR LADY OF GUADALUPE

Composed by Helen Behrens (one of the Guadalupe experts earlier mentioned in this work). In 1956, it was printed for the first time in the English language, in Mexico City, and with ecclesiastical approval.

Remember, O most gracious Virgin Mary of Guadalupe, that in thy celestial apparitions on the mount of Tepeyac, thou didst promise to show thy compassion and pity towards all who,
loving and trusting thee,
seek thy help and call upon thee
in their necessities and afflictions.

Thou didst promise to hearken to our supplications, to dry our tears and to give us consolation and relief.
Never was it known that anyone who fled to thy protection, implored thy help, or sought thy intercession, either for the common welfare, or in personal anxieties, was left unaided.

Inspired with this confidence, we fly unto thee,
O Mary, ever Virgin Mother of the True God!
Though grieving under the weight of our sins,
we come to prostrate ourselves in thy august presence, certain that thou wilt deign to fulfill thy merciful promises.

We are full of hope that,
standing beneath thy shadow and protection, nothing will trouble or afflict us,
nor need we fear illness,
or misfortune,
or any other sorrow.

Thou hast decided to remain with us through thy admirable image,
thou who art our Mother,

our health and our life.

Placing ourselves beneath thy maternal gaze and having recourse to thee in all our necessities

we need do nothing more.

O Holy Mother of God, despise not our petitions, but in thy mercy hear and answer us.

[Here mention your petition.]

Conclusion of this prayer: Five Hail Mary's in thanksgiving to God for the four apparitions of the Blessed Virgin Mary to St. Juan Diego and the one apparition to his uncle, Juan Bernardino.

PRAYER TO THE PERPETUAL VIRGIN
Mother of God and Mother of the of the Church

O Immaculate Virgin, Mother of the true God and Mother of the Church, who revealed your clemency and your pity to all those who ask for your protection, hear the prayer that we address to you with filial trust, and present it to your Son Jesus, our sole Redeemer.

Mother of Mercy, Teacher of hidden and silent sacrifice, to you, who come to meet us sinners, we dedicate on this day all our being and all our love. We also dedicate to you our life, our work, our joys, our infirmities and our sorrows. Grant peace, justice and prosperity to our peoples; for we entrust to your care all that we have and all that we are, our Lady and Mother. We wish to be entirely yours and to walk with you along the way of complete faithfulness to Jesus Christ in His Church; hold us always with your loving hand.

Virgin of Guadalupe, Mother of the Americas, we pray to you for all the Bishops, that they may lead the faithful along paths of intense Christian life, of love and humble service of God and souls. Contemplate this immense harvest, and intercede with the Lord that He may instill a hunger for holiness in the whole people of God, and grant abundant vocations of priests and religious, strong in the faith and zealous dispensers of God's mysteries.

Grant to our homes the grace of loving and respecting life in its beginnings, with the same love with which you conceived in your womb the life of the Son of God. Blessed Virgin Mary, protect our families, so that they may always be united, and bless the upbringing of our children.

Our hope, look upon us with compassion, teach us to go continually to Jesus and, if we fall, help us to rise again, to return to Him, by means of the confession of our faults and sins in the Sacrament of Penance, which gives peace to the soul.

We beg you to grant us a great love for all the holy Sacraments, which are, as it were, the signs that your Son left us on earth.

Thus, Most Holy Mother, with the peace of God in our conscience, with our hearts free from evil and hatred, we will be able to bring to all true joy and true peace, which come to us from your Son, our Lord Jesus Christ, who with God the Father and the Holy Spirit, lives and reigns for ever and ever.

Amen.

FIVE DAY NOVENA TO OUR LADY OF GUADALUPE

-Day One-

Immaculate and Perpetual Virgin of Guadalupe, you appeared on Mount Tepeyac to reconcile mankind to God. Plead and intercede with your Son Jesus today, that a bond of Holy Love is formed between all humanity and God.

Our Lady of Guadalupe, pray for us!

-Day Two-

Immaculate and Perpetual Virgin of Guadalupe, you left Your Image on the cloak of Juan Diego, using a humble vessel to bring your grace into the world. Imprint on our hearts the virtue of humility, dear Mother, and use us to bring others to you.

Our Lady of Guadalupe, pray for us!

-Day Three-

Immaculate and Perpetual Virgin of Guadalupe, your Image of Guadalupe was a symbolic story to the Aztecs, converting them from paganism to Christianity. Pray for us, dear Mother, that our lives will be symbols of Holy Love, converting those around us.

Our Lady of Guadalupe, pray for us!

-Day Four-

Immaculate and Perpetual Virgin of Guadalupe, your Image has remained intact on the frail cactus fiber of the tilma for centuries, free from corruption of the elements of the world. Give to us, dear Mother, a lasting and enduring faith, a faith that will not be compromised by the world.

Our Lady of Guadalupe, pray for us!

-Day Five-

Immaculate and Perpetual Virgin of Guadalupe, you proclaimed Yourself Our Mother and Protectress when you appeared on Mt. Tepeyac. Take us into Your Maternal Heart, dear Mother, and protect our faith.

Our Lady of Guadalupe, pray for us!

NINE DAY NOVENA
TO OUR LADY OF GUADALUPE #1
One Prayer for Nine Days

The following novena prayer, written by Rev. Lawrence G. Lovasik, S.V.D., was approved by Bishop Burke and updated to state "St." Juan Diego (the only change).

Our Lady of Guadalupe, according to thy message in Mexico I venerate thee as the Virgin Mother of the true God for whom we live, the Creator of all the world, Maker of heaven and earth. In spirit I kneel before thy most holy image which thou didst miraculously imprint upon the cloak of St. Juan Diego, and with the faith of the countless numbers of pilgrims who visit thy shrine, I beg thy for this favor:

[Mention your request].

Remember, O Immaculate Virgin, the words thou hast spoken to thy devout client: "I am a merciful mother to thee and to all thy people who love me and trust in me and invoke my help. I listen to their lamentations and solace all their sorrows and sufferings." I beg thee to be a merciful mother to me, because I sincerely love thee and trust in thee and invoke thy help. I entreat thee, our Lady of Guadalupe, to grant my request, if this should be the will of God, in order that I may bear witness to thy love, thy compassion, thy help and protection. Do not forsake me in my needs.

Our Lady of Guadalupe, pray for us.

Hail Mary three times, in honor of the Holy Trinity.

NINE DAY NOVENA
TO OUR LADY OF GUADALUPE #2
(Different Prayers for Nine Days)

-First Day-

Dearest Lady of Guadalupe,
Fruitful Mother of holiness,
Teach me your ways

Of gentleness and strength.
Hear my humble prayer
Offered with heartfelt confidence
To beg this favor (State your petition).
Our Father, Hail Mary, Gloria.

-Second Day-

O Mary, conceived without sin,
I come to your throne of grace
To share the fervent devotion
Of your faithful Mexican children
Who call to you
Under the glorious title of Guadalupe
Obtain for me a lively faith
To do your Son's holy will always:
May His will be done on earth as it is in heaven.
Our Father, Hail Mary, Gloria

-Third Day-

O Mary,
Whose Immaculate Heart
Was pierced by seven swords of grief,
Help me to walk valiantly
Amid the sharp thorns
Strewn across my pathway.
Obtain for me the strength
To be a true imitator of you
This I ask you, my dear Mother.
Our Father, Hail Mary, Gloria.

-Fourth Day-

Dearest Mother of Guadalupe,
I beg you for a fortified will

To imitate your divine Son's charity,
To always seek the good of others in need
Grant me this, I humbly ask of you.

Our Father, Hail Mary, Gloria.

-Fifth Day-

O most holy Mother,
I beg you to obtain for me
Pardon of all my sins,
Abundant graces to serve your Son
More faithfully from now on,
And lastly, the grace to praise Him
With you forever in heaven.

Our Father, Hail Mary, Gloria.

-Sixth Day-

Mary, Mother of vocations,
Multiply priestly vocations
And fill the earth with religious houses
Which will be light and warmth for the world,
Safety in stormy nights.
Beg your Son to send us
Any priests and religious.
This we ask of you, O Mother.

Our Father, Hail Mary, Gloria.

-Seventh Day-

O Lady of Guadalupe,
We beg you that parents live
A holy life and educate their children
In a Christian manner;
That children obey and follow

The directions of their parents;
That all members of the family
Pray and worship together
This we ask of you, O Mother.
Our Father, Hail Mary, Gloria.

-Eighth Day-

With my heart full
Of the most sincere veneration,
I prostrate myself before you, O Mother,
To ask you to obtain for me
The grace to fulfill the duties
Of my state in life
With faithfulness and constancy.
Our Father, Hail Mary, Gloria.

-Ninth Day-

O God, You have been pleased
To bestow upon us unceasing favors
By having placed us
Under the special protection
Of the Most Blessed Virgin Mary.
Grant us, your humble servants,
Who rejoice in honoring her today upon earth,
The happiness of seeing her face to face in heaven.
Our Father, Hail Mary, Gloria.

PRAYER TO OUR LADY OF GUADALUPE, MYSTICAL ROSE

HISTORY: During an August 15, 1908 audience, Pope St. Pius X approved and enriched the following prayer with an indulgence of five hundred days. It was included in the official edition of approved indulgenced prayers. (Raccolta number 389)

O, Our Lady of Guadalupe,
Mystical rose,
make intercession for Holy Church,
protect the Sovereign Pontiff,
help all those who invoke thee in their necessities, and since thou art the ever Virgin Mary and Mother of the true God, obtain for us from thy most holy Son
the grace of keeping our faith, sweet hope in the midst of the bitterness of life, burning charity and the precious gift of final perseverance.
Conclude with one Our Father, one Hail Mary, and one Gloria.

The following optional prayer may be added or prayed alone:

Dearest Lady,
fruitful Mother of Holiness,
teach me your ways of gentleness and strength.
Hear my prayer,
offered with deep felt confidence to beg this favor...
(State your prayer request here.)

O Mary,
conceived without sin,
I come to your throne of grace
to share the fervent devotion
of your faithful Mexican children who call to thee under the glorious title "Guadalupe," the Virgin who crushed the serpent.

Queen of Martyrs, whose Immaculate Heart was pierced by seven swords of grief,
help me to walk valiantly
amid the sharp thorns strewn across my path.

Invoke the Holy Spirit of Wisdom to fortify my will to frequent the Sacraments so that, thus enlightened and strengthened,
I may prefer God to all creatures and shun every occasion of sin.

Help me, as a living branch of the Vine
that is Jesus Christ, to exemplify His divine charity always seeking the good of others.

Queen of Apostles, aid me to win souls
for the Sacred Heart of my Saviour.

Keep my faith fearless,
dynamic, and articulate,
to proclaim the loving solitude of Our Father in Heaven so that the wayward may heed His pleading and obtain pardon, through the merits of Your Merciful Son,
Our Lord Jesus Christ.

Amen.

CHAPLET OF OUR LADY OF GUADALUPE

The Chaplet of Guadalupe includes a cross, 21 beads and a medal. Between the cross and the medal, there is one bead, a set of four beads and then another bead. There then follows four sets of three beads, each separated by one bead (for a total of three lone beads in between the four sets). For those who do not have the chaplet beads, the Chapel as it is presented below makes it easier to keep track of the prayer sets.

OPENING PRAYER

Our Lady of Guadalupe,
Mystical Rose,
make intercession for our Holy Church,
protect the sovereign Pontiff,
help all those who invoke you in their necessities, and since you are the ever Virgin Mary
and Mother of the true God, obtain for us from your most Holy Son
the grace of keeping our faith, of sweet hope in the midst of the bitterness of life,
of burning charity,
and the precious gift of final perseverance.
Amen.

On the first bead: Pray 1 "Our Father." (Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. Amen.)

On the set of four beads: Pray 4 times the "Hail Mary" in honour of Our Lady of Guadalupe's 4 apparitions to St. Juan Diego and his uncle, Juan Bernardino. (Hail Mary, full of grace, the Lord is with thee. Blessed art thou amongst women, and blessed is the fruit of thy womb, Jesus. Holy Mary, Mother of God, pray for us sinners, now and at the hour of our deaths. Amen.)

On the next lone bead: Pray 1 “Gloria” (Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost. As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be, world without end. Amen.)

Next Part of the Chaplet: There are four sets of 3 beads each, because each set represents one of the four apparitions to St. Juan Diego. (Again, if one does not actually have a chaplet set, the Chaplet prayers can still be prayed.) In each grouping, there are 3 sets of prayers: An “Our Father,” a special prayer in honor of the particular apparition of Our Lady of Guadalupe, and a conclusion of three “Hail Mary’s” and one “Gloria.”

FIRST APPARITION PRAYERS

Meditation: Our Lady of Guadalupe appears to St. Juan Diego as the day is newly breaking. Although Juan recognizes her, she tells him who she is and she sends him on a mission to the local Catholic Church prelate, expressing her command that a church is to be built on Tepeyac, in her name and for the glory of God.

Prayer 1 of First Apparition:

Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. Amen.

Prayer 2 of First Apparition:

Our Lady of Guadalupe, my Queen and my Mother,
I thank you for your first apparition to St. Juan Diego when you revealed that you are the Most Pure Virgin, Mary, Mother of the True God and Mother of all mankind.
I thank you for requesting a temple to be built where you stood, to bear witness to your love,
your compassion,
your aid and your protection for all who would love you, trust you, and invoke your help.

Prayer Set 3 of First Apparition

3 times in succession: Hail Mary

Hail Mary, full of grace, the Lord is with thee. Blessed art thou amongst women, and blessed is the fruit of thy womb, Jesus. Holy Mary, Mother of God, pray for us sinners, now and at the hour of our deaths. Amen.

1 Gloria

Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost. As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be, world without end. Amen.

SECOND APPARITION PRAYERS

Meditation: Our Lady of Guadalupe gives St. Juan Diego encouragement after his return from the Bishop's house. She promises him that he will be spiritually rewarded for his labors on her behalf.

Prayer 1 of Second Apparition

Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. Amen.

Prayer 2 of Second Apparition

Our Lady of Guadalupe, my Queen and my Mother,
I thank you for your second apparition to St. Juan Diego when, upon his return from the Bishop's house, he knelt in humiliation and defeat before you since he was unable to accomplish your mission.
I thank you for the courage and encouragement you gave to St. Juan Diego to make a second appeal to the Bishop.

Prayer Set 3 of Second Apparition

3 times in succession: Hail Mary

Hail Mary, full of grace, the Lord is with thee. Blessed art thou amongst women, and blessed is the fruit of thy womb, Jesus. Holy Mary, Mother of God, pray for us sinners, now and at the hour of our deaths. Amen.

1 Gloria

Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost. As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be, world without end. Amen.

THIRD APPARITION PRAYERS

Meditation: Our Lady of Guadalupe promises a sign to St. Juan Diego for the Bishop. She asks St. Juan to return the next day to receive the sign.

Prayer 1 of Third Apparition

Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. Amen.

Prayer 2 of Third Apparition

Our Lady of Guadalupe, my Queen and my Mother,
I thank you for your third apparition to St Juan Diego when, after this unsuccessful attempt to have a temple built,
you said to him,

“So be it, son.

Return tomorrow in order that you may secure for the Bishop, the sign for which he has asked.

When this is in your possession,
he will believe you;

he will no longer doubt your word and suspect your good faith.

Be assured that I shall reward you for all that you have undergone.”

Prayer Set 3 of Third Apparition

3 times in succession: Hail Mary

Hail Mary, full of grace, the Lord is with thee. Blessed art thou amongst women, and blessed is the fruit of thy womb, Jesus. Holy Mary, Mother of God, pray for us sinners, now and at the hour of our deaths. Amen.

1 Gloria

Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost. As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be, world without end. Amen.

FOURTH APPARITION PRAYERS

Meditation: Our Lady of Guadalupe instructs St. Juan to cut and gather the flowers on Tepeyac Hill. Although the cold frost of December had already arrived, the saint finds fragrant, blooming flowers and brings them to the Virgin Mary. She arranges them in St. Juan's tilma and gives him strict instructions to only show the Bishop these flowers. St. Juan obeys her to the letter and Our Lady fulfills her promise of a sign by the heavenly flowers, which included Castilian roses for which the Bishop privately asked her, and by manifesting herself as a Miraculous Image on the tilma.

Prayer 1 of Fourth Apparition

Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. Amen.

Prayer 2 of Fourth Apparition

Our Lady of Guadalupe, my Queen and my Mother,
I thank you for your fourth apparition to St. Juan Diego when you ordered him to pick the flowers he would find on the summit of the hill and bring them to you.
I thank you for arranging them in his tilma when you said, “This cluster of roses is the sign that you shall take to the Bishop.
You are to tell him, in my name, that in this he will recognize my will and that he must fulfill it.
You will be my ambassador, wholly worthy of my confidence.
Only in the presence of the Bishop shall you unfold your mantle and disclose that which you carry.”

I thank you for your image printed on the tilma which appeared when the roses were released.

Prayer Set 3 of Fourth Apparition

3 times: Hail Mary

Hail Mary, full of grace, the Lord is with thee. Blessed art thou amongst women, and blessed is the fruit of thy womb, Jesus. Holy Mary, Mother of God, pray for us sinners, now and at the hour of our deaths. Amen.

1 Gloria

Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost. As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be, world without end. Amen.

CHAPLET CLOSING PRAYERS

Remember, O most gracious Virgin of Guadalupe, that in thy celestial apparition on the Mount of Tepeyac, thou didst promise to show thy compassion and pity towards all who,
loving and trusting thee,
seek thy help and call upon thee
in their necessities and afflictions;
also to hearken to our supplications,
to dry our tears and to give us consolation and relief.
Inspired with this confidence
we come before thy august presence, certain that thou wilt deign to fulfill thy merciful promises.
We are full of hope that,
standing beneath thy protection
nothing will trouble or afflict us.
Thou has desired to remain with us through thy admirable image,

thou who art our Mother,
our health and our life.
O Mary, Mother of God,
hear our petitions and in thy mercy answer us.
Amen.

Additional Prayer to Our Lady of Guadalupe (Optional)

Our Lady of Guadalupe, my mother, into your hands joined in prayer,
take my prayers,
petitions and hopes,
and present them to Jesus for me.
Remembering the love and care your hands rendered to Him,
He will not refuse what they hold now, even though they are from me.
Amen.

Before and After the Apparitions and the Miracle: A Chronology

1168 Nahua tribes arrived in the Anahua Valley.

1325 The tenochcas, a few thousand Aztecs, established themselves on an island (the future Mexico City) in Lake Texcoco. Here they saw their sign of destiny: “Perched on a cactus is an eagle devouring a snake.” Today, the eagle devouring a snake is the nation’s coat of arms and is seen on the Mexican flag.

1469 Marriage of Ferdinand II and Isabella. The union of the kingdoms of Aragon and Castile resulted in the formation of the country of Spain.

1474 An Indian named Cuauhtlatohuac (“Eagle Who Speaks”) was born in Cuautitlan.

1476 Juan de Zumarraga was born in Spain.

1480 Estimated birth year of Montezuma II.

1492 Christopher Columbus landed on an island in the Americas, naming it San Salvador (Holy Saviour). During the hazardous return voyage, Columbus invoked the protection of the Virgin and promised to visit the Shrine of Our Lady of Guadalupe in Estremadura, Spain. After his safe return, Columbus kept his promise. King Ferdinand and Queen Isabella also visited the Shrine.

1504 Hernando Cortés arrived in the New World.

1505 Montezuma II elected Emperor of the Aztecs. His capital is Tenochtitlan (today’s Mexico City).

1511 Cortés assisted Velazquez in the conquest of Cuba.

1514 The first Marian Shrine in the New World was established in the city of Higuey.

1519 Feb 2: For the Aztecs, this date marked the beginning of the year C-1 Acátl, the year of Quetzalcoátl.

-February 18: Cortés left Havana, Cuba with 100 sailors, 508 soldiers, 10 ships, 16 horses and a great deal of artillery, sailing toward Mexico.

-March 12: Cortés anchored off the coast and named the place Vera Cruz (True Cross).

-March 25: Cortés won the Battle of Tabasco.

-April 22 (Good Friday): Cortés erected a cross at Vera Cruz. The first Mass is celebrated on Mexican soil.

-September 23: Cortés entered Tlaxcala.

-November 8: Cortés arrived in Tenochtitlan (Mexico City). Emperor Montezuma II, convinced by an ancient legend regarding Quetzalcoátl's return, peacefully received Cortés and soon acknowledged as his own lord Charles V, King of Spain.

-November 14: Cortés placed Emperor Montezuma II under house arrest.

1520 In June, serious battle arose between the Spanish and the Aztecs. Montezuma II was deposed and unjustly murdered. The new Emperor drove out the Spaniards.

1521 Cortés laid siege to Tenochtitlan. After 93 days, he and his troops captured Emperor Cuauhtemoc (Fallen Eagle) near Tlaltelolco. The capital city of the Aztecs fell.

1524 The first 12 Franciscans arrived in Mexico City.

1525 Baptism of the Indian Cuauhtlatohuac, his wife Malitzin, and the man's uncle. The baptism was administered by a Franciscan priest, whom some think was Fray Toribio de Benavente (better known as Motolinía). The Indian man received the Christian name of Juan Diego, his wife received the name of Maria Lucia, and his uncle received the name Juan Bernardino.

1528 Bishop-elect Juan de Zumárraga, O.F.M., arrived in the New World with the First Audience (of Governors). As the highest ranking Church prelate in the new land, the King of Spain also appointed him as Protector of the Indians. However, Zumárraga would discover that the First Audience would in every way block him and the native peoples.

1529 Juan Diego's wife, Maria, became sick and died.

1531 The Indians were plotting to massacre the Spaniards because the harsh and unjust rule of the First Royal Governors had brought the native people to their breaking point. All of Bishop Zumarraga's pleas on behalf of the people changed nothing. He finally managed to smuggle a report to the Spanish King on the cruelties of the First Royal Governors. At the end of 1531, there was installed the Second Royal Audience which the Spanish King this time ensured was compromised of fair men.

1531 Saturday December 9 at daybreak: First Apparition of Our Lady to St. Juan Diego at Tepeyac Hill, just outside of Mexico City, who was on his way to Mass in the Virgin's honor. As Juan approached the hill, he heard music and birdsong, and then suddenly silence. A beautiful Lady called him to the top of the hill. Although he recognized her, she told him her identity. She also gave him a message for the Bishop, which Juan was to deliver that day. The Virgin assured Juan that she would reward him for his troubles and anxieties as he carried out her will.

-December 9, much later that day: Second Apparition. As Juan returned home, probably near sunset, Juan found the Lady waiting for him at Tepeyac Hill. Juan sadly told the Virgin that he knew the Bishop did not believe him and asked her to send someone important. The Virgin said she has many servants, but it is necessary that he accomplished this task for her. She encouraged Juan not to despair and told him to return to the Bishop the next day. She repeated her earlier promise that she would richly reward him for all his labors on her behalf (and this she did, for St. Juan used well the riches of graces accorded to him and became a saint).

-Sunday, December 10: Third Apparition. Juan once more took the long trek to Mexico City for Mass and then a visit to the Bishop. After seeing the Bishop a second time, Juan Diego confided to Our Lady that the Bishop had asked for a sign. The Blessed Virgin told Juan to return to her the next morning (a walk of at least 3 hours, in one direction), when she would give him the sign. When he returned to his home, Juan found his uncle, Juan Bernardino, mortally ill.

-Monday, December 11: Caring for his uncle and looking for a healer, Juan was unable to leave for his appointment with the Virgin. After a distressful and exhausting day, his uncle asked Juan Diego to return to Tlaltelolco for a priest to come, hear his confession, and prepare him for death. Juan, who had no rest since his return, immediately set out. It was the middle of the night.

-Tuesday, December 12: Fourth Apparition. As St. Juan took another way around Tepeyac Hill, the Virgin Mary descended from its summit and politely stepped in his way. Juan explained his hurry. Our Lady told him his uncle was already cured and then sent him to the top of Tepeyac, there to gather flowers and bring them to her. She rearranged the flowers in Juan's tilma and strictly commanded him to open the bundle only for the Bishop.

Juan Diego must have waited for 3-4 hours before the servants finally told the Bishop of his return.

-Tuesday, December 12: Fifth Apparition. Unbeknownst to Juan, the Virgin had already appeared to his uncle, Juan Bernardino, and cured him. To Bernardino, Our Lady appeared in the same dress and manner as she did to his nephew. She gave him a mysterious message that when he saw the Bishop (something else he would never expect), he was to tell Zumárraga her command: “Call me and my image the Perfect Virgin Mary, Holy Mother of God, the one who crushes the serpent.” Meanwhile, in Mexico City, the Bishop’s difficult servants finally admitted St. Juan into the residence. The saint explained to the Bishop all that transpired and then opened his tilma to show him the sign of the flowers. Unexpectedly, there was also another sign given, which was the Image of the Virgin impressed upon his cloak. The Bishop immediately ordered work for the little house in honor of the Mother of God on Tepeyac Hill.

December 26: A modest sanctuary, probably made of adobe bricks already made and dried in the previous season, was erected and ready by this date. A solemn translation of the miraculous Image took place. During the ensuing festivities, a young Indian man was accidentally shot in the throat by an arrow. His body was brought before the Image, and the crying and praying people asked for mercy. The young man returned to life in front of thousands.

1533 A larger sanctuary made of adobe (called the Second Hermitage) was built by the native people while Bishop Zumárraga was in Spain.

1539 In the seventh year since Our Lady’s apparitions, at least eight million of the native peoples were converted to the Catholic Faith, which was a direct result of her appearances, her miraculous Image, and the resurrection from the dead of one of their own people.

1540 The earliest year in which Don Antonio Valeriano began writing in Nahuatl the account known as the Nican Mopohua. Due to the recent discovery of a document known as the Codex of 1548, it is now believed that the Nican Mopohua was written in the years between 1548-1555.

1541 Motolinía, Franciscan priest and early historian of New Spain, wrote that, as of this year, nine million Aztecs were baptized and became Christian (meaning Catholic).

1544 Plague (cocolixti) kills 12,000 people in Mexico City alone, including St. Juan's uncle, Juan Bernardino, who died on May 15 at the age of 86. It is recorded in the Nican Motecpana ("Herein are treated," an account of the miracles) that the Virgin came to him in a dream and told him that it was his time to die but that he should be comforted, because she would protect him and conduct him to heaven, since he had long been her dedicated son. The plague ceased after the Franciscan priests led six and seven year old boys and girls (who, at this tender age, were not considered to have reached the age of reason and therefore retained their baptismal innocence) to the shrine of Guadalupe to pray for the epidemic's end.

1548 Juan Diego died at the age of 74, at almost the same time as Bishop Zummáraga.

1556 Don Alonso de Montúfar, O.P., second Archbishop of Mexico, ordered the building of the Third Hermitage (sometimes still called the Second Hermitage), which became known as "The Old Church of the Indians."

1556-1557 Don Fray Alonso de Montúfar canonically established the truth of the appearances of "Our Lady of Guadalupe."

1564 A copy of the Image was carried on the first formal expedition to the Philippine Islands.

1567 The new church ordered by Archbishop Montúfar was completed.

1570 Archbishop Montúfar sent to King Philip II of Spain a complete inventory of the Archbishopric. The inventory mentioned the Hermitage (Chapel) of Our Lady of Guadalupe at Tepeyac, an important listing because later the official record of the apparitions was lost. Montúfar also sent the King an exact copy of the Miraculous Image. The copy was a large oil painting and it was touched to the miraculous Image. This oil painting is also important since it features the alleged "additions" of fur cuffs, stars on the mantle, the moon, the angel, etc. Knowing of the battles with the Ottomans, the Archbishop asked the King to appeal to the Virgin of Guadalupe, who had already granted many favors.

1571 Admiral Doria, gifted by King Phillip II of Spain with the oil painting, was commanded to carry it with him into battle. The Admiral took the beautiful oil painting aboard his ship, retaining it in his cabin. The Pope, the people of Rome, and almost the whole of Christendom were praying the Rosary in the face of the Ottoman (Mohammedan) threat. The Miraculous Image of Guadalupe was on board the Admiral's ship during the Battle of Lepanto. It is said that, knowing the battle was imminent, Doria prayed the Rosary before this oil painting copy of the Image. Later, the Pope and the people hailed the Rosary and the Virgin of Guadalupe for the victory over the Ottoman Empire forces. The date of the victory (October 7) was first known as Our Lady of Victory, but the name was later changed to Our Lady of the Rosary.

1573 The “Primitive Relation,” discovered in the Mexican National Library archives, was written by the historian Juan de Tovar, who transcribed the story from a still earlier source, probably Juan Gonzalez, Bishop Zumarraga’s translator.

1605 Antonio Valeriano, writer of the original Nican Mopohua, died.

1629 September 21: The beginning of the flood in Mexico City, which drowned 30,000 indigenous people and 1,600 Spaniards. At least 27,000 Indians fled. Of an estimated 20,000 Spaniards, only 400 remained in the city. The Image of Guadalupe was transferred by canoe to the cathedral, remaining there until, as the Bishop said, it could return “on foot” (meaning the area was recovered enough so that the Image would not be damaged). The flood continued for four years more.

1634 May 14: In thanksgiving for the flood’s recession, the Virgin’s Image was returned to Tepeyac in solemn procession.

1647 The Image was covered with glass for the first time.

1647-1649 Luis Lasso de la Vega, Vicar of Guadalupe, published his work in Nahuatl, Huey Tlamahuizoltica, which included the Nican Mopohua written by Antonio Valeriano.

1666 At Tepeyac Hill, work began on a greater sanctuary in honor of Our Lady. Juridical proceedings (Informaciones Canonicas Guadalupenas de 1666) were held in which elderly Indians of Cuauhtitlan (St. Juan Diego’s place of birth) reported the story as they received it from their elders, five of whom had heard it from Juan himself. The formal inquiry and investigation was conducted by the Church from February 18 to March 22 in order to ascertain the oral tradition concerning the Apparitions and the Miracle.

1709 April 27: The great sanctuary of Our Lady of Guadalupe was solemnly dedicated.

1723 The plague struck again, lasting for eight months. Throughout Mexico, an estimated 700,000 persons died. Shortly after Our Lady of Guadalupe was declared “Patroness of Mexico City,” the plague ceased. Another formal investigation was ordered by Archbishop Lanziego y Eguilaz. December 12 was proclaimed both a holy day and a civil holiday.

1737 The Most Holy Mary of Guadalupe was chosen as the patroness of Mexico City.

1746 The knight Boturini Benaducci promoted the solemn and official coronation of the Image.

1754 April 24: Pope Benedict XIV issued a bull approving Our Lady of Guadalupe as Patroness of “New Spain” (Mexico, which then extended from El Salvador to northern California). It was this pope who, when seeing a copy of the miraculous Image, quoted Psalms 147: “To no other nation has such a wonder been done.” The Sacred Congregation of Rites issued a decree approving the Office and Mass for Our Lady of Guadalupe, May 25.

1756 Famous painter Miguel Cabrera published his extensive study of the Image in the book “American Marvel.”

1757 The Virgin of Guadalupe was declared patroness of the citizens of Ciudad Ponce in Puerto Rico.

1767 The religious of the Society of Jesus were expelled from the Spanish dominions, and copies of the Image were carried to various parts of the world.

1777 June 1: The Chapel of the Well (El Pocito) was begun by Archbishop Nunez de Haro y Peralto.

1791 Completion of the Chapel of the Well, which is considered to be one of the most beautiful chapels in the world. It is situated on the eastern side of the Plaza de Mexico.

1810 Father Miguel Hidalgo used a painting of Our Lady of Guadalupe as the flag at the beginning of the Mexican War of Independence from Spain.

1821 October 12: Emperor Augustin de Iturbide, first Mexican emperor and governor after independence, gave thanks and placed the future of the nation in Our Lady’s hands. He proclaimed her Patroness of the nation and founded the Order of Guadalupe.

1846 Twenty-two Bishops from the United States petitioned Rome to have the Virgin of Guadalupe declared Patroness of their country.

1887 Pope Leo XIII ordered the coronation of Our Lady of Guadalupe.

1894 Pope Leo XIII approved a new Office and Mass of Our Lady of Guadalupe.

1895 October 12: Coronation of the Image by two Archbishops of Mexico. One was the personal delegate of Pope Leo XIII. This coronation included the attendance of a great part of the episcopate of the Americas.

1904 August 24: Pope St. Pius X raised the Shrine of the Virgin to the status of a Basilica.

1908 August 15: Pope Saint Pius X enriched with a 500 days indulgence his prayer to Our Lady of Guadalupe, wherein Our Lady of Guadalupe is entrusted with the protection of the Sovereign Pontiff and in which her intercession before God is asked on behalf of the Holy Church and the preservation of the holy Catholic Faith. Pope Saint Pius X also granted indulgences which may be gained in any part of the world for prayer before a copy of the Image of Our Lady of Guadalupe.

1910 August 24: Pope Saint Pius X declared Holy Mary of Guadalupe as Patroness of Latin America.

1911 A church was built on the site of Juan Bernardino's home.

1921 November 14: At 10:30 a.m., a bomb hidden in the flowers beneath the Image exploded, causing great damage. Nothing happened to the tilma and nobody was injured or killed.

1924 A very important 16th century source documenting the miracle was found in Peru by anthropologist M. Seville. It is a pictorial calendar known as the Codex Seville showing the Image of Our Lady located in the position representing the year 1531.

1926 Jesus Garcia Gutierrez (1875-1958), a Mexican priest, restored the text of the Nican Mopohua from various fragments.

1928 A coronation of the Image was made in Santa Fe, Argentina.

1929 Photographer Alfonso Marcue was the first to document an apparent reflection of a man's head in the right eye of the Virgin's Image.

1933 December 10: Coronation of Our Lady of Guadalupe in Rome.

December 12: Solemn Pontifical Mass in St. Peter's. Pope Pius XI renews the proclamation of his predecessor Pope St Pius X that Holy Mary is the Patroness of Latin America.

1935 Pope Pius XI extended the patronage of the Virgin of Guadalupe to the Philippines.

1945 October 12: Pope Pius XII broadcasted a radio message to Mexico and commemorated the golden anniversary of the coronation of the miraculous Image. He stated that the Virgin of Guadalupe was the “Queen of Mexico and Empress of the Americas” and that she had been painted “by brushes that were not of this world.”

1946 Pope Pius XII declared the Virgin of Guadalupe to be the Patroness of the Americas.

1950 December 12: The Plaza of the Americas, facing the Basilica, was begun and inaugurated on November 25.

1951 Carlos Salinos examined the Image, observing an apparent reflection of a man’s head in the right eye of the Virgin.

1956 Dr. Torroela-Bueno, an ophthalmologist, examined the eyes of the Virgin on the tilma.

1958 Dr. Rafael Torija-Lavoignet published his study of the Purkinje-Sanson effect as exhibited in the eyes of the Image.

1961 Pope John XXIII prayed to the Virgin of Guadalupe as Mother of the Americas. He addressed her as Mother and Teacher of the Faith to the peoples of the Americas.

1962 Dr. Charles Wahlig, O.D. announced the discovery of two Images apparently reflected in the eyes of the Virgin when studying a photograph enlarged twenty-five times. It was also in this year that the Mexican government restored the boulevard, Calzada de Los Misterios, which covers the original causeway on which Juan Diego walked from Tepeyac to the residence of the Bishop.

1966 May 31: Pope Paul VI sent a Golden Rose to Our Lady of Guadalupe.

1970 January 2: Pope Paul VI made a special television broadcast for the people of Mexico. He commemorated the 75th anniversary of the 1895 Coronation of Our Lady as Queen of Mexico and Empress of All the Americas.

1975 Glass was removed so the Image could be examined by ophthalmologist, Dr. Enrique Grave.

1976 Dedication of the new Basilica of Our Lady of Guadalupe, located four miles from central Mexico City.

1978 Fr. Mario Rojas Sánchez of Hidalgo, Mexico published his Spanish translation of the Nican Mopohua.

1979 Dr. Philip Callahan from the University of Florida took 40 frames of infra-red photographs of the Image.

1979 Shortly after his election to the papacy, Pope John Paul II made the first of his pilgrimages to Mexico. He called the Virgin of Guadalupe the “Star of Evangelization,” knelt before her Image, invoked her motherly assistance, and also hailed her as “Mother of the Americas.”

1979 Dr. Jose Aste-Tonsmann announced the finding of at least four human figures apparently reflected in both eyes of the Virgin. Dr. Tosmann employed image processing-techniques with digitized photographs of both eyes.

1981 Dr. Phillip Callahan published the results of his 1979 infrared study of the Image, The Tilma Under Infra-red Radiation: An Infrared and Artistic Analysis of the Image of the Virgin Mary in the Basilica of Guadalupe [Washington: CARA - Center for Applied Research in the Apostolate]

1983 Fr. Mario Rojas Sánchez and Dr. Juan Homero Hernández Illescas published their discoveries regarding the stars on the Virgin's mantle in Las Estrellas del Manto de la Virgen de Guadalupe (The Stars on the Mantle of the Virgin of Guadalupe) in Mexico.

1988 The liturgical celebration of Our Lady of Guadalupe on December 12 was raised to the status of a feast in all dioceses in the United States.

1990 May 6: Beautification ceremony of Juan Diego by Pope John Paul II at the Basilica in Mexico City.

1992 In St. Peter's Basilica, Pope John Paul II dedicated a chapel in honor of Our Lady of Guadalupe.

1995 Discovery of the “Codex of 1548,” which was first and officially announced in the magazine, Maria y sus siervos (year 1995, issue 26, pp. 37-38), published by the Servites. It was claimed that this Codex was previously kept in a private collection. The discovery is an important one, since it confirms St. Juan Diego's Aztec name and it adds to the scholarly discussion regarding when Antonio Valeriano wrote the Nican Mohopua.

1995 In Mexico, Dr. Hernandez Illescas provided complete documentation of his procedures, with many charts, in the expanded version of the 1983 published work with Fr. Mario Rojas Sánchez. The updated work was entitled La Virgen de Guadalupe y las estrellas (The Virgin of Guadalupe and the Stars).

1999 The Congregation for Divine Worship and the Discipline of the Sacraments raised the liturgical celebration of the Virgin of Guadalupe on December 12 to the rank of a feast in all the countries of the Americas, including all of the dioceses in the United States.

2002 July 31: Juan Diego was canonized in a ceremony presided by His Holiness John Paul II in the Basilica of Our Lady of Guadalupe. St. Juan's feast day is December 9, the date the Virgin first appeared to him.

INTERNET LINKS ON THE VIRGIN OF GUADALUPE

The following links on Guadalupe are the few that offer unique information. In my six months of research, I've found very few sites that offer information which is not in some way repeated (if not copied and pasted) from other sites. As of May 1, 2013, the small collection of links below are those I've found in some way different from many other Guadalupe sites. The links are provided as an "FYI" (For Your Information) and do not imply my personal endorsement of said website or blog. Also please know that, like all things on the Internet, some pages are moved or completely disappear. However, these links were checked just before publication and all of them were "alive" and well.

Basilica of the Virgin of Guadalupe

<http://www.virgendeguadalupe.mx/>

An Infrared Photograph of the Image \(Negative and Positive\)

<http://g-infrared.blogspot.com/>

Immaculate Immigrant 2: Virgin of Guadalupe:

The Constellations in the Sky on December 12, 1531

<http://immaculateimmigrant.org/immaculate-immigrant-2.php>

Our Lady of Guadalupe Completely Beyond Scientific Explanation

http://www.catholicnewsagency.com/news/our_lady_of_guadalupe_complete

The Queen is the Ark, the Sky is Her Cope

(Catholic and Mexican researcher Luis de Guerrero Osio y Rivas)

<http://veritasliberabit.blogspot.com/2006/12/queen-is-ark-sky-is-her-cope.html>

Science Sees What Mary Saw From Juan Diego's Tilma

(On the Mysterious Eyes of the Image)

<http://www.catholiceducation.org/articles/religion/re0447.html>

The Mystery in Our Lady's Eyes

<http://www.sancta.org/eyes.html>

About the Author

Marianna is the monthly columnist for “Secrets of the Catholic City,” published by Catholic Family News. The founding publisher of The Catholic Family’s Magnificat! Magazine, she also became the first home education editor of Sursum Corda (which later merged with Latin Mass magazine). Her contributors included Fr. John Hardon, S.J. (now Servant of God), Dr. Mary Kay Clark, Laura Berquist, and many others.

After establishing Keeping It Catholic-The Faith, Family and Home Education Network, Marianna became the author of the Keeping It Catholic Home Education Guides, The Return of the King Study Guide, The Age of Mary Study Guides, and the editor of The Keepsake Collection. The driving force behind three Catholic support groups (local, state, and national), Marianna also gained valuable online experience as the Homeschooling Forum Moderator for CRNET (now EWTN Online), where many of her magazine’s articles are archived. For 17 years, she has served as the main moderator of “the KIC List” (the Keeping It Catholic email group) for Catholic families.

Her next book release focuses on Fatima and the supernatural signs witnessed by thousands but which are little known today. Excerpts from her upcoming book, along with other articles, are available at Keeping It Catholic – The Blog! Readers are always welcome to visit Marianna via KeepingItCatholic on Facebook or “tweet” her at KICtheBlog.

Notes

[1] “Nican Mopohua: Original Account of Guadalupe”, in which the expressions and words of Our Lady to Juan Diego in the account are paraphrased from the literal translation done by Janet Barber, I.H.M., of the new Spanish version prepared by the renowned Nahuatl scholar, Fr. Mario Rojas Sánchez. A Handbook on Guadalupe [New Bedford, MA: Franciscan Friars of Mary Immaculate, 2001]: pp. 194-195. The words of the Virgin are transcribed verbatim from the Nican Mopohua, a record of the Guadalupe apparitions written in Nahuatl, the native language of the Aztecs, by the scholar Antonio Valeriano, an educated noble Indian and a contemporary to St. Juan Diego and Bishop Zumárraga. The title Nican Mopohua comes from the work’s first two Aztec words, which mean “here is told, is set down in order.”

[2] Testoni, Manuela. Our Lady of Guadalupe – History and Meaning of the Apparitions [Alba House, 2001]: p. 41.

[3] Guerrero, José Luis. Our Lady of Guadalupe: A New Interpretation of the Story, Apparitions, and Image [Liguori, MO: Liguori Publications, 2008, Kindle Edition]: Locations 143, 155. In Guerrero’s work, the Virgin’s words are allegedly transcribed verbatim from the Nican Mopohua originally written by the Indian scholar Antonio Valeriano. However, this author has found three different English translations making the same claim, and none of them match verbatim.

[4] Ibid., Location 174.

[5] “This Inquiry, known as the Informaciones de 1666, received oral testimony from seven Indians, one Mestizo and twelve Spaniards and Criollos, as well as written documents from Luis Becerra Tanco, probably the best informed Guadalupan scholar of that century. The integrity of the 21 witnesses is beyond question. The proceedings have not been translated into English. However, English-speaking readers will find excellent accounts of the Inquiry in The Dark Virgin: The Book of Our Lady of Guadalupe by Donald Demarest and Coley Taylor, 1953. For those who read Spanish, facsimiles of the original handwritten records of their testimony are given in La Informaciones Juridicas de 1666 y el Beato Indio Juan Diego, compiled and printed by Ana Sada Lambreton, H.M.I.G., Mexico, 1991.” See A Handbook of Guadalupe [New Bedford, MA: Franciscan Friars of Mary Immaculate, 2001]: p. 191 (footnote 4). Also see “Did She Say Guadalupe?”

Holy Mary website [<http://www.holymary.info/didshesayguadalupe.html>]

[6] Leatham, Miguel. University of Mexico, Indigenista Hermeneutics and the Historical Meaning of Our Lady of Guadalupe, p. 30.

[7] “The Apparition of Our Lady of Guadalupe in 1531,” Michael Journal (Oct-Nov-Dec 2002), [<http://www.michaeljournal.org/guadalupe.htm>]
[Emphasis added]

[8] “Did She Say Guadalupe?” Loc. cit.

[9] “Our Lady of Guadalupe, Mother of the Americas and Pro-Life Icon,” Suffering with Joy website [<http://www.sufferingwithjoy.com/articles/>]

[10] Testoni, Manuela. Our Lady of Guadalupe – History and Meaning of the Apparitions [Alba House, 2001]: p. 37. The author cites Ex. 19:16-20, Lk. 2:8-14, and Apoc. 21:9-27.

[11] Taylor, Coley. “Our Lady of Guadalupe, Empress of the Americas and Mother of Mercy,” reprinted from a 1953 article in Divine Love, Issue No. 87, 4th Quarter, 1981. Reprinted on Mary's Touch website [<http://www.marys-touch.com/history/guadalupe.htm>]

[12] Guerrero, José Luis. Our Lady of Guadalupe: A New Interpretation of the Story, Apparitions, and Image [Liguori, MO: Liguori Publications, 2008, Kindle Edition]: Location 306.

[13] Rodriguez, Jeannette. Our Lady of Guadalupe: Faith and Empowerment among Mexican-American Women [Austin, TX: University of Texas Press, 1994]: p. 16.

[14] “Our Lady of Guadalupe,” Mary Our Mother website [<http://maryourmother.net/Guadalupe.html>] For historical references, the article cites Manuela Testoni, Our Lady of Guadalupe - History and Meaning of the Apparitions (Staten Island, NY, 2001); D. Demarest and C. Taylor, The Dark Virgin - The Book of Our Lady of Guadalupe (Porter's Landing, Freeport, MN: Coley Taylor Publishers, 1956); Fr. Virgilio Elizondo, La Morenita - Evangelizer of the Americas [San Antonio, TX: Mexican American Cultural Center, 1980], Francis Johnston, The Wonders of Guadalupe [Rockford, IL: TAN Books & Publishers, 1981], and Warren H. Carroll, Our Lady of Guadalupe and the Conquest of Darkness [Front Royal, VA, 2002].

[15] Lynch, Dan, “The Amazing Truth of Our Lady of Guadalupe,” Catholic

Exchange (December, 2002). Reprinted with permission at the Catholic Education Resource Center website [<http://catholiceducation.org/articles/religion/re0592.html>].

[16] Matt. 28:19-20.

[17] King, Christina. "Our Lady of Guadalupe and the Demonic" speech on video, Oct. 12, 2011, "Embracing Your Greatness" on World Family of Radio Maria [<http://www.ustream.tv/recorded/17839044>].

[18] Ibid., Author's Introduction. The author clarifies, "The technical study of this codex has been done primarily by Jody Bryant Smith (1984) and Philip Serna Callahan (1981)."

[19] Rodriguez, Jeannette. Our Lady of Guadalupe: Faith and Empowerment among Mexican-American Women [Austin, TX: University of Texas Press, 1994]: p. 37.

[20] "Our Lady of Guadalupe, Mother of the Americas and Pro-Life Icon," Suffering with Joy website [<http://www.sufferingwithjoy.com/articles/>], citing Manuela Testoni, Our Lady of Guadalupe – History and Meaning of the Apparitions [Alba House, 2001]: pp. 43-35.

[21] Rodriguez, Jeannette. Our Lady of Guadalupe: Faith and Empowerment among Mexican-American Women [Austin, TX: University of Texas Press, 1994]: p. 23.

[22] Elizondo, Fr. Virgilio. La Morenito - Evangelizer of the Americas [San Antonio, TX: Mexican American Cultural Center, 1980]: p. 18. Cited by Rodriguez, p. 23.

[23] Cruz, Joan Carroll. Miraculous Images of Our Lady [Rockford, IL: TAN Books & Publishers, 1993]: p. 292.

[24] Callahan, Phillip S. The Tilma Under Infra-red Radiation: An Infrared and Artistic Analysis of the Image of the Virgin Mary in the Basilica of Guadalupe [Washington: CARA - Center for Applied Research in the Apostolate, 1981]: pp. 14-15. Cited by Rodriguez, loc. cit., p. 24.

[25] Ps. 88:15.

[26] Gal. 3:26-28.

[27] Eccl. 24: 24.

[28] Hawkins, O.C.S.O., Dom Columban, contributor to A Handbook of Guadalupe [New Bedford, MA: Franciscan Friars of Mary Immaculate, 2001]: p. 63.

[29] Testoni, Manuela. Our Lady of Guadalupe - History and Meaning of the Apparitions [Alba House: Staten Island, NY, 2001]: p. 43.

[30] Apoc. 12:1.

[31] However, when the stars on the Image's turquoise mantle are transposed over the position of the stars in the pre-dawn hours of December 12, 1531, A.D., the Corona Borealis is near the Virgin's left-side temple (when facing the Image). It must also be noted that the constellation has seven stars, not twelve as mentioned of the woman's crown of stars in Apocalypse 12:1.

[32] Sean O'Malley, O.F.M. Cap., Bishop of Fall River, A Handbook on Guadalupe [New Bedford, MA: Franciscan Friars of Mary Immaculate, 2001]: p. xiv.

[33] In the 1917 Fatima apparitions, witnesses (outside of the actual visionaries) would also see a cloud announcing the Virgin's presence – and this cloud, like the Aztec's understanding of the Virgin of Guadalupe, came from the east.

[34] Testoni, Manuela. Our Lady of Guadalupe - History and Meaning of the Apparitions [Alba House: Staten Island, NY, 2001]: p. 44.

[35] Callahan, Phillip S. The Tilma Under Infra-red Radiation: An Infrared and Artistic Analysis of the Image of the Virgin Mary in the Basilica of Guadalupe [Washington: CARA - Center for Applied Research in the Apostolate, 1981]: pp. 14-15. The author, who personally examined the Image and tilma, said the rose tunic is "highly reflective of visible radiation, yet transparent to the infrared rays...As in the case of the blue mantle, the shadowing of the pink robe is blended into the paint layer and no drawing or sketch is evident under the pink pigment."

[36] The crescent moon on the Image now appears black but it was ascertained by 1666 that the original crescent was painted over with real silver, which tarnishes to black with age. See A Handbook on Guadalupe [New Bedford, MA: Franciscan Friars of Mary Immaculate, 2001]: p. 58.

[37] Elizondo, Fr. Virgilio. La Morenito - Evangelizer of the Americas [San Antonio, TX: Mexican American Cultural Center, 1980]: b1.

[38] Barber, I.H.M., Janet, contributor to A Handbook on Guadalupe [New Bedford, MA: Franciscan Friars of Mary Immaculate, 2001]: p. 72.

- [39] Rodriguez, Jeannette. Our Lady of Guadalupe: Faith and Empowerment among Mexican-American Women [Austin, TX: University of Texas Press, 1994]: p. 27.
- [40] Testoni, Manuela. Our Lady of Guadalupe - History and Meaning of the Apparitions [Alba House: Staten Island, NY, 2001]: p. 44.
- [41] Barber, I.H.M., Janet, contributor to A Handbook on Guadalupe [New Bedford, MA: Franciscan Friars of Mary Immaculate, 2001]: p. 136.
- [42] Ibid.
- [43] Loc. cit., p. 66.
- [44] Guadalupe, Fr. Miguel. The Seven Veils of Our Lady of Guadalupe [Goleta, CA: Queenship Publishing, 1999]: pp. 198-199.
- [45] Apoc. 12: 14.
- [46] Rodriguez, Jeannette. Our Lady of Guadalupe: Faith and Empowerment among Mexican-American Women [Austin, TX: University of Texas Press, 1994]: p. 18.
- [47] Testoni, Manuela. Our Lady of Guadalupe - History and Meaning of the Apparitions [Alba House: Staten Island, NY, 2001]: pp. 28, 43-44.
- [48] Guadalupe, Fr. Miguel. The Seven Veils of Our Lady of Guadalupe [Goleta, CA: Queenship Publishing, 1999]: p. 266.
- [49] Septuagint: The ancient Greek translation of the Hebrew Scriptures (i.e., the Old Testament), approved by the Catholic Church but rejected by orthodox Jews and Protestant sects.
- [50] Kramer, Rev. Herman Bernard. The Book of Destiny [Rockford, IL: TAN Books & Publishers, 1975. Originally published in 1955 by Buechler Publishing Co., Belleville, IL. Reprinted in 1972 by Apostolate of Christian Action, Fresno, CA from which the 1975 printing was made]: p. 276.
- [51] “A STAR SHALL RISE out of Jacob and a sceptre shall spring up from Israel.” Num. 24:7.
- [52] Callahan, Phillip S. The Tilma Under Infra-red Radiation: An Infrared and Artistic Analysis of the Image of the Virgin Mary in the Basilica of Guadalupe [Washington: CARA - Center for Applied Research in the Apostolate, 1981].
- [53] Testoni, Manuela. Our Lady of Guadalupe - History and Meaning of the Apparitions [Alba House: Staten Island, NY, 2001]: p. 31.

[54] Janet Barber, I.H.M. also credits Fr. Mario Rojas Sánchez of Hidalgo, Mexico as the first to discover “in Mary’s Image precious and profound meanings which have gone unrecognized by Guadalupan scholars for centuries.” She also wrote that the Image is, in short, “a codex...filled with Christian teachings rooted in the Indians’ own culture.” Barber’s words do not make clear whether Fr. Sanchez or she first employed the word “codex.” As far as my five months’ research can ascertain, the published study of Fr. Sánchez and Dr. Illescas is not published in English. This may explain the unfortunate omissions or obscure references to the research of Fr. Rojas Sanchez and Dr. Illescas in the works of other (and later) authors who explain the Image’s stars and other symbols. See Barber’s essay, “The Sacred Image is a Divine Codex” in A Handbook on Guadalupe [New Bedford, MA: Franciscan Friars of Mary Immaculate, 2001]: p. 68 .

[55] Barber I.H.M., Janet, contributor to A Handbook on Guadalupe [New Bedford, MA: Franciscan Friars of Mary Immaculate, 2001]: pp. 68-69.

[56] According to Janet Barber, I.H.M., Fr. Mario Rojas Sanchez and Dr. Juan Homero Hernández Illescas published a 1983 study but a footnote explains: “Dr. Hernandez gives complete documentation of his procedures, with many charts, in the expanded publication of their findings La Virgen de Guadalupe y las estrellas, Mexico, 1995. The optical problem of representing on a plane, stars that are really spread over a sphere (anamorphosis) was taken into account by Dr. Hernandez.” However, Fr. Miguel Guadalupe states, “Their studies have been published under the title Las Estrellas del Manto de la Virgen de Guadalupe” (The Stars on the Mantle of the Virgin of Guadalupe). See Barber’s essay, “The Sacred Image is a Divine Codex” in A Handbook on Guadalupe, pp. 70-73, and Fr. Miguel Guadalupe, The Seven Veils of Our Lady of Guadalupe [Goleta, CA: Queenship Publishing, 1999]: p. 267.

[57] Guadalupe, Fr. Miguel. The Seven Veils of Our Lady of Guadalupe [Goleta, CA: Queenship Publishing, 1999]: p. 268.

[58] Barber I.H.M., Janet, contributor to A Handbook on Guadalupe [New Bedford, MA: Franciscan Friars of Mary Immaculate, 2001]: p. 69.

[59] Barber I.H.M., Janet. "Mary of Guadalupe: Queen of the Cosmos," Los Angeles, CA, May 27, 2001, p. 2, citing and translating the Spanish into English excerpts from Dr. Juan Homero Hernández Illescas, Rev. Monsignor Mario Rojas, and Enrique R. Salazar S., La Virgin de Guadalupe y las Estrellas [Mexico: Centro de Estudios Guadalupanos, 1995], pp. 14, 81-87. Cited by Fr. Xavier Escalada, S.J., Immaculate Immigrant: Virgin of Guadalupe (pdf. dated 3.27.11).

[60] Anamorphosis – “making a semi-spherical reality intelligible on a flat plane.” Dr. Juan Hernández Illescas as quoted by Dr. Janet Barber, “Mary of Guadalupe: Queen of the Cosmos.” Los Angeles, CA, May 27, 2001, p. 2.

[61] Barber I.H.M., Janet, contributor to A Handbook on Guadalupe [New Bedford, MA: Franciscan Friars of Mary Immaculate, 2001]: p. 69.

[62] Hawkins, O.C.S.O., Dom. Columban, contributor to A Handbook on Guadalupe [New Bedford, MA: Franciscan Friars of Mary Immaculate, 2001]: p. 66.

[63] Rops, Daniel. The Protestant Reformation, pp. 345-346. Cited by Foley, Donal Anthony. Marian Apparitions, the Bible, and the Modern World [Herefordshire, England: Gracewing, 2002]: pp. 43, 382.

[64] 2 Thess. 2:3.

[65] Leatham, Miguel. University of Mexico, Indigenista Hermeneutics and the Historical Meaning of Our Lady of Guadalupe, p. 30. Nahuatl scholars claim the Virgin Mary’s actual words to Juan Bernardino, the uncle of St. Juan Diego, on December 12, 1531 did not include the word Guadalupe but instead a Nahuatl phrase that means “the one who crushes the serpent.” Thus her words to Juan Bernardino are rendered: “Call me and my image the Perfect Virgin Mary, Holy Mother of God, the one who crushes the serpent.”

[66] Foley, Donal Anthony. Marian Apparitions, the Bible, and the Modern World [Herefordshire, England: Gracewing, 2002]: p. 37. [Emphasis added]

[67] “A STAR SHALL RISE out of Jacob and a sceptre shall spring up from Israel.” Num. 24:7.

[68] Gen. 1:14-16.

[69] Guadalupe, Fr. Miguel. The Seven Veils of Our Lady of Guadalupe [Goleta, CA: Queenship Publishing, 1999]: p. 266.

[70] Kramer, Rev. Herman Bernard. The Book of Destiny [Rockford, IL: TAN Books & Publishers, 1975] Originally published in 1955 by Buechler Publishing Co., Belleville, IL. Reprinted in 1972 by Apostolate of Christian Action, Fresno, CA from which the 1975 printing was made): p. 276.

[71] Apoc. 5:5.

[72] Barber I.H.M., Janet, contributor to A Handbook on Guadalupe [New Bedford, MA: Franciscan Friars of Mary Immaculate, 2001]: pp. 69-70. However, it should be noted that the Corona Borealis has seven stars, while the woman described in Apocalypse 12:1 wears a crown of twelve stars.

[73] Guadalupe, Fr. Miguel. The Seven Veils of Our Lady of Guadalupe [Goleta, CA: Queenship Publishing, 1999]: p. 292.

[74] Job 9:9; 38:31; Amos 5:8.

[75] Job 9:9; Amos 5:8.

[76] Job 26:13.

[77] Thurston, Herbert. "Use of Numbers in the Church," The Catholic Encyclopedia, Vol. 11 [New York: Robert Appleton Company, 1911] [<http://www.newadvent.org/cathen/11151a.htm>]

[78] Lk. 10:1.

[79] 1 Cor. 10:8.

[80] Sungenis, Ph.D., Robert. "New Discoveries of the Constellations on the Tilma of Our Lady of Guadalupe," July 26, 2007. Republished July 19, 2011 at The Bellarmine Report

[<http://www.catholicintl.com/index.php/component/content/article/62-mary-and-the-saints/179-new-discoveries-of-the-constellations-on-the-tilma-of-our-lady-of-guadalupe>] which references Matt. 24:29-31; Dan. 8:10.

[81] 2 Thess. 2:7.

[82] Apoc. 9:4-5, 15.

[83] Apoc. 13:1-18.

[84] "Hydra," Oracle Think Quest for Students, [<http://library.thinkquest.org/J0110010/planets,%20moons,%20stars/hydra.htm>]

[85] "Hydra Constellation," Constellation Guide website [<http://www.constellation-guide.com/constellation-list/hydra-constellation/>]

[86] Jn. 10:12. "But the hireling, and he that is not the shepherd, whose own the sheep are not, seeth the wolf coming, and leaveth the sheep, and flieth: and the wolf catcheth, and scattereth the sheep."

[87] Rom. 1:23.

[88] "Canis Minor," Top Astronomer website

[<http://www.topastronomer.com/StarCharts/Constellations/Canis-Minor.php>]

[89] Dan. 7:8.

[90] Regarding dates and the change of seasons (i.e., summer, fall, winter, spring), one must take into account that in 1531, the Winter Solstice took place December 12, the day Our Lady gave her name and the miraculous Image of Guadalupe. On October 4, 1582, Pope Gregory XIII instituted a reformed calendar, because the former Julian calendar allowed an error of one day every 128 years, and it was necessary to determine the exact date of Easter which had to coincide with the spring equinox, as decreed by the Council of Nicea, 325 A.D. The Gregorian calendar, currently in use, advanced the calendar date by 11 days. As a result, the Winter Solstice typically occurs on December 21. (Leap years, which add one day to the calendar, must also be considered. A year is considered a “Leap Year” when 1) the year is evenly divisible by 4 and, 2) the year is evenly divisible by 400. However, if the year can also be evenly divided by 100, it is not a leap year.)

[91] Jn. 10:11.

[92] Guadalupe, Fr. Miguel. The Seven Veils of Our Lady of Guadalupe [Goleta, CA: Queenship Publishing, 1999]: p. 283.

[93] Loc. cit., p. 275.

[94] Dan. 7:5; Apoc. 13:2.

[95] Isa. 56:8-11. “The Lord God, who gathereth the scattered of Israel, saith: I will still gather unto him his congregation. All ye beasts of the field come to devour, all ye beasts of the forest. His watchmen are all blind, they are all ignorant: dumb dogs not able to bark, seeing vain things, sleeping and loving dreams. And meet impudent dogs. They never had enough: the shepherds themselves knew no understanding: all have turned aside into their own way, every one after his own gain, from the first even to the last.”

[96] Sungenis, op. cit.

[97] “Lynx,” Harvard Observatory,
[<http://chandra.harvard.edu/photo/constellations/lynx.html>]

[98] Jn. 20:29.

[99] Apoc. 11:4.

[100] “Lynx (Constellation)”, Wikipedia
[http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Lynx_\(constellation\))] and “31 Lyncis,”

Wikipedia [<http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Alsciaukat>]

[101] Gen. 3:15, Apoc. 12:1-4.

[102] Gen. 15:9, Lev. 4:28, Lev. 5:6, Num. 15:27.

[103] Matt. 25:33.

[104] Apoc. 12:7.

[105] Barber I.H.M., Janet, contributor to A Handbook on Guadalupe [New Bedford, MA: Franciscan Friars of Mary Immaculate, 2001]: p. 70.

[106] Apoc. 12:1.

[107] Guadalupe, Fr. Miguel. The Seven Veils of Our Lady of Guadalupe [Goleta, CA: Queenship Publishing, 1999]: p. 528.

[108] Isa. 13:9-10, Joel 3:15, Matt. 24:29, Mk. 13: 25, Lk. 21: 25, Apoc. 8:12.

THE IMITATION OF CHRIST

ILLUSTRATED

THOMAS À KEMPIS

TRANSLATED BY
ALOYSIUS CROFT AND HAROLD BOLTON

Catholic way PUBLISHING

THE IMITATION OF CHRIST

THOMAS À KEMPIS

TRANSLATED FROM THE LATIN INTO MODERN ENGLISH
BY ALOYSIUS CROFT AND HAROLD BOLTON

“Without labour there is no rest, and without fighting, no victory”

Copyright © 2013 by Catholic Way Publishing.
All rights reserved.

Copyright © 1940 by Bruce Pub. Co., Milwaukee, US.
Retypeset and republished in 2013 by Catholic Way Publishing.
Cover design by Catholic Way Publishing.

NIHIL OBSTAT:

H. B. Ries
Censor liborum

IMPRIMATUR:

+ Moyses E. Kiley
Archiepiscopus Milwaukiensis

Paintings by Guido Reni, a 17th Century high-Baroque artist.

This work is published for the greater glory of Jesus Christ through His most holy mother Mary and for the sanctification of the Church militant.

The typography of this book is the property of Catholic Way Publishing and may not be reproduced, in whole or in part, without written permission of the Publisher.

Catholic Way Publishing® and the associated logo are registered Trademarks of the Catholic Way Publishing Company.

Available in Paperback.

Kindle E-Book:
eISBN-13: 978-1-78379-038-8

PUBLISHER

[\[Paperback\]](#) [\[Kindle\]](#) [\[Website\]](#)

PAPERBACK EDITION:

ISBN-13: 978-1-78379-037-1

TRUE DEVOTION TO MARY: WITH
PREPARATION FOR TOTAL CONSECRATION
BY SAINT LOUIS DE MONTFORT:

Paperback Hardback Kindle

INDEX

CONTENTS

THE IMITATION OF CHRIST

FOREWORD

BOOK ONE

Thoughts Helpful In The Life Of The Soul

BOOK TWO

The Interior Life

BOOK THREE

Internal Consolation

BOOK FOUR

An Invitation To Holy Communion

PUBLISHER II

ENDNOTES

THE IMITATION OF CHRIST

FOREWORD

IN PREPARING this edition of The Imitation of Christ, the aim was to achieve a simple, readable text which would ring true to those who are already lovers of this incomparable book and would attract others to it. For this reason we have attempted to render the text into English as it is spoken today rather than the cloudy, archaic terminology that encumbers so many translations of Christian classics. The result, we feel, has achieved a directness and conciseness which will meet the approval of modern readers. In the second place, we have made use of the familiar paragraph form, doing away with the simple statement or verse form of the original and of many translations. This was done in the interest of easier reading, and in order to bring out more clearly the connection between the single statements.

No claim of literary excellence over the many English versions now extant is here advanced, nor any attempt to solve in further confusion the problem of the book's authorship.

Theories most popular at the moment ascribe the Imitation to two or three men, members of the Brethren of the Common Life, an association of priests organized in the Netherlands in the latter half of the fourteenth century. That Thomas Hemerken of Kempen, or Thomas 'a Kempis as he is now known, later translated a composite of their writings, essentially a spiritual diary, from the original Netherlandish into Latin is generally admitted by scholars. This Thomas, born about the year 1380, was educated by the Brethren of the Common Life, was moved to join their community, and was ordained priest. His career thereafter was devoted to practicing the counsels of spiritual perfection and to copying books for the schools. See below for a more in-depth Biography. From both pursuits evolved The Imitation of Christ. As editor and translator he was not without faults, but thanks to him the Imitation became and has remained, after the Bible, the most widely read book in the world. It is his edition that is here rendered into English, without deletion of chapters or parts of them because doubts exist as to their authorship, or because of variants in style, or for any of the other more or less valid reasons.

There is but one major change. The treatise on Holy Communion, which ‘a Kempis places as Book Three, is here titled Book Four. The move makes the order of the whole more logical and agrees with the thought of most editors.

The Translators

Aloysius Croft

Harold Bolton

DAVID AND GOLIATH

BOOK ONE

Thoughts Helpful In The Life Of The Soul

ANGEL OF THE ANNUNCIATION

The First Chapter

Imitating Christ and Despising All Vanities on Earth

HE WHO follows Me, walks not in darkness,” says the Lord (John 8:12). By these words of Christ we are advised to imitate His life and habits, if we wish to be truly enlightened and free from all blindness of heart. Let our chief effort, therefore, be to study the life of Jesus Christ.

The teaching of Christ is more excellent than all the advice of the saints, and he who has His spirit will find in it a hidden manna. Now, there are many who hear the Gospel often but care little for it because they have not the spirit of Christ. Yet whoever wishes to understand fully the words of Christ must try to pattern his whole life on that of Christ.

What good does it do to speak learnedly about the Trinity if, lacking humility, you displease the Trinity? Indeed it is not learning that makes a man holy and just, but a virtuous life makes him pleasing to God. I would rather feel contrition than know how to define it. For what would it profit us to know the whole Bible by heart and the principles of all the philosophers if we live without grace and the love of God? Vanity of vanities and all is vanity, except to love God and serve Him alone.

This is the greatest wisdom—to seek the kingdom of heaven through contempt of the world. It is vanity, therefore, to seek and trust in riches that perish. It is vanity also to court honor and to be puffed up with pride. It is vanity to follow the lusts of the body and to desire things for which severe punishment later must come. It is vanity to wish for long life and to care little about a well-spent life. It is vanity to be concerned with the present only and not to make provision for things to come. It is vanity to love what passes quickly and not to look ahead where eternal joy abides.

Often recall the proverb: “The eye is not satisfied with seeing nor the ear filled with hearing.”¹ Try, moreover, to turn your heart from the love of things visible and bring yourself to things invisible. For they who follow their own evil passions stain their consciences and lose the grace of God.

The Second Chapter

Having a Humble Opinion of Self

EVERY man naturally desires knowledge² ; but what good is knowledge without fear of God? Indeed a humble rustic who serves God is better than a proud intellectual who neglects his soul to study the course of the stars.³ He who knows himself well becomes mean in his own eyes and is not happy when praised by men.

If I knew all things in the world and had not charity, what would it profit me before God Who will judge me by my deeds?

Shun too great a desire for knowledge, for in it there is much fretting and delusion. Intellectuals like to appear learned and to be called wise. Yet there are many things the knowledge of which does little or no good to the soul, and he who concerns himself about other things than those which lead to salvation is very unwise.

Many words do not satisfy the soul; but a good life eases the mind and a clean conscience inspires great trust in God.

The more you know and the better you understand, the more severely will you be judged, unless your life is also the more holy. Do not be proud, therefore, because of your learning or skill. Rather, fear because of the talent given you. If you think you know many things and understand them well enough, realize at the same time that there is much you do not know. Hence, do not affect wisdom, but admit your ignorance. Why prefer yourself to anyone else when many are more learned, more cultured than you?

If you wish to learn and appreciate something worth while, then love to be unknown and considered as nothing. Truly to know and despise self is the best and most perfect counsel. To think of oneself as nothing, and always to think well and highly of others is the best and most perfect wisdom. Wherefore, if you see another sin openly or commit a serious crime, do not consider yourself better, for you do not know how long you can remain in good estate. All men are frail, but you must admit that none is more frail than yourself.

The Third Chapter

The Doctrine of Truth

HAPPY is he to whom truth manifests itself, not in signs and words that fade, but as it actually is. Our opinions, our senses often deceive us and we discern very little.

What good is much discussion of involved and obscure matters when our ignorance of them will not be held against us on Judgment Day? Neglect of things which are profitable and necessary and undue concern with those which are irrelevant and harmful, are great folly.

We have eyes and do not see.

What, therefore, have we to do with questions of philosophy? He to whom the Eternal Word speaks is free from theorizing. For from this Word are all things and of Him all things speak—the Beginning Who also speaks to us. Without this Word no man understands or judges aright. He to whom it becomes everything, who traces all things to it and who sees all things in it, may ease his heart and remain at peace with God.

O God, You Who are the truth, make me one with You in love everlasting. I am often wearied by the many things I hear and read, but in You is all that I long for. Let the learned be still, let all creatures be silent before You; You alone speak to me.

The more recollected a man is, and the more simple of heart he becomes, the easier he understands sublime things, for he receives the light of knowledge from above. The pure, simple, and steadfast spirit is not distracted by many labors, for he does them all for the honor of God. And since he enjoys interior peace he seeks no selfish end in anything. What, indeed, gives more trouble and affliction than uncontrolled desires of the heart?

A good and devout man arranges in his mind the things he has to do, not according to the whims of evil inclination but according to the dictates of right reason. Who is forced to struggle more than he who tries to master himself? This ought to be our purpose, then: to conquer self, to become stronger each day, to advance in virtue.

Every perfection in this life has some imperfection mixed with it and no learning of ours is without some darkness. Humble knowledge of self is a surer path to God than the ardent pursuit of learning. Not that learning is to be considered evil, or knowledge, which is good in itself and so ordained by God; but a clean conscience and virtuous life ought always to be preferred. Many often err and accomplish little or nothing because they try to become learned rather than to live well.

If men used as much care in uprooting vices and implanting virtues as they do in discussing problems, there would not be so much evil and scandal in the world, or such laxity in religious organizations. On the day of judgment, surely, we shall not be asked what we have read but what we have done; not how well we have spoken but how well we have lived.

Tell me, where now are all the masters and teachers whom you knew so well in life and who were famous for their learning? Others have already taken their places and I know not whether they ever think of their predecessors. During life they seemed to be something; now they are seldom remembered. How quickly the glory of the world passes away! If only their lives had kept pace with their learning, then their study and reading would have been worth while.

How many there are who perish because of vain worldly knowledge and too little care for serving God. They became vain in their own conceits because they chose to be great rather than humble.

He is truly great who has great charity. He is truly great who is little in his own eyes and makes nothing of the highest honor. He is truly wise who looks upon all earthly things as folly that he may gain Christ. He who does God's will and renounces his own is truly very learned.

The Fourth Chapter

Prudence in Action

DO NOT yield to every impulse and suggestion but consider things carefully and patiently in the light of God's will. For very often, sad to say, we are so weak that we believe and speak evil of others rather than good. Perfect men, however, do not readily believe every talebearer, because they know that human frailty is prone to evil and is likely to appear in speech.

Not to act rashly or to cling obstinately to one's opinion, not to believe everything people say or to spread abroad the gossip one has heard, is great wisdom.

Take counsel with a wise and conscientious man. Seek the advice of your betters in preference to following your own inclinations.

A good life makes a man wise according to God and gives him experience in many things, for the more humble he is and the more subject to God, the wiser and the more at peace he will be in all things.

The Fifth Chapter
Reading the Holy Scripture

TRUTH, not eloquence, is to be sought in reading the Holy Scriptures; and every part must be read in the spirit in which it was written. For in the Scriptures we ought to seek profit rather than polished diction.

Likewise we ought to read simple and devout books as willingly as learned and profound ones. We ought not to be swayed by the authority of the writer, whether he be a great literary light or an insignificant person, but by the love of simple truth. We ought not to ask who is speaking, but mark what is said. Men pass away, but the truth of the Lord remains forever. God speaks to us in many ways without regard for persons.

Our curiosity often impedes our reading of the Scriptures, when we wish to understand and mull over what we ought simply to read and pass by.

If you would profit from it, therefore, read with humility, simplicity, and faith, and never seek a reputation for being learned. Seek willingly and listen attentively to the words of the saints; do not be displeased with the sayings of the ancients, for they were not made without purpose.

The Sixth Chapter
Unbridled Affections

WHEN a man desires a thing too much, he at once becomes ill at ease. A proud and avaricious man never rests, whereas he who is poor and humble of heart lives in a world of peace. An unmortified man is quickly tempted and overcome in small, trifling evils; his spirit is weak, in a measure carnal and inclined to sensual things; he can hardly abstain from earthly desires. Hence it makes him sad to forego them; he is quick to anger if reproved. Yet if he satisfies his desires, remorse of conscience overwhelms him because he followed his passions and they did not lead to the peace he sought.

True peace of heart, then, is found in resisting passions, not in satisfying them. There is no peace in the carnal man, in the man given to vain attractions, but there is peace in the fervent and spiritual man.

The Seventh Chapter

Avoiding False Hope and Pride

VAIN is the man who puts his trust in men, in created things.

Do not be ashamed to serve others for the love of Jesus Christ and to seem poor in this world. Do not be self-sufficient but place your trust in God. Do what lies in your power and God will aid your good will. Put no trust in your own learning nor in the cunning of any man, but rather in the grace of God Who helps the humble and humbles the proud.

If you have wealth, do not glory in it, nor in friends because they are powerful, but in God Who gives all things and Who desires above all to give Himself. Do not boast of personal stature or of physical beauty, qualities which are marred and destroyed by a little sickness. Do not take pride in your talent or ability, lest you displease God to Whom belongs all the natural gifts that you have.

Do not think yourself better than others lest, perhaps, you be accounted worse before God Who knows what is in man. Do not take pride in your good deeds, for God's judgments differ from those of men and what pleases them often displeases Him. If there is good in you, see more good in others, so that you may remain humble. It does no harm to esteem yourself less than anyone else, but it is very harmful to think yourself better than even one. The humble live in continuous peace, while in the hearts of the proud are envy and frequent anger.

The Eighth Chapter

Shunning Over-Familiarity

DO NOT open your heart to every man, but discuss your affairs with one who is wise and who fears God. Do not keep company with young people and strangers. Do not fawn upon the rich, and do not be fond of mingling with the great. Associate with the humble and the simple, with the devout and virtuous, and with them speak of edifying things. Be not intimate with any woman, but generally commend all good women to God. Seek only the intimacy of God and of His angels, and avoid the notice of men.

We ought to have charity for all men but familiarity with all is not expedient. Sometimes it happens that a person enjoys a good reputation among those who do not know him, but at the same time is held in slight regard by those who do. Frequently we think we are pleasing others by our presence and we begin rather to displease them by the faults they find in us.

The Ninth Chapter

Obedience and Subjection

IT IS a very great thing to obey, to live under a superior and not to be one's own master, for it is much safer to be subject than it is to command. Many live in obedience more from necessity than from love. Such become discontented and dejected on the slightest pretext; they will never gain peace of mind unless they subject themselves wholeheartedly for the love of God.

Go where you may, you will find no rest except in humble obedience to the rule of authority. Dreams of happiness expected from change and different places have deceived many.

Everyone, it is true, wishes to do as he pleases and is attracted to those who agree with him. But if God be among us, we must at times give up our opinions for the blessings of peace.

Furthermore, who is so wise that he can have full knowledge of everything? Do not trust too much in your own opinions, but be willing to listen to those of others. If, though your own be good, you accept another's opinion for love of God, you will gain much more merit; for I have often heard that it is safer to listen to advice and take it than to give it. It may happen, too, that while one's own opinion may be good, refusal to agree with others when reason and occasion demand it, is a sign of pride and obstinacy.

The Tenth Chapter

Avoiding Idle Talk

SHUN the gossip of men as much as possible, for discussion of worldly affairs, even though sincere, is a great distraction inasmuch as we are quickly ensnared and captivated by vanity.

Many a time I wish that I had held my peace and had not associated with men. Why, indeed, do we converse and gossip among ourselves when we so seldom part without a troubled conscience? We do so because we seek comfort from one another's conversation and wish to ease the mind wearied by diverse thoughts. Hence, we talk and think quite fondly of things we like very much or of things we dislike intensely. But, sad to say, we often talk vainly and to no purpose; for this external pleasure effectively bars inward and divine consolation.

Therefore we must watch and pray lest time pass idly.

When the right and opportune moment comes for speaking, say something that will edify.

Bad habits and indifference to spiritual progress do much to remove the guard from the tongue. Devout conversation on spiritual matters, on the contrary, is a great aid to spiritual progress, especially when persons of the same mind and spirit associate together in God.

The Eleventh Chapter

Acquiring Peace and Zeal for Perfection

WE SHOULD enjoy much peace if we did not concern ourselves with what others say and do, for these are no concern of ours. How can a man who meddles in affairs not his own, who seeks strange distractions, and who is little or seldom inwardly recollected, live long in peace?

Blessed are the simple of heart for they shall enjoy peace in abundance.

Why were some of the saints so perfect and so given to contemplation? Because they tried to mortify entirely in themselves all earthly desires, and thus they were able to attach themselves to God with all their heart and freely to concentrate their innermost thoughts.

We are too occupied with our own whims and fancies, too taken up with passing things. Rarely do we completely conquer even one vice, and we are not inflamed with the desire to improve ourselves day by day; hence, we remain cold and indifferent. If we mortified our bodies perfectly and allowed no distractions to enter our minds, we could appreciate divine things and experience something of heavenly contemplation.

The greatest obstacle, indeed, the only obstacle, is that we are not free from passions and lusts, that we do not try to follow the perfect way of the saints. Thus when we encounter some slight difficulty, we are too easily dejected and turn to human consolations. If we tried, however, to stand as brave men in battle, the help of the Lord from heaven would surely sustain us. For He Who gives us the opportunity of fighting for victory, is ready to help those who carry on and trust in His grace.

If we let our progress in religious life depend on the observance of its externals alone, our devotion will quickly come to an end. Let us, then, lay the ax to the root that we may be freed from our passions and thus have peace of mind.

If we were to uproot only one vice each year, we should soon become perfect. The contrary, however, is often the case—we feel that we were better and purer in the first fervor of our conversion than we are after many years in the practice of our faith. Our fervor and progress ought to increase day by day; yet it is now considered noteworthy if a man can retain even a part of his first fervor.

If we did a little violence to ourselves at the start, we should afterwards be able to do all things with ease and joy. It is hard to break old habits, but harder still to go against our will.

If you do not overcome small, trifling things, how will you overcome the more difficult? Resist temptations in the beginning, and unlearn the evil habit lest perhaps, little by little, it lead to a more evil one.

If you but consider what peace a good life will bring to yourself and what joy it will give to others, I think you will be more concerned about your spiritual progress.

The Twelfth Chapter

The Value of Adversity

IT IS good for us to have trials and troubles at times, for they often remind us that we are on probation and ought not to hope in any worldly thing. It is good for us sometimes to suffer contradiction, to be misjudged by men even though we do well and mean well. These things help us to be humble and shield us from vainglory. When to all outward appearances men give us no credit, when they do not think well of us, then we are more inclined to seek God Who sees our hearts. Therefore, a man ought to root himself so firmly in God that he will not need the consolations of men.

When a man of good will is afflicted, tempted, and tormented by evil thoughts, he realizes clearly that his greatest need is God, without Whom he can do no good. Saddened by his miseries and sufferings, he laments and prays. He wearies of living longer and wishes for death that he might be dissolved and be with Christ. Then he understands fully that perfect security and complete peace cannot be found on earth.

The Thirteenth Chapter

Resisting Temptation

SO LONG as we live in this world we cannot escape suffering and temptation. Whence it is written in Job: “The life of man upon earth is a warfare.”⁴ Everyone, therefore, must guard against temptation and must watch in prayer lest the devil, who never sleeps but goes about seeking whom he may devour, find occasion to deceive him. No one is so perfect or so holy but he is sometimes tempted; man cannot be altogether free from temptation.

Yet temptations, though troublesome and severe, are often useful to a man, for in them he is humbled, purified, and instructed. The saints all passed through many temptations and trials to profit by them, while those who could not resist became reprobate and fell away. There is no state so holy, no place so secret that temptations and trials will not come. Man is never safe from them as long as he lives, for they come from within us—in sin we were born. When one temptation or trial passes, another comes; we shall always have something to suffer because we have lost the state of original blessedness.

Many people try to escape temptations, only to fall more deeply. We cannot conquer simply by fleeing, but by patience and true humility we become stronger than all our enemies. The man who only shuns temptations outwardly and does not uproot them will make little progress; indeed they will quickly return, more violent than before.

Little by little, in patience and long-suffering you will overcome them, by the help of God rather than by severity and your own rash ways. Often take counsel when tempted; and do not be harsh with others who are tempted, but console them as you yourself would wish to be consoled.

The beginning of all temptation lies in a wavering mind and little trust in God, for as a rudderless ship is driven hither and yon by waves, so a careless and irresolute man is tempted in many ways. Fire tempers iron and temptation steels the just. Often we do not know what we can stand, but temptation shows us what we are.

Above all, we must be especially alert against the beginnings of temptation, for the enemy is more easily conquered if he is refused admittance to the mind and is met beyond the threshold when he knocks.

Someone has said very aptly: "Resist the beginnings; remedies come too late, when by long delay the evil has gained strength." First, a mere thought comes to mind, then strong imagination, followed by pleasure, evil delight, and consent. Thus, because he is not resisted in the beginning, Satan gains full entry. And the longer a man delays in resisting, so much the weaker does he become each day, while the strength of the enemy grows against him.

Some suffer great temptations in the beginning of their conversion, others toward the end, while some are troubled almost constantly throughout their life. Others, again, are tempted but lightly according to the wisdom and justice of Divine Providence Who weighs the status and merit of each and prepares all for the salvation of His elect.

We should not despair, therefore, when we are tempted, but pray to God the more fervently that He may see fit to help us, for according to the word of Paul, He will make issue with temptation that we may be able to bear it. Let us humble our souls under the hand of God in every trial and temptation for He will save and exalt the humble in spirit.

In temptations and trials the progress of a man is measured; in them opportunity for merit and virtue is made more manifest.

When a man is not troubled it is not hard for him to be fervent and devout, but if he bears up patiently in time of adversity, there is hope for great progress.

Some, guarded against great temptations, are frequently overcome by small ones in order that, humbled by their weakness in small trials, they may not presume on their own strength in great ones.

The Fourteenth Chapter

Avoiding Rash Judgment

TURN your attention upon yourself and beware of judging the deeds of other men, for in judging others a man labors vainly, often makes mistakes, and easily sins; whereas, in judging and taking stock of himself he does something that is always profitable.

We frequently judge that things are as we wish them to be, for through personal feeling true perspective is easily lost.

If God were the sole object of our desire, we should not be disturbed so easily by opposition to our opinions. But often something lurks within or happens from without to draw us along with it.

Many, unawares, seek themselves in the things they do. They seem even to enjoy peace of mind when things happen according to their wish and liking, but if otherwise than they desire, they are soon disturbed and saddened. Differences of feeling and opinion often divide friends and acquaintances, even those who are religious and devout.

An old habit is hard to break, and no one is willing to be led farther than he can see.

If you rely more upon your intelligence or industry than upon the virtue of submission to Jesus Christ, you will hardly, and in any case slowly, become an enlightened man. God wants us to be completely subject to Him and, through ardent love, to rise above all human wisdom.

The Fifteenth Chapter

Works Done in Charity

NEVER do evil for anything in the world, or for the love of any man. For one who is in need, however, a good work may at times be purposely left undone or changed for a better one. This is not the omission of a good deed but rather its improvement.

Without charity external work is of no value, but anything done in charity, be it ever so small and trivial, is entirely fruitful inasmuch as God weighs the love with which a man acts rather than the deed itself.

He does much who loves much. He does much who does a thing well. He does well who serves the common good rather than his own interests.

Now, that which seems to be charity is oftentimes really sensuality, for man's own inclination, his own will, his hope of reward, and his self-interest, are motives seldom absent. On the contrary, he who has true and perfect charity seeks self in nothing, but searches all things for the glory of God. Moreover, he envies no man, because he desires no personal pleasure nor does he wish to rejoice in himself; rather he desires the greater glory of God above all things. He ascribes to man nothing that is good but attributes it wholly to God from Whom all things proceed as from a fountain, and in Whom all the blessed shall rest as their last end and fruition.

If man had but a spark of true charity he would surely sense that all the things of earth are full of vanity!

The Sixteenth Chapter

Bearing with the Faults of Others

UNTIL God ordains otherwise, a man ought to bear patiently whatever he cannot correct in himself and in others. Consider it better thus—perhaps to try your patience and to test you, for without such patience and trial your merits are of little account. Nevertheless, under such difficulties you should pray that God will consent to help you bear them calmly.

If, after being admonished once or twice, a person does not amend, do not argue with him but commit the whole matter to God that His will and honor may be furthered in all His servants, for God knows well how to turn evil to good. Try to bear patiently with the defects and infirmities of others, whatever they may be, because you also have many a fault which others must endure.

If you cannot make yourself what you would wish to be, how can you bend others to your will? We want them to be perfect, yet we do not correct our own faults. We wish them to be severely corrected, yet we will not correct ourselves. Their great liberty displeases us, yet we would not be denied what we ask. We would have them bound by laws, yet we will allow ourselves to be restrained in nothing. Hence, it is clear how seldom we think of others as we do of ourselves.

If all were perfect, what should we have to suffer from others for God's sake? But God has so ordained, that we may learn to bear with one another's burdens, for there is no man without fault, no man without burden, no man sufficient to himself nor wise enough. Hence we must support one another, console one another, mutually help, counsel, and advise, for the measure of every man's virtue is best revealed in time of adversity—adversity that does not weaken a man but rather shows what he is.

The Seventeenth Chapter

Monastic Life

IF YOU wish peace and concord with others, you must learn to break your will in many things. To live in monasteries or religious communities, to remain there without complaint, and to persevere faithfully till death is no small matter. Blessed indeed is he who there lives a good life and there ends his days in happiness.

If you would persevere in seeking perfection, you must consider yourself a pilgrim, an exile on earth. If you would become a religious, you must be content to seem a fool for the sake of Christ. Habit and tonsure change a man but little; it is the change of life, the complete mortification of passions that endow a true religious.

He who seeks anything but God alone and the salvation of his soul will find only trouble and grief, and he who does not try to become the least, the servant of all, cannot remain at peace for long.

You have come to serve, not to rule. You must understand, too, that you have been called to suffer and to work, not to idle and gossip away your time. Here men are tried as gold in a furnace. Here no man can remain unless he desires with all his heart to humble himself before God.

The Eighteenth Chapter

The Example Set Us by the Holy Fathers

CONSIDER the lively examples set us by the saints, who possessed the light of true perfection and religion, and you will see how little, how nearly nothing, we do. What, alas, is our life, compared with theirs? The saints and friends of Christ served the Lord in hunger and thirst, in cold and nakedness, in work and fatigue, in vigils and fasts, in prayers and holy meditations, in persecutions and many afflictions. How many and severe were the trials they suffered—the Apostles, martyrs, confessors, virgins, and all the rest who willed to follow in the footsteps of Christ! They hated their lives on earth that they might have life in eternity.

How strict and detached were the lives the holy hermits led in the desert! What long and grave temptations they suffered! How often were they beset by the enemy! What frequent and ardent prayers they offered to God! What rigorous fasts they observed! How great their zeal and their love for spiritual perfection! How brave the fight they waged to master their evil habits! What pure and straightforward purpose they showed toward God! By day they labored and by night they spent themselves in long prayers. Even at work they did not cease from mental prayer. They used all their time profitably; every hour seemed too short for serving God, and in the great sweetness of contemplation, they forgot even their bodily needs.

They renounced all riches, dignities, honors, friends, and associates. They desired nothing of the world. They scarcely allowed themselves the necessities of life, and the service of the body, even when necessary, was irksome to them. They were poor in earthly things but rich in grace and virtue. Outwardly destitute, inwardly they were full of grace and divine consolation. Strangers to the world, they were close and intimate friends of God. To themselves they seemed as nothing, and they were despised by the world, but in the eyes of God they were precious and beloved. They lived in true humility and simple obedience; they walked in charity and patience, making progress daily on the pathway of spiritual life and obtaining great favor with God.

They were given as an example for all religious, and their power to stimulate us to perfection ought to be greater than that of the lukewarm to tempt us to laxity.

How great was the fervor of all religious in the beginning of their holy institution! How great their devotion in prayer and their rivalry for virtue! What splendid discipline flourished among them! What great reverence and obedience in all things under the rule of a superior! The footsteps they left behind still bear witness that they indeed were holy and perfect men who fought bravely and conquered the world.

Today, he who is not a transgressor and who can bear patiently the duties which he has taken upon himself is considered great. How lukewarm and negligent we are! We lose our original fervor very quickly and we even become weary of life from laziness! Do not you, who have seen so many examples of the devout, fall asleep in the pursuit of virtue!

The Nineteenth Chapter

The Practices of a Good Religious

THE life of a good religious ought to abound in every virtue so that he is interiorly what to others he appears to be. With good reason there ought to be much more within than appears on the outside, for He who sees within is God, Whom we ought to reverence most highly wherever we are and in Whose sight we ought to walk pure as the angels.

Each day we ought to renew our resolutions and arouse ourselves to fervor as though it were the first day of our religious life. We ought to say: “Help me, O Lord God, in my good resolution and in Your holy service. Grant me now, this very day, to begin perfectly, for thus far I have done nothing.”

As our intention is, so will be our progress; and he who desires perfection must be very diligent. If the strong-willed man fails frequently, what of the man who makes up his mind seldom or half-heartedly? Many are the ways of failing in our resolutions; even a slight omission of religious practice entails a loss of some kind.

Just men depend on the grace of God rather than on their own wisdom in keeping their resolutions. In Him they confide every undertaking, for man, indeed, proposes but God disposes, and God’s way is not man’s. If a habitual exercise is sometimes omitted out of piety or in the interests of another, it can easily be resumed later. But if it be abandoned carelessly, through weariness or neglect, then the fault is great and will prove hurtful. Much as we try, we still fail too easily in many things. Yet we must always have some fixed purpose, especially against things which beset us the most. Our outward and inward lives alike must be closely watched and well ordered, for both are important to perfection.

If you cannot recollect yourself continuously, do so once a day at least, in the morning or in the evening. In the morning make a resolution and in the evening examine yourself on what you have said this day, what you have done and thought, for in these things perhaps you have often offended God and those about you.

Arm yourself like a man against the devil's assaults. Curb your appetite and you will more easily curb every inclination of the flesh. Never be completely unoccupied, but read or write or pray or meditate or do something for the common good. Bodily discipline, however, must be undertaken with discretion and is not to be practiced indiscriminately by everyone.

Devotions not common to all are not to be displayed in public, for such personal things are better performed in private. Furthermore, beware of indifference to community prayer through love of your own devotions. If, however, after doing completely and faithfully all you are bound and commanded to do, you then have leisure, use it as personal piety suggests.

Not everyone can have the same devotion. One exactly suits this person, another that. Different exercises, likewise, are suitable for different times, some for feast days and some again for weekdays. In time of temptation we need certain devotions. For days of rest and peace we need others. Some are suitable when we are sad, others when we are joyful in the Lord.

About the time of the principal feasts good devotions ought to be renewed and the intercession of the saints more fervently implored. From one feast day to the next we ought to fix our purpose as though we were then to pass from this world and come to the eternal holyday.

During holy seasons, finally, we ought to prepare ourselves carefully, to live holier lives, and to observe each rule more strictly, as though we were soon to receive from God the reward of our labors. If this end be deferred, let us believe that we are not well prepared and that we are not yet worthy of the great glory that shall in due time be revealed to us. Let us try, meanwhile, to prepare ourselves better for death.

"Blessed is the servant," says Christ, "whom his master, when he cometh, shall find watching. Amen I say to you: he shall make him ruler over all his goods."⁵

The Twentieth Chapter

The Love of Solitude and Silence

SEEK a suitable time for leisure and meditate often on the favors of God. Leave curiosities alone. Read such matters as bring sorrow to the heart rather than occupation to the mind. If you withdraw yourself from unnecessary talking and idle running about, from listening to gossip and rumors, you will find enough time that is suitable for holy meditation.

Very many great saints avoided the company of men wherever possible and chose to serve God in retirement. "As often as I have been among men," said one writer, "I have returned less a man." We often find this to be true when we take part in long conversations. It is easier to be silent altogether than not to speak too much. To stay at home is easier than to be sufficiently on guard while away. Anyone, then, who aims to live the inner and spiritual life must go apart, with Jesus, from the crowd.

No man appears in safety before the public eye unless he first relishes obscurity. No man is safe in speaking unless he loves to be silent. No man rules safely unless he is willing to be ruled. No man commands safely unless he has learned well how to obey. No man rejoices safely unless he has within him the testimony of a good conscience.

More than this, the security of the saints was always enveloped in the fear of God, nor were they less cautious and humble because they were conspicuous for great virtues and graces. The security of the wicked, on the contrary, springs from pride and presumption, and will end in their own deception.

Never promise yourself security in this life, even though you seem to be a good religious, or a devout hermit. It happens very often that those whom men esteem highly are more seriously endangered by their own excessive confidence. Hence, for many it is better not to be too free from temptations, but often to be tried lest they become too secure, too filled with pride, or even too eager to fall back upon external comforts.

If only a man would never seek passing joys or entangle himself with worldly affairs, what a good conscience he would have. What great peace and tranquillity would be his, if he cut himself off from all empty care and thought only of things divine, things helpful to his soul, and put all his trust in God.

No man deserves the consolation of heaven unless he persistently arouses himself to holy contrition. If you desire true sorrow of heart, seek the privacy of your cell and shut out the uproar of the world, as it is written: "In your chamber bewail your sins." There you will find what too often you lose abroad.

Your cell will become dear to you if you remain in it, but if you do not, it will become wearisome. If in the beginning of your religious life, you live within your cell and keep to it, it will soon become a special friend and a very great comfort.

In silence and quiet the devout soul advances in virtue and learns the hidden truths of Scripture. There she finds a flood of tears with which to bathe and cleanse herself nightly, that she may become the more intimate with her Creator the farther she withdraws from all the tumult of the world. For God and His holy angels will draw near to him who withdraws from friends and acquaintances.

It is better for a man to be obscure and to attend to his salvation than to neglect it and work miracles. It is praiseworthy for a religious seldom to go abroad, to flee the sight of men and have no wish to see them.

Why wish to see what you are not permitted to have? "The world passes away and the concupiscence thereof." Sensual craving sometimes entices you to wander around, but when the moment is past, what do you bring back with you save a disturbed conscience and heavy heart? A happy going often leads to a sad return, a merry evening to a mournful dawn. Thus, all carnal joy begins sweetly but in the end brings remorse and death.

What can you find elsewhere that you cannot find here in your cell? Behold heaven and earth and all the elements, for of these all things are made. What can you see anywhere under the sun that will remain long? Perhaps you think you will completely satisfy yourself, but you cannot do so, for if you should see all existing things, what would they be but an empty vision?

Raise your eyes to God in heaven and pray because of your sins and shortcomings. Leave vanity to the vain. Set yourself to the things which God has commanded you to do. Close the door upon yourself and call to you Jesus, your Beloved. Remain with Him in your cell, for nowhere else will you find such peace. If you had not left it, and had not listened to idle gossip, you would have remained in greater peace. But since you love, sometimes, to hear news, it is only right that you should suffer sorrow of heart from it.

The Twenty-First Chapter

Sorrow of Heart

IF YOU wish to make progress in virtue, live in the fear of the Lord, do not look for too much freedom, discipline your senses, and shun inane silliness. Sorrow opens the door to many a blessing which dissoluteness usually destroys.

It is a wonder that any man who considers and meditates on his exiled state and the many dangers to his soul, can ever be perfectly happy in this life. Lighthearted and heedless of our defects, we do not feel the real sorrows of our souls, but often indulge in empty laughter when we have good reason to weep. No liberty is true and no joy is genuine unless it is founded in the fear of the Lord and a good conscience.

Happy is the man who can throw off the weight of every care and recollect himself in holy contrition. Happy is the man who casts from him all that can stain or burden his conscience.

Fight like a man. Habit is overcome by habit. If you leave men alone, they will leave you alone to do what you have to do. Do not busy yourself about the affairs of others and do not become entangled in the business of your superiors. Keep an eye primarily on yourself and admonish yourself instead of your friends.

If you do not enjoy the favor of men, do not let it sadden you; but consider it a serious matter if you do not conduct yourself as well or as carefully as is becoming for a servant of God and a devout religious.

It is often better and safer for us to have few consolations in this life, especially comforts of the body. Yet if we do not have divine consolation or experience it rarely, it is our own fault because we seek no sorrow of heart and do not forsake vain outward satisfaction.

Consider yourself unworthy of divine solace and deserving rather of much tribulation. When a man is perfectly contrite, the whole world is bitter and wearisome to him.

A good man always finds enough over which to mourn and weep; whether he thinks of himself or of his neighbor he knows that no one lives here without suffering, and the closer he examines himself the more he grieves.

The sins and vices in which we are so entangled that we can rarely apply ourselves to the contemplation of heaven are matters for just sorrow and inner remorse.

I do not doubt that you would correct yourself more earnestly if you would think more of an early death than of a long life. And if you pondered in your heart the future pains of hell or of purgatory, I believe you would willingly endure labor and trouble and would fear no hardship. But since these thoughts never pierce the heart and since we are enamored of flattering pleasure, we remain very cold and indifferent. Our wretched body complains so easily because our soul is altogether too lifeless.

Pray humbly to the Lord, therefore, that He may give you the spirit of contrition and say with the Prophet: “Feed me, Lord, with the bread of mourning and give me to drink of tears in full measure.”⁶

The Twenty-Second Chapter

Thoughts on the Misery of Man

WHEREVER you are, wherever you go, you are miserable unless you turn to God. So why be dismayed when things do not happen as you wish and desire? Is there anyone who has everything as he wishes? No—neither I, nor you, nor any man on earth. There is no one in the world, be he Pope or king, who does not suffer trial and anguish.

Who is the better off then? Surely, it is the man who will suffer something for God. Many unstable and weak-minded people say: “See how well that man lives, how rich, how great he is, how powerful and mighty.” But you must lift up your eyes to the riches of heaven and realize that the material goods of which they speak are nothing. These things are uncertain and very burdensome because they are never possessed without anxiety and fear. Man’s happiness does not consist in the possession of abundant goods; a very little is enough.

Living on earth is truly a misery. The more a man desires spiritual life, the more bitter the present becomes to him, because he understands better and sees more clearly the defects, the corruption of human nature. To eat and drink, to watch and sleep, to rest, to labor, and to be bound by other human necessities is certainly a great misery and affliction to the devout man, who would gladly be released from them and be free from all sin. Truly, the inner man is greatly burdened in this world by the necessities of the body, and for this reason the Prophet prayed that he might be as free from them as possible, when he said: “From my necessities, O Lord, deliver me.”²

But woe to those who know not their own misery, and greater woe to those who love this miserable and corruptible life. Some, indeed, can scarcely procure its necessities either by work or by begging; yet they love it so much that, if they could live here always, they would care nothing for the kingdom of God.

How foolish and faithless of heart are those who are so engrossed in earthly things as to relish nothing but what is carnal! Miserable men indeed, for in the end they will see to their sorrow how cheap and worthless was the thing they loved.

The saints of God and all devout friends of Christ did not look to what pleases the body nor to the things that are popular from time to time. Their whole hope and aim centered on the everlasting good. Their whole desire pointed upward to the lasting and invisible realm, lest the love of what is visible drag them down to lower things.

Do not lose heart, then, my brother, in pursuing your spiritual life. There is yet time, and your hour is not past. Why delay your purpose? Arise! Begin at once and say: "Now is the time to act, now is the time to fight, now is the proper time to amend."

When you are troubled and afflicted, that is the time to gain merit. You must pass through water and fire before coming to rest. Unless you do violence to yourself you will not overcome vice.

So long as we live in this fragile body, we can neither be free from sin nor live without weariness and sorrow. Gladly would we rest from all misery, but in losing innocence through sin we also lost true blessedness. Therefore, we must have patience and await the mercy of God until this iniquity passes, until mortality is swallowed up in life.

How great is the frailty of human nature which is ever prone to evil! Today you confess your sins and tomorrow you again commit the sins which you confessed. One moment you resolve to be careful, and yet after an hour you act as though you had made no resolution.

We have cause, therefore, because of our frailty and feebleness, to humble ourselves and never think anything great of ourselves. Through neglect we may quickly lose that which by God's grace we have acquired only through long, hard labor. What, eventually, will become of us who so quickly grow lukewarm? Woe to us if we presume to rest in peace and security when actually there is no true holiness in our lives. It would be beneficial for us, like good novices, to be instructed once more in the principles of a good life, to see if there be hope of amendment and greater spiritual progress in the future.

The Twenty-Third Chapter

Thoughts on Death

VERY soon your life here will end; consider, then, what may be in store for you elsewhere. Today we live; tomorrow we die and are quickly forgotten. Oh, the dullness and hardness of a heart which looks only to the present instead of preparing for that which is to come!

Therefore, in every deed and every thought, act as though you were to die this very day. If you had a good conscience you would not fear death very much. It is better to avoid sin than to fear death. If you are not prepared today, how will you be prepared tomorrow? Tomorrow is an uncertain day; how do you know you will have a tomorrow?

What good is it to live a long life when we amend that life so little? Indeed, a long life does not always benefit us, but on the contrary, frequently adds to our guilt. Would that in this world we had lived well throughout one single day. Many count up the years they have spent in religion but find their lives made little holier. If it is so terrifying to die, it is nevertheless possible that to live longer is more dangerous. Blessed is he who keeps the moment of death ever before his eyes and prepares for it every day.

If you have ever seen a man die, remember that you, too, must go the same way. In the morning consider that you may not live till evening, and when evening comes do not dare to promise yourself the dawn. Be always ready, therefore, and so live that death will never take you unprepared. Many die suddenly and unexpectedly, for in the unexpected hour the Son of God will come. When that last moment arrives you will begin to have a quite different opinion of the life that is now entirely past and you will regret very much that you were so careless and remiss.

How happy and prudent is he who tries now in life to be what he wants to be found in death. Perfect contempt of the world, a lively desire to advance in virtue, a love for discipline, the works of penance, readiness to obey, self-denial, and the endurance of every hardship for the love of Christ, these will give a man great expectations of a happy death.

You can do many good works when in good health; what can you do when you are ill? Few are made better by sickness. Likewise they who undertake many pilgrimages seldom become holy.

Do not put your trust in friends and relatives, and do not put off the care of your soul till later, for men will forget you more quickly than you think. It is better to provide now, in time, and send some good account ahead of you than to rely on the help of others. If you do not care for your own welfare now, who will care when you are gone?

The present is very precious; these are the days of salvation; now is the acceptable time. How sad that you do not spend the time in which you might purchase everlasting life in a better way. The time will come when you will want just one day, just one hour in which to make amends, and do you know whether you will obtain it?

See, then, dearly beloved, the great danger from which you can free yourself and the great fear from which you can be saved, if only you will always be wary and mindful of death. Try to live now in such a manner that at the moment of death you may be glad rather than fearful. Learn to die to the world now, that then you may begin to live with Christ. Learn to spurn all things now, that then you may freely go to Him. Chastise your body in penance now, that then you may have the confidence born of certainty.

Ah, foolish man, why do you plan to live long when you are not sure of living even a day? How many have been deceived and suddenly snatched away! How often have you heard of persons being killed by drownings, by fatal falls from high places, of persons dying at meals, at play, in fires, by the sword, in pestilence, or at the hands of robbers! Death is the end of everyone and the life of man quickly passes away like a shadow.

Who will remember you when you are dead? Who will pray for you? Do now, beloved, what you can, because you do not know when you will die, nor what your fate will be after death. Gather for yourself the riches of immortality while you have time. Think of nothing but your salvation. Care only for the things of God. Make friends for yourself now by honoring the saints of God, by imitating their actions, so that when you depart this life they may receive you into everlasting dwellings.

Keep yourself as a stranger here on earth, a pilgrim whom its affairs do not concern at all. Keep your heart free and raise it up to God, for you have not here a lasting home. To Him direct your daily prayers, your sighs and tears, that your soul may merit after death to pass in happiness to the Lord.

The Twenty-Fourth Chapter

Judgment and the Punishment of Sin

IN ALL things consider the end; how you shall stand before the strict Judge from Whom nothing is hidden and Who will pronounce judgment in all justice, accepting neither bribes nor excuses. And you, miserable and wretched sinner, who fear even the countenance of an angry man, what answer will you make to the God Who knows all your sins? Why do you not provide for yourself against the day of judgment when no man can be excused or defended by another because each will have enough to do to answer for himself? In this life your work is profitable, your tears acceptable, your sighs audible, your sorrow satisfying and purifying.

The patient man goes through a great and salutary purgatory when he grieves more over the malice of one who harms him than for his own injury; when he prays readily for his enemies and forgives offenses from his heart; when he does not hesitate to ask pardon of others; when he is more easily moved to pity than to anger; when he does frequent violence to himself and tries to bring the body into complete subjection to the spirit.

It is better to atone for sin now and to cut away vices than to keep them for purgation in the hereafter. In truth, we deceive ourselves by our ill-advised love of the flesh. What will that fire feed upon but our sins? The more we spare ourselves now and the more we satisfy the flesh, the harder will the reckoning be and the more we keep for the burning.

For a man will be more grievously punished in the things in which he has sinned. There the lazy will be driven with burning prongs, and gluttons tormented with unspeakable hunger and thirst; the wanton and lust-loving will be bathed in burning pitch and foul brimstone; the envious will howl in their grief like mad dogs.

Every vice will have its own proper punishment. The proud will be faced with every confusion and the avaricious pinched with the most abject want.

One hour of suffering there will be more bitter than a hundred years of the most severe penance here. In this life men sometimes rest from work and enjoy the comfort of friends, but the damned have no rest or consolation.

You must, therefore, take care and repent of your sins now so that on the day of judgment you may rest secure with the blessed. For on that day the just will stand firm against those who tortured and oppressed them, and he who now submits humbly to the judgment of men will arise to pass judgment upon them. The poor and humble will have great confidence, while the proud will be struck with fear. He who learned to be a fool in this world and to be scorned for Christ will then appear to have been wise.

In that day every trial borne in patience will be pleasing and the voice of iniquity will be stilled; the devout will be glad; the irreligious will mourn; and the mortified body will rejoice far more than if it had been pampered with every pleasure. Then the cheap garment will shine with splendor and the rich one become faded and worn; the poor cottage will be more praised than the gilded palace. In that day persevering patience will count more than all the power in this world; simple obedience will be exalted above all worldly cleverness; a good and clean conscience will gladden the heart of man far more than the philosophy of the learned; and contempt for riches will be of more weight than every treasure on earth.

Then you will find more consolation in having prayed devoutly than in having fared daintily; you will be happy that you preferred silence to prolonged gossip.

Then holy works will be of greater value than many fair words; strictness of life and hard penances will be more pleasing than all earthly delights.

Learn, then, to suffer little things now that you may not have to suffer greater ones in eternity. Prove here what you can bear hereafter. If you can suffer only a little now, how will you be able to endure eternal torment? If a little suffering makes you impatient now, what will hell fire do? In truth, you cannot have two joys: you cannot taste the pleasures of this world and afterward reign with Christ.

If your life to this moment had been full of honors and pleasures, what good would it do if at this instant you should die? All is vanity, therefore, except to love God and to serve Him alone.

He who loves God with all his heart does not fear death or punishment or judgment or hell, because perfect love assures access to God.

It is no wonder that he who still delights in sin fears death and judgment.

It is good, however, that even if love does not as yet restrain you from evil, at least the fear of hell does. The man who casts aside the fear of God cannot continue long in goodness but will quickly fall into the snares of the devil.

The Twenty-Fifth Chapter

Zeal in Amending our Lives

BE WATCHFUL and diligent in God's service and often think of why you left the world and came here. Was it not that you might live for God and become a spiritual man? Strive earnestly for perfection, then, because in a short time you will receive the reward of your labor, and neither fear nor sorrow shall come upon you at the hour of death.

Labor a little now, and soon you shall find great rest, in truth, eternal joy; for if you continue faithful and diligent in doing, God will undoubtedly be faithful and generous in rewarding. Continue to have reasonable hope of gaining salvation, but do not act as though you were certain of it lest you grow indolent and proud.

One day when a certain man who wavered often and anxiously between hope and fear was struck with sadness, he knelt in humble prayer before the altar of a church. While meditating on these things, he said: "Oh if I but knew whether I should persevere to the end!" Instantly he heard within the divine answer: "If you knew this, what would you do? Do now what you would do then and you will be quite secure." Immediately consoled and comforted, he resigned himself to the divine will and the anxious uncertainty ceased. His curiosity no longer sought to know what the future held for him, and he tried instead to find the perfect, the acceptable will of God in the beginning and end of every good work.

"Trust thou in the Lord and do good," says the Prophet; "dwell in the land and thou shalt feed on its riches."⁸

There is one thing that keeps many from zealously improving their lives, that is, dread of the difficulty, the toil of battle. Certainly they who try bravely to overcome the most difficult and unpleasant obstacles far outstrip others in the pursuit of virtue. A man makes the most progress and merits the most grace precisely in those matters wherein he gains the greatest victories over self and most mortifies his will. True, each one has his own difficulties to meet and conquer, but a diligent and sincere man will make greater progress even though he have more passions than one who is more even-tempered but less concerned about virtue.

Two things particularly further improvement—to withdraw oneself forcibly from those vices to which nature is viciously inclined, and to work fervently for those graces which are most needed.

Study also to guard against and to overcome the faults which in others very frequently displease you. Make the best of every opportunity, so that if you see or hear good example you may be moved to imitate it. On the other hand, take care lest you be guilty of those things which you consider reprehensible, or if you have ever been guilty of them, try to correct yourself as soon as possible. As you see others, so they see you.

How pleasant and sweet to behold brethren fervent and devout, well mannered and disciplined! How sad and painful to see them wandering in dissolution, not practicing the things to which they are called! How hurtful it is to neglect the purpose of their vocation and to attend to what is not their business!

Remember the purpose you have undertaken, and keep in mind the image of the Crucified. Even though you may have walked for many years on the pathway to God, you may well be ashamed if, with the image of Christ before you, you do not try to make yourself still more like Him.

The religious who concerns himself intently and devoutly with our Lord's most holy life and passion will find there an abundance of all things useful and necessary for him. He need not seek for anything better than Jesus.

If the Crucified should come to our hearts, how quickly and abundantly we would learn!

A fervent religious accepts all the things that are commanded him and does them well, but a negligent and lukewarm religious has trial upon trial, and suffers anguish from every side because he has no consolation within and is forbidden to seek it from without. The religious who does not live up to his rule exposes himself to dreadful ruin, and he who wishes to be more free and untrammelled will always be in trouble, for something or other will always displease him.

How do so many other religious who are confined in cloistered discipline get along? They seldom go out, they live in contemplation, their food is poor, their clothing coarse, they work hard, they speak but little, keep long vigils, rise early, pray much, read frequently, and subject themselves to all sorts of discipline. Think of the Carthusians and the Cistercians, the monks and nuns of different orders, how every night they rise to sing praise to the Lord. It would be a shame if you should grow lazy in such holy service when so many religious have already begun to rejoice in God.

If there were nothing else to do but praise the Lord God with all your heart and voice, if you had never to eat, or drink, or sleep, but could praise God always and occupy yourself solely with spiritual pursuits, how much happier you would be than you are now, a slave to every necessity of the body! Would that there were no such needs, but only the spiritual refreshments of the soul which, sad to say, we taste too seldom!

When a man reaches a point where he seeks no solace from any creature, then he begins to relish God perfectly. Then also he will be content no matter what may happen to him. He will neither rejoice over great things nor grieve over small ones, but will place himself entirely and confidently in the hands of God, Who for him is all in all, to Whom nothing ever perishes or dies, for Whom all things live, and Whom they serve as He desires.

Always remember your end and do not forget that lost time never returns. Without care and diligence you will never acquire virtue. When you begin to grow lukewarm, you are falling into the beginning of evil; but if you give yourself to fervor, you will find peace and will experience less hardship because of God's grace and the love of virtue.

A fervent and diligent man is ready for all things. It is greater work to resist vices and passions than to sweat in physical toil. He who does not overcome small faults, shall fall little by little into greater ones.

If you have spent the day profitably, you will always be happy at eventide. Watch over yourself, arouse yourself, warn yourself, and regardless of what becomes of others, do not neglect yourself. The more violence you do to yourself, the more progress you will make.

ADORATION OF THE SHEPHERDS

BOOK TWO

The Interior Life

THE PURIFICATION OF THE VIRGIN

The First Chapter

Meditation

THE kingdom of God is within you,” says the Lord.⁹

Turn, then, to God with all your heart. Forsake this wretched world and your soul shall find rest. Learn to despise external things, to devote yourself to those that are within, and you will see the kingdom of God come unto you, that kingdom which is peace and joy in the Holy Spirit, gifts not given to the impious.

Christ will come to you offering His consolation, if you prepare a fit dwelling for Him in your heart, whose beauty and glory, wherein He takes delight, are all from within. His visits with the inward man are frequent, His communion sweet and full of consolation, His peace great, and His intimacy wonderful indeed.

Therefore, faithful soul, prepare your heart for this Bridegroom that He may come and dwell within you; He Himself says: “If any one love Me, he will keep My word, and My Father will love him, and We will come to him, and will make Our abode with him.”¹⁰

Give place, then, to Christ, but deny entrance to all others, for when you have Christ you are rich and He is sufficient for you. He will provide for you. He will supply your every want, so that you need not trust in frail, changeable men. Christ remains forever, standing firmly with us to the end.

Do not place much confidence in weak and mortal man, helpful and friendly though he be; and do not grieve too much if he sometimes opposes and contradicts you. Those who are with us today may be against us tomorrow, and vice versa, for men change with the wind. Place all your trust in God; let Him be your fear and your love. He will answer for you; He will do what is best for you.

You have here no lasting home. You are a stranger and a pilgrim wherever you may be, and you shall have no rest until you are wholly united with Christ.

Why do you look about here when this is not the place of your repose? Dwell rather upon heaven and give but a passing glance to all earthly things. They all pass away, and you together with them. Take care, then, that you do not cling to them lest you be entrapped and perish. Fix your mind on the Most High, and pray unceasingly to Christ.

If you do not know how to meditate on heavenly things, direct your thoughts to Christ's passion and willingly behold His sacred wounds. If you turn devoutly to the wounds and precious stigmata of Christ, you will find great comfort in suffering, you will mind but little the scorn of men, and you will easily bear their slanderous talk.

When Christ was in the world, He was despised by men; in the hour of need He was forsaken by acquaintances and left by friends to the depths of scorn. He was willing to suffer and to be despised; do you dare to complain of anything? He had enemies and defamers; do you want everyone to be your friend, your benefactor? How can your patience be rewarded if no adversity test it? How can you be a friend of Christ if you are not willing to suffer any hardship? Suffer with Christ and for Christ if you wish to reign with Him.

Had you but once entered into perfect communion with Jesus or tasted a little of His ardent love, you would care nothing at all for your own comfort or discomfort but would rejoice in the reproach you suffer; for love of Him makes a man despise himself.

A man who is a lover of Jesus and of truth, a truly interior man who is free from uncontrolled affections, can turn to God at will and rise above himself to enjoy spiritual peace.

He who tastes life as it really is, not as men say or think it is, is indeed wise with the wisdom of God rather than of men.

He who learns to live the interior life and to take little account of outward things, does not seek special places or times to perform devout exercises. A spiritual man quickly recollects himself because he has never wasted his attention upon externals. No outside work, no business that cannot wait stands in his way. He adjusts himself to things as they happen. He whose disposition is well ordered cares nothing about the strange, perverse behavior of others, for a man is upset and distracted only in proportion as he engrosses himself in externals.

If all were well with you, therefore, and if you were purified from all sin, everything would tend to your good and be to your profit. But because you are as yet neither entirely dead to self nor free from all earthly affection, there is much that often displeases and disturbs you. Nothing so mars and defiles the heart of man as impure attachment to created things. But if you refuse external consolation, you will be able to contemplate heavenly things and often to experience interior joy.

The Second Chapter

Humility

BE NOT troubled about those who are with you or against you, but take care that God be with you in everything you do. Keep your conscience clear and God will protect you, for the malice of man cannot harm one whom God wishes to help. If you know how to suffer in silence, you will undoubtedly experience God's help. He knows when and how to deliver you; therefore, place yourself in His hands, for it is a divine prerogative to help men and free them from all distress.

It is often good for us to have others know our faults and rebuke them, for it gives us greater humility. When a man humbles himself because of his faults, he easily placates those about him and readily appeases those who are angry with him.

It is the humble man whom God protects and liberates; it is the humble whom He loves and consoles. To the humble He turns and upon them bestows great grace, that after their humiliation He may raise them up to glory. He reveals His secrets to the humble, and with kind invitation bids them come to Him. Thus, the humble man enjoys peace in the midst of many vexations, because his trust is in God, not in the world. Hence, you must not think that you have made any progress until you look upon yourself as inferior to all others.

The Third Chapter

Goodness and Peace in Man

FIRST keep peace with yourself; then you will be able to bring peace to others. A peaceful man does more good than a learned man. Whereas a passionate man turns even good to evil and is quick to believe evil, the peaceful man, being good himself, turns all things to good.

The man who is at perfect ease is never suspicious, but the disturbed and discontented spirit is upset by many a suspicion. He neither rests himself nor permits others to do so. He often says what ought not to be said and leaves undone what ought to be done. He is concerned with the duties of others but neglects his own.

Direct your zeal, therefore, first upon yourself; then you may with justice exercise it upon those about you. You are well versed in coloring your own actions with excuses which you will not accept from others, though it would be more just to accuse yourself and excuse your brother. If you wish men to bear with you, you must bear with them. Behold, how far you are from true charity and humility which does not know how to be angry with anyone, or to be indignant save only against self!

It is no great thing to associate with the good and gentle, for such association is naturally pleasing. Everyone enjoys a peaceful life and prefers persons of congenial habits. But to be able to live at peace with harsh and perverse men, or with the undisciplined and those who irritate us, is a great grace, a praiseworthy and manly thing.

Some people live at peace with themselves and with their fellow men, but others are never at peace with themselves nor do they bring it to anyone else. These latter are a burden to everyone, but they are more of a burden to themselves. A few, finally, live at peace with themselves and try to restore it to others.

Now, all our peace in this miserable life is found in humbly enduring suffering rather than in being free from it. He who knows best how to suffer will enjoy the greater peace, because he is the conqueror of himself, the master of the world, a friend of Christ, and an heir of heaven.

The Fourth Chapter

Purity of Mind and Unity of Purpose

A MAN is raised up from the earth by two wings—simplicity and purity. There must be simplicity in his intention and purity in his desires. Simplicity leads to God, purity embraces and enjoys Him.

If your heart is free from ill-ordered affection, no good deed will be difficult for you. If you aim at and seek after nothing but the pleasure of God and the welfare of your neighbor, you will enjoy freedom within.

If your heart were right, then every created thing would be a mirror of life for you and a book of holy teaching, for there is no creature so small and worthless that it does not show forth the goodness of God. If inwardly you were good and pure, you would see all things clearly and understand them rightly, for a pure heart penetrates to heaven and hell, and as a man is within, so he judges what is without. If there be joy in the world, the pure of heart certainly possess it; and if there be anguish and affliction anywhere, an evil conscience knows it too well.

As iron cast into fire loses its rust and becomes glowing white, so he who turns completely to God is stripped of his sluggishness and changed into a new man. When a man begins to grow lax, he fears a little toil and welcomes external comfort, but when he begins perfectly to conquer himself and to walk bravely in the ways of God, then he thinks those things less difficult which he thought so hard before.

The Fifth Chapter

Ourselves

WE MUST not rely too much upon ourselves, for grace and understanding are often lacking in us. We have but little inborn light, and this we quickly lose through negligence. Often we are not aware that we are so blind in heart. Meanwhile we do wrong, and then do worse in excusing it. At times we are moved by passion, and we think it zeal. We take others to task for small mistakes, and overlook greater ones in ourselves. We are quick enough to feel and brood over the things we suffer from others, but we think nothing of how much others suffer from us. If a man would weigh his own deeds fully and rightly, he would find little cause to pass severe judgment on others.

The interior man puts the care of himself before all other concerns, and he who attends to himself carefully does not find it hard to hold his tongue about others. You will never be devout of heart unless you are thus silent about the affairs of others and pay particular attention to yourself. If you attend wholly to God and yourself, you will be little disturbed by what you see about you.

Where are your thoughts when they are not upon yourself? And after attending to various things, what have you gained if you have neglected self? If you wish to have true peace of mind and unity of purpose, you must cast all else aside and keep only yourself before your eyes.

You will make great progress if you keep yourself free from all temporal cares, for to value anything that is temporal is a great mistake. Consider nothing great, nothing high, nothing pleasing, nothing acceptable, except God Himself or that which is of God. Consider the consolations of creatures as vanity, for the soul that loves God scorns all things that are inferior to Him. God alone, the eternal and infinite, satisfies all, bringing comfort to the soul and true joy to the body.

The Sixth Chapter

The Joy of a Good Conscience

THE glory of a good man is the testimony of a good conscience. Therefore, keep your conscience good and you will always enjoy happiness, for a good conscience can bear a great deal and can bring joy even in the midst of adversity. But an evil conscience is ever restive and fearful.

Sweet shall be your rest if your heart does not reproach you.

Do not rejoice unless you have done well. Sinners never experience true interior joy or peace, for “there is no peace to the wicked,” says the Lord.¹¹ Even if they say: “We are at peace, no evil shall befall us and no one dares to hurt us,” do not believe them; for the wrath of God will arise quickly, and their deeds will be brought to naught and their thoughts will perish.

To glory in adversity is not hard for the man who loves, for this is to glory in the cross of the Lord. But the glory given or received of men is short lived, and the glory of the world is ever companioned by sorrow. The glory of the good, however, is in their conscience and not in the lips of men, for the joy of the just is from God and in God, and their gladness is founded on truth.

The man who longs for the true, eternal glory does not care for that of time; and he who seeks passing fame or does not in his heart despise it, undoubtedly cares little for the glory of heaven.

He who minds neither praise nor blame possesses great peace of heart and, if his conscience is good, he will easily be contented and at peace.

Praise adds nothing to your holiness, nor does blame take anything from it. You are what you are, and you cannot be said to be better than you are in God’s sight. If you consider well what you are within, you will not care what men say about you. They look to appearances but God looks to the heart. They consider the deed but God weighs the motive.

It is characteristic of a humble soul always to do good and to think little of itself. It is a mark of great purity and deep faith to look for no consolation in created things. The man who desires no justification from without has clearly entrusted himself to God: “For not he who commendeth himself is approved,” says St. Paul, “but he whom God commendeth.”^{12}

To walk with God interiorly, to be free from any external affection—this is the state of the inward man.

The Seventh Chapter

Loving Jesus Above All Things

BLESSED is he who appreciates what it is to love Jesus and who despises himself for the sake of Jesus. Give up all other love for His, since He wishes to be loved alone above all things.

Affection for creatures is deceitful and inconstant, but the love of Jesus is true and enduring. He who clings to a creature will fall with its frailty, but he who gives himself to Jesus will ever be strengthened.

Love Him, then; keep Him as a friend. He will not leave you as others do, or let you suffer lasting death. Sometime, whether you will or not, you will have to part with everything. Cling, therefore, to Jesus in life and death; trust yourself to the glory of Him who alone can help you when all others fail.

Your Beloved is such that He will not accept what belongs to another—He wants your heart for Himself alone, to be enthroned therein as King in His own right. If you but knew how to free yourself entirely from all creatures, Jesus would gladly dwell within you.

You will find, apart from Him, that nearly all the trust you place in men is a total loss. Therefore, neither confide in nor depend upon a wind-shaken reed, for “all flesh is grass”¹³ and all its glory, like the flower of grass, will fade away.

You will quickly be deceived if you look only to the outward appearance of men, and you will often be disappointed if you seek comfort and gain in them. If, however, you seek Jesus in all things, you will surely find Him. Likewise, if you seek yourself, you will find yourself—to your own ruin. For the man who does not seek Jesus does himself much greater harm than the whole world and all his enemies could ever do.

The Eighth Chapter

The Intimate Friendship of Jesus

WHEN Jesus is near, all is well and nothing seems difficult. When He is absent, all is hard. When Jesus does not speak within, all other comfort is empty, but if He says only a word, it brings great consolation.

Did not Mary Magdalen rise at once from her weeping when Martha said to her: “The Master is come, and calleth for thee”?¹⁴ Happy is the hour when Jesus calls one from tears to joy of spirit.

How dry and hard you are without Jesus! How foolish and vain if you desire anything but Him! Is it not a greater loss than losing the whole world? For what, without Jesus, can the world give you? Life without Him is a relentless hell, but living with Him is a sweet paradise. If Jesus be with you, no enemy can harm you.

He who finds Jesus finds a rare treasure, indeed, a good above every good, whereas he who loses Him loses more than the whole world. The man who lives without Jesus is the poorest of the poor, whereas no one is so rich as the man who lives in His grace.

It is a great art to know how to converse with Jesus, and great wisdom to know how to keep Him. Be humble and peaceful, and Jesus will be with you. Be devout and calm, and He will remain with you. You may quickly drive Him away and lose His grace, if you turn back to the outside world. And, if you drive Him away and lose Him, to whom will you go and whom will you then seek as a friend? You cannot live well without a friend, and if Jesus be not your friend above all else, you will be very sad and desolate. Thus, you are acting foolishly if you trust or rejoice in any other. Choose the opposition of the whole world rather than offend Jesus. Of all those who are dear to you, let Him be your special love. Let all things be loved for the sake of Jesus, but Jesus for His own sake.

Jesus Christ must be loved alone with a special love for He alone, of all friends, is good and faithful. For Him and in Him you must love friends and foes alike, and pray to Him that all may know and love Him.

Never desire special praise or love, for that belongs to God alone Who has no equal. Never wish that anyone's affection be centered in you, nor let yourself be taken up with the love of anyone, but let Jesus be in you and in every good man. Be pure and free within, unentangled with any creature.

You must bring to God a clean and open heart if you wish to attend and see how sweet the Lord is. Truly you will never attain this happiness unless His grace prepares you and draws you on so that you may forsake all things to be united with Him alone.

When the grace of God comes to a man he can do all things, but when it leaves him he becomes poor and weak, abandoned, as it were, to affliction. Yet, in this condition he should not become dejected or despair. On the contrary, he should calmly await the will of God and bear whatever befalls him in praise of Jesus Christ, for after winter comes summer, after night, the day, and after the storm, a great calm.

The Ninth Chapter

Wanting No Share in Comfort

IT IS not hard to spurn human consolation when we have the divine. It is, however, a very great thing indeed to be able to live without either divine or human comforting and for the honor of God willingly to endure this exile of heart, not to seek oneself in anything, and to think nothing of one's own merit.

Does it matter much, if at the coming of grace, you are cheerful and devout? This is an hour desired by all, for he whom the grace of God sustains travels easily enough. What wonder if he feel no burden when borne up by the Almighty and led on by the Supreme Guide! For we are always glad to have something to comfort us, and only with difficulty does a man divest himself of self.

The holy martyr, Lawrence, with his priest, conquered the world because he despised everything in it that seemed pleasing to him, and for love of Christ patiently suffered the great high priest of God, Sixtus, whom he loved dearly, to be taken from him. Thus, by his love for the Creator he overcame the love of man, and chose instead of human consolation the good pleasure of God. So you, too, must learn to part with an intimate and much-needed friend for the love of God. Do not take it to heart when you are deserted by a friend, knowing that in the end we must all be parted from one another.

A man must fight long and bravely against himself before he learns to master himself fully and to direct all his affections toward God. When he trusts in himself, he easily takes to human consolation. The true lover of Christ, however, who sincerely pursues virtue, does not fall back upon consolations nor seek such pleasures of sense, but prefers severe trials and hard labors for the sake of Christ.

When, therefore, spiritual consolation is given by God, receive it gratefully, but understand that it is His gift and not your meriting. Do not exult, do not be overjoyed, do not be presumptuous, but be the humbler for the gift, more careful and wary in all your actions, for this hour will pass and temptation will come in its wake.

When consolation is taken away, do not at once despair but wait humbly and patiently for the heavenly visit, since God can restore to you more abundant solace.

This is neither new nor strange to one who knows God's ways, for such change of fortune often visited the great saints and prophets of old. Thus there was one who, when grace was with him, declared: "In my prosperity I said: I shall never be moved." But when grace was taken away, he adds what he experienced in himself: "Thou didst hide Thy face, and I was troubled." Meanwhile he does not despair; rather he prays more earnestly to the Lord, saying: "To Thee, O Lord, will I cry; and I will make supplication to my God." At length, he receives the fruit of his prayer, and testifying that he was heard, says "The Lord hath heard, and hath had mercy on me: the Lord became my helper." And how was he helped? "Thou hast turned," he says, "my mourning into joy, and hast surrounded me with gladness."¹⁵

If this is the case with great saints, we who are weak and poor ought not to despair because we are fervent at times and at other times cold, for the spirit comes and goes according to His will. Of this the blessed Job declared: "Thou visitest him early in the morning, and Thou provest him suddenly."¹⁶

In what can I hope, then, or in whom ought I trust, save only in the great mercy of God and the hope of heavenly grace? For though I have with me good men, devout brethren, faithful friends, holy books, beautiful treatises, sweet songs and hymns, all these help and please but little when I am abandoned by grace and left to my poverty. At such times there is no better remedy than patience and resignation of self to the will of God.

I have never met a man so religious and devout that he has not experienced at some time a withdrawal of grace and felt a lessening of fervor. No saint was so sublimely rapt and enlightened as not to be tempted before and after. He, indeed, is not worthy of the sublime contemplation of God who has not been tried by some tribulation for the sake of God. For temptation is usually the sign preceding the consolation that is to follow, and heavenly consolation is promised to all those proved by temptation. "To him that overcometh," says Christ, "I will give to eat of the Tree of Life."¹⁷ Divine consolation, then, is given in order to make a man braver in enduring adversity, and temptation follows in order that he may not pride himself on the good he has done.

The devil does not sleep, nor is the flesh yet dead; therefore, you must never cease your preparation for battle, because on the right and on the left are enemies who never rest.

The Tenth Chapter

Appreciating God's Grace

WHY do you look for rest when you were born to work? Resign yourself to patience rather than to comfort, to carrying your cross rather than to enjoyment.

What man in the world, if he could always have them, would not readily accept consolation and spiritual joy, benefits which excel all earthly delights and pleasures of the body? The latter, indeed, are either vain or base, while spiritual joys, born of virtue and infused by God into pure minds, are alone truly pleasant and noble.

Now, since the moment of temptation is always nigh, since false freedom of mind and overconfidence in self are serious obstacles to these visitations from heaven, a man can never enjoy them just as he wishes.

God does well in giving the grace of consolation, but man does evil in not returning everything gratefully to God. Thus, the gifts of grace cannot flow in us when we are ungrateful to the Giver, when we do not return them to the Fountainhead. Grace is always given to him who is duly grateful, and what is wont to be given the humble will be taken away from the proud.

I do not desire consolation that robs me of contrition, nor do I care for contemplation that leads to pride, for not all that is high is holy, nor is all that is sweet good, nor every desire pure, nor all that is dear to us pleasing to God. I accept willingly the grace whereby I become more humble and contrite, more willing to renounce self.

The man who has been taught by the gift of grace, and who learns by the lash of its withdrawal, will never dare to attribute any good to himself, but will rather admit his poverty and emptiness. Give to God what is God's and ascribe to yourself what is yours. Give Him thanks, then, for His grace, but place upon yourself alone the blame and the punishment your fault deserves.

Always take the lowest place and the highest will be given you, for the highest cannot exist apart from the lowest. The saints who are greatest before God are those who consider themselves the least, and the more humble they are within themselves, so much the more glorious they are. Since they do not desire vainglory, they are full of truth and heavenly glory. Being established and strengthened in God, they can by no means be proud. They attribute to God whatever good they have received; they seek no glory from one another but only that which comes from God alone. They desire above all things that He be praised in themselves and in all His saints—this is their constant purpose.

Be grateful, therefore, for the least gift and you will be worthy to receive a greater. Consider the least gift as the greatest, the most contemptible as something special. And, if you but look to the dignity of the Giver, no gift will appear too small or worthless. Even though He give punishments and scourges, accept them, because He acts for our welfare in whatever He allows to befall us.

He who desires to keep the grace of God ought to be grateful when it is given and patient when it is withdrawn. Let him pray that it return; let him be cautious and humble lest he lose it.

The Eleventh Chapter

Few Love the Cross of Jesus

JESUS has always many who love His heavenly kingdom, but few who bear His cross. He has many who desire consolation, but few who care for trial. He finds many to share His table, but few to take part in His fasting. All desire to be happy with Him; few wish to suffer anything for Him. Many follow Him to the breaking of bread, but few to the drinking of the chalice of His passion. Many revere His miracles; few approach the shame of the Cross. Many love Him as long as they encounter no hardship; many praise and bless Him as long as they receive some comfort from Him. But if Jesus hides Himself and leaves them for a while, they fall either into complaints or into deep dejection. Those, on the contrary, who love Him for His own sake and not for any comfort of their own, bless Him in all trial and anguish of heart as well as in the bliss of consolation. Even if He should never give them consolation, yet they would continue to praise Him and wish always to give Him thanks. What power there is in pure love for Jesus—love that is free from all self-interest and self-love!

Do not those who always seek consolation deserve to be called mercenaries? Do not those who always think of their own profit and gain prove that they love themselves rather than Christ? Where can a man be found who desires to serve God for nothing? Rarely indeed is a man so spiritual as to strip himself of all things. And who shall find a man so truly poor in spirit as to be free from every creature? His value is like that of things brought from the most distant lands.

If a man give all his wealth, it is nothing; if he do great penance, it is little; if he gain all knowledge, he is still far afield; if he have great virtue and much ardent devotion, he still lacks a great deal, and especially, the one thing that is most necessary to him. What is this one thing? That leaving all, he forsake himself, completely renounce himself, and give up all private affections.

Then, when he has done all that he knows ought to be done, let him consider it as nothing, let him make little of what may be considered great; let him in all honesty call himself an unprofitable servant. For truth itself has said: “When you shall have done all these things that are commanded you, say: we are unprofitable servants.”¹⁸

Then he will be truly poor and stripped in spirit, and with the prophet may say: “I am alone and poor.”¹⁹ No one, however, is more wealthy than such a man; no one is more powerful, no one freer than he who knows how to leave all things and think of himself as the least of all.

The Twelfth Chapter

The Royal Road of the Holy Cross

TO MANY the saying, “Deny thyself, take up thy cross and follow Me,”²⁰ seems hard, but it will be much harder to hear that final word: “Depart from Me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire.”²¹ Those who hear the word of the cross and follow it willingly now, need not fear that they will hear of eternal damnation on the day of judgment. This sign of the cross will be in the heavens when the Lord comes to judge. Then all the servants of the cross, who during life made themselves one with the Crucified, will draw near with great trust to Christ, the judge.

Why, then, do you fear to take up the cross when through it you can win a kingdom? In the cross is salvation, in the cross is life, in the cross is protection from enemies, in the cross is infusion of heavenly sweetness, in the cross is strength of mind, in the cross is joy of spirit, in the cross is highest virtue, in the cross is perfect holiness. There is no salvation of soul nor hope of everlasting life but in the cross.

Take up your cross, therefore, and follow Jesus, and you shall enter eternal life. He Himself opened the way before you in carrying His cross, and upon it He died for you, that you, too, might take up your cross and long to die upon it. If you die with Him, you shall also live with Him, and if you share His suffering, you shall also share His glory.

Behold, in the cross is everything, and upon your dying on the cross everything depends. There is no other way to life and to true inward peace than the way of the holy cross and daily mortification. Go where you will, seek what you will, you will not find a higher way, nor a less exalted but safer way, than the way of the holy cross. Arrange and order everything to suit your will and judgment, and still you will find that some suffering must always be borne, willingly or unwillingly, and thus you will always find the cross.

Either you will experience bodily pain or you will undergo tribulation of spirit in your soul. At times you will be forsaken by God, at times troubled by those about you and, what is worse, you will often grow weary of yourself. You cannot escape, you cannot be relieved by any remedy or comfort but must bear with it as long as God wills. For He wishes you to learn to bear trial without consolation, to submit yourself wholly to Him that you may become more humble through suffering. No one understands the passion of Christ so thoroughly or heartily as the man whose lot it is to suffer the like himself.

The cross, therefore, is always ready; it awaits you everywhere. No matter where you may go, you cannot escape it, for wherever you go you take yourself with you and shall always find yourself. Turn where you will—above, below, without, or within—you will find a cross in everything, and everywhere you must have patience if you would have peace within and merit an eternal crown.

If you carry the cross willingly, it will carry and lead you to the desired goal where indeed there shall be no more suffering, but here there shall be. If you carry it unwillingly, you create a burden for yourself and increase the load, though still you have to bear it. If you cast away one cross, you will find another and perhaps a heavier one. Do you expect to escape what no mortal man can ever avoid? Which of the saints was without a cross or trial on this earth? Not even Jesus Christ, our Lord, Whose every hour on earth knew the pain of His passion. “It behooveth Christ to suffer, and to rise again from the dead, . . . and so enter into his glory.”²² How is it that you look for another way than this, the royal way of the holy cross?

The whole life of Christ was a cross and a martyrdom, and do you seek rest and enjoyment for yourself? You deceive yourself, you are mistaken if you seek anything but to suffer, for this mortal life is full of miseries and marked with crosses on all sides. Indeed, the more spiritual progress a person makes, so much heavier will he frequently find the cross, because as his love increases, the pain of his exile also increases.

Yet such a man, though afflicted in many ways, is not without hope of consolation, because he knows that great reward is coming to him for bearing his cross. And when he carries it willingly, every pang of tribulation is changed into hope of solace from God. Besides, the more the flesh is distressed by affliction, so much the more is the spirit strengthened by inward grace. Not infrequently a man is so strengthened by his love of trials and hardship in his desire to conform to the cross of Christ, that he does not wish to be without sorrow or pain, since he believes he will be the more acceptable to God if he is able to endure more and more grievous things for His sake.

It is the grace of Christ, and not the virtue of man, which can and does bring it about that through fervor of spirit frail flesh learns to love and to gain what it naturally hates and shuns.

To carry the cross, to love the cross, to chastise the body and bring it to subjection, to flee honors, to endure contempt gladly, to despise self and wish to be despised, to suffer any adversity and loss, to desire no prosperous days on earth—this is not man's way. If you rely upon yourself, you can do none of these things, but if you trust in the Lord, strength will be given you from heaven and the world and the flesh will be made subject to your word. You will not even fear your enemy, the devil, if you are armed with faith and signed with the cross of Christ.

Set yourself, then, like a good and faithful servant of Christ, to bear bravely the cross of your Lord, Who out of love was crucified for you. Be ready to suffer many adversities and many kinds of trouble in this miserable life, for troublesome and miserable life will always be, no matter where you are; and so you will find it wherever you may hide. Thus it must be; and there is no way to evade the trials and sorrows of life but to bear them.

Drink the chalice of the Lord with affection if you wish to be His friend and to have part with Him. Leave consolation to God; let Him do as most pleases Him. On your part, be ready to bear sufferings and consider them the greatest consolation, for even though you alone were to undergo them all, the sufferings of this life are not worthy to be compared with the glory to come.

When you shall have come to the point where suffering is sweet and acceptable for the sake of Christ, then consider yourself fortunate, for you have found paradise on earth. But as long as suffering irks you and you seek to escape, so long will you be unfortunate, and the tribulation you seek to evade will follow you everywhere. If you put your mind to the things you ought to consider, that is, to suffering and death, you would soon be in a better state and would find peace.

Although you were taken to the third heaven with Paul, you were not thereby insured against suffering. Jesus said: "I will show him how great things he must suffer for My name's sake."²³ To suffer, then, remains your lot, if you mean to love Jesus and serve Him forever.

If you were but worthy to suffer something for the name of Jesus, what great glory would be in store for you, what great joy to all the saints of God, what great edification to those about you! For all men praise patience though there are few who wish to practice it.

With good reason, then, ought you to be willing to suffer a little for Christ since many suffer much more for the world.

Realize that you must lead a dying life; the more a man dies to himself, the more he begins to live unto God.

No man is fit to enjoy heaven unless he has resigned himself to suffer hardship for Christ. Nothing is more acceptable to God, nothing more helpful for you on this earth than to suffer willingly for Christ. If you had to make a choice, you ought to wish rather to suffer for Christ than to enjoy many consolations, for thus you would be more like Christ and more like all the saints. Our merit and progress consist not in many pleasures and comforts but rather in enduring great afflictions and sufferings.

If, indeed, there were anything better or more useful for man's salvation than suffering, Christ would have shown it by word and example. But He clearly exhorts The Disciples who follow Him and all who wish to follow Him to carry the cross, saying: "If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow Me."²⁴

When, therefore, we have read and searched all that has been written, let this be the final conclusion—that through much suffering we must enter into the kingdom of God.

JESUS CHRIST AND THE SINNER

BOOK THREE

Internal Consolation

ARCHANGEL MICHAEL DEFEATING SATAN

The First Chapter

The Inward Conversation of Christ with the Faithful Soul

I WILL hear what the Lord God will speak in me.”²⁵

Blessed is the soul who hears the Lord speaking within her, who receives the word of consolation from His lips. Blessed are the ears that catch the accents of divine whispering, and pay no heed to the murmurings of this world. Blessed indeed are the ears that listen, not to the voice which sounds without, but to the truth which teaches within. Blessed are the eyes which are closed to exterior things and are fixed upon those which are interior. Blessed are they who penetrate inwardly, who try daily to prepare themselves more and more to understand mysteries. Blessed are they who long to give their time to God, and who cut themselves off from the hindrances of the world.

Consider these things, my soul, and close the door of your senses, so that you can hear what the Lord your God speaks within you. “I am your salvation,” says your Beloved. “I am your peace and your life. Remain with Me and you will find peace. Dismiss all passing things and seek the eternal. What are all temporal things but snares? And what help will all creatures be able to give you if you are deserted by the Creator?” Leave all these things, therefore, and make yourself pleasing and faithful to your Creator so that you may attain to true happiness.

The Second Chapter

Truth Speaks Inwardly Without the Sound of Words

THE DISCIPLE

SPEAK, Lord, for Thy servant heareth.”²⁶ “I am Thy servant. Give me understanding that I may know Thine ordinances²⁷ . . . Incline my heart to Thine ordinances²⁸ . . . Let Thy speech distil as the dew.”²⁹

The children of Israel once said to Moses: “Speak thou to us and we will hear thee: let not the Lord speak to us, lest we die.”³⁰

Not so, Lord, not so do I pray. Rather with Samuel the prophet I entreat humbly and earnestly: “Speak, Lord, for Thy servant heareth.” Do not let Moses or any of the prophets speak to me; but You speak, O Lord God, Who inspired and enlightened all the prophets; for You alone, without them, can instruct me perfectly, whereas they, without You, can do nothing. They, indeed, utter fine words, but they cannot impart the spirit. They do indeed speak beautifully, but if You remain silent they cannot inflame the heart. They deliver the message; You lay bare the sense. They place before us mysteries, but You unlock their meaning. They proclaim commandments; You help us to keep them. They point out the way; You give strength for the journey. They work only outwardly; You instruct and enlighten our hearts. They water on the outside; You give the increase.

They cry out words; You give understanding to the hearer.

Let not Moses speak to me, therefore, but You, the Lord my God, everlasting truth, speak lest I die and prove barren if I am merely given outward advice and am not inflamed within; lest the word heard and not kept, known and not loved, believed and not obeyed, rise up in judgment against me.

Speak, therefore, Lord, for Your servant listens. “Thou hast the words of eternal life.”³¹ Speak to me for the comfort of my soul and for the amendment of my life, for Your praise, Your glory, and Your everlasting honor.

The Third Chapter

Listen Humbly to the Words of God. Many Do Not Heed Them

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

MY CHILD, hear My words, words of greatest sweetness surpassing all the knowledge of the philosophers and wise men of earth. My words are spirit and life, and they are not to be weighed by man's understanding. They are not to be invoked in vanity but are to be heard in silence, and accepted with all humility and with great affection.

THE DISCIPLE

"Happy is the man whom Thou admonishest, O Lord, and teachest out of Thy law, to give him peace from the days of evil,"³² and that he be not desolate on earth.

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

I taught the prophets from the beginning, and even to this day I continue to speak to all men. But many are hardened. Many are deaf to My voice. Most men listen more willingly to the world than to God. They are more ready to follow the appetite of their flesh than the good pleasure of God. The world, which promises small and passing things, is served with great eagerness: I promise great and eternal things and the hearts of men grow dull. Who is there that serves and obeys Me in all things with as great care as that with which the world and its masters are served?

"Be thou ashamed, O Sidon, for the sea speaketh."³³ And if you ask why, listen to the cause: for a small gain they travel far; for eternal life many will scarcely lift a foot from the ground. They seek a petty reward, and sometimes fight shamefully in law courts for a single piece of money. They are not afraid to work day and night for a trifle or an empty promise. But, for an unchanging good, for a reward beyond estimate, for the greatest honor and for glory everlasting, it must be said to their shame that men begrudge even the least fatigue. Be ashamed, then, lazy and complaining servant, that they should be found more eager for perdition than you are for life, that they rejoice more in vanity than you in truth.

Sometimes indeed their expectations fail them, but My promise never deceives, nor does it send away empty-handed him who trusts in Me. What I have promised I will give. What I have said I will fulfill, if only a man remain faithful in My love to the end. I am the rewarder of all the good, the strong approver of all who are devoted to Me.

Write My words in your heart and meditate on them earnestly, for in time of temptation they will be very necessary. What you do not understand when you read, you will learn in the day of visitation. I am wont to visit My elect in two ways—by temptation and by consolation. To them I read two lessons daily—one reproving their vices, the other exhorting them to progress in virtue. He who has My words and despises them has that which shall condemn him on the last day.

A PRAYER FOR THE GRACE OF DEVOTION

O Lord my God, You are all my good. And who am I that I should dare to speak to You? I am Your poorest and meanest servant, a vile worm, much more poor and contemptible than I know or dare to say. Yet remember me, Lord, because I am nothing, I have nothing, and I can do nothing. You alone are good, just, and holy. You can do all things, You give all things, You fill all things: only the sinner do You leave empty-handed. Remember Your tender mercies and fill my heart with Your grace, You Who will not allow Your works to be in vain. How can I bear this life of misery unless You comfort me with Your mercy and grace? Do not turn Your face from me. Do not delay Your visitation. Do not withdraw Your consolation, lest in Your sight my soul become as desert land. Teach me, Lord, to do Your will. Teach me to live worthily and humbly in Your sight, for You are my wisdom Who know me truly, and Who knew me even before the world was made and before I was born into it.

The Fourth Chapter

We Must Walk Before God in Humility and Truth

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

MY CHILD, walk before Me in truth, and seek Me always in the simplicity of your heart. He who walks before Me in truth shall be defended from the attacks of evil, and the truth shall free him from seducers and from the slanders of wicked men. For if the truth has made you free, then you shall be free indeed, and you shall not care for the vain words of men.

THE DISCIPLE

O Lord, it is true. I ask that it be with me as You say. Let your truth teach me. Let it guard me, and keep me safe to the end. Let it free me from all evil affection and badly ordered love, and I shall walk with You in great freedom of heart.

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

I shall teach you those things which are right and pleasing to Me. Consider your sins with great displeasure and sorrow, and never think yourself to be someone because of your good works. You are truly a sinner. You are subject to many passions and entangled in them. Of yourself you always tend to nothing. You fall quickly, are quickly overcome, quickly troubled, and quickly undone. You have nothing in which you can glory, but you have many things for which you should think yourself vile, for you are much weaker than you can comprehend. Hence, let none of the things you do seem great to you. Let nothing seem important or precious or desirable except that which is everlasting. Let the eternal truth please you above all things, and let your extreme unworthiness always displease you. Fear nothing, abhor nothing, and fly nothing as you do your own vices and sins; these should be more unpleasant for you than any material losses.

Some men walk before Me without sincerity. Led on by a certain curiosity and arrogance, they wish to know My secrets and to understand the high things of God, to the neglect of themselves and their own salvation. Through their own pride and curiosity, and because I am against them, such men often fall into great temptations and sins.

Fear the judgments of God! Dread the wrath of the Almighty! Do not discuss the works of the Most High, but examine your sins—in what serious things you have offended and how many good things you have neglected.

Some carry their devotion only in books, some in pictures, some in outward signs and figures. Some have Me on their lips when there is little of Me in their hearts. Others, indeed, with enlightened understanding and purified affections, constantly long for everlasting things; they are unwilling to hear of earthly affairs and only with reluctance do they serve the necessities of nature. These sense what the Spirit of truth speaks within them: for He teaches them to despise earthly things and to love those of heaven, to neglect the world, and each day and night to desire heaven.

The Fifth Chapter

The Wonderful Effect of Divine Love

THE DISCIPLE

I BLESS You, O heavenly Father, Father of my Lord Jesus Christ, for having condescended to remember me, a poor creature. Thanks to You, O Father of mercies, God of all consolation, Who with Your comfort sometimes refresh me, who am not worthy of it. I bless You always and glorify You with Your only-begotten Son and the Holy Spirit, the Paraclete, forever and ever.

Ah, Lord God, my holy Lover, when You come into my heart, all that is within me will rejoice. You are my glory and the exultation of my heart. You are my hope and refuge in the day of my tribulation. But because my love is as yet weak and my virtue imperfect, I must be strengthened and comforted by You. Visit me often, therefore, and teach me Your holy discipline. Free me from evil passions and cleanse my heart of all disorderly affection so that, healed and purified within, I may be fit to love, strong to suffer, and firm to persevere.

Love is an excellent thing, a very great blessing, indeed. It makes every difficulty easy, and bears all wrongs with equanimity. For it bears a burden without being weighted and renders sweet all that is bitter. The noble love of Jesus spurs to great deeds and excites longing for that which is more perfect. Love tends upward; it will not be held down by anything low. Love wishes to be free and estranged from all worldly affections, lest its inward sight be obstructed, lest it be entangled in any temporal interest and overcome by adversity.

Nothing is sweeter than love, nothing stronger or higher or wider; nothing is more pleasant, nothing fuller, and nothing better in heaven or on earth, for love is born of God and cannot rest except in God, Who is above all created things.

One who is in love flies, runs, and rejoices; he is free, not bound. He gives all for all and possesses all in all, because he rests in the one sovereign Good, Who is above all things, and from Whom every good flows and proceeds. He does not look to the gift but turns himself above all gifts to the Giver.

Love often knows no limits but overflows all bounds. Love feels no burden, thinks nothing of troubles, attempts more than it is able, and does not plead impossibility, because it believes that it may and can do all things. For this reason, it is able to do all, performing and effecting much where he who does not love fails and falls.

Love is watchful. Sleeping, it does not slumber. Wearied, it is not tired. Pressed, it is not straitened. Alarmed, it is not confused, but like a living flame, a burning torch, it forces its way upward and passes unharmed through every obstacle.

If a man loves, he will know the sound of this voice. For this warm affection of soul is a loud voice crying in the ears of God, and it says: "My God, my love, You are all mine and I am all Yours. Give me an increase of love, that I may learn to taste with the inward lips of my heart how sweet it is to love, how sweet to be dissolved in love and bathe in it. Let me be rapt in love. Let me rise above self in great fervor and wonder. Let me sing the hymn of love, and let me follow You, my Love, to the heights. Let my soul exhaust itself in praising You, rejoicing out of love. Let me love You more than myself, and let me not love myself except for Your sake. In You let me love all those who truly love You, as the law of love, which shines forth from You, commands."

Love is swift, sincere, kind, pleasant, and delightful. Love is strong, patient and faithful, prudent, long-suffering, and manly. Love is never self-seeking, for in whatever a person seeks himself there he falls from love. Love is circumspect, humble, and upright. It is neither soft nor light, nor intent upon vain things. It is sober and chaste, firm and quiet, guarded in all the senses. Love is subject and obedient to superiors. It is mean and contemptible in its own eyes, devoted and thankful to God; always trusting and hoping in Him even when He is distasteful to it, for there is no living in love without sorrow. He who is not ready to suffer all things and to stand resigned to the will of the Beloved is not worthy to be called a lover. A lover must embrace willingly all that is difficult and bitter for the sake of the Beloved, and he should not turn away from Him because of adversities.

The Sixth Chapter
The Proving of a True Lover

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

MY CHILD, you are not yet a brave and wise lover.

THE DISCIPLE

Why, Lord?

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

Because, on account of a slight difficulty you give up what you have undertaken and are too eager to seek consolation.

The brave lover stands firm in temptations and pays no heed to the crafty persuasions of the enemy. As I please him in prosperity, so in adversity I am not displeasing to him. The wise lover regards not so much the gift of Him Who loves as the love of Him Who gives. He regards the affection of the Giver rather than the value of the gift, and sets his Beloved above all gifts. The noble lover does not rest in the gift but in Me Who am above every gift.

All is not lost, then, if you sometimes feel less devout than you wish toward Me or My saints. That good and sweet feeling which you sometimes have is the effect of present grace and a certain foretaste of your heavenly home. You must not lean upon it too much, because it comes and goes. But to fight against evil thoughts which attack you is a sign of virtue and great merit. Do not, therefore, let strange fantasies disturb you, no matter what they concern. Hold strongly to your resolution and keep a right intention toward God.

It is not an illusion that you are sometimes rapt in ecstasy and then quickly returned to the usual follies of your heart. For these are evils which you suffer rather than commit; and so long as they displease you and you struggle against them, it is a matter of merit and not a loss.

You must know that the old enemy tries by all means in his power to hinder your desire for good and to turn you from every devotional practice, especially from the veneration of the saints, from devout meditation on My passion, and from your firm purpose of advancing in virtue. He suggests many evil thoughts that he may cause you weariness and horror, and thus draw you away from prayer and holy reading. A humble confession displeases him and, if he could, he would make you omit Holy Communion.

Do not believe him or heed him, even though he often sets traps to deceive you. When he suggests evil, unclean things, accuse him. Say to him: “Away, unclean spirit! Shame, miserable creature! You are but filth to bring such things to my ears. Begone, most wretched seducer! You shall have no part in me, for Jesus will be my strength, and you shall be confounded. I would rather die and suffer all torments than consent to you. Be still! Be silent! Though you bring many troubles upon me I will have none of you. The Lord is my light, my salvation. Whom shall I fear? Though armies unite against me, my heart will not fear, for the Lord is my Helper, my Redeemer.”

Fight like a good soldier and if you sometimes fall through weakness, rise again with greater strength than before, trusting in My most abundant grace. But beware of vain complacency and pride. For many are led into error through these faults and sometimes fall into almost perpetual blindness. Let the fall of these, who proudly presume on self, be a warning to you and a constant incentive to humility.

The Seventh Chapter

Grace Must Be Hidden Under the Mantle of Humility

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

IT IS better and safer for you to conceal the grace of devotion, not to be elated by it, not to speak or think much of it, and instead to humble yourself and fear lest it is being given to one unworthy of it. Do not cling too closely to this affection, for it may quickly be changed to its opposite. When you are in grace, think how miserable and needy you are without it. Your progress in spiritual life does not consist in having the grace of consolation, but in enduring its withdrawal with humility, resignation, and patience, so that you neither become listless in prayer nor neglect your other duties in the least; but on the contrary do what you can do as well as you know how, and do not neglect yourself completely because of your dryness or anxiety of mind.

There are many, indeed, who immediately become impatient and lazy when things do not go well with them. The way of man, however, does not always lie in his own power. It is God's prerogative to give grace and to console when He wishes, as much as He wishes, and whom He wishes, as it shall please Him and no more.

Some careless persons, misusing the grace of devotion, have destroyed themselves because they wished to do more than they were able. They failed to take account of their own weakness, and followed the desire of their heart rather than the judgment of their reason. Then, because they presumed to greater things than pleased God they quickly lost His grace. They who had built their homes in heaven became helpless, vile outcasts, humbled and impoverished, that they might learn not to fly with their own wings but to trust in Mine.

They who are still new and inexperienced in the way of the Lord may easily be deceived and overthrown unless they guide themselves by the advice of discreet persons. But if they wish to follow their own notions rather than to trust in others who are more experienced, they will be in danger of a sorry end, at least if they are unwilling to be drawn from their vanity. Seldom do they who are wise in their own conceits bear humbly the guidance of others. Yet a little knowledge humbly and meekly pursued is better than great treasures of learning sought in vain complacency. It is better for you to have little than to have much which may become the source of pride.

He who gives himself up entirely to enjoyment acts very unwisely, for he forgets his former helplessness and that chastened fear of the Lord which dreads to lose a proffered grace. Nor is he very brave or wise who becomes too despondent in times of adversity and difficulty and thinks less confidently of Me than he should. He who wishes to be too secure in time of peace will often become too dejected and fearful in time of trial.

If you were wise enough to remain always humble and small in your own eyes, and to restrain and rule your spirit well, you would not fall so quickly into danger and offense.

When a spirit of fervor is enkindled within you, you may well meditate on how you will feel when the fervor leaves. Then, when this happens, remember that the light which I have withdrawn for a time as a warning to you and for My own glory may again return. Such trials are often more beneficial than if you had things always as you wish. For a man's merits are not measured by many visions or consolations, or by knowledge of the Scriptures, or by his being in a higher position than others, but by the truth of his humility, by his capacity for divine charity, by his constancy in seeking purely and entirely the honor of God, by his disregard and positive contempt of self, and more, by preferring to be despised and humiliated rather than honored by others.

The Eighth Chapter

Self-Abasement in the Sight of God

THE DISCIPLE

I WILL speak to my Lord, I who am but dust and ashes. If I consider myself anything more than this, behold You stand against me, and my sins bear witness to the truth which I cannot contradict. If I abase myself, however, if I humble myself to nothingness, if I shrink from all self-esteem and account myself as the dust which I am, Your grace will favor me, Your light will enshroud my heart, and all self-esteem, no matter how little, will sink in the depths of my nothingness to perish forever.

It is there You show me to myself—what I am, what I have been, and what I am coming to; for I am nothing and I did not know it. Left to myself, I am nothing but total weakness. But if You look upon me for an instant, I am at once made strong and filled with new joy. Great wonder it is that I, who of my own weight always sink to the depths, am so suddenly lifted up, and so graciously embraced by You.

It is Your love that does this, graciously upholding me, supporting me in so many necessities, guarding me from so many grave dangers, and snatching me, as I may truly say, from evils without number. Indeed, by loving myself badly I lost myself; by seeking only You and by truly loving You I have found both myself and You, and by that love I have reduced myself more profoundly to nothing. For You, O sweetest Lord, deal with me above all my merits and above all that I dare to hope or ask.

May You be blessed, my God, for although I am unworthy of any benefits, yet Your nobility and infinite goodness never cease to do good even for those who are ungrateful and far from You. Convert us to You, that we may be thankful, humble, and devout, for You are our salvation, our courage, and our strength.

The Ninth Chapter

All Things should be Referred to God as their Last End

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

MY CHILD, I must be your supreme and last end, if you truly desire to be blessed. With this intention your affections, which are too often perversely inclined to self and to creatures, will be purified. For if you seek yourself in anything, you immediately fail interiorly and become dry of heart.

Refer all things principally to Me, therefore, for it is I Who have given them all. Consider each thing as flowing from the highest good, and therefore to Me, as to their highest source, must all things be brought back.

From Me the small and the great, the poor and the rich draw the water of life as from a living fountain, and they who serve Me willingly and freely shall receive grace upon grace. He who wishes to glory in things apart from Me, however, or to delight in some good as his own, shall not be grounded in true joy or gladdened in his heart, but shall be burdened and distressed in many ways. Hence you ought not to attribute any good to yourself or ascribe virtue to any man, but give all to God without Whom man has nothing.

I have given all things. I will that all be returned to Me again, and I exact most strictly a return of thanks. This is the truth by which vainglory is put to flight.

Where heavenly grace and true charity enter in, there neither envy nor narrowness of heart nor self-love will have place. Divine love conquers all and enlarges the powers of the soul.

If you are truly wise, you will rejoice only in Me, because no one is good except God alone, Who is to be praised above all things and above all to be blessed.

The Tenth Chapter

To Despise the World and Serve God is Sweet

THE DISCIPLE

NOW again I will speak, Lord, and will not be silent. I will speak to the hearing of my God, my Lord, and my King Who is in heaven. How great, O Lord, is the multitude of Your mercies which You have stored up for those who love You. But what are You to those who love You? What are You to those who serve You with their whole heart?

Truly beyond the power of words is the sweetness of contemplation You give to those who love You. To me You have shown the sweetness of Your charity, especially in having made me when I did not exist, in having brought me back to serve You when I had gone far astray from You, in having commanded me to love You.

O Fountain of unceasing love, what shall I say of You? How can I forget You, Who have been pleased to remember me even after I had wasted away and perished? You have shown mercy to Your servant beyond all hope, and have exhibited grace and friendship beyond his deserving.

What return shall I make to You for this grace? For it is not given every man to forsake all things, to renounce the world, and undertake the religious life. Is it anything great that I should serve You Whom every creature is bound to serve? It should not seem much to me; instead it should appear great and wonderful that You condescend to receive into Your service one who is so poor and unworthy. Behold, all things are Yours, even those which I have and by which I serve You. Behold, heaven and earth which You created for the service of man, stand ready, and each day they do whatever You command. But even this is little, for You have appointed angels also to minister to man—yea more than all this—You Yourself have condescended to serve man and have promised to give him Yourself.

What return shall I make for all these thousands of benefits? Would that I could serve You all the days of my life! Would that for but one day I could serve You worthily! Truly You are worthy of all service, all honor, and everlasting praise. Truly You are my Lord, and I am Your poor servant, bound to serve You with all my powers, praising You without ever becoming weary. I wish to do this—this is my desire. Do You supply whatever is wanting in me.

It is a great honor, a great glory to serve You and to despise all things for Your sake. They who give themselves gladly to Your most holy service will possess great grace. They who cast aside all carnal delights for Your love will find the most sweet consolation of the Holy Ghost. They who enter upon the narrow way for Your name and cast aside all worldly care will attain great freedom of mind.

O sweet and joyful service of God, which makes man truly free and holy! O sacred state of religious bondage which makes man equal to the angels, pleasing to God, terrible to the demons, and worthy of the commendation of all the faithful! O service to be embraced and always desired, in which the highest good is offered and joy is won which shall remain forever!

The Eleventh Chapter

The Longings of our Hearts Must Be Examined And Moderated

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

MY CHILD, it is necessary for you to learn many things which you have not yet learned well.

THE DISCIPLE

What are they, Lord?

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

That you conform your desires entirely according to My good pleasure, and be not a lover of self but an earnest doer of My will. Desires very often inflame you and drive you madly on, but consider whether you act for My honor, or for your own advantage. If I am the cause, you will be well content with whatever I ordain. If, on the other hand, any self-seeking lurk in you, it troubles you and weighs you down. Take care, then, that you do not rely too much on preconceived desire that has no reference to Me, lest you repent later on and be displeased with what at first pleased you and which you desired as being for the best. Not every desire which seems good should be followed immediately, nor, on the other hand, should every contrary affection be at once rejected.

It is sometimes well to use a little restraint even in good desires and inclinations, lest through too much eagerness you bring upon yourself distraction of mind; lest through your lack of discipline you create scandal for others; or lest you be suddenly upset and fall because of resistance from others. Sometimes, however, you must use violence and resist your sensual appetite bravely. You must pay no attention to what the flesh does or does not desire, taking pains that it be subjected, even by force, to the spirit. And it should be chastised and forced to remain in subjection until it is prepared for anything and is taught to be satisfied with little, to take pleasure in simple things, and not to murmur against inconveniences.

The Twelfth Chapter

Acquiring Patience in the Fight Against Concupiscence

THE DISCIPLE

PATIENCE, O Lord God, is very necessary for me, I see, because there are many adversities in this life. No matter what plans I make for my own peace, my life cannot be free from struggle and sorrow.

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

My child, you are right, yet My wish is not that you seek that peace which is free from temptations or meets with no opposition, but rather that you consider yourself as having found peace when you have been tormented with many tribulations and tried with many adversities.

If you say that you cannot suffer much, how will you endure the fire of purgatory? Of two evils, the lesser is always to be chosen. Therefore, in order that you may escape the everlasting punishments to come, try to bear present evils patiently for the sake of God.

Do you think that men of the world have no suffering, or perhaps but little? Ask even those who enjoy the most delights and you will learn otherwise. "But," you will say, "they enjoy many pleasures and follow their own wishes; therefore they do not feel their troubles very much." Granted that they do have whatever they wish, how long do you think it will last? Behold, they who prosper in the world shall perish as smoke, and there shall be no memory of their past joys. Even in this life they do not find rest in these pleasures without bitterness, weariness, and fear. For they often receive the penalty of sorrow from the very thing whence they believe their happiness comes. And it is just. Since they seek and follow after pleasures without reason, they should not enjoy them without shame and bitterness.

How brief, how false, how unreasonable and shameful all these pleasures are! Yet in their drunken blindness men do not understand this, but like brute beasts incur death of soul for the miserly enjoyment of a corruptible life.

Therefore, My child, do not pursue your lusts, but turn away from your own will. “Seek thy pleasure in the Lord and He will give thee thy heart’s desires.”³⁴ If you wish to be truly delighted and more abundantly comforted by Me, behold, in contempt of all worldly things and in the cutting off of all base pleasures shall your blessing be, and great consolation shall be given you. Further, the more you withdraw yourself from any solace of creatures, the sweeter and stronger comfort will you find in Me.

At first you will not gain these blessings without sadness and toil and conflict. Habit already formed will resist you, but it shall be overcome by a better habit. The flesh will murmur against you, but it will be bridled by fervor of spirit. The old serpent will sting and trouble you, but prayer will put him to flight and by steadfast, useful toil the way will be closed to him.

The Thirteenth Chapter

The Obedience of One Humbly Subject to the Example of Jesus Christ

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

MY CHILD, he who attempts to escape obeying withdraws himself from grace. Likewise he who seeks private benefits for himself loses those which are common to all. He who does not submit himself freely and willingly to his superior, shows that his flesh is not yet perfectly obedient but that it often rebels and murmurs against him.

Learn quickly, then, to submit yourself to your superior if you wish to conquer your own flesh. For the exterior enemy is more quickly overcome if the inner man is not laid waste. There is no more troublesome, no worse enemy of the soul than you yourself, if you are not in harmony with the spirit. It is absolutely necessary that you conceive a true contempt for yourself if you wish to be victorious over flesh and blood.

Because you still love yourself too inordinately, you are afraid to resign yourself wholly to the will of others. Is it such a great matter if you, who are but dust and nothingness, subject yourself to man for the sake of God, when I, the All-Powerful, the Most High, Who created all things out of nothing, humbly subjected Myself to man for your sake? I became the most humble and the lowest of all men that you might overcome your pride with My humility.

Learn to obey, you who are but dust! Learn to humble yourself, you who are but earth and clay, and bow down under the foot of every man! Learn to break your own will, to submit to all subjection! Be zealous against yourself! Allow no pride to dwell in you, but prove yourself so humble and lowly that all may walk over you and trample upon you as dust in the streets!

What have you, vain man, to complain of? What answer can you make, vile sinner, to those who accuse you, you who have so often offended God and so many times deserved hell? But My eye has spared you because your soul was precious in My sight, so that you might know My love and always be thankful for My benefits, so that you might give yourself continually to true subjection and humility, and might patiently endure contempt.

The Fourteenth Chapter

Consider the Hidden Judgments of God Lest You Become Proud of Your Own Good Deeds

THE DISCIPLE

YOU thunder forth Your judgments over me, Lord. You shake all my bones with fear and trembling, and my soul is very much afraid. I stand in awe as I consider that the heavens are not pure in Your sight. If You found wickedness in the angels and did not spare them, what will become of me? Stars have fallen from heaven, and I—I who am but dust—how can I be presumptuous? They whose deeds seemed worthy of praise have fallen into the depths, and I have seen those who ate the bread of angels delighting themselves with the husks of swine.

There is no holiness, then, if You withdraw Your hand, Lord. There is no wisdom if You cease to guide, no courage if You cease to defend. No chastity is secure if You do not guard it. Our vigilance avails nothing if Your holy watchfulness does not protect us. Left to ourselves we sink and perish, but visited by You we are lifted up and live. We are truly unstable, but You make us strong. We grow lukewarm, but You inflame us.

Oh, how humbly and lowly should I consider myself! How very little should I esteem anything that seems good in me! How profoundly should I submit to Your unfathomable judgments, Lord, where I find myself to be but nothing!

O immeasurable weight! O impassable sea, where I find myself to be nothing but bare nothingness! Where, then, is glory's hiding place? Where can there be any trust in my own virtue? All vainglory is swallowed up in the depths of Your judgments upon me.

What is all flesh in Your sight? Shall the clay glory against Him that formed it? How can he whose heart is truly subject to God be lifted up by vainglory? The whole world will not make him proud whom truth has subjected to itself. Nor shall he who has placed all his hope in God be moved by the tongues of flatterers. For behold, even they who speak are nothing; they will pass away with the sound of their words, but the truth of the Lord remains forever.

The Fifteenth Chapter

How One Should Feel and Speak on Every Desirable Thing

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

MY CHILD, this is the way you must speak on every occasion: “Lord, if it be pleasing to You, so be it. If it be to Your honor, Lord, be it done in Your name. Lord, if You see that it is expedient and profitable for me, then grant that I may use it to Your honor. But if You know that it will be harmful to me, and of no good benefit to the welfare of my soul, then take this desire away from me.”

Not every desire is from the Holy Spirit, even though it may seem right and good. It is difficult to be certain whether it is a good spirit or a bad one that prompts one to this or that, and even to know whether you are being moved by your own spirit. Many who seemed at first to be led by a good spirit have been deceived in the end.

Whatever the mind sees as good, ask and desire in fear of God and humility of heart. Above all, commit the whole matter to Me with true resignation, and say: “Lord, You know what is better for me; let this be done or that be done as You please. Grant what You will, as much as You will, when You will. Do with me as You know best, as will most please You, and will be for Your greater honor. Place me where You will and deal with me freely in all things. I am in Your hand; turn me about whichever way You will. Behold, I am Your servant, ready to obey in all things. Not for myself do I desire to live, but for You—would that I could do this worthily and perfectly!”

A PRAYER THAT THE WILL OF GOD BE DONE

Grant me Your grace, O most merciful Jesus, that it may be with me, and work with me, and remain with me to the very end. Grant that I may always desire and will that which is most acceptable and pleasing to You. Let Your will be mine. Let my will always follow Yours and agree perfectly with it. Let my will be one with Yours in willing and in not willing, and let me be unable to will or not will anything but what You will or do not will. Grant that I may die to all things in this world, and for Your sake love to be despised and unknown in this life. Give me above all desires the desire to rest in You, and in You let my heart have peace. You are true peace of heart. You alone are its rest. Without You all things are difficult and troubled. In this peace, the selfsame that is in You, the Most High, the everlasting Good, I will sleep and take my rest. Amen.

The Sixteenth Chapter

True Comfort Is to Be Sought in God Alone

THE DISCIPLE

WHATEVER I can desire or imagine for my own comfort I look for not here but hereafter. For if I alone should have all the world's comforts and could enjoy all its delights, it is certain that they could not long endure. Therefore, my soul, you cannot enjoy full consolation or perfect delight except in God, the Consoler of the poor and the Helper of the humble. Wait a little, my soul, wait for the divine promise and you will have an abundance of all good things in heaven. If you desire these present things too much, you will lose those which are everlasting and heavenly. Use temporal things but desire eternal things. You cannot be satisfied with any temporal goods because you were not created to enjoy them.

Even if you possessed all created things you could not be happy and blessed; for in God, Who created all these things, your whole blessedness and happiness consists—not indeed such happiness as is seen and praised by lovers of the world, but such as that for which the good and faithful servants of Christ wait, and of which the spiritual and pure of heart, whose conversation is in heaven, sometime have a foretaste.

Vain and brief is all human consolation. But that which is received inwardly from the Truth is blessed and true. The devout man carries his Consoler, Jesus, everywhere with him, and he says to Him: “Be with me, Lord Jesus, in every place and at all times. Let this be my consolation, to be willing to forego all human comforting. And if Your consolation be wanting to me, let Your will and just trial of me be my greatest comfort. For You will not always be angry, nor will You threaten forever.”

The Seventeenth Chapter
All Our Care is to Be Placed in God

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

MY CHILD, allow me to do what I will with you. I know what is best for you. You think as a man; you feel in many things as human affection persuades.

THE DISCIPLE

Lord, what You say is true. Your care for me is greater than all the care I can take of myself. For he who does not cast all his care upon You stands very unsafely. If only my will remain right and firm toward You, Lord, do with me whatever pleases You. For whatever You shall do with me can only be good.

If You wish me to be in darkness, I shall bless You. And if You wish me to be in light, again I shall bless You. If You stoop down to comfort me, I shall bless You, and if You wish me to be afflicted, I shall bless You forever.

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

My child, this is the disposition which you should have if you wish to walk with Me. You should be as ready to suffer as to enjoy. You should as willingly be destitute and poor as rich and satisfied.

THE DISCIPLE

O Lord, I shall suffer willingly for Your sake whatever You wish to send me. I am ready to accept from Your hand both good and evil alike, the sweet and the bitter together, sorrow with joy; and for all that happens to me I am grateful. Keep me from all sin and I will fear neither death nor hell. Do not cast me out forever nor blot me out of the Book of Life, and whatever tribulation befalls will not harm me.

The Eighteenth Chapter

Temporal Sufferings Should Be Borne Patiently, After the Example of Christ

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

MY CHILD, I came down from heaven for your salvation and took upon Myself your miseries, not out of necessity but out of love, that you might learn to be patient and bear the sufferings of this life without repining. From the moment of My birth to My death on the cross, suffering did not leave Me. I suffered great want of temporal goods. Often I heard many complaints against Me. Disgrace and reviling I bore with patience. For My blessings I received ingratitude, for My miracles blasphemies, and for My teaching scorn.

THE DISCIPLE

O Lord, because You were patient in life, especially in fulfilling the design of the Father, it is fitting that I, a most miserable sinner, should live patiently according to Your will, and, as long as You shall wish, bear the burden of this corruptible body for the welfare of my soul. For though this present life seems burdensome, yet by Your grace it becomes meritorious, and it is made brighter and more endurable for the weak by Your example and the pathways of the saints. But it has also more consolation than formerly under the old law when the gates of heaven were closed, when the way thereto seemed darker than now, and when so few cared to seek the eternal kingdom. The just, the elect, could not enter heaven before Your sufferings and sacred death had paid the debt.

Oh, what great thanks I owe You, Who have shown me and all the faithful the good and right way to Your everlasting kingdom! Your life is our way and in Your holy patience we come nearer to You Who are our crown. Had

You not gone before and taught us, who would have cared to follow? Alas, how many would have remained far behind, had they not before their eyes Your holy example! Behold, even we who have heard of Your many miracles and teachings are still lukewarm; what would happen if we did not have such light by which to follow You?

The Nineteenth Chapter

True Patience in Suffering

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

WHAT are you saying, My child? Think of My suffering and that of the saints, and cease complaining. You have not yet resisted to the shedding of blood. What you suffer is very little compared with the great things they suffered who were so strongly tempted, so severely troubled, so tried and tormented in many ways. Well may you remember, therefore, the very painful woes of others, that you may bear your own little ones the more easily. And if they do not seem so small to you, examine if perhaps your impatience is not the cause of their apparent greatness; and whether they are great or small, try to bear them all patiently. The better you dispose yourself to suffer, the more wisely you act and the greater is the reward promised you. Thus you will suffer more easily if your mind and habits are diligently trained to it.

Do not say: “I cannot bear this from such a man, nor should I suffer things of this kind, for he has done me a great wrong. He has accused me of many things of which I never thought. However, from someone else I will gladly suffer as much as I think I should.”

Such a thought is foolish, for it does not consider the virtue of patience or the One Who will reward it, but rather weighs the person and the offense committed. The man who will suffer only as much as seems good to him, who will accept suffering only from those from whom he is pleased to accept it, is not truly patient. For the truly patient man does not consider from whom the suffering comes, whether from a superior, an equal, or an inferior, whether from a good and holy person or from a perverse and unworthy one; but no matter how great an adversity befalls him, no matter how often it comes or from whom it comes, he accepts it gratefully from the hand of God, and counts it a great gain. For with God nothing that is suffered for His sake, no matter how small, can pass without reward. Be prepared for the fight, then, if you wish to gain the victory. Without struggle you cannot obtain the crown of patience, and if you refuse to suffer you are refusing the crown. But if you desire to be crowned, fight bravely and bear up patiently. Without labor there is no rest, and without fighting, no victory.

THE DISCIPLE

O Lord, let that which seems naturally impossible to me become possible through Your grace. You know that I can suffer very little, and that I am quickly discouraged when any small adversity arises. Let the torment of tribulation suffered for Your name be pleasant and desirable to me, since to suffer and be troubled for Your sake is very beneficial for my soul.

The Twentieth Chapter

Confessing Our Weakness in the Miseries of Life

THE DISCIPLE

I WILL bring witness against myself to my injustice, and to You, O Lord, I will confess my weakness.

Often it is a small thing that makes me downcast and sad. I propose to act bravely, but when even a small temptation comes I find myself in great straits. Sometimes it is the merest trifle which gives rise to grievous temptations. When I think myself somewhat safe and when I am not expecting it, I frequently find myself almost overcome by a slight wind. Look, therefore, Lord, at my lowliness and frailty which You know so well. Have mercy on me and snatch me out of the mire that I may not be caught in it and may not remain forever utterly despondent.

That I am so prone to fall and so weak in resisting my passions oppresses me frequently and confounds me in Your sight. While I do not fully consent to them, still their assault is very troublesome and grievous to me, and it wearies me exceedingly thus to live in daily strife. Yet from the fact that abominable fancies rush in upon me much more easily than they leave, my weakness becomes clear to me.

Oh that You, most mighty God of Israel, zealous Lover of faithful souls, would consider the labor and sorrow of Your servant, and assist him in all his undertakings! Strengthen me with heavenly courage lest the outer man, the miserable flesh, against which I shall be obliged to fight so long as I draw a breath in this wretched life and which is not yet subjected to the spirit, prevail and dominate me.

Alas! What sort of life is this, from which troubles and miseries are never absent, where all things are full of snares and enemies? For when one trouble or temptation leaves, another comes. Indeed, even while the first conflict is still raging, many others begin unexpectedly. How is it possible to love a life that has such great bitterness, that is subject to so many calamities and miseries? Indeed, how can it even be called life when it begets so many deaths and plagues? And yet, it is loved, and many seek their delight in it.

Many persons often blame the world for being false and vain, yet do not readily give it up because the desires of the flesh have such great power. Some things draw them to love the world, others make them despise it. The lust of the flesh, the desire of the eyes, and the pride of life lead to love, while the pains and miseries, which are the just consequences of those things, beget hatred and weariness of the world.

Vicious pleasure overcomes the soul that is given to the world. She thinks that there are delights beneath these thorns, because she has never seen or tasted the sweetness of God or the internal delight of virtue. They, on the other hand, who entirely despise the world and seek to live for God under the rule of holy discipline, are not ignorant of the divine sweetness promised to those who truly renounce the world. They see clearly how gravely the world errs, and in how many ways it deceives.

The Twenty-first Chapter

Above All Goods and All Gifts We Must Rest in God

THE DISCIPLE

ABOVE all things and in all things, O my soul, rest always in God, for He is the everlasting rest of the saints.

Grant, most sweet and loving Jesus, that I may seek my repose in You above every creature; above all health and beauty; above every honor and glory; every power and dignity; above all knowledge and cleverness, all riches and arts, all joy and gladness; above all fame and praise, all sweetness and consolation; above every hope and promise, every merit and desire; above all the gifts and favors that You can give or pour down upon me; above all the joy and exultation that the mind can receive and feel; and finally, above the angels and archangels and all the heavenly host; above all things visible and invisible; and may I seek my repose in You above everything that is not You, my God.

For You, O Lord my God, are above all things the best. You alone are most high, You alone most powerful. You alone are most sufficient and most satisfying, You alone most sweet and consoling. You alone are most beautiful and loving, You alone most noble and glorious above all things. In You is every perfection that has been or ever will be. Therefore, whatever You give me besides Yourself, whatever You reveal to me concerning Yourself, and whatever You promise, is too small and insufficient when I do not see and fully enjoy You alone. For my heart cannot rest or be fully content until, rising above all gifts and every created thing, it rests in You.³⁵

Who, O most beloved Spouse, Jesus Christ, most pure Lover, Lord of all creation, who shall give me the wings of true liberty that I may fly to rest in You? When shall freedom be fully given me to see how sweet You are, O Lord, my God? When shall I recollect myself entirely in You, so that because of Your love I may feel, not myself, but You alone above all sense and measure, in a manner known to none? But now I often lament and grieve over my unhappiness, for many evils befall me in this vale of miseries, often disturbing me, making me sad and overshadowing me, often hindering and distracting me, alluring and entangling me so that I neither have free access to You nor enjoy the sweet embraces which are ever ready for blessed souls. Let my sighs and the manifold desolation here on earth move You.

O Jesus, Splendor of eternal glory, Consolation of the pilgrim soul, with You my lips utter no sound and to You my silence speaks. How long will my Lord delay His coming? Let Him come to His poor servant and make him happy. Let Him put forth His hand and take this miserable creature from his anguish. Come, O come, for without You there will be no happy day or hour, because You are my happiness and without You my table is empty. I am wretched, as it were imprisoned and weighted down with fetters, until You fill me with the light of Your presence, restore me to liberty, and show me a friendly countenance. Let others seek instead of You whatever they will, but nothing pleases me or will please me but You, my God, my Hope, my everlasting Salvation. I will not be silent, I will not cease praying until Your grace returns to me and You speak inwardly to me, saying: "Behold, I am here. Lo, I have come to you because you have called Me. Your tears and the desire of your soul, your humility and contrition of heart have inclined Me and brought Me to you."

Lord, I have called You, and have desired You, and have been ready to spurn all things for Your sake. For You first spurred me on to seek You. May You be blessed, therefore, O Lord, for having shown this goodness to Your servant according to the multitude of Your mercies.

What more is there for Your servant to say to You unless, with his iniquity and vileness always in mind, he humbles himself before You? Nothing among all the wonders of heaven and earth is like to You. Your works are exceedingly good, Your judgments true, and Your providence rules the whole universe. May You be praised and glorified, therefore, O Wisdom of the Father. Let my lips and my soul and all created things unite to praise and bless You.

The Twenty-Second Chapter
Remember the Innumerable Gifts of God

THE DISCIPLE

OPEN my heart, O Lord, to Your law and teach me to walk in the way of Your commandments. Let me understand Your will. Let me remember Your blessings—all of them and each single one of them—with great reverence and care so that henceforth I may return worthy thanks for them. I know that I am unable to give due thanks for even the least of Your gifts. I am unworthy of the benefits You have given me, and when I consider Your generosity my spirit faints away before its greatness. All that we have of soul and body, whatever we possess interiorly or exteriorly, by nature or by grace, are Your gifts and they proclaim Your goodness and mercy from which we have received all good things.

If one receives more and another less, yet all are Yours and without You nothing can be received. He who receives greater things cannot glory in his own merit or consider himself above others or behave insolently toward those who receive less. He who attributes less to himself and is the more humble and devout in returning thanks is indeed the greater and the better, while he who considers himself lower than all men and judges himself to be the least worthy, is the more fit to receive the greater blessing.

He, on the other hand, who has received fewer gifts should not be sad or impatient or envious of the richer man. Instead he should turn his mind to You and offer You the greatest praise because You give so bountifully, so freely and willingly, without regard to persons. All things come from You; therefore, You are to be praised in all things. You know what is good for each of us; and why one should receive less and another more is not for us to judge, but for You Who have marked every man's merits.

Therefore, O Lord God, I consider it a great blessing not to have many things which human judgment holds praiseworthy and glorious, for one who realizes his own poverty and vileness should not be sad or downcast at it, but rather consoled and happy because You, O God, have chosen the poor, the humble, and the despised in this world to be Your friends and servants. The truth of this is witnessed by Your Apostles, whom You made princes over all the world. Yet they lived in this world without complaining, so humble and simple, so free from malice and deceit, that they were happy even to suffer reproach for Your name and to embrace with great affection that which the world abhors.

A man who loves You and recognizes Your benefits, therefore, should be gladdened by nothing so much as by Your will, by the good pleasure of Your eternal decree. With this he should be so contented and consoled that he would wish to be the least as others wish to be the greatest; that he would be as peaceful and satisfied in the last place as in the first, and as willing to be despised, unknown and forgotten, as to be honored by others and to have more fame than they. He should prefer Your will and the love of Your honor to all else, and it should comfort him more than all the benefits which have been, or will be, given him.

The Twenty-Third Chapter

Four Things Which Bring Great Peace

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

MY CHILD, I will teach you now the way of peace and true liberty.

Seek, child, to do the will of others rather than your own.
Always choose to have less rather than more.
Look always for the last place and seek to be beneath all others.
Always wish and pray that the will of God be fully carried out in you.
Behold, such will enter into the realm of peace and rest.

THE DISCIPLE

O Lord, this brief discourse of Yours contains much perfection. It is short in words but full of meaning and abounding in fruit. Certainly if I could only keep it faithfully, I should not be so easily disturbed. For as often as I find myself troubled and dejected, I find that I have departed from this teaching. But You Who can do all things, and Who always love what is for my soul's welfare, give me increase of grace that I may keep Your words and accomplish my salvation.

A PRAYER AGAINST BAD THOUGHTS

O Lord my God, be not far from me. O my God, hasten to help me, for varied thoughts and great fears have risen up within me, afflicting my soul. How shall I escape them unharmed? How shall I dispel them?

“I will go before you,” says the Lord, “and will humble the great ones of earth. I will open the doors of the prison, and will reveal to you hidden secrets.”

Do as You say, Lord, and let all evil thoughts fly from Your face. This is my hope and my only comfort—to fly to You in all tribulation, to confide in You, and to call on You from the depths of my heart and to await patiently for Your consolation.

A PRAYER FOR ENLIGHTENING THE MIND

Enlighten me, good Jesus, with the brightness of internal light, and take away all darkness from the habitation of my heart. Restrain my wandering thoughts and suppress the temptations which attack me so violently. Fight strongly for me, and vanquish these evil beasts—the alluring desires of the flesh—so that peace may come through Your power and the fullness of Your praise resound in the holy courts, which is a pure conscience. Command the winds and the tempests; say to the sea: “Be still,” and to the north wind, “Do not blow,” and there will be a great calm.

Send forth Your light and Your truth to shine on the earth, for I am as earth, empty and formless until You illumine me. Pour out Your grace from above. Shower my heart with heavenly dew. Open the springs of devotion to water the earth, that it may produce the best of good fruits. Lift up my heart pressed down by the weight of sins, and direct all my desires to heavenly things, that having tasted the sweetness of supernal happiness, I may find no pleasure in thinking of earthly things.

Snatch me up and deliver me from all the passing comfort of creatures, for no created thing can fully quiet and satisfy my desires. Join me to Yourself in an inseparable bond of love; because You alone can satisfy him who loves You, and without You all things are worthless.

The Twenty-Fourth Chapter

Avoiding Curious Inquiry About the Lives of Others

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

MY CHILD, do not be curious. Do not trouble yourself with idle cares. What matters this or that to you? Follow Me. What is it to you if a man is such and such, if another does or says this or that? You will not have to answer for others, but you will have to give an account of yourself. Why, then, do you meddle in their affairs?

Behold, I know all men. I see everything that is done under the sun, and I know how matters stand with each—what is in his mind and what in his heart and the end to which his intention is directed. Commit all things to Me, therefore, and keep yourself in good peace. Let him who is disturbed be as restless as he will. Whatever he has said or done will fall upon himself, for he cannot deceive Me.

Do not be anxious for the shadow of a great name, for the close friendship of many, or for the particular affection of men. These things cause distraction and cast great darkness about the heart. I would willingly speak My word and reveal My secrets to you, if you would watch diligently for My coming and open your heart to Me. Be prudent, then. Watch in prayer, and in all things humble yourself.

The Twenty-Fifth Chapter

The Basis of Firm Peace of Heart and True Progress

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

MY CHILD, I have said: “Peace I leave with you, My peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, do I give unto you.”³⁶

All men desire peace but all do not care for the things that go to make true peace. My peace is with the humble and meek of heart: your peace will be in much patience. If you hear Me and follow My voice, you will be able to enjoy much peace.

THE DISCIPLE

What, then, shall I do, Lord?

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

Watch yourself in all things, in what you do and what you say. Direct your every intention toward pleasing Me alone, and desire nothing outside of Me. Do not be rash in judging the deeds and words of others, and do not entangle yourself in affairs that are not your own. Thus, it will come about that you will be disturbed little and seldom.

Yet, never to experience any disturbance or to suffer any hurt in heart or body does not belong to this present life, but rather to the state of eternal rest. Do not think, therefore, that you have found true peace if you feel no depression, or that all is well because you suffer no opposition. Do not think that all is perfect if everything happens just as you wish. And do not imagine yourself great or consider yourself especially beloved if you are filled with great devotion and sweetness. For the true lover of virtue is not known by these things, nor do the progress and perfection of a man consist in them.

THE DISCIPLE

In what do they consist, Lord?

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

They consist in offering yourself with all your heart to the divine will, not seeking what is yours either in small matters or great ones, either in temporal or eternal things, so that you will preserve equanimity and give thanks in both prosperity and adversity, seeing all things in their proper light.

If you become so brave and long-suffering in hope that you can prepare your heart to suffer still more even when all inward consolation is withdrawn, and if you do not justify yourself as though you ought not be made to suffer such great things, but acknowledge Me to be just in all My works and praise My holy name—then you will walk in the true and right path of peace, then you may have sure hope of seeing My face again in joy. If you attain to complete contempt of self, then know that you will enjoy an abundance of peace, as much as is possible in this earthly life.

The Twenty-Sixth Chapter

The Excellence of a Free Mind, Gained Through Prayer Rather Than By Study

THE DISCIPLE

IT IS the mark of a perfect man, Lord, never to let his mind relax in attention to heavenly things, and to pass through many cares as though he had none; not as an indolent man does, but having by the certain prerogative of a free mind no disorderly affection for any created being.

Keep me, I beg You, most merciful God, from the cares of this life, lest I be too much entangled in them. Keep me from many necessities of the body, lest I be ensnared by pleasure. Keep me from all darkness of mind, lest I be broken by troubles and overcome. I do not ask deliverance from those things which worldly vanity desires so eagerly, but from those miseries which, by the common curse of humankind, oppress the soul of Your servant in punishment and keep him from entering into the liberty of spirit as often as he would.

My God, Sweetness beyond words, make bitter all the carnal comfort that draws me from love of the eternal and lures me to its evil self by the sight of some delightful good in the present. Let it not overcome me, my God. Let not flesh and blood conquer me. Let not the world and its brief glory deceive me, nor the devil trip me by his craftiness. Give me courage to resist, patience to endure, and constancy to persevere. Give me the soothing unction of Your spirit rather than all the consolations of the world, and in place of carnal love, infuse into me the love of Your name.

Behold, eating, drinking, clothing, and other necessities that sustain the body are burdensome to the fervent soul. Grant me the grace to use such comforts temperately and not to become entangled in too great a desire for them. It is not lawful to cast them aside completely, for nature must be sustained, but Your holy law forbids us to demand superfluous things and things that are simply for pleasure, else the flesh would rebel against the spirit. In these matters, I beg, let Your hand guide and direct me, so that I may not overstep the law in any way.

The Twenty-Seventh Chapter

Self-Love is the Greatest Hindrance to the Highest Good

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

MY CHILD, you should give all for all, and in no way belong to yourself. You must know that self-love is more harmful to you than anything else in the world. In proportion to the love and affection you have for a thing, it will cling to you more or less. If your love is pure, simple, and well ordered, you will not be a slave to anything. Do not covet what you may not have. Do not possess anything that can hinder you or rob you of freedom.

It is strange that you do not commit yourself to Me with your whole heart, together with all that you can desire or possess. Why are you consumed with foolish sorrow? Why are you wearied with unnecessary care? Be resigned to My will and you will suffer no loss.

If you seek this or that, if you wish to be in this place or that place, to have more ease and pleasure, you will never rest or be free from care, for some defect is found in everything and everywhere someone will vex you. To obtain and multiply earthly goods, then, will not help you, but to despise them and root them out of your heart will aid. This, understand, is true not only of money and wealth, but also of ambition for honor and desire for empty praise, all of which will pass away with this world.

The place matters little if the spirit of fervor is not there; nor will peace be lasting if it is sought from the outside; if your heart has no true foundation, that is, if you are not founded in Me, you may change, but you will not better yourself. For when occasion arises and is accepted, you will find that from which you fled and worse.

A PRAYER FOR CLEANSING THE HEART AND OBTAINING HEAVENLY WISDOM

Strengthen me by the grace of Your holy spirit, O God. Give me the power to be strengthened inwardly and to empty my heart of all vain care and anxiety, so that I may not be drawn away by many desires, whether for precious things or mean ones. Let me look upon everything as passing, and upon myself as soon to pass away with them, because there is nothing lasting under the sun, where all is vanity and affliction of spirit. How wise is he who thinks thus!

Give me, Lord, heavenly wisdom to learn above all else to seek and find You, to enjoy and love You more than anything, and to consider other things as they are, as Your wisdom has ordered them. Grant me prudence to avoid the flatterer and to bear patiently with him who disagrees with me. For it is great wisdom not to be moved by the sound of words, nor to give ear to the wicked, flattering siren. Then, I shall walk safely in the way I have begun.

The Twenty-Eighth Chapter

Strength Against Slander

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

MY CHILD, do not take it to heart if some people think badly of you and say unpleasant things about you. You ought to think worse things of yourself and to believe that no one is weaker than yourself. Moreover, if you walk in the spirit you will pay little heed to fleeting words. It is no small prudence to remain silent in evil times, to turn inwardly to Me, and not to be disturbed by human opinions. Do not let your peace depend on the words of men. Their thinking well or badly of you does not make you different from what you are. Where are true peace and glory? Are they not in Me? He who neither cares to please men nor fears to displease them will enjoy great peace, for all unrest and distraction of the senses arise out of disorderly love and vain fear.

The Twenty-Ninth Chapter

How We Must Call Upon and Bless the Lord When Trouble Presses

THE DISCIPLE

BLESSED be Your name forever, O Lord, Who have willed that this temptation and trouble come upon me. I cannot escape it, yet I must fly to You that You may help me and turn it to my good. Now I am troubled, Lord, and my heart is not at rest, for I am greatly afflicted by this present suffering.

Beloved Father, what shall I say? I am straitened in harsh ways. Save me from this hour to which, however, I am come that You may be glorified when I am deeply humbled and freed by You. May it please You, then, to deliver me, Lord, for what can I, poor wretch that I am, do or where can I go without You? Give me patience, Lord, even now. Help me, my God, and I will not be afraid however much I may be distressed.

But here, in the midst of these troubles, what shall I say? Your will be done, Lord. I have richly deserved to be troubled and distressed. But I must bear it. Would that I could do so patiently, until the storm passes and calm returns! Yet Your almighty hand can take this temptation from me, or lighten its attack so that I do not altogether sink beneath it, as You, my God, my Mercy, have very often done for me before. And the more difficult my plight, the easier for You is this change of the right hand of the Most High.

The Thirtieth Chapter

The Quest of Divine Help and Confidence in Regaining Grace

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

MY CHILD, I am the Lord Who gives strength in the day of trouble. Come to Me when all is not well with you. Your tardiness in turning to prayer is the greatest obstacle to heavenly consolation, for before you pray earnestly to Me you first seek many comforts and take pleasure in outward things. Thus, all things are of little profit to you until you realize that I am the one Who saves those who trust in Me, and that outside of Me there is no worth-while help, or any useful counsel or lasting remedy.

But now, after the tempest, take courage, grow strong once more in the light of My mercies; for I am near, says the Lord, to restore all things not only to the full but with abundance and above measure. Is anything difficult for Me? Or shall I be as one who promises and does not act? Where is your faith? Stand firm and persevere. Be a man of endurance and courage, and consolation will come to you in due time. Wait for Me; wait—and I will come to heal you.

It is only a temptation that troubles you, a vain fear that terrifies you.

Of what use is anxiety about the future? Does it bring you anything but trouble upon trouble? Sufficient for the day is the evil thereof. It is foolish and useless to be either grieved or happy about future things which perhaps may never happen. But it is human to be deluded by such imaginations, and the sign of a weak soul to be led on by suggestions of the enemy. For he does not care whether he overcomes you by love of the present or fear of the future.

Let not your heart be troubled, therefore, nor let it be afraid. Believe in Me and trust in My mercy. When you think you are far from Me, then often I am very near you. When you judge that almost all is lost, then very often you are in the way of gaining great merit.

All is not lost when things go contrary to your wishes. You ought not judge according to present feelings, nor give in to any trouble whenever it comes, or take it as though all hope of escape were lost. And do not consider yourself forsaken if I send some temporary hardship, or withdraw the consolation you desire. For this is the way to the kingdom of heaven, and without doubt it is better for you and the rest of My servants to be tried in adversities than to have all things as you wish. I know your secret thoughts, and I know that it is profitable for your salvation to be left sometimes in despondency lest perhaps you be puffed up by success and fancy yourself to be what you are not.

What I have given, I can take away and restore when it pleases Me. What I give remains Mine, and thus when I take it away I take nothing that is yours, for every good gift and every perfect gift is Mine.

If I send you trouble and adversity, do not fret or let your heart be downcast. I can raise you quickly up again and turn all your sorrow into joy. I am no less just and worthy of great praise when I deal with you in this way.

If you think aright and view things in their true light, you should never be so dejected and saddened by adversity, but rather rejoice and give thanks, considering it a matter of special joy that I afflict you with sorrow and do not spare you. "As the Father hath loved Me, so also I love you," I said to My disciples, and I certainly did not send them out to temporal joys but rather to great struggles, not to honors but to contempt, not to idleness, but to labors, not to rest but to bring forth much fruit in patience. Do you, My child, remember these words.

The Thirty-First Chapter

To Find the Creator, Forsake All Creatures

THE DISCIPLE

O LORD, I am in sore need still of greater grace if I am to arrive at the point where no man and no created thing can be an obstacle to me. For as long as anything holds me back, I cannot freely fly to You. He that said “Oh that I had wings like a dove, that I might fly away and be at rest!”³⁷ desired to fly freely to You. Who is more at rest than he who aims at nothing but God? And who more free than the man who desires nothing on earth?

It is well, then, to pass over all creation, perfectly to abandon self, and to see in ecstasy of mind that You, the Creator of all, have no likeness among all Your creatures, and that unless a man be freed from all creatures, he cannot attend freely to the Divine. The reason why so few contemplative persons are found, is that so few know how to separate themselves entirely from what is transitory and created.

For this, indeed, great grace is needed, grace that will raise the soul and lift it up above itself. Unless a man be elevated in spirit, free from all creatures, and completely united to God, all his knowledge and possessions are of little moment. He who considers anything great except the one, immense, eternal good will long be little and lie groveling on the earth. Whatever is not God is nothing and must be accounted as nothing.

There is great difference between the wisdom of an enlightened and devout man and the learning of a well-read and brilliant scholar, for the knowledge which flows down from divine sources is much nobler than that laboriously acquired by human industry.

Many there are who desire contemplation, but who do not care to do the things which contemplation requires. It is also a great obstacle to be satisfied with externals and sensible things, and to have so little of perfect mortification. I know not what it is, or by what spirit we are led, or to what we pretend—we who wish to be called spiritual—that we spend so much labor and even more anxiety on things that are transitory and mean, while we seldom or never advert with full consciousness to our interior concerns.

Alas, after very little recollection we falter, not weighing our deeds by strict examination. We pay no attention to where our affections lie, nor do we deplore the fact that our actions are impure.

Remember that because all flesh had corrupted its course, the great deluge followed. Since, then, our interior affection is corrupt, it must be that the action which follows from it, the index as it were of our lack of inward strength, is also corrupt. Out of a pure heart come the fruits of a good life.

People are wont to ask how much a man has done, but they think little of the virtue with which he acts. They ask: Is he strong? rich? handsome? a good writer? a good singer? or a good worker? They say little, however, about how poor he is in spirit, how patient and meek, how devout and spiritual. Nature looks to his outward appearance; grace turns to his inward being. The one often errs, the other trusts in God and is not deceived.

The Thirty-Second Chapter

Self-Denial and the Renunciation of Evil Appetites

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

MY CHILD, you can never be perfectly free unless you completely renounce self, for all who seek their own interest and who love themselves are bound in fetters. They are unsettled by covetousness and curiosity, always searching for ease and not for the things of Christ, often devising and framing that which will not last, for anything that is not of God will fail completely.

Hold to this short and perfect advice, therefore: give up your desires and you will find rest. Think upon it in your heart, and when you have put it into practice you will understand all things.

THE DISCIPLE

But this, Lord, is not the work of one day, nor is it mere child's play; indeed, in this brief sentence is included all the perfection of holy persons.

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

My child, you should not turn away or be downcast when you hear the way of the perfect. Rather you ought to be spurred on the more toward their sublime heights, or at least be moved to seek perfection.

I would this were the case with you—that you had progressed to the point where you no longer loved self but simply awaited My bidding and his whom I have placed as father over you. Then you would please Me very much, and your whole life would pass in peace and joy. But you have yet many things which you must give up, and unless you resign them entirely to Me you will not obtain that which you ask.

“I counsel thee to buy of me gold, fire-tried, that thou mayest be made rich”³⁸—rich in heavenly wisdom which treads underfoot all that is low. Put aside earthly wisdom, all human self-complacency.

I have said: exchange what is precious and valued among men for that which is considered contemptible. For true heavenly wisdom—not to think highly of self and not to seek glory on earth—does indeed seem mean and small and is well-nigh forgotten, as many men praise it with their mouths but shy far away from it in their lives. Yet this heavenly wisdom is a pearl of great price, which is hidden from many.

The Thirty-Third Chapter

Restlessness of Soul—Directing Our Final Intention Toward God

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

MY CHILD, do not trust in your present feeling, for it will soon give way to another. As long as you live you will be subject to changeableness in spite of yourself. You will become merry at one time and sad at another, now peaceful but again disturbed, at one moment devout and the next indevout, sometimes diligent while at other times lazy, now grave and again flippant.

But the man who is wise and whose spirit is well instructed stands superior to these changes. He pays no attention to what he feels in himself or from what quarter the wind of fickleness blows, so long as the whole intention of his mind is conducive to his proper and desired end. For thus he can stand undivided, unchanged, and unshaken, with the singleness of his intention directed unwaveringly toward Me, even in the midst of so many changing events. And the purer this singleness of intention is, with so much the more constancy does he pass through many storms.

But in many ways the eye of pure intention grows dim, because it is attracted to any delightful thing that it meets. Indeed, it is rare to find one who is entirely free from all taint of self-seeking. The Jews of old, for example, came to Bethany to Martha and Mary, not for Jesus' sake alone, but in order to see Lazarus.

The eye of your intention, therefore, must be cleansed so that it is single and right. It must be directed toward Me, despite all the objects which may interfere.

The Thirty-Fourth Chapter

God is Sweet Above All Things and in All Things to Those Who Love Him

THE DISCIPLE

BEHOLD, my God and my all! What more do I wish for; what greater happiness can I desire? O sweet and delicious word! But sweet only to him who loves it, and not to the world or the things that are in the world.

My God and my all! These words are enough for him who understands, and for him who loves it is a joy to repeat them often. For when You are present, all things are delightful; when You are absent, all things become loathsome. It is You Who give a heart tranquillity, great peace and festive joy. It is You Who make us think well of all things, and praise You in all things. Without You nothing can give pleasure for very long, for if it is to be pleasing and tasteful, Your grace and the seasoning of Your wisdom must be in it. What is there that can displease him whose happiness is in You? And, on the contrary, what can satisfy him whose delight is not in You?

The wise men of the world, the men who lust for the flesh, are wanting in Your wisdom, because in the world is found the utmost vanity, and in the flesh is death. But they who follow You by disdaining worldly things and mortifying the flesh are known to be truly wise, for they are transported from vanity to truth, from flesh to spirit. By such as these God is relished, and whatever good is found in creatures they turn to praise of the Creator. But great—yes, very great, indeed—is the difference between delight in the Creator and in the creature, in eternity and in time, in Light uncreated and in the light that is reflected.

O Light eternal, surpassing all created brightness, flash forth the lightning from above and enlighten the inmost recesses of my heart. Cleanse, cheer, enlighten, and vivify my spirit with all its powers, that it may cleave to You in ecstasies of joy. Oh, when will that happy and wished-for hour come, that

You may fill me with Your presence and become all in all to me? So long as this is not given me, my joy will not be complete.

The old man, alas, yet lives within me. He has not yet been entirely crucified; he is not yet entirely dead. He still lusts strongly against the spirit, and he will not leave the kingdom of my soul in peace. But You, Who can command the power of the sea and calm the tumult of its waves, arise and help me. Scatter the nations that delight in war; crush them in Your sight. Show forth I beg, Your wonderful works and let Your right hand be glorified, because for me there is no other hope or refuge except in You, O Lord, my God.

The Thirty-Fifth Chapter

There is No Security from Temptation in This Life

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

MY CHILD, in this life you are never safe, and as long as you live the weapons of the spirit will ever be necessary to you. You dwell among enemies. You are subject to attack from the right and the left. If, therefore, you do not guard yourself from every quarter with the shield of patience, you will not remain long unscathed.

Moreover, if you do not steadily set your heart on Me, with a firm will to suffer everything for My sake, you will not be able to bear the heat of this battle or to win the crown of the blessed. You ought, therefore, to pass through all these things bravely and to oppose a strong hand to whatever stands in your way. For to him who triumphs heavenly bread is given, while for him who is too lazy to fight there remains much misery.

If you look for rest in this life, how will you attain to everlasting rest? Dispose yourself, then, not for much rest but for great patience. Seek true peace, not on earth but in heaven; not in men or in other creatures but in God alone. For love of God you should undergo all things cheerfully, all labors and sorrows, temptations and trials, anxieties, weaknesses, necessities, injuries, slanders, rebukes, humiliations, confusions, corrections, and contempt. For these are helps to virtue. These are the trials of Christ's recruit. These form the heavenly crown. For a little brief labor I will give an everlasting crown, and for passing confusion, glory that is eternal.

Do you think that you will always have spiritual consolations as you desire? My saints did not always have them. Instead, they had many afflictions, temptations of various kinds, and great desolation. Yet they bore them all patiently. They placed their confidence in God rather than in themselves, knowing that the sufferings of this life are not worthy to be compared with the glory that is to come. And you—do you wish to have at once that which others have scarcely obtained after many tears and great labors?

Wait for the Lord, act bravely, and have courage. Do not lose trust. Do not turn back but devote your body and soul constantly to God's glory. I will reward you most plentifully. I will be with you in every tribulation.

The Thirty-Sixth Chapter

The Vain Judgments of Men

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

MY CHILD, trust firmly in the Lord, and do not fear the judgment of men when conscience tells you that you are upright and innocent. For it is good and blessed to suffer such things, and they will not weigh heavily on the humble heart that trusts in God rather than in itself. Many men say many things, and therefore little faith is to be put in them.

Likewise, it is impossible to satisfy all men. Although Paul tried to please all in the Lord, and became all things to all men, yet he made little of their opinions. He labored abundantly for the edification and salvation of others, as much as lay in him and as much as he could, but he could not escape being sometimes judged and despised by others. Therefore, he committed all to God Who knows all things, and defended himself by his patience and humility against the tongues of those who spoke unjustly or thought foolish things and lies, or made accusations against him. Sometimes, indeed, he did answer them, but only lest his silence scandalize the weak.

Who are you, then, that you should be afraid of mortal man? Today he is here, tomorrow he is not seen. Fear God and you will not be afraid of the terrors of men. What can anyone do to you by word or injury? He hurts himself rather than you, and no matter who he may be he cannot escape the judgment of God. Keep God before your eyes, therefore, and do not quarrel with peevish words.

If it seems, then, that you are worsted and that you suffer undeserved shame, do not repine over it and do not lessen your crown by impatience. Look instead to heaven, to Me, Who have power to deliver you from all disgrace and injury, and to render to everyone according to his works.

The Thirty-Seventh Chapter

Pure and Entire Resignation of Self to Obtain Freedom of Heart

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

MY CHILD, renounce self and you shall find Me. Give up your own self-will, your possessions, and you shall always gain. For once you resign yourself irrevocably, greater grace will be given you.

THE DISCIPLE

How often, Lord, shall I resign myself? And in what shall I forsake myself?

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

Always, at every hour, in small matters as well as great—I except nothing. In all things I wish you to be stripped of self. How otherwise can you be mine or I yours unless you be despoiled of your own will both inwardly and outwardly? The sooner you do this the better it will be for you, and the more fully and sincerely you do it the more you will please Me and the greater gain you will merit.

Some there are who resign themselves, but with certain reservation; they do not trust fully in God and therefore they try to provide for themselves. Others, again, at first offer all, but afterward are assailed by temptation and return to what they have renounced, thereby making no progress in virtue. These will not reach the true liberty of a pure heart nor the grace of happy friendship with Me unless they first make a full resignation and a daily sacrifice of themselves. Without this no fruitful union lasts nor will last.

I have said to you very often, and now I say again: forsake yourself, renounce yourself and you shall enjoy great inward peace. Give all for all. Ask nothing, demand nothing in return. Trust purely and without hesitation in Me, and you shall possess Me. You will be free of heart and darkness will not overwhelm you.

Strive for this, pray for this, desire this—to be stripped of all selfishness and naked to follow the naked Jesus, to die to self and live forever for Me. Then all vain imaginations, all wicked disturbances and superfluous cares will vanish. Then also immoderate fear will leave you and inordinate love will die.

The Thirty-Eighth Chapter

The Right Ordering of External Affairs; Recourse to God in Dangers

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

MY CHILD, you must strive diligently to be inwardly free, to have mastery over yourself everywhere, in every external act and occupation, that all things be subject to you and not you to them, that you be the master and director of your actions, not a slave or a mere hired servant. You should be rather a free man and a true Hebrew, arising to the status and freedom of the children of God who stand above present things to contemplate those which are eternal; who look upon passing affairs with the left eye and upon those of heaven with the right; whom temporal things do not so attract that they cling to them, but who rather put these things to such proper service as is ordained and instituted by God, the great Workmaster, Who leaves nothing unordered in His creation.

If, likewise, in every happening you are not content simply with outward appearances, if you do not regard with carnal eyes things which you see and hear, but whatever be the affair, enter with Moses into the tabernacle to ask advice of the Lord, you will sometimes hear the divine answer and return instructed in many things present and to come. For Moses always had recourse to the tabernacle for the solution of doubts and questions, and fled to prayer for support in dangers and the evil deeds of men. So you also should take refuge in the secret chamber of your heart, begging earnestly for divine aid.

For this reason, as we read, Joshua and the children of Israel were deceived by the Gibeonites because they did not first seek counsel of the Lord, but trusted too much in fair words and hence were deceived by false piety.

The Thirty-Ninth Chapter

A Man Should Not Be Unduly Solicitous About His Affairs

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

MY CHILD, always commit your cause to Me. I will dispose of it rightly in good time. Await My ordering of it and it will be to your advantage.

THE DISCIPLE

Lord, I willingly commit all things to You, for my anxiety can profit me little. But I would that I were not so concerned about the future, and instead offered myself without hesitation to Your good pleasure.

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

My child, it often happens that a man seeks ardently after something he desires and then when he has attained it he begins to think that it is not at all desirable; for affections do not remain fixed on the same thing, but rather flit from one to another. It is no very small matter, therefore, for a man to forsake himself even in things that are very small.

A man's true progress consists in denying himself, and the man who has denied himself is truly free and secure. The old enemy, however, setting himself against all good, never ceases to tempt them, but day and night plots dangerous snares to cast the unwary into the net of deceit. "Watch ye and pray," says the Lord, "that ye enter not into temptation."³⁹

The Fortieth Chapter

Man Has No Good in Himself and Can Glory in Nothing

THE DISCIPLE

LORD, what is man that You are mindful of him, or the son of man that You visit him? What has man deserved that You should give him Your grace? What cause have I, Lord, to complain if You desert me, or what objection can I have if You do not do what I ask? This I may think and say in all truth: “Lord, I am nothing, of myself I have nothing that is good; I am lacking in all things, and I am ever tending toward nothing. And unless I have Your help and am inwardly strengthened by You, I become quite lukewarm and lax.”

But You, Lord, are always the same. You remain forever, always good, just, and holy; doing all things rightly, justly, and holily, disposing them wisely. I, however, who am more ready to go backward than forward, do not remain always in one state, for I change with the seasons. Yet my condition quickly improves when it pleases You and when You reach forth Your helping hand. For You alone, without human aid, can help me and strengthen me so greatly that my heart shall no more change but be converted and rest solely in You. Hence, if I knew well how to cast aside all earthly consolation, either to attain devotion or because of the necessity which, in the absence of human solace, compels me to seek You alone, then I could deservedly hope for Your grace and rejoice in the gift of new consolation.

Thanks be to You from Whom all things come, whenever it is well with me. In Your sight I am vanity and nothingness, a weak, unstable man. In what, therefore, can I glory, and how can I wish to be highly regarded? Is it because I am nothing? This, too, is utterly vain. Indeed, the greatest vanity is the evil plague of empty self-glory, because it draws one away from true glory and robs one of heavenly grace. For when a man is pleased with himself he displeases You, when he pants after human praise he is deprived of true virtue. But it is true glory and holy exultation to glory in You and not in self, to rejoice in Your name rather than in one's own virtue, and not to delight in any creature except for Your sake.

Let Your name, not mine, be praised. Let Your work, not mine, be magnified. Let Your holy name be blessed, but let no human praise be given to me. You are my glory. You are the joy of my heart. In You I will glory and rejoice all the day, and for myself I will glory in nothing but my infirmities.

Let the Jews seek the glory that comes from another. I will seek that which comes from God alone. All human glory, all temporal honor, all worldly position is truly vanity and foolishness compared to Your everlasting glory. O my Truth, my Mercy, my God, O Blessed Trinity, to You alone be praise and honor, power and glory, throughout all the endless ages of ages.

The Forty-First Chapter
Contempt for All Earthly Honor

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

MY CHILD, do not take it to heart if you see others honored and advanced, while you yourself are despised and humbled. Lift up your heart to Me in heaven and the contempt of men on earth will not grieve you.

THE DISCIPLE

Lord, we are blinded and quickly misled by vanity. If I examine myself rightly, no injury has ever been done me by any creature; hence I have nothing for which to make just complaint to You. But I have sinned often and gravely against You; therefore is every creature in arms against me. Confusion and contempt should in justice come upon me, but to You due praise, honor, and glory. And unless I prepare myself to be willingly despised and forsaken by every creature, to be considered absolutely nothing, I cannot have interior peace and strength, nor can I be enlightened spiritually or completely united with You.

The Forty-Second Chapter
Peace is Not to Be Placed in Men

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

MY CHILD, if you place your peace in any creature because of your own feeling or for the sake of his company, you will be unsettled and entangled. But if you have recourse to the ever-living and abiding Truth, you will not grieve if a friend should die or forsake you. Your love for your friend should be grounded in Me, and for My sake you should love whoever seems to be good and is very dear to you in this life. Without Me friendship has no strength and cannot endure. Love which I do not bind is neither true nor pure.

You ought, therefore, to be so dead to such human affections as to wish as far as lies within you to be without the fellowship of men. Man draws nearer to God in proportion as he withdraws farther from all earthly comfort. And he ascends higher to God as he descends lower into himself and grows more vile in his own eyes. He who attributes any good to himself hinders God's grace from coming into his heart, for the grace of the Holy Spirit seeks always the humble heart.

If you knew how to annihilate yourself completely and empty yourself of all created love, then I should overflow in you with great grace. When you look to creatures, the sight of the Creator is taken from you. Learn, therefore, to conquer yourself in all things for the sake of your Maker. Then will you be able to attain to divine knowledge. But anything, no matter how small, that is loved and regarded inordinately keeps you back from the highest good and corrupts the soul.

The Forty-Third Chapter

Beware Vain and Worldly Knowledge

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

MY CHILD, do not let the fine-sounding and subtle words of men deceive you. For the kingdom of heaven consists not in talk but in virtue. Attend, rather, to My words which enkindle the heart and enlighten the mind, which excite contrition and abound in manifold consolations. Never read them for the purpose of appearing more learned or more wise. Apply yourself to mortifying your vices, for this will benefit you more than your understanding of many difficult questions.

Though you shall have read and learned many things, it will always be necessary for you to return to this one principle: I am He who teaches man knowledge, and to the little ones I give a clearer understanding than can be taught by man. He to whom I speak will soon be wise and his soul will profit. But woe to those who inquire of men about many curious things, and care very little about the way they serve Me.

The time will come when Christ, the Teacher of teachers, the Lord of angels, will appear to hear the lessons of all—that is, to examine the conscience of everyone. Then He will search Jerusalem with lamps and the hidden things of darkness will be brought to light and the arguings of men's tongues be silenced.

I am He Who in one moment so enlightens the humble mind that it comprehends more of eternal truth than could be learned by ten years in the schools. I teach without noise of words or clash of opinions, without ambition for honor or confusion of argument.

I am He Who teaches man to despise earthly possessions and to loathe present things, to ask after the eternal, to hunger for heaven, to fly honors and to bear with scandals, to place all hope in Me, to desire nothing apart from Me, and to love Me ardently above all things. For a certain man by loving Me intimately learned divine truths and spoke wonders. He profited more by leaving all things than by studying subtle questions.

To some I speak of common things, to others of special matters. To some I appear with sweetness in signs and figures, and to others I appear in great light and reveal mysteries. The voice of books is but a single voice, yet it does not teach all men alike, because I within them am the Teacher and the Truth, the Examiner of hearts, the Understander of thoughts, the Promoter of acts, distributing to each as I see fit.

The Forty-Fourth Chapter

Do Not Be Concerned About Outward Things

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

MY CHILD, there are many matters of which it is well for you to be ignorant, and to consider yourself as one who is dead upon the earth and to whom the whole world is crucified. There are many things, too, which it is well to pass by with a deaf ear, thinking, instead, of what is more to your peace. It is more profitable to turn away from things which displease you and to leave to every man his own opinion than to take part in quarrelsome talk. If you stand well with God and look to His judgment, you will more easily bear being worsted.

THE DISCIPLE

To what have we come, Lord? Behold, we bewail a temporal loss. We labor and fret for a small gain, while loss of the soul is forgotten and scarcely ever returns to mind. That which is of little or no value claims our attention, whereas that which is of highest necessity is neglected—all because man gives himself wholly to outward things. And unless he withdraws himself quickly, he willingly lies immersed in externals.

The Forty-Fifth Chapter

All Men Are Not to Be Believed, for It Is Easy to Err in Speech

THE DISCIPLE

GRANT me help in my needs, O Lord, for the aid of man is useless. How often have I failed to find faithfulness in places where I thought I possessed it! And how many times I have found it where I least expected it! Vain, therefore, is hope in men, but the salvation of the just is in You, O God. Blessed be Your name, O Lord my God, in everything that befalls us.

We are weak and unstable, quickly deceived and changed. Who is the man that is able to guard himself with such caution and care as not sometimes to fall into deception or perplexity? He who confides in You, O Lord, and seeks You with a simple heart does not fall so easily. And if some trouble should come upon him, no matter how entangled in it he may be, he will be more quickly delivered and comforted by You. For You will not forsake him who trusts in You to the very end.

Rare is the friend who remains faithful through all his friend's distress. But You, Lord, and You alone, are entirely faithful in all things; other than You, there is none so faithful.

Oh, how wise is that holy soul⁴⁰ who said: "My mind is firmly settled and founded in Christ." If that were true of me, human fear would not so easily cause me anxiety, nor would the darts of words disturb. But who can foresee all things and provide against all evils? And if things foreseen have often hurt, can those which are unlooked for do otherwise than wound us gravely? Why, indeed, have I not provided better for my wretched self? Why, too, have I so easily kept faith in others? We are but men, however, nothing more than weak men, although we are thought by many to be, and are called, angels.

In whom shall I put my faith, Lord? In whom but You? You are the truth which does not deceive and cannot be deceived. Every man, on the other hand, is a liar, weak, unstable, and likely to err, especially in words, so that one ought not to be too quick to believe even that which seems, on the face of it, to sound true. How wise was Your warning to beware of men; that a man's enemies are those of his own household; that we should not believe if anyone says: "Behold he is here, or behold he is there."

I have been taught to my own cost, and I hope it has given me greater caution, not greater folly. "Beware," they say, "beware and keep to yourself what I tell you!" Then while I keep silent, believing that the matter is secret, he who asks me to be silent cannot remain silent himself, but immediately betrays both me and himself, and goes his way. From tales of this kind and from such careless men protect me, O Lord, lest I fall into their hands and into their ways. Put in my mouth words that are true and steadfast and keep far from me the crafty tongue, because what I am not willing to suffer I ought by all means to shun.

Oh, how good and how peaceful it is to be silent about others, not to believe without discrimination all that is said, not easily to report it further, to reveal oneself to few, always to seek You as the discerner of hearts, and not to be blown away by every wind of words, but to wish that all things, within and beyond us, be done according to the pleasure of Thy will.

How conducive it is for the keeping of heavenly grace to fly the gaze of men, not to seek abroad things which seem to cause admiration, but to follow with utmost diligence those which give fervor and amendment of life! How many have been harmed by having their virtue known and praised too hastily! And how truly profitable it has been when grace remained hidden during this frail life, which is all temptation and warfare!

The Forty-Sixth Chapter

Trust in God Against Slander

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

MY CHILD, stand firm and trust in Me. For what are words but words? They fly through the air but hurt not a stone. If you are guilty, consider how you would gladly amend. If you are not conscious of any fault, think that you wish to bear this for the sake of God. It is little enough for you occasionally to endure words, since you are not yet strong enough to bear hard blows.

And why do such small matters pierce you to the heart, unless because you are still carnal and pay more heed to men than you ought? You do not wish to be reproved for your faults and you seek shelter in excuses because you are afraid of being despised. But look into yourself more thoroughly and you will learn that the world is still alive in you, in a vain desire to please men. For when you shrink from being abased and confounded for your failings, it is plain indeed that you are not truly humble or truly dead to the world, and that the world is not crucified in you.

Listen to My word, and you will not value ten thousand words of men. Behold, if every malicious thing that could possibly be invented were uttered against you, what harm could it do if you ignored it all and gave it no more thought than you would a blade of grass? Could it so much as pluck one hair from your head?

He who does not keep his heart within him, and who does not have God before his eyes is easily moved by a word of disparagement. He who trusts in Me, on the other hand, and who has no desire to stand by his own judgment, will be free from the fear of men. For I am the judge and discerner of all secrets. I know how all things happen. I know who causes injury and who suffers it. From Me that word proceeded, and with My permission it happened, that out of many hearts thoughts may be revealed. I shall judge the guilty and the innocent; but I have wished beforehand to try them both by secret judgment.

The testimony of man is often deceiving, but My judgment is true—it will stand and not be overthrown. It is hidden from many and made known to but a few. Yet it is never mistaken and cannot be mistaken even though it does not seem right in the eyes of the unwise.

To Me, therefore, you ought to come in every decision, not depending on your own judgment. For the just man will not be disturbed, no matter what may befall him from God. Even if an unjust charge be made against him he will not be much troubled. Neither will he exult vainly if through others he is justly acquitted. He considers that it is I Who search the hearts and inmost thoughts of men, that I do not judge according to the face of things or human appearances. For what the judgment of men considers praiseworthy is often worthy of blame in My sight.

THE DISCIPLE

O Lord God, just Judge, strong and patient, You Who know the weakness and depravity of men, be my strength and all my confidence, for my own conscience is not sufficient for me. You know what I do not know, and, therefore, I ought to humble myself whenever I am accused and bear it meekly. Forgive me, then, in Your mercy for my every failure in this regard, and give me once more the grace of greater endurance. Better to me is Your abundant mercy in obtaining pardon than the justice which I imagine in defending the secrets of my conscience. And though I am not conscious to myself of any fault, yet I cannot thereby justify myself, because without Your mercy no man living will be justified in Your sight.

The Forty-Seventh Chapter

Every Trial Must Be Borne for the Sake of Eternal Life

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

MY CHILD, do not let the labors which you have taken up for My sake break you, and do not let troubles, from whatever source, cast you down; but in everything let My promise strengthen and console you. I am able to reward you beyond all means and measure.

You will not labor here long, nor will you always be oppressed by sorrows. Wait a little while and you will see a speedy end of evils. The hour will come when all labor and trouble shall be no more. All that passes away with time is trivial.

What you do, do well. Work faithfully in My vineyard. I will be your reward. Write, read, sing, mourn, keep silence, pray, and bear hardships like a man. Eternal life is worth all these and greater battles. Peace will come on a day which is known to the Lord, and then there shall be no day or night as at present but perpetual light, infinite brightness, lasting peace, and safe repose. Then you will not say: “Who shall deliver me from the body of this death?” nor will you cry: “Woe is me, because my sojourn is prolonged.” For then death will be banished, and there will be health unfailing. There will be no anxiety then, but blessed joy and sweet, noble companionship.

If you could see the everlasting crowns of the saints in heaven, and the great glory wherein they now rejoice—they who were once considered contemptible in this world and, as it were, unworthy of life itself—you would certainly humble yourself at once to the very earth, and seek to be subject to all rather than to command even one. Nor would you desire the pleasant days of this life, but rather be glad to suffer for God, considering it your greatest gain to be counted as nothing among men.

Oh, if these things appealed to you and penetrated deeply into your heart, how could you dare to complain even once? Ought not all trials be borne for the sake of everlasting life? In truth, the loss or gain of God's kingdom is no small matter.

Lift up your countenance to heaven, then. Behold Me, and with Me all My saints. They had great trials in this life, but now they rejoice. They are consoled. Now they are safe and at rest. And they shall abide with Me for all eternity in the kingdom of My Father.

The Forty-Eighth Chapter

The Day of Eternity and the Distresses of This Life

THE DISCIPLE

O MOST happy mansion of the city above! O most bright day of eternity, which night does not darken, but which the highest truth ever enlightens! O day, ever joyful and ever secure, which never changes its state to the opposite! Oh, that this day shine forth, that all these temporal things come to an end! It envelops the saints all resplendent with heavenly brightness, but it appears far off as through a glass to us wanderers on the earth. The citizens of heaven know how joyful that day is, but the exiled sons of Eve mourn that this one is bitter and tedious.

The days of this life are short and evil, full of grief and distress. Here man is defiled by many sins, ensnared in many passions, enslaved by many fears, and burdened with many cares. He is distracted by many curiosities and entangled in many vanities, surrounded by many errors and worn by many labors, oppressed by temptations, weakened by pleasures, and tortured by want.

Oh, when will these evils end? When shall I be freed from the miserable slavery of vice? When, Lord, shall I think of You alone? When shall I fully rejoice in You? When shall I be without hindrance, in true liberty, free from every grievance of mind and body? When will there be solid peace, undisturbed and secure, inward peace and outward peace, peace secured on every side? O good Jesus, when shall I stand to gaze upon You? When shall I contemplate the glory of Your kingdom? When will You be all in all to me? Oh, when shall I be with You in that kingdom of Yours, which You have prepared for Your beloved from all eternity?

I am left poor and exiled in a hostile land, where every day sees wars and very great misfortunes. Console my banishment, assuage my sorrow. My whole desire is for You. Whatever solace this world offers is a burden to me.

I desire to enjoy You intimately, but I cannot attain to it. I wish to cling fast to heavenly things, but temporal affairs and unmortified passions bear me down. I wish in mind to be above all things, but I am forced by the flesh to be unwillingly subject to them. Thus, I fight with myself, unhappy that I am, and am become a burden to myself, while my spirit seeks to rise upward and my flesh to sink downward. Oh, what inward suffering I undergo when I consider heavenly things; when I pray, a multitude of carnal thoughts rush upon me!

O my God, do not remove Yourself far from me, and depart not in anger from Your servant. Dart forth Your lightning and disperse them; send forth Your arrows and let the phantoms of the enemy be put to flight. Draw my senses toward You and make me forget all worldly things. Grant me the grace to cast away quickly all vicious imaginings and to scorn them. Aid me, O heavenly Truth, that no vanity may move me. Come, heavenly Sweetness, and let all impurity fly from before Your face.

Pardon me also, and deal mercifully with me, as often as I think of anything besides You in prayer. For I confess truly that I am accustomed to be very much distracted. Very often I am not where bodily I stand or sit; rather, I am where my thoughts carry me. Where my thoughts are, there am I; and frequently my thoughts are where my love is. That which naturally delights, or is by habit pleasing, comes to me quickly. Hence You Who are Truth itself, have plainly said: "For where your treasure is, there is your heart also." If I love heaven, I think willingly of heavenly things. If I love the world, I rejoice at the happiness of the world and grieve at its troubles. If I love the flesh, I often imagine things that are carnal. If I love the spirit, I delight in thinking of spiritual matters. For whatever I love, I am willing to speak and hear about.

Blessed is the man who for Your sake, O Lord, dismisses all creatures, does violence to nature, crucifies the desires of the flesh in fervor of spirit, so that with serene conscience he can offer You a pure prayer and, having excluded all earthly things inwardly and outwardly, becomes worthy to enter into the heavenly choirs.

The Forty-Ninth Chapter

The Desire of Eternal Life; the Great Rewards Promised to Those Who Struggle

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

MY CHILD, when you feel the desire for everlasting happiness poured out upon you from above, and when you long to depart out of the tabernacle of the body that you may contemplate My glory without threat of change, open wide your heart and receive this holy inspiration with all eagerness. Give deepest thanks to the heavenly Goodness which deals with you so understandingly, visits you so mercifully, stirs you so fervently, and sustains you so powerfully lest under your own weight you sink down to earthly things. For you obtain this not by your own thought or effort, but simply by the condescension of heavenly grace and divine regard. And the purpose of it is that you may advance in virtue and in greater humility, that you may prepare yourself for future trials, that you may strive to cling to Me with all the affection of your heart, and may serve Me with a fervent will.

My child, often, when the fire is burning the flame does not ascend without smoke. Likewise, the desires of some burn toward heavenly things, and yet they are not free from temptations of carnal affection. Therefore, it is not altogether for the pure honor of God that they act when they petition Him so earnestly. Such, too, is often your desire which you profess to be so strong. For that which is alloyed with self-interest is not pure and perfect.

Ask, therefore, not for what is pleasing and convenient to yourself, but for what is acceptable to Me and is for My honor, because if you judge rightly, you ought to prefer and follow My will, not your own desire or whatever things you wish.

I know your longings and I have heard your frequent sighs. Already you wish to be in the liberty of the glory of the sons of God. Already you desire the delights of the eternal home, the heavenly land that is full of joy. But that hour is not yet come. There remains yet another hour, a time of war, of labor, and of trial. You long to be filled with the highest good, but you cannot attain it now. I am that sovereign Good. Await Me, until the kingdom of God shall come.

You must still be tried on earth, and exercised in many things. Consolation will sometimes be given you, but the complete fullness of it is not granted. Take courage, therefore, and be strong both to do and to suffer what is contrary to nature.

You must put on the new man. You must be changed into another man. You must often do the things you do not wish to do and forego those you do wish. What pleases others will succeed; what pleases you will not. The words of others will be heard; what you say will be accounted as nothing. Others will ask and receive; you will ask and not receive. Others will gain great fame among men; about you nothing will be said. To others the doing of this or that will be entrusted; you will be judged useless. At all this nature will sometimes be sad, and it will be a great thing if you bear this sadness in silence. For in these and many similar ways the faithful servant of the Lord is wont to be tried, to see how far he can deny himself and break himself in all things.

There is scarcely anything in which you so need to die to self as in seeing and suffering things that are against your will, especially when things that are commanded seem inconvenient or useless. Then, because you are under authority, and dare not resist the higher power, it seems hard to submit to the will of another and give up your own opinion entirely.

But consider, my child, the fruit of these labors, how soon they will end and how greatly they will be rewarded, and you will not be saddened by them, but your patience will receive the strongest consolation. For instead of the little will that you now readily give up, you shall always have your will in heaven. There, indeed, you shall find all that you could desire. There you shall have possession of every good without fear of losing it. There shall your will be forever one with Mine. It shall desire nothing outside of Me and nothing for itself. There no one shall oppose you, no one shall complain of you, no one hinder you, and nothing stand in your way. All that you desire will be present there, replenishing your affection and satisfying it to the full. There I shall render you glory for the reproach you have suffered here; for your sorrow I shall give you a garment of praise, and for the lowest place a seat of power forever. There the fruit of glory will appear, the labor of penance rejoice, and humble subjection be gloriously crowned.

Bow humbly, therefore, under the will of all, and do not heed who said this or commanded that. But let it be your special care when something is commanded, or even hinted at, whether by a superior or an inferior or an equal, that you take it in good part and try honestly to perform it. Let one person seek one thing and another something else. Let one glory in this, another in that, and both be praised a thousand times over. But as for you, rejoice neither in one or the other, but only in contempt of yourself and in My pleasure and honor. Let this be your wish: That whether in life or in death God may be glorified in you.

The Fiftieth Chapter

How a Desolate Person Ought to Commit Himself Into the Hands of God

THE DISCIPLE

LORD God, Holy Father, may You be blessed now and in eternity. For as You will, so is it done; and what You do is good. Let Your servant rejoice in You—not in himself or in any other, for You alone are true joy. You are my hope and my crown. You, O Lord, are my joy and my honor.

What does Your servant possess that he has not received from You, and that without any merit of his own? Yours are all the things which You have given, all the things which You have made.

I am poor and in labors since my youth, and my soul is sorrowful sometimes even to the point of tears. At times, also, my spirit is troubled because of impending sufferings. I long for the joy of peace. Earnestly I beg for the peace of Your children who are fed by You in the light of consolation. If You give peace, if You infuse holy joy, the soul of Your servant shall be filled with holy song and be devout in praising You. But if You withdraw Yourself, as You so very often do, he will not be able to follow the way of Your commandments, but will rather be obliged to strike his breast and bend the knee, because his today is different from yesterday and the day before when Your light shone upon his head and he was protected in the shadow of Your wings from the temptations rushing upon him.

Just Father, ever to be praised, the hour is come for Your servant to be tried. Beloved Father, it is right that in this hour Your servant should suffer something for You. O Father, forever to be honored, the hour which You knew from all eternity is at hand, when for a short time Your servant should be outwardly oppressed, but inwardly should ever live with You.

Let him be a little slighted, let him be humbled, let him fail in the sight of men, let him be afflicted with sufferings and pains, so that he may rise again with You in the dawn of the new light and be glorified in heaven.

Holy Father, You have so appointed and wished it. What has happened is what You commanded. For this is a favor to Your friend, to suffer and be troubled in the world for Your love, no matter how often and by whom You permit it to happen to him.

Nothing happens in the world without Your design and providence, and without cause. It is well for me, O Lord, that You have humbled me, that I may learn the justice of Your judgments and cast away all presumption and haughtiness of heart. It is profitable for me that shame has covered my face that I may look to You rather than to men for consolation. Hereby I have learned also to fear Your inscrutable judgment falling alike upon the just and unjust yet not without equity and justice.

Thanks to You that You have not spared me evils but have bruised me with bitter blows, inflicting sorrows, sending distress without and within. Under heaven there is none to console me except You, my Lord God, the heavenly Physician of souls, Who wound and heal, Who cast down to hell and raise up again. Your discipline is upon me and Your very rod shall instruct me.

Behold, beloved Father, I am in Your hands. I bow myself under Your correcting chastisement. Strike my back and my neck, that I may bend my crookedness to Your will. Make of me a pious and humble follower, as in Your goodness You are wont to do, that I may walk according to Your every nod. Myself and all that is mine I commit to You to be corrected, for it is better to be punished here than hereafter.

You know all things without exception, and nothing in man's conscience is hidden from You. Coming events You know before they happen, and there is no need for anyone to teach or admonish You of what is being done on earth. You know what will promote my progress, and how much tribulation will serve to cleanse away the rust of vice. Deal with me according to Your good pleasure and do not despise my sinful life, which is known to none so well or so clearly as to You alone.

Grant me, O Lord, the grace to know what should be known, to praise what is most pleasing to You, to esteem that which appears most precious to You, and to abhor what is unclean in Your sight.

Do not allow me to judge according to the light of my bodily eyes, nor to give sentence according to the hearing of ignorant men's ears. But let me distinguish with true judgment between things visible and spiritual, and always seek above all things Your good pleasure. The senses of men often err in their judgments, and the lovers of this world also err in loving only visible things. How is a man the better for being thought greater by men? The deceiver deceives the deceitful, the vain man deceives the vain, the blind deceives the blind, the weak deceives the weak as often as he extols them, and in truth his foolish praise shames them the more. For, as the humble St. Francis says, whatever anyone is in Your sight, that he is and nothing more.

The Fifty-First Chapter

When We Cannot Attain to the Highest, We Must Practice the Humble Works

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

MY CHILD, you cannot always continue in the more fervent desire of virtue, or remain in the higher stage of contemplation, but because of humanity's sin you must sometimes descend to lower things and bear the burden of this corruptible life, albeit unwillingly and wearily. As long as you wear a mortal body you will suffer weariness and heaviness of heart. You ought, therefore, to bewail in the flesh the burden of the flesh which keeps you from giving yourself unceasingly to spiritual exercises and divine contemplation.

In such condition, it is well for you to apply yourself to humble, outward works and to refresh yourself in good deeds, to await with unshaken confidence My heavenly visitation, patiently to bear your exile and dryness of mind until you are again visited by Me and freed of all anxieties. For I will cause you to forget your labors and to enjoy inward quiet. I will spread before you the open fields of the Scriptures, so that with an open heart you may begin to advance in the way of My commandments. And you will say: the sufferings of this time are not worthy to be compared with the future glory which shall be revealed to us.

The Fifty-Second Chapter

A Man Ought Not to Consider Himself Worthy of Consolation, But Rather Deserving of Chastisement

THE DISCIPLE

LORD, I am not worthy of Your consolation or of any spiritual visitation. Therefore, You treat me justly when You leave me poor and desolate. For though I could shed a sea of tears, yet I should not be worthy of Your consolation. Hence, I deserve only to be scourged and punished because I have offended You often and grievously, and have sinned greatly in many things. In all justice, therefore, I am not worthy of any consolation.

But You, O gracious and merciful God, Who do not will that Your works should perish, deign to console Your servant beyond all his merit and above human measure, to show the riches of Your goodness toward the vessels of mercy. For Your consolations are not like the words of men.

What have I done, Lord, that You should confer on me any heavenly comfort? I remember that I have done nothing good, but that I have always been prone to sin and slow to amend. That is true. I cannot deny it. If I said otherwise You would stand against me, and there would be no one to defend me. What have I deserved for my sins except hell and everlasting fire?

In truth, I confess that I am deserving of all scorn and contempt. Neither is it fitting that I should be remembered among Your devoted servants. And although it is hard for me to hear this, yet for truth's sake I will allege my sins against myself, so that I may more easily deserve to beg Your mercy. What shall I say, guilty as I am and full of all confusion? My tongue can say nothing but this alone: "I have sinned, O Lord, I have sinned; have mercy on me and pardon me. Suffer me a little that I may pour out my grief, before I go to that dark land that is covered with the shadow of death."

What do you especially demand of a guilty and wretched sinner, except that he be contrite and humble himself for his sins? In true sorrow and humility of heart hope of forgiveness is born, the troubled conscience is reconciled, grace is found, man is preserved from the wrath to come, and God and the penitent meet with a holy kiss.

To You, O Lord, humble sorrow for sins is an acceptable sacrifice, a sacrifice far sweeter than the perfume of incense. This is also the pleasing ointment which You would have poured upon Your sacred feet, for a contrite and humble heart You have never despised. Here is a place of refuge from the force of the enemy's anger. Here is amended and washed away whatever defilement has been contracted elsewhere.

The Fifty-Third Chapter

God's Grace Is Not Given to the Earthly Minded

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

MY CHILD, my grace is precious. It does not allow itself to be mixed with external things or with earthly consolations. Cast away all obstacles to grace, therefore, if you wish to receive its infusion.

Seek to retire within yourself. Love to dwell alone with yourself. Seek no man's conversation, but rather pour forth devout prayer to God that you may keep your mind contrite and your heart pure.

Consider the whole world as nothing. Prefer attendance upon God to all outward occupation, for you cannot attend upon Me and at the same time take delight in external things. You must remove yourself from acquaintances and from dear friends, and keep your mind free of all temporal consolation. Thus the blessed Apostle St. Peter begs the faithful of Christ to keep themselves as strangers and pilgrims in the world.⁴¹

What great confidence at the hour of death shall be his who is not attached to this world by any affection. But the sickly soul does not know what it is to have a heart thus separated from all things, nor does the natural man know the liberty of the spiritual man. Yet, if he truly wishes to be spiritual, he must renounce both strangers and friends, and must beware of no one more than himself.

If you completely conquer yourself, you will more easily subdue all other things. The perfect victory is to triumph over self. For he who holds himself in such subjection that sensuality obeys reason and reason obeys Me in all matters, is truly his own conqueror and master of the world.

Now, if you wish to climb to this high position you must begin like a man, and lay the ax to the root, in order to tear out and destroy any hidden unruly love of self or of earthly goods. From this vice of too much self-love comes almost every other vice that must be uprooted. And when this evil is vanquished, and brought under control, great peace and quiet will follow at once.

But because few labor to die entirely to self, or tend completely away from self, therefore they remain entangled in self, and cannot be lifted in spirit above themselves. But he who desires to walk freely with Me must mortify all his low and inordinate affections, and must not cling with selfish love or desire to any creature.

The Fifty-Fourth Chapter

The Different Motions of Nature and Grace

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

MY CHILD, pay careful attention to the movements of nature and of grace, for they move in very contrary and subtle ways, and can scarcely be distinguished by anyone except a man who is spiritual and inwardly enlightened. All men, indeed, desire what is good, and strive for what is good in their words and deeds. For this reason the appearance of good deceives many.

Nature is crafty and attracts many, ensnaring and deceiving them while ever seeking itself. But grace walks in simplicity, turns away from all appearance of evil, offers no deceits, and does all purely for God in whom she rests as her last end.

Nature is not willing to die, or to be kept down, or to be overcome. Nor will it subdue itself or be made subject. Grace, on the contrary, strives for mortification of self. She resists sensuality, seeks to be in subjection, longs to be conquered, has no wish to use her own liberty, loves to be held under discipline, and does not desire to rule over anyone, but wishes rather to live, to stand, and to be always under God for Whose sake she is willing to bow humbly to every human creature.

Nature works for its own interest and looks to the profit it can reap from another. Grace does not consider what is useful and advantageous to herself, but rather what is profitable to many. Nature likes to receive honor and reverence, but grace faithfully attributes all honor and glory to God. Nature fears shame and contempt, but grace is happy to suffer reproach for the name of Jesus. Nature loves ease and physical rest. Grace, however, cannot bear to be idle and embraces labor willingly. Nature seeks to possess what is rare and beautiful, abhorring things that are cheap and coarse. Grace, on the contrary, delights in simple, humble things, not despising those that are rough, nor refusing to be clothed in old garments.

Nature has regard for temporal wealth and rejoices in earthly gains. It is sad over a loss and irritated by a slight, injurious word. But grace looks to eternal things and does not cling to those which are temporal, being neither disturbed at loss nor angered by hard words, because she has placed her treasure and joy in heaven where nothing is lost.

Nature is covetous, and receives more willingly than it gives. It loves to have its own private possessions. Grace, however, is kind and openhearted. Grace shuns private interest, is contented with little, and judges it more blessed to give than to receive.

Nature is inclined toward creatures, toward its own flesh, toward vanities, and toward running about. But grace draws near to God and to virtue, renounces creatures, hates the desires of the flesh, restrains her wanderings and blushes at being seen in public.

Nature likes to have some external comfort in which it can take sensual delight, but grace seeks consolation only in God, to find her delight in the highest Good, above all visible things.

Nature does everything for its own gain and interest. It can do nothing without pay and hopes for its good deeds to receive their equal or better, or else praise and favor. It is very desirous of having its deeds and gifts highly regarded. Grace, however, seeks nothing temporal, nor does she ask any recompense but God alone. Of temporal necessities she asks no more than will serve to obtain eternity.

Nature rejoices in many friends and kinsfolk, glories in noble position and birth, fawns on the powerful, flatters the rich, and applauds those who are like itself. But grace loves even her enemies and is not puffed up at having many friends. She does not think highly of either position or birth unless there is also virtue there. She favors the poor in preference to the rich. She sympathizes with the innocent rather than with the powerful. She rejoices with the true man rather than with the deceitful, and is always exhorting the good to strive for better gifts, to become like the Son of God by practicing the virtues.

Nature is quick to complain of need and trouble; grace is stanch in suffering want.

Nature turns all things back to self. It fights and argues for self. Grace brings all things back to God in Whom they have their source. To herself she ascribes no good, nor is she arrogant or presumptuous. She is not contentious.

She does not prefer her own opinion to the opinion of others, but in every matter of sense and thought submits herself to eternal wisdom and the divine judgment.

Nature has a relish for knowing secrets and hearing news. It wishes to appear abroad and to have many sense experiences. It wishes to be known and to do things for which it will be praised and admired. But grace does not care to hear news or curious matters, because all this arises from the old corruption of man, since there is nothing new, nothing lasting on earth. Grace teaches, therefore, restraint of the senses, avoidance of vain self-satisfaction and show, the humble hiding of deeds worthy of praise and admiration, and the seeking in every thing and in every knowledge the fruit of usefulness, the praise and honor of God. She will not have herself or hers exalted, but desires that God Who bestows all simply out of love should be blessed in His gifts.

This grace is a supernatural light, a certain special gift of God, the proper mark of the elect and the pledge of everlasting salvation. It raises man up from earthly things to love the things of heaven. It makes a spiritual man of a carnal one.

The more, then, nature is held in check and conquered, the more grace is given. Every day the interior man is reformed by new visitations according to the image of God.

The Fifty-Fifth Chapter

The Corruption of Nature and the Efficacy of Divine Grace

THE DISCIPLE

O LORD, my God, Who created me to Your own image and likeness, grant me this grace which You have shown to be so great and necessary for salvation, that I may overcome my very evil nature that is drawing me to sin and perdition. For I feel in my flesh the law of sin contradicting the law of my mind and leading me captive to serve sensuality in many things. I cannot resist the passions thereof unless Your most holy grace warmly infused into my heart assist me.

There is need of Your grace, and of great grace, in order to overcome a nature prone to evil from youth. For through the first man, Adam, nature is fallen and weakened by sin, and the punishment of that stain has fallen upon all mankind. Thus nature itself, which You created good and right, is considered a symbol of vice and the weakness of corrupted nature, because when left to itself it tends toward evil and to baser things. The little strength remaining in it is like a spark hidden in ashes. That strength is natural reason which, surrounded by thick darkness, still has the power of judging good and evil, of seeing the difference between true and false, though it is not able to fulfill all that it approves and does not enjoy the full light of truth or soundness of affection.

Hence it is, my God, that according to the inward man I delight in Your law, knowing that Your command is good, just, and holy, and that it proves the necessity of shunning all evil and sin. But in the flesh I keep the law of sin, obeying sensuality rather than reason. Hence, also, it is that the will to good is present in me, but how to accomplish it I know not. Hence, too, I often propose many good things, but because the grace to help my weakness is lacking, I recoil and give up at the slightest resistance. Thus it is that I know the way of perfection and see clearly enough how I ought to act, but because I am pressed down by the weight of my own corruption I do not rise to more perfect things.

How extremely necessary to me, O Lord, Your grace is to begin any good deed, to carry it on and bring it to completion! For without grace I can do nothing, but with its strength I can do all things in You. O Grace truly heavenly, without which our merits are nothing and no gifts of nature are to be esteemed!

Before You, O Lord, no arts or riches, no beauty or strength, no wit or intelligence avail without grace. For the gifts of nature are common to good and bad alike, but the peculiar gift of Your elect is grace or love, and those who are signed with it are held worthy of everlasting life. So excellent is this grace that without it no gift of prophecy or of miracles, no meditation be it ever so exalted, can be considered anything. Not even faith or hope or other virtues are acceptable to You without charity and grace.

O most blessed grace, which makes the poor in spirit rich in virtues, which renders him who is rich in many good things humble of heart, come, descend upon me, fill me quickly with your consolation lest my soul faint with weariness and dryness of mind.

Let me find grace in Your sight, I beg, Lord, for Your grace is enough for me, even though I obtain none of the things which nature desires. If I am tempted and afflicted with many tribulations, I will fear no evils while Your grace is with me. This is my strength. This will give me counsel and help. This is more powerful than all my enemies and wiser than all the wise. This is the mistress of truth, the teacher of discipline, the light of the heart, the consoler in anguish, the banisher of sorrow, the expeller of fear, the nourisher of devotion, the producer of tears. What am I without grace, but dead wood, a useless branch, fit only to be cast away?

Let Your grace, therefore, go before me and follow me, O Lord, and make me always intent upon good works, through Jesus Christ, Your Son.

The Fifty-Sixth Chapter

We Ought to Deny Ourselves and Imitate Christ Through Bearing the Cross

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

MY CHILD, the more you depart from yourself, the more you will be able to enter into Me. As the giving up of exterior things brings interior peace, so the forsaking of self unites you to God. I will have you learn perfect surrender to My will, without contradiction or complaint.

Follow Me. I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life. Without the Way, there is no going. Without the Truth, there is no knowing. Without the Life, there is no living. I am the Way which you must follow, the Truth which you must believe, the Life for which you must hope. I am the inviolable Way, the infallible Truth, the unending Life. I am the Way that is straight, the supreme Truth, the Life that is true, the blessed, the uncreated Life. If you abide in My Way you shall know the Truth, and the Truth shall make you free, and you shall attain life everlasting.

If you wish to enter into life, keep My commandments. If you will know the truth, believe in Me. If you will be perfect, sell all. If you will be My disciple, deny yourself. If you will possess the blessed life, despise this present life. If you will be exalted in heaven, humble yourself on earth. If you wish to reign with Me, carry the Cross with Me. For only the servants of the Cross find the life of blessedness and of true light.

THE DISCIPLE

Lord Jesus, because Your way is narrow and despised by the world, grant that I may despise the world and imitate You. For the servant is not greater than his Lord, nor The Disciple above the Master. Let Your servant be trained in Your life, for there is my salvation and true holiness. Whatever else I read or hear does not fully refresh or delight me.

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

My child, now that you know these things and have read them all, happy will you be if you do them. He who has My commandments and keeps them, he it is that loves Me. And I will love him and will show Myself to him, and will bring it about that he will sit down with Me in My Father's Kingdom.

THE DISCIPLE

Lord Jesus, as You have said, so be it, and what You have promised, let it be my lot to win. I have received the cross, from Your hand I have received it. I will carry it, carry it even unto death as You have laid it upon me. Truly, the life of a good religious man is a cross, but it leads to paradise. We have begun—we may not go back, nor may we leave off.

Take courage, brethren, let us go forward together and Jesus will be with us. For Jesus' sake we have taken this cross. For Jesus' sake let us persevere with it. He will be our help as He is also our leader and guide. Behold, our King goes before us and will fight for us. Let us follow like men. Let no man fear any terrors. Let us be prepared to meet death valiantly in battle. Let us not suffer our glory to be blemished by fleeing from the Cross.

The Fifty-Seventh Chapter

A Man Should Not Be Too Downcast When He Falls Into Defects

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

MY CHILD, patience and humility in adversity are more pleasing to Me than much consolation and devotion when things are going well.

Why are you saddened by some little thing said against you? Even if it had been more you ought not to have been affected. But now let it pass. It is not the first, nor is it anything new, and if you live long it will not be the last.

You are manly enough so long as you meet no opposition. You give good advice to others, and you know how to strengthen them with words, but when unexpected tribulation comes to your door, you fail both in counsel and in strength. Consider your great weakness, then, which you experience so often in small matters. Yet when these and like trials happen, they happen for your good.

Put it out of your heart as best you know how, and if it has touched you, still do not let it cast you down or confuse you for long. Bear it patiently at least, if you cannot bear it cheerfully. Even though you bear it unwillingly, and are indignant at it, restrain yourself and let no ill-ordered words pass your lips at which the weak might be scandalized. The storm that is now aroused will soon be quieted and your inward grief will be sweetened by returning grace. “I yet live,” says the Lord, “ready to help you and to console you more and more, if you trust in Me and call devoutly upon Me.”

Remain tranquil and prepare to bear still greater trials. All is not lost even though you be troubled oftener or tempted more grievously. You are a man, not God. You are flesh, not an angel. How can you possibly expect to remain always in the same state of virtue when the angels in heaven and the first man in paradise failed to do so? I am He Who rescues the afflicted and brings to My divinity those who know their own weakness.

THE DISCIPLE

Blessed be Your words, O Lord, sweeter to my mouth than honey and the honeycomb. What would I do in such great trials and anxieties, if You did not strengthen me with Your holy words? If I may but attain to the haven of salvation, what does it matter what or how much I suffer? Grant me a good end. Grant me a happy passage out of this world. Remember me, my God, and lead me by the right way into Your kingdom.

The Fifty-Eighth Chapter

High Matters and the Hidden Judgments of God Are Not to Be Scrutinized

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

MY CHILD, beware of discussing high matters and God's hidden judgments—why this person is so forsaken and why that one is favored with so great a grace, or why one man is so afflicted and another so highly exalted. Such things are beyond all human understanding and no reason or disputation can fathom the judgments of God.

When the enemy puts such suggestions in your mind, therefore, or when some curious persons raise questions about them, answer with the prophet: “Thou art just, O Lord, and righteous are Thy judgments”;⁴² and this: “The judgments of the Lord are true and wholly righteous.”⁴³ My judgments are to be feared, not discussed, because they are incomprehensible to the understanding of men.

In like manner, do not inquire or dispute about the merits of the saints, as to which is more holy, or which shall be greater in the kingdom of heaven. Such things often breed strife and useless contentions. They nourish pride and vainglory, whence arise envy and quarrels, when one proudly tries to exalt one saint and the other another. A desire to know and pry into such matters brings forth no fruit. On the contrary, it displeases the saints, because I am the God, not of dissension, but of peace—of that peace which consists in true humility rather than in self-exaltation.

Some are drawn by the ardor of their love with greater affection to these saints or to those, but this affection is human and not divine. I am He who made all the saints. I gave them grace: I brought them to glory. I know the merits of each of them. I came before them in the blessings of My sweetness. I knew My beloved ones before the ages. I chose them out of the world—they did not choose Me. I called them by grace, I drew them on by mercy. I led them safely through various temptations. I poured into them glorious consolations. I gave them perseverance and I crowned their patience. I know the first and the last. I embrace them all with love inestimable. I am to be praised in all My saints. I am to be blessed above all things, and honored in each of those whom I have exalted and predestined so gloriously without any previous merits of their own.

He who despises one of the least of mine, therefore, does no honor to the greatest, for both the small and the great I made. And he who disparages one of the saints disparages Me also and all others in the kingdom of heaven. They are all one through the bond of charity. They have the same thought and the same will, and they mutually love one another; but, what is a much greater thing, they love Me more than themselves or their own merits. Rapt above themselves, and drawn beyond love of self, they are entirely absorbed in love of Me, in Whom they rest. There is nothing that can draw them away or depress them, for they who are filled with eternal truth burn with the fire of unquenchable love.

Therefore, let carnal and sensual men, who know only how to love their own selfish joys, forbear to dispute about the state of God's saints. Such men take away and add according to their own inclinations and not as it pleases the Eternal Truth. In many this is sheer ignorance, especially in those who are but little enlightened and can rarely love anyone with a purely spiritual love. They are still strongly drawn by natural affection and human friendship to one person or another, and on their behavior in such things here below are based their imaginings of heavenly things. But there is an incomparable distance between the things which the imperfect imagine and those which enlightened men contemplate through revelation from above.

Be careful, then, My child, of treating matters beyond your knowledge out of curiosity. Let it rather be your business and aim to be found, even though the least, in the kingdom of God. For though one were to know who is more holy than another, or who is greater in the kingdom of heaven, of what value would this knowledge be to him unless out of it he should humble himself before Me and should rise up in greater praise of My name?

The man who thinks of the greatness of his own sins and the littleness of his virtues, and of the distance between himself and the perfection of the saints, acts much more acceptably to God than the one who argues about who is greater or who is less. It is better to invoke the saints with devout prayers and tears, and with a humble mind to beg their glorious aid, than to search with vain inquisitiveness into their secrets.

The saints are well and perfectly contented if men know how to content themselves and cease their useless discussions. They do not glory in their own merits, for they attribute no good to themselves but all to Me, because out of My infinite charity I gave all to them. They are filled with such love of God and with such overflowing joy, that no glory is wanting to them and they can lack no happiness. All the saints are so much higher in glory as they are more humble in themselves; nearer to Me, and more beloved by Me. Therefore, you find it written that they cast their crowns before God, and fell down upon their faces before the Lamb, and adored Him Who lives forever.

Many ask who is the greater in the kingdom of heaven when they do not know whether they themselves shall be worthy of being numbered among its least. It is a great thing to be even the least in heaven where all are great because all shall be called, and shall be, the children of God. The least shall be as a thousand, and the sinner of a hundred years shall die. For when The Disciples asked who should be greater in the kingdom of heaven they heard this response: “Unless you be converted and become as little children, you shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven. Therefore, whosoever shall humble himself as this little child, he is the greater in the kingdom of heaven.”⁴⁴

Woe to those, therefore, who disdain to humble themselves willingly with the little children, for the low gate of the heavenly kingdom will not permit them to enter. Woe also to the rich who have their consolations here, for when the poor enter into God’s kingdom, they will stand outside lamenting. Rejoice, you humble, and exult, you poor, for the kingdom of God is yours, if only you walk in the truth.

The Fifty-Ninth Chapter

All Hope and Trust Are to Be Fixed In God Alone

THE DISCIPLE

WHAT, Lord, is the trust which I have in this life, or what is my greatest comfort among all the things that appear under heaven? Is it not You, O Lord, my God, Whose mercies are without number? Where have I ever fared well but for You? Or how could things go badly when You were present? I had rather be poor for Your sake than rich without You. I prefer rather to wander on the earth with You than to possess heaven without You. Where You are there is heaven, and where You are not are death and hell. You are my desire and therefore I must cry after You and sigh and pray. In none can I fully trust to help me in my necessities, but in You alone, my God. You are my hope. You are my confidence. You are my consoler, most faithful in every need.

All seek their own interests. You, however, place my salvation and my profit first, and turn all things to my good. Even though exposing me to various temptations and hardships, You Who are accustomed to prove Your loved ones in a thousand ways, order all this for my good. You ought not to be loved or praised less in this trial than if You had filled me with heavenly consolations.

In You, therefore, O Lord God, I place all my hope and my refuge. On You I cast all my troubles and anguish, because whatever I have outside of You I find to be weak and unstable. It will not serve me to have many friends, nor will powerful helpers be able to assist me, nor prudent advisers to give useful answers, nor the books of learned men to console, nor any precious substance to win my freedom, nor any place, secret and beautiful though it be, to shelter me, if You Yourself do not assist, comfort, console, instruct, and guard me. For all things which seem to be for our peace and happiness are nothing when You are absent, and truly confer no happiness.

You, indeed, are the fountain of all good, the height of life, the depth of all that can be spoken. To trust in You above all things is the strongest comfort of Your servants.

My God, the Father of mercies, to You I look, in You I trust. Bless and sanctify my soul with heavenly benediction, so that it may become Your holy dwelling and the seat of Your eternal glory. And in this temple of Your dignity let nothing be found that might offend Your majesty. In Your great goodness, and in the multitude of Your mercies, look upon me and listen to the prayer of Your poor servant exiled from You in the region of the shadow of death. Protect and preserve the soul of Your poor servant among the many dangers of this corruptible life, and direct him by Your accompanying grace, through the ways of peace, to the land of everlasting light.

ECCE HOMO "BEHOLD THE MAN"

BOOK FOUR

An Invitation To Holy Communion

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

COME to Me, all you that labor and are burdened, and I will refresh you.⁴⁵
The bread which I will give is My Flesh, for the life of the world.⁴⁶ Take you and eat: this is My Body, which shall be delivered for you. Do this for the commemoration of Me.⁴⁷ He that eateth My flesh, and drinketh My blood, abideth in Me, and I in him.⁴⁸ The words that I have spoken to you are spirit and life.”⁴⁹

THE CRUCIFIXION OF JESUS CHRIST

The First Chapter

The Great Reverence With Which We Should Receive Christ

THE DISCIPLE

THESE are all Your words, O Christ, eternal Truth, though they were not all spoken at one time nor written together in one place. And because they are Yours and true, I must accept them all with faith and gratitude. They are Yours and You have spoken them; they are mine also because You have spoken them for my salvation. Gladly I accept them from Your lips that they may be the more deeply impressed in my heart.

Words of such tenderness, so full of sweetness and love, encourage me; but my sins frighten me and an unclean conscience thunders at me when approaching such great mysteries as these. The sweetness of Your words invites me, but the multitude of my vices oppresses me.

You command me to approach You confidently if I wish to have part with You, and to receive the food of immortality if I desire to obtain life and glory everlasting.

“Come to me,” You say, “all you that labor and are burdened, and I will refresh you.”⁵⁰

Oh, how sweet and kind to the ear of the sinner is the word by which You, my Lord God, invite the poor and needy to receive Your most holy Body! Who am I, Lord, that I should presume to approach You? Behold, the heaven of heavens cannot contain You, and yet You say: “Come, all of you, to Me.”

What means this most gracious honor and this friendly invitation? How shall I dare to come, I who am conscious of no good on which to presume? How shall I lead You into my house, I who have so often offended in Your most kindly sight? Angels and archangels revere You, the holy and the just fear You, and You say: “Come to Me: all of you!” If You, Lord, had not said it, who would have believed it to be true? And if You had not commanded, who would dare approach?

Behold, Noah, a just man, worked a hundred years building the ark that he and a few others might be saved; how, then, can I prepare myself in one hour to receive with reverence the Maker of the world?

Moses, Your great servant and special friend, made an ark of incorruptible wood which he covered with purest gold wherein to place the tables of Your law; shall I, a creature of corruption, dare so easily to receive You, the Maker of law and the Giver of life?

Solomon, the wisest of the kings of Israel, spent seven years building a magnificent temple in praise of Your name, and celebrated its dedication with a feast of eight days. He offered a thousand victims in Your honor and solemnly bore the Ark of the Covenant with trumpeting and jubilation to the place prepared for it; and I, unhappy and poorest of men, how shall I lead You into my house, I who scarcely can spend a half-hour devoutly—would that I could spend even that as I ought!

O my God, how hard these men tried to please You! Alas, how little is all that I do! How short the time I spend in preparing for Communion! I am seldom wholly recollected, and very seldom, indeed, entirely free from distraction. Yet surely in the presence of Your life-giving Godhead no unbecoming thought should arise and no creature possess my heart, for I am about to receive as my guest, not an angel, but the very Lord of angels.

Very great, too, is the difference between the Ark of the Covenant with its treasures and Your most pure Body with its ineffable virtues, between these sacrifices of the law which were but figures of things to come and the true offering of Your Body which was the fulfillment of all ancient sacrifices.

Why, then, do I not long more ardently for Your adorable presence? Why do I not prepare myself with greater care to receive Your sacred gifts, since those holy patriarchs and prophets of old, as well as kings and princes with all their people, have shown such affectionate devotion for the worship of God?

The most devout King David danced before the ark of God with all his strength as he recalled the benefits once bestowed upon his fathers. He made musical instruments of many kinds. He composed psalms and ordered them sung with joy. He himself often played upon the harp when moved by the grace of the Holy Ghost. He taught the people of Israel to praise God with all their hearts and to raise their voices every day to bless and glorify Him. If such great devotion flourished in those days and such ceremony in praise of God before the Ark of the Covenant, what great devotion ought not I and all Christian people now show in the presence of this Sacrament; what reverence in receiving the most excellent Body of Christ!

Many people travel far to honor the relics of the saints, marveling at their wonderful deeds and at the building of magnificent shrines. They gaze upon and kiss the sacred relics encased in silk and gold; and behold, You are here present before me on the altar, my God, Saint of saints, Creator of men, and Lord of angels!

Often in looking at such things, men are moved by curiosity, by the novelty of the unseen, and they bear away little fruit for the amendment of their lives, especially when they go from place to place lightly and without true contrition. But here in the Sacrament of the altar You are wholly present, my God, the man Christ Jesus, whence is obtained the full realization of eternal salvation, as often as You are worthily and devoutly received. To this, indeed, we are not drawn by levity, or curiosity, or sensuality, but by firm faith, devout hope, and sincere love.

O God, hidden Creator of the world, how wonderfully You deal with us! How sweetly and graciously You dispose of things with Your elect to whom You offer Yourself to be received in this Sacrament! This, indeed, surpasses all understanding. This in a special manner attracts the hearts of the devout and inflames their love. Your truly faithful servants, who give their whole life to amendment, often receive in Holy Communion the great grace of devotion and love of virtue.

Oh, the wonderful and hidden grace of this Sacrament which only the faithful of Christ understand, which unbelievers and slaves of sin cannot experience! In it spiritual grace is conferred, lost virtue restored, and the beauty, marred by sin, repaired. At times, indeed, its grace is so great that, from the fullness of the devotion, not only the mind but also the frail body feels filled with greater strength.

Nevertheless, our neglect and coldness is much to be deplored and pitied, when we are not moved to receive with greater fervor Christ in Whom is the hope and merit of all who will be saved. He is our sanctification and redemption. He is our consolation in this life and the eternal joy of the blessed in heaven. This being true, it is lamentable that many pay so little heed to the salutary Mystery which fills the heavens with joy and maintains the whole universe in being.

Oh, the blindness and the hardness of the heart of man that does not show more regard for so wonderful a gift, but rather falls into carelessness from its daily use! If this most holy Sacrament were celebrated in only one place and consecrated by only one priest in the whole world, with what great desire, do you think, would men be attracted to that place, to that priest of God, in order to witness the celebration of the divine Mysteries! But now there are many priests and Mass is offered in many places, that God's grace and love for men may appear the more clearly as the Sacred Communion is spread more widely through the world.

Thanks be to You, Jesus, everlasting Good Shepherd, Who have seen fit to feed us poor exiled people with Your precious Body and Blood, and to invite us with words from Your own lips to partake of these sacred Mysteries: "Come to Me, all you who labor and are burdened, and I will refresh you."

The Second Chapter

God's Great Goodness and Love is Shown to Man in This Sacrament

THE DISCIPLE

TRUSTING in Your goodness and great mercy, O Lord, I come as one sick to the Healer, as one hungry and thirsty to the Fountain of life, as one in need to the King of heaven, a servant to his Lord, a creature to his Creator, a soul in desolation to my gentle Comforter.

But whence is this to me, that You should come to me? Who am I that You should offer Yourself to me? How dares the sinner to appear in Your presence, and You, how do You condescend to come to the sinner? You know Your servant, and You know that he has nothing good in him that You should grant him this.

I confess, therefore, my unworthiness. I acknowledge Your goodness. I praise Your mercy, and give thanks for Your immense love. For it is because of Yourself that You do it, not for any merit of mine; so that Your goodness may be better known to me, that greater love may be aroused and more perfect humility born in me. Since, then, this pleases You and You have so willed it, Your graciousness pleases me also. Oh, that my sinfulness may not stand in the way!

O most sweet and merciful Jesus, what great reverence, thanks, and never-ending praise are due to You for our taking of Your sacred body, whose dignity no man can express!

But on what shall I think in this Communion, this approach to my Lord, Whom I can never reverence as I ought, and yet Whom I desire devoutly to receive? What thought better, more helpful to me than to humble myself entirely in Your presence and exalt Your infinite goodness above myself?

I praise You, my God, and extol You forever! I despise myself and cast myself before You in the depths of my unworthiness. Behold, You are the Holy of holies, and I the scum of sinners! Behold, You bow down to me who am not worthy to look up to You! Behold, You come to me! You will to be with me! You invite me to Your banquet! You desire to give me heavenly food, the Bread of Angels to eat, none other than Yourself, the living Bread Who are come down from heaven and give life to the world.

Behold, whence love proceeds! What condescension shines forth! What great thanks and praise are due You for these gifts! Oh, how salutary and profitable was Your design in this institution! How sweet and pleasant the banquet when You gave Yourself as food!

How admirable is Your work, O Lord! How great Your power! How infallible Your truth! For You spoke and all things were made, and this, which You commanded, was done. It is a wonderful thing, worthy of faith, overpowering human understanding, that You, O Lord, my God, true God and man, are contained whole and entire under the appearance of a little bread and wine, and without being consumed are eaten by him who receives You!

You, the Lord of the universe, Who have need of nothing, have willed to dwell in us by means of Your Sacrament. Keep my heart and body clean, so that with a joyous and spotless conscience I may be able often to celebrate Your Mysteries and to receive for my eternal salvation what You have ordained and instituted for Your special honor and as an everlasting memorial.

Rejoice, my soul, and give thanks to God for having left you so noble a gift and so special a consolation in this valley of tears. As often as you renew this Mystery and receive the Body of Christ, so often do you enact the work of redemption and become a sharer in all the merits of Christ, for the love of Christ never grows less and the wealth of His mercy is never exhausted.

Therefore, you should prepare yourself for it by constantly renewing your heart and pondering deeply the great mystery of salvation. As often as you celebrate or hear Mass, it should seem as great, as new, as sweet to you as if on that very day Christ became man in the womb of the Virgin, or, hanging on the Cross, suffered and died for the salvation of man.

The Third Chapter

It Is Profitable to Receive Communion Often

THE DISCIPLE

BEHOLD, I come to You, Lord, that I may prosper by Your gift and be delighted at Your holy banquet which You, O God, in Your sweetness have prepared for Your poor. Behold, all that I can or ought to desire is in You. You are my salvation and my redemption, my hope and strength, my honor and glory.

Gladden, then, this day the soul of Your servant because I have raised my heart to You, O Lord Jesus. I long to receive You now, devoutly and reverently. I desire to bring You into my house that, with Zacheus, I may merit Your blessing and be numbered among the children of Abraham.

My soul longs for Your Body; my heart desires to be united with You. Give me Yourself—it is enough; for without You there is no consolation. Without You I cannot exist, without Your visitation I cannot live. I must often come to You, therefore, and receive the strength of my salvation lest, deprived of this heavenly food, I grow weak on the way. Once, most merciful Jesus, while preaching to the people and healing their many ills, You said: “I will not send them away fasting, lest they faint in the way.”⁵¹ Deal with me likewise, You Who have left Yourself in this Sacrament for the consolation of the faithful. You are sweet refreshment to the soul, and he who eats You worthily will be a sharer in, and an heir to, eternal glory.

It is indeed necessary for me, who fall and sin so often, who so quickly become lax and weak, to renew, cleanse, and inflame myself through frequent prayer, confession, and the holy reception of Your Body, lest perhaps by abstaining too long, I fall away from my holy purpose. For from the days of his youth the senses of man are prone to evil, and unless divine aid strengthens him, he quickly falls deeper. But Holy Communion removes him from evil and confirms him in good.

If I am so often careless and lax when I celebrate or communicate, what would happen if I did not receive this remedy and seek so great a help? Although I am neither fit nor properly disposed to celebrate every day, yet I will do my best at proper times to receive the divine Mysteries and share in this great grace. This, indeed, is the one chief consolation of the faithful soul when separated from You by mortality, that often mindful of her God, she receives her Beloved with devout recollection.

Oh, wonderful condescension of Your affection toward us, that You, the Lord God, Creator and Giver of life to all, should see fit to come to a poor soul and to appease her hunger with all Your divinity and humanity! O happy mind and blessed soul which deserves to receive You, her Lord God, and in receiving You, is filled with spiritual joy! How great a Master she entertains, what a beloved guest she receives, how sweet a companion she welcomes, how true a friend she gains, how beautiful and noble is the spouse she embraces, beloved and desired above all things that can be loved and desired! Let heaven and earth and all their treasures stand silent before Your face, most sweetly Beloved, for whatever glory and beauty they have is of Your condescending bounty, and they cannot approach the beauty of Your name, Whose wisdom is untold.

The Fourth Chapter

Many Blessings Are Given Those Who Receive Communion Worthily

THE DISCIPLE

O LORD my God, favor Your servant with the blessings of Your sweetness that I may merit to approach Your magnificent Sacrament worthily and devoutly. Lift up my heart to You and take away from me this heavy indolence. Visit me with Your saving grace that I may in spirit taste Your sweetness which lies hidden in this Sacrament like water in the depths of a spring. Enlighten my eyes to behold this great Mystery, and give me strength to believe in it with firm faith.

For it is Your work, not the power of man, Your sacred institution, not his invention. No man is able of himself to comprehend and understand these things which surpass even the keen vision of angels. How, then, shall I, an unworthy sinner who am but dust and ashes, be able to fathom and understand so great a mystery?

O Lord, I come to You at Your command in simplicity of heart, in good, firm faith, with hope and reverence, and I truly believe that You are present here in this Sacrament, God and man. It is Your will that I receive You and unite myself to You in love. Wherefore, I beg Your mercy and ask that special grace be given me, that I may be wholly dissolved in You and filled with Your love, no longer to concern myself with exterior consolations. For this, the highest and most worthy Sacrament, is the health of soul and body, the cure of every spiritual weakness. In it my defects are remedied, my passions restrained, and temptations overcome or allayed. In it greater grace is infused, growing virtue is nourished, faith confirmed, hope strengthened, and charity fanned into flame.

You, my God, the protector of my soul, the strength of human weakness, and the giver of every interior consolation, have given and still do often give in this Sacrament great gifts to Your loved ones who communicate devoutly. Moreover, You give them many consolations amid their numerous troubles and lift them from the depths of dejection to the hope of Your protection. With new graces You cheer and lighten them within, so that they who are full of anxiety and without affection before Communion may find themselves changed for the better after partaking of this heavenly food and drink.

Likewise, You so deal with Your elect that they may truly acknowledge and plainly experience how weak they are in themselves and what goodness and grace they obtain from You. For though in themselves they are cold, obdurate, and wanting in devotion, through You they become fervent, cheerful, and devout.

Who, indeed, can humbly approach the fountain of sweetness and not carry away a little of it? Or who, standing before a blazing fire does not feel some of its heat? You are a fountain always filled with superabundance! You are a fire, ever burning, that never fails!

Therefore, while I may not exhaust the fullness of the fountain or drink to satiety, yet will I put my lips to the mouth of this heavenly stream that from it I may receive at least some small drop to refresh my thirst and not wither away. And if I cannot as yet be all heavenly or as full of fire as the cherubim and seraphim, yet I will try to become more devout and prepare my heart so that I may gather some small spark of divine fire from the humble reception of this life-giving Sacrament.

Whatever is wanting in me, good Jesus, Savior most holy, do You in Your kindness and grace supply for me, You Who have been pleased to call all unto You, saying: "Come to Me all you that labor and are burdened and I will refresh you."

I, indeed, labor in the sweat of my brow. I am torn with sorrow of heart. I am laden with sin, troubled with temptations, enmeshed and oppressed by many evil passions, and there is none to help me, none to deliver and save me but You, my Lord God and Savior, to Whom I entrust myself and all I have, that You may protect me and lead me to eternal life. For the honor and glory of Your name receive me, You Who have prepared Your Body and Blood as food and drink for me. Grant, O Lord, my God and Savior, that by approaching Your Mysteries frequently, the zeal of my devotion may increase.

The Fifth Chapter

The Dignity of the Sacrament and of the Priesthood

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

HAD you the purity of an angel and the sanctity of St. John the Baptist, you would not be worthy to receive or administer this Sacrament. It is not because of any human meriting that a man consecrates and administers the Sacrament of Christ, and receives the Bread of Angels for his food. Great is the Mystery and great the dignity of priests to whom is given that which has not been granted the angels. For priests alone, rightly ordained in the Church, have power to celebrate Mass and consecrate the Body of Christ.

The priest, indeed, is the minister of God, using the word of God according to His command and appointment. God, moreover, is there—the chief Author and invisible Worker to Whom all is subject as He wills, to Whom all are obedient as He commands.

In this most excellent Sacrament, therefore, you ought to believe in God rather than in your own senses or in any visible sign, and thus, with fear and reverence draw near to such a work as this. Look to yourself and see whose ministry has been given you through the imposition of the bishop's hands.

Behold, you have been made a priest, consecrated to celebrate Mass! See to it now that you offer sacrifice to God faithfully and devoutly at proper times, and that you conduct yourself blamelessly. You have not made your burden lighter. Instead, you are now bound by stricter discipline and held to more perfect sanctity.

A priest ought to be adorned with all virtues and show the example of a good life to others. His way lies not among the vulgar and common habits of men but with the angels in heaven and the perfect men on earth. A priest clad in the sacred vestments acts in Christ's place, that he may pray to God both for himself and for all people in a suppliant and humble manner. He has before and behind him the sign of the Lord's cross that he may always remember the Passion of Christ. It is before him, on the chasuble, that he may look closely upon the footsteps of Christ and try to follow them fervently. It is behind him—he is signed with it—that he may gladly suffer for God any adversities inflicted by others.

He wears the cross before him that he may mourn his own sins, behind him, that in pity he may mourn the sins of others, and know that he is appointed to stand between God and the sinner, never to become weary of prayer and the holy offering until it is granted him to obtain grace and mercy.

When the priest celebrates Mass, he honors God, gladdens the angels, strengthens the Church, helps the living, brings rest to the departed, and wins for himself a share in all good things.

The Sixth Chapter

An Inquiry on the Proper Thing to Do Before Communion

THE DISCIPLE

WHEN I consider Your dignity, O Lord, and my own meanness, I become very much frightened and confused. For if I do not receive, I fly from Life, and if I intrude unworthily, I incur Your displeasure. What, then, shall I do, my God, my Helper and Adviser in necessity? Teach me the right way. Place before me some short exercise suitable for Holy Communion, for it is good to know in what manner I ought to make my heart ready devoutly and fervently for You, to receive Your Sacrament for the good of my soul, or even to celebrate so great and divine a sacrifice.

The Seventh Chapter

The Examination of Conscience and the Resolution to Amend

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

ABOVE all, God's priest should approach the celebration and reception of this Sacrament with the deepest humility of heart and suppliant reverence, with complete faith and the pious intention of giving honor to God.

Carefully examine your conscience, then. Cleanse and purify it to the best of your power by true contrition and humble confession, that you may have no burden, know of no remorse, and thus be free to come near. Let the memory of all your sins grieve you, and especially lament and bewail your daily transgressions. Then if time permits, confess to God in the secret depths of your heart all the miseries your passions have caused.

Lament and grieve because you are still so worldly, so carnal, so passionate and unmortified, so full of roving lust, so careless in guarding the external senses, so often occupied in many vain fancies, so inclined to exterior things and so heedless of what lies within, so prone to laughter and dissipation and so indisposed to sorrow and tears, so inclined to ease and the pleasures of the flesh and so cool to austerity and zeal, so curious to hear what is new and to see the beautiful and so slow to embrace humiliation and dejection, so covetous of abundance, so niggardly in giving and so tenacious in keeping, so inconsiderate in speech, so reluctant in silence, so undisciplined in character, so disordered in action, so greedy at meals, so deaf to the Word of God, so prompt to rest and so slow to labor, so awake to empty conversation, so sleepy in keeping sacred vigils and so eager to end them, so wandering in your attention, so careless in saying the office, so lukewarm in celebrating, so heartless in receiving, so quickly distracted, so seldom fully recollected, so quickly moved to anger, so apt to take offense at others, so prone to judge, so severe in condemning, so happy in prosperity and so weak in adversity, so often making good resolutions and carrying so few of them into action.

When you have confessed and deplored these and other faults with sorrow and great displeasure because of your weakness, be firmly determined to amend your life day by day and to advance in goodness. Then, with complete resignation and with your entire will offer yourself upon the altar of your heart as an everlasting sacrifice to the honor of My name, by entrusting with faith both body and soul to My care, that thus you may be considered worthy to draw near and offer sacrifice to God and profitably receive the Sacrament of My Body. For there is no more worthy offering, no greater satisfaction for washing away sin than to offer yourself purely and entirely to God with the offering of the Body of Christ in Mass and Communion.

If a man does what he can and is truly penitent, however often he comes to Me for grace and pardon, “As I live, saith the Lord God, I desire not the death of the wicked, but that the wicked turn from his way and live”;⁵² I will no longer remember his sins, but all will be forgiven him.

The Eighth Chapter

The Offering of Christ on the Cross; Our Offering

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

AS I offered Myself willingly to God the Father for your sins with hands outstretched and body naked on the cross, so that nothing remained in Me that had not become a complete sacrifice to appease the divine wrath, so ought you to be willing to offer yourself to Me day by day in the Mass as a pure and holy oblation, together with all your faculties and affections, with as much inward devotion as you can.

What more do I ask than that you give yourself entirely to Me? I care not for anything else you may give Me, for I seek not your gift but you. Just as it would not be enough for you to have everything if you did not have Me, so whatever you give cannot please Me if you do not give yourself.

Offer yourself to Me, therefore, and give yourself entirely for God—your offering will be accepted. Behold, I offered Myself wholly to the Father for you, I even gave My whole Body and Blood for food that I might be all yours, and you Mine forever.

But if you rely upon self, and do not offer your free will to Mine, your offering will be incomplete and the union between us imperfect. Hence, if you desire to attain grace and freedom of heart, let the free offering of yourself into the hands of God precede your every action. This is why so few are inwardly free and enlightened—they know not how to renounce themselves entirely.

My word stands: “Everyone of you that doth not renounce all that he possesseth, cannot be My disciple.”⁵³

If, therefore, you wish to be My disciple, offer yourself to Me with all your heart.

The Ninth Chapter

We Should Offer Ourselves and All That We Have to God, Praying for All

THE DISCIPLE

ALL things in heaven and on earth, O Lord, are Yours. I long to give myself to You as a voluntary offering to remain forever Yours. With a sincere heart I offer myself this day to You, O Lord, to Your eternal service, to Your homage, and as a sacrifice of everlasting praise. Receive me with this holy offering of Your precious Body which also I make to You this day, in the presence of angels invisibly attending, for my salvation and that of all Your people.

O Lord, upon Your altar of expiation, I offer You all the sins and offenses I have committed in Your presence and in the presence of Your holy angels, from the day when I first could sin until this hour, that You may burn and consume them all in the fire of Your love, that You may wipe away their every stain, cleanse my conscience of every fault, and restore to me Your grace which I lost in sin by granting full pardon for all and receiving me mercifully with the kiss of peace.

What can I do for all my sins but humbly confess and lament them, and implore Your mercy without ceasing? In Your mercy, I implore You, hear me when I stand before You, my God. All my sins are most displeasing to me. I wish never to commit them again. I am sorry for them and will be sorry as long as I live. I am ready to do penance and make satisfaction to the utmost of my power.

Forgive me, O God, forgive me my sins for Your Holy Name. Save my soul which You have redeemed by Your most precious Blood. See, I place myself at Your mercy. I commit myself to Your hands. Deal with me according to Your goodness, not according to my malicious and evil ways.

I offer to You also all the good I have, small and imperfect though it be, that You may make it more pure and more holy, that You may be pleased with it, render it acceptable to Yourself, and perfect it more and more, and finally that You may lead me, an indolent and worthless creature, to a good and happy end.

I offer You also all the holy desires of Your devoted servants, the needs of my parents, friends, brothers, sisters, and all who are dear to me; of all who for Your sake have been kind to me or to others; of all who have wished and asked my prayers and Masses for them and theirs, whether they yet live in the flesh or are now departed from this world, that they may all experience the help of Your grace, the strength of Your consolation, protection from dangers, deliverance from punishment to come, and that, free from all evils, they may gladly give abundant thanks to You.

I offer You also these prayers and the Sacrifice of Propitiation for those especially who have in any way injured, saddened, or slandered me, inflicted loss or pain upon me, and also for all those whom I have at any time saddened, disturbed, offended, and abused by word or deed, willfully or in ignorance. May it please You to forgive us all alike our sins and offenses against one another.

Take away from our hearts, O Lord, all suspicion, anger, wrath, contention, and whatever may injure charity and lessen brotherly love. Have mercy, O Lord, have mercy on those who ask Your mercy, give grace to those who need it, and make us such that we may be worthy to enjoy Your favor and gain eternal life.

The Tenth Chapter

Do Not Lightly Forego Holy Communion

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

YOU must often return to the source of grace and divine mercy, to the fountain of goodness and perfect purity, if you wish to be free from passion and vice, if you desire to be made stronger and more watchful against all the temptations and deceits of the devil.

The enemy, knowing the great good and the healing power of Holy Communion, tries as much as he can by every manner and means to hinder and keep away the faithful and the devout. Indeed, there are some who suffer the worst assaults of Satan when disposing themselves to prepare for Holy Communion. As it is written in Job, this wicked spirit comes among the sons of God to trouble them by his wonted malice, to make them unduly fearful and perplexed, that thus he may lessen their devotion or attack their faith to such an extent that they perhaps either forego Communion altogether or receive with little fervor.

No attention, however, must be paid to his cunning wiles, no matter how base and horrible—all his suggestions must be cast back upon his head. The wretch is to be despised and scorned. Holy Communion must not be passed by because of any assaults from him or because of the commotion he may arouse.

Oftentimes, also, too great solicitude for devotion and anxiety about confession hinder a person. Do as wise men do. Cast off anxiety and scruple, for it impedes the grace of God and destroys devotion of the mind.

Do not remain away from Holy Communion because of a small trouble or vexation but go at once to confession and willingly forgive all others their offenses. If you have offended anyone, humbly seek pardon and God will readily forgive you.

What good is it to delay confession for a long time or to put off Holy Communion? Cleanse yourself at once, spit out the poison quickly. Make haste to apply the remedy and you will find it better than if you had waited a long time. If you put it off today because of one thing, perhaps tomorrow a greater will occur to you, and thus you will stay away from Communion for a long time and become even more unfit.

Shake off this heaviness and sloth as quickly as you can, for there is no gain in much anxiety, in enduring long hours of trouble, and in depriving yourself of the divine Mysteries because of these daily disturbances. Yes, it is very hurtful to defer Holy Communion long, for it usually brings on a lazy spiritual sleep.

How sad that some dissolute and lax persons are willing to postpone confession and likewise wish to defer Holy Communion, lest they be forced to keep a stricter watch over themselves! Alas, how little love and devotion have they who so easily put off Holy Communion!

How happy and acceptable to God is he who so lives, and keeps his conscience so pure, as to be ready and well disposed to communicate, even every day if he were permitted, and if he could do so unnoticed.

If, now and then, a man abstains by the grace of humility or for a legitimate reason, his reverence is commendable, but if laziness takes hold of him, he must arouse himself and do everything in his power, for the Lord will quicken his desire because of the good intention to which He particularly looks. When he is indeed unable to come, he will always have the good will and pious intention to communicate and thus he will not lose the fruit of the Sacrament.

Any devout person may at any hour on any day receive Christ in spiritual communion profitably and without hindrance. Yet on certain days and times appointed he ought to receive with affectionate reverence the Body of his Redeemer in this Sacrament, seeking the praise and honor of God rather than his own consolation.

For as often as he devoutly calls to mind the mystery and passion of the Incarnate Christ, and is inflamed with love for Him, he communicates mystically and is invisibly refreshed.

He who prepares himself only when festivals approach or custom demands, will often find himself unprepared. Blessed is he who offers himself a sacrifice to the Lord as often as he celebrates or communicates.

Be neither too slow nor too fast in celebrating but follow the good custom common to those among whom you are. You ought not to cause others inconvenience or trouble, but observe the accepted rule as laid down by superiors, and look to the benefit of others rather than to your own devotion or inclination.

The Eleventh Chapter

The Body of Christ and Sacred Scripture Are Most Necessary to a Faithful Soul

THE DISCIPLE

O MOST sweet Lord Jesus, how great is the happiness of the devout soul that feasts upon You at Your banquet, where there is set before her to be eaten no other food but Yourself alone, her only Lover, most desired of all that her heart can desire!

To me it would be happiness, indeed, to shed tears in Your presence from the innermost depths of love, and like the pious Magdalen to wash Your feet with them. But where now is this devotion, this copious shedding of holy tears? Certainly in Your sight, before Your holy angels, my whole heart ought to be inflamed and weep for joy. For, hidden though You are beneath another form, I have You truly present in the Sacrament.

My eyes could not bear to behold You in Your own divine brightness, nor could the whole world stand in the splendor of the glory of Your majesty. In veiling Yourself in the Sacrament, therefore, You have regard for my weakness.

In truth, I possess and adore Him Whom the angels adore in heaven—I as yet by faith, they face to face unveiled. I must be content with the light of the true faith and walk in it until the day of eternal brightness dawns and the shadow of figures passes away. When, moreover, that which is perfect shall have come, the need of sacraments shall cease, for the blessed in heavenly glory need no healing sacrament. Rejoicing endlessly in the presence of God, beholding His glory face to face, transformed from their own brightness to the brightness of the ineffable Deity, they taste the Word of God made flesh, as He was in the beginning and will remain in eternity.

Though mindful of these wonderful things, every spiritual solace becomes wearisome to me because so long as I do not plainly see the Lord in His glory, I consider everything I hear and see on earth of little account.

You are my witness, O God, that nothing can comfort me, no creature give me rest but You, my God, Whom I desire to contemplate forever. But this is not possible while I remain in mortal life, and, therefore, I must be very patient and submit myself to You in every desire.

Even Your saints, O Lord, who now rejoice with You in the kingdom of heaven, awaited the coming of Your glory with faith and great patience while they lived. What they believed, I believe. What they hoped for, I hope for, and whither they arrived, I trust I shall come by Your grace. Meanwhile I will walk in faith, strengthened by the example of the saints. I shall have, besides, for comfort and for the guidance of my life, the holy Books, and above all these, Your most holy Body for my special haven and refuge.

I feel there are especially necessary for me in this life two things without which its miseries would be unbearable. Confined here in this prison of the body I confess I need these two, food and light. Therefore, You have given me in my weakness Your sacred Flesh to refresh my soul and body, and You have set Your word as the guiding light for my feet. Without them I could not live aright, for the word of God is the light of my soul and Your Sacrament is the Bread of Life.

These also may be called the two tables, one here, one there, in the treasure house of holy Church. One is the table of the holy altar, having the holy Bread that is the precious Body of Christ. The other is the table of divine law, containing holy doctrine that teaches all the true faith and firmly leads them within the veil, the Holy of holies.

Thanks to You, Lord Jesus, Light of eternal light, for the table of Your holy teaching which You have prepared for us by Your servants, the prophets and Apostles and other learned men.

Thanks to You, Creator and Redeemer of men, Who, to declare Your love to all the world, have prepared a great supper in which You have placed before us as food not the lamb, the type of Yourself, but Your own most precious Body and Blood, making all the faithful glad in Your sacred banquet, intoxicating them with the chalice of salvation in which are all the delights of paradise; and the holy angels feast with us but with more happiness and sweetness.

Oh, how great and honorable is the office of the priest, to whom is given the consecration of the Lord of majesty in sacred words, whose lips bless Him, whose hands hold Him, whose tongue receives Him, and whose ministry it is to bring Him to others!

Oh, how clean those hands should be, how pure the lips, how sanctified the body, how immaculate the heart of the priest to whom the Author of all purity so often comes. No word but what is holy, none but what is good and profitable ought to come from the lips of the priest who so often receives the Sacrament of Christ. Single and modest should be the eyes accustomed to looking upon the Body of Christ. Pure and lifted up to heaven the hands accustomed to handle the Creator of heaven and earth. To priests above all it is written in the law: "Be ye holy, for I, the Lord your God, am holy."

Let Your grace, almighty God, assist us, that we who have undertaken the office of the priesthood may serve You worthily and devoutly in all purity and with a good conscience. And if we cannot live as innocently as we ought, grant us at least to lament duly the wrongs we have committed and in the spirit of humility and the purpose of a good will to serve You more fervently in the future.

The Twelfth Chapter

The Communicant Should Prepare Himself for Christ with Great Care

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

I AM the Lover of purity, the Giver of all holiness. I seek a pure heart and there is the place of My rest.

Prepare for Me a large room furnished and I with My disciples will keep the Pasch with you.

If you wish that I come to you and remain with you, purge out the old leaven and make clean the dwelling of your heart. Shut out the whole world with all the din of its vices. Sit as the sparrow lonely on the housetop, and think on your transgressions in bitterness of soul.

Everyone who loves prepares the best and most beautiful home for his beloved, because the love of the one receiving his lover is recognized thereby.

But understand that you cannot by any merit of your own make this preparation well enough, though you spend a year in doing it and think of nothing else. It is only by My goodness and grace that you are allowed to approach My table, as though a beggar were invited to dinner by a rich man and he had nothing to offer in return for the gift but to humble himself and give thanks.

Do what you can and do that carefully. Receive the Body of the Lord, your beloved God Who deigns to come to you, not out of habit or necessity, but with fear, with reverence, and with love.

I am He that called you. I ordered it done. I will supply what you lack. Come and receive Me.

When I grant the grace of devotion, give thanks to God, not because you are worthy but because I have had mercy upon you. If you have it not and feel rather dry instead, continue in prayer, sigh and knock, and do not give up until you receive some crumb of saving grace.

You have need of Me. I do not need you. You do not come to sanctify Me but I come to sanctify you and make you better. You come to be sanctified and united with Me, to receive new grace and to be aroused anew to amend. Do not neglect this grace, but prepare your heart with all care, and bring into it your Beloved.

Not only should you prepare devoutly before Communion, but you should also carefully keep yourself in devotion after receiving the Sacrament. The careful custody of yourself afterward is no less necessary than the devout preparation before, for a careful afterwatch is the best preparation for obtaining greater grace. If a person lets his mind wander to external comforts, he becomes quite indisposed.

Beware of much talking. Remain in seclusion and enjoy your God, for you have Him Whom all the world cannot take from you.

I am He to Whom you should give yourself entirely, that from now on you may live, not in yourself, but in Me, with all cares cast away.

The Thirteenth Chapter

With All Her Heart the Devout Soul Should Desire Union with Christ in the Sacrament

THE DISCIPLE

LET it be granted me to find You alone, O Christ, to open to You my whole heart, to enjoy You as my soul desires, to be disturbed by no one, to be moved and troubled by no creature, that You may speak to me and I to You alone, as a lover speaks to his loved one, and friend converses with friend.

I pray for this, I desire this, that I may be completely united to You and may withdraw my heart from all created things, learning to relish the celestial and the eternal through Holy Communion and the frequent celebration of Mass.

Ah Lord God, when shall I be completely united to You and absorbed by You, with self utterly forgotten? You in me and I in You? Grant that we may remain so together. You in truth are my Beloved, chosen from thousands, in Whom my soul is happy to dwell all the days of her life. You are in truth my pledge of peace, in Whom is the greatest peace and true rest, without Whom there is toil and sorrow and infinite misery.

You truly are the hidden God. Your counsel is not with the wicked, and Your conversation is rather with the humble and the simple.

O how kind is Your spirit, Lord, Who in order to show Your sweetness toward Your children, deign to feed them with the sweetest of bread, bread come down from heaven! Surely there is no other people so fortunate as to have their god near them, as You, our God, are present everywhere to the faithful, to whom You give Yourself to be eaten and enjoyed for their daily solace and the raising of their hearts to heaven.

Indeed, what other nation is so renowned as the Christian peoples? What creature under heaven is so favored as the devout soul to whom God comes, to feed her with His glorious Flesh? O unspeakable grace! O wonderful condescension! O love beyond measure, singularly bestowed upon man!

What return shall I make to the Lord for this love, this grace so boundless? There is nothing I can give more pleasing than to offer my heart completely to my God, uniting it closely with His. Then shall all my inner self be glad when my soul is perfectly united with God. Then will He say to me: "If you will be with Me, I will be with you." And I will answer Him: "Deign, O Lord, to remain with me. I will gladly be with You. This is my one desire, that my heart may be united with You."

The Fourteenth Chapter

The Ardent Longing of Devout Men for the Body of Christ

THE DISCIPLE

HOW great is the abundance of Your kindness, O Lord, which You have hidden from those who fear You!

When I think how some devout persons come to Your Sacrament with the greatest devotion and love, I am frequently ashamed and confused that I approach Your altar and the table of Holy Communion so coldly and indifferently; that I remain so dry and devoid of heartfelt affection; that I am not completely inflamed in Your presence, O my God, nor so strongly drawn and attracted as many devout persons who, in their great desire for Communion and intense heart love, could not restrain their tears but longed from the depths of their souls and bodies to embrace You, the Fountain of Life. These were able to appease and allay their hunger in no other way than by receiving Your Body with all joy and spiritual eagerness. The faith of these men was true and ardent—convincing proof of Your sacred presence. They whose hearts burn so ardently within them when Jesus lives with them truly know their Lord in the breaking of bread.

Such affection and devotion, such mighty love and zeal are often far beyond me. Be merciful to me, O sweet, good, kind Jesus, and grant me, Your poor suppliant, sometimes at least to feel in Holy Communion a little of the tenderness of Your love, that my faith may grow stronger, that my hope in Your goodness may increase, and that charity, once perfectly kindled within me by tasting heavenly manna, may never fail.

Your mercy can give me the grace I long for and can visit me most graciously with fervor of soul according to Your good pleasure. For although I am not now inflamed with as great desire as those who are singularly devoted to You, yet by Your grace I long for this same great flame, praying and seeking a place among all such ardent lovers that I may be numbered among their holy company.

The Fifteenth Chapter

The Grace of Devotion is Acquired Through Humility and Self-Denial

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

YOU must seek earnestly the grace of devotion, ask for it fervently, await it patiently and hopefully, receive it gratefully, guard it humbly, cooperate with it carefully and leave to God, when it comes, the length and manner of the heavenly visitation.

When you feel little or no inward devotion, you should especially humiliate yourself, but do not become too dejected or unreasonably sad. In one short moment God often gives what He has long denied. At times He grants at the end what He has denied from the beginning of prayer. If grace were always given at once, or were present at our beck and call, it would not be well taken by weak humankind. Therefore, with good hope and humble patience await the grace of devotion.

When it is not given, or for some unknown reason is taken away, blame yourself and your sins. Sometimes it is a small matter that hinders grace and hides it, if, indeed, that which prevents so great a good may be called little rather than great. But if you remove this hindrance, be it great or small, and if you conquer it perfectly, you shall have what you ask. As soon as you have given yourself to God with all your heart and seek neither this nor that for your own pleasure and purpose, but place yourself completely in His charge, you shall find yourself at peace, united with Him, because nothing will be so sweet, nothing will please you so much as the good pleasure of His will.

Anyone, therefore, who shall with simplicity of heart direct his intention to God and free himself from all inordinate love or dislike for any creature will be most fit to receive grace and will be worthy of the gift of devotion. For where the Lord finds the vessel empty He pours down His blessing.

So also the more perfectly a man renounces things of this world, and the more completely he dies to himself through contempt of self, the more quickly this great grace comes to him, the more plentifully it enters in, and the higher it uplifts the free heart.

Then shall he see and abound, then shall his heart marvel and be enlarged within him, because the Hand of the Lord is with him and in the hollow of that Hand he has placed himself forever. Thus shall the man be blessed who seeks God with all his heart and has not regarded his soul in vain. Such a one, receiving the Holy Eucharist, merits the grace of divine union because he looks not on his own thoughts, nor to his own comfort, but above all devotion and consolation to the glory and honor of God.

The Sixteenth Chapter

We Should Show Our Needs to Christ and Ask His Grace

THE DISCIPLE

O MOST kind, most loving Lord, Whom I now desire to receive with devotion, You know the weakness and the necessity which I suffer, in what great evils and vices I am involved, how often I am depressed, tempted, defiled, and troubled.

To You I come for help, to You I pray for comfort and relief. I speak to Him Who knows all things, to Whom my whole inner life is manifest, and Who alone can perfectly comfort and help me.

You know what good things I am most in need of and how poor I am in virtue. Behold I stand before You, poor and naked, asking Your grace and imploring Your mercy.

Feed Your hungry beggar. Inflame my coldness with the fire of Your love. Enlighten my blindness with the brightness of Your presence. Turn all earthly things to bitterness for me, all grievance and adversity to patience, all lowly creation to contempt and oblivion. Raise my heart to You in heaven and suffer me not to wander on earth. From this moment to all eternity do You alone grow sweet to me, for You alone are my food and drink, my love and my joy, my sweetness and my total good.

Let Your presence wholly inflame me, consume and transform me into Yourself, that I may become one spirit with You by the grace of inward union and by the melting power of Your ardent love.

Suffer me not to go from You fasting and thirsty, but deal with me mercifully as You have so often and so wonderfully dealt with Your saints.

What wonder if I were completely inflamed by You to die to myself, since You are the fire ever burning and never dying, a love purifying the heart and enlightening the understanding.

The Seventeenth Chapter

The Burning Love and Strong Desire to Receive Christ

THE DISCIPLE

WITH greatest devotion and ardent love, with all affection and fervor of heart I wish to receive You, O Lord, as many saints and devout persons, most pleasing to You in their holiness of life and most fervent in devotion, desired You in Holy Communion.

O my God, everlasting love, my final good, my happiness unending, I long to receive You with as strong a desire and as worthy a reverence as any of the saints ever had or could have felt, and though I am not worthy to have all these sentiments of devotion, still I offer You the full affection of my heart as if I alone had all those most pleasing and ardent desires.

Yet, whatever a God-fearing mind can conceive and desire, I offer in its entirety to You with the greatest reverence and inward affection. I wish to keep nothing for self but to offer to You, willingly and most freely, myself and all that is mine.

O Lord God, my Creator and my Redeemer, I long to receive You this day with such reverence, praise, and honor, with such gratitude, worthiness and love, with such faith, hope, and purity as that with which Your most holy Mother, the glorious Virgin Mary, longed for and received You when she humbly and devoutly answered the angel who announced to her the mystery of the Incarnation: “Behold the handmaid of the Lord; be it done to me according to thy word.”⁵⁴

Likewise as Your blessed precursor, the most excellent of saints, John the Baptist, gladdened by Your presence, exulted in the Holy Ghost while yet enclosed in the womb of his mother, and afterward seeing Jesus walking among men, humbled himself and with devout love declared: “The friend of the bridegroom, who standeth and heareth him, rejoiceth with joy because of the bridegroom’s voice,”⁵⁵ even so I long to be inflamed with great and holy desires and to give myself to You with all my heart.

Therefore I offer and present to You the gladness of all devout hearts, their ardent affection, their mental raptures, their supernatural illuminations and heavenly visions together with all the virtues and praises which have been or shall be celebrated by all creatures in heaven and on earth, for myself and all commended to my prayers, that You may be worthily praised and glorified forever.

Accept, O Lord my God, my promises and desires of giving You infinite praise and boundless benediction, which in the vastness of Your ineffable greatness are justly due You. This I render and desire to render every day and every moment of time, and in my loving prayers I invite and entreat all celestial spirits and all the faithful to join me in giving You praise and thanks.

Let all people, races, and tongues praise You and with the greatest joy and most ardent devotion magnify Your sweet and holy name. And let all who reverently and devoutly celebrate this most great Sacrament and receive it in the fullness of faith, find kindness and mercy in You and humbly pray for me, a sinner. And when they have received the longed-for devotion and blissful union, and, well consoled and wonderfully refreshed, have retired from Your holy, Your celestial table, may they deign to remember my poor soul.

The Eighteenth Chapter

Man Should Not Scrutinize This Sacrament in Curiosity, But Humbly Imitate Christ and Submit Reason to Holy Faith

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

BEWARE of curious and vain examination of this most profound Sacrament, if you do not wish to be plunged into the depths of doubt. He who scrutinizes its majesty too closely will be overwhelmed by its glory.

God can do more than man can understand. A pious and humble search for truth He will allow, a search that is ever ready to learn and that seeks to walk in the reasonable doctrine of the fathers.

Blest is the simplicity that leaves the difficult way of dispute and goes forward on the level, firm path of God's commandments. Many have lost devotion because they wished to search into things beyond them.

Faith is required of you, and a sincere life, not a lofty intellect nor a delving into the mysteries of God. If you neither know nor understand things beneath you, how can you comprehend what is above you? Submit yourself to God and humble reason to faith, and the light of understanding will be given you so far as it is good and necessary for you. Some are gravely tempted concerning faith and the Sacrament but this disturbance is not laid to them but to the enemy.

Be not disturbed, dispute not in your mind, answer not the doubts sent by the devil, but believe the words of God, believe His saints and prophets and the evil enemy will flee from you. It is often very profitable for the servant of God to suffer such things. For Satan does not tempt unbelievers and sinners whom he already holds securely, but in many ways he does tempt and trouble the faithful servant.

Go forward, then, with sincere and unflinching faith, and with humble reverence approach this Sacrament. Whatever you cannot understand commit to the security of the all-powerful God, Who does not deceive you. The man, however, who trusts in himself is deceived. God walks with sincere men, reveals Himself to humble men, enlightens the understanding of pure minds, and hides His grace from the curious and the proud.

Human reason is weak and can be deceived. True faith, however, cannot be deceived. All reason and natural science ought to come after faith, not go before it, nor oppose it. For in this most holy and supremely excellent Sacrament, faith and love take precedence and work in a hidden manner.

God, eternal, incomprehensible, and infinitely powerful, does great and inscrutable things in heaven and on earth, and there is no searching into His marvelous works. If all the works of God were such that human reason could easily grasp them, they would not be called wonderful or beyond the power of words to tell.

THE ASSUMPTION OF THE BLESSED VIRGIN MARY

MADONNA ENTHRONED WITH THE SAINTS

PUBLISHER II

[\[Paperback\]](#) [\[Kindle\]](#) [\[Website\]](#)

PAPERBACK EDITION:

ISBN-13: 978-1-78379-037-1

TRUE DEVOTION TO MARY: WITH
PREPARATION FOR TOTAL CONSECRATION
BY SAINT LOUIS DE MONTFORT:

Paperback Hardback Kindle

CONTENTS

THE IMITATION OF CHRIST TITLE

PUBLISHER

INDEX

THE IMITATION OF CHRIST

FOREWORD

BOOK ONE

Thoughts Helpful In The Life Of The Soul

The First Chapter

Imitating Christ and Despising All Vanities on Earth

The Second Chapter

Having a Humble Opinion of Self

The Third Chapter

The Doctrine of Truth

The Fourth Chapter

Prudence in Action

The Fifth Chapter

Reading the Holy Scripture

The Sixth Chapter

Unbridled Affections

The Seventh Chapter

Avoiding False Hope and Pride

The Eighth Chapter

Shunning Over-Familiarity

The Ninth Chapter

Obedience and Subjection

The Tenth Chapter

Avoiding Idle Talk

The Eleventh Chapter

Acquiring Peace and Zeal for Perfection

The Twelfth Chapter
The Value of Adversity

The Thirteenth Chapter
Resisting Temptation

The Fourteenth Chapter
Avoiding Rash Judgment

The Fifteenth Chapter
Works Done in Charity

The Sixteenth Chapter
Bearing with the Faults of Others

The Seventeenth Chapter
Monastic Life

The Eighteenth Chapter
The Example Set Us by the Holy Fathers

The Nineteenth Chapter
The Practices of a Good Religious

The Twentieth Chapter
The Love of Solitude and Silence

The Twenty-First Chapter
Sorrow of Heart

The Twenty-Second Chapter
Thoughts on the Misery of Man

The Twenty-Third Chapter
Thoughts on Death

The Twenty-Fourth Chapter
Judgment and the Punishment of Sin

The Twenty-Fifth Chapter
Zeal in Amending our Lives

BOOK TWO

The Interior Life

The First Chapter
Meditation

The Second Chapter
Humility

The Third Chapter
Goodness and Peace in Man

The Fourth Chapter
Purity of Mind and Unity of Purpose

The Fifth Chapter
Ourselves

The Sixth Chapter
The Joy of a Good Conscience

The Seventh Chapter
Loving Jesus Above All Things

The Eighth Chapter
The Intimate Friendship of Jesus

The Ninth Chapter
Wanting No Share in Comfort

The Tenth Chapter
Appreciating God's Grace

The Eleventh Chapter
Few Love the Cross of Jesus

The Twelfth Chapter
The Royal Road of the Holy Cross

BOOK THREE Internal Consolation

The First Chapter
The Inward Conversation of Christ with the Faithful Soul

The Second Chapter
Truth Speaks Inwardly Without the Sound of Words

THE DISCIPLE

The Third Chapter
Listen Humbly to the Words of God. Many Do Not Heed Them

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

THE DISCIPLE

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

A PRAYER FOR THE GRACE OF DEVOTION

The Fourth Chapter

We Must Walk Before God in Humility and Truth

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

THE DISCIPLE

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

The Fifth Chapter

The Wonderful Effect of Divine Love

THE DISCIPLE

The Sixth Chapter

The Proving of a True Lover

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

THE DISCIPLE

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

The Seventh Chapter

Grace Must Be Hidden Under the Mantle of Humility

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

The Eighth Chapter

Self-Abasement in the Sight of God

THE DISCIPLE

The Ninth Chapter

All Things should be Referred to God as their Last End

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

The Tenth Chapter

To Despise the World and Serve God is Sweet

THE DISCIPLE

The Eleventh Chapter

The Longings of our Hearts Must Be Examined And Moderated

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

THE DISCIPLE

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

The Twelfth Chapter
Acquiring Patience in the Fight Against Concupiscence

THE DISCIPLE

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

The Thirteenth Chapter
The Obedience of One Humbly Subject to the Example of Jesus Christ

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

The Fourteenth Chapter
Consider the Hidden Judgments of God Lest You Become Proud of Your Own Good Deeds

THE DISCIPLE

The Fifteenth Chapter
How One Should Feel and Speak on Every Desirable Thing

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

A PRAYER THAT THE WILL OF GOD BE DONE

The Sixteenth Chapter
True Comfort Is to Be Sought in God Alone

THE DISCIPLE

The Seventeenth Chapter
All Our Care is to Be Placed in God

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

THE DISCIPLE

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

THE DISCIPLE

The Eighteenth Chapter
Temporal Sufferings Should Be Borne Patiently, After the Example of Christ

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

THE DISCIPLE

The Nineteenth Chapter
True Patience in Suffering

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

THE DISCIPLE

The Twentieth Chapter
Confessing Our Weakness in the Miseries of Life

THE DISCIPLE

The Twenty-first Chapter
Above All Goods and All Gifts We Must Rest in God

THE DISCIPLE

The Twenty-Second Chapter
Remember the Innumerable Gifts of God

THE DISCIPLE

The Twenty-Third Chapter
Four Things Which Bring Great Peace

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

THE DISCIPLE

A PRAYER AGAINST BAD THOUGHTS

A PRAYER FOR ENLIGHTENING THE MIND

The Twenty-Fourth Chapter
Avoiding Curious Inquiry About the Lives of Others

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

The Twenty-Fifth Chapter
The Basis of Firm Peace of Heart and True Progress

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

THE DISCIPLE

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

THE DISCIPLE

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

The Twenty-Sixth Chapter

The Excellence of a Free Mind, Gained Through Prayer Rather Than By Study

THE DISCIPLE

The Twenty-Seventh Chapter

Self-Love is the Greatest Hindrance to the Highest Good

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

A PRAYER FOR CLEANSING THE HEART AND OBTAINING HEAVENLY WISDOM

The Twenty-Eighth Chapter

Strength Against Slander

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

The Twenty-Ninth Chapter

How We Must Call Upon and Bless the Lord When Trouble Presses

THE DISCIPLE

The Thirtieth Chapter

The Quest of Divine Help and Confidence in Regaining Grace

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

The Thirty-First Chapter

To Find the Creator, Forsake All Creatures

THE DISCIPLE

The Thirty-Second Chapter

Self-Denial and the Renunciation of Evil Appetites

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

THE DISCIPLE

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

The Thirty-Third Chapter

Restlessness of Soul—Directing Our Final Intention Toward God

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

The Thirty-Fourth Chapter

God is Sweet Above All Things and in All Things to Those Who Love Him

THE DISCIPLE

The Thirty-Fifth Chapter

There is No Security from Temptation in This Life

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

The Thirty-Sixth Chapter

The Vain Judgments of Men

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

The Thirty-Seventh Chapter

Pure and Entire Resignation of Self to Obtain Freedom of Heart

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

THE DISCIPLE

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

The Thirty-Eighth Chapter

The Right Ordering of External Affairs; Recourse to God in Dangers

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

The Thirty-Ninth Chapter

A Man Should Not Be Unduly Solicitous About His Affairs

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

THE DISCIPLE

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

The Fortieth Chapter

Man Has No Good in Himself and Can Glory in Nothing

THE DISCIPLE

The Forty-First Chapter

Contempt for All Earthly Honor

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

THE DISCIPLE

The Forty-Second Chapter

Peace is Not to Be Placed in Men

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

The Forty-Third Chapter
Beware Vain and Worldly Knowledge

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

The Forty-Fourth Chapter
Do Not Be Concerned About Outward Things

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

THE DISCIPLE

The Forty-Fifth Chapter
All Men Are Not to Be Believed, for It Is Easy to Err in Speech

THE DISCIPLE

The Forty-Sixth Chapter
Trust in God Against Slander

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

THE DISCIPLE

The Forty-Seventh Chapter
Every Trial Must Be Borne for the Sake of Eternal Life

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

The Forty-Eighth Chapter
The Day of Eternity and the Distresses of This Life

THE DISCIPLE

The Forty-Ninth Chapter
The Desire of Eternal Life; the Great Rewards Promised to Those Who Struggle

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

The Fiftieth Chapter
How a Desolate Person Ought to Commit Himself Into the Hands of God

THE DISCIPLE

The Fifty-First Chapter
When We Cannot Attain to the Highest, We Must Practice the Humble Works

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

The Fifty-Second Chapter

A Man Ought Not to Consider Himself Worthy of Consolation, But Rather Deserving of Chastisement

THE DISCIPLE

The Fifty-Third Chapter

God's Grace Is Not Given to the Earthly Minded

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

The Fifty-Fourth Chapter

The Different Motions of Nature and Grace

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

The Fifty-Fifth Chapter

The Corruption of Nature and the Efficacy of Divine Grace

THE DISCIPLE

The Fifty-Sixth Chapter

We Ought to Deny Ourselves and Imitate Christ Through Bearing the Cross

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

THE DISCIPLE

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

THE DISCIPLE

The Fifty-Seventh Chapter

A Man Should Not Be Too Downcast When He Falls Into Defects

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

THE DISCIPLE

The Fifty-Eighth Chapter

High Matters and the Hidden Judgments of God Are Not to Be Scrutinized

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

The Fifty-Ninth Chapter

All Hope and Trust Are to Be Fixed In God Alone

THE DISCIPLE

BOOK FOUR

An Invitation To Holy Communion

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

The First Chapter

The Great Reverence With Which We Should Receive Christ

THE DISCIPLE

The Second Chapter

God's Great Goodness and Love is Shown to Man in This Sacrament

THE DISCIPLE

The Third Chapter

It Is Profitable to Receive Communion Often

THE DISCIPLE

The Fourth Chapter

Many Blessings Are Given Those Who Receive Communion Worthily

THE DISCIPLE

The Fifth Chapter

The Dignity of the Sacrament and of the Priesthood

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

The Sixth Chapter

An Inquiry on the Proper Thing to Do Before Communion

THE DISCIPLE

The Seventh Chapter

The Examination of Conscience and the Resolution to Amend

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

The Eighth Chapter

The Offering of Christ on the Cross; Our Offering

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

The Ninth Chapter

We Should Offer Ourselves and All That We Have to God, Praying for All

THE DISCIPLE

The Tenth Chapter

Do Not Lightly Forego Holy Communion

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

The Eleventh Chapter

The Body of Christ and Sacred Scripture Are Most Necessary to a Faithful Soul

THE DISCIPLE

The Twelfth Chapter

The Communicant Should Prepare Himself for Christ with Great Care

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

The Thirteenth Chapter

With All Her Heart the Devout Soul Should Desire Union with Christ in the Sacrament

THE DISCIPLE

The Fourteenth Chapter

The Ardent Longing of Devout Men for the Body of Christ

THE DISCIPLE

The Fifteenth Chapter

The Grace of Devotion is Acquired Through Humility and Self-Denial

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

The Sixteenth Chapter

We Should Show Our Needs to Christ and Ask His Grace

THE DISCIPLE

The Seventeenth Chapter

The Burning Love and Strong Desire to Receive Christ

THE DISCIPLE

The Eighteenth Chapter

Man Should Not Scrutinize This Sacrament in Curiosity. But Humbly Imitate Christ and Submit Reason to Holy Faith

THE VOICE OF CHRIST

PUBLISHER II

ENDNOTES

ENDNOTES

¹ Eccles. 1:8.

² Aristotle, Metaphysics, i. 1.

³ Augustine, Confessions V. 4.

⁴ Job 7:1.

⁵ Luke 12:43, 44.

⁶ Ps. 80:9.

⁷ Ps. 34:17.

⁸ Ps. 37:3.

⁹ Luke 17:21.

¹⁰ John 14:23.

¹¹ Isa. 48:22.

¹² 2 Cor. 10:18.

¹³ Isa. 15:6.

¹⁴ John 11:28.

¹⁵ Ps. 29:7—12.

¹⁶ Job 7:18.

¹⁷ Apoc. 2:7.

¹⁸ Luke 17:10.

¹⁹ Ps. 24:16.

²⁰ Matt. 16:24.

²¹ Matt. 25:41.

²² Luke 24:46, 26.

²³ Acts 9:16.

²⁴ Luke 9:23.

²⁵ Ps. 84:9.

²⁶ 1 Kings 3:9.

²⁷ Ps. 119:125.

²⁸ Ps. 119:36.

²⁹ Deut. 32:2.

³⁰ Exod. 20:19.

³¹ John 6:68.

³² Ps. 94:12.

³³ Isa. 23:4.

³⁴ Ps. 37:4.

³⁵ Augustine, Confessions, i. 1.

³⁶ John 14:27.

³⁷ Ps. 54:7.

³⁸ Apoc. 3:18.

³⁹ Matt. 16:41.

⁴⁰ St. Agatha.

⁴¹ 1 Peter 2:11.

⁴² Ps. 119:137.

⁴³ Ps. 19:9.

⁴⁴ Matt. 18:3, 4.

⁴⁵ Matt. 11:28.

⁴⁶ John 6:52.

⁴⁷ 1 Cor. 11:24.

⁴⁸ John 6:57.

⁴⁹ John 6:64.

⁵⁰ Matt. 11:28.

⁵¹ Matt. 15:32.

⁵² Ezek. 33:11.

⁵³ Luke 14:33.

⁵⁴ Luke 1:38.

⁵⁵ John 3:29.

The Promise of Fatima

$

*One Hundred Years
of History, Flystery and Faith*

Paul F. Caranci

The Promise of Fatima

One Hundred Years of History, Mystery and Faith

Paul F. Caranci

The Promise of Fatima: One Hundred Years of History, Mystery and Faith Copyright © 2017 Paul F. Caranci. Produced and printed by Stillwater River Publications. All rights reserved. Written and produced in the United States of America. This book may not be reproduced or sold in any form without the expressed, written permission of the authors and publisher. Visit our website at www.StillwaterPress.com for more information.

First Stillwater River Publications Edition

ISBN-10: 1-946-30024-1

ISBN-13: 978-1-946-30024-9

1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10

Written by Paul F. Caranci

Cover design by Dawn M. Porter

Published by Stillwater River Publications, Glocester, RI, USA.

Publisher's Cataloging-In-Publication Data
(Prepared by The Donohue Group, Inc.)

Names: Caranci, Paul F.

Title: The promise of Fatima : one hundred years of history, mystery and faith /
Paul F. Caranci.

Description: First Stillwater River Publications edition. | Glocester, RI, USA :
Stillwater River, [2017]

Identifiers: ISBN 978-1-946300-24-9 | ISBN 1-946300-24-1

Subjects: LCSH: Fatima, Our Lady of--History. | Mary, Blessed Virgin, Saint--
Apparitions and miracles--Portugal--Fátima--History. | Fatima, Our Lady of--
Political aspects. | Catholic Church--History--20th century.

Classification: LCC BT660.F3 C37 2017 | DDC 232.91/7/0946945--dc23

The views and opinions expressed in this book are solely those of the author and do not necessarily reflect the views and opinions of the publisher.

Table of Contents

Acknowledgements

Dedication

Foreword

A Glossary Of Places And People

Introduction

PART I

A World In Turmoil

PART II

The Peace Of Innocence

PART III

Nothing Will Ever Be The Same

PART IV

The Aftermath

PART V

Fatima's Message, Promises And Secrets

PART VI

The Controversy

PART VII

The Message of Fatima, One Hundred Years Later

CONCLUSION

About the Author

Acknowledgements

Researching and writing books can have a transformative effect on the author and my work on this one has created in me a burning desire to not only continue to follow the precepts of Jesus, but to live the message of his Blessed Mother to the children of Fatima as well. My prayer is that this experience will create in me a new devotion to the Immaculate Hearts of Jesus and Mary, the will to sacrifice for the conversion of sinners, the stamina to pray the Rosary daily for world peace and the grace to make the First Saturday devotions as prescribed by The Lady of The Rosary one hundred years ago.

My thanks to the Very Reverend Robert Webster, Pastor of Blessed Sacrament Church in Clermont, Florida for his contribution to, and support of, this project.

Above all, my continued love and gratitude to my wife Margie for once again serving as my proofreader and sounding board. I know it can be an awful burden to read unfinished works of history, Margie, and I love you for taking the time to read and correct these drafts.

Dedication

This book is dedicated to the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ and His Blessed Mother, Our Lady of Fatima, for the unwavering love and protection provided me throughout my entire life, even during those times when it may have seemed to me that I walked alone;

To my parents Frank and Anna Caranci who instilled in me from an early age the faith that has sustained me all these years; and,

To Margie and our entire family, specifically our children Heather Anne and Matthew James, and our grandchildren Matthew Jr., Jacob, Vincent and Casey who make all the wonderful things that life offers so much more enjoyable.

Foreword

The world was a very different place one hundred years ago. On May 13, 1917, the first “Great War” was at its most harsh with no end in sight. Even at its conclusion it was not necessarily an end for in just two decades another “Great War” would begin. It was a time of uncertainty and fear. It was also an opportunity for people to reorder their lives.

In a small place called Fatima in Portugal, to three young shepherd children, the Blessed Mother appeared seven times bringing a message of hope and peace to the troubled of heart and to a world in the midst of turmoil.

Now known to us as Our Lady of the Rosary, and with a motherly care for the Universal Church, she implored the world to prayer, reparation from sin, and conversion. The effects of this trifold call to the individual, to the Church, and to the world could make of us a more holy people on the journey to the Kingdom!

While the “Three Secrets” have already been revealed, it is important to remember that we have learned:

1. That hell truly exists
2. That the Great War(s) would come to an end through prayer and devotion to the Lord
3. That there will be times of great trials, persecutions and martyrdoms and among them of a “bishop in white”

And, if these “secrets” be true, we also know:

1. That Heaven really exists!
2. That our prayers can and do have a great effect on the lives of others and can bring about worldly peace
3. And that we have a faith that enables us to endure all things in the name of the Lord Jesus!

For the message of Fatima always points our hearts and minds to the Lord Jesus, He who is the “way, the truth and the life.” Our lives then are to be directed to Him who brings about peace, satisfaction from our hungers and thirsts, and healing to the world. Thus, we pray the “Fatima Prayer,”

O, my Jesus, forgive us our sins.
Save us from the fires of hell.
Lead all souls to heaven
Especially those most in need of thy mercy!

One hundred years later, on this May 13, 2017, in an uncertain world, the trusting and humble heart hears this message with renewed hope!

Very Reverend Robert Webster
Blessed Sacrament Church
Clermont, Florida

The Very Reverend Robert E. Webster, author of the Foreword, meets with Saint Pope John Paul II. The two met in Castel Gandolfo, Italy in 2001.

A Glossary of Some of the Places and People Important to the Story of Fatima

The Places:

Fatima – A civil parish in the municipality of Ourem, in the Portuguese Santarem District. The parish encompasses several villages and localities of which Fatima is the largest. Fatima is 76 miles north of Lisbon and 116 miles south of Porto. Fatima is located on the Estremenho Limestone Massif, on the flanks of the Serra de Aire, approximately 980 ft. above sea level. It is an arid landscape with rocky ground interspersed with limestone outcroppings. Fatima, Aljustrel and Cova da Iria are three of the twenty-two localities that make up the parish.

Aljustrel – The village within the township of Fatima, Portugal where the three children lived. It is a mountainous region at the center of Portugal.

Chousa Velha – The property owned by Lucia's parents where the apparition of the Angel occurred.

Cova da Iria – Land owned by Lucia's father that is located about a mile and a half northwest of Aljustrel and about ½ mile south of Fatima. This is where Our Lady appeared to the three children.

The Cabeco – The hill where the children played, prayed and sacrificed.

Loca do Cabeco – The cave on the slope of the hill known as the Cabeco. Located to the west, near Aljustrel, Loca do Cabeco, is a smaller agglomeration of rocky outcroppings where, in 1916, an angel appeared twice to the three children. These apparitions were recounted by Lucia in her memoirs in the 1930s.

Moita – A small village to the north of the Cova da Iria about 1km from the place of the apparitions. It is the village where two poor families lived whose children were fed by the three seers. (pg. 46)

Vila Nova de Ourem – The site of St. Augustine's Hospital where Jacinta was admitted from July 1 to August 31, 1919. Also the site of the Administrator's house where the children were taken after being kidnapped by the Administrator.

Valinhos – The place of the fourth apparition on August 19th, near their little hamlet.^[1]

The People:

Lucia dos Santos – The oldest of the three seers. Lucia was born on March 22, 1907 and was 10 years old at the time of the first apparition on May 13, 1917. She had six brothers and sisters: Maria dos Anjos (1891-1986), Teresa de Jesus Rosa dos Santos, Manuel Rosa dos Santos (1895-1977), Glória de Jesus Rosa dos Santos (1898-1971), Carolina de Jesus Rosa dos Santos (1902-1992), and Maria Rosa (died at birth). Lucia died on February 13, 2005 at the age of 97. (Even though Lúcia's birthday is registered as March 22, 1907, her actual date of birth is March 28. In those days, it was required that parents bring their children for baptism on the eighth day after birth or face a fine, and, because March 30 was a more convenient day, the 22nd was chosen as her birthday. Lúcia later recalled that, at the time, no one attached much importance to one's birthday.)

Antonio dos Santos and Maria Rosa Ferreira (1869-1942) – Lucia's father and mother married on 19 November 1890. Although peasants, the Santos family was by no means poor, owning land "in the direction of Montelo, Our Lady of Ortiga, Fátima, Valinhos, Cabeço, Charneca, and Cova da Iria." (Antonio is also known as Antonio Abobora.)

Jacinta Marto – The youngest of the three seers was born on March 11, 1910 and died on February 20, 1920.

Francisco Marto – Born June 11, 1908 the sixth of seven children. Died April 4, 1919. He was 9 years old at the time of the first apparition on May 13, 1917.

Manuel Pedro Marto – Jacinta & Francisco's father and Lucia's uncle. He died in 1919. Olimpia Marto – Mother of Jacinta & Francisco, sister to Antonio dos Santos.

Artur de Oliveira Santos – The Administrator of the district of Vila Nova de Ourem, an anticlerical fanatic who jailed the three children. He died in 1955. Known as the Tinsmith he was a Freemason who enjoyed much power through his position and ruled his district in a tyrannical fashion, imposing restrictions on churches and religious services on his slightest whim.

Fr. Pena – The parish priest from St. Anthony's Church in Aljustrel who denied Lucia the ability to make her First Communion at the age of 6.

Fr. Francisco Cruz, S.J. – 1859-1948, Questioned the children following the apparitions. Father Francisco da Cruz, Servant of God, was born in Alcochete, Setúbal, Portugal, where now a large statue stands in his honor in Revolution Square. He studied at the University of Coimbra and was ordained in 1882. He first taught philosophy in the seminary of Santarém and directed the school for orphans in Braga, returning afterward to his own diocese, the Patriarchate of Lisbon, where he was spiritual director of the minor seminary. He himself came to Jesuits for spiritual direction most of his life, the latter and greater part of which was spent traveling the length of Portugal visiting prisons and hospitals in every city, giving alms to the poor and ministering spiritually to all. Though he desired as early as 1880 to enter the Society of Jesus, his ministry took first place. The superior general of the Jesuits obtained permission first from Pope Pius XI in 1929 to allow Cruz to take vows as a Jesuit on his death bed, against which event Cruz always carried the vow formula with him, and then from Pius XII in 1940 to take vows immediately and without the need of making a novitiate or of residing in a Jesuit community. He did pronounce his vows at the Seminário da Costa in Guimarães on December 3, 1940, the feast of St. Francis Xavier, SJ to whom he had great devotion. His cause for beatification is now being considered.

Fr. Manuel Marques Ferreira, aka Fr. Boicinha – the zealous priest who replaced Fr. Pena as the parish priest of St. Anthony's Church in Aljustrel, and preached against the evils of the custom of endless dancing.”^[2]

Introduction

A century ago, amidst a world of sin, crime, corruption and turmoil, three young shepherd children claimed to have seen a great Lady appear to them in a cove in the small village of Fatima. The date was May 13, 1917 and Lucia dos Santos, a child of just ten years, along with her cousins Jacinta Marto, eight, and her nine-year old brother Francisco, would see the Lady several more times in the ensuing months.

From the outset the children were ridiculed, berated and in some cases, beaten because their stories of a ghostly lady of light standing on a tree talking to three small shepherds was just too much for most to believe. Lucia was bold enough to ask the Lady for a public miracle that would force the masses to accept the children's account as truth, and then publicly exclaimed the Lady's promise to deliver a miracle for all to see. She even noted the date and time that the miraculous event would occur; October 13, 1917 at twelve o'clock Noon. The precision of the prediction would logically indicate the truthfulness of their claim, yet the next several months would bring untold pain and suffering for the children because of the venomous abhorrence from those who believe their message was self-serving fantasy.

Between May and October, the children several times repeated with consistency the facts of their visions. Over the course of those months, a time that included individual interrogations by parents, strangers, clergy, and anticlerics alike, and though being arrested and threatened with a torturous death if they did not recant their stories, the children's account never changed, nor did they ever betray the Lady's command to keep secret several revelations made known during the Apparitions. Three young, innocent peasant children preferred death to deceit and many times thought they would be shown their preference.

“On the very day, and at nearly the exact hour they had foretold, some 70,000 persons that assembled at the cove testified to the unique experience of seeing the sun dance in the sky, spin around, and then fall toward earth. Witnesses as far as 25 miles away reported seeing the same events. Such widespread testimony serves to confirm that the children actually had seen the Mother of Jesus, and that He had given to the simple souls at Cova da Iria the sign in the sky for which the Pharisees had begged Him in mock reverence, and which He had refused to grant their unbelieving and adulterous hearts.”^[3]

Those that had come to power in Portugal following the revolutionary events preceding the declarations of World War I, intended to destroy religion within two generations and accordingly refused to acknowledge that anything out of the ordinary had occurred on that 13th day of October 1917. Perhaps it takes the unwavering faith of the innocent hearts of children to so readily believe the unbelievable. Others, as Jesus Himself described in the parable of The Rich Man and Lazarus, “...will not be convinced even if someone rises from the dead.”^[4]

The visions of Our Lady were beautiful by every account. Yet, within the beauty, Our Lady allowed the children to witness some of the most horrific scenes that both this life, and the afterlife of sinners, may contain. The children were privy to visions of the eternal flames and unending torment of hell. They were also shown the chaos and bloodshed of events on earth, the interpretation of which is still a matter of worldly discord. One hundred years later, controversy abounds regarding the meaning of the various secrets told by Our Lady of the Rosary to the children of Fatima in July 1917.

Though the facts of the events described on the following pages are incontrovertible, the reader is always free to decide what to believe and how to interpret the events. As with most history, there is usually an element of subjective interpretation despite guidance from those of authority. So, sit back now and come on a virtual journey through history and faith. Open your heart and your mind and this story just might change your life forever!

"It is one of the most enduring and mysterious controversies of the Catholic Church -- The prophesies of Fatima"

~The History Channel

"We are at a crossroads, and one direction will lead to world peace and if we choose the wrong direction it will lead to wars so terrible that nations will be annihilated."

~Michael LaCourte

Executive Director, W.A.F., USA
(World Apostolate of Fatima, USA)

The Promise of Fatima

One Hundred Years of History, Mystery and Faith

PART I
A WORLD IN TURMOIL

May 1894 – May 1911 – Bosnia, Austria-Hungary

Sickness and death seemed constants in the young man's life. Gavrilo Princip, was the son of a postman, born one of nine children in Bosnia-Herzegovina in July of 1894. Six of his eight siblings died in infancy and Gavrilo himself was afflicted with tuberculosis.

Equal to the turmoil created by the sickness within his own house was the political climate enveloping his home nation. The 1878 Treaty of Berlin provided Austria-Hungary the mandate to occupy and administer the Ottoman Vilayet of Bosnia while allowing the Ottoman Empire to remain sovereign. It also recognized the sovereignty of the Principality of Serbia which in 1882 was transformed into a kingdom, one whose rulers maintained close relations with Austria-Hungary^[5]

Serbian National Gavrilo Princip was not quite 20 years old when he fatally shot Archduke Franz Ferdinand and his wife Sophie on Sunday June 28, 1914 setting off a chain of events that would lead to World War I.

In May of 1903, however, Serbian military officers stormed the Serbian Royal Palace capturing General Laza Petrovic, the head of the Palace Guard. It didn't take long for Petrovic to reveal the hiding place of King Alexander I Obrenovic and his Queen, Draga. Both were brutally assassinated and their bullet-ridden corpses hurled from the palace window. Petar I Karadordevic, a nationalist, was installed as the new King.

Throughout the course of the next decade, relations between Serbia and Austria-Hungary deteriorated. Between 1906 and 1913, many wars were fought including the Pig War of 1906, the Bosnian crisis of 1908-1909, and two Balkan Wars of 1912-1913. It was during the latter war that Serbia conquered Macedonia and Kosovo from the Ottoman Empire.

1914 map of Serbia

Serbian nationalists were emboldened by the military successes. In Austria-Hungary, the Serbs grew increasingly bothered under Austro-Hungary rule prompting the organization and proliferation of many Serb cultural groups and prompting the attempted assassinations of many Austro-Hungarian officials. One particular attempt carried out on June 15, 1910 against General Marijan Varesanin by Bogdan Zerajic, a 22-year old Orthodox Serb from Hezegovina, captured the attention of Gavrilo Princip and his friend Nedeljko Cabrinovic. General Varesanin was the Governor of Bosnia and Herzegovina and ruled with an iron fist. Zerajic was a mere student at the Faculty of Law at the University of Zagreb when he fired five bullets at Varesanin and then one additional bullet into his own brain. To Princip and Cabrinovic, however, Zerajic was an inspiration.

The Resistance

May 1911 – Belgrade, Serbia

The Black Hand, or “Unification or Death” as it was sometimes known, was an organized terrorist group designed to promote the liberation of Serbs outside Serbia from Ottoman rule. Formed officially on May 9, 1911, the group’s origins can be traced to the National Defense, formed in 1908 with roots predating 1901. The Serbian secret society was led by Col. Dragutin Dimitrijevic. Apis, as he was often called, was a man who had been instrumental in the coup that brought King Petar I to the throne in Serbia in 1903. Membership of the Black Hand was comprised primarily of army officers, though there were a few government officials attending. The members’ ideological viewpoints ran the gambit from the idealism of its young members to the conspiratorial-mindedness of its army officers.^[6]

With their main base of operations in Belgrade, the society conducted propaganda campaigns and established a network of revolutionary cells throughout Bosnia. While not so influential outside of Serbia, within it, the Black Hand dominated the army and terrorized government officials giving the secret society a great deal of influence. In fact, Black Hand members held positions of importance in both the army and government with Crown Prince Alexander alleged to have been an enthusiastic supporter. Their goal was to unite all the territories with a South Slavic majority that were not ruled by either Serbia or Montenegro and their inspiration was drawn from similar unification efforts in Italy (1859-70) and Germany (1871). Credibility was accomplished through a blurring of the lines of distinction between themselves and a more prestigious organization known as the Narodna Odbrana.

The Black Hand, a secret society and organized terrorist group formed in 1911 under the leadership of Col. Dragutin Dimitrijevic, was comprised of army officers and government officials who conducted propaganda campaigns and established a network of revolutionary cells throughout Bosnia.

Dimitrijevic knew well that success of the group depended on secrecy. To that end, he insisted that members knew only of the activities of their own cell. Members were required to take an oath swearing:

“By the Sun which shineth upon me, by the Earth which feedeth me, by God, by the blood of my forefathers, by my honor and by my life, that from this moment onward and until my death, I shall faithfully serve the task of this organization and that I shall at all times be prepared to bear for it any sacrifice. I further swear by God, by my honor and by my life, that I shall unconditionally carry into effect all its orders and commands. I further swear by my God, by my honor and by my life, that I shall keep within myself all the secrets of this organization and carry them with me into my grave. May God and my brothers in this organization be my judges if at any time I should wittingly fail or break this oath.”

Dimitrijevic would soon learn that there was no shortage of potential revolutionaries willing to take his oath.

May 1912 – Belgrade, Serbia

Despite his own sense of loss and his poor health, Princip had attended schools in Sarajevo and Tuzla, but, in May 1912, just two months shy of his eighteenth birthday, Princip left his home in Bosnia to study in Belgrade, the capital and largest city in Serbia. It was here that Princip aggrandized the nationalist tendencies he had begun to nurture while in Bosnia. He would later say that the would-be assassin, Bogdan Zerajic “was my first model. When I was seventeen I passed whole nights at his grave, reflecting on our wretched condition and thinking of him. It is there that I made up my mind sooner or later to perpetrate an outrage.”^[7]

Princip and other like-minded political activists hoped to one day unify the independent Kingdom of Serbia and Bosnia-Herzegovina, territories previously annexed by the Austro-Hungarian Empire in 1908. By this time, he had come to despise the polyglot empire of Austria-Hungary. The Empire was now comprised of various ethnic groups that vociferously disagreed about fundamental principles of religion, politics and the like. Naturally the annexation angered Serbian nationalists who held strongly the belief that the territories should be part of Serbia.

Princip was caught up in the political fervor and with the Ottomans being pushed out of the Balkans, he saw an opportunity. So, while living in Serbia, he enlisted in the Black Hand. With alleged ties to the Kingdom of Serbia, this nationalist organization shared his vision for a greater Yugoslavia. The Black Hand shared Princip’s disgust of Emperor Franz Joseph’s proposed reforms that included plans to combine the Slavic lands within the Austro-Hungarian empire into a third crown. Such reorganization could have been a safeguard against Serb irredentism. This possibility made Franz Ferdinand, heir to the throne of Franz Joseph, a threat to those who stood in opposition to the Emperor’s plans.

And so, at the rather young age of nineteen Princip was determined, troubled and in poor health, a trio of character traits that in combination can have lethal consequences. The world was about to learn just how lethal.

January 1914 – Toulouse, France

While some members of the Black Hand kept busy training in guerrilla warfare tactics, various cell leaders plotted an action that might serve to achieve their goal of a united Serbia. Muhamed Mehmedbasic was the carpenter son of an impoverished Muslim nobleman from Herzegovina. He was also a member of the Black Hand who had recently returned from Toulouse, France where he attended a meeting with Serbian Major Vojislav Tankosic, Dimitrijevic's trusted advisor. Mehmedbasic longed to revive the revolutionary spirit of Bosnia and, to that end, was eager to carry out any act of terrorism that might achieve that objective. During his meeting in Toulouse various officials were discussed as possible targets of assassination but one had been picked and Mehmedbasic received his assignment; go to Bosnia-Herzegovina and kill Bosnian Governor Oskar Potiorek.

Mehmedbasic procured his weapons, a dagger, and a bottle of poison, and boarded a train leaving France, bound for Bosnia-Herzegovina. Unbeknownst to Mehmedbasic, a wanted thief had also managed to board the train. When police boarded the train in search of the thief, Mehmedbasic's paranoia piqued and he tossed the weapons out of the train window. When he finally arrived in Bosnia, the would-be assassin had no weapons with which to carry out his attack. Almost immediately, he began the search for new implements of death thereby delaying the plot to kill Governor Potiorek.

March 26, 1914 – Mostar, Bosnia & Herzegovina

Dimitrijevic had discovered that not all were pleased with the plan to kill Potiorek, so to satisfy the Serbs, Dimitrijevic ordered instead, the assassination of Archduke Franz Ferdinand, an order that may not have been sanctioned by the full Executive Committee of the Black Hand. On March 26, 1914, Mehmedbasic was summoned to a meeting in Mostar where Danilo Ilic, a former Sarajevo school teacher who now worked for a newspaper, informed him that they have rescinded the order to kill Potiorek in favor of a plan to assassinate Ferdinand. Mehmedbasic was ordered to await further instructions.

Late April 1914 – Belgrade, Serbia

To carry out his new mission, Ilic recruited two Serbian youths, Vaso Cubrilovic and Cvjetko Popovic. He did so shortly after the celebration of the Orthodox Easter on April 19, 1914. At around the same time, three additional young Bosnian Serbs, Gavrilo Princip, Nedeljko Cabrinovic and Trifko Grabaz, all subjects of Austria-Hungary, approached Milan Ciganovic, a former guerrilla fighter known for his ability to procure weapons. Through Ciganovic, the men were put in touch with Major Tankosic with whom they reached an agreement to transport arms to Sarajevo and participate in the assassination. The three young men had already been trained in marksmanship and bomb throwing by members of the Serbian military.

Tuesday May 26, 1914 – Belgrade, Serbia

Though eager to carry out the assassination, the young men had no recourse but to wait patiently as circumstances, including the Emperor's health issues, caused delays in the delivery of the weapons. Finally, the men took delivery of the first gun when Tankosic gave the assassins one FN Model 1910 pistol. They took turns shooting some practice rounds of very expensive .380 ACP ammunition in a park near Belgrade and then waited until May 26, 1914 when the balance of the weapons arrived. Among the provisions supplied on that day by Major Tankosic were “six hand grenades, four new Browning FN Model 1910 automatic pistols with sufficient .380 ACP ammunition, money, suicide pills, training [of Princip, Grabaz and Cabrinovic], a special map with the location of gendarmes marked, knowledge of contacts on a clandestine tunnel used to infiltrate agents and arms into Austria-Hungary, and a small card authorizing the use of that tunnel.”^[8]

Thursday May 28, 1914 – Belgrade, Serbia

Armed with more weaponry than needed, and trained in its use, Princip, Grabez and Cabrinovic boarded a boat from Belgrade to Sabec via the Sava River. There they handed Serbian Border Guard, Captain Popovic, the small card provided them by Tankosic. In exchange, they received a letter addressed to Serbian Captain Prvanovic, and a form containing the names of three customs officials whose identities they could assume. That letter would entitle them to discounted train tickets to the small border town of Loznica.

Friday May 29, 1914 – Loznica, Serbia

The three assassins arrived in Loznica the following day. There the three met with Captain Prvanovic who summoned three of his revenue sergeants. As the men waited for the revenue sergeants to arrive, they argued over what Princip and Grabez said were Cabrinovic's repeated violations of operational security. The disagreement culminated with Cabrinovic handing over his weapons. Princip then instructed him to go to Zvornik and use the ID card provided by Grabez to cross the border into Tuzla where he could wait for the others. When the revenue sergeants arrived, they discussed how best to cross the border undetected.

SATURDAY MAY 30 – FRIDAY JUNE 5, 1914 ISAKOVIC ISLAND

It was still the morning of May 30th when Sergeant Budivoj Grbic walked Princip and Grabez to Isakovic's Island, a small mass of land on the Drina River separating Bosnia from Serbia. Arriving the next day, the assassins and their weapons were passed on to agents of the Serbian Narodna Odbrana who transported them to the first of many safe houses. Beginning on the evening of June 1st, Princip, Grabez and the weapons were passed from one agent to another, each taking them a bit further along until June 3, 1914 when they arrived in Tuzla. Misko Jovanovic, one of the Narodna Odbrana agents, kept charge of the weapons while Princip and Grabez linked up with Cabrinovic. All the while, Narodna Odbrana agents reported their activities to the group's President who kept Serbian Caretaker Prime Minister Nikola Pasic updated.

Franz Ferdinand, heir to the throne of Franz Joseph was arguably the richest man in Austria. He was viewed by members of the Black Hand as a threat to those who stood in opposition to the Emperor's plan. His assassination sparked World War I. This photo was taken in 1914.

Cabrinovic's father happened to be a police official in Sarajevo and while in Tuzla, Cabrinovic met with a police detective that was friendly with his father. He discretely inquired and learned that Franz Ferdinand would be visiting Sarajevo on June 28. He passed that information to Princip and Grabez. They decided that would be the day of the assassination.

The three assassins arrived in Sarajevo on June 4th and all went their separate ways. Princip took advantage of the separation to visit family and check in with Ilic. On June 6th, he took up residence with Ilic's mother. Grabez visited his family in Pale and Cabrinovic moved into his father's house in Sarajevo.

While all this was happening, it was learned that Demitrijevic may have acted unilaterally in ordering the change of target from Governor Potiorek to Archduke Ferdinand. Though Demitrijevic had every reason to believe that the action would result in a war between Austria and Serbia he also believed that Russia would rush to the aid of Serbia providing the protection necessary to ensure a Serbian victory. But if there is any truth to the allegation that Prime Minister Pasic was unaware of the new assassination target, the revelation did nothing to alter the arrangement. For though he may have been unable to act in time to prevent the assassins from crossing the border into Sarajevo, once there, the trio idled for about a month before executing their plan. They did so without interference. The result of their completed mission would set off a chain of events far deadlier than any anticipated Austro-Serbian war could possibly be.

Sunday June 14 – Thursday June 18, 1914
Tuzla, Bosnia & Herzegovina

On June 14th Ilic traveled to Tuzla to retrieve the weapons being held by Misko Jovanovic so they could be delivered to Sarajevo. Jovanovic hid them in a large box of sugar and, the next day, the two travelers boarded a train to Doboj separately. There, Jovanovic handed the box of weapons to Ilic. Later in the afternoon of June 15th, Ilic took the box and boarded a train.

To avoid police detection, he transferred to a local train outside Sarajevo and then transferred again to a tram that would take him to his mother's house. Ilic then removed the weapons from the sugar box, placed them in a suitcase, and hid the suitcase under the sofa. For reasons that are unclear at best, Ilic travelled to Brod sometime between June 16 and June 18.

SATURDAY JUNE 6 – SATURDAY JUNE 27, 1914 AUSTRIA-HUNGARY

The Austrian Emperor Franz Joseph I planned to combine the Slavic lands within the Austro-Hungarian empire into a third crown, a plan drawing the ire of The Black Hand.

Archduke Franz Ferdinand and his wife, Duchess Sophie von Chotkovato, were making final arrangements for departure on their mission to Bosnia. There, under orders of his uncle, Emperor Franz Joseph, the Archduke was to observe the military maneuvers that were scheduled to take place in the capital city of Sarajevo.

Ferdinand, a Roman Catholic deeply in love with Sophie, looked forward to the trip as an opportunity to share the splendor of his position with his wife. Because Sophie was not born of a dynastic family, her marriage to Ferdinand, arguably the richest man in Austria, carried with it certain restrictions. Franz Joseph had consented to the marriage with the condition that no heir of the couple could ascend to the throne. Further, Sophie was barred from any share of Ferdinand's rank and splendor. She was not even allowed to sit by his side at a public event unless the Archduke was acting in a military capacity. Consequently, this trip would provide the opportunity for the couple to sit side-by-side in an open car as they traveled through Sarajevo on the fourteenth anniversary of their marriage.

Sophie, on the other hand, was less concerned about the pomp and circumstance related to the mission. Rather, according to the couple's oldest son, Duke Maximilian, Sophie was acutely aware of the political tensions that existed and feared for her husband's safety. It was for this reason that she insisted on accompanying her husband on the trip to Bosnia. Once there, the royal couple also planned to celebrate the opening of the new location of the state museum.

Duchess Sophie von Chotkovato was not born of a dynastic family and her marriage to Ferdinand was not readily accepted by Franz Joseph. Though he ultimately consented to the union, he imposed several restrictions, one of which prevented her from appearing in public with Ferdinand except when he was acting in a military capacity.

While the Archduke prepared for travel, Ilic began handing out the weapons. It was June 27th and as they sat in a café in Sarajevo, Ilic introduced Mehmedbasic to Princip saying “tomorrow [he] is to be with us.” Up until this day, the identities of the assassins from Belgrade and those he had recruited locally had not known of the others involvement. Ilic, Mehmedbasic and Princip then sent a postcard to France addressed to Vladimir Gacinovic, the Black Hand Provincial Director of Bosnia-Herzegovina.

SUNDAY, JUNE 28, 1914 – 9:28 AM SARAJEVO, BOSNIA & HERZEGOVINA

The morning sun shone brightly on this warm summer day as the train carrying the Archduke and Dutchess departed Ilidza Spa toward Sarajevo. As the train sped toward its destination, Governor Oskar Potiorek made his way to the station to meet the royal couple and their party. Six automobiles were waiting when the Archduke and his entourage arrived.

Three local police officers mistakenly climbed into the lead car with the chief officer of special security, leaving behind the special security officers who were supposed to accompany their chief. Mayor Fehim Curcic, and the Sarajevo Police Commissioner Dr. Gerde, took their positions in the first car of dignitaries.

The 1911 Graf & Stift 28/32 PS Double Phaeton that carried Ferdinand and Sophie at the time of their assassination.

Ignoring the warnings that the Black Hand had been involved in terrorist activities, the royal couple, along with Governor Potiorek, took their seats in the back of a 1911 Graf & Stift 28/32 PS Double Phaeton. It was Serb National Day which made the atmosphere even more dangerous than it might have otherwise been. Regardless, a decision was made to leave the top rolled back on the Archduke's sports car. Lieutenant Colonel Count Franz von Harrach and the driver were seated up front.

SUNDAY JUNE 28, 1914 – 10:00 AM SARAJEVO, BOSNIA & HERZEGOVINA

To make the job of the limited security officers on hand even more difficult, the motorcade route had been pre-announced with the first stop being a brief inspection of the military barracks scheduled for 10:00 AM. The motorcade was then scheduled to travel to the town hall via Appel Quay for a reception hosted by Sarajevo's mayor. General Michael von Appel, the local military commander, had proposed that a line of troops stand along the intended route, but the proposal was nixed for fear of offending the loyal citizenry. Instead, all matters of security were left to the sixty on-duty members of the Sarajevo Police Department.

Map of the assassination route showing where each of the assassins was standing when Archduke

Ferdinand's motorcade passed by. #1 marks the location of Mehmedbasic, #2 is Cabrinovic, who threw the grenade that exploded underneath the car behind the one carrying the Archduke, #3 is Cubrilovic, #4 is Popovic, #5 is Princip, who eventually murdered Archduke Ferdinand and his wife Sophie in front of Schiller's Delicatessen, and #6 marks the location of Grabez. (Image courtesy of Michael Corsini of Skepsis Multimedia.)

SUNDAY JUNE 28, 1914 – 10:08 AM SARAJEVO, BOSNIA & HERZEGOVINA

The motorcade worked its way toward the Austro-Hungarian Bank and the Mostar Café where Mehmedbasic, the first of the assassins standing along the route, was positioned. Mehmedbasic, who concealed a bomb, stood right in front of the Café's garden, exactly where Ilic had placed him. As the motorcade passed in front of him, however, Mehmedbasic noticed that a policeman was standing right behind him. Fearing that he would get arrested before getting a chance to throw his bomb, he got cold feet and fled the scene. Standing right next to him was a second assassin, Vaso Cubrilovic. Though armed with a pistol and a bomb, he too failed to take any action later saying that he couldn't bring himself to fire upon the beautiful Sophie.

SUNDAY JUNE 28, 1914 – 10:10 AM SARAJEVO, BOSNIA & HERZEGOVINA

Archduke Ferdinand and Duchess Sophie greet bystanders along the motorcade route on the day of their assassination.

A little further along the route, on the opposite side of the street near the central police station, stood Nedeljko Cabrinovic. From his position near the Miljacka River, this third assassin concealed a grenade. As Franz Ferdinand's car drove near, Cabrinovic threw the explosive which had a 10 second delayed fuse. The grenade, however, bounced off the folded back convertible cover and rolled into the street, exploding under the car immediately behind the Archduke's vehicle. That car carried the head of Ferdinand's military chancellery; Sophie's lady in waiting; Potiorek's chief adjutant, Lt. Colonel Eric von Merizzi; the owner of the car and his driver. The explosion disabled the vehicle, left a crater that measured one-foot in diameter and 6.5 inches in depth, and wounded between 16-20 people including von Merizzi and another occupant of the car. To prevent his capture, Cabrinovic immediately swallowed his cyanide pill and leaped into the River. Two detectives and two observers jumped in after him. The cyanide pill was apparently not of sufficient strength and failed to kill Cabrinovic, causing him instead to only vomit. To make matters worse for the would-be assassin, the hot, dry summer caused a dramatic reduction in the depth of the river water which was now just a tad over 5 inches deep. So rather than dredging his dead body from the river, police were able to retrieve Cabrinovic very much alive and take him into custody, but not before the crowd had an opportunity to exact their revenge by beating him severely.

The procession, meanwhile left the disabled vehicle and sped away in the direction of Town Hall. Franz Urban drove so fast that it was virtually impossible for remaining assassins Popovic, Princip and Grabez to fire their weapons as the motorcade sped passed each of them. Princip, thinking the assassination attempt had been foiled, began to walk home, stopping along the way in Moritz Schiller's delicatessen near the Latin Bridge, to get a sandwich and to collect his thoughts. After collecting his thoughts, Princip concluded that the royal motorcade would be passing Schiller's on its way to the National Museum. He decided, therefore, to wait on the sidewalk in front of the delicatessen hoping for one more chance to complete the mission. Princip had no way of knowing that the government officials had cancelled the events planned for the rest of the day.

SUNDAY JUNE 28, 1914 – 10:20 AM SARAJEVO, BOSNIA & HERZEGOVINA

The remaining members of the royal party arrived at Town Hall and made their way inside. Mayor Fehim Curcic began his prepared remarks, but the visibly upset Archduke interrupted him. "Mr. Mayor," the Archduke said, "I came here on a visit and I am greeted with bombs. It is outrageous." After being calmed down by Sophie, Ferdinand allowed the Mayor to complete his remarks. Before beginning his own prepared remarks, Ferdinand had to wait for a copy of his speech to arrive. The speech had been in the possession of an aid who was riding in the damaged car. When it arrived, it was still wet and stained with the blood of the blast victims. So, in addition to delivering segments of the prepared remarks, Ferdinand adlibbed a bit by thanking the people of Sarajevo for their support adding, “I see in them an expression of their joy at the failure of the attempt at assassination.”^[9]

While the dignitaries addressed their audience, members of the official party discussed their options. A decision had already been made to cancel the balance of the day’s planned events. Now, Baron Rumerskirch, Ferdinand’s chamberlain, suggested that the royal couple remain at Town Hall until armed troops could arrive. That idea was rejected by Governor Potiorek, however, because the soldiers would be arriving directly from their maneuvers and would not have on the appropriate dress uniforms typically worn for such duties. Potiorek added rhetorically, “Do you think that Sarajevo is full of assassins?”

Ferdinand and Sophie though were more concerned about the condition of those wounded in the motorcade blast and insisted on making a stop at the hospital to check on them. Potiorek agreed but thought it best for the Dutchess to remain at Town Hall. Sophie refused saying, “As long as the Archduke shows himself in public today, I will not leave him.”^[10]

SUNDAY JUNE 28, 1914 – 10:45 AM SARAJEVO, BOSNIA & HERZEGOVINA

Archduke Ferdinand, Sophie and Potiorek all entered the rear seats of the motorcade’s third car. As they departed Town Hall, Count Harrach climbed atop the left running board of that car in a protective position. Governor Potiorek had ordered the royal car to travel straight along the Appel Quay to the Sarajevo Hospital. This route (see map on page 14) would avoid the dangers that might persist in the city centre. However, with Potiorek’s aid, Eric von Merizzi, in the hospital being treated for the injuries he had received in the earlier explosion, that message was never delivered to the driver who mistakenly took a right turn onto Franz Josef Street, the original route that would have taken them to the National Museum.

The Royal couple leave town hall after making speeches following the failed assassination attempt on June 28, 1914. Fate would lead their car right into the path of another waiting assassin.

This is what the street of Sarajevo looked like on June 28, 1914 minutes before Princip assassinated the Archduke and Duchess.

SUNDAY JUNE 28, 1914 – 10:50 AM SARAJEVO, BOSNIA & HERZEGOVINA

Potiorek yelled out to the driver to reverse direction and instead take the Quay to the hospital. The driver complied, stopping the car almost in front of Schiller's delicatessen before backing up. Princip was astounded at his good fortune as he was only three yards away. He immediately stepped forward, and pulling the FN Model 1910 pistol chambered for the .380 ACP from his coat, fired twice into the car from a distance of only 5 feet. The first bullet struck the Archduke in the neck piercing the jugular vein. The second, which Princip later maintained was intended for Governor Potiorek, hit Sophie in the abdomen. Though mortally wounded, both remained upright in their seats. Perhaps, because of their upright position, Potiorek assumed the shots had missed but because of the very attempt, instructed the driver, Franz Urban, to go directly to the Governor's mansion.

Princip, following instructions he had been given, pointed the gun at his own head. A man standing behind him saw this and seized Princip's right arm foiling the suicide attempt. Two police officers joined the struggle to subdue Princip and immediately took possession of the weapon and arrested him.

Gavrilo Princip was captured moments after assassinating Archduke Ferdinand and his wife Sophie. After his suicide attempt was foiled by a man standing behind him, he was arrested and led away by police for interrogation.

Amidst the confusion and hysteria, Urban quickly backed the car up and began the drive to the Governor's house. As the car made its way across Laieiner Bridge, "a stream of blood shot from Franz Ferdinand's mouth." At seeing this, Sophie yelled, "For Heaven's sake! What happened to you?" As she said this, she sank down in her seat. The Governor and Harrach thought she had fainted and reached back to help her up. Ferdinand, however, knew the truth – his wife was bleeding internally from the gunshot wound. Ferdinand looked toward Sophie and yelled, “Sophie dear, Sophie dear! Don’t die! Live for our children!”^[11]

The car carrying Potiorek and the wounded royal couple sped toward the Governor’s residence where the royal couple might get some medical treatment.

The bloodstained military uniform worn by Franz Ferdinand on June 28, 1914.

SUNDAY JUNE 28, 1914 – 11:30 AM SARAJEVO, BOSNIA & HERZEGOVINA

The car pulled up to the Governor’s house within 40 minutes of the shootings, but it was too late. Dutchess Sophie had died from her fatal gunshot wound while enroute, and Archduke Ferdinand barely clung to life. He died about ten minutes later.

Archduke Franz Ferdinand was a Catholic and very much in love with Sophie. Their marriage, though ultimately accepted by Ferdinand's uncle Franz Joseph, meant that no heir of the couple could ever be in the line of succession to the throne. Though mortally wounded himself, Ferdinand looked at his blood-drenched wife yelling "Sophie dear! Sophie dear! Don't die! Live for our children!" But Princess Sophie of Hohenberg was already dead when the car carrying the wounded couple arrived at the Governor's mansion.

THE AFTERMATH

JULY 28, 1914 – APRIL 6, 1917

As the Black Hand had hoped, the assassination of Archduke Ferdinand and his wife Sophie proved to be the last straw and brought Austro-Serbian tensions to a head. While there was no hard evidence immediately pointing to the Black Hand's involvement, the volume of circumstantial evidence was all Vienna needed to take action. Austria-Hungary took a strong stance against Serbia. Within weeks, much of Europe would line up in support of one side or the other and what was once a squabble between Austria and Serbia now threatened to evolve into a World War. No one in the Black Hand could have predicted the swift escalation of events.

The cover of the New York Times the day following the assassination of Archduke Ferdinand and his wife Duchess Sophie.

JULY 28, 1914
30 DAYS AFTER THE ASSASSINATION

Austria declares war on Serbia in retribution for the assassination of Archduke Franz Ferdinand and the Dutchess Sophie.

JULY 30, 1914
32 DAYS AFTER THE ASSASSINATION

As expected, Russia comes to the defense of its Serbian ally using its vast army to intervene. The military move starts a chain reaction of events that caused other great European powers to take note and inevitably become involved in the hostilities.

AUGUST 1, 1914
33 DAYS AFTER THE ASSASSINATION

Germany declares war on Russia for assisting its Serbian ally.

AUGUST 2, 1914
34 DAYS AFTER THE ASSASSINATION

The German Government informs the Belgian government of its demand that the German troops be given free passage across Belgium, to facilitate the efficient invasion of France as the German army moves into Paris. A treaty between Britain and Belgium, however, required the support of one against attack of the other. Therefore, the German movement through Belgium was tantamount to an attack on France.

AUGUST 3, 1914
35 DAYS AFTER THE ASSASSINATION

Germany declares war on France.

AUGUST 4, 1914

36 DAYS AFTER THE ASSASSINATION

Germany invades Belgium hoping to crush France before Russia might have a chance to mobilize in the defense of France. As the German army swept toward Paris, however, Russia mobilized more quickly than anticipated and applied pressure on the Germans from East Prussia. At the same time, Britain made a fateful decision to enter the war meaning that all nations of the British Empire which included Australia, Canada and New Zealand, were automatic participants of the war as well.

APRIL 22, 1915

German soldiers fire chlorine gas-filled shells at Allied lines causing the near-collapse of the French lines. In addition to chemical weapons, other “new implements” of war are used with deadly results. Machine guns, tanks and airplanes all contributed to a deadly, morale crushing war of attrition costing hundreds of thousands of lives to this point.

MAY 7, 1915

A German submarine fires upon and sinks the passenger liner Lusitania as it carried 1,198 people, including 128 Americans. Over the course of the next several months, Germany took many other actions that provoked the United States which, up until this time, was sending supplies to France and Britain, but had not assumed an active military role in the war.

MARCH 9, 1916

German U-Boat warfare was causing tensions between Germany and Portugal to rise, but the boiling point was reached when Germany sought to blockade the United Kingdom, at the time, the most important market for Portuguese products. Ultimately, tensions resulted in declarations of war, first by Germany against Portugal on March 9, 1916 followed very quickly by Portugal’s reciprocal declaration on Germany.

FEBRUARY 25, 1917

With well over a million people already dead, a war that looked unwinnable on land turned to the sea, but the introduction of submarines and the German U-boat created the same stalemate on the waters. With neither side poised to win, the United States is provoked into the war. British intelligence provides United States President Woodrow Wilson the so-called Zimmerman Telegram, a message from German foreign secretary Arthur Zimmerman proposing that Mexico side with Germany in case of war between Germany and the United States. In return, Germany promises to return to Mexico the “lost provinces” of Texas and much of the rest of the American Southwest. Mexico declines the offer, but the outrage at this interference in the Western Hemisphere pushes American public opinion toward support of entering the war.

APRIL 2, 1917

President Wilson takes his case for war to Congress asking that Congress support the entry of the United States into World War I.

APRIL 6, 1917

The Congress of the United States authorizes a declaration of war against Germany, officially entering the US into the War as allies of Britain and France.

PART II
THE PEACE OF INNOCENCE

1910 – 1917 - Fatima, Ourem, Portugal

The tiny shepherd parish of Fatima, in the town of Ourem, Portugal seems a world apart from the site of the assassination that ignited the first World War. Nestled between the North Atlantic Ocean and Spain, the coastal nation is in fact just under 1,850 miles removed from the bustling city atmosphere of Bosnia. Despite the great distance and the vast differences between them however, Portugal and Bosnia were experiencing very similar political chaos.

For over a century, Portugal had been in steady decline due in large part to Freemasonry, which dominated both government and society. In 1910 the Portuguese Revolution deposed the ruling monarchy and established a Republic comprised primarily of high-ranking Freemasons. Amidst the political anarchy there was disorder. Despite a dizzying succession of different governments following the revolution and the strikes and street violence, the unsympathetic attitude of the Freemasons toward the Catholic faith remained a constant. Catholic Churches were targeted for pillage during the revolution, its convents attacked and its religious harassed. With the immediate passage of anticlerical legislation, monasteries, convents and religious orders were suppressed. The religious themselves were personally expelled and their goods confiscated. Jesuits were forced to forfeit their Portuguese citizenship.

One after another new laws, meant to crush the spirit of Catholics, were passed by the government. First a divorce law, then a law on cremation, followed in rapid succession by laws on the secularization of cemeteries, the abolition of the religious oath, suppression of religious teaching in schools and the prohibition of wearing the priestly cassock.

Restraints were placed on the ringing of church bells and the times that religious services could be held. Celebrations of religious feasts were suppressed and the government gave itself the authority to name seminary professors and determine their programs. The new liberal constitution culminated with the passage of the law of Separation of Church and State, which according to the author of the law, Alfonso Costa, was meant to eliminate Catholicism from Portugal within two generations. If not for the strength of Pope Pius X who rejected all compromise with Portugal's atheistic rulers, and the fervor of the Portuguese Catholics who stood solidly behind their Pope, Costa's intention may have been realized.

The government used the disorder to “sow irreligion in the masses,” according to Cannon Barthas, who added, “The times were evil. The future was even more somber.”

The Catholic resistance resulted in the government exiling many of the bishops from the country while causing the imprisonment of others. For the people of Portugal though, faith was the very air they breathed and through it all, the Church retained its faith and retained its presence despite the persecutions.

One microcosm of such faithful persistence lay on a dusty road in Aljustrel, a village comprised of a collection of whitewashed houses in the parish of Fatima. It was in this hamlet, where the word of the village priest was the final authority, that three children, related by blood, were born.

MARCH 22, 1907 – 1913

Lucia dos Santos was born on March 22, 1907 into a family that already included five other children; Maria dos Anjos and Teresa were the oldest and already grown at the time of Lucia’s birth. Manuel, the only son was born next, then Gloria. Carolina was the second youngest child and was five years older than Lucia. Lucia’s parents, Antonio dos Santos and Maria Rosa Ferreira also gave birth to another baby girl who died in infancy.

Born on March 22, 1907, Lucia was the youngest of six children of Antonio dos Santos and Maria Rosa Ferreira. Lucia, at ten years old, was the oldest of the three children to witness the visions of Our Lady of the Rosary.

Lucia’s early childhood years were very happy; surrounded by such loving family who doted over the newest sibling to join the group. At the heart of the family was Maria Rosa, a proud and strong-willed mother who always rocked Lucia to sleep in the security of her arms to the beautiful melodic sound of her lullabies. Any squabbles that ensued were generally between other siblings all wanting to hold the baby Lucia in their arms or to play with her. Any such quarrels usually ended abruptly as Maria Rosa would scoop the child away from the unhappy children altogether and sing a song to help quiet the clan. Even when her mother was too busy to hold the baby herself, she would gently hand Lucia to Antonio who would fondle the child covering her with caresses.

Antonio labored as a small farmer and sheep grower, but he also owned several pieces of land scattered throughout the Serra da Aire. His good looks and passionate eyes betrayed his cordiality as it could be said that he was more comfortable sipping wine than working the fields.

Maria Rosa in many ways was the antithesis of her husband. She was a devout Catholic bordering on the severe. Short, stout and muscular in appearance she had somewhat of a masculine face that she may well have passed on to Lucia. She rarely had time for frivolity as her time was spent at work and teaching her Catholic ways to her children, something she started doing when the children were at a very early age.

The first thing that Lucia learned was the Hail Mary as Maria Rosa held baby Lucia in her arms while she taught the prayer to Carolina. In fact, Maria Rosa taught catechism to all her children, regardless of age, during the summer months, usually at siesta time. In the winter, the nightly lessons would take place following supper while the family gathered around the fire for warmth. Typically, the older children would roast and eat chestnuts and a sweet variety of acorns as they learned. As one can imagine in any family, especially one with so many children, Lucia had more than a few battles with her older sisters, squabbles that would generally end with Lucia crying on the floor until her mother would take her in her arms.

Maria Rosa joked that Lucia was like a parrot because she repeated everything she heard. When the infant became a toddler, her mother insisted that Maria and Teresa, the oldest of the family, take Lucia everywhere they went. The elder children were very sociable and villagers called them “the leading lights among the young people,” as there was not a festival dance that they did not attend. Such dances would always be scheduled at Carnival time, or at certain religious celebrations such as St. John’s Day and Christmas. In addition, the vintage and the olive picking times were always celebrated with a dance almost every day. During those celebrations, and during big parish festivals such as the feasts of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, Our Lady of the Rosary, St. Anthony, etc., a cakes raffle was immediately followed by a dance.

The dos Santos family was quite popular in the village of Fatima and the elder dos Santos children were invited to all the weddings for miles around. Maria Rosa was frequently asked to serve as the matron of honor primarily because the bride's family was sure to need her for the cooking. At these weddings, the dancing began right after the banquet and lasted until well into the next morning.

Because Lucia spent so much time in her sister's care, they took great pains to dress her up as well as they did themselves. One of her sisters was a dressmaker, so Lucia was always decked out in a regional costume more elegant than that of any other girl in the Hamlet. With a typical outfit consisting of a pleated skirt, a shiny belt, a cashmere kerchief with the corners hanging down behind, and a hat decorated with gold beads and bright colored feathers, one might think that her sisters were dressing a doll rather than a small child.

At the dances her sisters would hoist little Lucia up on top of a wooden chest or some other tall piece of furniture so that she wouldn't be trampled underfoot by the other adolescents and young adults in attendance. From that perch Lucia would sing songs to the piano or concertina, a free-reed musical instrument with bellows and buttons on the ends much like those of an accordion. Her sisters had already taught Lucia to sing and had shown her how to dance the waltz. Frequently, if there was no suitable partner to be found, they would dance with her. Consequently, despite her young age, Lucia was a good dancer and would oftentimes attract attention and applause when she performed. Some even gave her gifts but did so more as a means of pleasing Lucia's sisters.^[12]

On Sunday afternoons, many young people would gather in Lucia's yard, playing and chatting with her sisters. They would stay outdoors under the shade of three large fig trees in the summer and assemble in an open porch in the winter. Years later, her sister Maria would build a house on the area where the porch was located.

This is also where they would raffle the sugared almonds at Easter time, most of which would find their way into Lucia's pocket, given to her by some of the winners who hoped to gain the family's good graces. While the children played, Lucia's mother would spend the afternoon seated at the kitchen door. From that vantage point she could look out on the yard and see all that was going on. Sometimes she would read as she kept watch. Other times she chatted with Lucia's aunts or neighbors who frequently stopped by just to be in her company.

Lucia's mother was always very serious. Those that knew her understood that when she spoke, she was serious and must be obeyed without a fuss. Lucia never heard anyone disrespect her or show her any lack of consideration. Most regarded her very highly. Despite all the weddings and social affairs that she attended, Maria Rosa really enjoyed just staying home with a good book. You could usually find her reading about the lives of saints whom she considered to be so beautiful. She couldn't understand how so many others enjoyed going from house to house wasting time chatting.

During the week, there were always many neighborhood children under her care as neighbors who had to go to work in the fields would ask her to watch their children. While in her care the children played a variety of games and Maria Rosa would often delegate the responsibility of watching them to her older children.

Overall, Lucia was very happy during these first six years and felt that the world was beginning to smile on her. Her passion for dancing was taking hold and she loved her family more than all else.

Not far from the dos Santos home was that of Antonio's sister Olimpia Marto and her second husband Manuel Pedro Marto. Theirs was a rather large family as Olimpia had two children by her first husband, Jose Fernandes Rosa, and nine more with Manuel whom she married in 1897. Among those eleven children were the two youngest, Francisco, born on June 11, 1908 and Jacinta, the last of the Marto children, who arrived on March 11, 1910.^[13]

Though Lucia was very fond of her aunt and uncle, she did her best to avoid the company of Francisco and Jacinta whom she found rather taxing, though eventually, she grew very devoted to them as they became her closest companions. Lucia's Uncle Manuel was a man of exceptional character. With his cropped moustache, a short haircut and a quiet manner, he had a look of sophistication that tended to command the respect of those in his company. Like his wife, he could neither read nor write and unlike his brother-in-law Antonio, neither gambled nor drank. Rather he was a hard worker and ardent saver who was known to occasionally splurge for his family. He was unafraid to speak to those in authority knowing that, as men, they are equals. Above all, he was the master of the Marto household.

Saint Francisco Marto, nine-years old at the time of the 1917 Apparitions poses with his seven-year old sister Saint Jacinta. The two were the youngest children of Manuel and Olimpia Marto. Olimpia and Antonio dos Santo were brother and sister.

Olimpia was a strong woman, proud of her home and its accoutrements, particularly the old, outdoor brick oven in which she baked more than the occasional loaf of bread over the years.

Francisco was a handsome boy with a demeanor very much like his father's. For a young child he displayed no fear, willing to go alone into the darkest and foggiest night. A typical boy in many respects, Francisco enjoyed handling snakes and lizards, dropping them in water to see them wiggle away.

According to Lucia, Francisco was very much unlike Jacinta, neither capricious nor vivacious. Rather, he was quiet and submissive by nature. He preferred playing the flute to dancing and few of the children enjoyed playing games with him because, Lucia said, he always lost.

Jacinta too was a beautiful child. She could always be found running and had a great love for dancing. Jacinta was also a stubborn, independent and spoiled child known to pout at the slightest annoyance.

Saint Jacinta Marto, according to Lucia, had an oversensitive temperament. For that reason, Lucia found her company to be disagreeable. The slightest quarrel among the children at play could send her into a corner to pout. To avoid this, Lucia and Francesco always let her choose the game and her partner. Despite that, Jacinta had a sweet and gentle character which made her at once, according to Lucia, lovable and attractive.

1913 – MORNING

TWO DAYS BEFORE LUCIA’S FIRST COMMUNION

Children in Portugal traditionally waited for an older age to receive their First Communion. The parish of St. Anthony’s in Aljustrel, where Lucia was baptized, established the common age of ten years old for the administration of this particular sacrament.^[14]

Yet, Maria Rosa had prepared her thoroughly for this day and Lucia, at the age of only six, knew her catechism well enough to test for her First Holy Communion.

With that goal in mind, Maria Rosa sent Lucia and Carolina to “catechism instructions which Fr. Pena, the parish priest, was giving to the children in preparation for this great day. She went, therefore, radiant with joy, hoping to be able to receive God in the Host for the first time. After Fr. Pena instructed the children from his chair up on a platform, he asked Lucia to sit by his side. Some of the others were not as well prepared as Lucia and when a child was unable to provide an answer to the priest’s question, he would have Lucia respond as a means of shaming the child.^[15]

EVENING

TWO DAYS BEFORE LUCIA’S FIRST COMMUNION

On the night before the selection of First Communicants, Fr. Pena notified all the children that they were to go to the church the following morning to learn who would be able to receive their First Communion. Lucia was well prepared and she knew that Fr. Pena was impressed with her knowledge and skills.

MORNING

THE DAY BEFORE LUCIA'S FIRST COMMUNION

As a result, when her name was called the following morning, Lucia strode confidently up to the priest who caressed her and informed her that she was to wait until she was seven before receiving the sacrament. Heartbroken, Lucia immediately burst into tears and, sobbing, laid her head on the knees of the priest. It so happened that Fr. Francisco Cruz, S.J., a Jesuit missionary from Lisboa who had been requested to assist with confessions, arrived at the church at that exact moment and asked Lucia why she was crying. Between sobs, she managed to tell the saintly priest what had happened. The tall, fifty-year old cleric led Lucia to the sacristy and performed his own examination on the catechism and the mystery of the Eucharist. After he did this, he took Lucia by the hand and brought her directly to the parish priest, saying, "Father Pena, you can let this child go to Communion. She understands what she's doing better than many of the others." Fr. Pena objected noting that Lucia was but six years of age. "Never mind! I'll take responsibility for that," Fr. Cruz said. Turning to Lucia he said, "All right then, go and tell your mother that you are making your First Communion tomorrow."^[16] Lucia was ecstatic. She ran home to tell her mother, clapping her hands with delight along the way. Also overjoyed at the news, Maria Rosa immediately began to prepare Lucia for the required first confession she was about to make.

AFTERNOON

THE DAY BEFORE FIRST COMMUNION

Shortly after Noon, Maria Rosa accompanied her youngest daughter to church so she could make her First Confession, a prerequisite to receiving the sacrament of First Communion. Lucia now had a bond of sorts with the saintly Fr. Cruz and told her mother that she wanted to confess to him rather than to Fr. Pena. Without objection, they made their way to the sacristy where Fr. Cruz was stationed at a portable confessional. The two knelt in front of the high altar outside the sacristy door and Maria Rosa gave Lucia her final recommendations as the two waited with some of the other mothers for Lucia's turn to come.

Upon entering the sacristy, Lucia dutifully knelt at the feet of the Lord, represented in the person of the priest. She recounted her sins and asked forgiveness. After listening to her youthful transgressions and petition, Fr. Cruz said, "My child, your soul is the temple of the Holy Spirit. Keep it always pure, so that He will be able to carry on His divine action within it." On hearing these words, Lucia felt herself filled with respect for her soul, and asked the kind confessor what she ought to do. "Kneel down there before Our Lady and ask her, with great confidence, to take care of your heart, to prepare it to receive Her Beloved Son worthily tomorrow, and to keep it for Him alone!"

Feeling transformed, Lucia stood and exited the sacristy only to find those waiting outside laughing heartily. Paying them little attention, the child made her way over to her favorite statue of Our Lady. Now within the church there are several statues of Mary, but Lucia generally prayed before the one that stood at the altar of Our Lady of the Rosary because that altar was maintained by her sisters. She went there on this special occasion as well to ask with all the ardor of her soul, to keep her poor heart for God alone. She repeated this humble prayer many times with her eyes fixed on the statue. It seemed to Lucia that the Blessed Mother smiled and, "with a loving look and kindly gesture, assured her that she would. Lucia's heart was overflowing with joy, and she could scarcely utter a single word."

As Lucia finished the recitation of her prayers, Maria Rosa quickly motioned for her to come, and as the two exited the church, Maria Rosa turned to Lucia saying, "My child, don't you know that confession is a secret matter and that it is made in a low voice? Everybody heard you! There was only one thing nobody heard; that is what you said at the end." Maria Rosa made several attempts to ascertain her daughter's final words at confession as they walked home, but Lucia would divulge not a word. Nor did she tell of her experience before the Blessed Mother.^[17]

EVENING

THE DAY BEFORE FIRST COMMUNION

Lucia's sisters labored into the night making her a white dress and a wreath of flowers for the next day. Though needing her rest for the following day, the excitement prevented Lucia from sleeping as well, and she counted each passing minute. Frequently throughout the night she rose to ask her sisters if she could help or try on the dress. Eventually, she slept.

9:00 AM – FIRST COMMUNION DAY

Morning finally arrived in Aljustrel not unlike every other day, but things were abuzz in the dos Santos household. Lucia rose early and slipped into her white dress. In accordance with custom, her sister Maria took Lucia to the kitchen to ask the pardon of her parents, kiss their hands and ask their blessing. Following this ritualistic ceremony, Maria Rosa gave Lucia her last recommendations on what to ask of God on this special day, adding that once she received the Lord, Lucia should ask Him to make her a saint.

These words so impressed Lucia that she vowed to make them the first she would say to Jesus after receiving Him, and the dos Santos family left home for the church. Lucia's brother Manuel carried her the entire way to prevent her white dress from becoming soiled by the dust of the road. As soon as they arrived at the church, Lucia ran to kneel before the altar of Our Lady to renew her petition. She remained in prayer until her sisters came to take her to her appointed place.

The first communion class consisted of many children and as instructed they formed four lines according to size; two lines of boys and two of girls. They stretched from the back of the church to the altar rails with tiny Lucia being at the front, the position nearest the angels that guarded the step by the altar rails.

APPROXIMATELY 11:00 AM FIRST COMMUNION DAY

As the Missa Cantata began, Lucia's heart was aflutter in expectation of the visit of the almighty God who was about to descend from Heaven to unite Himself to her poor soul. As the parish priest made his way through the rows of children to distribute the Body and Blood of the Risen Lord, Lucia was first to step forward. Her heart pounded in her chest as she offered the priest her tongue.

No sooner had he placed the small white Host on her tongue than she felt “an unalterable serenity and peace.” Lucia felt herself bathed in such a supernatural atmosphere that the presence of our dear Lord became as clearly perceptible to her as if she had seen and heard Him with her bodily senses. Recalling the admonitions of both her mother and Fr. Cruz she whispered, “O Lord, make me a saint, Keep my heart always pure, for You alone.” Then, from the depths of her own heart she felt Jesus very distinctly saying “The grace granted to you this day will remain living in your soul, producing fruits of eternal life.” Lucia felt as though she had been transformed in God.”^[18]

APPROXIMATELY 1:00 PM FIRST COMMUNION DAY

Due to the late arrival of priests travelling great distances to participate in the First Communion ceremonies, a lengthy sermon offered by Fr. Pena and the renewal of baptismal vows, it was nearly 1:00 PM before the ceremony concluded. All the children left the church with their families “separated into little groups, shouting, talking, running, some munching on pieces of bread their mothers had brought.”^[19] Lucia, however, remained in the church kneeling at the altar. Her mother was concerned that the child might faint for lack of food, and retrieved her to take her home.

But Lucia had been transformed! She told her mother once home that she was “filled to overflowing with the Bread of Angels” and unable to eat a thing. In fact, Lucia had momentarily lost the desire for all the worldly things, and felt at home only in some solitary place where, all alone, she “could recall the delights of my First Communion.”^[20] In fact, in the many days that followed, others noticed that Lucia seemed almost dazed as she went about her daily routine.

THE DAYS FOLLOWING FIRST COMMUNION

Regardless of her desire to remain alone in prayer, moments of solitude were rare for Lucia as life’s routine resumed. Lucia and her sisters were entrusted with the daily care of the neighborhood children whose parents worked the fields. Maria Rosa's work as a nurse advising ill neighbors who stopped by the house or visiting the homes of those more seriously ill cast further responsibility on Lucia. Her duties required that Maria Rosa spend entire days and some nights with the sick and infirmed when the illness was prolonged or their conditions required it. This happened more than anyone liked and even Lucia's sisters were from time to time pressed into "day care" duty to give the family of the infirmed some respite.

If an infirmed woman had small children, the children were sometimes taken to Lucia's house to provide the quiet needed for the recovery of the sick person. Whenever this happened, Lucia was charged with keeping those children occupied, something she did with games or lessons in preparing the yarn for weaving. Maria and Carolina typically had several girls in the house for instructions in weaving and dressmaking. Though this was burdensome for the dos Santos family, the visitors always enjoyed the experience and would often recount how the days spent at Lucia's house were "the best days of their lives."^[21]

On days in which Lucia's sisters were required to work in the fields, their weaving and sewing obligations were tended to at night. On a typical night, the family would enjoy a good dinner followed by prayers that were led by Antonio. Then the entire family took their "work" positions. Maria went to the loom, Antonio filled the spools, Teresa and Gloria took to their sewing and Maria Rosa began spinning. Lucia and Carolina, after tidying up in the kitchen, helped with sewing, basting, attaching buttons and so on. To ward off drowsiness, Lucia's brother Manuel would play the concertina while the rest of the family sang all kinds of songs.

Neighbors would often stop by to keep the family company while they worked and although it meant losing sleep, the gaiety would fill them with happiness and reduce their worries and fears, even if only for the moment. Many were envious of the closeness of the dos Santos family, often remarking how fortunate Maria Rosa is that God blessed her with such lovely children. At harvest time the family would reap the corn under the moonlight. Lucia, from her perch atop the corn pile, was chosen to provide a round of hugs each time a dark-colored corn cob appeared.^[22]

1914

SPRING AND SUMMER

From the security of her own yard, Lucia loved to watch the splendid colors emanating from the rising sun and very much enjoyed the evenings, lying on her back by the well at the end of her plentiful back yard gazing up at the emerging stars as the sunlight faded into darkness. Her cousins, Francisco and Jacinta, sometimes joined Lucia on such evenings. Jacinta often tried to count the stars as they emerged, spying them from between the branches of the olive tree that swayed to the silent melody of a gentle summer breeze. Eventually, they were just too numerous to track however. Lucia referred to them as the lamps of angels and the moon she called the lamp of Our Lady. Naturally the sun became known as the lamp of Our Lord. That was Francisco's favorite, but Jacinta thought it too blinding and preferred the soft light of Our Lady's lamp.

FALL 1914 AND WINTER 1914-1915

The fond remembrance of these summer nights was soon replaced, however, with the "invisible poison.... of discontent" as Lucia's father Antonio began to spend more and more time with newfound friends found in some of the roadside taverns of Aljustrel. His drinking caused havoc for the entire family and, as can be imagined, had a deleterious effect on not only "his fields and his cattle, his self-respect and his old age, but also the health and good-humor of his wife and children."^[23] It now became necessary for Maria Rosa to work many days and nights, sometimes overnight for many days at a time, as a domestic nurse. Mother's absence meant that the older daughters, in addition to working as a seamstress and weaver, had to assume the responsibilities for maintaining the house and, Manuel, the fields. Caroline had pastured the sheep in a variety of fields owned by the family, but now at thirteen, was forced to earn money as a weaver. And then there was little Lucia.

1915 EARLY SPRING

The robust displays of affection enjoyed by Lucia up to this point in her life would begin to weaken in the ensuing months as events beyond her control would subject her to immense suffering and hardship. Adversities far greater than any young child should have to endure.

In spring 2015, when Lucia was just seven years old, Maria Rosa decided that it was time for her to take over the care of the sheep. The flock was large and the responsibility awesome for a child of seven. Lucia was essentially to become responsible for the safety and welfare of the entire flock, grazing the animals, herding them to areas of good forage and keeping a watchful eye out for plants that might be toxic to sheep. Pastures, which could be as far as a mile or two in distance, had to be continuously alternated as the sheep diminished the food source at any particular location. Weather conditions also impact the pasture chosen as the availability of a good water supply for the sheep as well as shelter from the elements for the shepherd must all be considered. In addition to these tasks, Lucia, from dawn to dusk, would need to keep a watchful eye out for predators that might try harm the sheep. In addition to some wild species, even domestic dogs might be included in the category of aggressor.

Despite her father's objections, and those of her sisters, Maria Rosa would make no exceptions for Lucia. "She's just like the rest," she said. "Carolina is already almost thirteen years old. That means she can now begin to work in the fields, or else, learn to be a weaver or a seamstress, whichever she prefers." Consequently, Maria Rosa believed that care of the flock is a responsibility that must be given to Lucia.

Lucia was enthralled with the prospect of working as a shepherdess. It made her feel grown up, like her sisters, and seemed at the time more like a new adventure than a responsibility. She had no way of knowing that the experience would alter her life forever.

Word of the "new shepherd" spread quickly throughout the village and almost all the other children offered Lucia companionship. She accepted all the offers and arranged to meet each on the slopes of the Serra the next day.

Lucia's euphoria was also Francisco's and Jacinta's heartbreak. They were losing a playmate, someone who entertained them with her stories. They in turn pleaded with their mother to be allowed to shepherd the Marto sheep as well, but at the tender ages six and four, Olimpia would not hear of it.

The following morning Lucia arrived on the Serra with her flock to find a large corpus of sheep with their shepherds.^[24] The mass of sheep and people made Lucia very uncomfortable. She promptly chose from the group of shepherds three companions with whom she would share a pasture. They included Teresa Matias and her sister Maria Rosa, and Maria Justino who was from Casa Velha. Without saying a word to anyone, the four girls arranged to pasture their sheep on the opposite slopes, and journeyed off in that direction.

Before long, Lucia learned that once the sheep found a suitable grazing spot, they would congregate and remain for hours, allowing the young shepherds time to play games and enjoy at least part of the long day. She also soon discovered where some of those choice grazing spots were and would direct the flock there. Along the stone walls of a long winding road leading to the intersection with the highway leading from Ourem to Leiria lay the shallow waters of the Loagoa, though Lucia called it the mud-hole or barreiro. It was a place where women and children would come from all around to launder their clothes. It also turned out to be a most suitable water supply for the sheep. Many times, Lucia would meet her young shepherd friends there and, once the sheep were watered, would take them in a group to graze in a pasture.

The barreiro was about a mile from Aljustrel and was situated just about at the midway point between Lucia's home and a pasture called Cova da Iria that was owned by her family. That was a favorite place to pasture and play.

APRIL – OCTOBER 1915, MIDDAY

This was essentially Lucia's daily routine throughout many of the days of spring and summer until one day when Lucia's little band of shepherds set out in the direction of a hill known as the Cabeco. They took to the northern slope, climbing with their flocks almost to the top. There they were surrounded by a "wide expanse of trees – olives, oaks, pines, holm oaks, and others that stretched away down towards the level valley below."^[25] The location offered beautiful panoramic views.

Around midday, the children had just finished eating their lunch while sitting on the rocks along the ridge at Cabeco and Lucia invited her companions to pray the Rosary with her. The other three children eagerly agreed and had hardly begun when, there before their eyes, they "saw a figure poised in the air above the trees; One of the other children noticed it first, this statue-like figure that looked as if it could be made of snow, rendered almost transparent by the rays of the sun." Frightened, one of her companions yelled,

“What is that?” “I don’t know!” a confused Lucia responded. The girls continued to pray, but their eyes remained fixed on the figure before them until they finished their prayers. Then, just as quickly as it appeared, the figure disappeared, without having uttered a sound.

As was typical of Lucia, she resolved to say nothing of the vision, but her companions told their families what had happened the very moment they reached home. The news soon spread throughout the village and one day when Lucia arrived home, her mother questioned her intensely. “Look here!” she said. “They say you’ve seen I don’t know what, up there. What was it you saw?” “I don’t know,” Lucia replied as she had no explanation of what she saw. “It looked like a person wrapped up in a sheet!” the child continued. She meant to say that she couldn’t discern its features, but instead added, “You couldn’t make out any eyes, or hands, on it.” Maria Rosa put an end to the whole matter with a dismissive hand wave of disgust, “Childish nonsense!” she said.^[26]

The following year Lucia and her companions returned with their flocks to the same hilltop and the figure appeared again. As they had before, the other children reported to their parents what they had seen. Still later, the figure appeared to them a third time and as with the first two apparitions, the other children spoke openly of the incident.

After hearing from others in the village about the strange visions experienced by Lucia and her companions, Maria Rosa became quite disturbed. She called Lucia and demanded an explanation of what had taken place. “I don’t know, Mother. I don’t know what it is,” Lucia insisted. Some of the neighborhood children began mocking Lucia. Even her sisters would ask, when Lucia seemed distant in thought, if she had seen someone wrapped in a sheet. The scorn and ridicule was foreign to Lucia who, until now, enjoyed nothing but caresses and positive attention from all she knew. She could not have envisioned “what the good Lord had in store for [her] in the future.”^[27]

1916

Around this time, having grown a bit more, and after constant pestering their mother for permission, Olimpia finally consented to Jacinta and Francesco taking care of their own flock of sheep. It’s possible that Olimpia wanted to do something that might help Jacinta overcome the immense disappointment she felt at the refusal of Fr. Pena to grant her permission to make her First Communion at age six as Lucia had. Jacinta had studied hard and felt prepared for the testing. She referred to the Host as the Hidden Jesus and wanted desperately to receive him at Communion. But it was not to be, as after his examination of Jacinta, Fr. Pena's "thought the child too young and unprepared" to receive the sacrament. Jacinta grieved and her disappointment could not be disguised. Yet, it was not in her nature to brood for too long over something and the news given by Olimpia caused in Jacinta so much joy that she, with Francisco in tow, ran to Lucia's house to tell her the great news. [\[28\]](#)

Lucia loved her cousins and enjoyed spending some time with them at play, but the thought of being with them from dusk to dawn, seven days per week, is not a concept she particularly relished. Yet, perhaps thinking that the change of companionship would be good or maybe out of a sense of familial obligation, Lucia agreed to spend her time with Jacinta and Francisco, to the exclusion of the other young shepherds, in the pasturing of their flocks.

SPRING – APRIL OR MAY

As noted earlier most of Europe, as was much of the balance of the world, was in disarray, but in the spring of 1916, some remote and inaccessible places had not yet been too impacted. So, life in the Serra da Aire went about pretty much as it did before the start of the great war. To the peasants of such regions, the amount of rainfall and the price of wool are of far greater concern than the change of leadership in remote governments of the world. Those priorities didn't change even when Portugal officially entered World War I on March 9, 1916. Not even the government leaders in Portugal heeded Pope Benedict XV when just a few days prior he called for "all men of good will to have recourse to prayer and mortification rather than hatred," warning of the "ruin that would come to all Europe if his words were not heeded." With spring came planting time and that was a priority to the farmers of Aljustrel. [\[29\]](#)

For the three little shepherd children of Fatima nothing mattered except taking their sheep to pasture and enjoying the games and laughter that the late morning and afternoon would bring. Generally, after settling into a suitable pasture for the flock, the children would entertain themselves for hours playing games. Outgrowing the more childish games of “Buttons” and “Pass the Ring,” the three children found greater enjoyment these days in playing cards. They routinely carried two packs, one from Lucia’s house and another from the Marto abode. Games such as “Dressing the Queen” and “Sobering up the King” now occupied a greater portion of their time. They also enjoyed singing and dancing and Jacinta loved to chase butterflies and pick wild flowers.

The children would take a break from their games long enough to eat lunch, enjoy an afternoon snack and say the Rosary. As did all good Catholics, the three little shepherds would always kneel while saying the Rosary, but over time, they discovered a way to abbreviate the long prayer by reducing each individual prayer to a recitation of the title only, thus freeing up more time for afternoon games. And that’s how it was as the spring turned to summer.

EARLY SUMMER – JUNE

The cousins had been caring for their parent’s sheep for some time now and had settled into a routine. Nothing much changed from day to day and there was generally nothing extraordinary to report from their time at pasture. That all changed on one warm, sun-drenched day of summer 1916.

The children met as usual and led their sheep just west of Aljustrel to Chousa Velha, a piece of land owned by Lucia’s father on the eastern slope of Cabeco hill. The sheep grazed as the shepherds played their games.

ABOUT 10:00 AM

The powder blue morning sky was now overcast. It happened rather suddenly and without immediate notice, but soon it was raining, more of a fine, refreshing mist really. Within minutes, a cold breeze began to blow, a sure sign that a storm was moving in rather fast. The children moved swiftly up the side of the hill to the south of the valley prodding the sheep along the way. Reaching Cabeco, a rocky crest of the southern slope, they guided the sheep to the security of an olive grove while sheltering themselves in a cave cut in the nearby rocks. The “cave” was more of a large overhanging rock that offered enough space underneath to provide shelter from most rain storms or heavy winds blowing from the north or northwest. Lucia was somewhat familiar with the area because it was owned by her godfather Anastacio.

From that vantage point Lucia noticed that she could see the little village in which she was born, her parents' home, and the hamlets of Casa Velha and Eira da Pedra. An olive grove that was owned by several people extended right to the confines of the two hamlets. The three children continued to play their games, ate lunch and knelt to pray the Rosary. No sooner had they finished praying when the rain stopped as suddenly as it had begun. The breaking clouds once again exposed the hot sun and the children tossed small stones toward the valley below.

This activity gave way to another strong gust of wind that bent the tree tops as never before. The children looked up startled to see what was happening as it had been unusually calm just moments prior. As they looked skyward, they noticed a light approaching from the west. The light moved closer settling over an olive tree at the entrance of the cave. The children could discern a figure not unlike the one Lucia had seen previously while playing with her other companions. Neither six-year old Jacinta nor her eight-year old brother Francisco had seen the apparition before and Lucia hadn't ever mentioned the prior visions to them.

Lucia noticed, unlike her prior encounter, that this vision had distinguishable features about it. It was a young man, maybe fourteen or fifteen years of age. Whiter than snow in appearance the boy seemed to be transparent allowing the sun to shine right through him. And it was beautiful! Upon coming to rest in front and slightly above them the vision spoke. "Do not be afraid! I am the Angel of Peace. Pray with me." The Angel fell to his knees and bowed down until his forehead touched the ground. He asked the children to three times repeat, "My God, I believe, I adore, I hope and I love You! I ask pardon of You for those who do not believe, do not adore, do not hope and do not love you." The Angel then rose to his feet and said "Pray thus. The Hearts of Jesus and Mary are attentive to the voice of your supplications." As he said these words, the Angel left them.

During the time of the apparition, the children were in a trance-like state, almost unaware of their own existence. That state of ecstasy remained a long time as the children continued to kneel in prayer following the Angel's departure. It was Francesco who finally broke the trance noting that he had to stand as the prostrate position was hurting his back. Standing, they all felt weak and still somewhat dazed. They were still incredulous and excited as they collected their sheep and Lucia warned Francisco and Jacinta to say nothing about this vision to anyone. She was keenly aware of the end result when such things are reported to unbelieving town folk. Fortunately, her cousins complied.^[30]

JUNE – JULY

As can be imagined, this event was a transformative experience for the three children and The Angel's words, Lucia noted, "engraved themselves so deeply" in their minds, that they "could never forget them." In the days and weeks that followed, the three "seers" spent long periods of time in prayer, repeating the Angel's words and mimicking his prostrate position until exhaustion overtook them.

More than once the children wondered who the Angel of Peace was and why he chose to appear to them. There are many Angels in the Catholic tradition and within their ranks there is a hierarchical structure. Catholics learn that Angels, though mentioned frequently in the Bible, tend to appear with less regularity and do frequently speak to those that see them. The Bible teaches that Tobias was guided by the Archangel Raphael, the Angel of health, joy and travelers. It was Archangel Gabriel that appeared to Mary with news that she would give birth to the Savior of the world. But only Archangel Michael is known in Catholic tradition as the Angel of Peace. Ironically, Michael is the same heavenly warrior who is credited with casting Lucifer and his followers from heaven. Could it be that it was Michael who appeared to the children of Fatima?

JULY OR AUGUST

The sweltering heat of summer remained and the children continued each day to take the sheep to pasture and to repeat the prayer of the Angel. On this particular day, one of the hottest days of the summer, the children took the sheep home to provide them some respite from the intense heat during the hours of their siesta, following which the children went to the old well at the bottom of the garden behind Lucia's home. There, in an area they called Arneiro, they could play in the shade of some fig trees.

There was no approaching light, no warning at all, but when the children looked, the Angel stood there beside them. "What are you doing?" he asked. "Pray, pray very much! The most holy Hearts of Jesus and Mary have designs of mercy on you. Offer prayers and sacrifices constantly to the Most High.” The children were puzzled by this but only Lucia had the courage to ask, “How are we to make sacrifices?” “Make of everything you can a sacrifice, and offer it to God as an act of reparation for the sins by which He is offended, and in supplication for the conversion of sinners. You will thus draw down peace upon your country. I am its Angel Guardian, the Angel of Portugal. Above all, accept and bear with submission, the suffering which the Lord will send you.”^[31] Completing his words, the Angel vanished. As had happened a few weeks earlier, the children remained in a state of ecstasy, praying for some time after the Angel’s departure. Like the first sitting, Francisco had seen the Angel, but could not hear his voice, so later that day he asked what the Angel had said. Lucia and Jacinta explained it to him. “But how can we suffer?” he asked. “We’re not sick. We have enough to eat, and a place to live.” Francisco would soon learn the meaning of the Angel’s message when his oldest brother was called to serve in World War I. Even 7-year old Jacinta grasped the meaning. She was “depressed by the worry at home and stories of death on the battlefield, as well as the trouble that had come to Lucia’s family when her father began to spend all his money in the wine shops.” Stretching out her arms she would cry out, “Lord, we offer Thee all these sufferings for the conversion of poor sinners.”^[32]

LATE SEPTEMBER OR OCTOBER

Even with the passage of several more weeks, the three visionaries could not forget the angelic visions that had left such an indelible mark on them. As much as they wished they could spend the days in prayer and remembrance, they still needed to tend to their responsibilities as shepherds. So, at summer’s end, the children found themselves once again pasturing the sheep on property belonging to Lucia’s parents. This particular pasture was another slope of the hill called Chousa Velha a little higher up than Vilinhos in the olive grove of Pregueira.

The children finished their lunch and made their way to a hollow among the rocks on the opposite side of the hill. This area was accessible only by rounding the slope and climbing over some rocks above the Pregueira. The climb was difficult for the children, but perhaps more so for the sheep that struggled greatly to follow their little shepherds. As soon as they arrived and placed the flock in a suitable place to graze, they fell to their knees and prostrated themselves with foreheads touching the ground. They were reciting the prayer of the Angel when “an extraordinary light shone upon” them. The children jumped up to see what it was and saw, for the third time, the vision of the Angel. In his left hand, the Angel of Peace held a chalice over which was suspended a Host. From the Host beads of blood dripped into the chalice below. The Angel knelt beside the children leaving the chalice suspended in the air. As he did this he asked the children to repeat three times; “Most Holy Trinity, Father, Son and Holy Spirit, I adore You profoundly, and I offer You the most precious Body, Blood, Soul and Divinity of Jesus Christ, present in all the tabernacles of the world, in reparation for the outrages, sacrileges and indifference with which He Himself is offended. And, through the infinite merits of His Most Sacred Heart, and the Immaculate Heart of Mary, I beg of You the conversion of poor sinners.” “Then, rising, the Angel took the chalice and the Host in his hands.” He gave the Sacred Host to Lucia, and shared the Blood from the chalice between Jacinta and Francisco who had not yet received their First Communion. As the Angel put the chalice to their lips He said, “Take and drink the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, horribly outraged by ungrateful men! Make reparation for their crimes and console your God.”^[33]

The Angel once again prostrated himself as did the children. Together they repeated three more times the prayer with the Angel. The Angel departed them leaving the children in a state of ecstasy. The intensity of the experience, sensing the actual presence of God, left them weak and drained of all energy. Francisco was the first of the three to return to reality and informed the others that it was near dark. It took all their strength to gather the flock and make the trek down the hill and back home. They walked in silence for a long while until Francisco finally broke the silence noting, “I like very much to see the Angel, but the worst of it is that afterwards we can’t do anything. I can’t even walk. I don’t know what’s wrong with me.”

It was a few days before the children regained their energy and felt normal again. Francisco asked Lucia, “The Angel gave you Holy Communion. But what was it that he gave me and Jacinta?” “It was Holy Communion,” Jacinta said quickly before Lucia had a chance to respond. “Didn’t you see that it was the Blood that fell from the Host?” “I felt that God was in me,” Francisco continued. “But I didn’t know how it was.” Then, prostrating himself on the ground, Francisco repeated the second prayer of the Angel, and remained there in prayer for a long time. Thus, Lucia later noted that Francisco and Jacinta, though not having yet received their First Communion, regarded this as their sacramental Communion.^[34]

So much had taken place in Lucia's life and in that of her cousins following the glorious day of her First Holy Communion. Life between the ages of seven and ten had been eventful for her to say the least, but little did she know that God's divine plan for her and her cousins would alter their lives and impact the faith of millions more. The visions of the Angel of Portugal and his message had separated the three children from their playmates but perhaps more importantly, it prepared them for the apparitions and the suffering to come.^[35]

PART III
NOTHING WILL EVER BE THE SAME

1917

The changes in the lives of the three little shepherd children were not the only changes taking place in Fatima. Fr. Pena no longer served the Church of St. Anthony, having been replaced by Reverend Father Coicinha whose actual name was Fr. Manuel Marques Ferreira. Fr. Ferreira was most zealous and preached against the pagan custom of endless dancing, something that had been all too common in the parish.

He spoke so incessantly about the evils of the custom that Maria Rosa forbade Lucia's sisters to attend any further amusements. Some in the neighborhood questioned the wisdom of a new priest suddenly classifying dancing as the devil's work, but Maria Rosa was steadfast in her obedience to the priest and her children attended the dances no more.

Soon many other area children, following the example set by the dos Santos sisters, began to refrain from such amusements causing the custom to gradually die out. Those who loved to dance as much as Lucia and Jacinta found the prohibition unpleasant. Maria Rosa, however, did allow for some dancing in the home as Fr. Ferreira found no sin in that.^[36]

There were several other changes impacting the dos Santos home too. It was also during this time that Maria and Teresa, the oldest of Lucia's sisters, married and left home. Her father Antonio fell into bad company and began to drink, causing the family to lose some of their property. His dislike for the new parish priest also caused him to leave St. Anthony's for a time and fulfil his Catholic obligations in Vila Nova de Ourem.

The loss of Antonio's productivity caused the family livelihood to diminish forcing Maria Rosa to send Lucia's other sisters, Gloria and Carolina to work as servants. The confluence of these three factors; Antonio's diminished capacity to provide, Lucia's two eldest sisters no longer living at home, and Gloria and Carolina working out of the home, caused all domestic responsibilities to fall to the only three that remained. Consequently, Lucia's brother Manuel was charged with caring for the few remaining fields and Lucia with pasturing the sheep while Maria Rosa took care of the house.

During this time Lucia's mother was clearly distressed. When gathered around the fire in the evening, waiting for Antonio to return for supper, Maria Rosa would stare at the empty places at the dinner table once occupied by Maria and Teresa and proclaim through her tears, "My God, where has all the joy of our home gone?” Manuel and Lucia would weep with her as Lucia was heartbroken with sorrow.

During these times, Lucia would take comfort in the Angel’s words; “Above all, accept submissively the sacrifices that the Lord will send you,” and she would escape to a solitary place, generally at the well at the end of the garden so her mother would not be more distressed by Lucia’s own sadness. There, she would fall to her knees and peer into the well as she leaned over the edge of the stone slabs that covered it. Lucia’s tears fell softly into the well mingling with the waters below as she offered her suffering to God. Sometimes Francisco and Jacinta would stop by and find Lucia in distress, unable to speak because of her sobbing. Her cousins would share Lucia’s grief weeping themselves until Jacinta offered out loud, “My God, it is as an act of reparation, and for the conversion of sinners, that we offer You all these sufferings and sacrifices.”

It wasn’t long before Maria Rosa started to experience a deterioration of her own health because of her immense distress forcing her to ask that her daughter Gloria return home to help care for her and the house. Despite consultations with surgeons and doctors and “recourse to every kind of remedy,” there was no improvement in Maria Rosa’s condition.

One day, Fr. Ferreira offered to take her to Leiria in his mule cart where she would be able to consult with additional doctors. Lucia’s sister Teresa accompanied them on the trip, but her mother grew so weary from the number of consultations and the arduous journey, that she arrived home “half dead.”

Fortunately, a surgeon from Sao Mamede, a civil parish in the municipality of Lisbon about 67 miles south of Fatima, was able to at least provide a diagnosis of what ailed Maria Rosa. He recommended treatment for a cardiac lesion, a dislocated spinal vertebra and fallen kidneys. He prescribed some medication that seemed to bring about a bit of improvement to her health granting her at least some relief.

Also during this time, Manuel became of age for enlistment in the army of Portugal. With his excellent health and the ravages of World War I in full swing, it seemed sure that he would be drafted into service. Manuel’s godfather promised Maria Rosa that he would obtain an exemption because of their extraordinary family circumstances and he contacted the doctor responsible for Manuel’s medical examination. Despite Manuel’s godfather’s good intentions, Maria Rosa feared Manuel’s loss from the family and quickly sent for Carolina to return home to help look after the land. By the grace of God, however, the exemption was granted, much to the relief Maria Rosa.

SUNDAY MAY 13, 1917

Such were the events of the world and the condition of Lucia's family as Sunday, May 13, 1917 dawned. The day was bright and fair like so many others before it and following Mass in Fatima, Lucia and her cousins met at the barreiro, as they usually did, to choose a site from which to pasture their flocks. On this day, they selected a pasture of land belonging to her parents, a place called Cova da Iria. The distance from Lucia's home to this site was over a mile and the journey required that the children and their sheep cross a barren stretch of moorland where the sheep took every opportunity to graze along the way, making the journey that much longer.^[37] The length of the journey seemed irrelevant, however, because since the last appearance of the Angel, the children were more somber, deeper in prayer and sacrifice, and less interested in playing, dancing, singing, picking flowers and chasing butterflies.

12:00 NOON

At about Noon the three children arrived high up on the slope in the Cova da Iria, a pasture containing little more than a spattering of assorted trees. There, the sheep continued to graze^[38] and the children busied themselves gathering some of the scattered rocks to build a little stone wall that they could use as an enclosure around a clump of furze on which the sheep grazed. Suddenly a bright shaft of light pierced the air. It was so bright that it appeared to the children as a flash of lightning. Frightened by the flash, Lucia suggested that they make their way home to avoid the oncoming storm. Despite the clear sundrenched sky, and with the absence of even a hint of a breeze, the children began to descend the hill hurrying the sheep along towards the road. When about halfway down the hill, almost level with a large holm oak tree that stood there, there was another flash of lightning. Now, even more alarmed, the children continued to scurry down the slope. They had moved only about another hundred yards when they came upon a small holm oak directly in front of them. Looking up the children saw a figure standing over the foliage of the small tree. According to Lucia, “a Lady dressed all in white, more brilliant than the sun, shedding rays of light, clear and stronger than a crystal glass filled with the most sparkling water, pierced the burning rays of the sun.”

The cork oak, and not the holm oak, is a tree more typically found in Portugal. The holm oak is a very tall evergreen that grows up to 85 feet in height despite its turgid, grey, short and winding stem. It has alternating, very hard, elliptical bright green leaves that are whiter below. It produces yellow flowers and a green acorn that is very bitter to the taste and turns dark brown at maturity. The tree over which the figure stood, however, was apparently a very young tree, rather small in size reaching only about three feet in height.

The children stopped in their tracks just feet from the Lady. Her face was beautiful, indescribably so, bearing neither a smile nor a frown, but rather appearing very serious. She seemed to be about seventeen.^[39] Around Her neck was a chord that fell to about the waist at the end of which was a little ball of light. Her hands were clasped as in prayer and were held about breast high. Rosary beads were draped around her fingers. She wore a simple tunic under a mantle or veil, each falling to her feet. The tunic had no collar and no cuffs. The mantle had a ray of sunlight all around it and displayed a star. There was no cincture or sash around the waist, although the tunic was drawn in at that point.^[40]

The entire figure was a brilliant light, white light for the most part except the face and hands which appeared as a flesh-color light. Below the mantle a yellow light encircled her. The light that shone from the Lady, particularly from her face, was so fierce that the children could not stare without hurting their eyes. They were bathed in the light that radiated from her and astounded as they stood before the Apparition.

Without providing even a chance to allow the children to comprehend what they were seeing, the Lady spoke to them in a low, almost melodic voice, saying, “Do not be afraid. I will do you no harm.” “Where are you from?” Lucia asked. “I am from Heaven,” the beautiful lady replied, gently raising her hand towards the distant horizon. “What do you want of me?” Lucia intoned. “I came to ask you to come here for six months in succession, on the thirteenth day, at this same hour. Later on I will tell you who I am and what I want. Afterwards, I will return here yet a seventh time.” Lucia asked, “Shall I go to heaven too?” “Yes, you will.” “And Jacinta?” “She will go also.' 'And Francisco?' 'He will go there too, but he must say many Rosaries.' Lucia then remembered two of her friends who used to come to her house to learn weaving from her eldest sister. They had recently died and Lucia inquired, 'Is Maria das Neves in Heaven?' Maria was only sixteen when she died. 'Yes she is,' the Lady answered. 'And Amelia?' Lucia continued. 'She is in purgatory until the end of the world.'" Amelia was about 18-20 years old when she died. Then the Lady asked, 'Are you willing to offer yourselves to God and bear all the sufferings He wills to send you, as an act of reparation for the sins by which He is offended, and of supplication for the conversion of sinners?' 'Yes, we are willing,' said Lucia. 'Then you are going to have much to suffer, but the grace of God will be your comfort.' As She said these words, She opened her hands for the first time imparting on the children an intense light that streamed from her hands. The rays of that light seemed to penetrate their hearts and touch the innermost depths of their souls.

Then, as if moved by an inner feeling that was also communicated to them through the light, the children fell to their knees and silently repeated, "O most Holy Trinity, I adore You! My God, my God, I love You in the most Blessed Sacrament!"

A few moments passed and the Lady said, 'Pray the Rosary every day, in order to obtain peace for the world, and the end of the war.' The Woman then began to serenely rise and moved eastward until she disappeared into the air. Just like that she was gone!^[41]

As the children walked home after the apparition, they recounted the splendor of the experience they had just shared. Unable to contain herself, little Jacinta kept breaking into enthusiastic exclamations saying, "Oh, what a beautiful Lady!" Lucia, however, recalled the hardships created when her other friends spoke openly about the vision of the boy and warned Jacinta that her enthusiasm might cause her to break the vow they made earlier to keep their visions secret causing her to tell others what had taken place this day. Jacinta, for her part, told Lucia not to worry and promised that she would tell no one.

Francisco and Jacinta returned home to a houseful of people, including their own siblings and their Uncle Antonio da Silva, but their parents, who had taken the carriage into town earlier that morning, had not yet returned home. Dinner cooked on the stove and the daylight began to fade when Jacinta, who meant to keep the secret, heard the sound of the carriage that signaled the return of her parents from the market where they had just purchased a pig. Jacinta ran to greet them hugging her mother at the knees as she exited the carriage. “Mother, I saw Our Lady today at Cova da Iria!” Olimpia laughed at what she assumed was a joke and brushed by to go into the house. But Jacinta followed close behind insisting that her story was true. She provided so much detail that Olimpia had to take her seriously. When her father came in from locking the newly-acquired pig in a shed, he sat by the fireplace and began to eat his supper. Olimpia sat beside him and recounted the story that Jacinta has shared. Manuel wanted to hear the story from Jacinta’s own lips and called her over. She happily told him exactly what she told Olimpia. Manuel turned to Francisco for confirmation, which was provided. Uncle Antonio looked at his brother-in-law saying, “Well, if the youngsters did see a lady dressed in white, who could it be but Our Lady?” Manuel knew in his heart that his children didn’t lie. He also knew that they were not playing a prank on him. After weighing the two accounts of events offered by Francisco and Jacinta, and after a careful evaluation of their body language as they told their story, and knowing that his children did not even know some of the words they attributed to the Lady, he announced his belief, saying, “From the beginning of the world, Our Lady has appeared many times in various ways. If the world is wicked, it would be much more so but for many such happenings. The power of God is great. We don’t know what this is, but it will turn out to be something.

MAY 14, 1917

Lucia awoke early on Monday morning and played under the fig tree until it was time to take the sheep to pasture. After some time, Lucia noticed her sister Maria approaching her and was taken aback when Maria said, “Oh, Lucia! I hear you have seen Our Lady at Cova da Iria. Is it true?” “Who told you,” Lucia demanded. Maria recounted that some neighbors informed her how Jacinta told their aunt Olimpia. Lucia told Maria that she didn’t say anything because she wasn’t sure who the Lady was. “It was a pretty little woman” who wants us to go for six consecutive months to the Cova. Only then will she tell us who she is and what she wants, Lucia told her.

Maria wasn’t buying any of it and returned to the house to tell Maria Rosa all that Lucia had told her. Lucia was promptly summoned to the house where her disbelieving parents grilled her with questions prior to Antonio’s dismissal of the whole matter as “Silly woman’s tales.” Maria Rosa, however was quite disturbed and scolded Lucia. “To think I always brought my children up to speak the truth!” Maria Rosa lamented, “And now this one brings me a whopper like this!”^[42]

Francisco and Jacinta meanwhile waited for Lucia to arrive at their meeting spot. Francisco couldn’t wait to share with Lucia the news about Jacinta telling the secret. Unable to contain his excitement for another second, he ran to her the moment he saw her leading the sheep toward him, explaining as he did, how Jacinta had told her parents everything about the visions of the Lady the day prior. Jacinta listened silently as Francisco excitedly recounted nearly verbatim everything Jacinta said. Lucia was visibly upset. “You see, that’s just what I thought would happen.” Jacinta broke her silence. “There was something within me that wouldn’t let me keep quiet,” she said with tears in her eyes. “Well don’t cry now and don’t tell anything to anybody about what the Lady said to us,” Lucia continued. “But I already told them,” Jacinta said. “And what did you say?” Lucia asked. “I said that the Lady promised to take us to Heaven,” Jacinta replied. Lucia was incredulous thinking about the hardships this would cause. “To think you told them that!” she said. Jacinta sobbed even more saying, “Forgive me. I won’t tell anybody anything ever again!”^[43]

Reaching their destination at the pasture, Jacinta took a seat on a rock falling deep in thought. Remembering that the Lady told them to say the Rosary and make sacrifices for the conversion of sinners, she decided to refrain from their usual play. “From now on,” she informed the others, when we pray the Rosary, we must pray the whole Our Father and the whole Hail Mary.” Then, referring to the sacrifices, asked, “How are we going to make them?”^[44]

Francisco thought for a moment and offered, “Let’s give our lunch to the sheep, and make the sacrifice of doing without it.” In just a few minutes, their lunches were divided among the sheep who quickly diverted their attention from the grass on which they had been grazing. So on May 14, 1917, “the children fasted as strictly as the most austere Carthusian!”^[45]

Recalling that the Lady also told them that many sinners go to hell, Jacinta asked Lucia about it. Lucia explained the concept of hell to Jacinta as Maria Rosa had explained it to her. “It’s like a big deep pit of wild beasts,” Lucia explained, “with an enormous fire in it – and that’s where people go who commit sins and don’t confess them. They stay there and burn forever!”

Jacinta was intrigued with the concept of eternity. Her six-year old mind just could not grasp how something could go on forever without coming to an end.

For the balance of the day she obsessed about hell and asked Lucia a battery of questions. “And they never get out of there? But listen! Doesn’t hell end after many, many years, then? Those people burning in hell, don’t they ever die? And don’t they turn into ashes? And if people pray very much for sinners, won’t Our Lord get them out of there? And if they make sacrifices as well?” Finally, realizing there was no relief for the condemned souls, she relented, “Poor sinners! We have to pray and make many sacrifices for them!” Pondering the situation further Jacinta said, “How good Our Lady is! She has already promised to take us to Heaven!”

MAY 15 – 20, 1917

The word of the visions witnessed by the three children continued to spread throughout the village eventually reaching the parish priest who sent for the three children so that he could question them directly. Lucia and Francisco cooperated by answering the priest’s questions, but Jacinta hardly spoke. When she did break her silence, it was only with great hesitance and difficulty. As they left for home, Lucia asked why she didn’t answer any questions to which Jacinta responded, “Because I promised you never to tell anything to anybody again.”

Not even questioning by the parish priest, however, quelled the village talk and with each passing day, Lucia’s mother grew more and more upset at the things being said. Not even Maria Rosa’s anger could assuage the excitement felt deep within by the children. While all three believed fervently in the word spoken by the Lady of their vision, Jacinta seemed most enthusiastic in her desire to carry out every request made by the Lady on that fateful day. She reminded the others frequently that at the offering of each and every sacrifice they must be sure to “tell Jesus that it’s for the love of Him” that the sacrifice was being made. If at any time Lucia admitted that she failed to do so, Jacinta would say, “Then I’ll tell Him.” She would then join her hands, raise her eyes to heaven and say: “Oh Jesus, it is for the love of You, and for the conversion of sinners!”^[46]

Francisco seemed to relish his solitude more and more. One day in May he slipped away from Jacinta and Lucia, climbing to the top of a tall rock formation. “You can’t come up here,” he yelled down upon being discovered, “Leave me alone.”^[47]

WEDNESDAY JUNE 13, 1917

APPROXIMATELY 5:00 AM

June 13th is the Feast of St. Anthony of Padua and for the faithful people of Aljustrel it is an important day. The Missa Cantata was being celebrated at St. Anthony’s Church at precisely 8:00 AM and it promised to be a full church. Lucia brought the sheep to pasture before sunrise so she could be back in time to attend. After a “good while” she noticed her brother Antonio running across the field toward her, informing her as he did, that several people were at the house asking to speak with her. Antonio agreed to watch the sheep for her as Lucia ran home to see who it was that wanted so urgently to see her.

On arrival, Lucia found many people from places as far as Minde, Carrascos and Boleiros among other villages on the other side of the mountains. They had all heard of the May apparition and the believers and curious alike wanted to accompany the children to Cova da Iria to check it out for themselves. Lucia was annoyed, but promised to allow them to accompany her to the Cova after she returned from the 8:00 Mass in Fatima. The crowd waited in her yard, much to the chagrin of Maria Rosa and her two elder daughters who ridiculed them for their folly. They waited for two hours for Lucia to return and then waited a bit longer for Lucia to ready herself.

11:00 AM

Lucia and the group of strangers finally departed for the Cova though Lucia felt very bitter. It was not so much any annoyance with the people that crowded the street, but rather the disdain and contempt she felt from her once loving family. Thinking back to the good times of the past as she walked along the dusty road, she wondered where the affection had gone. She began to cry as the strangers peppered her with many questions. Finally, she reached her cousins’ house.

Seeing Lucia’s red eyes and wet cheeks, Jacinta tried to reassure her with a reminder that “Surely these must be the sacrifices that the Angel said God was going to send us. That is why you suffer – and to make reparation to Him, and to convert sinners!” Jacinta always had a way of putting things in perspective for Lucia who dried her eyes. The children and the strangers continued their thirty-minute or so journey to the Cova. Upon their arrival, the children were surprised to find another group of about fifty people waiting for them. This too was a diverse group from “Loureira, a little man from Lomba de Equa, others from Boleiros, Torres Novas, Anteiro; and then there was Maria Carreira and her daughters from Moita.”^[48]

At forty-six years of age, Maria Carreira, also known as Maria da Capelinha was married and had several children. She had been planning this trip for weeks after learning of the May apparitions from her husband who had been weeding a garden with Lucia’s father. It was just two or three days following the apparition that Antonio told Mr. Carreira who thought it was nonsense. While he didn’t believe it, he did bring the tale home to Maria who had a very different reaction. The Carreira’s had a crippled son John, who was “hunch-backed, with knees that crossed and knocked together as he walked.” Maria hoped for a cure for little John and vowed to make the pilgrimage to the Cova.

JUST BEFORE NOON

Lucia and her cousins approached the holm oak, stopping about nine feet short of it. Facing east, they sat to wait, Jacinta on one side of Lucia and Francisco on the other. Many in the group also sat and some passed bread and wine. The children refused the bread but did accept oranges that they held in their hands. Perhaps because of boredom or, possibly just to take her mind off the large crowd, Jacinta started to play, but on rather short order, Lucia made her stop. The low din of the crowd was disrupted by a girl from Boleiros who started praying loudly the prayers in her prayer book.

When she finished, the group completed five decades of the Rosary and the girl from Baleiros began to recite the Litany of Our Lady. Lucia stopped her though pointing out the lack of sufficient time. Then, as if startled by a revelation, Lucia stood and yelled, “Jacinta, there comes Our Lady! There is the light!”^[49] The children ran to the foot of the holm oak tree, and the group of people followed closely. The entire assembly knelt, some on the bushes and the gorse. The children looked upon the Face of Our Lady who once again stood upon the holm oak tree. Some in the crowd were close enough to witness the branches at the top of the tree bend and curve as if under pressure. Others noted that the sun dimmed even though the sky was without clouds.

Lucia raised her hands toward the sky and broke the silence. “Your Excellency told me to come here, please say what you want of me” “I wish you to come here the 13th of next month; to pray the Rosary every day, and to learn to read. Later, I will tell you what I want.”

Maria Carreira could not understand what Our Lady was saying, but could hear “something like a very faint voice.” ^[50] Lucia’s sisters Maria and Teresa were also among the one hundred or so observers. Maria heard, along with some around her, what sounded like “a bee buzzing around inside an iron jar.” She turned to Teresa with an inquisitive look, but Teresa heard nothing. She could see the children staring intently above the tree, but didn’t observe its branches bent in any particular way. She did, however, notice that Lucia was “talking and listening as one does in conversation.”^[51]

In response to a request she had received from one of the villagers, Lucia asked the Lady if she would cure a sick person. “If he is converted, he will be cured during the year, the Lady promised.” “I would like to ask you to take us to Heaven,” Lucia said. ‘Yes, I will take Jacinta and Francisco soon. But you are to stay here some time longer. Jesus wishes to make use of you to make me known and loved. He wants to establish in the world a devotion to my Immaculate Heart. I promise salvation to those who embrace it, and those souls will be loved by God like flowers placed by me to adorn His throne.’ Lucia asked sadly: “Am I to stay here alone?” “No my daughter. Are you suffering a great deal? Don’t lose heart. I will never forsake you. My Immaculate Heart will be your refuge and the way that will lead you to God.”

Upon speaking these final words, the Lady opened her hand and for the second time emanated her light on the children. Lucia noted that the light was a form of communication in which the children saw themselves immersed in God. “Jacinta and Francisco seemed to be in that part of the light that rose towards Heaven,” while Lucia remained in the “light which was poured out on the earth. In front of the palm of Our Lady’s right hand was a heart encircled by thorns which pierced it. The children instinctively understood that this was the Immaculate Heart of Mary, outraged by the sins of humanity, and for which they must seek reparation. Within the vision of the Most Blessed Trinity the children could see Jesus and Mary.^[52]

As the vision of the Trinity faded and Our Lady spoke these final words, She ascended from the holm oak tree and quickly floated away toward the east until She was no longer visible. Maria Carreira heard Lucia say, “Pronto! Now she can’t be seen any more. Now she is entering heaven, Now the doors are being shut.”^[53]

The children remained as they were but the people assembled to witness the event were very excited. Though they could see nothing, it was apparent to them that something amazing had just happened. Some argued about what took place while others asked questions of the children. Still others began to pluck leaves from the top of the tree forcing Lucia to ask them to take only the leaves from the bottom, those not touched by Our Lady.

4:00 PM

Many within the assemblage finally dispersed in different directions reciting the Rosary as they departed. The children too were now able to make their way back to Aljustrel with just a few of the crowd still following them asking questions and taunting them. Discouraged at the lack of reply, the last of the strangers departed leaving the children in peace. Now it was Francisco’s turn to ask questions. For as with the previous apparitions, he could see, but not hear the words of Our Lady. Lucia explained that Jacinta and Francisco would go to heaven soon which caused Francisco a great deal of excitement.

When they reached their house Jacinta and Francisco ran in very excitedly. Manual and Olimpia had just returned home from the fair where they purchased two oxen. The other children had attended the St. Anthony festivities at Fatima. “We saw the Lady again Mother!” Jacinta exclaimed. “And she told me that I am going to heaven soon.” Olimpia and her siblings questioned her in disbelief, almost mockingly, but their father neither laughed at his two youngest children nor tried to pry from them the secrets Our Lady shared with them.

Lucia’s reception upon her arrival home was a bit more chilling. Her family were already convinced that she was an unconscionable liar and Maria Rosa was becoming increasingly more indignant. She ridiculed the crowd of onlookers calling them fools and blamed Lucia for the hysteria.

JUNE 14 – JULY 11, 1917

The days passed but not without the suffering that Our Lady had promised would be experienced by the children. The villagers all seemed to have turned against them. They laughed at them and ridiculed them at virtually every opportunity. The children became the brunt of the villagers' jokes and to some, the object of their hatred. Yet, that did not bother Lucia nearly as much as the betrayal she felt from her sisters and mother. Reaching the boiling point Maria Rosa told Lucia that in the morning they were again going to go see Fr. Ferreira at St. Anthony's and at that time Lucia would tell him the truth!

The two set out for St. Anthony's Church early the next morning with a sullen Lucia walking several feet behind her determined mother. When they reached the Marto house, Maria Rosa stopped in to speak with Olimpia providing a few moments for Lucia to meet with Jacinta. In her calming way Jacinta told Lucia not to cry but instead to offer it as a sacrifice adding that she and Francisco would go to the well to pray for her and told Lucia to join them as soon as she returned.

Lucia and her mother continued up the hill toward the church without speaking a word. Maria Rosa never glanced back at Lucia and her every step, as well as her black dress, dark shawl and black kerchief betrayed the anger that she harbored. Prior to going to see the pastor, however, Maria Rosa entered the church and attended the Holy Mass providing some much-needed relief for the forlorn Lucia. Kneeling before the uplifted Host and Chalice, the seer offered all her sufferings to her Lord and Savior. The Mass ended far too soon for Lucia's liking and the two were off to the rectory. About midway up the stairs leading to the front door, Maria Rosa turned to Lucia, acknowledging her for the first time since they left home, saying, "Don't annoy me anymore! Tell the Prior now that you lied, so that on Sunday he can say in the church that it was a lie, and end the whole thing before all the people go running to Cova da Iria to pray in front of a holm oak bush!"^[54] Fr. Ferreira invited them in and the two had a seat until the Pastor called for Lucia to join him in his study. There he asked her many questions, every detail, even the most boring. He had already spoken to Francisco and Jacinta so he had fairly good information with which to make a comparison of Lucia's detail. After thoughtful analysis, Fr. Ferreira determined that the children had told the truth about what they had seen and heard. But, he added,

“It doesn’t seem to me like a revelation from heaven. It may be a deception of the devil, you know! We shall see. We shall see. We shall give our opinion later on,” he said to Maria Rosa as they departed the rectory.

This startling revelation took Lucia and her mother aback. The poor little girl was exhausted and terrified. On the return walk home, Maria Rosa took every opportunity to remind Lucia of the words of the priest and sometimes added blows and kicks for emphasis. As soon as they arrived home, Lucia retreated to the solace of the well where she had seen the Angel. There she found Francisco and Jacinta still on their knees praying for their cousin. Jacinta ran to Lucia asking how the meeting went. They listened with indignation as Lucia told them everything. “It’s not the devil,” Jacinta objected. “No! They say the devil is very foul and ugly, and he is under the ground in hell. And that Lady is so beautiful, and we saw her go up to heaven!”^[55]

Despite Jacinta’s reassurance, Lucia was unable to sleep at all that night, replaying the words of the priest in her mind repeatedly, and wondering if it was possible that she had unwittingly become the instrument of Satan. This mental anguish repeated itself each night for a very long time and Lucia’s suffering was great.

JULY 12, 1917

The constant berating of her family, the anguish caused by her nightmares and the horrific thoughts generated by her own imagination were too much for Lucia. She finally determined that the priest must be right and that her visions had to be the work of the devil. She informed Francisco and Jacinta that she would not accompany them to the Cova da Iria the following day as previously instructed by the Lady. Her two young cousins made several attempts to convince her to go to the Cova with them, but Lucia was steadfast in her commitment to never again go to the Cova da Iria on the 13th of the month.

Yet, there was something deep within her that caused her concern. After all, even the hardships of her newfound daily life delivered some consolations. Her mind drifted to the day when two priests visited her, encouraged her, and asked her to pray for the Holy Father. “Who is the Holy Father?” Lucia inquired. The priest took great pains to explain who the Holy Father was and his role in the faith. From that day forward, Lucia and her cousins never missed an opportunity to pray for him adding three Aves to their daily Rosary for the Vicar of Christ.

And there was the terrific example of Francisco, who not only embraced his sufferings, but seemed to enjoy them. He would frequently say, “That doesn’t matter to me, I will suffer everything as much as she wants!” He would even provide comfort to Lucia at her lowest moments reminding her, “Didn’t Our Lady say we should have much to suffer?”^[56] Finally, overcome with mental exhaustion from the endless mind games, Lucia drifted off to sleep.

SATURDAY JULY 13, 1917

When Lucia awoke she was still determined to refrain from taking the sheep to the Cova that day. This apparently pleased Maria Rosa, though her relief would be short-lived. As the hour drew near to take the sheep from the coral, Lucia was overcome with a desire to see her cousins. She rushed to their house only to find them kneeling beside a bed crying. “Aren’t you going,” Lucia asked them. “We don’t dare go without you!” they sobbed as their tears fell gently to the floor. “Well, I’ve changed my mind, and I’m going,” Lucia informed them. Overjoyed, Francisco told Lucia that they have been praying all night that she might relent in her stubbornness.

Despite the oppressive heat of July, the children ran almost the entire two plus miles of dusty road on their way to the Cova. It hadn’t rained in weeks and the scorching sun drenched the earth making it almost impossible for the laborers to pick the plums or harvest their potatoes. None of the efforts of those struggling roadside laborers was even noticed by the children, however, as they approached the Cova.

Some two to three thousand people had already gathered there including Maria Carriera and her entire family; even her disbelieving husband and their crippled son. Also present for today’s anticipated apparition was Jose Alves of Moita who had informed Fr. Ferreira that his theory of these apparitions being the deceit of the devil was an impossibility. “Who ever heard of the devil inciting people to pray?” the good man had inquired of his priest.

Even Manuel Marto had decided to take the day off to see for himself what his children obsessed about, but found navigation through the dense crowd of onlookers most difficult. He finally reached Jacinta and laughed to himself thinking of the outfits that some of the people he had just passed were wearing; men in their Sunday suits and women barefoot dressed all in black. He also was a bit concerned at the size of the crowd thinking for the first time that the safety of his children might be at risk. Manuel even noticed his wife and sister-in-law Maria Rosa in the crowd clutching a supply of matches and some holy candles as if ready to perform some type of exorcism.

Manuel took his place next to his children who had not even noticed his arrival. They were kneeling, totally consumed with leading the crowd in the Rosary. As they prayed the three seers first witnessed the flash of light approach. Lucia glanced over and noticed for the first time her uncle and other men wearing hats. "Take off your hats! Take off your hats, for I see Our Lady already!" A moment later, the children saw the Lady upon the holm oak tree. Manuel looked up and noticed a small cloud come to rest over the tree, but before he could acknowledge it or figure out what it might be, the sunlight seemed to dim. A cool breeze blew and he heard a buzz, what he thought sounded "like a horse-fly in an empty water pot." Maria Carreira heard it too, but only Lucia and Jacinta could understand the words Our Lady was speaking to them.^[57]

Lucia again, as she had in the previous apparitions, was the first to speak. "What do you want from me?" she said. The Lady answered, "I want you to come here. That you come the 13th of next month, to continue to pray the Rosary every day in honor of Our Lady of the Rosary, in order to obtain peace for the world and the end of the war, because only She can help you." Lucia then said, 'I would like to ask you to tell us who you are, and to work a miracle so that everybody will believe that you are appearing to us.' She answered, "Continue to come here every month. In October, I will tell you who I am and what I want, and I will perform a miracle for all to see and believe." Lucia then made a number of requests of the Lady, petitions that were requested of her by others for healings. There were many but among them was a request for a cure for Maria Carreira's crippled son to which the Lady responded that she would not cure him but would give him a means of livelihood if he would say his Rosary every day. She noted that all such people needed to pray the Rosary in order to obtain the graces needed during the year for their requests to be granted. "Sacrifice yourselves for sinners," the Lady continued, "and say many times, especially whenever you make some sacrifice: Oh Jesus, it is for love of you, for the conversion of sinners, and in reparation for the sins committed against the Immaculate Heart of

Mary.”

As she spoke these words, Our Lady stretched out her hands, as before, emulating rays of light that seemed to penetrate directly into the earth, exposing to the children a sea of fire. In Lucia’s words, “Plunged in this fire were demons and souls in human form, like transparent burning embers, all blackened or burnished bronze, floating about in the conflagration, now raised into the air by the flames that issued from within themselves together with great clouds of smoke now falling back on every side like sparks in huge fires, without weight or equilibrium, amid shrieks and groans of pain and despair.”

The vision horrified the children and made them tremble with fear causing Lucia to cry out. “The demons could be distinguished by their terrifying and repellent likeness to frightful and unknown animals, black and transparent like burning coals. Terrified and as if to plead for succor,” the children looked up at the Lady, who so kindly, and ever so sadly, said to them,

“You have seen Hell where the souls of poor sinners go. To save them, God wishes to establish in the world devotion to My Immaculate Heart. If what I say to you is done, many souls will be saved and there will be peace. The war is going to end, but if people do not cease offending God, a worse one will break out during the pontificate of Pius XI. When you see the night illumined by an unknown light, know that this is the great sign given you by God that he is about to punish the world for its crimes, by means of war, famine, and persecutions of the Church and of the Holy Father. To prevent this, I shall come to ask for the consecration of Russia to my Immaculate Heart, and the Communion of Reparation on the First Saturdays. If my requests are heeded, Russia will be converted and there will be peace. If not, she will spread her errors throughout the world, causing wars and persecution of the Church. The good will be martyred, the Holy Father will have much to suffer, various nations will be annihilated. In the end, my Immaculate Heart will triumph. The Holy Father will consecrate Russia to me, and she will be converted, and a period of peace will be granted to the world. Do not tell this to anybody. Francisco, yes, you may tell him. When you pray the Rosary, say after each mystery, 'Oh my Jesus, forgive us, save us from the fire of hell. Lead all souls to Heaven, especially those who are in most need.'”

The Lady then revealed the third and final secret. In the moments that followed not a sound could be heard, not even from the two to three thousand assembled until Lucia broke the silence by asking, “Is there anything more that you want of me?” Being nothing else, the Lady ascended towards the east disappearing into the “immense distance of the firmament.” [\[58\]](#)

The children remained silently staring eastward for a time and then looked at each other as people began to close in around them. “What did she look like? What did she say? The questions seemed never ending. Manuel grabbed his daughter pulling her up in his arms. She hugged his neck as the people continued to barrage her and the other children with questions. And so it went until someone offered to take them home in an automobile. Mr. Marto agreed and the exhausted children rushed into the waiting car and headed for home. [\[59\]](#)

THE DAYS PRIOR TO AUGUST 10, 1917

As August 13, 1917 approached, word of the Fatima apparitions spread throughout the region far beyond the confines of Fatima. The anti-Catholic secular newspapers began to pick up coverage of the story and conspiracy theories were plentiful. The Jacobin, for example, questioned whether the entire affair was a theatrical event staged by the clergy, particularly the Jesuits, as a means of regaining some of the prestige lost in the Revolution of 1910. O Seculo, Lisboa’s chief secular daily, printed a “sarcastic and distorted account on July 21, 1917, under the headline:

A MESSAGE FROM HEAVEN-COMMERCIAL SPECULATION?

Even the Catholic diocesan paper The Ouriense of Ourem, was careful in their acknowledgement of a miracle. That headline read:

REAL APPARITION OR SUPPOSED ILLUSION

Many sought some scientific explanation for the reported apparitions raising psychosis, epilepsy and collective suggestion as possible explanations of the incredible tale from the Serra da Aire.^[60]

While not being able to read the newspaper accounts, the children were put out by the spectacle of people; self-serving people who came from miles in carriages and automobiles, dressed in fancy clothes, who were there, for the most part, to see what bounty they might claim from heaven's messengers. They were more tolerant of the poor who walked miles, without shoes, some completing the final mile on bleeding knees, to beg the children to intercede with Our Lady for a cure for some infirmed, diseased or crippled family member, but even for them the children's patience was being stretched thin. Manuel Marto remembers the insane questions that some people asked, some of them were terrible. "Did Our Lady also have goats and sheep when she was a little girl? Did Our Lady ever eat potatoes?" The questions were constant coming from all directions. The children could have no rest when someone of these strangers was around.

Children are resilient and the three visionaries of Fatima were not any different in that regard as they became quite skilled at avoiding curiosity seekers. One day, when they saw several well-to-do ladies and gentlemen emerge from an automobile, the children knew there was no escape for they had already been spotted. "Where do the little shepherds live? The ones that saw Our Lady?" they asked. The children gave very exact directions to their homes and the strangers thanked them, climbed back into their automobile, and drove down the hill. The children were excited at their accomplishment and hid among some olive trees behind Lucia's house until they thought it safe to emerge.

The children were especially fearful of priests who traveled to see them. Many were Jesuits and they had a propensity for treating the children with skepticism and hostility. They seem almost trained to ask many clever questions that others would never think to ask, questions meant to trick them or trip them up to prove that they were lying.

The exception was the saintly Fr. Cruz, the same man who told Fr. Pena that Lucia was versed enough in her catechism to receive her First Communion despite her young age, later telling Lucia, "My daughter, our soul is the temple of the Holy Spirit. Keep it always pure..." But that was four years earlier. So much had happened since that time of cherished innocence. Fr. Cruz changed too. He was nearly crippled and found that walking had become a most difficult exercise. Despite his pain, he continued to preach and save souls.

He questioned the children in a most respectful way and then asked them to lead him to the exact spot of the apparitions. The children walked on either side as the good priest rode a small donkey along the road. It was for him, as well as the children, an arduous journey, but a trip well worth the sacrifice as Fr. Cruz concluded after his questions and site visit, that the children had told the truth of what they had witnessed. He taught them many prayers meant to console them and from that moment became a champion of their visions.

Lucia's family however, remained unconvinced and grew in their hostility toward Lucia. Even Antonio, once more ambivalent to his daughter's fantasies, now joined in his family's aggression after traveling to the Cova and witnessing the destruction that the crowds had caused to his land. His vegetable gardens were destroyed. The soil around them was so hard after being trampled by thousands of feet that any attempt at cultivation was useless. Horses had eaten his cabbage, beans and potato vines. What wasn't eaten was trampled. There would be no crops. The family feared starvation and Antonio began drinking even more than he had before.

Whenever Lucia was hungry, her sisters would tell her to go to the Cova da Iria and eat what she could find growing. Her mother told her to go ask "that Lady" for something to eat. Not even Jacinta could reason with her aunt and cousins as she tried to explain that it was not Lucia's fault that all these people went to Cova da Iria. It was too late; the die had been cast. It was only at the Cova or Valinhos or the hills near the Cova that Lucia could take any solace whatsoever.

The children continued to lament what Our Lady had them witness. The vision of hell was so vivid on their impressionable minds that they just couldn't stop thinking about it. It monopolized all their discussions and even made the solitude and peacefulness of time at the Cova more frightening. Francisco seemed to handle it best preferring to focus on the goodness of God. Jacinta could not. She began having visions of the future; of the horrors of World War II, of starving people lining a road crying with hunger, of the Holy Father kneeling in a church before the Immaculate Heart of Mary leading hundreds, maybe thousands in prayer. There was so much more about the Pope in Jacinta's visions that Lucia warned her not to speak of as it would violate Our Lady's request to keep the secrets She had imparted to the children.

The children were destined to walk along the path that Christ chose for them and Jacinta, at least, could see where the road was leading. The persecution that awaited Jesus on his chosen path of Calvary was in store for the three visionaries and the antagonism from many people that confronted them, the hatred of what they had become, was seemingly never ending. But the words of loathe were about to take on a new dimension as those words began to morph into the political action of the anti-clerical elite.

Administrator Artur de Oliveira Santos, Fatima's local authority, was headquartered in the district of Vila Nova de Ourem, and was every bit an anti-clerical fanatic as those in charge of the newspapers. Known as "The Tinsmith," owing to his former profession, the Administrator was a Freemason who enjoyed enormous power through his position, and ruled his district in a tyrannical style, "imposing restrictions on churches and religious services on his slightest whim." Now, he was hearing tales of two to three thousand people flocking to a place called Cova da Iria to hear three children converse with an invisible woman standing atop a small tree! He was out of patience and, in response to the mounting pressure from other anti-clerics, and what the various liberal newspaper editors called "an invasion of mysticism," he decided to bring about the end to the popular devotion that resulted from the shepherd's visions in Fatima. Worse, he vowed to accomplish this using whatever means necessary. He began by notifying the fathers of the three seers of Fatima, Manuel Marto and Antonio dos Santos, to appear with their children at Vila Nova de Ourem. [\[61\]](#)

Jacinta, (left) Lucia, (middle) and Francisco (right) pose for a photo in 1917. The three children suffered greatly following the first Apparition on May 13th. They were ridiculed, interrogated by clergy and government officials and threatened with a torturous death if they wouldn't recant their stories of the Marian Apparitions.

FRIDAY AUGUST 10, 1917

The Administrator's notice was delivered on August 10, 1917 and caught the children's fathers by complete surprise. Vila Nova de Ourem was a journey of about nine miles and the only way the summoned could make the trip was to walk or ride a donkey. Manuel Marto was upset with the imposition and refused to have his two young children make such an arduous journey, a position his wife Olimpia supported. Moreover, he was not going to have his young children subjected to questioning before the court. He opted instead to make the journey without his children. Antonio dos Santos, however, wanted more than anything to put an end to the absurdity his daughter had created and insisted that Lucia would be present to answer for herself. Maria Rosa concurred. They, therefore, required her to make the extensive, time-consuming trek.

Lucia overheard the discussions and was bitter at the extreme reaction of her family. She lamented in conversation with Jesus, "Why would my aunt and uncle put themselves in danger to defend their children, but my parents turn me over with the greatest indifference, that they may do with me what they will. And she prayed to Him, "But patience! I expect to have to suffer more for Thy love, O my God, and it is for the conversion of sinners."^[62]

SATURDAY AUGUST 11, 1917

MORNING

Antonio and Lucia set out for Ourem on Saturday in the early morning hours stopping by the Marto house along the way. The two fathers spoke for a bit giving Lucia a chance to seek out her cousin. Lucia cried to Jacinta recounting the conversation she had overheard at home. "Never mind," Jacinta said not even trying to disguise her fear. "If they kill you, you just tell them that I am like you, and Francisco even more so, and that we want to die too. And now I will go with Francisco to the well to pray very hard for you." They hugged and Lucia and her father resumed their long journey.^[63]

NOON

Antonio and his daughter arrived in Ourem tired and hot after the long journey and made their way to the Administration building. Antonio was furious to find the building closed and the doors locked with not a soul in site. The searing heat added to his frustration as he and Lucia made their way along the cobblestone road looking for anyone that might be able to direct them to the Tinsmith. Instead they stumbled upon Manuel who had just arrived on his horse. Antonio conveyed his frustration and Manuel suggested that, because of the hour, they get a bite to eat before trying to find the Administrator. After lunch, the three made their way back to the Administration building only to learn that the building was still closed-up tightly. They stood commiserating for a while until, eventually, a man sauntered by and informed them that the Administration Building had moved to a different street for which he provided directions. The tired travelers made their way as instructed.

Shortly thereafter Antonio, Lucia and Manuel arrived at their destination. The Tinsmith studied his “guests” but seemed more interested in who was absent than those present. “And the boy,” he demanded. “What boy,” Manuel replied, realizing that the Administrator didn’t know that there was a third child missing. Manuel feigned ignorance that his “child’s” presence had been required, but the Administrator voiced his displeasure rather loudly.

In the absence of his other anticipated witness, de Oliveira Santos focused his entire attention on poor Lucia, vigorously interrogating her in the presence of not only her father and her uncle, but several other men unknown to Lucia. The Administrator was determined to force her to reveal the Secret disclosed by the Lady and to extract Lucia’s promise to never again return to the Cova da Iria. To attain his objective the Tinsmith spared neither promise nor threat. Despite his efforts, he could accomplish nothing as Lucia remained silent except to recount, for what seemed to her the hundredth time, the events that were previously disclosed. Seeing that he was getting nowhere with Lucia, he turned to her father. “You there, do they believe these things over in Fatima?” “Oh, no sir!” Antonio replied, “All this is just women’s tales.” Turning to her uncle the Tinsmith said, “And you, what do you say?” If Manuel had any fear he did not show it. Standing tall he answered, “I am here at your command and my children say the same things I do.” “Then you think it’s true,” the Administrator demanded. “Yes, sir,” Manuel answered, “I believe what they say.” At that, the Administrator dismissed them vowing, however, that he would achieve his end, even if this meant that he had to take

Lucia's life. [\[64\]](#)

The three headed back to Aljustrel arriving late in the day and Lucia headed straight for the well where she found her faithful cousins kneeling in prayer. Jacinta ran to Lucia and held her tightly saying, "Your sister told us they had killed you!" They all laughed and enjoyed their reunion as the Angel's lamps began to twinkle in the evening sky.

SUNDAY AUGUST 12, 1917

Crowds had already begun to gather in Fatima many carrying baskets of food, jugs of water, even blankets on which to sleep in the fields for the night. They searched for the children to bring their petitions of the Blessed Mother. Cures, money, love, and jobs. Just about anything imaginable. Some were from faraway places. Others, local villagers, but all sought out the children in relentless fashion.

Maria Rosa was furious, mostly at Lucia, whose "lie" caused this steady onslaught of people that ruined her fields and trampled her crops. If not for her promise to Our Lady to be at the Cova on Monday, Lucia may have accepted her Aunt Cascais offer to keep Lucia and her cousins sheltered at her house until the crowds dwindled. No, Lucia needed to stay home and endure the suffering for the conversion of sinners.

The crowds were rough, treating the children less like people than objects. The people meant no malice, but simply became overexcited when they saw the children. Lucia noted "In the hands of those people we were like a ball in the hands of a little girl. Each one pulled us in his direction and asked his question, without ever giving us time to answer anybody."

By early evening, three policemen arrived at Antonio and Maria Rosa's home, not to quell the noisy crowd that pressed in around their house, but rather to deliver a summons for Lucia to go to the Marto house where the Administrator waited for her. Lucia's father actually received the notification and it was he who took the frightened child to her aunt's house.

At the home of Manuel and Olimpia Marto the Administrator was already threatening the children with death if they persisted in their silence. "Never mind," Jacinta said softly to Francisco, "If they kill us, so much the better, for then we will see Jesus and Our Lady." The lengthy interrogation that followed Lucia's arrival produced no better outcome for Administrator de Oliveira Santos, who, though frustrated, cleverly realized that a different approach would be necessary if he were to have any success in extracting the “secrets” departed to the children by the Lady.

Over the course of the next few hours, the Tinsmith concocted a new scheme. If the children would not agree to his demands that they reveal their secret and not return to Cova da Iria, then he would use his immense power to extract the information and prevent them from ever returning to the site of the visions. Noting that Father Ferreira would be a more appropriate person to involve himself in matters of this sort, the Administrator asked if the children’s parents would object “to their going to the rectory next morning before keeping their rendezvous at Cova da Iria. Fatima, after all, was on the way to the place of the apparition.” Securing their agreement, the Administrator departed.

MONDAY AUGUST 13, 1917

EARLY MORNING

Early the next morning, de Oliveira Santos arrived at the Marto house where Lucia had already joined her two cousins. He was not expected as Manuel assumed he, not the Administrator, would take his children to the rectory. But as he stood in the doorway, the Administrator informed Manuel that he too wanted to witness the miracle and that they could all go together to the rectory and then the Cova. Manuel was suspicious. This was uncharacteristic behavior for the Administrator. Besides, he looked awfully nervous for someone of his command. “Let’s all go together,” the Tinsmith said, “I will take the little ones with me in the wagon. See and believe like Saint Thomas! Where are the children, by the way? Time is getting on. You’d better have them called.”^[65] As the children entered the room the Administrator informed them of his plan. Despite their hesitance, he convinced them that they should go with him. “We’ll have more time to stop at Fatima, at the house of the Prior. He wants to ask them some questions, you know!” Not even Manuel could overcome that logic with an objection, and the children climbed into the Official’s wagon. Francisco sat in the front and the two girls in back. Manuel and Antonio followed on foot as St. Anthony’s Church and rectory were just a few minutes away at the top of the hill.

On arrival, the Administrator called for Lucia to enter the rectory first while the other two waited in the wagon. Fr. Ferreira’s formerly accepting demeanor seemed to change, however, when he questioned Lucia on this day. “Who taught you to say the things that you are going about saying?” the priest inquired. “That Lady whom I saw at Cova da Iria,” Lucia responded compliantly. “Anyone who goes around spreading such wicked lies as the lies you tell will be judged, and will go to hell if it isn’t true. More and more, many people, are being deceived by you,” the priest warned. Lucia remained respectful albeit forceful in her reply. “If anyone who lies goes to hell, I will not go to hell,” Lucia retorted as she stared directly into the priest’s eyes, “for I don’t lie and I tell only what I have seen and what the Lady has said to me. And as for the crowd that goes there, they only go because they want to. We don’t’ call anybody.”^[66]

APPROXIMATELY 11:00 AM

Fr. Ferreira then tried to extract from Lucia the secret that was told to the children by the Lady. “I can’t tell it. But if Your Reverence wants to know it, I will ask the Lady, and if she gives me permission, I will tell you.” The Administrator interrupted at this point noting that these are “supernatural” matters that wasted his time. He took Lucia and departed the rectory, ordering Lucia back into the wagon and headed down the road toward Ourem, a direction opposite that of the Cova. To Lucia’s objection he rather cheerfully noted, “It’s all right, we’ll stop and see the Prior at Ourem a moment. Then I’ll take you to Cova da Iria by automobile. You’ll be there in time!”^[67]

To hide the children from the crowds that made their way in large numbers to the Cova, the Administrator covered them with blankets. Lucia’s father and uncle, who had no idea where the Administrator was taking their children, continued on foot to follow the wagon until they lost sight of it. They then turned and joined the crowd walking toward Cova da Iria. When they finally reached their destination some 30 minutes later, they found over 6,000 people assembled, people who arrived on foot, horseback, mule, bicycle, carriage and automobile. All asked for the children as the hour drew close to Noon.

Among the faithful and curious was Maria Carreira who had prepared a special table with flowers as an “altar” to Our Lady. She had also “supervised the erection of a rustic arch, with some crosses tied to it, and two hanging lamps to mark the spot at night. It seems incredible and most inconsistent with her former and future attitude toward her daughter's visionary claims, but Maria Rosa is said to have contributed something toward these lamps; and her oldest daughter was helping to arrange the arch and the table.”^[68]

12:00 NOON

The children were conspicuously absent from the Cova, but some of the large crowd gathered around the holm oak tree on which Our Lady was expected to appear and knelt to say the Rosary. Eventually, the entire crowd joined in. At that point, a faint “murmuring sound was heard, followed by what seemed to be a rumble of thunder, some thought in the road, others in the little tree, still others on the far horizon.”

Some in the crowd grew frightened as they placed some credence in a rumor that spread regarding the apparitions being the devil's work. It seems that there is a “small, extinct volcanic crater near the Cova da Iria...and,” some believed, “that it [the story of the apparitions] was all a trick of the devil to get these good people in one place, and then have it open up and swallow them in its fiery depths.”^[69] So at the sound of the thunder, some ran away in fear while others seemed paralyzed in their fear. “We're all going to die,” a few of the terrified were heard saying. Those who remained noticed a flash of light and what appeared to be a small white cloud approaching from the east and settling over the holm oak tree. Just a few seconds later, it rose from the tree and drifted eastward into the blue sky. As the onlookers glanced at one another they noticed that their faces and clothing were “tinted with the various colors of the rainbow...while the foliage of the trees and bushes seemed like brilliant flowers instead of leaves, and the dry earth itself was checkered with different gorgeous hues. There is no doubt Our Lady had come,” Maria Carreira commented, “but she didn't find the children.”^[70]

It seems that different people witnessed slightly different events that day although each description was similar, if not exact, in nature. Lucia's sisters Maria and Teresa, who were also present at this time described their experience. They could see that the crowd was growing impatient. Their father, Antonio, yelled to the assembled that there was no need to wait as the children were not present. On short order, there was a loud noise. Some reacted to the sound of what Teresa described as two sticks banging together. Maria didn't hear it, but those who did grew frightened and started to run up the north slope of the Cova. Maria and Teresa were unsure what they were running from, but followed any-way. As they ran, Maria heard an old man say, “People of little faith, don’t’ you see the miracle?” Maria and Teresa stopped and walked back toward the man, and they too noticed something unusual. “flowers resembling snow falling from the sky, and colored lights like a rainbow on the ground. People put out their hands to catch the flowers only to find that they disappeared.” ^[71] The clouds around the sun also “reflected different colors on the people.” Some saw “the figure of Our Lady in the clouds,” but Maria and Teresa did not.

Many wondered what had happened to them and though neither of the fathers revealed anything of the morning’s events, rumor began to circulate through the crowd that Fr. Ferreira and the Administrator were responsible to the children’s absence. The crowd grew hostile toward them shouting, “Down with the Administrator, Down with the Prior!” Some in the crowd suggested taking a mob to Fatima, if not Ourem, to deal with the scoundrels face to face, until reminded that justice will be administered by God and should not be left to man’s discretion. Manuel Marto, however, was more concerned about the well-being of his children and hastily returned home where he found his wife weeping.

To Lucia, Francisco and Jacinta, it was abundantly clear that the Tinsmith had no intention of taking them to the priest’s house as he drove them directly to his house. Once there, the children were taken to a room and told that they would not be let out until they had revealed the Secret. The children were certainly frightened, but despite the terror they were most concerned that they missed their appointment with Our Lady. Francisco hoped out loud that the Lady would make an appearance there in the room, but there was no flash of light, no approaching cloud, no sign of Our Lady. The three of them wondered if their absence made the Lady sad and discussed whether she might ever appear to them again. Jacinta cried as Francisco did his best to console her. “Let’s offer this to Jesus for poor sinners, as that Lady told us to do,” he said. And turning his eyes toward heaven, he began to pray. Jacinta soon joined with Francisco in prayer and night turned to morning.

AUGUST 14, 1917
10:00 AM

The Administrator came to the room where the children were being held and led them to the Town Hall, there, conducting another long inquisition. But the night of captivity did nothing to loosen the children's tongues. The frustrated Administrator concluded his questioning after a couple of hours and began to think of his options.

12:00 NOON

By lunchtime the children found themselves back at the Administrator's home where they were given lunch by the Tinsmith's kind wife who felt compassion for them. She even let them play with her children for a time, seeing to it that they lacked for nothing. Lucia noticed how her little cousin continued to suffer with the realization that their parents had abandoned them. With tears streaming down her cheeks, Jacinta said, "Neither your parents nor mine have come to see us. They don't bother about us anymore!"

With little regard to his wife's expression of compassion, the Administrator was determined to extract from the children the confession that would put an end to the nonsense once and for all. He questioned the children a bit more, and gaining no information, informed them that since his kindness yielded no results he was going to throw them in jail until they confessed their lies.

The town jail cells were horrible places "dark, acrid with old and disreputable odors, full of harsh discordant echoes, and shut in by iron bars from the world of free men."^[72] Most of the other occupants were not reputable characters, but rather petty criminals and drunkards. This was the cell chosen for the three children of Fatima. Opening the cell door, the Tinsmith threatened to boil the children in oil if they persisted in their refusal to divulge the Secret of Fatima. Still in their presence, he ordered that a cauldron of oil be heated, and threatened to put the children in the cauldron if they did not cooperate. He then left them in the cell to allow them time to ponder the situation.

The children immediately retreated to the back of the cell near the barred window that overlooked the cattle market. Jacinta peered out and began to cry telling Lucia, "...We are going to die without ever seeing our parents again. I want to see my mother!" Lucia tried to take Jacinta's mind off her mother by suggesting that the three children each take one of the intentions for which the Lady had asked them to pray – sinners, the Holy Father and reparation for the sins committed against the Immaculate Heart of Mary. Though agreeing, when asked to choose the one she preferred, Jacinta responded, “I’m making the offering for all the intentions, because I love them all.” “With her face bathed in tears, she joined her hands, raised her eyes to heaven and said, ‘O my Jesus! This is for love of You, for the conversion of sinners, for the Holy Father, and in reparation for the sins committed against the Immaculate Heart of Mary!’”

Soon thereafter, Jacinta’s thoughts would again drift to her mother. This time it was Francisco who reminded her “If we never see our mother again, patience! Let us offer it for the conversion of sinners. The worst will be if Our Lady never comes back any more. That’s what bothers me. But I am going to offer that, too, for the conversion of sinners.”

This gentle reminder was enough to satisfy Jacinta for a while though similar conversations occurred many times throughout the ordeal often resulting in the three children kneeling in prayer in the cell amidst the adult prisoners.

Such a prison spectacle obviously attracted the attention of the other prisoners who gathered around the children with their questions. One of the imprisoned men tried to persuade Jacinta to give in, telling her that she could avoid being killed by simply telling the secret to the Administrator, but Jacinta responded, “I’d rather die!” Jacinta then rose from her kneeling position, removed the medal containing an image of Our Lady from her neck, and asked a tall prisoner to hang it on a nail that was in the wall. She immediately knelt again. The prisoners also got on their knees and joined the children in prayer saying only the prayers that they knew. When the Rosary ended, Jacinta went back to the window and began to cry again. Despite offering the sacrifice to Jesus, she was still saddened thinking about her mother.

One of the prisoners who developed a fondness for little Jacinta decided to play the concertina to divert the child’s attention from her plight. As he played, they all started singing, children and adults together. One of the prisoners asked if the children knew how to dance to which they replied, “Yes. We know the Fandango and the Vira; two folk dances that are very popular in Fatima region of Portugal particularly during celebrations such as those held in commemoration of a Saint. And, there was no shortage of such celebrations in a country as religious as Portugal. In fact, each region popularized its own style of dance for that purpose, dance styles such as the Vira, Chula, Corridinho, Malhao and Fandango. The Vira, very popular in the Fatima region, is similar to the Australian Waltz, where couples form a circle facing each-other and go around a circle doing different steps, changing partners as they go, although sometimes the women have solo parts. Typically, these dances are performed in costume consisting of a long length red and black skirt with a flower pattern on the hem of the skirt. Women wear a white shirt and a red head-piece. The Fandango is like the Vira, in the steps, but the music is much different. Originally formed in Spain, this dance is much loved and celebrated in Portugal not only on special saint celebrations but also at Christmas. The traditional costume of the Fandango is a long red skirt and a red shirt.

Today, however, there would be no costume, nor would there be any precept of a formal celebration. Rather the entire ruse was simply a distraction by a kindly cellmate from the horror that this moment presented to the children. The poor thief sharing Jacinta's cell tried to dance with her but found her to be so tiny that he was forced to pick her up and dance with her in his arms.

Lucia knew how much Jacinta loved to dance and recalled that she was quite good at it. In her mind's eye, Lucia drifted back to the day that Jacinta learned that one of her brothers was killed in the war, recalling how much she cried. Even then, Lucia could distract her, by arranging a little dance with two of her other brothers. There was the poor child dancing away as she dried the tears that ran down her cheeks. Her fondness for dancing was such, that the sound of some shepherd playing his instrument in the pasture was enough to start her dancing all by herself.^[73]

At least for the time being, as they danced to the sounds of the concertina, the children didn't think so much about the boiling caldron of oil that awaited them. The music and dancing stopped abruptly, however, when a policeman entered the cell and summoned the children to follow him to the office of the Administrator.

The Tinsmith made another attempt to extract the secret from the children who met his demand with an unambiguous silence. "Very well," the frustrated official said, "I have tried to save you. But since you will not obey the government, you shall be boiled alive in a cauldron of hot oil."^[74] He shouted a command and the door to his office opened. On the other side stood a very big guard with a contemptuous look on his face. “Is the oil good and hot?” the Administrator inquired of him. “Yes, Senhor Administrator,” came the reply. “Boiling,” the Administrator demanded. “Yes Senhor,” the guard insisted. Grabbing Jacinta by the arm, the Administrator instructed, “Take this one and throw her in.”

Francisco and Lucia were certain she had gone to her death and began to pray for her courage. “What do we care if they kill us? Francisco offered. “We’ll go right to heaven.” Soon the door reopened and the ugly guard said, “She’s fried, now for the next one.” He grabbed Francisco and pulled him out of the room slamming the door behind him.

Lucia was now alone with the Administrator. “It will be you next,” he said. “You’d better tell me the secret, Lucia.” With marked indifference Lucia replied, “I would rather die.” “Very well. You shall,” the Administrator obliged. The Administrator was certainly aware of the political problems the torturous death of such innocent children would bring, however, and had no plans to do anything beyond scaring the three innocents into confessing.

Shortly thereafter the guard returned, grabbed Lucia’s arm and led her away to another room where Lucia was delighted to see Francisco and Jacinta alive.

Administrator de Oliveira Santos was defeated. He kept the children overnight perhaps still holding out hope that they might relent, but was forced to release them the following morning.^[75]

WEDNESDAY AUGUST 15, 1917

THE FEAST OF THE ASSUMPTION OF MARY

Olimpia and Manuel Marto attended morning Mass at the Church of St. Anthony. They prayed for guidance and grieved for the loss of their children at the hands of the Administrator. Nearly everyone at church that morning spoke of the kidnapping and rumors that the children had been transferred and were now incarcerated at Santarem, a larger, more penal-type facility. One reported that they were seen playing on the porch of the Administrator’s house in Ourem. Another said they were on the porch at the rectory in Fatima, a rumor which in fact proved to be true. Marto grabbed his daughter in his arms and sobbed as he held on to her tightly. The crowd that lingered after Mass was visibly overjoyed but at the same time clenched fists and shared some very angry words toward the Administrator. Marto spoke to the crowd urging them to behave as the problem was not with any individual but rather with the unbelief that persisted from those in control.

Just then, the Administrator, who had taken the children back to the rectory, approached. He asked Marto to join him in a glass of wine, an offer that Marto very quickly rejected. The crowd, however, grew angrier and, if not for the intervention of Manuel Marto, the Tinsmith may well have been injured at the hand of the angry mob. As the enraged horde moved toward the Tinsmith, Marto quickly changed his mind and agreed to accept the Administrator's offer to have a glass of wine at the nearby shop.

While all this was developing, the children quietly slipped away and headed for the Cova where they recited the Rosary at the foot of the small holm oak upon which Our Lady had appeared to them. The tree now stood almost devoid of its foliage and even missed a few branches that pilgrims had carried away as souvenirs. The children also took notice of the arch and table left by Maria Carreira on August 13th. On it lay some flowers and two candlesticks that pilgrims had left as homage. Maria Carreira had already gathered several coins that had been left there as well. In all there were 1340 reis – just under 2 US dollars.

The morning return home after two days in captivity was certainly cause for happiness and Jacinta and Francisco's parents wanted their children to remain at home with them so they could properly celebrate their return. To relieve Francisco and Jacinta of their chore Manuel and Olympia Marto sent their son John out to pasture the sheep instead.^[76]

Lucia, on the other hand, received no such warm welcome and upon her return home was immediately instructed to get the sheep and take them to the pasture, a request to which she obediently complied.^[77]

AUGUST 16, 1917 – AUGUST 18, 1917

Over the course of the ensuing three days the children pastured their sheep as normal, each day hoping for an appearance by the Lady. At the end of each day they returned home in disappointment for lack of an appearance.

SUNDAY AUGUST 19, 1917 MORNING

Sunday August 19th was clear, sunny and typically hot when Maria Carreira awoke. Up until now, she was unable to convince anyone to take charge of the money that she had collected at the Cova da Iria. On this day, however, she awoke earlier than most days to allow time to search out Lucia in the hope of convincing her, if not to take the money, to at least ask Our Lady what should be done with it. Finding Lucia, Maria made her plea, but Lucia steadfastly refused to accept responsibility for the cash. “At least,” Maria begged, “ask Our Lady what should be done with the money that was collected.”^[78] To this request Lucia consented.

Lucia then went to meet Francisco and his brother John and together, they led the sheep to pasture on the Serra. For reasons that are unclear, Jacinta did not pasture the sheep this day. During the course of the day the three “children strolled, played, talked and said their prayers” all while keeping a watchful eye on their flock

By late afternoon the children, with their sheep, had wandered to a hollow in the rocks called Valinhos. They lingered about midway between Aljustrel and the cave on the northern slope of Cabeco.

APPROXIMATELY 4:00 IN THE AFTERNOON

While at Cabeco, Lucia sensed a subtle change in the atmosphere, it was a feeling similar to the way things always felt before a supernatural visitation. Francisco felt it too and they knew that the Lady was about to appear. It suddenly dawned on Lucia that Jacinta was not with them and she pleaded with John to quickly run to get her, that she might not miss the vision. Francisco too begged his brother who steadfastly refused to leave, that is until Lucia offered to pay him two vintens, small coins valued at about a penny each, for his trouble. Then he quickly ran off to fetch his sister. Several minutes passed and Francisco and Lucia saw the usual flash of light just about the same time that they noticed Jacinta running toward them.

A moment later, the Lady appeared atop a holm-oak tree, not unlike the one at the Cova, and the children fell to their knees. Our Lady looked at them tenderly as if to console them for their suffering. “What is it that you want of me?” Lucia asked as she had in all the previous apparitions. “I want you to continue going to the Cova da Iria on the 13th, and to continue praying the Rosary every day. In the last month, I will perform a miracle so that all may believe.” Remembering her promise to Maria, Lucia asked, “What do you want done with the money that the people leave in the Cova da Iria?” “Have two pedestals made,” the Lady replied. “One is to be carried by you and Jacinta and two other girls dressed in white; the other one is to be carried by Francisco and three other boys. The money from the pedestals is for the ‘festa’ of Our Lady of the Rosary, and what is left over will help towards the construction of a chapel that is to be built here.” As she had in the past, Lucia asked the Lady if she would cure some of the sick that had made the request of her. “Yes,” the Lady responded, “I will cure some of them during the year.” Then, looking very sad, Our Lady said, “Pray, pray very much, and make sacrifices for sinners; for many souls go to hell, because there are none to sacrifice themselves and to pray for them.” As she finished this admonishment she ascended towards the east as she had in the previous apparitions.^[79] For a long time the children remained kneeling in their typical post-visit state of ecstasy. When they were finally able to move, Jacinta “cut off some branches of the shrub on which the Lady had stood, and took them home.”^[80] She gave some of them to her father who examined them remarking at the beautiful fragrance they emitted. Then the children went to Lucia’s house and Jacinta presented some of the branches to Maria Rosa saying, “O Aunt, our Lady has appeared again’ These are the places where She put Her feet.” Maria Rosa responded, “I thought the administrator had finished with all that, and here you are still telling lies. I know what you need.”^[81] Yet later, after smelling the branch, Maria Rosa noticed that there was something “singularly sweet” in the fragrance that had gone unnoticed when Jacinta first presented it.

This marked the fourth time that Our Lady appeared to the three children. This time, however, Lucia believed strongly that the suggestion of sacrifice spoken of by the Lady was to include the practice of mortification.

^[82]

THE DAYS FOLLOWING AUGUST 19, 1917

Some days later, as the children led their sheep to pasture, Lucia found a thick piece of rope on a narrow street of Aljustrel. She picked it up and tied it around her arm for fun, but noticed that before long, it began to hurt. It was then that she suggested to her cousins that they tie it around their waists, against their bare skin, as a sacrifice to God. They both agreed and, laying the rope against a rock, they used a sharp-edged stone like a knife, to divide the rope into three pieces. The rope was very rough and wearing it on their waists caused a great deal of pain, so much so, that Jacinta would sometimes cry because of it. Whenever this happened, Lucia would suggest that she remove the rope, but Jacinta would reply, “No! I want to offer this sacrifice to Our Lord in reparation, and for the conversion of sinners.”^[83] This was the children’s first experiment with mortification, but it would not be their last.

On another day, while at play, the children picked plants off the walls and pressed them in their hands to “hear them crack.” While plucking the plants, Jacinta grabbed a bunch of nettles receiving a painful sting. Stinging nettles, a plant indigenous to the Fatima region of Portugal, have developed stinging cells as an adaptation to deter herbivores from eating them. The plants contain long, thin, hollow hairs that cover much of the stem and the underside of the leaves. Nettle stings contain formic acid, histamine and other chemicals that inflict a painful sting when touched. As soon as she felt the pain she squeezed them even more tightly in her hands saying, “Look! Look! Here is something else with which we can mortify ourselves!” The children took her suggestion and from time to time would hit their legs with nettles as an offering of sacrifice to God.

Jacinta was very serious about making sacrifices as instructed by Our Lady and never allowed a single opportunity to pass her by. There were two poor families in Moita whose children would beg for food door to door. The three seers met them one day as they walked with the sheep. Jacinta immediately suggested, “Let’s give our lunch to those poor children, for the conversion of sinners.” “And she ran to take it to them”^[84]

From that moment, the three agreed that anytime they met any poor children they would relinquish their lunches to them. Before long, the children would take great care to be sure they met the three visionaries by waiting for them along the road. As soon as the poor children were spotted, Jacinta would run to give them the lunches. Doing this, and the thought of sacrifice, made her very happy. On these days, the three seers “ate only pine nuts and little berries about the size of an olive, which grow on the roots of yellow bell-flowers, as well as blackberries, mushrooms, and some other things” that could be found on the roots of pine trees.^[85]

But on this day, later that afternoon, Jacinta told Lucia she was hungry. There were both holm-oak and oak trees nearby that bore acorns, but they were still green. Despite their early stage of growth, Lucia said they were edible. Francisco climbed the holm-oaks, picking the acorns until his pockets were full. But before eating, Jacinta remembered that the acorns from the oak trees were more bitter than those of the holm-oak and decided to eat only those, offering it as a sacrifice. This became one of her usual sacrifices, often picking the acorns off the oaks or the unripened olives from the olive trees. One day, Lucia warned Jacinta that they were too bitter, but Jacinta said, “But it’s because it’s bitter that I’m eating it, for the conversion of sinners.”^[86]

One very hot August day a neighbor offered Lucia’s mother a good pasture for their sheep. Though a long distance, it is an area that has shade trees and a pond nearby where the flocks would be able to drink. Maria Rosa instructed Lucia to take siesta beneath a tree where the shade would offer protection from the sun. On the way, Lucia and her cousins met the poor children and Jacinta ran to give them their food before continuing their journey. Though a lovely day the sun was blazing. It seemed that, in that arid and stony wasteland over which they walked, the sun might just burn everything up.

Naturally, the three cousins became very thirsty. Jacinta had an insatiable thirst, but there was nothing to drink along the way. They offered their thirst as a sacrifice initially, but by mid-afternoon, they were compelled to walk to a nearby house and asked a little old lady who lived there for some water. The woman gave Lucia a pitcher of water and some bread which Lucia accepted and promptly offered to share with Jacinta and Francisco. Both refused to partake, however, as a sacrifice for the conversion of sinners. Feeling guilty for her lack of restraint, Lucia poured the contents of the pitcher into a hollow in a rock so the sheep could drink it instead. Lucia then returned the pitcher to the old woman.

As the day got even hotter, they could hear the crickets and frogs from the pond making quite a racket. Jacinta asked Lucia to “tell the crickets and the frogs to keep quiet! I have such a terrible headache.” Lucia knew that Jacinta’s ailment was from her hunger and thirst. It was then that Francisco reminded Jacinta that she could offer the headache and the noise as a sacrifice for the conversion of sinners. Jacinta clasped her “head between her two little hands, saying, ‘Yes, I do. Let them sing!’”

It was clear that the children’s sacrifices were pleasing to God but even Lucia noticed something special about the penances made by Jacinta.

She had become a different person; no longer the whiney, belligerent type that always insisted on getting her way, but a more “patient, more long-suffering, more affectionate” person who seemed to have been “infused with the gift of wisdom.”^[87] Lucia even noticed objective signs of some miracles that she attributed to Jacinta’s intervention. There was, for example, the wretched woman with a terrible disease that the children happened upon one day. Moved by her condition, Jacinta said three Aves for the woman and all her symptoms left her. Another woman in Aljustrel constantly ridiculed the three children following their apparitions. She called them liars and imposters which greatly bothered the children, but after Jacinta prayed for the woman’s conversion, she never again spoke an unkind word to them.

It was also in August that Lucia noticed that her mother “began to feel a little more at peace” with the possibility of the apparitions. Maria Rosa would say, “If there were even just one more person who had seen something, why then, I might believe! But among all these people, they’re [the children] the only ones who saw anything!” But even as more and more people began reporting visions of Our Lady or various signs in the sun, etc., Maria Rosa declared, “I used to think before, that if there were just one other person who saw anything, then I’d believe; but now, so many people say they have seen something, and I still don’t believe!” Around that same time, Lucia’s father also began to defend her and to silence Lucia’s critics saying, “We don’t know if it’s true, but neither do we know if it’s a lie.”^[88]

Just as Lucia’s parents were finally showing a bit more sympathy for their daughter, the Martos were losing their patience. Olimpia complained of having to continually send someone to fetch her children, simply to please the people who came asking to speak with them. She therefore handed over the care of the flock to her other son John enabling Jacinta and Francisco to remain near the house. This decision caused Jacinta great pain for two reasons: first, because she was now forced to speak to everyone who came looking for her and, second, because she was no longer able to spend the whole day with Lucia. But Olimpia offered Jacinta no alternative.

To escape from the unwelcome visitors, she and Francisco would hide in Loca do Cabeco, the cave hallowed out in the rock on the slope of the hill of Cabeco on top of which stood a windmill. Situated as it is on the eastern slope facing their hamlet, this hiding place is so well formed that it afforded them an ideal protection from both the rain and the burning sun, especially since it is sheltered by many oak and olive trees. How many were the prayers and sacrifices that Jacinta offered there to Jesus! Flowers of innumerable varieties grew all over the slope. Among them were many irises for which Jacinta had a special love. Every evening Jacinta would wait for Lucia to walk past on her way home, holding an iris she had picked for her, or some other flower if there were no irises to be found. Jacinta took great joy in plucking off the petals one by one strewing them over Lucia.

Like Olimpia, Maria Rosa too was weary of the throngs of people requesting an audience with Lucia, but was satisfied for the time being with deciding each day where Lucia was to pasture the sheep, so that she knew where to find her when she was needed. When the place was nearby, Lucia would tell her little cousins who lost no time in coming out to join her. Jacinta would run until she caught sight of Lucia. Then, exhausted, would sit down and keep calling to her until Lucia answered and ran to meet her. Eventually though, Maria Rosa could no longer accept wasting her other daughter's time going to replace Lucia in the pasture every time a stranger would ask to speak to her and she decided to sell the lot.

She talked things over with Olimpia and the two agreed to send the children off to school. At playtime during school hours, Jacinta loved to make a visit to the Blessed Sacrament. But even there, crowds of people would find them. "They seem to guess," Jacinta would tell Lucia, "We are no sooner inside the church than a crowd of people come asking us questions! I wanted so much to be alone for a long time with the Hidden Jesus and talk to Him, but they never let us." It was true, the simple country folk never left them alone. With the utmost simplicity, they told the children all about their needs, their troubles, their ailments. Jacinta showed the greatest compassion, especially when it concerned some sinner, saying 'We must pray and offer sacrifices to Our Lord, so that he will be converted and not go to hell, poor man!'^[89]

WEDNESDAY SEPTEMBER 12, 1917

On the day prior to the next highly anticipated appearance of Our Lady, pilgrims from all corners of the hill country jammed the streets. By nightfall, the strangers, faithful, naysayers, and curiosity seekers alike, also crowded the yard surrounding the two homes of the three visionaries. Many slept in the fields so that by sunrise on the following day, they could make their way to Cova da Iria to view the promised appearance of the Lady.

THURSDAY SEPTEMBER 13, 1917

Morning found many in the crowd saying the Rosary. The multitude by now was an estimated 30,000 strong and they crammed the roads and fields from Aljustrel to Fatima. As the hour approached, Lucia, Jacinta and Francisco set out to the Cova but had great difficulty navigating the mass of people. Everyone wanted to see the children and speak with them in advance of the Lady's appearance. Showing no respect for the others, simple folk struggled to break through the crowd that pressed around the children. As soon as someone reached one of the children, he would throw himself to his knees and beg to have his petition presented to the Lady. Those who couldn't get close enough shouted from a distance. "For the love of God, ask Our Lady to cure my son who is a cripple," one would cry. "And to cure mine who is blind," another would say. "To cure mine who is deaf!...To bring back my husband, son, who has gone to war! ...To convert sinners! ...To give me back my health as I have tuberculosis!..." On and on it went so as to make it seem that all the afflictions of poor humanity were assembled there. Some even climbed to the tops of the trees and still others, walls, just for the opportunity to see the children pass.^[90] The scene reminded Lucia of Jesus's passage through Palestine, as it was utter chaos and the children were victims of the mayhem. The children responded yes to some of the petitioners and offered a hand to others helping them rise from the dusty ground. And they managed to inch forward, mostly because of some kindly gentlemen that walked ahead of them opening a passage through which the children could pass the multitude. Lucia thought about the faithful people of Portugal. If they would do all this to humble themselves before "three poor children just because they were mercifully granted the grace to speak to [who many believed was] the Mother of God, what would they not do if they saw Our Lord Himself in person before them?" She was grateful for the extraordinary faith of these people. On this day, some thirty young seminarians and five or six priests joined the crowd of onlookers. Among the priests were the Reverend Monsignor Joao Quaresm, the Reverend Father Manuel Pereira da Silva, then a curate at Leiria, the Prior of Santa Catalina and Monsignor Manuel do Carmo Gois. The four left Leiria in a horse-drawn carriage early that morning to be on hand to witness the apparition. It seems that Reverend da Silva was more curious than faithful but endured the long, arduous journey regardless. They secured a place on some high ground overlooking the “vast natural amphitheater, already dark and seething with human forms.”^[91]

APPROXIMATELY 12:00 NOON

The children, with thousands of people in tow, finally reached the Cova da Iria only to find thousands more already assembled there. The silence was almost eerie as the children knelt before the holm-oak tree and began to say the Rosary. Many of the thirty thousand joined them in chorus. Suddenly people began to shout out with rejoice, praising Our Lady. Some pointed high above prompting others to look in that direction. Monsignor Joao also noticed someone pointing and looked up to observe “a luminous globe that moved from the east toward the west, slowly and majestically gliding down across the distance.”^[92] His friend saw the globe too as it moved westward, but just as suddenly as it appeared, it vanished, right before their eyes. Looking toward his friend Monsignor Joao said, “What do you think of that globe?” He answered with some enthusiasm and without hesitation, “That it was Our Lady.”^[93]

On this they agreed! Unlike them, and many of the thousands of onlookers who could see only the light that carried her to the holm-oak tree, however, the shepherd children were privileged to look directly upon the face of the Mother of God, though the lady still had not yet identified herself to the children as such.

The children were once again engaged in conversation with Our Lady though this, the conversation in the fifth apparition of Our Lady to the children, would be the shortest of all. “Continue to pray the Rosary in order to obtain the end of the war,” the Lady said. “In October Our Lord will come, as well as Our Lady of Sorrows and Our Lady of Mount Carmel. Saint Joseph will appear with the Child Jesus to bless the world. God is pleased with your sacrifices. He does not want you to sleep with the rope on, but only to wear it during the daytime.”^[94] “I was told to ask you many things, the cure of some sick people, of a deaf-mute...,” Lucia said. The Lady replied, “Yes, I will cure some, but not others. In October, I will perform a miracle so that all may believe.” With that, Our Lady rose as usual and disappeared to the east.^[95] The length of the apparition didn’t matter to the children so long as they got to see her face once again, and this visit brought the promise that in October, the children would also look upon the face of Jesus.

THURSDAY SEPTEMBER 29, 1917

Unbeknownst to most of the 30,000 onlookers attending the September 13th apparition the Reverend Doctor Manuel Nunes Formigao, who served as the canon of the cathedral of Lisboa and a professor at the Seminary of Santarem was present that day. This learned man of integrity was asked by the Administrator of the Patriarchate in Lisboa to attend the apparition and report his findings to the government; findings that the Administrator quite assuredly assumed would debunk the myth of the apparitions. Though Formigao was not one of the chosen who was able to see the luminous globe, he interviewed enough people who did see it that he found it necessary to explore the phenomenon in more detail. On this day, he returned to Aljustrel to question some of those involved. He began by meeting with Maria Rosa dos Santos and Olimpia Marta who immediately sent for the children. Jacinta was first to arrive home and seemed a bit intimidated by the stranger. Though more emboldened when Francisco arrived, Formigao decided to depose Francisco first and sent Jacinta out to play. Francisco answered the questions posed to him with calmness and certainty. The Doctor then recalled Jacinta for questioning. Lucia arrived last and she too was questioned by Formigao. Hers was without a doubt the longest and most intense questioning. He tried to have her admit that she had apparitions of Our Lady prior to May 1917. Perhaps confusing it with rumors he may have heard about the apparitions she had of the Angel of Peace the year prior, but she would not be tripped up. He also tried to convince Lucia to reveal the secrets given the children by Our Lady but Lucia refused to divulge any such information.

Certainly, there were some minor differences in the accounts provided by the three children, such as whether Our Lady had on a pair of earrings, but no discrepancies of any real significance. Fr. Formigao ended his interrogation of the three children and returned to the Seminary of Santarem to evaluate the information he collected. His overall impression of the children was favorable, but perhaps, he thought, he could garner more information with a second round of precisely worded questions that might expose any deceptions or satanic agencies.

MONDAY OCTOBER 10, 1917

11:00 PM

To that end, Formigao boarded a train for Chao da Macas eleven days later where he hired a horse and buggy to take him to Vila Nova de Ourem. It was 11:00 PM when he reached his destination in Montelo, two miles outside of Fatima. There, under the pen name of “the Visconde de Montelo,” he lodged with a family that was able to tell him all about the Marto and dos Santos families. He learned that the families were not poor but did nothing to capitalize on the apparitions and in fact had tried to discourage people from gathering on their land. While Manuel dos Santos would drink a bit more than he perhaps should, Maria Rosa was an honest, devout woman with an incredible work ethic. Similarly, Antonio Marto was incapable of deceit, and both he and Olimpia had a deep faith and practiced their Catholic religion always. The children were equally well liked and though most people disbelieved them in May and June, most were now “inclined to accept their story, since so many had seen the cloud over the tree on August 13th and had noted the other strange phenomena in August and September.”^[96] Formigao had gotten all the information he needed and it was now time to confront the children once again.

TUESDAY OCTOBER 11, 1917

Tuesday found Formigao back at the home of Antonio dos Santos. While they waited for Lucia to arrive, Formigao asked Maria Rosa if she had ever told Lucia the story of the Apparitions of Our Lady to the two shepherd children at the southern France village of LaSalette wondering aloud if she may have been influenced by this story. Though these Apparitions took place over 70 years prior, there were many similarities; the two most striking being that Our Lady told secrets to the children which were revealed only to Pius IX, and She offered warnings of coming calamities if the good people of France didn’t stop offending God. Maria Rosa, though admitting to telling the story, thought it a non-factor for Lucia, noting that her daughter never mentioned the story again.

Lucia finally arrived home and Formigao questioned her in the presence of four witnesses about minute details of the Apparitions. Did Our Lady ever finger the Rosary Beads? (No.) What Did the Lady promise to do to get the crowd to believe she had appeared? (She said She would perform a miracle.) And how many times did she mention it? (A few times, once at the first Apparition and when I asked her the question.) Are you afraid the crowd will harm you if there is no miracle? (I haven't any fear.) Did she tell you to pray for the conversion of sinners? (No. She told me to pray to the Lady of the Rosary so that the war would end. She asked for sacrifices rather than prayers for the conversion of sinners.) The questioning continued in this fashion until Formigao was satisfied. Then he turned his attention to Jacinta for re-examination, and then to Francisco. The line of questioning for the latter two was the same as with Lucia. At the end of this tedious process, Dr. Formigao was convinced that all three children had told the truth and felt that the final test of their veracity would be the miracle promised for the October 13th Apparition. That is an appointment he vowed not to miss.

WEDNESDAY OCTOBER 12, 1917

Around this same time, Fr. Pocas, Prior of Porto de Mos, also examined the children. He was not nearly as professional or courteous as Dr. Formigeo, however, and treated the children with animosity and contempt. "Look here, girl," he said to Lucia, "now you are going to tell me that all this is lies and witchcraft. If you don't say so, I will say it and have it said everywhere... Everybody will believe me... and you shall not escape!" Much to his chagrin, Lucia remained silent. Despite his tactics, at the end, he too admitted that he thought the children had told the truth.

As the big day approached, Maria Rosa was convinced that the day's events would expose Lucia as a fraud and she feared for her daughter's safety. The fear was not experienced by Maria Rosa alone however. Lucia's entire family panicked as October 13, 1917 drew near. Lucia could not escape her promise, they thought. It was far too specific. A miracle for the whole world to see on Saturday October 13, 1917 at 12:00 Noon. Everyone would know immediately when the miracle does not happen and the crowd of so many will be angry. Only God knows what the consequences will be!

Maria Rosa tried one final time to reason with Lucia. Please, "it's better for us to go and tell everything. People say we are going to die tomorrow in the Cova da Iria. If the Lady does not make the miracle, the crowd will kill us," she pleaded. "I am not afraid, Mother," Lucia answered calmly. "I am sure the Lady will do everything she has promised." Maria Rosa suggested they go to confession so they will be prepared for death. Lucia agreed to go but not for the reason her mother conceived.

Outside it was cool and breezy. A light mist had begun to fall and it was clear that a storm was approaching. It promised to be a long night as the drizzle turned to a hard, wind driven rain!

SATURDAY OCTOBER 13, 1917 MORNING

Since the last Apparition in September, word continued to spread through the entire region of Fatima and an area well beyond. Many of the thousands that waited with great anticipation for the Lady's final appearance on October 13, 1917 were devout Catholics. They would not be deterred by the torrential rains and gale winds that greeted Fatima's dawn and continued to pummel the area throughout the morning. Despite the gloomy weather, over 70,000 people lined the streets and waited in the trampled fields. Many were barefoot as they plodded through the mud of the Cova da Iria. All were soaked to the skin despite the many who tried to shield themselves from the wind-driven rain with umbrellas. Parents carried their children. Adults carried baskets of food and jugs of water over their shoulders. Others packed them on donkeys that they guided along the streets. Some were skeptical, other curious. Some hoped for a cure, some for forgiveness of their sins, others for material goods and still others for a simple blessing directly from the Mother of God.

Among the skeptics this day was Avelino de Almeida, the managing editor of O Seculo, the largest of the newspapers distributed in Lisboa. Almeida was a Freemason who volunteered for the assignment hoping to discredit the children's fable of a ghostly woman floating above a tree departing secrets to shepherds. He started his work the day before as he walked alongside other pilgrims taking mental notes of the experience which he would later reduce to writing for his newspaper.

The story that appeared in the Saturday paper of October 13, 1917 noted how he passed the barefooted men and women who “carried their footgear in bags on their heads, the men leaning on great staves and carefully grasping umbrellas also. One would say they were all oblivious to what was going on about them, with a great lack of interest in the journey and in other travelers, as if lost in a dream, reciting their Rosary in a sad rhythmic chant. A woman says the first part of the Hail Mary; her companions in chorus say the second part of the prayer. With sure and rhythmical steps, they tread the dusty road which runs between the pine woods and the olive groves, so that they may arrive before night at the place of the apparition, where, under the serene and cold light of the stars, they hope they can sleep, keeping the first places near the blessed azinheira [holm-oak tree] so that today they can see better.”

Almeida did not portray himself as a radical Freemason intent on bringing about the demise of religion, but rather a non-believer who wished no harm, and did not intend to ridicule, those who believed. His story continued,

“Thousands of persons are hastening to a wild expanse of country near Ourem to see and hear the Virgin Mary. Let pious souls be not offended and pure believing hearts be not afraid; we have no intention of being a scandal for those who sincerely hold to their faith and whom the miraculous still attracts, seduces, bewitches, consoles and fortifies, as has been the case for thousands of years, and most certainly will be for other thousands of years! ...This is only a short newspaper article on an event which is not new in the history of Catholicism....Some regard it as a message from heaven and a grace; others see in it a sign and proof that the spirit of superstition and fanaticism has planted deep roots that it is difficult or even impossible to destroy. Times of great calamities have always revived and renewed religious ideas and have favored them. And war, which strikes everywhere, offers them the most favorable and fertile soil for growth. We see that confirmed in the life of the trenches and even in the spiritual atmosphere of the belligerent countries.”

After summarizing the events of Fatima from May to September, recounting the previous Apparitions of Mary at Lourdes, La Salette and other places, and pointing out the speculators who hoped to profit from such events, Almeida continued,

“The miracle takes place between Noon and one o’clock, according to those who have been there. But not all have the chance to see the holy figure. The number of the elect seems very small. Despite their efforts, many see nothing. This is why those who find themselves near the children are contented with hearing them speak with an invisible partner. Others, on the contrary, see in a divinely solemn moment the stars shining in the firmament, even though the sun be at the zenith. They hear a subterranean groaning which announces the presence of the Lady. They claim that the temperature falls and they compare the impressions of that moment with those they have experienced during an eclipse of the sun.... According to what the children say, the figure of the Virgin appears on an azinheira, surrounded on all sides by a nuage [cloud].... The suggestion of the masses, brought there by the supernatural and captivated by a superhuman force, is so powerful that eyes fill with tears, faces become as pale as corpses, men and women throw themselves on their knees, chant songs and recite the Rosary together.

We do not know if there have already been blind persons who have recovered their sight, paralytics who have regained the use of their limbs, hardened sinners who are turned back from the straight ways of sin to plunge into the purifying water of penance.

But that matters little. The news of the apparitions has spread from Algarve to the Minho. Since the Day of the Ascension the pilgrims have flocked there by thousands on the thirteenth of each month, from near and far. The means of transportation do not suffice.

The clergy of the place and the neighborhood maintain, as regards the events, a prudent reserve, at least in appearance. It is the custom of the Church. It proclaims loudly that in such circumstances doubt means nothing, for doubts also come from the devil. But secretly it rejoices over the great concourse of pilgrims who since May have become more and more numerous.

And there are even people who dream of a great and magnificent church, always full, of large hotels nearby with every modern comfort, of shops well stocked with a thousand and one different objects of piety and souvenirs of Our Lady of Fatima, and of a railway which will take us to the future miraculous sanctuary with more convenience than the buses in which, for the moment, the mass of the faithful and of the curious now achieve this right....”^[97]

The Marto and dos Santos families, meanwhile were waking to the dreadful weather that awaited them. People, strangers began arriving early and continued to come throughout the morning. Many simply walked in, as if invited, tracking mud and dripping water on the floors inside. They asked to see the children. Just a word with them was all they needed. At the Marto house, some even went so far as to make themselves at home sitting on the chairs and the beds. “Get out of here, all of you!” Olimpia screamed to inattentive ears.^[98]

Lucia and Jacinta declined offers of new ornate dresses from the Baroness from Pombalinho preferring instead to dress in their communion dresses. All the children managed some breakfast and then prepared to leave. Maria Rosa had no intention of going, but at the last minute grabbed her shawl, turned to Lucia and said through her tears, “I know they are going to kill you. Very well, then, if you must go, I will go and die with you.”^[99] While these may not have been words of comfort, they were likely the most supporting words that Maria Rosa had spoken to Lucia since May.

On October 13, 1917, a crowd estimated to be as large as 70,000 converged on the Cova da Iria, land owned by Lucia's parents, to witness the anticipated miracle that, according to the children, was promised by Our Lady. No one in the crowd was disappointed.

The roads along Fatima enroute to Cova da Iria were jammed with people, thousands of them, who kneeled in the mud as the children passed pleading with the children to carry their petitions to Our Lady. The crowds made the travel very slow and the pouring rain and mud-soaked streets made it appear even longer. As they approached the Cova, so many people, 70,000 in all, blocked the way. If not for one man who hoisted Jacinta up on his shoulders yelling "make way for the children who saw Our Lady," they may not have made it to the holm-oak tree. Manuel Marto followed close behind the man with Lucia, Francisco and Maria Rosa on either side of him. Upon reaching their destination, Manuel found Olimpia was already there waiting for them. Lucia's sister Maria stood at a distance, as her husband did not want her to go down the slope with the baby because the entire slope and Cova were covered with people.

Many continued to pray the Rosary as others scanned the sky through the rain looking for a sign of the Lady's arrival. A priest who arrived the night before was kneeling in the mud. He had been praying throughout the night and was now reading from his breviary. He turned to Lucia asking the time of Our Lady's arrival. "At midday," she responded. Then, as if moved by an interior impulse she yelled, "Put down your umbrellas" Though the rain still came down in torrents, some complied. "Put down your umbrellas." she repeated, as more began to heed her instruction.

APPROXIMATELY NOON

This photo was taken during the Miracle of the Sun on October 13, 1917 as the sun danced in the sky. Some looked up in amazement, others looked away in fear. Still others fell to their knees in prayer, but all 70,000 were witness to the miracle that Our Lady performed that day.

The priest, meanwhile, was growing impatient. "It's past midday," he said to Lucia, "Away with all this! It is all an illusion." He pushed the children along as if instructing them to depart, but they refused to be deterred. "Whoever wants to go, can go," Lucia said, "but I'm not going. Our Lady told us to come. We saw her other times and we're going to see her now." As the disappointment began to spread through the crowd, Lucia yelled, "Jacinta, kneel down, for now I see Our Lady there. I can see the flash!" Maria Rosa turned to Lucia and said, "Watch out, daughter! Don't let yourself be deceived!"^[100] Her warning fell on deaf ears, as Lucia, "whose face had become flushed and transparently beautiful" was now staring into the face of Our Lady and had already become entranced in a state of ecstasy. Likewise, Jacinta and Francisco were also oblivious to the mass of people behind them as they stared upward, not at all bothered by the steady rain that pelted them. "What do you want of me?" Lucia asked as she had so many times before. Our Lady answered, "I want to tell you that a chapel is to be built here in my honor. I am the Lady of the Rosary. Continue always to pray the Rosary every day. The war is going to end, and the soldiers will soon return to their homes." "I have many things to ask you; the cure of some sick persons, the conversion of sinners..." Lucia continued listing some of the petitions brought to her from the crowds. As She had in the past, Our Lady verified that some petitions would be granted while others would not be granted, adding, "They must amend their lives and ask forgiveness for their sins." Then, with a very sad expression, She continued, "Do not offend the Lord our God anymore because He is already so much offended." When She finished speaking She opened her hands launching a ray of light in the direction of the sun.

APPROXIMATELY 12:30 PM TO 3:00 PM

As She ascended, the reflection of her own light continued to be projected on the sun itself. Lucia sensed this to be the promised sign and cried out to the crowd in a loud voice, "Look at the sun!" Suddenly the rain stopped, the clouds that previously covered the sun dissipated, and the sun appeared in the sky. Though exceptionally bright, the sun was not dazzling. Without warning, it began to turn in the sky as if projecting in each direction bands of light of each color that lit and colored the remaining clouds, the sky, the trees, and the crowd. It stayed for some moments then it went back to its normal position where it remained still for another short while.

As the 70,000 gazed upon the sky and, in particular, the sun, the children remained focused on the Lady of the Rosary, whose vision, though ascended, was now instantly replaced with a vision of St. Joseph holding the Child Jesus. Next to St. Joseph and standing beside the sun was Our Lady, this time wearing a white robe with a blue mantle. St. Joseph appeared to have blessed the world tracing the sign of the cross with his hand three times. As he did this Lucia said, "St. Joseph is going to bless us!" The Child Jesus did the same. All three children saw this vision while the next two were seen by Lucia alone. In the second vision "Our Lady of Sorrows in the somber garb assigned to her by tradition, the Mater Dolorosa of Good Friday, but without the sword in her breast, and beside her stood her divine Son, grieving as when he met her on the way to Calvary. Lucia saw only the upper part of His figure. He looked pityingly on the crowd for whom He had died, and raised His hand to make the sign of the cross over them."

In the third vision, Our Lady appeared as Our Lady of Mount Carmel. The Queen of heaven and earth held the baby Jesus upon Her knee.

A few in the crowd claimed to have seen the vision as well yet this claim remains unverified. No one else was privileged with such visions.

The entire mass, however, all 70,000 people, became aware that their clothes, as well as the ground beneath them, were completely dry. In amazement and confusion, they prayed, but just as suddenly as before, the sun looked as if it stood out from the sky appearing to fall on the now terrified crowd below. Most of the assembled fell to their knees and begged mercy. Though still intensely bright, people could look directly at the sun without hurting their eyes. As the crowd gazed at the burning orb, it seemed to "dance," then whirled like a giant wheel of fire. It did this for some time before stopping; then it quickly rotated again. Then brilliant colors began to reach down to the earth making all that could be seen tinted by the spectrum of colors. No one knew what to make of this and many continued to stare in utter amazement when, in an instant, the “fiery orb seemed to tremble, to shudder, and then to plunge precipitately, in a mighty zigzag, toward the crowd.”^[101] Many observers thought this was the end of the world. Terrified cries were heard from the crowd as some knelt in prayer and others ran for cover. Many critics of the children’s “fantasies” were now believers who fell prostrate to the ground. The Marques do Cruz was heard to say, “Oh my God, how great is Thy power!”^[102]

After about ten minutes the sun began to return to its rightful position in the sky following the same circuitous zigzag route with which it descended. It stood still and became so that no one could look directly at it. The masses were happy to still be alive, looking at each other saying “Miracle! Miracle!” Some laughed, others wept. The reporters wrote.

This view of the crowd, taken on October 13, 1917 during the Miracle of the Sun, shows some of the reaction. Witnesses agree that the sun began to spin and then started falling to the earth before returning to its natural position in the sky. The formerly rain-drench ground was immediately dried as were the clothes worn by those in attendance.

One of the principal anti-cleric publications of the day, a major Lisbon newspaper called O Dia, dispatched at least two of its reporters to the Cova da Iria to report on the culmination of what they believed was a great hoax being perpetrated on the faithful people of Portugal. Like their counterparts from O Seculo, they were there for the purpose of discrediting the children and exposing the incendiary lies that they had been spreading for the past six months. Now, in utter amazement, and with a feeling of undisclosed terror, they wrote on their notepads all that they had just witnessed. How could these events possibly be explained to the anti-clerics who governed the region? How would their own credibility be viewed if the truth of the miracle of Fatima were to be reported? Yet, could those events that their own eyes had witnessed be explained any other way?

Even some people who were not present at Cova da Iria that day reported witnessing the miracle. Credible witnesses such as the poet Affonso Lopes Vieira, who lived in S. Pedro de Moel, some 25 miles from Fatima, saw it from his home. A nine-year old boy, who would later grow to become Fr. Inacio Lourenco, saw it from Alburita approximately 12 miles away, as he walked from school with several of his classmates and their teacher, Dona Delfina Pereira Lopes. All of them observed the spectacle of the dancing sun that day. Fr. Lourenco would later write,

“It was like a globe of snow revolving on itself. Then suddenly it seemed to come down in a zigzag, threatening to fall on the earth. Terrified, I ran to shelter myself in the midst of the people. All were weeping, expecting from one moment to the next the end of the world. Near us was an unbeliever without religion, who had spent the morning mocking the blockheads who had made all that journey to Fatima to go and stare at a girl. I looked at him. He stood as if paralyzed, thunderstruck, his eyes fixed on the sun. Then I saw him tremble from head to foot, and raising his hands to heaven, he fell on his knees in the mire, shouting, Nossa Senhora! Nossa Senhora! Translated, Our Lady! Our Lady!

Meanwhile the people continued to scream and cry out, begging God to pardon their sins. ...Afterwards we ran to the chapels of the town, which were filled in a few moments. During those long minutes of the solar phenomenon objects all about us reflected all the colors of the rainbow. As we looked at one another, one seemed blue, another yellow, another vermilion. ...All these strange phenomena increased the terror of the crowd. After about ten minutes the sun returned to its place in the same way it had descended, still pale and without splendor...”^[103]

Lucia's sister Teresa was present on this day as well to witness the happenings. She again took note, as she had in August, that the sky was snowing flowers and emanating the same "rainbowlike light all over the ground and the people. The people looked up to see where the light was coming from," she said, "and they saw the sun spinning around." She also observed that "people could look at it as at the 'newly risen moon;' it was 'spinning down.'" ^[104] The spinning lasted for only a short time but what really captivated her attention was the falling flowers. They seemed to be "multicolored petals," she insisted, "but when they came close enough to see what they were, they disappeared." ^[105]

From her vantage point some distance back, Maria saw the same sundance that others were seeing, but a man standing next to her "said he saw a figure, a very beautiful form between two lights." After the Apparition, she also observed a man named Carlos Mendes, who later became the president of the municipality of Torres Novas, "put Lucia on his shoulder and carry her out to the crowd." He then had her stand on a rock and asked her to tell everyone what the "Blessed Virgin said." Lucia complied. ^[106]

PART IV
THE AFTERMATH

SATURDAY OCTOBER 13, 1917

3:00 PM – 11:00 PM

Many in the mass of 70,000 people began to leave, some to begin the long trek back home. Many others stayed and followed Lucia and her cousins hoping for maybe just a word with them and were still milling in the streets around their homes when Fr. Formigao arrived in Aljustrel at about 7:00 PM. He too wanted to speak to the children and hoped to do so before anyone else had a chance to speak with them and more importantly, before they could compare notes. Formigao was not present when the miracle occurred, but certainly had heard others speak of the amazing events of that afternoon. He used his authority to disperse the crowds and then gathered the children at the Marto home where he spoke to each separately. Except for the visions witnessed only by Lucia, their stories were virtually identical leaving some very minor discrepancies and one, relating to the size and rough age of the infant Jesus, that was of greater substance. Of course, Francisco could not hear the Lady so he could not testify as to what was said, rather only to what Lucia and Jacinta told him was said.

Fr. Formigao could see that the children were pale from exhaustion and agreed to return later to complete his examination. Eventually, everyone departed the area leaving behind trampled fields and no doubt talking about the miraculous events they had witnessed, comparing notes as to what one may have seen that another had not. For a short time, at least, the children could enjoy some time alone with family. Certainly, there was much to talk about!

SUNDAY OCTOBER 14, 1917

In addition to the O Dia reporters, several other newspaper reporters were present to witness the miracle, including a correspondent for the major News Services in the United States. The following day, “from Lisbon, he cabled a long and impressive story about the Miracle of the Sun. Despite the enormity of the report, it was never published.”^[107] As Americans worried about the war and mourned the loss of some of the approximately 116 thousand Americans already counted among the war dead, baseball had become a most needed diversion. On October 13th, as Our Lady moved the sun in the Portugal sky, The Chicago White Sox, the hottest team in American baseball, having just completed an astounding regular season with a record of 100-54, were embroiled in game five of the 1917 World Series. The drama of the Series dominated the American newspapers and the White Sox dramatic 8-5 come-from-behind victory over the New York Giants in game five sent the series back to the Polo Grounds of New York for a game six.^[108]

Save the events of World War I and the Baseball World Series, little else seemed to matter to the American people. In fact, twenty-five years would pass before whisperings of the Miracle at Fatima would begin to circulate around the United States.

Regardless of who else in the world took notice, the events of Saturday, October 13th were enough to finally convince Maria Rosa that something extraordinary had indeed happened to her daughter Lucia, her niece Jacinta and her nephew Francisco. When Teresa tried to tell her about the falling flowers that she witnessed in August, Maria Rosa dismissed her saying it was “ridiculous” and noting that her daughters were “all crazy.” Yet after witnessing for herself the events that occurred just a few hours before, even a hardened critic such as she could no longer refute that something supernatural had occurred. Teresa said of her mother, “In October, she saw the wonders and then became convinced.”^[109]

MONDAY AND TUESDAY OCTOBER 15 - 16, 1917

Despite the lack of interest shown in the United States, there was no bigger news in Portugal, and for more than the next few days the people of Fatima were abuzz with what had occurred at the Cova on Saturday. Those who witnessed the great miracle were still in a state of utter amazement. Those that were now hearing about it second-hand had very mixed emotions. The faithful believed every utterance coming from the mouths of the eye witnesses while those naturally cynical toward such matters questioned each word stretching to find a logical reason for what they were being told.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 17, 1917

Then on October 17th, O Dia, the major newspaper of the region, finally reported on the events that took place on Saturday, the thirteenth day of October, in the little hamlet of Fatima. The article read,

“A spectacle unique and incredible if one had not been a witness of it.... One can see the immense crowd turn toward the sun, which reveals itself free of the clouds in full noon. The great star of day makes one think of a silver plaque, and it is possible to look straight at it without the least discomfort. It does not burn, it does not blind, it might be like an eclipse. But now bursts forth a colossal clamor, and we hear the nearest spectators crying, ‘Miracle, miracle! Marvel, marvel!’

Before the astonished eyes of the people, whose attitude carries us back to biblical times and who, full of terror, heads uncovered, gaze into the blue of the sky, the sun has trembled, and the sun has made some brusque movements, unprecedented and outside of all cosmic laws-the sun has ‘danced,’ according to the typical expression of the peasants. An old man whose stature and face, at once gentle and energetic, recall those of Paul Deroulede, turns toward the sun and recites the Credo with loud cries from beginning to end. I ask his name. It is Senhor Joao Maria Amado de Melo Ramalho da Cunha Vasconcelos. I see him afterwards addressing those about him who have kept their hats on, begging them vehemently to uncover before so extraordinary a demonstration of the existence of God. Similar scenes are repeated in all places.

The people ask one another if they have seen anything and what they have seen. The greatest number avow that they have seen the trembling and dancing of the sun. Others, however, declare that they have seen the smiling face of the Virgin herself; swear that the sun turned around on itself like a wheel of fireworks; that it fell, almost to the point of burning the earth with its rays. ...Another tells that he has seen it change color successively....

Almost three o’clock. The sky is limpid and the sun follows its course with its habitual brilliancy so that no one dares to look at it directly. And the shepherds?... Lucia, the one who speaks to the Virgin, announces with theatrical motions, on the neck of a man who carries her from group to group, that the war is going to end and that the soldiers are coming home. Such news, however, does not increase the joy of those who hear her. The celestial Sign, that is everything. Much curiosity, nevertheless, to see the two little girls with their garlands of roses; some try to kiss the hand of the 'little saints'” and one of the two, Jacinta, is much nearer to fainting than to dancing. But what all aspired for - the Sign in the Sky - has sufficed to satisfy them, to enroot them in their Breton-like faith....

Their dispersion follows rapidly and without incidents, without the shadow of disorder, without the need of any intervention of police patrols. The pilgrims who leave first, in haste to be on their way, are those who arrived first with their shoes on their heads or hung on their staves. They are going, their souls full of joy, to spread the good news in the villages that were not wholly depopulated to come here. And the priests? Some have shown themselves on the scene, standing rather with the curious spectators than in the company of pilgrims avid for celestial favors. Perhaps now and then one does not manage to conceal the satisfaction which appears so often on the faces of those who triumph. ...It remains for those competent to pronounce on the dance macabre of the sun, which today, at Fatima, has made hosannas burst from the breasts of the faithful and naturally has impressed - so witnesses worthy of belief assure me - even freethinkers and other persons not at all interested in religious matters who have come to this once famous countryside.”^[110]

The report quickly made its way throughout Portugal and beyond. For many of the more than 70,000 eye witnesses to the Miracle of the Sun, life regained some of its normalcy in the days that followed. Life for the children, on the other hand, had been irrevocably altered both mentally and spiritually.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 19, 1917

The children were still quite fatigued when Fr. Formigao returned at the end of the week, and Lucia's memory of recent events during this round of questioning, was not as vivid as those of earlier events. Regardless, Formigao was convinced that the children had been honest with him and he became a believer in the reality of the Apparitions. He also began to defend the children against any adversary of the spiritual events. Despite his efforts, the persecution would come not only from the Freemasons and the Carbonari, but from other Catholics, including priests, as well. It was the former groups, however, who met secretly that week to formulate a strategy to not only defend against believers, but to launch a counter-attack as well.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 23, 1917

On this night, several Freemason loyalists and other henchmen of the Administrator assembled in Ourem. Included in the group was a man known as Cemetery Frank. Armed with hatchets, axes and lanterns, the men loaded into several automobiles, and departed Ourem for the Cova da Aria where they intended to demolish any evidence of the Apparitions, including the holm-oak tree on which Our Lady appeared. They hoped that by destroying the relics, the rallying point of the faithful would be vanquished.

Upon arrival, the raiders chopped down the tree, and carried away any-thing that had been constructed or left at the site, including the table that Maria Carreira placed, and the lanterned arch that had been built there. After placing these items on display for a short time the marauders paraded them "through the streets, singing blasphemous litanies to the accompaniment of drums."^[111]

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 24, 1917

Word of the "shrine's" destruction began to spread throughout the village creating anger from Moita to Aljustrel. Many, including Maria Carreira departed for the Cova, there to find the artifacts stolen as had been reported. However, to their joy, they learned that the raiders chopped down the wrong tree. The holm-oak tree on which Our Lady had appeared still stood proudly as an enduring symbol of the miracle at Fatima. The entire affair backfired on the Administrator as pilgrimage to the area increased. Maria Carreira returned frequently and one cold morning came upon a man who slept on the ground the entire night after walking thirty-eight miles to get there. When asked, the man told her, “I am glad I came. I feel very happy in this place.”^[112]

THE DAYS FOLLOWING OCTOBER 24, 1917

Over the ensuing days, Lucia’s two parents would react quite differently to the miracle that they witnessed at the Cova. Antonio remained bitter that the large crowds had destroyed his land. Nothing could grow on the hard, trampled ground and planting, even on softened ground, would prove futile as the thousands of people who continued the pilgrimage to Fatima would crush them under foot anyway. For her part, Maria Rosa now believed that Lucia had told the truth and tried to comply with the requests of Our Lady as explained by her daughter. Recitations of the family Rosary became a nightly occurrence and Lucia was enrolled in a small day school that had recently been started by the monarchy near the church in Fatima. There she could learn to read and write as Our Lady asked. Much to Lucia’s delight, Maria Rosa also convinced Olimpia to enroll Jacinta as well.

The children grew in devotion to Our Lady and Her message. They remained in prayer at virtually every opportunity. They often prayed at the Cova da Iria or the Cabeco and continued their efforts to avoid pilgrims though sometimes unsuccessfully. At times, their prayers resulted in cures or other miraculous happenings. Such was the case one day when the children were discovered by a group of curiosity seekers. Unable to hide, the children were surrounded and those present began to ask questions. One man picked Jacinta up and placed her on a wall so they could hear her better. Another tried to do the same to Francisco who was able to get away and climb on a different wall not too great a distance away. A woman from the parish of San Mamede, and her young son, approached Francisco and held out their arms to him pleading that he ask Our Lady to heal her sick husband and protect him from the war. Francisco began to say his Rosary and the crowd followed him in prayer. A short time later, they all moved to the Cova saying another Rosary along the way. The group eventually dispersed, but the woman returned a few days later to thank Our Lady. She was accompanied by her husband who had been restored to health.

Another day, Lucia's sister Teresa returned from Lomba, where she now lived with her husband, to ask Lucia to pray for the son of a woman who had been falsely accused of, and arrested for, a crime that he did not commit. He faced a long prison term and exile. Francisco, upon being told the story, was visibly upset and promised to pray at St. Anthony's Church while Jacinta and Lucia were in school. He was still kneeling in prayer when the girls returned from school. There, Francisco told Lucia that she could tell her sister that the boy would be released in a few days. On the thirteenth of the next month, the woman of Lomba made the trek to the Cova to give thanks to Our Lady for her son returned home just as Francisco said.

MAY 1918

Francisco desired nothing more on earth than to receive the "Hidden Jesus" in the Eucharist. Though a year older than Jacinta, they studied their catechism together beginning in the summer of 1917. Nine-year old Jacinta hoped to be granted permission to receive the sacrament prior to reaching the age of ten as local custom required. She knew exceptions could be made as Lucia was allowed to receive at the age of six.

In May of 1918, Manuel Marto presented his two children to Fr. Ferreira for questioning. Jacinta passed, but for the second time, Francisco did not. This time he cried as he knew his time on earth was short. Yet, he offered his disappointment in prayer saying, "It is for your love, O my Jesus!"^[113]

Around this time, the local Bishops were completing their investigation of the apparitions of Fatima determining that "the apparitions were 'worthy of belief.'" Local residents immediately marked the site with a cross and, later in the year, a small chapel was built from rock and limestone and covered in tile. It was a very small structure measuring only 11 ft. by 9.2 ft. in length and 9.4 ft. in height, but it became the center for Marian devotion, receiving names such as a fe Fatima, cidade da Paz ("The faith of Fatima, City of Peace.") or Terra de Milagres e Aparicoes ("Land of Miracles and Apparitions.")^[114]

OCTOBER 1918

The influenza was a terrible scourge and had killed many throughout the world. In October of 1918 the Spanish flu pandemic found the little Village of Aljustrel.^[115] All in the dos Santos family except Lucia were infected. Similarly, all in the Marto household save Manuel, were stricken with the virus. Manuel and Olimpia were heartbroken as Francisco became gravely ill. Though confined to his single iron bed with its patchwork quilt, ornate colored metal back topped off with two brass knobs, he complied with every request of his parents to eat, take his medicine, drink, etc. but promised them that it was to no avail as “Our Lady was coming to take him to heaven.” He regretted only being unable to go to the Church of St. Anthony’s to pray before the hidden Jesus.

A few days after Francisco, Jacinta became symptomatic complaining of a terrible headache and an insatiable thirst. Yet, she refused to drink because she wanted to suffer for sinners. Lucia spent every available moment with her when she wasn’t in school or tending to her chores. One morning when Lucia stopped in to visit while on her way to school, Jacinta said, “Listen! Tell the Hidden Jesus that I like Him very much, that I really love Him very much indeed.” On other days, she would ask Lucia to “tell Jesus that I send Him my love, and long to see Him.”

As Our Lady promised the children, Francisco and Jacinta would go to heaven soon. Lucia dos Santos, on the other hand would remain on the earth a long time as God chose her to carry his message to the world.

Yet, Jacinta was so unselfish that whenever Lucia visited her room first, Jacinta would tell her to “go and see Francisco” so she could make the sacrifice of “staying here alone.”

One day when her mother brought her a cup of milk, Jacinta pushed it away with her hand saying she didn’t want it. Jacinta’s mother offered a little resistance then left the room saying, “I don’t know how to make her take anything; she has no appetite.” Lucia scolded Jacinta for disobeying her mother and not making the sacrifice for the Lord. At hearing this Jacinta cried. As Lucia wiped her tears, Jacinta said, “I forgot this time.” She called her mother in the room as asked for forgiveness offering to take whatever her mother wanted her to take. When her mother returned with the milk, Jacinta drank it down with no sign of repugnance. Jacinta later told Lucia that it was very hard to drink that milk. As time went on, it became harder and harder for her to take milk and broth, but she didn’t complain at all so she could suffer for love of the Lord, and the Immaculate Heart of Mary. Once, when Lucia asked Jacinta if she was getting better, she replied, “You know I’m not getting better. I’ve such pains in my chest! But I don’t say anything. I’m suffering for the conversion of sinners.” She even refrained from visiting Francisco’s room as a sacrifice for the conversion of sinners.

During one visit, Lucia found Jacinta unusually elated. “Look, Lucia!” Jacinta noted, “Our Lady came to see us here, and she said that she is coming very soon to take Francisco to heaven. And she asked me if I still wanted to convert more sinners and I said yes. Our Lady wants me to go to two hospitals, but not to be cured. It is to suffer more for the love of God, for the conversion of sinners and in reparation for the offenses committed against the Immaculate Heart of Mary.” Jacinta went on to say that it would be her mother, and not Lucia, who would take her to the hospital and then leave her there. ^[116]

After saying this Jacinta fell into thought for a while and added, “If only you could be with me! The hardest part is to go without you. Maybe, the hospital is a big dark house, where you can’t see, and I’ll be there suffering all alone! But never mind! I’ll suffer for love of Our Lord, to make reparation to the Immaculate Heart of Mary, for the conversion of sinners and for the Holy Father.” ^[117]

DECEMBER 1918

The Marto family prayed fervently that their children might recover from their illness, but the children knew that was not to be. As December approached, however, Francisco’s fever did begin to normalize and his pulse grew stronger and by Christmas he was able to get up for a short while each day until it looked like he may make a full recovery.

1919

JANUARY 1919

Following the Christmas and New Year's holidays, Francisco appeared at full strength. He began his daily routine of reciting the Angel's prayer at the Cabeco or the Rosary at the Cova da Iria. On one day, though suffering from a strong headache, he walked to Fatima where he knelt before the altar, consoling the hidden Jesus for quite some time. As much as he wanted only to pray, the pilgrims would not leave him alone. One day he returned home from prayer to find his house full of strangers asking that he bless their Rosaries, medals, crucifixes and other objects of prayer. They left only after he assured them that he was unable to bless anything as he wasn't a priest. He could hear some shout insults to him as they departed.

Before the calendar page turned to February Francisco was ill once again. Despite his family's attempts to make him think he would recover as he did before, he knew better. "Our Lady is coming very soon now," he told them. His godmother Teresa promised to tell Our Lady that she would offer Francisco's weight in wheat to the poor for the return of his health, but the boy responded, "It's not worth your trouble. Our Lady will not grant you this grace."^[118] Just a few days later, Francisco's health declined radically and he found himself once again bed ridden. He was convinced that his body would not leave the bed until he was taken to heaven and his health continued its downward slide.

JANUARY 1919 – MARCH 1919

Jacinta, meanwhile, never made such a temporary recovery, but despite her illness, she would sneak into Francisco's room when she was sure that no one else was in the house. There they would talk for as long as possible, that is, until her indiscretion was discovered and she was forbidden to repeat it. Lucia stopped in everyday on her way home from school to inquire of any sacrifices Jacinta made that day. It was, for the most part, the highlight of the little girl's day, able to tell Lucia how she refrained from going to Francisco's room even when everyone was out.

Francisco was in constant pain now, flushed with fever, his eyes large and bright, though rather than complain, he told Lucia that he accepted the pain as a means of consoling Our Lord. "When you go, don't forget to ask Our Lady to take me there soon also," Lucia said to her cousin. "I won't ask that," Francisco replied. "You know very well that She doesn't want you there yet."^[119]

APRIL 1, 1919

When April began, Francisco was so weak that he couldn't even recite the Rosary. His mother suggested that he just say it in his heart noting that "Our Lady hears it just the same and is just as pleased."^[120] This seemed to make him happy as he managed to purse his lips in an attempted smile. Francisco wanted to see Lucia and seemed desperate as he communicated this to his mother. Olimpia sent for Lucia at once and very soon thereafter, she was in Francisco's bedroom standing at his side. "Look, Lucia, I am very sick, and I am going to heaven very soon." He then conveyed a list of things he wanted Lucia to ask Jacinta adding, "I want to go to confession," a wish Lucia conveyed to her aunt and uncle.

By nightfall, he was much worse and his parents promised to send word to the Rectory first thing in the morning asking the priest to come to hear their son's final confession.

APRIL 2, 1919

At dawn the following morning, Francisco asked his sister Teresa to get Lucia as he needed to speak with her at once. Awakened by Teresa at about 6:00 AM, Lucia dressed quickly and hurried to Francisco's bedside. Francisco asked his mother, brother John and two sisters to leave so he could share a secret with his cousin. They complied and Francisco told Lucia that he was going to confess his sins so that he could receive Communion and then die. "I want you to tell me if you have seen me commit any sin and ask Jacinta if she has seen me commit any."^[121] After speaking with Jacinta, Lucia reported back to Francisco that Jacinta remembered that he had stolen a small coin from his father to purchase a hand-organ. Lucia recalled that he threw stones back at some children who first threw stones at him, and that he disobeyed his mother when she told him to stop staying in the house. Francisco renewed his sorrow for those sins, though acknowledging that he had previously confessed them and vowed to never repeat them even if he shall live. He then said an Act of Contrition.

APRIL 3, 1919

As the new day arrived, Francisco lay quietly awaiting the priest and opened his eyes only when he heard the ringing of the little bell signaling that the priest arrived with communion. Olimpia placed some lighted candles on a table near his bed and, though he was too weak to sit up, Francisco peered at the priest raising the Eucharist above him receiving Jesus in the Host for the first time as he lay dying in bed.

As Francisco's final hours drew near, Jacinta was allowed to visit his room. When he saw her he said, Today I am happier than you, for I have within my breast the hidden Jesus. I am going to heaven, but there I will pray a great deal to Our Lord and our Lady that they bring you there too, soon."^[122] Jacinta remained with Francisco all day, sometimes helping him say the Rosary when he was too weak to do so and at other times, just looking at him while sitting at the edge of his bed. Lucia stopped by after school as well. They spoke for a while and Lucia, doubting that she might ever see him again, said, "Goodbye, Francisco. If you go to heaven tonight, don't forget me there, do you hear?" Taking her right hand in his, he said, "I won't forget you, no. Don't worry." Soon Lucia's aunt came to send her home. "Then goodbye, Francisco, till heaven. Goodbye till heaven," she repeated and left the room crying.

Before leaving his room, Jacinta whispered to her brother, "Give all my love to Our Lord and Our Lady and tell them that I'll suffer as much as they want, for the conversion of sinners and in reparation to the Immaculate Heart of Mary."

Francisco grew weaker by the minute so that by nightfall he could no longer take milk and despite his thirst could swallow only a few drops of water. Yet, when asked, he would say, "I'm all right, don't give me anything."^[123]

10:00 AM, APRIL 4, 1919

His condition was relatively unchanged the following morning. Just prior to 10:00 AM, Francisco looked at his mother and asked forgiveness for any trouble he had caused her in his life and then he focused on the Eucharist he had received just a day prior. Francisco Marto died on April 4, 1919 in that hour passing almost without notice. There was still a faint smile on his lips when Jacinta and Lucia came to see his lifeless body lying on the bed.

APRIL 5, 1919

Several men from the Misericordia, walked slowly up the cobblestone road to Fatima. An acolyte carried a crucifix held high. He was followed by four boys dressed in white carrying a coffin containing the remains of Francisco as his grieving parents and a few others walked behind. Entering through the cemetery gate, the boys laid the small coffin down in a grave just inside the gate. Jacinta was still too sick to attend and Lucia went to the cemetery by herself later in the day placing a little cross on the grave.

Francisco Marto died on April 4, 1919, just short of two years after he first saw Our Lady of the Rosary. Just prior to his death, the eleven-year old boy asked his mother's forgiveness for any trouble he had caused her in his short life. His small casket was carried by four boys dressed in white.

APRIL 5, 1919 – JULY 1, 1919

Shortly after the death of Francisco, Jacinta was moved into the bed where he had died. It was a more convenient location and provided her an opportunity to see and hear people better as it was closer to the door. Lucia was a big comfort to her, especially in the early days following Francisco's death as Jacinta missed him terribly. She spent hours in thought and when asked said she was thinking about how much she missed her brother. As her eyes filled with tears she would say that she would "give anything to see him again." One day, Lucia said to Jacinta, "It won't be long now till you go to heaven, but what about me!" Jacinta comforted her saying, "You poor thing! Don't cry! I'll pray lots and lots for you when I'm there. As for you, that's the way Our Lady wants it. If she wanted that for me, I'd gladly stay and suffer more for sinners."

JULY – AUGUST 1919

Jacinta's health continued to deteriorate and was now punctuated by sharp pain in her chest cavity that worsened with each breath. The doctor said she had Pleurisy, a condition caused by inflammation of the linings around the lungs. Her thoughts drifted to the vision she had of Our Lady telling her that she would go to the hospital and be kept alone in a dark place until her death. She believed this would be her end, yet she also believed that, though incapacitated and perhaps removed from her family, she could still do much good.

She focused on helping others even while lying in excruciating pain. When Lucia's Aunt Victoria's brilliant, but erratic son couldn't be found for weeks, Jacinta prayed to Our Lady to deliver him safely home. After just a few days, he returned with a strange story indeed. It seems he had left home and spent all his money having to resort to theft for survival. He was eventually arrested and jailed in Torres Novas until one night when he found a means of escape. Fleeing to the mountains he hid there, but a terribly violent thunderstorm frightened him to prayer. Asking God's forgiveness, he fell to his knees praying in the rain for a safe return home. Shortly thereafter, he saw a small child emerge from the darkness. He recognized immediately that it was Jacinta as she took his hand and led him from the mountain on the road that leads from Alqueidao to Reguengo. At which point she made a sign that he should continue in that direction and then she vanished. The young man eventually came to a bridge that he recognized. It was near Boleiros, not far from where he lived in Fatima. After his safe return home, Lucia questioned Jacinta who said nothing of bilocation, admitting only that she "had prayed a great deal for the young man."^[124]

The doctors advised Manuel and Olimpia Marto that their daughter would not recover at home and needed surgery and care that could be provided only in a hospital. She now had purulent pleurisy that resulted from the bronchial pneumonia. So, on a mid-July morning, Manuel lifted Jacinta on the back of a mule and took her to St. Augustine's Hospital in Vila Nove de Ourem. Upon admission, Jacinta realized that her room was bright and rather cheerful, not at all the dark place Our Lady indicated her mother would take her.

Olimpia visited her and found her in good spirits with no complaints, although Jacinta mentioned how she longed to see Lucia. Lucia was having a bad summer too as her father Antonio became ill and died on July 31, 1919. Following her brother's death, Olimpia agreed to take Lucia with her to visit Jacinta, despite the hardship that it imposed. As soon as Jacinta saw Lucia she gave her a joyful hug. She asked her mother to leave Lucia in the hospital with her while her mother went shopping. She told Lucia, in response to her question, that she was indeed suffering a lot, but she "offers everything for sinner, and in reparation to the Immaculate Heart of Mary.” Then, filled with enthusiasm, she spoke of Our Lord and Our Lady. ‘Oh, how much I love to suffer for love of Them, just to give Them pleasure! They greatly love those who suffer for the conversion of sinners.’” As the allotted time for the visit ended, Jacinta asked her mother to bring Lucia again next visit, which she gladly did. That visit found Jacinta just about the same, happy to suffer for the love of our Good God and the Immaculate Heart of Mary, for sinners and for the Holy Father. “That was her ideal and she could speak of nothing else.”^[125]

AUGUST 31, 1919

Jacinta’s health did not much improve following her surgery, in fact, it worsened and she still suffered a great deal of pain, but the Martos were out of money. Manuel did his best, but could no longer afford the $1.35 it cost him for each day Jacinta remained in the hospital. On the last day of August, Manuel checked her out of St. Augustine’s in Vila Nova de Ourem returning Jacinta home to their care for a while. She had a large surgical wound in her chest which had to be treated every day, and she was almost unrecognizable; very thin, looking pale and emaciated, but she bore the transfer without complaint.

OCTOBER 13, 1919

During her days at home Jacinta’s health failed even more rapidly. By October, she had developed tuberculosis and Dr. Formigao came to see her. He had made the pilgrimage, along with 600 faithful people, to the Cova da Iria on the second anniversary of the great miracle. He found Jacinta as “a living skeleton, her arms nothing but bones, her face all eyes, her cheeks wasted by fever.” Yet he could do nothing but suggest placement in a really good sanitarium.

Surprisingly though, Jacinta’s health improved during the warm days of autumn allowing her to leave her bed, go outside and even attend Mass at Fatima on Sunday. Much to her delight, she was even able to venture to Cova da Iria a time or two. Her parents were understandably upset when they discovered that she had done this and put a stop to it immediately much to the chagrin of little Jacinta. As the first blast of cold air arrived, however, her fever returned leaving Jacinta bedridden once again. She accepted this cheerfully as she was still able to prostrate herself and recite the Rosary each day, but eventually, even this became difficult. She confided in Lucia, “When I am alone I get out of bed to say the prayers of the Angel, but now I can’t put my head on the floor anymore, because I fall, so I pray only on my knees.”^[126] With each passing day Jacinta grew closer to Jesus and Mary in prayer and sacrifice and on three different occasions, Our Lady appeared to Jacinta in her bedroom and spoke to her with words of encouragement.

DECEMBER 1919

The final of these appearances occurred in December 1919 and Our Lady spoke to Jacinta of “new crosses and sacrifices awaiting her.”^[127] “Our Lady came to see me last night,” Jacinta told Lucia, “and told me that I am going to Lisbon to another hospital; that I will not see you again, nor my parents either, and after suffering a great deal, I shall die alone. But she said I must not be afraid, since she herself is coming to take me to heaven.” The two hugged and Jacinta wept, “I will never see you again! You won’t be coming to visit me there. Oh please, pray hard for me, because I am going to die alone!”

Dying alone seemed to be her biggest fear. One day Lucia brought Jacinta a stamp on which was a picture of the Mother of Sorrows. Jacinta gazed upon it with an anguished look on her face and then began to cry. “Oh, my little Mother of Heaven,” she sobbed with a tear-soaked face, “do I really have to die alone?” But when reminded that Our Lady would take her personally to Heaven, she would find total comfort.

Jacinta also lamented having to die without receiving the hidden Jesus wishing that “Our Lady would bring Him to me, when she comes to fetch me!” One-day Lucia asked Jacinta what she would do in Heaven. “I’m going to love Jesus very much, and the Immaculate Heart of Mary, too. I’m going to pray a lot for you, for sinners, for the Holy Father, for my parents and my brothers and sisters, and for all the people who have asked me to pray for them...” When she noticed her mother looking sad at seeing her child so sick, Jacinta would comfort her saying, “Don’t worry, mother. I’m going to Heaven, and there I’ll be praying so much for you,” or “Don’t cry. I’m alright.” She would always refuse offerings but would later tell Lucia how she refused only as a sacrifice for sinners. Yet Jacinta insisted that Lucia never tell her mother how much she was suffering so as not to upset her.^[128]

EARLY JANUARY 1920

Right up until the day of her departure for the hospital in Lisbon, the smallest visionary suffered great anguish at the thought of never seeing Lucia or her family again, and of dying without them... alone. Lucia advised her not to think about it. "Let me think about it," Jacinta responded, "for the more I think the more I suffer, and I want to suffer for love of Our Lord and for sinners. Anyway, I don't mind! Our Lady will come to me there and take me to heaven." At other times, she would kiss and embrace the crucifix saying as she did, "O my Jesus! I love you, and I want to suffer very much for love of You." She very often said, "O Jesus! Now You can convert many sinners, because this is a really big sacrifice!"

The thought of never seeing Jacinta again caused Lucia to suffer greatly as well though no one other than Lucia really took the talk of hospitals in Lisbon very seriously. Lisbon was, after all, a ninety-mile trip and the Martos knew that they could not afford another hospital stay for Jacinta even if it were required. That all changed in January 1920 when an automobile pulled up to the Marto home. Manuel and Olimpia watched with curiosity as Dr. Formigao exited the vehicle with two strangers who turned out to be noted ophthalmologist Dr. Enrico Lisboa and his wife. Dr. Formigao had spoken much of little Jacinta to Dr. Enrico who had taken a special interest in her case. A quick examination was all the doctor needed to understand that the girl would die without the care provided in a hospital. He used his connections and along with a few of his friends acting as financial benefactors, was able to arrange for the hospital stay.

JANUARY 20, 1920

While this all came as somewhat of a shock to the family, Jacinta was expecting it and actually felt better now that it was happening. While awaiting the necessary arrangements to be made by the doctor and his friends, Jacinta convinced her mother, who along with a neighbor, took the little girl to the Cova da Iria for one last visit. There, they knelt to say the Rosary. Afterward, Jacinta picked some wild flowers which she carefully placed in the little chapel that had been built where the holm-oak stood. With this offering, she knelt by the small tree to say a prayer, then after being helped up by her mother, mounted the mule for the journey home.

JANUARY 21, 1920

The very next morning, Jacinta said goodbye to her father and then, turning to Lucia, hugged her very tightly. Lucia's heart broke and she held her little cousin in her arms for a long time. Both cried as Jacinta said, "We shall never meet again. Pray for me a lot till I go to heaven, and afterwards I'll pray a lot for you. Never tell anybody the secret even if they kill you. Love Jesus and the Immaculate Heart of Mary a great deal and make many sacrifices for sinners. Goodbye, Lucia."

Jacinta was taken to the train station by her mother and older brother Antonio who accompanied her on the trip, a train ride that took four to five-hours and was very taxing for Jacinta. In Lisbon, they were met by three well-dressed ladies that turned out to be friends of the Baron. After many hours, they finally secured lodging where Olimpia, Jacinta and Antonio remained for a week after which time a more permanent place was found at the Catholic orphanage near the Church of Our Lady of Miracles, run by a Franciscan nun by the name of Dona Maria da Purificacao Godinho.^[129] Madre Godinho had a special devotion to Our Lady and had longed to meet the children to whom She appeared. Upon learning that one of the children was now in her care, she took the child to her heart like a mother, placing Jacinta each day by the sunny window overlooking the Garden of the Estrela.

Jacinta enjoyed living in the convent especially knowing that the hidden Jesus had a home there as well. She attended Mass and received the hidden Jesus every day and on quick order, Mother Godinho believed that a saint was living under her roof. She noticed how Jacinta avoided the other girls except to give them motherly advice on obedience and truthfulness. She spoke with authority and the nun would sometime draw her into conversation and carefully write down some of the more striking things the child would say.

One-day Jacinta noted to Mother Godinho, "Our Lady wants my sisters Teresa (15 years of age) and Florinda (16 years of age) to be nuns. My mother doesn't want them to be, but for this Our Lady will take them to heaven before long."^[130]

FEBRUARY 2 – FEBRUARY 9, 1920

Despite Jacinta's enjoyment of life in the convent, her stay there was short. On February 2nd, the Feast of the Purification of Our Lady, she was transferred to the Hospital of Dona Stefania as prophesied by the Blessed Mother. Jacinta was assigned Bed 38, on the first floor of this rather dark, depressing place. Noted pediatrician and chief surgeon, Dr. Castro Freire, conducted a thorough examination confirming the diagnosis of purulent pleurisy that required another operation just as soon as little Jacinta was strong enough to handle it. "It won't do any good," Jacinta warned, "Our Lady came to tell me that I am going to die soon."^[131]

Jacinta was delighted one day as she looked up to see her father standing over her. He had made the long journey but had only a few hours to remain because some of his other children were sick and he was needed back home. She told him to let Lucia know that Our Lady had visited her in the hospital and told her the day and hour of her death.^[132] Jacinta also knew a great deal of other information told her by Our Lady and she shared those prophecies with others from time to time.

Mother Godinho, for example, visited Jacinta daily. On one particular day Godinho told her about a dynamic sermon delivered by a certain priest, one that was praised by fashionable ladies because of his theatrical voice and kind manner. Jacinta said, "When you least expect it, you will see that that priest is wicked." Just a few months later, the orator left the priesthood under rather scandalous circumstances.

On another occasion, Jacinta told a doctor who had asked for her prayers when she reached heaven that he and his daughter would die shortly after she passed; and they did. "To mother Godinho, who wanted to visit Cova da Iria; she said, "You will go -- but after my death; and so will I."

In fact, the extraordinary girl revealed during this time a great many little-known, but remarkable statements made by Our Lady, including:

"More souls go to hell because of sins of the flesh than for any other reason; Certain fashions will be introduced that will offend Our Lord very much; Many marriages are not good - they do not please Our Lord and are not of God; Priests must be pure, very pure - they should not busy themselves with anything except what concerns the Church and souls; The disobedience of priests to their superiors and to the Holy Father is very displeasing to Our Lord; The Blessed Mother can no longer restrain the hand of her Divine Son from striking the world with just punishment for its many crimes; Tell everybody that God gives graces through the Immaculate Heart of Mary; Tell them to ask graces from her, and that the Heart of Jesus wishes to be venerated together with the Immaculate Heart of Mary.”^[133]

FEBRUARY 10, 1920

Jacinta was taken into surgery on February 10th, but her condition had so weakened her that the doctors could not use the chloroform or ether before performing the surgery and opted instead to use a local anesthesia. Dr. Castro Freire opened her left side and removed two ribs leaving a gap wide enough for him to insert his hands. The pain was excruciating and the child yelled, “Ai, Nossa Senhora!”^[134] Then she murmured, “Patience! We ought to suffer everything to go to heaven... It is for your love, my Jesus!... Now you can convert many sinners, for I suffer much.”^[135]

When the surgery was complete, the doctors felt success and Jacinta was returned to the same ward but was placed in Bed 60. Jacinta knew, however, that she would not recover and that her end was near though she suffered great pain for many additional days.

FEBRUARY 16, 1920

On this day Mother Godinho visited her special friend yet again and this time was told that Our Lady had appeared to her to say, “She was coming for me very soon and would take away my pains.”^[136]

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 1920

6:00 – 8:00 PM

By this time Jacinta knew her time was near as Our Lady had informed her when her last day and hour would be. She called for her nurse, Aurora Gomez, at 6:00 PM to request the last sacraments. Two hours later, Father Pereira dos Reis of the Church of the Holy Angels arrived to give the holy child the last rites of the Catholic Church. He promised to return the following morning to bring her Communion as well.

10:30 PM

Jacinta knew well, however, that she wouldn't be there in the morning. Nurse Gomez stepped out of her room for just a few moments. It was then that the Mother of God reached down to Bed 60 and took little Jacinta into her arms for her final journey, her suffering complete, her eternal happiness before her. Jacinta must have finally felt comfort in the arms that once held the baby Jesus for as the nurse returned, she saw Jacinta "breath her last sigh, a rosy flush on her cheeks, a half smile on her lips."^[137]

FEBRUARY 22, 1920

The news of Jacinta's death spread quickly and some of the faithful raised funds to support the funeral expenses. Burial would be at a cemetery in Lisbon. She was dressed in a white communion dress with a blue cape displaying the colors of Our Lady. Her body was placed in a white coffin and taken to the Church of the Holy Angels. There it was carefully placed in the sacristy across two small benches. So many people came to the church that it became necessary for Pastor Pereira dos Reis to drive them out of the sacristy and request that the body be taken to Casa do Despacho of the brotherhood of the Most Blessed Sacrament, where he locked the door and turned the key over to undertaker Antonio Rebelo de Almeida. When Baron de Alvaizere offered a grave in his plot in a cemetery in Ourem, the burial plans changed and the original burial site in Lisbon was abandoned.

FEBRUARY 23-24, 1920

Prior to applying the permanent seal to the casket, the undertaker allowed a few people to view the remains. All agreed that the body emanated an odor of flowers, and some insisted that the body still had flushed cheeks giving the impression of life. The next day the casket was sealed, transported from Rossio to Chao de Macas by train and then driven by automobile to Ourem. Only a few people from Aljustrel could make the journey to Ourem for the funeral, but among them was a very distraught Manuel Marto who repeated through his tears over and over: “And you died there alone!” Olimpia and Lucia, though unable to attend the funeral services, eventually journeyed together to Ourem to visit the tiny grave of their beloved daughter and cousin.

The anti-clerics, for their part, were concerned only about any resulting devotion to this religious nonsense and immediately began to circulate rumors that the Catholic Church had both Francisco and Jacinta murdered to avoid contradictions in the stories of the three children of Fatima, of whom, only Lucia, and her version of events, remained. Despite their efforts, the many devout followers of Our Lady of Fatima resolved to vindicate the honor of the children.

AUGUST 5, 1920

The nation of Portugal was in a miserable state in 1920, politically, economically and morally, but the worse had not yet come. Between 1910 and 1926 there would be sixteen political revolutions and the government would change forty-three times. Those governments perpetuated revolts against Christianity. Pope Benedict XV noted in 1920 that “Morals are much more depraved and corrupt than formerly. The fond hope and wish of every renegade is the speedy rise of some universal state which is based on the complete equality of men and women and common ownership of property as a fundamental principle, in which neither any distinctions of nationality nor authority of parents over children, nor of public authority over citizens, nor of God over man living in society, is acknowledged. If these principles are put into practice, dreadful horrors must necessarily follow.”^[138]

Through the chaos, a new bishop was consecrated as head of the new diocese of Leiria. This area included all the Serra in which lay the Cova da Iria and Aljustrel. Pope Benedict had now made this an independent jurisdiction with the intelligent and charming Dom Jose Alves Correia as its vicar. At the time of his appointment, Correia served as a professor at the Seminary of Porto, but in his earlier days, suffered greatly at the hands of the Republic that tortured him by forcing him to stand, day and night, in ice water. The experience left Correia permanently disabled.

AUGUST 6, 1920 – JUNE 12, 1921

Though the new bishop was no stranger to suffering, this assignment presented a new challenge as the years of religious persecution at the hands of the Freemason government left many of the clerics scattered, exiled and without a source of income. The new diocese was dead broke and even large numbers of parishioners “had given up Mass and the sacraments.”^[139] With the hope of revitalization of the new diocese, one of Bishop Correira’s first acts was the consecration of his diocese to the Blessed Mother, and he did this symbolically on the feast of the Assumption in 1920. Shortly thereafter, Maria Carreira presented him with the funds collected at the site of the Fatima Apparitions, an amount that had now grown to some 357,000 reis, requesting that he use the money as he wished. This would prove no easy task as there were many forces at work, some faithful believers in the Apparitions of Fatima and others, including some priests, who argued that it was a delusion. Bishop Correira also had to consider the fodder that the use of such funds would provide to the enemies of the Church.

The new Bishop also faced the dilemma of Lucia. He believed that the anti-clerics posed a threat to her life because she was the sole survivor of the three visionaries, but also knew that many believers wanted to see her canonized into sainthood. As he wrestled with these issues, he sent word to Maria Rosa to bring Lucia to see him on June 13, 1921.

JUNE 13, 1921

Maria Rosa complied with the Bishop’s request arriving at his home at the appointed hour. After making idle chat for a short while, Bishop Correira asked Lucia if she might like to leave Aljustrel for an opportunity to attend a good school where she could fulfill Our Lady’s wishes by learning to read and write. Lucia was intrigued with the idea also realizing that a fresh start in a new place would help her with her grief. It might also put an end to the many visitors with their endless questions. Maria Rosa also liked the idea as such a move would reduce her stress as well. Their favorable reaction pleased the Bishop who suggested that Lucia could enter a school near Porto run by the Sisters of Saint Dorothy. He also suggested that she leave right away and tell no one where she was going. Additionally, she was to tell no one at the new school who she was. Nor was she to speak of the Apparitions! To these requirements Lucia readily agreed.

JUNE 18, 1921

Lucia's last day in Aljustrel was taken up with visits to family and friends. She offered her goodbyes, yet complied with the Bishop's request to tell no one where she was going. Afterward, Lucia visited the Cabeco where the Angel had first appeared. She prostrated herself at the cave beside the rock where He had knelt and repeated the prayer He had given her. Rising to her feet, Lucia climbed over the rocks and down the slope to Valinhos to the site of the August 19, 1917 Apparition of Our Lady. Fieldstones now encircled the holm-oak tree on which She appeared. Lucia knelt beside the "shrine" and cried in grief for her two cousins and in love of Our Lady. She believed that she may never see this place again and found leaving very difficult. Finally, the sole-surviving visionary made her way to the Cova da Iria, walking to the holm-oak tree that once held the weight of Our Lady. She knelt, alone, recalling the words of encouragement spoken to her by the Mother of God. "I am the Lady of the Rosary.... Do you suffer a great deal? Don't be discouraged. I will never forsake you."^[140]

Lucia left for home, interrupting her journey for just three additional stops. One at St. Anthony's Church so she might say one final prayer there. A second at the grave of her cousin Francisco so she could say a last goodbye to him, and finally, to the home of her Aunt Olimpia and Uncle Manuel. In just two years they lost not only Francisco and Jacinta, but also their daughters Florinda and Teresa who died in 1920 and 1921 respectively, just as Jacinta had prophesied to Mother Godinho back in January of 1919. She bid them farewell, said a prayer in the room where Francisco had died, and left their home for hers with tear-filled eyes. She spent a few minutes at the well, ate supper, and went to bed.

JUNE 19, 1921

2:00 AM

Lucia heard her mother call. It was still very early -- 2:00 in the morning, but Manuel Carreira waited outside with the cart to take them to Porto. They stopped briefly at the Chapel where they said the Rosary then departed for the nine-hour journey.

11:00 AM

Arriving in Leiria, the travelers were met by a lady that the Bishop had sent. She took them the rest of the way to the train station where she and Lucia boarded the train bound first for Alfarelos and then for Porto. “Goodbye,” Maria Rosa shouted to her fourteen-year old daughter. She wiped away her tears as the train slowly pulled away from the station.

JUNE 20, 1919 – OCTOBER 24, 1925

Lucia and her guide arrived at the Asilo of the Sisters of Saint Dorothy at Vilar early on the morning of June 20th. The daily Mass was already in progress and Lucia was in time to receive Holy Communion. Following Mass, Lucia was led to the sacristy where she was introduced to both the Chaplain and the Mother Superior, the latter of whom was doing a favor, against her better judgment, for her friend Bishop Correira.

“When they ask your name,” Mother Superior said, “you will reply, ‘Call me Maria of the Sorrows.’ When they ask you where you are from you will say, ‘I am from near Lisboa.’ As for what happened at Fatima, never again mention it to anyone, either by question or by answer. Not to anyone. Do you understand?” Lucia was compliant. “You will not go to walk with the other girls, but you will not say why you do not go. Do you understand, my dear?” Mother Superior continued. “Yes, Reverend Mother,” Lucia responded. “That is all,” Mother Superior said with a dismissive wave of her hand.

Lucia was led to her room where she would spend the better part of the next four years in patient compliance. Each day started with the Holy Mass, then a series of classes, then recreation followed by some manual work, prayers, and finally more schoolwork. Over the four years Lucia learned to embroider, sew, type, and cook. She spent many hours scrubbing floors, polishing brass and silver and waiting on tables. She kept her identity secret as instructed and never spoke of Fatima, not even to her mother who visited her a couple of times.

Over the years Lucia had come to love the convent and those who devoted their lives to the labor of helping to educate her. She found peace there and appreciated that the Bishop had sent her. She earned the respect and love of the others as they saw in her the unselfishness and extraordinary devotion to God that so characterized her.

Now, however, at eighteen years of age, it was time for Lucia to leave the convent school and enter the real world. She initially opted for the very difficult life of the Discalced Carmelites, but followed Mother Superior's advice against it. Eventually, she decided to enter the order of the Sisters of Saint Dorothy so that she would have more free time to go to the chapel and pray. And so, on October 24, 1925, Lucia joined the order as a postulant in Tuy, just across the border into Spain.

1925

DECEMBER 10, 1925

During her Appearance to the children on July 13, 1917, Our Lady promised Lucia that She would return

“to ask for the consecration of Russia to my Immaculate Heart, and the Communion of Reparation on the First Saturdays.” She also promised, “If my requests are heeded, Russia will be converted and there will be peace. If not, she will spread her errors throughout the world, causing wars and persecution of the Church. The good will be martyred, the Holy Father will have much to suffer, various nations will be annihilated. In the end, my Immaculate Heart will triumph. The Holy Father will consecrate Russia to me, and she will be converted, and a period of peace will be granted to the world.”

No doubt Lucia wondered throughout the past eight years what Our Lady meant by that message. On this day she would find out, as December 10, 1925 held the partial fulfillment of that promise. While sitting in her cell at the convent, Sister Lucia saw a familiar vision of “the most holy Virgin, and by her side, elevated on a luminous cloud, was a Child.” The Mother of God rested her hand on Lucia's shoulder, simultaneously revealing a heart encircled by thorns that She held in her other hand. The Child Jesus spoke first saying

“Have compassion on the Heart of which ungrateful men pierce at every moment, and there is no one to make an act of reparation to remove them.” As the Child finished, His most holy Mother said, “Look, my daughter, at my Heart surrounded by thorns with which ungrateful men pierce me every moment by their blasphemies and ingratitude. You, at least, try to console me and say that I promise to assist, at the hour of death, with the graces necessary for salvation of all those who, on the first Saturday of five consecutive months, shall go to confession, receive Holy Communion, recite five decades of the Rosary, and keep me company for fifteen minutes while meditating on the fifteen mysteries of the Rosary with the intention of making reparation to me.”^[141]

From this point on, Our Lady would return to Lucia at regular intervals to instruct her further and to offer her comfort. Perhaps to create an atmosphere appropriate for such visitations Lucia sought and obtained permission from her superiors and confessor to pray alone in the chapel every Thursday and Friday night from eleven o’clock until midnight. At least one of the future Apparitions would take place in this setting.

1927

DECEMBER 17, 1927

Our Lady appeared to Lucia once again on December 17, 1927 this time granting permission for Lucia to reveal the first two parts of the message of Fatima. These include the visions of the Angel; the promise to take the children to Heaven; the vision of hell; the predictions of another war, martyrdom for Christians, the destruction of nations, the persecution of the Church and of the Holy Father, and the spread of Communism. Until now, none of the children had revealed any part of the secrets.

1929

JUNE 13, 1929

BETWEEN 11:00 PM AND MIDNIGHT

Sometime before the clock struck Midnight on June 13, 1929, Our Lady returned to Lucia to fulfill a promise made to her over a decade ago during the July 13, 1917 Apparition; the promise to “...come to ask for the consecration of Russia.” While Lucia prayed alone in the Chapel of Dorotheas in the town of Tuy, she knelt in the middle of the darkened chapel near the altar rails. Prostrating herself, she prayed in the words of the Angel. After a time, she was overcome with fatigue and stood to complete her prayers with outstretched arms as if on a cross. Despite the room being lit with only the sanctuary light, the whole chapel was suddenly “illuminated by a supernatural light, and above the altar appeared a cross of light, reaching to the ceiling. In a brighter light on the upper part of the cross, could be seen the face of a man and his body as far as the waist, upon his breast was a dove of light, nailed to the cross was the body of another man.”

Lucia discerned a little above the Man’s waist, a chalice and a large host suspended in the air, “on to which drops of blood were falling from the face of Jesus Crucified and from the wound in His side. These drops ran down onto the host and fell into the chalice. Beneath the right arm of the cross was Our Lady and in Her hand, was her Immaculate Heart. (It was Our Lady of Fatima, with her Immaculate Heart in her left hand, without sword or roses, but with a crown of thorns and flames). Under the left arm of the cross, large letters, -as if of crystal clear water which ran down upon the altar, formed these words: ‘Grace and Mercy’.”

Lucia understood this to be the Mystery of the Most Holy Trinity revealed, and she received insights about this mystery which she was not permitted to reveal. Our Lady then said to Lucia,

“The moment has come in which God asks the Holy Father, in union with all the Bishops of the world, to make the consecration of Russia to my Immaculate Heart, promising to save it by this means. There are so many souls whom the justice of God condemns for sins committed against me, that I have come to ask reparation. Sacrifice yourself for this intention and pray.”^[142]

This vision and the words of Our lady were discussed with, and formally submitted to, Lucia’s superiors. They in turn, made sure the message reached the appropriate authorities who could determine the appropriateness of alerting the Pope.

1935

SEPTEMBER 12 – DECEMBER 15

It seemed that the years had begun to tie up any loose ends in the wake of the Apparitions to the children, regardless of where those Apparitions took place. Jacinta had been promised that she would one day, after her death, return to Fatima and it appeared that the year 1935 would bring the fulfillment of that promise. The small casket carrying Jacinta's remains was exhumed from its original burial spot in a cemetery at Vila Nova de Ourem some fifteen and a half years later. On September 12, 1935, the casket was taken to the cemetery in Fatima where Jacinta could be reunited with her brother Francisco. Prior to her reburial, the casket was opened to the audible sound of many gasps from those present. To the amazement of many, the body, it seems, was found to be completely intact, a state referred to as uncorrupted. Various photographs were taken of the body, one of which was sent by Bishop Jose Alves Correia da Silva to Lucia. [\[143\]](#)

The photo was received by a thankful Lucia on November 17th and she immediately wrote a thank you note to the Bishop in which she recalled some very vivid memories of Jacinta. Upon reading her note, it occurred to Bishop Correia that Lucia had a great deal of information about her cousin that no one else knew and he worried that all that information might be forever lost if anything were to happen to her. Hoping to preserve Jacinta's memory, he sent word to Lucia requesting that she reduce to writing everything she could still remember about her. [\[144\]](#)

After suffering greatly, Jacinta Marto was taken to heaven by Our Lady on Friday February 20, 1920. Her body was buried in a cemetery in Ourem but was exhumed on September 12, 1935 for reburial in the same cemetery in Fatima in which Francisco's body lay. Though having been in the ground for over 15 years, her body was found to be incorrupt and giving off a fragrance of flowers.

Lucia received the message on December 15th and immediately began to pen a memoir on Jacinta as Bishop Correia had requested. In this memoir, Lucia wrote of Jacinta's life but was careful to not reveal any of the secrets shared by Our Lady with the children.^[145] The Bishop read the memoir with great interest and shared it with Fr. Fonseca. After reading Lucia's account of Jacinta, the vivid memories, and the extraordinarily detailed information that was contained within, Fr. Fonseca, wrote to the Bishop on November 7th noting that Lucia's "first memoir makes one think that there are further interesting details in the history of the Apparitions...which are not yet known. Consequently, he asked the Bishop to ask Lucia to write down everything she remembers about the Apparitions.

Bishop Jose concurred with Fr. Fonseca's request and "gave Lucia the necessary order." Lucia immediately replied to the Bishop that she had "begun today, for this is the Will of God." Just three weeks later, on November 21st, Lucia completed the 38-page manuscript, filled front and back with close handwriting, almost without corrections, as requested by the Bishop. This manuscript revealed much of the detail that had been missing about the angelic apparitions, her extraordinary blessings on the occasion of her First Communion, the Immaculate Heart of Mary in the Apparition of June 1917, and much more.

In addressing her reluctance to share the information asked to be kept secret by Our Lady, she writes a note to God saying, “No longer will I savor the joy of sharing with You alone the secrets of Your love, but henceforth, others too, will sing the greatness of Your mercy... Behold the handmaid of the Lord! May He continue to make use of her, as He thinks best.”

1938 JANUARY 25 AND 26

On the night of January 25, 1938, Sister Lucia stood by the window in her room at the convent. She noticed a red glow, an ominous glow, that seemed to light the entire sky. Lucia was not the only one to see this light, however, as it was visible throughout Europe and Africa and in parts of America and Asia. The lights persisted and continued to light the sky the following night as well. It was explained scientifically as the lights of the aurora borealis despite the northern lights being a most unusual occurrence in Portugal.

Lucia dos Santos was only ten-years old when Our Lady told her that she would remain on earth well after the deaths of her cousins so that she could establish devotion in the world to Mary's Immaculate Heart. Sister Lucia's mission ended on February 13, 2005, less than two months shy of her 98th birthday.

Lucia knew better however, sensing immediately that she had just witnessed the fulfillment of Our Lady's prophecy of July 13, 1917 in which she promised “When you see the night illumined by an unknown light, know that this is the great sign given you by God that he is about to punish the world for its crimes, by means of war, famine, and persecutions of the Church and of the Holy Father.” She made arrangement to see that the Pope was informed of her belief.

Pius XII was the Pontiff as World War II was officially begun on September 1, 1939 following the declarations of war by Britain and France on Germany for its invasion of Poland. However, the conflicts leading to this war began perhaps as early as 1936 when Adolf Hitler of Germany ordered his troops into the Rhineland and culminated in March 1938 when Hitler overtook Austria and then six months later demanded the Sudetenland region of Czechoslovakia. These events, and the unknown light in the night sky that announced it, occurred during the reign of Pope Pius XI, just as Our Lady had foretold to Lucia and her cousins back in July 1917.^[146]

1942 - 1952

Pope Pius XII received word of Lucia's interpretation of the strange lights. Lucia had never really believed the lights to be the Northern Lights as was explained at the time and it is reasonable to suspect that she may have conveyed those thoughts to the Pope as well. Regardless, the Pope did consecrate the whole world to the Immaculate Heart of Mary in 1942 with a particular mention of Russia.^[147] Privately, Lucia doubted that such a general consecration fulfilled the very specific requirement of Our Lady as expressed in the vision. She demanded the Holy Father's consecration of Russia, commenting, "but it has not been done in the form indicated by Our Lady: I do not know whether Our Lady accepts it, done in this way, as complying with her promises."^[148] On January 2, 1944, Our Lady appeared to Sister Lucy yet again following Lucia's anguish at being asked to reduce to writing the Third Secret that was given her by Our Lady in July 1917. In granting permission to write the Third Secret, Our Lady asks it to be revealed to the world not later than 1960.

In a July 15, 1946 interview with Fr. William Thomas Walsh, Lucia made no secret of the fact that "Our Lady did not ask for the consecration of the world to her Immaculate Heart. What she demanded specifically was the consecration of Russia.... What Our Lady wants is that the Pope and all the bishops in the world shall consecrate Russia to Her Immaculate Heart on one special day. If this is done, she will convert Russia and there will be peace. If it is not done, the errors of Russia will spread throughout every country in the world." When asked, if "this means every country, without exception, will be overcome by communism," Lucia responded, "Yes."^[149]

PART V
FATIMA'S MESSAGE,
PROMISES AND SECRETS

THE MESSAGE

In 1917, the world appeared to be on a ruinous course culminated perhaps with the horrors of the very first World War ever experienced by earth's inhabitants. Hundreds of thousands lay dead from the violent fighting, a flu pandemic ravished much of the world and an assault on religion was undertaken by secular political influences that threatened to abolish all religion from the predominantly Catholic Country of Portugal, and perhaps beyond, within two generations.

It is within this backdrop that God chose to send a very special emissary to deliver a message of redemption to the world through three young shepherd children in Fatima, Portugal. "The message was a summons to conversion, faith, prayer, penance and hope."^[150] The Mother of God herself appeared with instructions for the children to pray the Rosary every day to obtain peace for the world; to make sacrifices for the conversion of sinners and in reparation for offenses committed against God and Our Lady's Immaculate Heart. She also warned that people must amend their lives and ask pardon for their sins. Subsequent Apparitions called for a special devotion to Mary's Immaculate Heart and the completion of the First Saturday Communions of reparation.

In the year 2000, then Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger, speaking as the prefect of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, explained that unlike the "public revelation which came to completion in Christ, as enunciated in the New Testament," the "private revelation" of Mary to the children of Fatima has three elements. First, nothing of the message is contrary to faith or morals; second, public disclosure is not illegal; and, third, "the faithful are under no obligation to accept the help offered in the message. Cardinal Ratzinger confirmed his statement after his election as Pope Benedict XVI, the 266th Pope of the Holy Roman Catholic Church.

The Catholic Church has long held that it is not the role of such "private revelations" to "improve or complete Christ's definitive Revelation, but to help live more fully by it in a certain period of history."^[151]

THE PROMISES

As discussed, the Mother of God not only called the three shepherds of Fatima to prayer, sacrifice and devotions to Her Immaculate Heart, but She provided instruction on how to achieve this and gave a promise of what would happen if people of all stripes heeded her call. For example, if you pray the Rosary every day adding at the end of each decade the words, ‘Oh my Jesus, forgive us, save us from the fire of hell. Lead all souls to Heaven, especially those who are in most need,’ then world peace will be achieved.

Likewise, if you make many sacrifices, saying with each sacrifice, “Oh Jesus, it is for love of you, for the conversion of sinners, and in reparation for the sins committed against the Immaculate Heart of Mary,” that I sacrifice, then God will stop being offended, and thus will recant his promised outbreak of a more terrible war, famine, and persecutions of the Church and of the Holy Father.

Our Lady also promised to “come to ask for the consecration of Russia to my Immaculate Heart, and the Communion of Reparation on the First Saturdays. She again promised what would happen if these requests were met with compliance.

“If my requests are heeded, Russia will be converted and there will be peace. If not, she will spread her errors throughout the world, causing wars and persecution of the Church. The good will be martyred, the Holy Father will have much to suffer, various nations will be annihilated. In the end, my Immaculate Heart will triumph. The Holy Father will consecrate Russia to me, and she will be converted, and a period of peace will be granted to the world.

Finally, On December 10, 1925, Our Lady fulfilled this promise. She appeared in a vision to Lucia to ask for the consecration of Russia to Her Immaculate Heart and to provide very explicit instruction of how to achieve this.

“Look my daughter, at my heart encircled with thorns, with which ungrateful men wound it every moment by their blasphemies and ingratitude. Give me consolation, you at least; and announce for me that I promise to assist at the hour of death, with the graces necessary for salvation, all who on the first Saturday of five consecutive months confess, receive Holy Communion, recite five decades of the Rosary, and keep me company for fifteen minutes meditating on the mysteries of the Rosary, with the purpose of making reparation to me.”

Learning from the Holy Mother of God Herself what we must do on five consecutive Saturdays does not necessarily satisfy the curiosity as to why Our Lady would ask for this devotion. Jesus himself provided those reasons to Lucia in two separate, 1930 revelations, one occurring on the evening of May 29th and the other on the evening of May 30th. Lucia sent this information to Fr. Jose Bernardo Gonzalves in a letter on June 12, 1930.

“My daughter,” the Lord said to Lucia, “the motive is simple: there are five ways in which people offend me, and blaspheme against the Immaculate Heart of Mary.

- 1. The blasphemies against the Immaculate Conception,*
- 2. Against Her virginity,*
- 3. Against the divine maternity, refusing at the same time to accept her as the Mother of all mankind,*
- 4. Those who try publicly to implant in the children’s hearts, indifference, contempt and even hate against this Immaculate Mother, and*
- 5. Those who insult her directly in her sacred images.”*^[152]

So, there it is! The Mother of Jesus has asked for the completion of five First Saturday devotions to her Immaculate Heart and Jesus has provided the motivation for this requirement. The final piece was provided by Our Lady. That is the detailed instruction for completion of the First Saturdays. Our Lady required that the First Saturdays contain six distinct elements that are relatively self-explanatory. They are:

- 1. Confessing one’s sins to a priest,*
- 2. Receiving Holy Communion in a state of grace,*
- 3. Praying five decades of the Rosary,*
- 4. Meditating for fifteen minutes on one or more of the Mysteries of the Rosary,*

5. Doing these things in the spirit of Reparation to the Immaculate Heart of Mary, and,
6. Observing these practices on the First Saturday of five consecutive months.

The Mother of God has made one additional promise regarding this devotion. For those who faithfully and fervently complete the Five First Saturdays devotion to Mary's Immaculate Heart, Our Lady will provide all the graces necessary for that person to attain salvation.

THE SECRETS

Included in the delivery of the primary message that Our Lady provided to the children of Fatima were three visions that reinforced that message. Our Lady asked the children to refrain from speaking of these secrets, saying "Do not tell this to anybody. Francisco, yes, you may tell him." This is a request that the children took very seriously. Even after being: kidnapped by the government officials; held captive to prevent them from going to the Cova da Iria at the appointed time of the August Apparition; jailed with adult criminals; threatened with death by being slowly lowered into a vat of boiling oil; separated from each other and told that each had been tortured and killed in that way, the children still faithfully honored Our Lady's request of secrecy.

So how is it then that the secrets were revealed? Lucia revealed the first two secrets in her August 1941 Memoir, only with the greatest reluctance, after much prayer, and in total obedience to a direct order of the Bishop. In fact, she was granted permission to do so by Our Lady in an Apparition on December 17, 1927. Yet the third secret, she guarded even more closely. It was in 1943, when Lucia fell seriously ill with influenza and pleurisy, that Bishop Silva of Leiria visited her and suggested she write the third secret down to ensure its survival in the event of her death. At the time Lucia was a nun in the Carmelite Order. "Carmelites obedience requires that orders from superiors be regarded as coming directly from God." This presented a dilemma for Lucia. Which is of greater weight, a direct request of secrecy given by Our Lady or the indirect order from God's representative that the secret be disclosed. As she pondered the quandary, "Bishop Silva sent Lucia a letter containing a direct order to record the secret.” On January 3, 1944, following anguished prayer and permission from Our Lady granted in a vision the night prior, Lucia wrote the third secret on a piece of paper and placed it in an envelope that she sealed and secured. On the outside of the envelope, as instructed by Our Lady in Lucia’s vision, she wrote that the letter was to be opened and read prior to 1960. In June 1944, that envelope was delivered to Bishop Silva who kept it in his possession until 1957, at which time it was delivered to the Vatican.

The envelope was opened by the Pope in 1960, but the third secret that was contained within it was not made public until Cardinal Angelo Sodano announced on May 13, 2000, that it would be released. A text of the third secret was issued by the Vatican on June 26, 2000.

So, what are these secrets that Our Lady shared with Lucia, Francisco and Jacinta on July 13, 1917? The first two secrets have been described previously as Lucia recounted them for the world to see in her Remembrances. They are:

THE FIRST SECRET THE VISION OF HELL:

“Sacrifice yourselves for sinners, and say many times, especially whenever you make some sacrifice: Oh Jesus, it is for love of you, for the conversion of sinners, and in reparation for the sins committed against the Immaculate Heart of Mary.”

As she spoke these words, Our Lady stretched out her hands, as before, emulating rays of light that seemed to penetrate directly into the earth, exposing to the children a sea of fire. “Plunged in this fire were demons and souls in human form, like transparent embers, all blackened or burnished bronze, floating about in the conflagration, now raised into the air by the flames that issued from within themselves together with great clouds of smoke now falling back on every side like sparks in huge fires, without weight or equilibrium, amid shrieks and groans of pain and despair.”

The vision horrified the children and made them tremble with fear causing Lucia to scream. “The demons could be distinguished by their terrifying and repellent likeness to frightful and unknown animals, black and transparent like burning coals. Terrified and as if to plead for succor,” the children looked up at the Lady, who so kindly, and ever so sadly, said to them, “You have seen Hell where the souls of poor sinners go.”^[153]

THE SECOND SECRET

INSTRUCTIONS FOR SAVING SOULS FROM HELL AND RECONVERTING THE WORLD TO CHRISTIANITY

To save them, God wishes to establish in the world devotion to My Immaculate Heart. If what I say to you is done, many souls will be saved and there will be peace. The war is going to end, but if people do not cease offending God, a worse one will break out during the pontificate of Pius XI. When you see the night illumined by an unknown light, know that this is the great sign given you by God that he is about to punish the world for its crimes, by means of war, famine, and persecutions of the Church and of the Holy Father. To prevent this, I shall come to ask for the consecration of Russia to my Immaculate Heart, and the Communion of Reparation on the First Saturdays. If my requests are heeded, Russia will be converted and there will be peace. If not, she will spread her errors throughout the world, causing wars and persecution of the Church. The good will be martyred, the Holy Father will have much to suffer, various nations will be annihilated. In the end, my Immaculate Heart will triumph. The Holy Father will consecrate Russia to me, and she will be converted, and a period of peace will be granted to the world. Do not tell this to anybody. Francisco, yes, you may tell him. When you pray the Rosary, say after each mystery, ‘Oh my Jesus, forgive us, save us from the fire of hell. Lead all souls to Heaven, especially those who are in most need.’”^[154]

THE THIRD SECRET

THE CHRISTIAN PERSECUTION

The text of the letter in which Lucia revealed the third secret is reprinted here in its entirety as released by the Vatican on June 26, 2000.

“The third part of the secret revealed at the Cova da Iria-Fatima, on 13 July 1917.

I write in obedience to you, my God, who command me to do so through his Excellency the Bishop of Leiria and through your Most Holy Mother and mine.

After the two parts which I have already explained, at the left of Our Lady and a little above, we saw an Angel with a flaming sword in his left hand; flashing, it gave out flames that looked as though they would set the world on fire; but they died out in contact with the splendor that Our Lady radiated towards him from her right hand: pointing to the earth with his right hand, the angel cried out in a loud voice: ‘Penance, Penance, Penance!’ And we saw in an immense light that is God: ‘something similar to how people appear in a mirror when they pass in front of it’ a Bishop dressed in White ‘we had the impression that it was the Holy Father’. Other Bishops, Priests, men and women Religious going up a steep mountain, at the top of which there was a big Cross of rough-hewn trunks as of a cork-tree with the bark; before reaching there the Holy Father passed through a big city half in ruins and half trembling with halting step, afflicted with pain and sorrow, he prayed for the souls of the corpses he met on his way; having reached the top of the mountain, on his knees at the foot of the big Cross he was killed by a group of soldiers who fired bullets and arrows at him, and in the same way there died one after another the other Bishops, Priests, men and women Religious, and the various lay people of different ranks and positions. Beneath the two arms of the Cross there were two Angels each with a crystal aspersorium in his hand, in which they gathered up the blood of the Martyrs and with it sprinkled the souls that were making their way to God.”

Tuy-3-1-1944

PART VI
THE CONTROVERSY

1981

MAY 13

Pope John Paul II, arguably the most charismatic Pope of modern times, stepped into his specially-made, white, open-top Jeep, better known as the Pope-mobile, at about 4:50 in the afternoon of May 13, 1981. He was just about to start his weekly general audience in St. Peter's Square. The Jeep began its slow trek around the elliptical-shaped plaza, stopping periodically to allow Pope John Paul to reach out from the vehicle to shake hands and to pick up and kiss small children, much to the delight of their enthusiastic parents.

At about 5:19 PM, the Pope's vehicle came to a stop just southwest of the Basilica steps. Twenty three-year old Mehmet Ali Agca, a Turkish man with boyish good looks, was among the thousands in the festive crowd, but Agca offered no child for the Pope to kiss, nor did he come to shake hands with the Pontiff. Rather, he reached into his pocket, took a 9mm Browning handgun firmly in his grasp, removed it from his pocket and fired six shots in the direction of John Paul from a distance of only a few yards. Four of those bullets found the intended target. Two bullets hit the Pope in the abdomen, narrowly missing his vital organs, a third hit him in his left arm and the fourth in his left hand. The other two bullets missed the Pope, but did injure two people. Ann Odre, a sixty-year-old American was struck in the chest while a twenty-one-year-old Jamaican woman, Rose Hill, was hit in the arm. "John Paul clutched his chest and slumped into the arms of his aids as a bright red stain slowly extended across his white cassock."^[155] Agca was immediately grabbed by bystanders who knocked the weapon out of his hand and detained him until the police arrived to arrest him. As he was led away, Agca repeated several times, "I couldn't care less about life. As if to emphasize the point, police found in his pocket a note that read, "I, Agca, have killed the Pope so that the world may know of the thousands of victims of imperialism."^[156]

The Pope, meanwhile, was taken to Gemelli Hospital in Rome where he would undergo five and a half hours of surgery that saved his life. At least one of the bullets was successfully removed from the Pontiff's abdomen during the surgery.

Agca had killed before. He was jailed in 1979 for the high-profile murder of Abdi Ipekci, a newspaper editor who authored articles exposing far-right groups from Turkey, but escaped from prison by slipping into a prison guard's uniform and walking out. Shortly after his escape, the Turkish paper Milliyet published a letter that Agca had submitted in which he threatened to kill the Pope for being an "agent of Russian and U.S. imperialism."

The ease with which Agca escaped from prison has led to speculation that he was part of a widespread conspiracy but the exact reason why the Pope was targeted remains unclear. What is clear is that Pope John Paul II believed he owed his survival to the direct intervention of the Immaculate Heart of Mary, for his thoughts and many of his actions following the attempt on his life were very much occupied by the events of Fatima.

On May 13, 1982, one year after the assassination attempt in St. Peter's Square and the 65th anniversary of the first apparition of Our Lady to the children, Pope John Paul II travelled to Fatima, where he met Sr. Lucia. The Holy Father visited the various sites associated with the Apparitions. Then, "On the occasion of a visit to Rome by the Bishop of Leiria-Fatima, the Pope decided to give him the bullet which had remained in the jeep after the assassination attempt, so that it might be kept in the shrine. By the Bishop's decision, the bullet was later set in the crown of the statue of Our Lady of Fatima."^[157] In December of 1983, Pope John Paul II visited Agca in his jail cell to forgive him for his transgression. He had, in fact, expressed his forgiveness of the would-be assassin shortly after the shooting, but visited Agca to provide the world an example of the type of absolute forgiveness to which we are all called.

In 1984, the grateful Pope requested that the statue of Our Lady from Fatima's Capelinha, the one presented by Gilberto Fernandes dos Santos, from Torres Novas and contained in the "Little Chapel" that was built in 1922 on the site of the holm-oak tree, be sent to Rome where in collegial union with the Bishops of the Church, he specifically consecrated the world to the Immaculate Heart of Mary on March 25, 1984, the feast of the Annunciation. He repeated the consecration on October 8, 2000 after again having requested that the statue be sent to Rome.^[158]

In 2000, on the 83rd anniversary of the first Apparition of Our Lady to the three shepherds of Fatima, Pope John Paul II beatified Francisco and Jacinta Marto. The celebration of beatification was attended by more than 700,000 people and the children's cause for canonization was placed under consideration, a cause that would be realized on May 13, 2017 when Pope Francis made the two children saints on the 100th anniversary of the Apparition.

Despite having been sentenced to life in prison just two months after the shooting, the jail cell meeting between Pope John Paul II and Agca in which the Pope offered his forgiveness, and a subsequent clemency granted by the Italian President, provided Agca with his freedom once more. In 2010, Agca was released from his prison cell and made a free man. Pope John Paul II would not live to see Agca's release, however, as the Pontiff died in 2005, but the forgiveness granted by the leader of 1.2 billion Catholics worldwide evidently touched the would-be assassin. In December of 2014, Agca visited the Vatican one more time, but this time, it was not with the intention of making a political statement, but rather to lay flowers at the grave of the Pope he tried to kill some thirty-three years earlier.

The failed assassination of Pope John Paul II has unwittingly become the source of what is perhaps the only controversy (at least in the hearts of the faithful) regarding the events of Our Lady's appearance over one hundred years ago. The Catholic Church contends that the 1981 attempted assassination is the fulfillment of the third secret revealed to the children by the Mother of God, while some of the faithful believe there has been a Vatican cover-up of future events so horrific that disclosure will create widespread panic and pandemonium.

To understand the source and extent of the controversy, it may prove worthwhile to review the events related to the Third Secret as they unfolded. A chronological sequence has been prepared by a 1978 group known as the Fatima Center, "a grass roots association of Catholic priests and lay people whose mission is," according to its website, "to make known the full Message of Our Lady of Fatima, and promote devotion to the Immaculate Heart of Mary."^[159]

Father Nicholas Gruner, the organization's director until he fell victim to a sudden heart attack while working in his Fatima Center office in Ontario on the night of April 29, 2015, dedicated his life to making the Message of Our Lady of Fatima known, understood, appreciated, and obeyed. His insistence that there is an organized Vatican cover-up of the Third Secret has understandably created some distance between his organization and the Church. Church officials have suspended Fr. Gruner from the priesthood. Fr. Gruner contended that his suspension was not done legally and was therefore devoid of merit. To appropriately represent all that Fr. Gruner has claimed without subjective interpretation or bias, the chronology presented by The Fatima Center is reprinted here verbatim.

- “1917, July 13, – Our Lady of Fatima gives a secret in three parts to the three shepherd children.
- 1941 – Sister Lucia reveals the first two parts of the Secret in her Memoirs, first on August 31st in her Third Memoir and then again on December 8 in her Fourth Memoir.
- 1943, October – The Bishop of Fatima gives Sister Lucy a formal, written order to write down the Third Secret. Sister Lucy tries to obey immediately, but for over two months is mysteriously unable to commit the Third Secret to paper.
- 1944, January 2, – Our Lady appears to Sister Lucy and bids her to write down the Third Secret. Our Lady asks it to be revealed to the world not later than 1960. When later asked why the people had to wait for the Third Secret to be revealed in 1960, Sister Lucy states. “Because the Blessed Virgin wishes it so,” and “It [the Third Secret] will be clearer then.” The Third Secret is later delivered in person by Sister Lucy to her confessor bishop who in turn delivers it to the Bishop of Fatima, Jose da Silva, on June 17.
- 1944, January 3, – A photograph of Bishop da Silva posing in front of the 25-line text of the Third Secret, which is enclosed in the bishop's own outer envelope, appears in Life magazine.

- 1952, September – Austrian Jesuit Father Joseph Schweigl, sent by Pope Pius XII to interrogate Sister Lucy about the Third Secret, states that the Secret is in two parts. He later confides to one of his colleagues, “I cannot reveal anything of what I learned at Fatima concerning the Third Secret, but I can say that it has two parts: one concerns the Pope. The other, logically – although I must say nothing – would have to be the continuation of the words: In Portugal, the dogma of the Faith will always be preserved.”
- 1957, March – Bishop John Vernancio holds up to a strong light the outer envelope of Bishop da Silva (photographed for Life magazine in 1949) containing an inner envelope of Sister Lucy, inside of which he sees the paper upon which is written the Third Secret. He carefully notes that the Secret is about 25 lines long and is written on a single sheet of paper with $\frac{3}{4}$ centimeter margins on both sides. On April 16, the Third Secret is received in the Vatican and placed in a safe in the papal apartments.
- 1957, December 26 – In an allusion to the contents of the Third Secret, Sister Lucy tells Fr. Fuentes, Postulator of the Cause for Beatification of Jacinta and Francisco Marto, of many nations disappearing from the face of the earth, about the crisis in the priesthood, and of many souls going to hell as a result of ignoring Our Lady of Fatima’s Message.
- 1958, October – The well-known magazine Paris-Match publishes a photo of the wooden safe in Pope Pius XII’s apartment in which was kept the Third Secret of Fatima.
- 1959, August 17 – Pope John XXIII reads the 25-line text of the Third Secret which was taken from the papal apartment and then has his personal secretary, Msgr. Loris Capovilla, write on the envelope, “I leave it to others to comment or decide.”
- 1960, February 8 – As the world anxiously awaits the full revelation of the Third Secret, the Vatican issues an anonymous press release stating that the Third Secret would not be disclosed and “would probably remain, forever, under absolute seal.” Pope John XXIII reads the 62-line text of the Third Secret that same year.

- 1963, June 27 – Pope Paul VI reads the text of the Third Secret kept in the papal apartment after the Substitute Secretary of State telephones Msgr. Capovilla, personal secretary of Pope John XXIII, to inquire as to where to find it. Capovilla testifies to this fact in his certified note of May 17, 1967. It is this text that is later identified by Cardinal Ottaviani as being 25-lines long.
- 1965, March 27 – Pope Paul VI reads the other text of the Third Secret – the one that is 62-lines long. Cardinal Bertone claims that Paul VI read the Third Secret for the first time on this date.
- 1967, May 13 – Sister Lucy meets Pope Paul VI in Fatima and asks him to release the Third Secret, but he refuses.
- 1978, October 16 – Pope John Paul II is elected Pope and reads a text of the Third Secret within days of his election, according to a statement to Associated Press in May 2000 by his spokesman, Joaquin Navarro-Valls. The statement by Navarro-Valls is contradicted by Msgr. Bertone when he claimed in June 2000 that the Pope first read the Third Secret on July 18, 1981.
- 1981, July 18 – Pope John Paul II reads the other text of the Third Secret shortly after the assassination attempt on his life in May. According to Cardinal Bertone, the Pope read for the first time the 62-line text of the Third Secret that is kept in the Holy Offices archives.
- 1984, September 10 – Bishop Alberto Cosme do Amaral, the Bishop of Fatima, declares during a question and answer session in the aula magna of the Technical University of Vienna, Austria, “It’s [The Third Secret’s] content concerns only our faith. To identify the Secret with catastrophic announcements or with a nuclear holocaust is to deform the meaning of the message. The loss of faith of a continent is worse than the annihilation of a nation; and it is true that faith is continually diminishing in Europe.”

- 1984, November 11 – Jesus magazine publishes an interview with Cardinal Ratzinger. The interview is entitled “Here is Why the Faith is in Crisis,” and is published with the Cardinal’s explicit permission. Cardinal Ratzinger reveals that he has read the Third Secret and that the Secret refers to “dangers threatening the faith and the life of the Christian and therefore (the life) of the world.” Cardinal Ratzinger says in the same interview that the Secret also refers to “the importance of the Novissimi [the Last Times]”, “the absolute importance of history”, and that “the things contained in this ‘Third Secret’ correspond to what has been announced in Scripture and has been said again and again in many other Marian apparitions, first of all that of Fatima...”
- 1995 – In a personal communication to Professor Baumgartner in Salzburg, Austria, Cardinal Mario Luigi Ciappi – the personal theologian of John Paul II (and of the four popes before him) – reveals that, “In the Third Secret it is foretold, among other things, that the great apostasy [defined as an act of refusing to continue to follow, obey, or recognize a religious faith or the abandonment of a previous loyalty] in the Church will begin at the top.”
- 1998 – Howard Dee, former Philippine ambassador to the Vatican, said in an interview with Inside the Vatican magazine that “Bishop Ito [the local bishop of Akita, now deceased] was certain Akita was an extension of Fatima, and Cardinal Ratzinger personally confirmed to me that these two messages, of Fatima and Akita, are essentially the same.”

At Akita on October 13, 1973, Our Lady said there would be a worldwide chastisement for sins in which a great part of humanity would be killed and that those who survive would envy the dead.

- 2000, June 26 – At a press conference, Archbishop Bertone publishes the 62-line text which he claims is the entire Third Secret and claims it refers to the 1981 assassination attempt of John Paul II. The 62-line text describes a vision in which the Pope (a “Bishop dressed in White”) is killed by a band of soldiers. This text, containing none of the elements described by Cardinal Ratzinger in his 1984 interview in Jesus magazine, is obviously incomplete.

- 2001, May 16 – Reflecting the growing skepticism of millions of Catholics, Mother Angelica states on her live television show that she does not believe the Vatican has revealed the entirety of the Third Secret. “Mother Angelica Live” as a live program is taken off the air by December.
- 2001, October 25 – Cardinal Ratzinger admits to a “destabilizing [of] the internal equilibrium of the Roman Curia” due to reports (following the September 11th terrorist attack on New York and the invasion of Afghanistan) of a recent letter from Sister Lucy to the Pope concerning the Third Secret and dangers to the world and the person of the Pope.
- 2001, November 17 – Archbishop Bertone (later to become Cardinal Bertone, Vatican Secretary of State) travels from Rome to Coimbra to interview Sister Lucy about the Third Secret and claims the interview went on for two hours, but the communique published by Bertone contains only 44 words alleged to be from the mouth of Sister Lucy concerning the matters of the Third Secret and the Consecration of Russia controversies.
- 2005, February 13 – Sister Lucy dies at the age of 97 in her convent in Coimbra, Portugal.
- 2006, November 22 – Renowned Italian Catholic commentator and journalist Antonio Socci publishes his book, The Fourth Secret of Fatima, which accuses Cardinal Bertone of covering up the complete Third Secret. The book cites the testimony of Archbishop Loris F. Capovilla in July 2006, to Catholic researcher Solideo Paolini, that there are two different texts and two different envelopes pertaining to the Third Secret, that one of the envelopes and its contents – the “Capovilla envelope” – was kept in the papal apartment, not in the archives of the former Holy Office where the text of the version was lodged, and that Paul VI read its contents on June 27, 1963, two years before the Bertone “official account”, which claims that Pope Paul VI first read the text of the Third Secret on March 27, 1965. The “Capovilla envelope” and text have never been produced.

- 2007, May 10 – Attempting to discredit Socci, Cardinal Bertone publishes his own book, The Last Visionary of Fatima, written in the form of an interview by a Vatican affairs reporter, Giuseppe De Carli, who poses no challenging questions but rather de facto avoids all the issues, including Msgr. Capovilla’s explosive testimony. In response, on May 12 Socci proclaims and explains publicly (in his weekly column in the Italian Journal Libero) that his own book has been vindicated by the Cardinal’s complete failure to answer it, which Socci calls a disturbing development as it means that there is indeed an ongoing cover-up on the part of the Vatican regarding the Third Secret.
- 2007, May 31 – Cardinal Bertone appears by remote live feed on the very popular Italian TV talk show Porta a Porta to again respond to Socci’s book. During this telecast Bertone displays not only the text of the version but also two separate, sealed envelopes prepared by Sister Lucy, each bearing the explicit statement in Sister Lucy’s own handwriting that “By express order of Our Lady, this envelope can be opened in 1960 only by the Cardinal Patriarch of Lisbon or the Bishop of Leiria.”

The two sealed envelopes, and other revelations by Cardinal Bertone during the telecast, further confirm the existence of two texts comprising the Third Secret in its entirety. Further, the “express order of Our Lady” noted on the envelopes flatly contradicts Cardinal Bertone’s earlier repeated representations (only said after Sr. Lucy’s death in 2005) that Sister Lucy “confessed” to him in private, unrecorded conversations that the Virgin has never given any such order.

- 2007, June 2 – Following the telecast, from which Socci has been excluded, Socci publishes his response in Libero. He declares that Bertone has not only failed to “give even one answer” to Socci’s book, but “On the contrary, he did more: He offered proof that I am right” and “that as a matter of fact the explosive part of the ‘Third Secret of Fatima’ exists yet is well hidden...”
- 2007, September 21 – Bertone stages a second television appearance for himself, this time on the Telepace network, to officially launch his own book which had been published in May and also to try yet again to discredit Socci’s book for the third time. The press are invited to attend. Socci, as a journalist, appears at the telecast location to question Cardinal Bertone. He acts in a proper way but is forcibly removed from the premises by security guards. During the telecast Bertone once again avoids any discussion of the issues. Instead, he presents a heavily-edited videotape of an interview of Archbishop Capovilla conducted by Giuseppe De Carli, a partisan of Cardinal Bertone, in which the Archbishop not only fails to deny the testimony he gave to Paolini (whose name is never mentioned) about the “Capovilla envelope,” but rather fully confirms its existence and location in the papal apartment, and the reading of its contents by Paul VI in 1963, not 1965 as the Bertone “official account” had claimed.
- 2007, September 22 – The Italian newspaper Il Giornale reports that before the guards removed Socci from the location of the telecast of September 21, he was able to play for the assembled journalists an audiotape of Capovilla’s statements to Paolini during a meeting on June 21, 2007. On the tape Capovilla is heard to state: “Besides the four pages [of the vision of the bishop dressed in white] there was also something else, an attachment, yes.” As the reporter from Il Giornale concludes, Capovilla’s statement “would confirm the thesis of the existence of a second sheet with the interpretation of the Secret” – namely, the words of the Virgin following the “etc.”

- 2007, September 23 – Socci again responds to Cardinal Bertone in his column in Libero. Socci again calmly demonstrates that Cardinal Bertone is hiding a major part of the Third Secret.
- 2008, January 25 – Christopher A. Ferrara’s book, The Secret Still Hidden, goes to press; 100,000 copies are printed. In this book, the author gives the history of the Third Secret up to that time. He proves beyond any reasonable doubt that there is a second text, still hidden by the Vatican bureaucrats, which contains the words of Our Lady which follow “In Portugal the dogma of the Faith will always be preserved, etc.” He demonstrates his proof using the facts and details provided by both Socci and Bertone. The Italian version of his book is sent to 12,000 Italian priests in June 2008. Cardinal Bertone is sent a copy of Ferrara’s book by August 2008 and Bertone acknowledges receipt of the book but refuses to answer the substance of any of Ferrara’s arguments.
- 2010, May 4 – Vatican journalist Giuseppe De Carli, co-author with Cardinal Bertone of The Last Visionary of Fatima (re-issued in 2010 under the new title, The Last Secret of Fatima), and an apologist for Cardinal Bertone’s now discredited explanations of the Third Secret, admits to the Fatima Challenge Conference before the TV cameras that “...they could have tricked me.”
- 2010, May 11 – Pope Benedict XVI, on his pilgrimage to Portugal in May, stunned the press and the Catholic world by saying that the Third Secret of Fatima tells us that “not only from the outside come the attacks against the Pope and the Church, but the sufferings of the Church come from right inside the Church, from the sin that resides inside the Church...we see this today really in a terrifying way: the greatest persecution against the Church doesn’t come from its enemies outside, but starts from the sins within the Church.”
- 2010, May 13 – Before 500,000 pilgrims, the Pope proclaimed (in reference to the Third Secret): “Whoever thinks that the prophetic mission of Fatima is concluded deceives himself.”

- 2010, July 13 – Giuseppe De Carli dies on the 93rd anniversary of the imparting of the Third Secret by Our Lady of Fatima to the three shepherd children.
- 2011, May 11 – Christopher Ferrara publishes the updated 2nd edition of the Italian version of The Secret Still Hidden. Using De Carli's statement from the year before and referring to the 2nd edition of Bertone's book, he further proves that Bertone is still hiding a major part of the Third Secret.
- 2011, July – August – Christopher Ferrara's book, The Secret Still Hidden, receives an endorsement in the August-September issue of the prestigious Inside the Vatican magazine. There the editor Robert Moynihan relates a recent conversation with the late Archbishop Pietro Sambì, who died in July. Archbishop Sambì was Papal Nuncio to the United States and thus a key attaché of the Vatican Secretariat of State under Cardinal Bertone. The report of Moynihan, in part, goes as follows:

“We [Sambì and Moynihan] were discussing the Third Secret of Fatima, the allegations that the Vatican has not published the entire text of the Third Secret as revealed to Sister Lucia, and the response of Cardinal Tarcisio Bertone, the Vatican Secretary of State, in a book where Bertone states that there is nothing more to be revealed.

“Archbishop Sambì said, ‘Excuse me.’ He got up, went out of the room, and came back with a book. ‘Here,’ he said. ‘Do you know this book? You should read it.’ It was Christopher Ferrara's The Secret Still Hidden. ‘Wait,’ I said. ‘You are the Pope's representative in the US, and you are urging me to read a book that questions what the Secretary of State wrote?’

Sambì replied: ‘All I am saying is that there are interesting things worth reading in this book. And in the end, we are all after the truth, aren't we? The truth is the important thing..."

The Fatima Center further notes that the sole surviving visionary herself was silenced by the Vatican when in 1960 it "imposed some very strict conditions of isolation on Sister Lucy, the very same year that the Third Secret was to be revealed to the world...and wasn't." In fact, from that time, and right up until the hour of her death, Sister Lucia was "forbidden to speak about Fatima without direct permission from the Holy See," permission that was never granted.

Prior to the order of silence, however, Sister Lucia spoke to Father Augustine Fuentes. In a conversation took place in 1957, Sister Lucia said,

"The devil is about to wage a decisive battle with the Blessed Virgin, as he knows what it is that offends God the most, and which in a short space of time will gain for him the greatest number of souls. Thus, the devil does everything to overcome souls consecrated to God, because in this way he will succeed in leaving the souls of the faithful abandoned by their leaders, thereby the more easily will he seize them."

Though not able to speak of the Third Secret openly after 1960, Sister Lucia wrote of it in 1969 to one of her priest-nephews, saying, "do not let yourself be deceived." In 1970 Lucia wrote to Mother Martins, a former companion with the Dorothean Sisters, noting:

"It is painful to see such a great disorientation in so many who occupy places of responsibility...the devil has succeeded in infiltrating evil under cover of good, and the blind are beginning to guide others, as the Lord tells us in His Gospel, and souls are letting themselves be deceived."

Clearly, in 1957 Sister Lucia recognized the devil's attempts to wage battle and by 1971 had recognized his early successes. In fact, The Fatima Center notes that many publications, both secular and Catholic, have expressed, not only concern, but skepticism about the Vatican's transparency on this issue. According to Fr. Gruner, even the Washington Post, a secular publication of the United States free press, expressed doubts in a July 1, 2000 edition, about the Catholic Church's official interpretation of the Third Secret. "There is every reason to believe," Gruner contends, "that the Vatican is hiding a text of the Third Secret – the words of Our Lady which would explain how the Pope in the vision comes to be executed by soldiers outside a ruined city filled with corpses – which, when revealed in full, has the power to bring about the Triumph of the Immaculate Heart of Mary.”

On May 12, 1982, Fr. Gruner explains, Sister Lucia expressed her concerns in a letter to Pope John Paul II, writing,

“The third part of the secret refers to Our Lady’s words: If not [Russia] will spread her errors throughout the world, causing wars and persecutions against the Church. The good will be martyred; the Holy Father will have much to suffer; various nations will be annihilated.

The third part of the secret, that you are so anxious to know, is a symbolic revelation, referring to this part of the Message, conditioned by whether we accept or not what the Message itself asks of us: If My requests are heeded, Russia will be converted, and there will be peace; if not she will spread her errors throughout the world, etc.

Since we did not heed this appeal of the Message, we see that it has been fulfilled, Russia has invaded the world with her errors and if we have not yet seen the complete fulfillment of the final part of this prophecy, we are going towards it with great strides... If we do not reject the path of sin, hatred, revenge, injustice, violations of the rights of the human person, immorality and violence, etc.

And let us not say that it is God who is punishing us in this way; on the contrary, it is people themselves who are preparing their own punishment. In his kindness God warns us and calls us to the right path, while respecting the freedom he has given us; hence people are responsible.”

The Fatima Center notes the importance of Sister Lucia’s failure to reference the Pontiff’s assassination attempt as the fulfillment of the Third Secret though it had occurred only a year prior. In fact, she specifically writes that “we are going towards it [the fulfillment of the final part of the prophesy] with great strides.” The very next day, Pope John Paul was to visit Fatima to consecrate the world to the Immaculate Heart of Mary, yet, it is not the consecration, but rather the annihilation of nations with which Sister Lucia expressed concern.

The Bishop of Fatima, Alberto Cosme do Amaral, addressed a session at the Technical University of Vienna, Austria on September 10, 1984 about the Third Secret of Fatima. His comments were later published in the Mensagem de Fatima as follows:

“The Secret of Fatima speaks neither of atomic bombs, nor nuclear warheads, nor Pershing missiles, nor SS-20s. Its content concerns only our faith. To identify the Secret with catastrophic announcements or with a nuclear holocaust is to deform the meaning of the message. The loss of faith of a continent is worse than the annihilation of a nation; and it is true that faith is continually diminishing in Europe.”^[160]

Shortly after these remarks were made, the Bishop was pressured to withdraw them, which he compliantly did. However, in 1995, after his retirement, he reaffirmed his Vienna comments in a public interview adding, “Before I asserted in Vienna [in 1984] that the Third Secret concerned only our Faith and the loss of Faith, I had consulted Sister Lucy and first obtained her approval.”^[161]

Then Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger, head of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, was interviewed by Jesus magazine, a publication of the Pauline Sisters, on November 11, 1984. During the interview, Ratzinger acknowledged that the Third Secret contains “religious prophesy” which cannot be revealed “to prevent [its] being mistaken for a quest for the sensational.” Yet, on June 26, 2000, Ratzinger noted that the “Third Secret refers only to events which had already happened (culminating in the attempted assassination of the Pope in 1981) and contains no prophecy concerning the future.” He went on to say that “the Third Secret could be the result of Sister Lucy’s imagination alone.” The dichotomy of those two statements add to the confusion.^[162] Cardinal Ratzinger, just two years later, would become Pope Benedict XVI, the 265th leader of the Catholic church.

It is important to note that Fr. Gruner was censured by the Catholic Church for his failure to abide by an order of “his legitimate ecclesiastical superior to undertake some action.” Following a warning that “failure to do so would result in his suspension a divinis...he did not undertake the action required of him and subsequently his competent ecclesiastical superior followed through with the threatened censure.” Fr. Gruner was ordered, in part, to cease his work and “return to his diocese of incardination” in Avellino, Italy, ^[163] an order with which he had failed to comply at the time of his death.

Fr. Andrew Apostoli, C.F.R., author of Fatima For Today: The Urgent Marian Message of Hope, disputes those like Fr. Gruner, whose opinion clearly differs from the official view of the Church regarding the interpretation of the Third Secret. In his book, Apostoli addresses the dissenters by listing the objections to two distinct but related controversies: the controversy over the Consecration of Russia to the Immaculate Heart of Mary, and the controversy over the Third Secret. He responds to each objection with an explanation representative of the position of the Catholic Church. The focus here is to the responses related to objections regarding the controversy over the Third Secret. As was the case with Fr. Gruner’s timeline, Fr. Apostoli’s listing of objections and responses to the objections regarding this controversy is presented here in its entirety:

“Objection: The original Third Secret was written on one sheet of paper.

Many clerics who were familiar with the original text, including bishops who worked with popes John XXIII and Paul VI, said that the Third Secret was written on a single sheet of paper. (e.g., Cardinal Alfredo Ottaviani, who read the Third Secret with Pope John XXIII.)

The controversy came about when on June 26, 2000, the Vatican released a copy of Sister Lucia’s handwritten text in a four-page format. Though there are several possible ways a single sheet of paper can be turned into more than one page (written on both sides, folded and written on multiple sides, etc.) or copied onto more than one page, some critics said that the Vatican copy could not have been made from the authentic text and that some other document exists that contains the real Third Secret.

The Vatican copy of Sister Lucia’s handwritten manuscript appears in the document The Message of Fatima prepared by the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith. In the introduction, the secretary of the Congregation at the time, Archbishop Bertone, stated: ‘There is only one manuscript which is here reproduced photostatically,’ Sister Lucia herself confirmed the validity of the Vatican text. Archbishop Bertone and Bishop Seraphim de Sousa of Leiria met with Sister Lucia at her Carmelite convent in Coimbra, Portugal, on April 27, 2000. The Archbishop presented two envelopes to Sister Lucia. The first or outer envelope contained the second envelope, which held the Third Secret. Touching it with her fingers, Sister Lucia said, 'This is my letter.' Then, while reading it, she said, 'This is my writing.' When asked if this document was the one and only Third Secret, Sister Lucia answered, 'Yes, this is the Third Secret, and I never wrote any other.'

We have additional proof from Sister Lucia that the photocopy of the Third Secret was authentic. She met again with Archbishop Bertone on November 17, 2001. A communique about that meeting carried this most important point:

With reference to the third part of the secret of Fatima, [Sister Lucia] affirmed that she had attentively read and meditated upon the booklet published by the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith [The Message of Fatima] and confirmed everything that was written there. To whoever imagines some part of the secret has been hidden, she replied, 'everything has been published; no secret remains.' To those who speak and write of new revelations, she said: 'There is no truth in this. If I had received new revelations, I would have told no one, but I would have communicated them directly to the Holy Father.'

Objection: The text of the Third Secret released by the Vatican contains no words attributed to the Blessed Virgin Mary.

The message of the Third Secret was not conveyed in words by our Lady, but in the various visions the children saw. Our Lady spoke simply by her actions, as when she prevented the fire from the flaming sword of the angel from touching the earth and consuming it. Archbishop Bertone explained:

The part of the text where the Virgin speaks in the first person wasn't censored, for the simple reason that it never existed. The text those people talk about just doesn't exist. I am not toeing some party line here. I'm basing my statement on Sister Lucia's own direct confirmation that the Third Secret is none other than the text that was published in the year 2000.

Objection: The Vatican's copy of the Third Secret contains no information about a nuclear holocaust, a great apostasy, or the satanic infiltration of the Catholic Church.

This objection is largely the result of the disappointment that some people felt when the Third Secret was finally revealed. Cardinal Ratzinger (now Pope Benedict XVI) predicted this disappointment. 'A careful reading of the [Third Secret]', he wrote, 'will probably prove disappointing or surprising after all the speculation it has stirred. No great mystery is revealed; nor is the future unveiled.'

The years of waiting for the revelation of the Third Secret combined with the discretion of the Vatican built up in many people's minds the idea that the Third Secret predicted some catastrophe, like a nuclear war, a world-wide natural disaster or a great tribulation within the Church. Some people even developed a 'conspiracy mentality', in which they assumed the faithful were not being told the truth about what was going to happen in the Church and in the world. Some critics have accused Vatican officials of publishing a fraudulent Third Secret or of withholding important information. The problem here is that no one has ever seen any other Third Secret of Fatima than the one that has already been released to the public. The burden of proof lies with the critics. They must produce another document or at least reliable witnesses who have seen and read it. At this point, none have come forward.

There is one final authority who should be quoted. He is Archbishop Loris Capovilla, who once served as private secretary to Pope John XXIII. He had read the Third Secret along with Pope John XXIII and actually held the manuscript in his hands. Certain people have claimed that he had said there were 'two texts' of the Third Secret. However, Archbishop Capovilla made the following clear and definitive statement:

There are not two truths from Fatima, nor is there any fourth secret. The text which I read in 1959 is the same that was distributed by the Vatican...I have had enough of these conspiracy theories. It just isn't true. I read it, I presented it to the Pope and we resealed the envelope.'

As for the doomsday predictions, we know that a terrible worldwide natural catastrophe or a nuclear war could happen, but that would be the result of our sins. This is why we must heed our Lady's message for prayer and penance. We also know that with the spread of secularism and religious indifference, many Catholics are no longer practicing their faith. But again, the remedy for this is prayer, penance and a fervent Christian life, as our Lady requested at Fatima. As for any triumph of Satan over the Church, this is impossible. Jesus himself said so when he told Saint Peter, 'You are Peter, and on this rock I will build my Church, and the gates of Hades shall not prevail against it' (Mt 16:18). It will not be Satan who will conquer, but Jesus with his Immaculate Mother who will crush the head of the serpent.

Objection: The text released by the Vatican is not written in the form of a letter.

Some of the clerics who lived at the time the Third Secret was written mentioned it in terms of a letter, but this was not an emphatic point they were making. The photocopy of the original manuscript released by the Holy See does not have a formal address to the Bishop, however it does have a certain likeness to a letter. The document begins with a title like those in Lucia's memoirs and has a kind of introduction that makes reference to the Bishop:

[title] The third part of the secret revealed at the Cova da Iria-Fatima, on 13 July 1917.

[Introduction] I write in obedience to you, my God, who command me to do so through his Excellency the Bishop of Leiria and through your Most Holy Mother and mine.

Archbishop Bertone said that the point about the document being written in the form of a signed letter is not very important. He said of some of his critics that 'they look at everything through the magnifying glass of their own biases. As a result they latch on to the most unbelievable things.'

As a final plea, let us set aside our doubts and support our Holy Father in the present struggle with our prayers, our fidelity, our service and our love! This would be very pleasing to the Immaculate Heart of Mary! I am absolutely confident that the Holy Father has fully conveyed Our Lady of Fatima's message to us!"^[164]

PART VII
THE MESSAGE OF FATIMA
ONE HUNDRED YEARS
LATER

World events in 2017 have deteriorated even beyond what they were when Our Lady of the Rosary delivered her message to the three innocent shepherd children of Fatima. In 1917, the countries of the world were involved in a great war, millions were dying, not by war alone, but by the ravages of disease. Organized religion, specifically Christianity and Catholicism, were under assault by various agents of government. People were offending God greatly by turning away from Him and blaspheming His Mother.

Today, various countries of the world are again fighting wars with the prospect for another great war on the horizon that has the potential to claim the lives of millions more than the previous world wars. We are ravaged by diseases both old and new, and people the world over continue to offend God by denying Him and blaspheming His Mother.

Consequently, Russia continues to spread her errors throughout the world as Our Lady foretold and we continue to see an assault on Christianity everywhere, including within the borders of the United States of America. In many countries, Christians are tortured for their beliefs. Richard Wurmbrand, a Romanian pastor writes of the fourteen years he spent in Communist prisons for the crime of “fervent belief in Jesus Christ and his public witness concerning his faith.” In Tortured for Christ, Wurmbrand recounts his “years of periodic physical torture, constant suffering from hunger and cold, the anguish of brainwashing and mental cruelty.”^[165]

His experience is not singular. Hundreds of thousands of Christians are forced to “meet in homes, in basements, and in the woods.” Yet, the people of the “underground church” have tenacious faith and remarkable endurance.

Even the United States, with its constitutional right to practice religion without interference from the government, has seen Christianity come under assault over the past three quarters of a century. It begins with subtle changes that appear outrageous, but harmless, to a majority people. Often euphemisms are used to mask the truth of what is really happening. Murder of innocent children by abortion is called “Choice.” The removal of any reference to God or His works in public schools, even those references that are historical in nature, is called “separation of church and state.” Death of the elderly due to lack of proper care is called “prudent health care,” and the medically assisted suicide of those who are sick or just plain tired of living is referred to as death with “dignity.”

But over time, as we have seen, some of these outrageous acts are upheld by the courts and become the law of the land. The following chronology is a small sampling of events that have occurred in the United States over the past 60 years. It graphically demonstrates how desensitized America has become to the erosion of moral values. It is that erosion that tends, over time, to bring this nation and the entire world on a course that virtually no one wants to travel. Each act, however small and innocuous it may seem, may bring the United States and the world one step closer to the retribution promised by Our Lady in her message to the children of Fatima.

- 1958 – Steven Engel, a Jewish New Yorker, joins with other parents to file suit against the State of New York over a state-endorsed prayer that was being recited in schools. The prayer read simply, “Almighty God, we acknowledge our dependence upon Thee, and we beg Thy blessings upon us, our parents, our teachers and our Country.”^[166]
- June 25, 1962 – The United States Supreme Court issues a decision siding with Engel and ruling that the required prayer was inconsistent with the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment of the Constitution which reads, “Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof.”^[167]
- 1963 – The US Supreme Court banned bible reading and overturned a state law banning the teaching of evolution essentially meaning that the theory of evolution and not the theory of creationism must be taught in public schools.^[168]
- 1971 – Norma McCorvey, aka Jane Roe sues Dallas County District Attorney Henry Wade, who enforced a Texas law that prohibited abortion, except to save a woman’s life.
- January 22, 1973 – The US Supreme Court affirms the legality of a woman’s right to have an abortion under Section one of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution which reads, “All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.” In his majority opinion, Justice Blackmun noted that, for nearly all such references in the Constitution, "use of the word is such that it has application only postnatally. None indicates, with any assurance, that it has any possible prenatal application."^[169]

- 1987 – American artist and photographer Andres Serrano submitted his work, entitled Immersion (Piss Christ) to the Southeastern Center of Contemporary Art's (SCCA) “Awards in the Visual Arts” competition. The work is a very large photograph of a small plastic crucifix submerged in a glass of the artist's urine. The work was awarded a prize by the SCCA which is sponsored by the National Endowment for the Arts, a US Government Agency. In 1989, the same piece was exhibited in, and favorably received by, the Stux Gallery in New York where the artist received $15,000 for the work, including $5,000 from the government agency. Catholic nun and art critic, Sister Wendy Beckett, stated in a televised interview that she “regarded the work as not blasphemous but a statement on ‘this is what we are doing to Christ.’” During a retrospective of Serrano's work at the National Gallery of Victoria (NGV) in 1997, George Pell, the Archbishop of Melbourne, was denied an injunction from the Supreme Court of Victoria that would have prevented the NGV from publicly displaying the work.^[170]
- 1996 – Artist Chris Ofili debuted a painting entitled “Holy Virgin Mary” which depicts a black Virgin Mary splattered with elephant dung and laden with pornographic pictures, at an exhibition at the Brooklyn Museum of Art. The Catholic League led a protest of the painting but Fr. George Wilson, a Jesuit ecclesiologist from Cincinnati defends the portrait of Our Blessed Mother surrounded with pictures of vaginas and anuses, spattered with dung and tried “desperately to put critics of the painting on the defensive.” Despite the controversial nature of the work, it was sold at Christie’s London auction for $4.6 million.^[171]

- 2007 – San Diego, California high school math teacher Bradley Johnson was ordered to remove his patriotic and faith-themed banners from his classroom after years of display. The banners carried such objectionable slogans as “In God We Trust,” “God Bless America,” and “God Shed His Grace on Thee.”^[172]
- August 20, 2008 – The Democrat National Committee refuses to invite the Archbishop of Denver, Charles J. Chaput, to pray or speak at the upcoming Democrat National Convention to be held in Denver. Former Boston Mayor Ray Flynn calls it a “serious oversight” and an “insult” to the values of pro-life Catholics.^[173]
- January 11, 2012 – “The US Supreme Court ruled that the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission had overstepped its bounds in applying secular standards to a minister of religion called to work in a church school.”^[174]
- February 2012 – The US Conference of Catholic Bishops declared that the “small alteration” that President Obama announced requiring “all health-care plans in the US to cover sterilizations is “unacceptable” because, among other things, it does not protect the freedom-of-conscience rights of secular for-profit employees, or secular non-profit employers, or religious insurers, or self-insured religious employees, or individual Americans.” The Act forced Catholic institutions to provide birth control, abortion drugs and other contraceptive services and would require Catholic institutions to abandon their doctrines on reproductive issues or face catastrophic fines forcing them to close hospitals that care for about a sixth of U.S. patients.^[175]
- March 13, 2012 – The “2012 International Narcotics Control Strategy Report” is released to the public and lists 190 nations, each classified by one of three categories: “primary concern;” “of concern;” and “monitored.” The Vatican was ranked with Poland, Egypt, Chile and 67 other countries as being “of concern,” the middle category. The Obama State Department said the “Vatican made the list because it is considered vulnerable to laundering and because it had recently put a program into place to prevent financial abuses.”^[176]

- March 27, 2012 – The US Supreme Court upheld the federal appeals court ruling that prevents teachers from displaying on a classroom wall any statement of religious views such as those displayed by San Diego high school teacher Bradley Johnson. However, a study done that same month concluded that there is a double standard when teaching about religion in public schools. According to the study, the courts are “removing all signs of Judeo-Christianity from public schools. Not only must prayer be prohibited, but a cross and the Ten Commandments must be removed or covered up, a valedictorian is banned from thanking God for his help, a football coach is prohibited from bowing his head during a student-led pre-game prayer, the singing of Christmas carols is banned, and school calendars are required to recognize a “winter holiday” instead of a “Christmas holiday.” There is also the complete omission of the history of the Founding Fathers’ public recognition of Christianity.” In fact, the study concluded that Christianity is being targeted while “an analysis of 38 textbooks used in the sixth through twelfth grades in public schools found that since the 1990’s, discussions of Islam are taking up more and more pages, while the space devoted to Judaism and Christianity has simultaneously decreased.”^[177]
- March 30, 2012 – A Catholic Group was ordered to leave Vanderbilt University after refusing to comply with the University’s non-discrimination clause. The non-discrimination clause requires that campus Christian groups (among others) must allow non-believers to serve in leadership roles. One of the larger groups on campus is Vanderbilt Catholic, but at the end of the year, that group will no longer be allowed on campus.^[178]

- April 26, 2017 – A high-school math teacher in Florida banned Christian ninth-grade students from wearing cross necklaces in class. The teacher called Christian crosses “gang symbols” and actually “forced” a ninth-grader to remove her cross telling the young girl the cross was “disrespectful.”^[179]

These few examples demonstrate a gradual but consistent diminution of the moral fiber of the American society and a destruction of the Judeo-Christian principles on which this nation was founded. There is clearly an assault on Christianity generally, and on Catholicism specifically, that has taken hold in this country despite its great constitutional experiment of religious freedom first conceived on this continent by Roger Williams at Rhode Island and Providence Plantations. These examples also provide proof that the assault comes not only from outside the Church, but also from within the faith, as Sister Lucia warned Pope John Paul II.

Ryszard Legutko, who spent forty years in communist-controlled Poland, noted that unlike post-Reformation Europe, religion in the United States was not under the control of the throne because of the separation of church and state. However, he quickly adds, “...until recently, this was widely believed to mean only that there is no [government] established religion. The idea that religion has no access to the public square is a recent phenomenon.”^[180] It is a fact, Legutko continues, that the “United States was founded on Christian principles and that people who are elected to the public functions are religious people, sometimes with very strong religious views, and that these views affect their political opinion. It’s not that religious truth is to be translated literally into policy, but it has a role to play.”^[181]

Noted author and motivational speaker Dr. John R. Wood, in his book entitled, Ordinary Lives, Extraordinary Mission: 5 Steps to Winning the War Within, notes that saints, for the most part, are ordinary people who have done extraordinary things. He explains that there is a saint within each of us and all we need to do is to bring it out. A remarkable concept to say the least, but the three children of Fatima, two of which have already become saints, provide a fine example of how this concept works. They witnessed a miraculous Apparition and changed their lives accordingly. Thousands of others witnessed the same miracle of the sun performed by Our Lady of Fatima. How many of those lives were irrevocably altered as a result and how many resumed their own personal struggle of their daily lives soon after? We witness acts of a miraculous nature nearly every day but we hardly take notice. The birth of a child, the cure of the stricken, the reformed life of the addicted, the sunrise, the sunset and all that happens in between. Too often the personal struggles involved in earning a living and/or raising a family take precedence over the observance of those daily signs.

John Wood continues,

“These are difficult times for the Catholic Church and the United States of America. There is only one solution to the problems we face...saints! Becoming a saint is a choice, and we must begin choosing the saint within each of us. The biggest crisis of our time is not economic, health care, or vocations, but is an identity crisis. We have forgotten our mission to become saints and forgotten our story as Catholics. We must rediscover that mission and hold each other accountable to accepting responsibility for that mission. Business as usual is not going to cut it. We need heroic Catholicism. We must stop talking, and start walking...stop crying, and start sweating...stop defining ourselves by our sins, and start realizing we are saints in the making! Everything we need to accomplish our mission is in the Church...but the Catholic Church is a sleeping giant. It is time we wake the sleeping giant!

Each passing day brings an instability in the world that drives us closer than ever before to a cataclysmic war between intolerant and quick-to-act nations with fundamental value differences. One recent headline of Sunday July 9, 2017 read, “Kim Jong-un warns Donald Trump He is Pushing North Korea to the Brink of Nuclear War.”^[182] In these dangerous times, who will lead us in the prayers and sacrifices demanded of us by Our Lady of Fatima. If, in fact, the Third Secret of Fatima was fulfilled with the 1981 attempt on the life of Pope John Paul II, it still does not mean the security of our faith. If the Third Secret has yet to come to fulfillment, we must be ever mindful of the consequences of our inactions and of the things Our Lady requires of us if the cataclysmic fulfillment is to be avoided.

CONCLUSION

Pope John Paul II was “convinced that the contemporary world is engaged in an enormous struggle between the forces of good and evil, between a living faith in the Supreme Being and the absolute rejection of God.” He commented shortly after the assassination attempt that the message of “Fatima is more important now than in 1917!”^[183]

Pope John Paul II didn’t develop that opinion only after the failed attempt on his life. He expressed similar sentiments as a Cardinal in 1978. He was quoted in a November 9, 1978 article in the New York City News as saying:

“We are today before the greatest combat that mankind has ever seen. I do not believe that the Christian community has completely understood it. We are today before the final struggle between the Church and the anti-Church, between the Gospel and the anti-Gospel.”

It is perhaps Our Lady’s 1917 warning about Communist Russia and the spreading of its errors throughout the world to which the Saintly Pontiff may have been referring in those remarks. Our Lady predicted that “Communism would cause wars and persecutions of the Church, in which the good would be martyred, the Holy Father would have much to suffer and various nations would be annihilated.”^[184] Some, including Pope John Paul II, believed that these events were characterized by the turbulence of the twentieth century. Others, as we have seen, believe the culmination of Mary’s prophecy has yet to be realized.

Regardless of individual beliefs on the fulfillment of Our Lady’s Third Secret, it is very evident today that the message of Fatima has not been heeded by the world, not even by all the 1.2 billion Catholics in the world, and that Russia has not been converted, and that her errors are spreading across the globe reaching even to within the borders of these United States of America.

Fr. Andrew Apostoli, C.F.R., in his book, Fatima for Today: The Urgent Marian Message of Hope, very succinctly provides a list of the errors or sins which Our Lady of Fatima instructed us to reject. They include:

- “The sin of blasphemy against God, our Lady, the angels and saints and those things that are sacred because they are associated with honor and worship of God. Such offenses express an actual, even if indirect, hatred of God.” These sins emanate from the atheism that Communism spawns.

- “Sins against life: abortion, euthanasia, embryonic stem cell research, assisted suicide and the whole ‘culture of death.’ Add to that list murder, physical abuse, gang wars, ethnic and racial cleansing, and all the other violent crimes that come from hatred in our hearts.” Fr. Apostoli recognizes the relationship between Communism and the aforementioned culture of death since Communist Russia does “not recognize any God-given dignity to human life. A person was important only to the degree that he was useful to the state. Therefore, Russia became the first Christian nation in the world to permit abortion...Communism teaches the radical equality of the sexes. Women in Russia, and later in Communist China, were required to enter the workforce in service to the state. What was forced upon the peoples taken over by Communism, was unwittingly adopted in western Europe and the United States in the name of equality.... The movement for so-called women’s liberation in these countries insisted that women could not take their equal place among men in the workforce unless they had complete control over their ability to reproduce and that control included the power to kill their unborn children.

As abortion has lessened the dignity of life, euthanasia to eliminate the terminally ill, the handicapped and the elderly has gained acceptance. In an atheistic society, these people’s lives are seen to have no value, but only constitute a drain on the state’s resources.”

- “Another cause of the culture of death, which was fostered by Communism, is the attack on the traditional family.... The family is the building block of society. If families are strong, the society is strong; if they are weak, then the society will be weak.... Karl Marx saw the traditional family as an enemy of freedom and equality.... This notion that the traditional family was the enemy of equality spread to Europe and the United States, where war was declared on those that supported traditional marriage.... Little by little, the legal supports beneath marriage have been stripped away. First divorce was legalized, next cohabitating couples were given legal benefits that once were only granted to married couples.... When marriage is no longer honored and no longer understood as the only proper place for sexual relations, then sexual immorality runs rampant and weakens family life even further. Here we must recall our Lady's words to little Jacinta that more souls are lost by sins of impurity than by any other."^[185]

In his book, The Demon in Democracy, Ryszard Legutko notes the various similarities between liberal democracy and communism saying, "... what makes these two systems similar is that both liberal democrats and the communists politicized the entirety of social, individual and communal life. The communists believed the entire social life, even the arts and philosophy, should be permeated by the spirit of communism. The liberal democrats do exactly the same. That is, they believe that everything in the liberal democratic society should be liberal democrat. This aggressive attitude," Legutko points out, "aims to imbue the entire human existence with one set of ideas. In both cases, it implies that you must cut off human heritage and everything that came before in the realm of ideas.... During the last decades, deliberate policies of governments and institutions have also dismantled and redefined the family in order to create a new type of society – a new man. This too, is something that reminds us of the communist regime. To establish a new communist society, the family was the first object of attack."^[186]

Despite the pessimistic tone used in describing the spread of Russia's errors, there is reason for great hope. Our Lady has provided the answer and doing the things she prescribed will cause God to abandon his plans for punishment through the infliction of a great war, the annihilation of nations and the suffering of the Holy Father. Our Lady of Fatima told us very clearly that we must reject sin, say the Rosary every day, make the five First Saturday devotions and sacrifice for the conversion of sinners. In doing these things, Russia will be converted, God will stop being offended and many souls will be saved from the fires of hell.

It doesn't sound too difficult. But what impact can just a few good people with a personal devotion to the Immaculate Hearts of Jesus and Mary have on a world of almost 7.4 billion? God himself provides the answer to that question in Genesis 18:32 in which God promised Abraham that he would abandon his plan to destroy Sodom if just 10 righteous people could be found there. Each of us holds the key to salvation both of the earth and of our immortal soul. It is up to us how we use that key.

Sister Lucia dos Santos died of old age at the Carmelite convent of St. Teresa of Coimbra in central Portugal at 5:25 PM local time on Sunday February 13, 2005. Her death fulfilled the promise of Our Lady to the children in saying that Francisco and Jacinta would go to heaven soon, but Lucia would be here for a long time. Though she was the last of the surviving visionaries of Our Lady of Fatima in 1917, the message of Our Lady as given to Lucia and her cousins lives on throughout the world today as does Her promise of hope.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Books

Apostoli, Fr. Andrew, C.F.R. Fatima For Today: The Urgent Message of Hope. San Francisco: Ignatius Press, 2010.

Dos Santos, Sr. Lucia, Fatima in Lucia's Own Words. The Remembrances of Sister Lucia, 20th Edition, 2016.

Kelly, Matthew, The Four Signs of a Dynamic Catholic: How Engaging 1% of Catholics Could Change the World: Kentucky, Beacon Publishing, 2012.

King, Greg and Woolmans, Sue. The Assassination of the Archduke: Sarajevo 1914 and the Romance That Changed the World, New York: St. Martin's Press, 2013

McGlynn, Fr. Thomas, O.P. Vision of Fatima. Manchester: Sophia Institute Press, 1948, Reprinted 2017.

Walsh, William Thomas, Our Lady of Fatima. New York: Doubleday, 1947, Image Book, 1954

Wood, Dr. John R., Ordinary Lives Extraordinary Mission: 5 Steps to Winning the War Within, Kentucky: Beacon Publishing, 2012.

Internet Sources

EWTN 100 Years of Fatima. "Message of Fatima." 2017.

<https://www.ewtn.com/fatima/message.asp>

EWTN 100 Years of Fatima. "The Secret of Fatima." 2017.

<https://www.ewtn.com/fatima/secret-of-fatima.asp>

EWTN 100 Years of Fatima. "First and Second Part of the Secret." 2017. <https://www.ewtn.com/fatima/first-and-second-part-of-the-secret.asp>

EWTN 100 Years of Fatima. "Third Part of the Secret." 2017.

<https://www.ewtn.com/fatima/third-part-of-the-secret.asp>

EWTN 100 Years of Fatima. "Interpretation of the Secret." 2017.

<https://www.ewtn.com/fatima/interpretation-of-the-secret.asp>

EWTN 100 Years of Fatima. “Theological Commentary on the Message.” Taken from Romano, EWTN 100 Years of Fatima. “Children of Fatima.” 2017.

<https://www.ewtn.com/fatima/children.asp>

EWTN 100 Years of Fatima. “Blessed Francisco Marto.” 2017.

<https://www.ewtn.com/fatima/francisco.asp>

EWTN 100 Years of Fatima. “Blessed Jacinta Marto.” 2017.

<https://www.ewtn.com/fatima/jacinta-marto.asp>

EWTN 100 Years of Fatima. “Servant of God Lucia Santos.” 2017.

<https://www.ewtn.com/fatima/lucia-santos.asp>

Society of Saint Pius. “Fatima Apparitions: The Angel of Peace.”

2017. https://sspx.org/en/fatima_angel_apparitions_peace

Botanical. “Holm Oak: Characteristics of a Holm Oak.” 2017.

<http://www.botanical-online.com/english/holmoak.htm>

The Miracle Hunter. “The Messages of Fatima.” 2017.

http://miraclehunter.com/marian_apparitions/messages/fatima_mess

The Holy Rosary: Fatima Apparitions. “Apparitions of the Angel.”

2017. <http://www.theholyrosetary.org/fatimaapparitions>

Wikipedia. “Fatima, Portugal.” 2017.

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/F%C3%A1tima,_Portugal

Wikipedia. “Assassination of Archduke Franz Ferdinand of Austria.”

History Channel. “Archduke Franz Ferdinand Assassinated.” 2017.

<http://www.history.com/this-day-in-history/archduke-franz-ferdinand-assassinated>

Greenspan, Jesse, History Channel. “The Assassination of Archduke Franz Ferdinand, 100 Years Ago” June 26, 2014.

<http://www.history.com/news/the-assassination-of-archduke-franz-ferdinand-100-years-ago>

Khan, Sal – Kahn Academy. “Gavrilo Princip assassinated Austro-

Hungarian Archduke Franz Ferdinand, setting off World War I.” 2017. <https://www.khanacademy.org/humanities/world-history/euro-hist/world-war-i-tutorial/v/assassination-of-franz-ferdinand-by-gavrilo-princip>

L'Osservatore, June 28, 2000. 2017.

<https://www.ewtn.com/fatima/theology-and-commentary-on-the-message.asp>

Gruner, Fr. Nicholas. “History of the Secret.” Fatima Network News. 2017. <http://www.fatima.org/f4b/thirdsecret/default.asp>

Gruner, Fr. Nicholas. “Third Secret Timeline.” Fatima Network News. 2017. http://www.fatima.org/f4b/3rd_secret_timeline.pdf

Gruner, Fr. Nicholas. “Controversy and the Third Secret.” Fatima Network News. 2017. http://www.fatima.org/f4b/3rd_secret_trans.pdf

Gruner, Fr. Nicholas. “Sister Lucy Silenced.” Fatima Network News. 2017. http://www.fatima.org/f4b/sister_lucy_silenced.pdf

Gruner, Fr. Nicholas. “Cardinal Sodano Reads A Text on the “Third Secret.” Fatima Network News. May 13, 2000.

<http://www.fatima.org/new/newsviews/thirdsecret01.asp>

Gruner, Fr. Nicholas. “Third Secret ‘Commentary’ Raises Concerns Over Whitewash.” Fatima Network News. June 21, 2000.

<http://www.fatima.org/news/newsviews/thirdsecret05.asp>

Gruner, Fr. Nicholas. “Third Secret ‘Our Plans For Rome in Our Lady’s Name....’” Fatima Network News. June 27, 2017.

<http://www.fatima.org/news/newsviews/thirdsecret06.asp>

Gruner, Fr. Nicholas. “‘The Fatima Crusader’ Discloses Vatican Cover-up of Third Secret.” Fatima Network News. June 21, 2000.

<http://www.fatima.org/news/newsviews/thirdsecret08.asp>

Gruner, Fr. Nicholas. “The Third Secret Handwritten Text Essential.” Fatima Network News. 2017.

<http://www.fatima.org/news/newsviews/interview.asp>

Gruner, Fr. Nicholas. “June 26, 2000 Hoax.” Fatima Network

News. 2017.

<http://www.fatima.org/news/newsvIEWS/thirdsecret/hoax.asp>

Gruner, Fr. Nicholas. "Reply to the Hoax." Fatima Network News.

2017. <http://www.fatima.org/thirdsecret/replyhoax.asp>

Gruner, Fr. Nicholas. "Published Testimony: Father Fuentes (1957)." Fatima Network News. 2017.

<http://www.fatima.org/thirdsecret/frfuentes.asp>

Gruner, Fr. Nicholas. "Published Testimony: Nuews Europa (1963)." Fatima Network News. 2017.

<http://www.fatima.org/thirdsecret/neueseuropa.asp>

Gruner, Fr. Nicholas. "Published Testimony: Father Alonso (1975-1981)." Fatima Network News. 2017

<http://www.fatima.org/thirdsecret/fralonso.asp>

Gruner, Fr. Nicholas. "Published Testimony: Pope John Paul II in Fulda, Germany (1980)." Fatima Network News. 2017.

<http://www.fatima.org/thirdsecret/fulda.asp>

Gruner, Fr. Nicholas. "Published Testimony: Sister Lucy's Letter (1982)." Fatima Network News. 2017.

<http://www.fatima.org/thirdsecret/sisterlucy.asp>

Gruner, Fr. Nicholas. "Published Testimony: (September 10, 1984) The Bishop of Fatima." Fatima Network News. 2017.

<http://www.fatima.org/thirdsecret/bishfatima.asp>

Gruner, Fr. Nicholas. "Published Testimony: Cardinal Ratzinger (November 1984)." Fatima Network News. 2017.

<http://www.fatima.org/thirdsecret/ratzinger.asp>

Gruner, Fr. Nicholas. "Published Testimony: (1930s-2003) Some Other Witnesses." Fatima Network News. 2017.

<http://www.fatima.org/thirdsecret/otherwitness.asp>

Gruner, Fr. Nicholas. "Published Testimony: The Seers Kidnapped (August 13-15, 1917)." Fatima Network News. 2017.

<http://www.fatima.org/thirdsecret/seerkidn.asp>

Fatima Network Essentials. 2017. "Historical Context of Portugal

(1910-1917) <http://www.fatima.org/essentials/facts/histcontext.asp>

The Mary Pages, "The Apparitions of Our Lady of Fatima." May 13, 2016, <https://www.marypages.com/fatimaEng1.htm>

The Miracle Hunter, "Fatima Portugal, 1917."

http://miraclehunter.com/marian_apparitions/approved_apparitions/

Bible Gateway, "The Rich Man and Lazarus." Luke 16:19-31.

<https://www.biblegateway.com/passage/?search=Luke+16:19-31>

Periodicals

Columbia Staff, "Fatima at 100." Columbus Magazine, Knights of Columbus. May 2017. Pages 18-22

Pelowski, Alton J., "Christian Truth in a Democratic World"

Columbus Magazine, Knights of Columbus. July 2017. Pages 18-20.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Historian Paul F. Caranci is Rhode Island's former Deputy Secretary of State. He dedicated his life to public service, history and writing. The author of seven published books, Caranci's articles have appeared in a plethora of magazines and on-line news services. He has written two award-winning books; Scoundrels: Defining Corruption Through Tales of Political Intrigue in Rhode Island (Dorsey Award for Non-Fiction Book of the Year, 2016), and The Hanging and Redemption of John Gordon: The True Story of Rhode Island's Last Execution (Selected by the Providence Journal as one of the top five non-fiction books of the 2013).

Paul serves on the Board of Directors of the Association of Rhode Island Authors (ARIA) and is a co-founder of The Municipal Heritage Group. He is also a former member of the Heritage Harbor Museum Board of Directors, the RI Heritage Hall of Fame Board of Directors, and the Board of Directors of the American Diabetes Association – Rhode Island Affiliate. He served on the Board of Directors of the Diabetes Foundation of Rhode Island for sixteen years serving as its Chairman for two of those years.

Paul is married to his childhood sweetheart, Margie. The couple has two adult children, Heather and Matthew, and four grandsons, Matthew Jr., Jacob, Vincent and Casey. They reside in Rhode Island.

Also by the author...

Available at online retailers, bookstores and www.StillwaterPress.com

Paul Caranci is available to speak at your conference or function, or to your civic, church, political, or ethnic group or club.

You may contact him at municipalheritage@gmail.com

www.PaulCaranci.com

[1] Dos Santos, Sr. Lucia, Fatima in Lucia's Own Words. The Remembrances of Sister Lucia, 20th Edition, 2016.

[2] Ibid

[3] Walsh, William Thomas, Our Lady of Fatima, Image Book, Doubleday Publishing, 1954. page 150.

[4] The New Testament of the Bible, Luke 16:31

[5] Spartacus Educational, "Gavrilo Princip," www.spartacus-educational.com

[6] Shackelford, Michael, "WW I, Sarajevo, June 28, 1914."

<http://net.lib.byu.edu/~rdh/wwi/comment/sarajevo.html>.

[7] Ibid.

[8] Ibid.

[9] Ibid.

[10] Ibid.

[11] Ibid.

[12] Dos Santos, Sr. Lucia, Fatima in Lucia's Own Words. The Remembrances of Sister Lucia, 20th Edition, 2016. pages 68-69.

[13] Walsh, William Thomas, Our Lady of Fatima, Image Book, Doubleday Publishing, 1954

[14] <http://www.thecatholicoutpost.com/2017/05/18/first-communion-and-fatima/>

[15] Dos Santos, Sr. Lucia, Fatima in Lucia's Own Words. The Remembrances of Sister Lucia, 20th Edition, 2016. page 69.

[16] Dos Santos, Sr. Lucia, Fatima in Lucia's Own Words. The Remembrances of Sister Lucia, 20th Edition, 2016. pages 69-70.

[17] Ibid, Pages 70-71. Also, Walsh, William Thomas, Our Lady of Fatima, Image Book, Doubleday Publishing, 1954

[18] Dos Santos, Sr. Lucia, Fatima in Lucia's Own Words. The Remembrances of Sister Lucia, 20th Edition, 2016. page 72.

[19] Walsh, William Thomas, Our Lady of Fatima, Image Book, Doubleday Publishing, 1954. page 10

[20] Dos Santos, Sr. Lucia, Fatima in Lucia's Own Words. The Remembrances of Sister Lucia, 20th Edition, 2016. page 73.

[21] Ibid, page 74

[22] Ibid.

[23] Walsh, William Thomas, Our Lady of Fatima, Image Book, Doubleday Publishing, 1954. page 17.

[24] Dos Santos, Sr. Lucia, Fatima in Lucia's Own Words. The Remembrances of Sister Lucia, 20th Edition, 2016. page 75.

[25] Ibid, page 76.

[26] Dos Santos, Sr. Lucia, Fatima in Lucia's Own Words. The Remembrances of Sister Lucia, 20th Edition, 2016. page 76, and

http://www.1260.org/Mary/Apparitions_Fatima/Fatima_Apparitions_of_Angel_en.htm

[27] Dos Santos, Sr. Lucia, Fatima in Lucia's Own Words. The Remembrances of Sister Lucia, 20th Edition, 2016. page 77.

[28] Ibid, page 37.

[29] Walsh, William Thomas, Our Lady of Fatima, Image Book, Doubleday Publishing, 1954. page 34.

[30] Dos Santos, Sr. Lucia, Fatima in Lucia's Own Words. The Remembrances of Sister Lucia, 20th Edition, 2016, Page 77-78; also, Society of St. Pius X –

http://sspx.org/en/fatima_angel_apparitions_peace, and <http://www.theholyyrosary.org/fatimaapparitions>; also Walsh, William Thomas, Our Lady of Fatima, Image Book, Doubleday Publishing, 1954. pages 35-36.

[31] Dos Santos, Sr. Lucia, Fatima in Lucia's Own Words. The Remembrances of Sister Lucia, 20th Edition, 2016, Page 77-78; also, <https://www.ewtn.com/fatima/jacinta-marto.asp>; also, Walsh, William Thomas, Our Lady of Fatima, Image Book, Doubleday Publishing, 1954. pages 39-40.

- [32] Walsh, William Thomas, Our Lady of Fatima, Image Book, Doubleday Publishing, 1954. pages 40-41; also, Source - Society of St. Pius X - http://sspx.org/en/fatima_angel_apparitions_peace; also, <http://www.theholyroary.org/fatimaapparitions>.
- [33] Walsh, William Thomas, Our Lady of Fatima, Image Book, Doubleday Publishing, 1954. Pages 42-43.
- [34] Dos Santos, Sr. Lucia, Fatima in Lucia's Own Words. The Remembrances of Sister Lucia, 20th Edition, 2016, Page 79.
- [35] Walsh, William Thomas, Our Lady of Fatima, Image Book, Doubleday Publishing. 1954. Also, <https://www.ewtn.com/fatima/jacinta-marto.asp>. Also, Society of St. Pius X - http://sspx.org/en/fatima_angel_apparitions_peace, and <http://www.theholyroary.org/fatimaapparitions>
- [36] Dos Santos, Sr. Lucia, Fatima in Lucia's Own Words. The Remembrances of Sister Lucia, 20th Edition, 2016. page 80.
- [37] Dos Santos, Sr. Lucia, Fatima in Lucia's Own Words. The Remembrances of Sister Lucia, 20th Edition, 2016, page 44.
- [38] Ibid
- [39] McGlynn, Fr. Thomas, O.P., Vision of Fatima, Washington, DC., 1948. page 92
- [40] Ibid, pages 63-65
- [41] Dos Santos, Sr. Lucia, Fatima in Lucia's Own Words. The Remembrances of Sister Lucia, 20th Edition, 2016. page 174-176. Also, <http://www.theholyroary.org/fatimaapparitions>.
- [42] Walsh, William Thomas, Our Lady of Fatima, Image Book, Doubleday Publishing, 1954. Pages 56-57, taken from Olimpia's account to Father DeMarchi pg.64.
- [43] Dos Santos, Sr. Lucia, Fatima in Lucia's Own Words. The Remembrances of Sister Lucia, 20th Edition, 2016, Pages 44-45.
- [44] Ibid, page 45.
- [45] Ibid, page 45-46, (the reference is to a member of a monastic order founded by St. Bruno in 1086 near Grenoble, France.)
- [46] Ibid, page 50
- [47] Walsh, William Thomas, Our Lady of Fatima, Image Book, Doubleday Publishing, 1954. page 60.
- [48] Walsh, William Thomas, Our Lady of Fatima, Image Book, Doubleday Publishing, 1954. page 66.
- [49] Walsh, William Thomas, Our Lady of Fatima, Image Book, Doubleday Publishing, 1954. page 67.
- [50] Ibid.
- [51] McGlynn, Fr. Thomas, O.P., Vision of Fatima, Washington, DC., 1948, page 47
- [52] Dos Santos, Sr. Lucia, Fatima in Lucia's Own Words. The Remembrances of Sister Lucia, 20th Edition, 2016. pages 176-177. Also, <http://www.theholyroary.org/fatimaapparitions>.
- [53] Walsh, William Thomas, Our Lady of Fatima, Image Book, Doubleday Publishing, 1954. page 69
- [54] Walsh, William Thomas, Our Lady of Fatima, Image Book, Doubleday Publishing, 1954. page 74.
- [55] Ibid, page 76.

- [56] Ibid, pages 59-60.
- [57] Ibid, pages 79-80.
- [58] Ibid. Also, <http://www.theholysrosary.org/fatimaapparitions>.
- [59] Ibid, page 82-83.
- [60] Ibid, page 84.
- [61] <http://www.fatima.org/essentials/opposed/seerkidn.asp>
- [62] Walsh, William Thomas, Our Lady of Fatima, Image Book, Doubleday Publishing, 1954. Page 98 taken from Memoir II. Also, <http://www.fatima.org/essentials/opposed/seerkidn.asp>.
- [63] Ibid, page 98.
- [64] Ibid, pages 99-100. Also, <http://www.fatima.org/essentials/opposed/seerkidn.asp>.
- [65] Ibid, page 103.
- [66] Ibid, page 104
- [67] Ibid
- [68] Ibid, page 105.
- [69] Ibid
- [70] Ibid
- [71] McGlynn, Fr. Thomas, O.P., Vision of Fatima, Washington, DC, 1948, Page 43, 47-48
- [72] Walsh, William Thomas, Our Lady of Fatima, Image Book, Doubleday Publishing, 1954. page 109.
- [73] Dos Santos, Sr. Lucia, Fatima in Lucia's Own Words. The Remembrances of Sister Lucia, 20th Edition, 2016. pages 52-54 and 92-93. Also, <http://www.theholysrosary.org/fatimaapparitions>.
- [74] Walsh, William Thomas, Our Lady of Fatima, Image Book, Doubleday Publishing, 1954. page 113.
- [75] Ibid, page 112-113. Also, <http://www.fatima.org/essentials/opposed/seerkidn.asp>.
- [76] John Marto died April 28, 2000.
- [77] Dos Santos, Sr. Lucia, Fatima in Lucia's Own Words. The Remembrances of Sister Lucia, 20th Edition, 2016. Page 92. Also, <http://www.fatima.org/essentials/opposed/seerkidn.asp>.
- [78] Walsh, William Thomas, Our Lady of Fatima, Image Book, Doubleday Publishing, 1954, page 119.
- [79] Dos Santos, Sr. Lucia, Fatima in Lucia's Own Words. The Remembrances of Sister Lucia, 20th Edition, 2016. Page 92. Also, Walsh, William Thomas, Our Lady of Fatima, Image Book, Doubleday Publishing, 1954. pages 119-120. Also, <http://www.theholysrosary.org/fatimaapparitions>.
- [80] Walsh, William Thomas, Our Lady of Fatima, Image Book, Doubleday Publishing, 1954 page 121.
- [81] McGlynn, Fr. Thomas, O.P., Vision of Fatima, Washington, DC, 1948. page 48. Also, Walsh, William Thomas, Our Lady of Fatima, Image Book, Doubleday Publishing, 1954. page 121.
- [82] Dos Santos, Sr. Lucia, Fatima in Lucia's Own Words. The Remembrances of Sister Lucia, 20th Edition, 2016. page 92-93.
- [83] Ibid, page 93.
- [84] Ibid, page 46-47.
- [85] Ibid, pages 47 and 93.

- [86] Ibid, page 47.
- [87] Walsh, William Thomas, Our Lady of Fatima, Image Book, Doubleday Publishing 1954
- [88] Dos Santos, Sr. Lucia, Fatima in Lucia's Own Words. The Remembrances of Sister Lucia, 20th Edition, 2016. page 93-94.
- [89] Dos Santos, Sr. Lucia, Fatima in Lucia's Own Words. The Remembrances of Sister Lucia, 20th Edition, 2016. pages 54-55.
- [90] Ibid, page 181.
- [91] Walsh, William Thomas, Our Lady of Fatima, Image Book, Doubleday Publishing, 1954. page 126.
- [92] Walsh, William Thomas, Our Lady of Fatima, Image Book, Doubleday Publishing, 1954. page 126-127.
- [93] Walsh, William Thomas, Our Lady of Fatima, Image Book, Doubleday Publishing, 1954. page 127.
- [94] Dos Santos, Sr. Lucia, Fatima in Lucia's Own Words. The Remembrances of Sister Lucia, 20th Edition, 2016. page 181.
- [95] Ibid, page 181-182. Also, <http://www.theholynosary.org/fatimaapparitions>.
- [96] Walsh, William Thomas, Our Lady of Fatima, Image Book, Doubleday Publishing, 1954. page 132-133.
- [97] Walsh, William Thomas, Our Lady of Fatima, Image Book, Doubleday Publishing, 1954. page 139-141.
- [98] Ibid, page 142
- [99] Ibid.
- [100] Ibid, page 144
- [101] Ibid, page 146.
- [102] Ibid.
- [103] Ibid, page 149-150.
- [104] McGlynn, Fr. Thomas, O.P., Vision of Fatima, Washington, DC., 1948. page 43-44.
- [105] Ibid, page 45.
- [106] Ibid, page 51.
- [107] Walsh, William Thomas, Our Lady of Fatima, Image Book, Doubleday Publishing, 1954.
- [108] https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/1917_World_Series
- [109] McGlynn, Fr. Thomas, O.P., Vision of Fatima, Washington, DC., 1948. page 45
- [110] Walsh, William Thomas, Our Lady of Fatima, Image Book, Doubleday Publishing, 1954. page 147-148. Also, <http://www.theholynosary.org/fatimaapparitions>.
- [111] Walsh, William Thomas, Our Lady of Fatima, Image Book, Doubleday Publishing, 1954. page 153.
- [112] Ibid, page 155.
- [113] Ibid, page 159.
- [114] https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/F%C3%A1tima,_Portugal.

[115] Ibid.

[116] Walsh, William Thomas, Our Lady of Fatima, Image Book, Doubleday Publishing, 1954. pages 161 - 162.

[117] Dos Santos, Sr. Lucia, Fatima in Lucia's Own Words. The Remembrances of Sister Lucia, 20th Edition, 2016. Pages 59-60.

[118] Walsh, William Thomas, Our Lady of Fatima, Image Book, Doubleday Publishing, 1954. pages 162-163.

[119] Ibid, page 163.

[120] Ibid, page 164.

[121] Ibid, page 165.

[122] Ibid, page 166.

[123] Ibid, page 167.

[124] Ibid, page 170.

[125] Dos Santos, Sr. Lucia, Fatima in Lucia's Own Words. The Remembrances of Sister Lucia, 20th Edition, 2016. Pages 60-61.

[126] Walsh, William Thomas, Our Lady of Fatima, Image Book, Doubleday Publishing, 1954. pages 174.

[127] Dos Santos, Sr. Lucia, Fatima in Lucia's Own Words. The Remembrances of Sister Lucia, 20th Edition, 2016. Pages 62.

[128] Ibid, pages 62-62.

[129] Dos Santos, Sr. Lucia, Fatima in Lucia's Own Words. The Remembrances of Sister Lucia, 20th Edition, 2016. Pages 63.

[130] Walsh, William Thomas, Our Lady of Fatima, Image Book, Doubleday Publishing, 1954. pages 180.

[131] <https://www.ewtn.com/fatima/jacinta-marto.asp>.

[132] Dos Santos, Sr. Lucia, Fatima in Lucia's Own Words. The Remembrances of Sister Lucia, 20th Edition, 2016. page 63.

[133] <http://www.theholynosary.org/fatimaapparitions>.

[134] The Portuguese word "Ai" is an expression or yell/call of distress. Jacinta, then, was calling out in distress for Our Lady.

[135] Walsh, William Thomas, Our Lady of Fatima, Image Book, Doubleday Publishing, 1954. pages 181.

[136] Ibid.

[137] Dos Santos, Sr. Lucia, Fatima in Lucia's Own Words. The Remembrances of Sister Lucia, 20th Edition, 2016. page 63. Also, Walsh, William Thomas, Our Lady of Fatima, Image Book, Doubleday Publishing, 1954. pages 182.

- [138] Motu Proprio, Bonum Sane, July 25, 1920, taken from Walsh, William Thomas, Our Lady of Fatima, Image Book, Doubleday Publishing, 1954. Pages 188
- [139] Walsh, William Thomas, Our Lady of Fatima, Image Book, Doubleday Publishing, 1954. pages 189.
- [140] Ibid, page 192.
- [141] <http://www.theholysrosary.org/fatimaapparitions>. Also, The Great Promise of the Heart of Mary, Imprimatur: Fatima, January 13, 2007.
- [142] Schulte, Paul C. Archbishop of Indianapolis, Our Lady of Fatima's "Peace Plan From Heaven" January 15, 1950, Page 13-14. Also <http://www.theholysrosary.org/fatimaapparitions>.
- [143] Dos Santos, Sr. Lucia, Fatima in Lucia's Own Words. The Remembrances of Sister Lucia, 20th Edition, 2016. page 33. Also, McGlynn, Fr. Thomas, O.P., Vision of Fatima, Washington, DC., 1948. page 217.
- [144] Dos Santos, Sr. Lucia, Fatima in Lucia's Own Words. The Remembrances of Sister Lucia, 20th Edition, 2016. page 33.
- [145] Ibid.
- [146] Schulte, Paul C. Archbishop of Indianapolis, Our Lady of Fatima's "Peace Plan From Heaven" January 15, 1950, Page 15. Also, <http://www.theholysrosary.org/fatimaapparitions>.
- [147] <http://www.theholysrosary.org/fatimaapparitions>.
- [148] Walsh, William Thomas, Our Lady of Fatima, Image Book, Doubleday Publishing, 1954. pages 222.
- [149] Ibid, page 221. Also, <http://www.theholysrosary.org/fatimaapparitions>.
- [150] Columbia Magazine, Volume 97, Number 5, published in May 2017 by the Knights of Columbus. Page 19.
- [151] Ibid, page 20.
- [152] Ahr, Most Rev. George W., Why Five First Saturdays?, The Blue Army of Our Lady of Fatima, Washington, N.J.
- [153] Walsh, William Thomas, Our Lady of Fatima, Image Book, Doubleday Publishing, 1954. page 79-80. Also, <http://www.theholysrosary.org/fatimaapparitions>.
- [154] Walsh, William Thomas, Our Lady of Fatima, Image Book, Doubleday Publishing, 1954. page 79-80. Also <http://www.theholysrosary.org/fatimaapparitions>.
- [155] "Blitz, Matthew, "The Unsolved Case of the Attempted Assassination of Pope John Paul." September 21, 2015, <http://www.atlasobscura.com/articles/the-unsolved-case-of-the-attempted-assassination-of-pope-john-paul-ii>.
- [156] Ibid.
- [157] <http://www.theholysrosary.org/fatimaapparitions> and the text of the announcement made by Cardinal Angelo Sodano, the Secretary of State, following the Mass presided over by Pope John Paul II at Fatima on May 13, 2000.
- [158] <http://www.theholysrosary.org/fatimaapparitions>.

- [159] The Fatima Center, “What is the Fatima Center.” 2017. <http://www.fatima.org/apostolate/witfc.pdf>
- [160] Frere, Michel de la Sainte Trinite, The Whole Truth About Fatima, Volume III: The Third Secret, Immaculate Heart Publications, Buffalo, New York, 1990. pages 675-676.
- [161] Fatima Network, “Published Testimony: (September 10, 1984) The Bishop of Fatima. <http://www.fatima.org/thirdsecret/bishfatima.asp>.
- [162] Fatima Network, “Published Testimony: (November 1984) Cardinal Ratzinger. <http://www.fatima.org/thirdsecret/ratzinger.asp>.
- [163] Vere, Peter John, JCL/M (Cannon Law), “Canon Law and Fr. Gruner’s Suspension (a divinis): (January 17, 2002) St. Paul, Minnesota, provided courtesy of the CatholicCulture.org, <https://www.catholicculture.org/culture/library/view.cfm?recnum=4086>.
- [164] Apostoli, Fr. Andrew, C.F.R. Fatima For Today: The Urgent Message of Hope. San Francisco: Ignatius Press, 2010. Pages 263-268.
- [165] The Voice of the Martyrs, 2017, <https://www.persecution.com/public/tfc.aspx?clickfrom=%3d73696465626172>.
- [166] Matter of Engel v. Vitale, Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of New York, Second Department, 11 A.D.2d 340 (N.Y. App. Div. 1960) <https://casetext.com/case/matter-of-engel-v-vitale-4>.
- [167] Engel Et Al. v. Vitale Et Al. Issue: First Amendment – Establishment of religion) other than pertains to parochiaid:) <http://supreme-court-cases.insidegov.com/l/1875/Engel-Et-Al-v-Vitale-Et-Al>
- [168] Brown, Matthew, “Supreme Court Ruling 50 Years Ago Set Modern Course For Religion in Public Schools.” Deseret News Faith, <http://www.deseretnews.com/article/865581712/Supreme-Court-ruling-50-years-ago-set-modern-course-for-religion-in-public-schools.html>.
- [169] Roe v. Wade Fast Facts, CNN, Updated 8:04 PM ET, Sunday April 23, 2017, <http://www.cnn.com/2013/11/04/us/roe-v-wade-fast-facts/>, Also Oyez, “Body Politic – The Supreme Court and Abortion Law. Roe v. Wade, <https://www.oyez.org/cases/1971/70-18>.
- [170] The Guardian, “Andres Serrano’s Controversial Piss Christ goes on view in New York.” September 28, 2012. <https://www.theguardian.com/artanddesign/2012/sep/28/andres-serrano-piss-christ-new-york>.
- [171] Catholic League for Religious and Civil Rights, January/February 2000. “Brooklyn Museum Debate Rages To The End.” <http://www.catholicleague.org/brooklyn-museum-debate-rages-to-the-end/>.
- [172] Theblaze. September 14, 2011. “Court Rules Teacher Must Remove “In God We Trust” Classroom Banners.” <http://www.theblaze.com/stories/court-rules-teacher-must-remove-in-god-we-trust-classroom-banners>
- [173] Catholic News Agency. April 3, 2012, “Democratic Conventions Non-invitation of Archbishop Chaput an “insult,” Democrat Says.” https://www.catholicnewsagency.com/democratic_conventions_noninvitation_of_archbishop_chaput_an_insult_democrat_says/.
- [174] St. Onge, Rev. Charles. Chron.com, “Has Obama Declared War on Christianity?” February 6, 2012.
- [175] PatDollard.com, February 11, 2012, “Obama’s War On Christianity Still On: Catholic Church Issues Statement That Obama’s ‘Compromise Solution’ Is An ‘Unacceptable’ Sham.”

<http://patdollard.com/2012/02/obamas-war-on-religion-still-on-catholic-church-issues-statement-that-obamas-compromise-solution-is-an-unacceptable-sham>. Additional Source – Lockhead, Carolyn, The San Francisco Chronicle, “Obama Ignites Firestorm Among Catholics.” February 6, 2012.

[176] Theblaze. “Is the Obama Admin Really Attacking the Catholic Church by Placing the Vatican on a Financial Crimes List?” March 13, 2012. <http://www.theblaze.com/stories/is-the-obama-admin-really-attacking-the-catholic-church-by-placing-the-vatican-on-a-financial-crimes-list?>

[177] Townhall.com, “Islamic Indoctrination in Textbooks.” April 3, 2012. http://www.townhall.com/columnists/phyllisschlaflly/2012/04/03/islamic_indoctrination.

[178] Hallowell, Billy, “Catholic Group to Leave Vanderbilt Campus After Refusing to Comply with Non-Discrimination Policy.” TheBlaze, March 30, 2012. <http://www.theblaze.com/news/2012/03/30/catholic-group-to-leave-vanderbilt-campus-after-refusing-to-comply-with-non-discrimination-policy/>.

[179] Gonzales, Sara, “Florida Teacher Reportedly Banned Students From Wearing Crosses, Now Threatened with Legal Action.” TheBlaze, April 22, 2017. <http://www.theblaze.com/news/2017/04/22/florida-teacher-reportedly-banned-students-from-wearing-crosses-now-threatened-with-legal-action/>.

[180] Pelowski, Alton, J. “Christian Truth in a Democratic World” Columbus Magazine, Knights of Columbus. July 2017. Page 18.

[181] Ibid

[182] DailyMail.co.uk, Kim Jong-un warns Donald Trump he is Pushing North Korea to the Brink of Nuclear War. July 9, 2017.

[183] Apostoli, Fr. Andrew, C.F.R. Fatima For Today: The Urgent Message of Hope. San Francisco: Ignatius Press, 2010. page 217

[184] Ibid, page 219.

[185] Apostoli, Fr. Andrew C.F.R., Fatima for Today: The Urgent Marian Message of Hope. San Francisco, Ignatius Press, 2010. pages 219-223.

[186] Pelowski, Alton, J. “Christian Truth in a Democratic World” Columbus Magazine, Knights of Columbus. July 2017. Page 18.

WHY WE'RE CATHOLIC

OUR REASONS FOR FAITH, HOPE, AND LOVE TRENT HORN

WHY WE'RE CATHOLIC

Our Reasons for Faith, Hope, and Love

TRENT HORN

© 2017 Trent Horn

All rights reserved. Except for quotations, no part of this book may be reproduced or transmitted in any form or by any means, electronic or mechanical, including photocopying, recording, uploading to the Internet, or by any information storage and retrieval system, without written permission from the publisher.

Unless otherwise noted, biblical citations are taken from the Revised Standard Version of the Bible (© 1971 by Division of Christian Education of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the United States of America).

Published by Catholic Answers, Inc.

2020 Gillespie Way

El Cajon, California 92020

1-888-291-8000 orders

619-387-0042 fax

catholic.com

Printed in the United States of America

Cover design by Devin Schadt

Interior book design by Claudine Mansour Design

978-1-68357-024-0

978-1-68357-025-7 Kindle

978-1-68357-026-4 ePub

Table of Contents

Introduction: Why We Believe . . . Anything

1. Why We Believe in Truth

2. Why We Believe in Science

3. Why We Believe in a Creator

4. Why We Believe in God

5. Why We Believe God Conquers Evil

6. Why We Believe in Jesus

7. Why We Believe in the Resurrection

8. Why We Believe in the Trinity

9. Why We Believe in the Bible

10. Why We Aren't Bible-Only Christians

11. Why We Belong to the Catholic Church

12. Why We Have a Pope

13. Why We Have Priests

14. Why We Go to Mass

15. Why We Baptize Babies

16. Why We Believe in Spite of Scandal

17. Why We Believe that Faith Works Through Love

18. Why We Believe in Purgatory

19. Why We Pray to the Saints

20. Why We Honor Mary

21. Why We Protect Life

22. Why We Cherish Our Sexuality

23. Why We Defend Marriage

24. Why We Believe There's a Hell

25. Why We Hope for Heaven

How to Become Catholic

How to Go to Confession

Common Catholic Prayers

Endnotes

About the Author

For

St. Theresa Parish

Phoenix, Arizona

Introduction

Why We Believe . . . Anything

I was sitting in a booth at a restaurant in San Diego waiting for the religious equivalent of a “blind date” to begin.

A few weeks earlier, some Catholic friends of mine asked me to meet with their son while he was home from college. They wanted me to speak to him because he told his parents he wasn’t going to church with them anymore because he was now an atheist. They asked me, “Can you help him see he needs to start going back to church? Can you help him get over all this atheist stuff?”

Then their son, who I’ll call Vincent, walked through the door. I raised my hand and he did his best to manage a half-smile before he sat down.

“How’s it going?” he asked.

“Good, I’m Trent.”

“Yeah, I know.”

I didn’t expect this to go very well and, to be frank, I understood his lack of enthusiasm about having lunch with me. That’s why I decided just to be honest with him.

“You think I’m here to talk you into being Catholic again?”

“Sure, it’s why my parents kept asking me to see you,” he said.

“Look, I don’t think there’s anything I can say that’s going to make you change what you believe. I just think you should believe in something because you think it’s true, not just because it’s convenient for you. Does that make sense?”

He nodded in agreement.

“How about this. Why don’t you just tell me why you’re an atheist.”

“I know you wrote a book on atheism, so I’m not going to debate you,” he shot back.

“I don’t feel like debating anybody over a plate of mozzarella sticks,” I responded. “I just want to find out what you believe, that’s all.”

So for the next twenty minutes I asked him questions. What do you mean by the term “atheist”? What are the best arguments for and against God? What are the worst? What do you think are the good and bad things about the Catholic Church?

By the time our entrées arrived we were having a good discussion. I gently challenged some of his atheistic beliefs but, true to my word, it wasn't a debate. It was just two guys having a deep conversation.

As I dipped my quesadilla into some salsa I said to Vincent, "I think I've got a good grasp on why you're an atheist, and I actually like talking to people like you. You've given this issue a lot of thought, and if I'm wrong about atheism I'd want someone like you to show me what I don't understand."

"Thanks," he said.

"But it's a two-way street, Vincent. Be honest. If you were wrong about the Catholic Church, would you want someone like me to show you what you were mistaken about?"

He took a sip of his soda while he thought the question over, and finally said, "Yeah, I'd be open to that."

"Okay, well, I've spent a lot of time asking you questions, so now it's your turn. Why don't you ask me about what Catholics believe and I'll tell you why we believe that stuff. You can take my reasons or leave them, but I think your parents will be happy that we at least talked about them." Vincent agreed and we kept at it for another hour.

As the check came, he said to me, "I appreciate what you said. I'll definitely think about all of it."

"And I'll think about what you said," I replied. "Remember, it's a two-way street."

A COMMON DESIRE

I don't look at people who've left the Catholic Church or who aren't Catholic as potential "customers." They're just people. They have things they love and things they hate. They may differ from me in lots of ways, but they almost certainly have one thing in common with me: they don't want to be ignorant and they do want to be happy. I became Catholic in high school because 1) I thought it was true, and 2) finding answers to my deepest questions about existence and purpose made me happy.

It would be selfish of me to keep to myself the peace and joy I receive from being Catholic, so I share this "good news" with others. My aim in this book is simple: to explain why Catholics believe what they believe. I haven't given every explanation I can think of, because most people aren't in a rush to read a book that is so thick it can double as a step stool. Instead, I've presented the reasons that made the biggest impact on me during my conversion to the Catholic faith.

If you are Catholic, this book should give you a great starting point for discussions with your non-Catholic friends and family. If you aren't Catholic, then I hope you will at least be willing to hear me out, like Vincent did. Even if it doesn't convince you, it should help you have more thoughtful conversations with Catholic friends and family because you will better understand their point of view.

Whoever you are, whether you're a believer, a skeptic, or you're just not sure what you believe, I hope at a minimum this book will encourage you to follow an ancient piece of wisdom: "Test everything, retain what is good."¹

PART 1

TRUTH

GOD

Why We Believe in Truth

When someone walks toward you with clenched fists, it's normal to become nervous. When I saw a student approach me in this way at a Texas university, I feared for the worst. Fortunately, he just wanted to beat me up with words.

When my presentation on the subject "Why Be Catholic?" was finished, he came up to me and said, "You are one of the most arrogant people I've ever met. You think you're right and everybody else is wrong." I was surprised by how angry this man was, and as I began to respond to him several students came over to see what was happening.

"You're saying it's arrogant for me to think I'm right about a religious truth and everyone who disagrees with me is wrong?" I replied.

"Yeah!"

"Okay," I continued, "I think a few people here would probably disagree with you about me being arrogant. Are you right and those people who disagree with you are wrong?"

The young man looked confused for a few seconds before asking, "What are you getting at?"

By now the few students watching had turned into a crowd of dozens. I explained what I meant.

"You're right. It is bad to be arrogant, but it's not bad to be accurate. If we possess the truth about something, then those who disagree with that truth will be wrong. That doesn't make us better than them, it just means we have to be willing to listen to one another so that we can avoid error and find the truth."

"But there is no absolute truth!" he fired back. "Everybody decides what's true for themselves."

The nineteenth-century French novelist Gustave Flaubert once said, "There is no truth. There is only perception." Is this statement true, or is it just Flaubert's perception?

WHAT IS TRUTH?

Here's the problem with saying "there is no absolute truth": this statement is an absolute truth. It claims, "It is true in all times and all places that no statement is true in all times and all places." But that is as contradictory as saying, "I can't speak a word of English." It makes no sense to claim it is true that there are no truths.

But what is truth? When we say a statement is true, we mean it "corresponds to reality." It describes the way the world really is. Any statement that describes the world contains either a subjective truth or an objective truth.²

A truth is subjective if it is only true for the person who is making the statement. If I say, "Mint chocolate chip ice cream tastes great," I am telling a subjective truth. When people disagree about such truths they usually say, "That's true for you, but not for me." It may be true for Trent Horn that ice cream tastes great, but a person who is allergic to ice cream may say that's not true for him. This isn't contradictory because subjective truths describe people's feelings toward the world rather than facts about the world.

GETTING OUR TERMS RIGHT

- Subjective truth: Statements that describe opinions and are only true for the person who makes the statement.
 - Objective truth: Statements that describe reality and are true for all people.
-

A truth is objective, however, when it does not merely describe how a person feels, but describes a fact about reality that is true for everyone. Whether you love or hate ice cream, for example, it is objectively true that ice cream begins to melt when left out at room temperature (provided the room isn't an igloo). Objective truths cannot be true only for some people. They are true or false for everyone because they describe reality, and reality is something everyone has to accept, like it or not.

So what does this have to do with religion or with being Catholic?

ICE-CREAM TRUTH OR MEDICINE TRUTH?

Some people think choosing a religion or a church to attend is like choosing a new pair of shoes or a flavor of ice cream. If it tastes good or feels great, it doesn't matter which one you pick. They think religious truths are subjective, and so they aren't true for everyone. This means if something feels right to you, it's as good as any other set of beliefs.

That's why it can seem arrogant if someone says his religion is right and everyone should belong to it. That would be like saying everyone should only wear sandals or eat mint chocolate chip ice cream (though I admit it is a delicious afternoon treat). In both cases we would say, "That may be true for you, but it's not true for me."

But religious truths describe basic, important features of reality, which makes them objective rather than subjective. Claims about religion are more like "medicine truth" than "ice-cream truth."

Imagine if we chose medicine like we chose ice cream. We might say, "Mmmm, this pill tastes like strawberries . . . I'll have three." You could get hurt or killed by doing that. You might also stay sick or get worse because you didn't take the right medicine. In this case, what matters is not the subjective truth of how the medicine tastes, but the objective truth of what it will do to your body.

The same is true when it comes to religion. Even if you don't believe in religion at all, that belief should be grounded in facts about reality and not just feelings toward religion. The bottom line is that we should choose a church or faith not because of how it makes us feel, but because it is objectively true and objectively good for us.

RELIGION, RAJAHS, AND ELEPHANTS

Have you ever heard the story about the three blind men and an elephant? The first blind man touched the elephant's tail and said it was a rope. The second man touched its large ears and said it was a fan. The third blind man touched the animal's massive side and said it was a wall.

Then, a wise king called a rajah told the three men, "An elephant is a large animal. You each have a part of the truth, but all the parts must be put together in order to find the whole truth. So it is with your religions. Each has part of the truth, but you must put them together in order to find the whole truth."

But combining contradictory and false religions no more produces a true religion than combining rope, fans, and a wall produces a true description of an elephant.

This parable also assumes that someone does have all of the truth—the rajah. How do skeptics who deny there is one true religion know whether they are like the rajah and not like one of the blind men? Is it possible some religions contain more truth than others, and God has given one religion the fullness of truth?

But isn't it arrogant for someone like me to say I am a part of the "right religion" and everyone else is wrong? If I had been born in India, wouldn't I be writing a book called Why We're Hindu instead of Why We're Catholic?

Maybe, but if I had been born in ancient China I might have written a book called Why We Believe the Earth Is Flat. Being born in a time or place that is far from the truth doesn't disprove the existence of the truth.

When it comes to believing in a religion or any other basic truth about reality (like the shape of the earth), we all think that we're right and that those who disagree with us are wrong. Even people who ignore religion think they're right that religion should be ignored. They also think that those people who tell them they should convert are wrong. This isn't a sign of arrogance; it's a sign of a genuine desire to find the truth.

A person, or even lots of people, can be kind and loving and at the same time be mistaken about religion. The loving thing to do is not leave someone in ignorance, but to help him find the truth. In fact, some people have to be right when it comes to religious truths, because in many cases there are no other options. For example, either religious people are right and God exists or atheists are right and God does not exist. There is no third option, and both can't be right because that would lead to the contradiction of God existing and not existing at the same time.

As a Catholic I don't claim that every other religion is 100 percent wrong. Starting with the most basic questions about the world (which means they deal with objective truths), I try to see which religion best answers my questions: Is there a God? What can we know about God from reason? Did God ever reveal himself to man? Which religion has the best historical claim to being the recipient of God's revelation? Does that religion still exist today?

More than one religion is capable of correctly answering some of these questions. For example, if there is only one God then Christians, Jews, and Muslims would all be correct. If God became man, however, then only one of these religions would be correct. As we answer these questions, you'll see that while many belief systems truthfully answer some of them, only one religion consistently and correctly answers all of them. If we care about truth, then shouldn't we find out which religion has these answers?

PROPOSING RATHER THAN IMPOSING TRUTH

In a video he posted online, atheist and magician Penn Jillette described how a Christian approached him after one of his shows and gave him a Bible. Instead of being offended, Penn said the Christian was "a good man." If Christians actually believed their faith was true, he continued, then they should always share it with other people. Jillette said, "How much do you have to hate somebody to not proselytize? How much would you have to hate somebody to believe that everlasting life is possible and not tell them that?”³

WHY WE BELIEVE: TRUTH

- It is contradictory to say it is true that there is no truth.
- Objective truth describes reality and so it is true or false for everyone.
- Since religion describes reality, its central claims are objective and can be investigated.

Why We Believe in Science

As a child I wasn't very interested in religion, but I liked science. When I was ten years old, our school's Young Astronomers Club got to visit the Jet Propulsion Laboratory in California. In one part of the tour, we stood on a catwalk suspended high above a dozen scientists who were preparing the Cassini spacecraft for launch. As I peered over the railing, I thought of what science had given humanity: things like the Internet, airplanes, and modern medicine.

The next year I entered junior high and decided I would only trust what science could prove. But during my conversion to the Catholic faith a few years later, I realized I had put too much faith in science, and not enough faith in nonscientific ways of discovering the truth.

WHAT IS SCIENCE?

During the Middle Ages, science was defined as “the knowledge of things from their causes”⁴ (the Latin word scientia means “knowledge”). This included knowledge of natural things, like stars and planets, as well as knowledge of supernatural things, like angels or God. But in 1837, William Whewell coined the term “scientist” to refer to someone who seeks systematic, natural explanations for observed phenomena.

Under this new definition, scientists could not use God as an explanation for what they observed. Since God exists beyond the observable, natural world, he couldn't be studied with science—but that doesn't mean God does not exist.

A metal detector can't detect diamonds, but that doesn't prove there are no lost gemstones at the beach that may have fallen out of someone's piece of jewelry. Like metal detectors, the “thought tools” we use to investigate the world have limits, and the limit of science is the boundary of the natural world. There may be something beyond that boundary, like God, but we need other tools besides science in order to find out.

Some people think science is the only tool we should use to investigate the world and we shouldn't believe anything that can't be proven scientifically. This attitude is called scientism, and it's self-refuting because there is no scientific experiment that proves the only reliable form of knowledge is science. In addition, we believe in many things that can't be proven with science.

If in answer to the question "Is science important?" you say yes, how would you prove that scientifically? There is no experiment or machine that shows science is important. Instead, we use logical reasoning to prove this truth and many others.

For example, science can tell us how the world is, but it can't tell us how the world ought to be. Science gave us airplanes and medicine, but it also gave us atomic bombs and nerve gas. Science can't show us what is good or evil because it is just a tool that can be used for either good or evil. We need other thought tools, like philosophy and personal experience, in order to understand truths about the world that science cannot discover—including truths related to who or what created the world.

A SCIENTIST REVEALS THE LIMITS OF SCIENCE

In 1960, Sir Peter Medawar won a Nobel Prize for research that made organ and tissue transplants possible. He also wrote a book called Advice to a Young Scientist, in which he said the following:

"There is no quicker way for a scientist to bring discredit upon himself and upon his profession than roundly to declare—particularly when no declaration of any kind is called for—that science knows or soon will know the answers to all questions worth asking."⁵

Even though he was not religious, Medawar went on to say that we would have to turn to literature and religion for "suitable answers" to questions like "How did everything begin?" and "What are we all here for?"

IS THE CATHOLIC CHURCH ANTI-SCIENCE?

Far from being against science, the Catechism of the Catholic Church (CCC)—an official book of Catholic teachings—praises "scientific studies which have splendidly enriched our knowledge" (CCC 283). For example, Pope St. John Paul II told the Vatican's Pontifical Academy of Sciences that evolution was "more than a hypothesis," and Pope Benedict XVI went even further, saying that there were "many scientific proofs in favor of evolution."⁶

But what about Galileo? Didn't the Church persecute him for teaching that the earth revolves around the sun? Doesn't this show that the Catholic Church opposes scientific discoveries that contradict what is established by faith?

First, the Catholic Church did not condemn the heliocentric or sun-centered view of our solar system. According to the online Stanford Encyclopedia of Philosophy, at this time in history “there was no official Catholic position on the Copernican [heliocentric] system, and it was certainly not a heresy.”⁷ Many scientists in Galileo's time accepted ancient Greek arguments for a stationary earth, arguments that had not been refuted. Today we can use satellites to prove the earth revolves around the sun, but five hundred years ago the question was far from settled.

In fact, Galileo thought the planets orbited the sun in a perfect circle, whereas they actually have an elliptical orbit. Because of this, Galileo's theory could not account for all the observable movements of the planets, which is one reason Pope Urban VIII urged Galileo to treat his theory as tentative. Unfortunately, Galileo chose to mock the pope in his work Dialogue Concerning the Two World Systems, in which a character named Simplicio, which means “simpleton” in English, represented the pope's views. Galileo also claimed that Scripture would have to be reinterpreted in light of his findings, a conclusion that lay outside his area of expertise. Both of these missteps led to his famous trial in 1633.

Contrary to popular belief, Galileo was not tortured, but was found to be “under suspicion of heresy.” According to his friend Francesco Niccolini, Galileo was placed under house arrest but was given a servant to attend to him until he died of old age.⁸ Pope St. John Paul II later apologized for any injustices committed against Galileo during his trial and reaffirmed the positive relationship between the Church and science.

DOES SCIENCE LEAD TO ATHEISM?

Although some outspoken scientists happen to be atheists, according to the Pew Research Center 51 percent of scientists believe in God or a higher power.⁹ It's true that scientists are more likely to identify as atheists, but Elaine Ecklund has shown in her book Science vs. Religion that science itself doesn't turn people into atheists; atheists are just more likely to pursue careers in science.

This means that there is nothing about science itself that makes it incompatible with religion. Some of history's greatest contributions to science have come from religious people. This includes Catholic friars like Gregor Mendel, who is called the “Father of Modern Genetics,” and priests like Fr. Georges Lemaître, who is called the “Father of the Big Bang Theory.”

Because of the ever-changing nature of science, the Catholic Church only teaches on matters related to faith or morals. The Church does not infallibly endorse scientific theories, even though it has long supported science. For example, the medieval Church funded scientists who helped create the modern calendar. Today the Vatican operates a large observatory that secular astronomers use on a regular basis.

According to historian J. L. Heilbron, “The Roman Catholic Church gave more financial and social support to the study of astronomy for over six centuries, from the recovery of ancient learning during the late Middle Ages into the Enlightenment, than any other, and, probably, all other, institutions.”¹⁰

WHAT IS FAITH?

When people say, “Science contradicts faith,” they usually define faith as “believing without evidence” or “believing in spite of whatever the evidence may say.” Science may contradict that definition of faith, but not the traditional understanding of faith.

In the broadest sense, faith is just a kind of trust we have in another person or thing. We might say, for example, “I have faith that John will finish our group project.” Even scientists have faith that the laws of nature will operate the same way in all times and places, even though they can’t prove the laws of nature will always do this.

For Catholics, faith is “the theological virtue by which we believe in God and believe all that he has said and revealed to us.”¹¹ If God does exist (the evidence for which we will examine shortly), then it is perfectly reasonable for people to trust, or have faith, in God, just as we would have faith or trust in other people. This includes trusting what God has revealed to an individual through something like prayer, or in a public way through things like the Bible or the teachings of the Church.

GETTING OUR TERMS RIGHT

- Faith (common sense): A kind of trust we put in a person or thing based on evidence and experience.
 - Faith (religious sense): Trust in God’s promise based on evidence and experience of God’s revelation.¹²
-

But doesn't having faith mean you don't have evidence for what you believe? After all, if you had enough evidence you wouldn't need faith. But consider this: according to the United States Parachute Association, 99.99 percent of skydivers survive their jumps. Now, imagine you are wearing a parachute you know has been packed correctly and you step toward the door of the plane. As you look down at the ground two miles beneath your feet and see the tops of clouds passing by, I ask you this: "Are you nervous?"¹³

Probably! Even with so much evidence that you will survive jumping out of an airplane you still need to trust that evidence. You still need to make a "leap of faith." This is not a blind leap or belief without evidence. It is a reasonable belief that trusts a conclusion based on the weight of the evidence.

With that in mind, let's examine the evidence for the foundational truth of the Catholic faith: the existence of God.

WHY WE BELIEVE: SCIENCE

- Science is one tool we use to discover truths about reality, but it is not our only tool, because it is limited to describing the physical, natural world.
- We must use other "thought tools," like logical reasoning, to investigate what may lie beyond the physical, natural world.
- Faith does not contradict science because faith is not opposed to evidence. Faith is a trust we have in something and, in a religious sense, it is a trust in God's promises.

Why We Believe in a Creator

Once during a debate on the existence of God, my opponent tried to use science to prove we should be atheists.

He said ancient people believed in God because they saw things they couldn't explain, like lightning. But science has now explained the cause of lightning and, eventually, it would explain the entire universe. This means there is no need to invoke God as a cause of anything and, therefore, no good reason to believe God exists.

When it was my turn to speak I asked my opponent if he was open-minded. He said, "Of course," to which I asked, "Okay, then what specific evidence would change your mind and convince you God exists?"

He replied, "If you prayed and an amputated limb grew back, then I'd believe." Remembering his earlier statement, I asked him, "If this ever happened, how would you know God was responsible? Maybe science will discover a natural explanation for why the limb grew back."

He thought about my question and then admitted, "I don't know . . . but I mean, how else could that happen unless God did it?"

Now I knew exactly where I wanted the conversation to go. I said, "If you're impressed by a limb coming into existence from nothing, then why aren't you even more impressed by a whole universe coming into existence from nothing? If only God could regrow an amputated limb, then wouldn't only God be capable of creating an entire universe from nothing?"

Later in the debate I explained to the audience that my arguments for the existence of God did not rely on gaps in our knowledge being ignorantly filled with the phrase "God did it." Instead, the arguments for the existence of God use positive evidence to show the universe as a whole could only have God as its cause.

THE FIRST-CAUSE ARGUMENT

Here's a simple argument for the existence of God.^{14}

1. Whatever begins to exist has a cause for its existence.
2. The universe began to exist.
3. Therefore, the universe has a cause for its existence.

Even if this argument works, how do we know the cause of the universe is God?

Since the universe includes all of space and time, the cause of the universe would have to exist beyond space and time, because it created those things. This cause would have to be immaterial, that is, not made of matter, and eternal, not exist in time. Since science only studies forces and objects that exist in space and time, this means that the cause of the universe is not something science can ever locate or study. As we've seen, we need another thought tool besides science (like logical reasoning) in order to study the ultimate cause of reality.

REASON LEADS TO A CREATOR

The cause of the universe made space, so it can't be anything that exists in space.

The cause of the universe made time, so it can't be a force that exists in time.

The cause of all existence would have to be existence itself, or what we call God.

If the cause of the universe created something from nothing, then it must be extremely powerful. In fact, if it could create something from nothing, then there is nothing it could not do, and so it would be "all-powerful." Finally, this cause must be personal and can't be a mindless force because it chose to create a finite universe that is only a few billion years old.

An eternal, immaterial, all-powerful, personal cause is what most people imagine when they hear the word "God." But how do we know the universe began to exist? Maybe the universe has always existed and so didn't need a cause.

EVIDENCE FOR THE BEGINNING

You've probably heard of "the Big Bang," which was not an explosion in space but an expansion of space (as well as time, matter, and energy) from nothing.¹⁵ According to renowned Tufts University cosmologist Alexander Vilenkin, "All the evidence we have says that the universe had a beginning.”¹⁶

THE FATHER OF THE BIG BANG

In the early twentieth century, the Belgian priest and physicist Georges Lemaître showed that Einstein’s new theory of gravity, called general relativity, would cause an eternal universe to collapse into nothingness.

Since Einstein’s theory was sound, this only meant one thing: the universe was not eternal but had a beginning in the past.

Fr. Lemaître and Einstein would often discuss the issue while walking around the campus of Caltech. Einstein was skeptical at first, but in 1933 he proclaimed that Fr. Lemaître’s theory of an expanding universe was one of the most “beautiful theories he had ever heard.”¹⁷ Fr. Lemaître called his theory “the primeval atom,” but another physicist, Fred Hoyle, mocked it with the term “Big Bang.”

Hoyle believed that theories of the universe beginning to exist from nothing were “primitive myths” designed to inject religion into science. But the 1965 discovery of cosmic radiation from the Big Bang, in the words of Hoyle, “killed” his eternal, steady-state view of the universe.¹⁸ Fr. Lemaître learned that his theory of a universe with a beginning had been vindicated, three weeks before he died in 1966.

We can also show from reason alone that the past cannot be eternal and so the universe had a beginning.

Suppose your Aunt Mildred owns a flower shop and each day she has to count every flower before the shop opens. What if she has a hundred flowers? Piece of cake. A trillion? It may take a little longer. How about an infinite number of flowers? Well, the shop never opens because Mildred never finishes counting.

The universe is like the flower shop: the “OPEN” sign represents today, and the flowers represent every day in the past. If the past had an infinite number of days (or flowers), and every day has to happen or “be counted” before today can happen, then today will never happen, just as the flower shop will never open. But it is “today,” so time moved through every day before today. In order to do that, there could not have been an infinite number of days before today. Instead, there must have been a “first day,” or a beginning of time, and thus a beginning of the universe, that needs to be explained.

What about the argument’s first premise: Whatever begins to exist has a cause for its existence?

Some people say that even if the universe began to exist at the Big Bang, it could have come from nothing in the same way tiny particles have been observed in laboratories to come from nothing. But those particles do not come into existence from pure nothingness. Instead, they come from a quantum vacuum, or a low-level energy field. As philosopher and physicist David Albert wrote:

Vacuum states—no less than giraffes or refrigerators or solar systems—are particular arrangements of elementary physical stuff . . . none of these poppings—if you look at them aright—amount to anything even remotely in the neighborhood of a creation from nothing.¹⁹

Virtual particles might come to be from fluctuating quantum fields, but it is impossible for anything (including entire universes) to come into existence from pure nothingness. Instead, the universe must have been created by a cause that exists beyond its boundaries of space and time.

THE DESIGN ARGUMENT

Here's another argument for the existence of God:²⁰

1. Our universe contains particular laws of nature that allow intelligent life to exist.
2. These laws are either necessary, were produced by chance, or were designed.
3. They are not necessary nor were they the product of chance.
4. Therefore, the laws of nature are designed.

In the past fifty years, scientists have discovered that even a slight variation in many of the laws of nature would have spelled disaster for life as we know it.

Consider the cosmological constant, which represents the strength of gravity in an empty vacuum of space. Once thought to be zero, this constant is actually fine-tuned to the 122nd power—a decimal point with 121 zeros and a one. This constant, or numerical value in a law of nature, could have been 10^{122} times larger than what is necessary for life to exist. Alexander Vilenkin wrote:

A tiny deviation from the required power results in a cosmological disaster, such as the fireball collapsing under its own weight or the universe being nearly empty. . . . This is the most notorious and perplexing case of fine-tuning in physics.^{21}

To put this into perspective, the odds of getting this law of nature right by chance alone are the same as finding a randomly marked atom somewhere in the universe.

GET SOME PERSPECTIVE

- 10^{50} : The number of atoms in the planet earth.
 - 10^{80} : The number of atoms in the universe.
 - 10^{122} : The number of ways the strength of gravity in space could have been different and prevented life from existing.
-

Some people say that the universe is not fine-tuned for life because so much of it is hostile to life (such as the vacuum of space). But to say the universe is fine-tuned for life does not mean it is a place where the maximum amount of life will thrive. It only means that out of all the possible universes that could exist, it is much more likely that there would have been no life at all. The fact that our universe does accommodate life, regardless of how much or how little, against such incredible odds, requires an explanation.

So what explains these finely tuned laws of nature?

There's no reason to think the laws of nature must allow life to exist, since we can imagine them being different. We can rule out chance, because the odds of getting the laws of nature right are on par with winning fifty consecutive hands of poker in a row—with royal flushes every time!^{22} (Or one in 10^{300} , and that's a conservative estimate!)^{23}

This leaves design.

Like Alexander Vilenkin, the string theorist Leonard Susskind is a nonreligious scientist. But he says in his article, “Disturbing Implications of the Cosmological Constant,” that unless this constant's value was designed, “statistically miraculous events” would be needed for our universe to be life-permitting. He suggests that, in light of this, it is possible that an unknown agent set the early conditions of the universe we observe today.^{24}

But how do we know this “creator” is God?

Prior to my conversion to Catholicism I was a deist. I believed there was a generic “creator of the universe.” But the more I thought about this “god,” the more I realized that the creator must be God with a capital “G.” God must be infinite and contain all perfections, including perfect love and goodness. Here's what led me to that conclusion . . .

WHY WE BELIEVE: A CREATOR

- Since the universe had a beginning, and the universe includes all space, time, matter, and energy, the universe must have an immaterial cause that exists beyond space and time.
- Science can only study physical objects in time; this means science can never study or naturally explain the cause of the universe.
- The universe contains elements of design and is finite, which means it must have been created by a personal cause and not a mindless force.

Why We Believe in God

In high school I only cared about God when I was in a bind on a math test and figured praying couldn't hurt. But most of the time I didn't think the creator of the universe cared about me. Frankly, I didn't care much about him or "it" either. My attitude began to change, however, one Thursday afternoon in my tenth-grade English class.

My teacher offered to grade one of my papers during lunch after my other classmates left, but a few minutes later a group of students came in with pizza—deliciously greasy, buttered-crust pizza from a local restaurant. It turns out the students were part of a Catholic youth group from a nearby church, and my English teacher was the sponsor of their club. I decided to stick around for the pizza and listen to their conversations about religion.

I attended a few more meetings, and I saw that my concept of God was too small to explain the universe. The people in the club helped me answer this question: "Even if the universe has a creator, how do we know that creator is the all-powerful, all-good God Christians worship?"

THE IDENTITY OF THE CREATOR

One way to establish the creator's identity is to rule out options that don't make sense. For example, some people believe the universe created itself, or that God is the universe. This is called pantheism, which comes from the Greek words for "all" (pan) and "God" (theos).

But if the universe came into existence from nothing, then it would need a cause outside of itself in order to begin to exist. Saying the universe "created itself" is like saying a person conceived himself or that Mark Zuckerberg got the idea to create Facebook from someone who sent him a Facebook message.

But how do you get from what the creator is not, like the universe itself, to what the creator is—in this case, an all-powerful, all-good God? One way is by understanding that there must be an ultimate explanation of reality.

Imagine you and a friend see a boxcar moving on a railroad track. You ask your friend, “What’s pulling that boxcar,” and he replies, “Another boxcar.” Satisfied? No, because that raises another question: “What’s pulling that boxcar?”

Your friend’s explanation wasn’t ultimate or final because it raised another question. Now, imagine this continues until your friend says, “Look, there’s just an infinite number of boxcars each pulling the one before it.” This may be an infinite explanation, but it’s not an ultimate explanation. That’s because it raises the question “Why is the train moving at all?”

Boxcars sit still unless something pulls them. It doesn’t matter if you connect one, two, or an infinite number of them together, they would all do the same thing: remain in place. The motion of the whole train remains unexplained until another entity is proposed: a railroad car that can move itself and pull other cars, or a locomotive.

In the same way, our universe’s existence can’t be explained by an infinite number of other universes that existed before the Big Bang. That wouldn’t explain why there are any universes at all instead of just nothing. Instead, another kind of entity must be proposed: a cause that gives existence to all things but receives existence from no thing. In the thirteenth century, St. Thomas Aquinas defined God as ipsum esse, which is Latin for “existence itself.”

Asking, “If God created everything then who created God?” is like asking, “If the locomotive is pulling the train, then what is pulling the locomotive?” Not every train car needs to be pulled because some cars (like a locomotive) move themselves and explain the movement of all the other cars. Likewise, not everything needs a cause for its existence because one thing (God) is existence itself and explains the existence of all other things.

If God is unlimited being or existence itself, then that means God is infinite. That doesn’t mean God has an infinite number of thoughts or that he is extended over an infinitely long distance. Instead, something is infinite if it doesn’t have any limits. God is the act of being or existence itself and so nothing limits him or his attributes, which include, among other things:

Oneness: Since God has no limits, it follows that he lacks nothing. If there were more than one God, then both of those beings would limit each other in some way. Neither would be truly infinite and so both would be “gods” (or powerful creatures) rather than “God” (the all-powerful creator). If God is the infinite act of existence itself, then there can only be one God.

Omnipresence: God is not “present” everywhere by being identical to everything in the universe (as in pantheism). God is not dispersed through the universe like an invisible gas. Instead, God is present in the universe by sustaining and affecting every part of it. In short, there is no single place or time that contains God. Rather, all places and all times exist because God is existence itself. God perceives all of existence in one eternal “now,” and so he is present in it but not a literal part of it.

IS GOD AS SILLY AS ZEUS?

Beings like Zeus and Thor are gods with a lowercase “g.” They came from other gods, can die, are limited in power, ignorant of some things, and are usually immoral. They are not the unlimited, perfect act of being that explains reality, which we call “God.”

Even intelligent people who lived when these gods were popular didn’t believe in them. In his book Metaphysics, the ancient Greek philosopher Aristotle called gods like Zeus “myths.” However, he said the one, true God “is a living being, eternal, most good, so that life and duration continuous and eternal belong to God; for this is God.”²⁵

Omniscience: Since God sustains all of existence, he is all-knowing, meaning that he knows all real and potentially real things. God knows not just everything that is true now, but also every real thing about the past (such as how many steps George Washington took in his lifetime) and every real thing about the future (such as whether you will finish reading this page).

But if God knows what I will do tomorrow, doesn’t that mean I’m not free to do anything different? No, because God’s knowledge of the future doesn’t determine the future. God isn’t in time like you or I. He exists beyond time and sees all of it in one eternal moment. Just as me looking at you in the present doesn’t stop you from sitting in a chair, God “looking” at you in the future from his position outside of time doesn’t stop you from sitting in a chair or doing anything else at that time either.

Omnipotence: Being omnipotent, or all-powerful, means that God has the power to do anything that is logically possible. God can do anything, but some combinations of words are nonsensical and so they don’t even count as “things” for God to do. For God to make a “square circle” or “a rock so heavy he can’t lift it,” or for him to destroy himself, would involve a logical contradiction. As a result, such things do not fall under the category of “anything that can actually be done,” and so they have nothing to do with God’s unlimited power.

God can do anything, but some combinations of words are nonsensical and so they don't even count as "things" for God to do.

Omnibenevolence: Think about all the bad things in life: cancer, serial killers, times when the fast-food restaurant messes up your order. What do all these bad things, from the trivial to the terrible, have in common? The answer: they're all missing something good.

Cancer is uncontrolled cell growth, so it lacks organization and health. Serial killers are people who lack empathy and love, which would keep them from committing their crimes. And a cheeseburger without cheese, well, that's just a hamburger. So how does this prove God is all-good?

You or I, or any other creature, will always lack something because we have limits. But God has no limits because he's infinite; therefore he lacks nothing. That doesn't mean every good and evil thing is in God because, as we've seen, evil is just the absence of good. Because evil is a lack of good, and God lacks nothing, it follows that God must be all-good.

All the perfections we see in the world have their source in God. God doesn't just have love, or beauty, or goodness: God is love, God is beauty, and God is goodness. But if God is all-good and all-powerful, then why is there so much evil and suffering in the world? It is to that important question we turn next.

IS GOD A "HE"?

Catholics refer to God as he, but that doesn't mean they think God is a literal male. The Catholic Church teaches: "By calling God 'Father,' the language of faith indicates two main things: that God is the first origin of everything and transcendent authority; and that he is at the same time goodness and loving care for all his children . . . [God] is neither man nor woman. God is pure spirit in which there is no place for the difference between the sexes. But the respective 'perfections' of man and woman reflect something of the infinite perfection of God."²⁶

WHY WE BELIEVE: GOD

- Reality requires an ultimate explanation that does not need to be explained by anything else, or what we could call unlimited "being" or "existence" itself.
- This ultimate explanation, or God, must be infinite. Since this cause lacks nothing, that means it alone contains all knowledge and all power.

- God must be all-good because, although he lacks nothing, evil is just an absence of good.

Why We Believe God Conquers Evil

People sometimes ask me, “What’s the hardest question you’ve ever answered about the Catholic faith?” They usually expect the question to be a very technical one, but the toughest questions I get tend to be simple and personal:

“If God is all good, why did he let my son die in a car accident?”

“If God is all loving, then why do children get cancer?”

“If God is all powerful, then why doesn’t he fix what’s wrong with the world?”

The problem of evil and suffering is one of the oldest arguments against the existence of God. If God is all-good and all-powerful, then evil should not exist. But evil does exist. Therefore, God must either be weak, evil, or nonexistent.

This argument is very powerful on an emotional level, but from a logical perspective it doesn’t prove that there is no God. In fact, objective good and evil provide evidence for the existence of God.

WHAT IS EVIL?

In order to understand how God could allow evil to exist, we have to understand what “evil” is.

Evil is not a thing that God created but an absence of good that God tolerates. Evil is a parasite that can’t exist without the good just as rust can’t exist without the metal it corrupts. Moral evils like rape or murder, for example, can’t exist without the good of people who can freely choose to do right or wrong. Natural evils, such as blindness and disease, can’t exist without good things like animals or plants.

Even though God didn’t create evil, we can still ask, “Why does God allow evils like murder or blindness to exist?”

Evil is a parasite that feeds off the good.

The short answer is this: it's okay to allow evil to exist if by doing so you bring about more good or prevent a greater evil. Humans allow the evil of car accidents, for example, because the regular use of streets and highways brings about a greater good. We could get rid of car accidents by getting rid of cars, but that solution would be worse than the problem we're trying to solve.

Similarly, God could get rid of moral evils like rape by getting rid of human beings or by taking away their free will, but the world would be a worse place if we were all robots. Our world wouldn't have goods like heroism, compassion, or even love, and humans would become the moral equivalents of programmable appliances.

But what about natural evils like disease or disasters that aren't related to our free will? These evils may help us develop virtues that could not exist if God eliminated every instance of suffering. For example, it's impossible for God to make someone be courageous if he is not in danger. They might also be necessary for us to live in a predictable world where God doesn't intervene every five seconds to protect us from pain.

Finally, as limited and fallible human beings, we are not in a position to say God cannot bring more good from any evil we encounter. Imagine a man who stands one inch away from the Mona Lisa and says, "This is a terrible painting! It's just some black splotches!" Of course, the man can't appreciate the beauty and goodness of the whole painting because he is only looking at one tiny part of it. In the same way, if we only look at suffering, we lose sight of the big picture, or how God can use suffering to create a good and beautiful world.

Consider the case of Nick Vujicic, who was born without arms or legs. As a child he was so depressed he tried to drown himself in a bathtub. However, after coming to know God and seeing that his life was not an accident, Nick was transformed. He now travels the world to share how God's love penetrates our deepest suffering. He writes, "Even in the worst situations that seem beyond our capacities, God knows how much our hearts can bear. I hold on to the belief that our life here is temporary, as we are being prepared for eternity."²⁷

THE HEART OF THE PROBLEM

For a person who is suffering, I understand why this answer may not be satisfying. “I don’t care!” she says. “If God loved me he’d take away this pain in my life. He wouldn’t let so many bad things happen to people!”

That’s a normal response to horrendous suffering, and that’s why I agree with my friend and colleague Jimmy Akin, who watched his wife die of cancer shortly after they were married. He says, “God doesn’t always give us reasons to explain our suffering, but he does give us ways to help us endure it.” One thing that helps me endure suffering is the realization that evil doesn’t make sense if there is no God.

A lot of people say evil is just “bad things” or “stuff that hurts,” but those definitions don’t work. Having a cavity filled or being punished for a crime you committed hurt, but they aren’t evil. In fact, these are examples of good medicine or good law enforcement. On the other hand, there can be instances of evil that don’t cause pain. A man who fantasizes about raping children but never acts out his fantasies doesn’t cause pain, but obviously the man has evil thoughts, not good ones.

Here’s a better definition: Evil is what we experience when things are not the way they are supposed to be.

Rape, murder, cancer, and other bad things are evil because they distort the way the world should be. Sex should be an act of love, not an act of violence. Cells should grow into body parts, not tumors. If evil refers to the way things are not supposed to be, then good must refer to the way things are supposed to be. But if things are supposed to be a certain way, then that means there is both a cosmic plan and a cosmic planner—a planner that many people call God.

AN ATHEIST ADMITS: MORALITY PROVES GOD EXISTS

The atheist philosopher J.L. Mackie wrote, “Moral properties constitute so odd a cluster of properties and relations that they are most unlikely to have arisen in the ordinary course of events without an all-powerful god to create them.”^{28}

Mackie believed in atheism so strongly that he denied the existence of objective moral truths, even though they seem real to most people. Perhaps we should accept that morality is real and that it comes from an all-powerful God who is goodness itself.

MEANT FOR MORE

Not only is the universe supposed to be a certain way, you and I are supposed to be a certain way. When society embraces evils like genocide or slavery, the heroes are people who say it's better to do what's right than to accept what's popular. Martin Luther King Jr. even said, "A just law is a man-made code that squares with the moral law or the law of God."²⁹

On the other hand, when we do something wrong, even if no one finds out about it, we feel guilty. We feel as if we've failed to live up to a standard of who we were meant to be. Most of us have told someone after we've hurt them, "I'm so sorry, that's not who I am." The reason we feel this way is because God gave us his moral law and wrote it on our hearts in the form of a conscience.³⁰ The Bible even teaches that people who don't personally know God still know him through their conscience (Rom. 2:14-16).

God gave us the moral law not so that we would feel guilty, but so that we could be truly happy. Imagine how wonderful life would be if no one lied, stole, held grudges, or used another person. Deep down we know we were made to be this kind of person, and suffering in this life can even help us achieve that goal. My favorite verse in the Bible puts it this way:

Accept whatever is brought upon you, and in changes that humble you be patient. For gold is tested in the fire, and acceptable men in the furnace of humiliation. Trust in him [God], and he will help you; make your ways straight, and hope in him (Sir. 2:4-6).

GOD'S LOVE AMID NAZI HORROR

One of the inmates at the Nazi concentration camp Auschwitz was a priest named Maximilian Kolbe. After a prisoner was thought to have escaped, the guards selected ten men to die in a starvation bunker in order to teach the remaining prisoners a lesson. The guards began to drag away a man named Franciszek, who dug his heels into the mud on the ground as he cried out, "My poor wife! My poor children!" At that moment, Fr. Kolbe stepped forward and said, "I am a Catholic priest. Let me take his place. I am old. He has a wife and children."³¹

The guards allowed Fr. Kolbe to take Franciszek's place, and over the next two weeks he comforted the other men who had been sentenced to die. Whenever the guards looked into his cell, Fr. Kolbe was either standing or kneeling in prayer. After all the other prisoners had died, the guards did not wait for Fr. Kolbe to starve to death. They instead injected his left arm with carbolic acid and later cremated his remains.

Was this an example of evil that proves God does not exist?

The fact that what the Nazis did was objectively wrong proves there is a universal standard for morality that comes from a universal source of goodness, or God. Morality can't just be a survival mechanism that humans developed through the process of evolution, because some people feel compelled to do things that don't help our survival, like giving their life for a stranger. If we are all made in God's image, however, then that explains our desire to fight and even die for the dignity of someone else. In fact, Franciszek survived his time at Auschwitz and spent the rest of his life publicly speaking about Fr. Kolbe's heroism.

What gave Fr. Kolbe the strength to face such tremendous evil and suffering? As a priest, he devoted his life to imitating Jesus Christ, and Jesus was willing to do anything to save humanity from its sins, including dying a painful and humiliating death on a cross. Because Jesus is the divine Son of God, he was able to offer an infinite, perfect sacrifice of love that made up for the sins of the whole world. For those who believe in Jesus, this sacrifice means death is not the end of life, but rather the beginning of a new life with God in heaven. As he prepared for his execution, I wouldn't be surprised if Fr. Kolbe thought of this verse from the Bible: "O death, where is thy victory? O death, where is thy sting?" (1 Cor. 15:55).

The problem of evil is not God's problem—it's ours.

If there is a perfect, objective standard of goodness, then whenever we choose evil we fall short of that standard. But the moral standards are not like the impersonal rules of mathematics. Morality is about people choosing between good and evil, so the perfect standard of morality must come from a perfect person, or God. This means that whenever we choose evil we separate ourselves from God, who is the Good itself.

Thankfully, by rising from the dead, Jesus showed that anyone who trusts in him would also share in his resurrection to eternal life. God will give everyone who follows Jesus the gift of grace, or the free offer of God's divine life. God's grace equips us to die to ourselves and, if necessary, to die for others.

But how do we know Jesus is God? How do we know he rose from the dead? What if those stories about Jesus are just stories? We have examined philosophical evidence for the existence of God, but now we must examine historical evidence that shows this God revealed himself to the world in the person of Jesus Christ.

WHY WE BELIEVE: GOD CONQUERS EVIL

- Evil is an absence of good.
- A good being can allow evil to exist if he uses that evil to bring about greater goods.
- Objective good and evil only make sense if there is an objective moral law that comes from a perfect lawgiver, or God.

PART 2

JESUS

the BIBLE

Why We Believe in Jesus

Many people believe that there is a God, or at least a “higher power” that created the universe. What they don’t believe is that they need to be religious in order to understand God. They ask, “Why should I be a part of a religion like Christianity with all of its rules and hypocrisy? I’d rather be spiritual instead of religious.”

SPIRITUAL VERSUS RELIGIOUS

First, it’s not bad to be spiritual. A spiritual person knows there’s more to reality than physical matter. He may even thank God for the beautiful world he created. But just as most people would love to meet their favorite artist, a truly spiritual person would want to know the artist who created the entire universe. This process of coming to know God and responding to his revelation is the essence of religion.

WHAT DOES THE BIBLE SAY ABOUT RELIGION?

“If any one thinks he is religious, and does not bridle his tongue but deceives his heart, this man’s religion is vain. Religion that is pure and undefiled before God and the Father is this: to visit orphans and widows in their affliction, and to keep oneself unstained from the world” (James 1:26-27).

Hypocrisy, violence, and “long lists of rules” aren’t good reasons to reject organized religion, or any organized human activity. Imagine someone who said, “I don’t believe in organized sports. Sports leagues are filled with cheaters and the fans are obnoxious jerks. Some of them even cause violence when they riot after games. And there are so many pointless rules! I can be athletic on my own without playing or even watching organized sports.”³²

You can see how this compares to critiques of organized religion.

Just as it would be unfair to say all athletes are cheaters or all sports fans are jerks, it’s unfair to smear all Christians as hypocrites. The same is true when it comes to claims of religious violence, like the idea that “religion is responsible for most wars.” Sports rioters don’t speak for all sports fans and violent religious people don’t speak for all the faithful. Most wars aren’t fought over religion but for non-religious reasons, such as securing land or natural resources.

What about religion’s supposedly pointless rules?

First, every culture has expectations for behavior that, if you wrote them all down, would be a rather long list of rules. Say “please” and “thank you,” put away your phone at dinner, take off your shoes when you come into the house, don’t dive into the shallow end of the pool, and so on. The NFL’s official rulebook is more than 300 pages long—and that’s just for one game! Since God loves us, and life is more complicated than table manners or football, we shouldn’t be surprised that God’s revelation would include a fair number of principles to help us be happy and spiritually healthy.

But how do we know these principles really come from God and weren’t just invented by human beings? How do we know which revelation or which religious rules to follow? We can find out by turning our focus to the most important person in all of human history.

THE JESUS QUESTION

When I was deciding whether or not I should be a Christian, I made sure to read about as many other religions as I could. At first it was overwhelming to compare the teachings of faiths like Islam, Hinduism, and Buddhism to Christianity, but then I noticed they all had one thing I could compare: a teaching about Jesus Christ.

NON-BIBLICAL EVIDENCE FOR JESUS

The first-century Jewish historian Josephus said Jesus was a wise man who Pontius Pilate condemned to the cross.³³ In the early second century, the Roman historian Tacitus said Christians received their name from “Christus,” who “was put to death by Pontius Pilate, procurator of Judea in the reign of Tiberius.”³⁴ Bart Ehrman, an agnostic scholar who is a leading expert on the Bible, wrote, “The view that Jesus existed is held by virtually every expert on the planet.”³⁵

Almost every major world religion has a teaching about the identity of Jesus. Jews say Jesus was a human teacher, Muslims say he was a prophet, and Hindus and Buddhists say Jesus was an “enlightened man.” They all say basically the same thing: Jesus was a great man, but he's not God. If it turned out that Jesus was God, however, then even though these religions have some good teachings, I knew they couldn't be God's revelation. How could they if they failed to teach about the incredible moment when God became man in the person of Jesus Christ?

Isn't it amazing that even the name Jesus Christ can cause tension and discomfort? Some people say it's because that name reminds people of negative experiences they had at church or of violent Christian history. But the words "Christianity" or "Catholic Church" don't cause the same anxiety. I would argue that this name stirs strong feelings in people because the name itself has power. And the name of Jesus has power because the person who bears that name is God in human flesh and has infinite power.

WHAT'S IN A NAME?

- Jesus: From the Hebrew Yeshua, which means "God saves."
 - Christ: From the Greek Christos, a title that means "anointed one" and has the general meaning of "savior."
-

Why should we believe such an incredible claim? Here are three reasons:

1. Jesus believed he was God, and we can trust him.

Jesus saw himself as more than a human prophet or teacher. For example, Buddha said, "Be ye lamps unto yourselves . . . hold fast to the truth as a refuge,"³⁶ whereas Jesus said, "I am the light of the world" (John 8:12). Jesus also said, "I am the way, and the truth, and the life; no one comes to the Father, but by me" (John 14:6).

Another clue to Jesus' divine identity is that Jesus acted like God. For example, he forgave sins, which is something that only God has the authority to do (Mark 2:5-7). In John 20:28, Jesus' disciple Thomas addressed him as "My Lord and my God." Jesus did not correct Thomas, because what Thomas said was true.

BIBLICAL EVIDENCE FOR THE DIVINITY OF CHRIST

- Jesus is called God (John 1:1, Titus 2:13, Col. 2:9).
- Jesus acts like God (Mark 2:5-7, Luke 22:29, John 8:58-59).
- Jesus is honored like God (John 20:28, Phil. 2:5-11, Heb. 1:6-8).

In the Hebrew Bible, the name of God was considered so sacred it couldn't be pronounced. Even today many Jews spell the name "God" with a hyphen ("G-d") in order not to disrespect the name. But in John 8:58, Jesus used that sacred, unpronounceable name of God for himself.

He said that "before Abraham was, I am," implying that he eternally existed as God before Abraham, who lived thousands of years earlier. This act infuriated the Jewish leaders and motivated them to kill Jesus for blasphemy. But it wasn't blasphemous for Jesus to use God's name because he is God.

At this point someone might say, "I'll grant that Jesus wasn't a liar (since he was a good teacher), and he wasn't a lunatic (since he was a wise teacher), but maybe he was a legend. How do we know Jesus really said he was God? What if someone added that to the Bible in order to cover up a story about a merely human Jesus?"

This brings us to our next reason.

2. We can trust the New Testament documents.

There currently exist more than 5,500 copies of Greek New Testament manuscripts. There are also 15,000 copies written in other languages like Latin, Coptic, and Syriac. The first complete copy of the New Testament can be dated to within 300 years of the original documents.³⁷ Now, compare this to one of the most famous examples of ancient Greek literature: Homer's Iliad. It was written in the eighth century B.C. and, although a few fragments of the Iliad can be dated to within 500 years of Homer, the oldest complete copy was written in the tenth century A.D., or 1,800 years later!

Because there were so many copies of the New Testament in the ancient world (including thousands more that didn't survive to the present day), no single person or group could have gathered them all up and changed the story of Jesus. Also, unlike the biographies of people like Alexander the Great or Buddha, which were written centuries after those figures died, the Bible's descriptions of Jesus were written within a few decades of his death either by eyewitnesses or people who knew the eyewitnesses to Jesus' ministry.³⁸

The biblical scholar F.F. Bruce put it bluntly: "There is no body of ancient literature in the world which enjoys such a wealth of good textual attestation as the New Testament."³⁹

3. The first Christians worshipped Jesus as God.

The earliest Christian writings show that they believed Jesus was the "image of the invisible God” (Col. 1:15), in whom the fullness of deity dwells bodily (Col. 2:8-9). Jesus had the “form of God” and a name to which every knee shall bend (Phil. 2:5-11). The Bible even calls Jesus “our great God and savior” (Titus 2:13).

When a second-century Roman governor named Pliny the Younger asked Christians to worship the gods of Rome, they refused. In a letter explaining this behavior to the Roman emperor, Pliny said that Christians “were in the habit of meeting on a certain fixed day before it was light, when they sang in alternate verse a hymn to Christ as to a god, and bound themselves to a solemn oath.”

Remember also that the first Christians were converts from Judaism. For more than 1,000 years the Jewish people made themselves distinct from their pagan neighbors by refusing to worship an animal or a man as God. The Jews of Jesus’ time would never have believed Jesus was God unless his miracles, including his resurrection from the dead, proved it.

Since Jesus did prove he was God, we can trust him when he says, “I am the resurrection and the life; he who believes in me, though he die, yet shall he live, and whoever lives and believes in me shall never die. Do you believe this?” (John 11:25-26).

THE LITTLE FLOWER OF JESUS

In 1887, Henri Panzini was found guilty of a brutal triple murder in Paris. Fourteen-year-old Thérèse Martin, the youngest daughter of a devout Catholic family, heard he was unrepentant, and prayed night and day that he would not go to hell. She then received news that as Panzini’s head was placed under the guillotine, he reached out for a crucifix a priest was holding and kissed it three times. She wrote in her autobiography about God’s answer to her prayer:

“What an unmistakably sweet response! After this unique grace my desire to save souls grows each day . . . the thirst of my poor little soul increased and it was this ardent thirst he was giving me as the most delightful drink of his love.”⁴⁰

Thérèse desperately wanted to become a nun, but her local bishop refused because she was so young. A few months after Panzini’s execution, Thérèse met with Pope Leo XIII, and her request was granted. She called herself “the little flower of Jesus” because she thought of herself not as a magnificent rose, but as a simple wildflower blooming where God planted her.

Even though she died of tuberculosis at the age of twenty-four, her autobiography has inspired countless people to follow Jesus and glorify him in any circumstance, no matter how humble. Ironically, the simple wisdom of the Little Flower has had such a profound impact that, in 1997, Thérèse was declared a Doctor of the Church. Of the approximately 10,000 saints the Catholic Church recognizes, only thirty-six have been granted this title.

WHY WE BELIEVE: JESUS

- If God exists and revealed himself to man, then we should not be surprised he has given us a way to respond to him, or what some call “organized religion.”
- Jesus claimed to be God, and he is too good to be a liar and too wise to be a lunatic.
- Textual evidence shows that the Bible can be trusted and that Jesus’ claims to divinity were not a later legend that was added to the Bible.

Why We Believe in the Resurrection

The Bible says that if Jesus did not rise from the dead, then the Christian faith is worthless (1 Cor. 15:17). However, if Jesus did rise from the dead, then we know Jesus can keep his promise to give everyone who follows him eternal life (1 John 2:25). But how can we know that Jesus really rose from the dead and that the Bible's description of this miracle wasn't just a story someone made up?

One way is by showing that the Resurrection is the only explanation for the events surrounding Jesus' death, events that almost everyone, including skeptics, agrees are historical. Even scholars who don't think the Bible is the word of God admit it is not completely made up. For example, skeptical scholar John Dominic Crossan denies that Jesus rose from the dead, but he says, "That he was crucified is as sure as anything historical can ever be."⁴¹

Similarly, the atheist New Testament scholar Gerd Ludemann said, "It may be taken as historically certain that Peter and the disciples had experiences after Jesus' death in which Jesus appeared to them as the risen Christ."⁴² Ludemann doesn't think Jesus actually rose from the dead, but that the apostles experienced a hallucination instead. He does think, however, the apostles thought they saw the risen Jesus, and this fact of history needs to be explained.

As we examine the various theories put forward to explain these facts, you will see that only one theory explains: 1) Jesus' death by Crucifixion; 2) his empty tomb; 3) the post-Crucifixion appearances to the disciples; and 4) the disciples' willingness to die for their faith: the theory that Jesus actually rose from the dead.

THE SWOON THEORY

One way to explain these facts would be to posit that Jesus never really died. Maybe he just passed out on the cross and woke up in a tomb. Jesus then met up with the disciples who mistakenly thought he'd risen from the dead. But even if Jesus somehow survived the Crucifixion, the apostles would never have thought he'd miraculously risen from the dead. Upon seeing his bloody, mutilated body, they would have thought Jesus had cheated death, not beaten it, and quickly gotten him medical treatment.

Besides, there is almost no chance Jesus could have survived being crucified. In 1986, the American Medical Association published a paper that analyzed ancient records of the Crucifixion.⁴³ It came to the conclusion that it would have been nearly impossible for Jesus to survive the intense flogging that ripped his skin apart as well as the asphyxiation brought on by being crucified.

THE TRASH THEORY

How do we know Jesus wasn't just thrown into an anonymous grave and was forgotten until the disciples imagined they saw him alive again? We'll discuss the theory that the disciples hallucinated in a moment, but let's first consider the idea that Jesus received a dishonorable burial and his body was abandoned in a common grave for criminals.

Deuteronomy 21:22-23 prohibited the Jewish people from leaving a criminal hanging on a tree, so Jesus would have to have been buried immediately after he died on the cross. In fact, the only skeleton archaeologists have from a first-century crucifixion victim was found in a tomb, and not a random plot in a criminal's graveyard.⁴⁴ Jesus' burial in a tomb is also described in all four Gospels and corroborated in Paul's first letter to the Corinthians.

The Gospels say Joseph of Arimathea, a member of the council that condemned Jesus to death, buried him (though John 3:1-2 tells us Joseph was a disciple of Jesus, but in secret, out of fear of the other Jewish leaders). If the Gospel writers had invented the story of Jesus being buried in a tomb, they would have given their leader an honorable burial at the hands of his friends and family.

This means we have good historical evidence that after the Crucifixion Jesus' body was placed in an identifiable tomb and simply didn't vanish in a common graveyard.

THE HALLUCINATION THEORY

Most historians agree the disciples thought they saw the risen Jesus. The story of Jesus appearing to them was not a legend that developed centuries later, but was recorded by the apostle Paul (1 Cor. 15:3-7). It is almost universally recognized among historians that Paul existed, we have the letters he wrote, and Paul knew the people who claimed to have seen the risen Jesus (Gal. 1:18-19). But could those experiences have just been hallucinations brought on by the terrible grief these men endured after Jesus was executed?

First, it is individuals, not groups, who almost always experience hallucinations. Multiple biblical authors confirm that groups of Jesus' disciples claimed to see him after his death (Luke 24:36-49, 1 Cor. 15:5-6). As psychologist Gary Collins writes, "By their very nature only one person can see a given hallucination at a time. They certainly aren't something which can be seen by a group of people."⁴⁵

Second, the theory that Jesus' depressed disciples hallucinated his resurrection doesn't explain why enemies of the Church came to believe in the Resurrection. The most famous example would be St. Paul, who was a Jewish leader who persecuted the Church until an encounter with the risen Christ moved him to join the "Jewish heresy" he had been persecuting. The best explanation for such a sudden conversion is that Jesus really did appear to Paul, just as he had appeared to his other disciples after his resurrection.

AN ATHEIST ADMITS: THE EVIDENCE IS OVERWHELMING

Antony Flew was at one time one of the most famous atheists in the Western world. His essay "Theology and Falsification" is one of the most widely printed essays in the history of twentieth-century philosophy. That is why it is remarkable that even he admitted in a debate with a Christian that "the evidence for the Resurrection is better than for claimed miracles in any other religion. It's outstandingly different in quality and quantity."⁴⁶

For example, the Qu'ran does not record Muhammad performing miracles, and the earliest sources about Buddha say he refused to perform miracles.⁴⁷ Both men are described as performing miracles only in legends written centuries after their deaths. This stands in sharp contrast to the accounts of Christ's resurrection that we find in the Bible. Unlike the stories of other ancient wonder-workers, these Christian accounts were written decades (not centuries) after the events they describe and are preserved in multiple sources.

THE EMPTY TOMB

Soon after a close friend of mine died a few years ago I had an incredibly vivid dream that she was alive. If I had experienced her presence when I was awake, I would have checked her grave and, if it was empty, then I would know I hadn't been hallucinating. This brings us to the simplest argument against the hallucination theory: at any time the apostles could have visited Jesus' tomb to see if there was a body in it, which would prove that the Jesus they thought they saw was just a hallucination.

We've already seen that it is historically certain Jesus was buried in a locatable tomb. The Gospels tell us that on the Sunday after the Resurrection a group of women discovered the tomb was empty. But why should we believe Jesus' tomb was empty and that the authors of the Gospels didn't make this up? There are actually three reasons and they can be summarized in the acronym JET.⁴⁸

First, the disciples preached the empty tomb in the city of Jerusalem. If the tomb were not empty, enemies of the early Church could easily have taken the body out of the tomb and proven Jesus did not rise from the dead.

Second, the earliest enemies of the Church agreed that Jesus' tomb was empty. Matthew's Gospel says the Jewish leaders of his day (about forty to fifty years after the Crucifixion) believed Jesus' body was stolen from the tomb (Matt. 28:11-15). The second-century Christian writer St. Justin Martyr also says that the Jews of his time believed Jesus' body was stolen.⁴⁹ I'll explain in a moment why that theory fails, but notice that these critics didn't say that the disciples merely hallucinated—they had to explain why Jesus' tomb was empty.

Finally, the Gospels include the testimony of women discovering the tomb. In Jesus' time a woman's testimony was considered to be as reliable as that of a child or a criminal. A collection of ancient Jewish wisdom called the Talmud says, "The words of the Torah should be burned rather than entrusted to women."⁵⁰ The Jewish historian Josephus said that a woman's "levity and boldness" made her testimony unreliable.⁵¹ If the Gospel authors had invented the story about Jesus' tomb being found empty, they would have used trustworthy characters like Peter or John. The embarrassing detail about women discovering the empty tomb was included in the story simply because that's what really happened.

WAS JESUS' TOMB REALLY EMPTY?

J—Apostles preached in Jerusalem where an empty tomb could be disproved.

E—Enemies of the faith agree the tomb was empty.

T—The embarrassing testimony of women is unlikely to have been made up.

THE FRAUD THEORY

Is it possible the disciples stole Jesus' body and then told people their Messiah had risen from the dead? It's not impossible, but this theory seems extremely unlikely. That's because there's no evidence of any crack in the conspiracy—no record of a single Christian admitting after the fact that it was all a hoax. Moreover, fraud is normally committed for personal gain; the only thing the disciples had to gain from their fraud was persecution and death. Since people don't knowingly die for a lie, we can be confident Jesus' disciples really believed in the Resurrection they preached to others.⁵²

Of course, people throughout history have died for many things they thought were true. Muslim suicide bombers die for the Islamic faith because they believe God will reward them in heaven, but their sincerity does not prove Islam is correct. The key difference, however, is that Muslim suicide bombers are not in a position to know if Islam is false (they never interacted with the Muslim prophet Muhammad, who lived centuries before them). The apostles, on the other hand, were in a position to know whether Christianity was false by examining Jesus' tomb and seeing if his body was still there.

There is no chance they were all deceived or that they all chose to die painful deaths in order to deceive others. What's more likely is that Jesus' resurrection really happened and gave them the courage to share this good news in the face of persecution. They knew that even if they were to die through Christ they would live forever. We, too, can have eternal life if we trust in God's promises and choose to be baptized into the Resurrection of Jesus Christ (Rom. 6:3-5).

"I'M READY TO BE A CHRISTIAN"

I remember staying up one night in high school watching debates on the Internet between Christians and atheists. One question kept bothering me: How did it all start? Christianity didn't begin with one person having visions of God that no one else could confirm. It began with the public proclamation that a man had been raised from the dead. It was accompanied by historical evidence, like the empty tomb that proved this was not a hoax or a hallucination. That night I realized Jesus was really alive and he was the God "out there" I had vaguely thought about for so many years. I then bowed my head, opened up my palms, and prayed, "Jesus, if you're real, help me believe. I'm ready to be a Christian."

WHY WE BELIEVE: THE RESURRECTION

- Even skeptics admit that Jesus was crucified, buried, his tomb was found empty, his disciples saw him after his death, and they were willing to die for that truth.
- Other explanations, like hallucination or fraud, only explain some of these facts.
- The most plausible explanation for all these facts is that Jesus really did rise from the dead.

Why We Believe in the Trinity

When I was walking home after school with my friend Adam I told him about what I'd been discussing with the students at the Catholic youth group.

I said, "So we were talking about Jesus and they think he's God."

"You mean the God who made everything?"

"Yeah."

Adam looked down to ponder this and then said, "But I thought they believed Jesus was the Son of God, not God."

"They do," I replied, "but I'm not sure about the difference. I'll look into it."

Then I hit the books, especially The Catechism of the Catholic Church. This is basically the manual that explains what Catholics believe. According to the Catechism, Christians believe in one God who exists as a Trinity of three divine persons—the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit. It says, "The divine persons do not share the one divinity among themselves but each of them is God whole and entire" (CCC 253).

But how can there be one God who is three persons? Isn't that a contradiction?

WHAT IS THE TRINITY?

In order to understand the Trinity, we must understand three key words: being, person, and nature.

A being is an existing entity, or "that something is"; a person is a rational individual or "who someone is"; and a nature refers to "what something is." For example, you exist so you are a kind of being (in this case, an animal). You are also a person who has a human nature, that is, you have the capacity to act in distinctly human ways. So you are a being who is one person and possesses one human nature.

DEFINING OUR TERMS:

- Being: An existing entity (that something is).
- Person: A relation or individual capable of reasoning (who something is).
- Nature: The traits and ends of a certain being (what something is).

God is one being that exists as three persons who each fully possess the divine nature.

So how does this relate to God? Christians do not believe God is one person with infinite attributes. That belief, held for example by Jews and Muslims, is called unitarianism. Christians believe that God is one being who exists as three persons, each of whom fully possess the divine nature. Christians are not unitarians but trinitarians. They believe that because there is only one God, and the Bible shows that the Father is God, the Son is God, and the Holy Spirit is God, this means the one God must be three persons. Matthew 28:19 hints at this reality when it says that Jesus commanded baptism in the name (not names) of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit.

IS THE HOLY SPIRIT GOD?

Many people think the Holy Spirit is just some kind of force, but the Bible describes the Spirit speaking in sentences to people, proving he is a person (Acts 13:2). The Bible also says the Holy Spirit will guide us “into all the truth” (John 16:13), and that the Spirit alone comprehends the thoughts of God (1 Cor. 2:11). Who else but God can know all truth or comprehend God’s thoughts?

The apostle Peter shows us that the Holy Spirit is God when he asks Ananias, who lied and held back money due to the apostles, “Ananias, why has Satan filled your heart to lie to the Holy Spirit and to keep back part of the proceeds of the land? . . .

You have not lied to men but to God” (Acts 5:3-4).

Not only is the Holy Spirit a person who can be lied to, but lying to the Holy Spirit is the same as lying to God, because the Holy Spirit is the third person of the Trinity.

The Trinity can’t be grasped if we think of “beings” and “persons” as the same thing. If we recognize that there are beings that are zero persons (such as rocks and trees) and there are beings that are one person (such as humans and angels), then we see there could be a being that is three persons, or God.

GOD OR A GOD?

One way to understand the Trinity is to look at religions that misunderstand it. For example, when I was speaking to two Mormon missionaries, we discussed whether they believed Jesus was God. They said, “Absolutely, Jesus is the Son of God.” I then asked them if they would pray to Jesus. They became visibly uncomfortable and said, “No, Mormons don’t do that.”

The reason Mormons don’t pray to Jesus is because they believe the Trinity is a collection of three separate divine beings, not three persons in one being, and that the Father created the Son and the Holy Spirit.⁵³ They even believe Jesus is our “eldest brother,” and if we follow what the Mormon Church teaches we will become “gods,” just like Jesus and the Father “became gods” at one point in the past.⁵⁴ This, of course, contradicts the evidence we discussed earlier, which shows that the Creator of the universe must exist without limit and so there can be only one infinite God. It also contradicts the testimony of Scripture, which says there is only one God (Deut. 4:39, Isa. 45:5, John 17:3).⁵⁵

After hearing this, I told the missionaries, “I appreciate that you’re trying to share your faith, but I love being a Christian. The reason I could never become a Mormon is because I would miss the relationship I have with Jesus Christ. I love praying to Jesus and knowing he isn’t ‘a god’ but, as the apostle Thomas said, ‘My Lord and my God’” (John 20:28).

Jehovah’s Witnesses also deny the Trinity because they believe there is only one “true” or “mighty God,” who is the Father. They say Jesus is just “a god” the Father created, because Jesus said, “the Father is greater than I” (John 14:28). But when Jesus said this he meant the Father was greater than him in position since, at that time, the Father gloriously reigned in heaven while Jesus humbly ministered on earth.

When God the Son became man, he was made “lower than the angels” (Heb. 2:9), but Jesus was not an exalted man or some kind of angel. (Jehovah’s Witnesses think Jesus and Michael the archangel are the same person.)⁵⁶ Hebrews 1:4-6 says Jesus has become as much superior to angels as the name he has obtained is more excellent than theirs. For to what angel did God ever say, “Thou art my Son, today I have begotten thee”? Or again, “I will be to him a father, and he shall be to me a son”? And again, when he brings the first-born into the world, he says, “Let all God’s angels worship him” (emphasis added).⁵⁷

Angels don’t worship other angels; they worship only God. But if the son of a dog is a dog, and the son of man is a man, then the son of God must be God. If there is only one God, then God must exist as more than one person that can be worshipped: the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit.

CAN GOD DIE?

Some people ask, “How can Jesus be God if he prayed to God? How can Jesus be God if he died on a cross?”

Saying that “Jesus is God” means Jesus is a divine person, one of three divine persons who belong to the Trinity. The Father and the Holy Spirit did not become man, but the Son did. In doing so Jesus remained one divine person, with a fully divine nature, but he also assumed an additional human nature. Therefore, whatever is true of Jesus is also true of God, even if it may sound strange at first. For example, since Jesus died on the cross, it is also true that God died on the cross, because Jesus is God.

Of course, God did not go out of existence, but that is not what it means to die. Death occurs when a living being’s parts are separated into their basic elements, or they decompose. Jesus’ soul was separated from his body, so Jesus, the God-man, died. Jesus did not go out of existence, but his soul did exist apart from his body. However, through Jesus’ divine nature, he was able to reunite his body and soul and raise himself from the dead.⁵⁸ God died on the cross, but he also rose from the dead to glorious eternal life.

Likewise, when Jesus prayed to God he wasn’t talking to himself—he was praying to the Father. Since God is more than one person, there is no contradiction in God the Son becoming man and praying to the Father who is in heaven. God is our father by adoption (Rom. 8:15), but Jesus’ father by nature (John 1:18), since both the Father and the Son are equally divine. In fact, the Bible tells us that the Jews wanted to stone Jesus because he “called God his Father, making himself equal with God” (John 5:18).

ONE PERSON OR THREE PERSONS?

Another misunderstanding occurs when people say that the Trinity is like one man being a father, husband, and son at the same time. This is not trinitarianism, but the heresy of modalism, which says that the Trinity is made up of three aspects or modes of God, each of which has a different role. This is very popular among so-called “Jesus-only” Christians or Oneness Pentecostals.

They say there is only one God and God manifests himself as the Father at some times, and the Son and Holy Spirit at other times. But this doesn’t make sense of Scripture passages that describe Jesus talking to the Father (John 17), saying he will return to the Father (John 14:12), or that the Son will send the Holy Spirit in his place (John 14:16-17, Acts 2:33).

Since my husbandness and fatherhood can't talk to each other, this means the Son of God is not a "role" God plays. He is a person who God is, or the person of Jesus Christ. God is not one person but one being that is three coequal, coeternal persons.

A PAGAN INFLUENCE?

Some Jehovah's Witnesses say that the first Christians did not believe in the Trinity. They say when Christianity became the official religion of the Roman Empire in the fourth century, pagan converts brought this heretical idea about God with them. But a hundred years earlier the ecclesial writer Tertullian said, "The unity is distributed in a Trinity. Placed in order, the three are the Father, Son, and Spirit."⁵⁹

Although it is a mystery ultimately beyond our human reason, the doctrine of the Trinity is not just some piece of theological trivia. Indeed, this doctrine demonstrates one of God's most amazing attributes: that he is love (1 John 4:8).

God is not a solitary being who has existed by himself from eternity past. As love itself, God is a relationship of persons who eternally give and receive love among one another. God's love is so unending that he desires to share it with each of us, a point Jesus made when he said, "If a man loves me, he will keep my word, and my Father will love him, and we will come to him and make our home with him" (John 14:23).

WHY WE BELIEVE: THE TRINITY

- The Bible teaches that there is only one God.
- The Father, Son, and Holy Spirit are three separate persons who share the same divine nature—that is, each of them is God.
- Therefore, God is one being that exists as a Trinity of three coequal, coeternal divine persons.

Why We Believe in the Bible

Once when I was speaking at a university, a young man asked me, “How can you believe in the Bible when it contradicts science and says you’ll be stoned to death if you break a law in the Old Testament? It even commands people to kill each other. How can you believe in all that stuff?!”

I looked at him for a moment and then said, “Those are great questions and I’m happy to explain my answer to each one of them, but the main reason I believe in the Bible is because Jesus believed in the Bible. If a guy can walk out of his own tomb, then I trust his judgment.”

I then told him that the Bible is the word of God, but God allowed many different human authors to write the seventy-three different books that make up the Bible. Those authors only wrote what God wanted, but God allowed them to use their own styles and human perspectives in what they wrote. We must take that into account and not read the Bible as if it were an instruction manual God wrote and shipped down from heaven.

The Bible is fully divine in its inspiration and fully human in its composition, free from error and written so we might be saved from sin.

I then spent a few minutes sharing with this young man the “big picture” of what the Bible teaches.

CREATION AND COVENANTS

The Bible (named from the Greek word for “book”) is a collection of books and letters, written over a period of centuries, that describe God’s revelation to man and man’s response to that revelation. Also called Sacred Scripture, the Bible is divided into two main parts: the Old Testament and the New Testament.

The first book of the Bible, Genesis, teaches that God created the world and made human beings in his image. The beginning of this book is written in the style of epic poetry, so its description of the creation of the world in six days is not scientific in nature. For example, Genesis describes how God created “light” on the first day, but created the sun, the thing that even ancient people knew makes the light, on the fourth day. This can be explained if the author of Genesis was using poetic, nonliteral language instead of a chronological, literal description of the Creation.

An example of a true, nonliteral description would be when a parent explains to his child that babies “come from a seed daddy gives to mommy that grows inside the mommy’s tummy.” That’s a true description; it just shouldn’t be taken literally. The Catholic Church teaches that the book of Genesis also truthfully describes the Creation of the world, but it does so through the use of nonliteral language.⁶⁰

Genesis also describes how our first parents rebelled against God and how God progressively revealed himself to human beings in order to save humanity from sin and death. These include the formation of covenants, or sacred pledges of loyalty, which God made with men like Noah and Abraham, the latter of whom became the father of God’s chosen people, Israel. In Egypt, archaeologists discovered a large granite stone from the year 1208 B.C., called the Merneptah Stele, that refers to the existence of Israel.⁶¹ God decreed that this group of people, named after Abraham’s grandson, would bless the entire world.

A PEOPLE BECOMES A NATION

The next books of the Bible describe how Israel was enslaved in Egypt until God formed a covenant with Moses. Moses led Israel to freedom out of Egypt and into the desert, where they wandered for forty years. They eventually settled in the land God had promised them, in an area called Canaan (located in modern-day Israel).

During this time God gave his people laws that modern readers sometimes don’t understand, such as rules that forbid eating pork or mixing fabrics. Only some of these laws (like “Thou shall not murder”) are binding on believers today. The other “purity” laws like “Thou shall not eat pork” were only meant for ancient Israel, but they served an important purpose.

They were designed to keep Israel separate from other nations that might tempt them to worship pagan gods who practiced incest, promoted prostitution, and demanded child sacrifice by fire. The laws that forbade Israelites from eating certain foods or wearing certain clothes helped them see that they should not imitate other nations, but remain unique and “pure” in their worship and love of God.

Here’s an analogy to help understand this distinction. When I was a child, my mom gave me two rules: hold her hand when I cross the street and don’t drink from the bottles under the sink. The purity laws were like mom’s hand-holding rule. They helped the Israelites understand the discipline God’s law requires and protected them from destructive pagan influences (just as hand-holding protected me from careless drivers). Moral laws, on the other hand, deal with things that are always harmful, like murder or adultery, and so Christians still follow them even though they are found in the Old Testament (just as I still follow the rule “If it’s under the sink, don’t drink!”).

A NATION GOES TO WAR

The first five books of the Bible, which Jewish people call the Torah and scholars call the Pentateuch, end with the death of Moses and the installation of his successor, Joshua. The book of Joshua continues Israel’s story and describes how Israel contended with the hostile tribes that inhabited the land of Canaan (the Canaanites). Some of these descriptions include commands to wipe out entire nations, which are very disturbing. But since God gave us our lives, he alone has the authority to end them at any time and in any way. This would include using his chosen people to carry out a judgment against a culture known for its unparalleled wickedness and evil.

ANCIENT CHILD SACRIFICE

God’s people were forbidden to offer human sacrifices, but such sacrifices were common among the Canaanites, which resulted in God’s judgment against them. Here’s how one ancient historian describes these sacrifices:

“There stands in their midst a bronze statue of Kronos, its hands extended over a bronze brazier, the flames of which engulf the child. When the flames fall upon the body, the limbs contract and the open mouth seems almost to be laughing, until the contracted [body] slips quietly into the brazier.”⁶²

It could also be the case that the language used in these texts is exaggerated, nonliteral “warfare rhetoric.” This kind of language is akin to saying your favorite sports team “destroyed” or “massacred” its opponents. Ancient battle accounts also use this language, which can be seen in the Merneptah Stele. It says that Israel was “laid waste and his seed is not,” even though the nation of Israel continued to exist for several centuries after the stele was erected.

The fact that the book of Judges describes these same hostile nations existing after they were “utterly destroyed” shows that other books of the Bible, like Joshua, probably used exaggerated language. The author’s point was that Israel could not absorb any part of the nations they fought, but must “utterly destroy them.” Tolerating any part of such a destructive culture would result in God’s people falling into the same kind of wickedness.

A KINGDOM AND AN EXILE

Along with books that tell the story of God’s people, the Old Testament (or Hebrew Bible) contains literature that teaches God’s people wisdom and right living, such as the book of Proverbs. It also contains collections of prayers and hymns, like those found in the book of Psalms. Other books in the Old Testament include stories that were written to teach people how to have faith in God, such as the story of Job, who kept his faith in spite of tremendous suffering.

The remaining historical books of the Old Testament, for example, Samuel and Kings, describe how Israel became a kingdom and then a divided kingdom. The most famous of Israel’s kings was David, who most people remember as the shepherd boy who defeated the Philistine giant, Goliath, with a sling and a stone. David’s son Solomon succeeded him, but Solomon’s inability to keep God’s people from falling into idolatry and wickedness led to the nation being divided into northern and southern kingdoms.

It’s important to remember that just because the Bible records God’s people being wicked or doing evil things doesn’t mean God recommends those practices. These evil actions are what motivated God to send a series of prophets to urge his people to repent and turn away from their sins. The prophets told the people to care for widows and orphans (who were at risk of starving to death), not to worship idols, and not to engage in wicked sexual behavior.

Unfortunately, these prophetic reforms were either ignored or did not last. As a result, other nations conquered the northern and southern kingdoms and took God’s people into captivity. The final historical books of the Old Testament reveal how God’s people were freed from captivity and returned to their promised land. Unfortunately, even after their return, God's people suffered under the rule of foreign powers like the Greeks (and later the Romans). Through all of this they patiently awaited the Messiah: a savior promised in Scripture who would restore God's kingdom.

"Ignorance of Scripture is ignorance of Christ." —St. Jerome, a fourth-century Bible scholar who produced the world's most popular Latin translation of the Bible

A SAVIOR IS BORN

The New Testament is the story of that Messiah, Jesus Christ (Christ is a title for the Messiah that means "anointed one"). The four Gospels (Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John) tell us that Jesus existed as the Son of God before the creation of the world and that he became man in order to save humanity from its sins. The Gospels end after Christ's resurrection, when he commissioned his followers to become apostles (a Greek word that means "messenger"). Their mission was to share the good news of Christ's resurrection and offer of salvation with the entire world.

The Acts of the Apostles is the book that picks up where the Gospels leave off. (Its author also wrote the Gospel of Luke.) It describes how after Jesus ascended into heaven, the Church he created flourished in spite of the persecution it faced from Jewish and Roman leaders. The rest of the New Testament includes a collection of letters the apostles sent to various communities in order to teach and encourage them to keep the Faith.

The last book of the Bible is Revelation, which contains visions of God's heavenly kingdom. Revelation also contains prophecies about the end of the world and describes how God will conquer evil. After God's victory he will gather his people, both the living and the dead, to himself, in order to share glorious, eternal life with him.

THE CHURCH AND THE BIBLE

It's a circular argument to say the Bible is the word of God because the Bible says it is the word of God. That assumes what you're trying to prove. But we've seen that even if we assume the Bible is a collection of human documents, they still provide historical evidence that a man, Jesus Christ, rose from the dead.

They also show that Jesus established a Church built on apostles to whom he gave spiritual authority (Matt. 16:18-19, Eph. 2:20). Christ told the apostles, “He who hears you, hears me” (Luke 10:16). But this authority did not end when the apostles died. The successors of the apostles, the future bishops of the Church, inherited this spiritual authority and were able to declare the Bible to be the word of God.

This is not a circular argument, in which an inspired Bible is used to prove the Church’s authority and the Church’s authority is used to prove that the Bible is inspired. Instead, it is a “spiral argument,” in which the Bible is assumed to be a merely human document that records the creation of a divinely instituted Church.⁶³ This Church then had the authority to pronounce which human writings also had God as their author. The great fourth-century theologian St. Augustine reached a similar conclusion when he said, “I should not believe the gospel except as moved by the authority of the Catholic Church.”⁶⁴

WHY WE BELIEVE: THE BIBLE

- The Old Testament describes God’s creation of the world, man’s fall into sin, and the restoration of God’s family through his chosen people, Israel.
- The New Testament describes the coming of the Messiah, Jesus Christ, the divine Son of God who expanded God’s family to include the whole world by dying on a cross and atoning for humanity’s sins.
- Christ established the Catholic Church to be the custodian of his revelation, and from it we have the Bible that Christians read today.

Why We Aren't Bible-Only Christians

After I became a Christian I struggled with whether I should keep attending a Catholic Church. As I sat in church and watched incense rise up from the altar, I felt an urge to stay and be part of what felt like a sacred mystery. On the other hand, there were a lot of Catholic beliefs that I could not find in the Bible, which made me think they were just man-made traditions.

I eventually decided that it didn't matter which church I joined so long as I only believed in what the Bible taught. But then I ran into a roadblock: I couldn't find a single Bible verse that said everything I believed had to be found in the Bible. And the more I studied history, the more I saw it was the Catholic Church that gave us the Bible.

If I believed in God's word, then why wouldn't I join the Church that gave us this word in the form of Sacred Scripture?

THE UNBIBLICAL IDEA OF SOLA SCRIPTURA

In the sixteenth century, Christians like Martin Luther and John Calvin opposed what they thought were “man-made traditions” of the Catholic Church. Because of their protest against the Church, they came to be known as the Protestant Reformers. However, instead of reforming the Catholic Church, they rejected the Church's authority and replaced it with the idea that all Christian teaching, or doctrine, should come from the Bible alone. This principle later came to be called sola scriptura (Latin for “by Scripture alone”).

But if all doctrine is supposed to come from the Bible, then where does the Bible teach the doctrine of sola scriptura?

It's true that Revelation 22:18 warns that “everyone who hears the words of the prophecy of this book: if any one adds to them, God will add to him the plagues described in this book.” But John, the author of Revelation, was just prohibiting the addition of words to the visions he received. He was not denying that the word of God exists outside the Bible, or even outside his own revelation.

The passage most often cited in defense of sola scriptura is 2 Timothy 3:16-17: “All Scripture is inspired by God and profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, and for training in righteousness, that the man of God may be complete, equipped for every good work.”⁶⁵

Catholics agree that all Scripture is inspired by God. Scripture is also useful, but this doesn’t mean Scripture is the only thing that helps us teach the Faith or grow in holiness. We also need an active prayer life and advice from other mature Christians. In 2 Timothy 2:21, Paul says that if Timothy cleanses himself from bad influences he will be a vessel ready for “any good work.” Of course, that doesn’t mean that if Timothy stays away from bad influences he will automatically know every essential doctrine of the Faith.

The Bible teaches that Scripture is one tool that equips us to do good works, but it is not the only tool that makes us ready for that task. In fact, the Bible teaches that God’s word is not restricted to the written word alone.

THE NECESSITY OF TRADITION

The first Christians didn’t learn their faith from the Bible because none of the books of the New Testament had been written yet. This is evident in Paul thanking the Corinthians for “maintain[ing] the traditions even as I have delivered them to you” (1 Cor. 11:2), and instructing his disciple Timothy, “what you have heard from me before many witnesses entrust to faithful men who will be able to teach others also” (2 Tim. 2:2).

Paul thanked the Thessalonians for accepting his preaching, not as human words, but as the very words of God (1 Thess. 2:13). In his second letter to this community he told them to “stand firm and hold to the traditions which you were taught by us, either by word of mouth or by letter” (2 Thess. 2:15).

TRADITION AND TRADITIONS DEFINED

- Ecclesial tradition: The rules and customs taught by the Church that aid us in worshipping God. These include styles of worship or rules that can change when it is most helpful for the Body of Christ.
 - Sacred Tradition: The word of God in oral form that Jesus and the apostles entrusted to the Church and that do not change. These include basic doctrines of the Faith and ways of living out the Faith in every generation.
-

Sacred Tradition is not the same as customs that can change over time, like manner of dress or style of worship (or “tradition” with a lowercase “t”).⁶⁶ Tradition (with a capital “T”) refers to the word of God that is “handed on” or “delivered.” It does not change even though our understanding of it grows over time, in the same way our understanding of Scripture grows over time.

In the second century, St. Irenaeus wrote, “While the languages of the world are diverse, nevertheless, the authority of the tradition is one and the same.” He also asked his readers, “What if the apostles had not in fact left writings to us? Would it not be necessary to follow the order of tradition, which was handed down to those to whom they entrusted the churches?”⁶⁷

TRADITIONS OF MEN?

Some Christians object to the idea of Sacred Tradition because they believe Jesus condemned it. They refer to the time when Jesus told the Jewish leaders, “For the sake of your tradition, you have made void the word of God” (Matt. 15:6). But in this case Jesus was condemning a particular man-made tradition that was contrary to one of God’s commandments. Specifically, Jesus criticized the tradition of applying a sacrificial offering of money, called korban, to the Temple instead of using the money to support one’s elderly parents. This tradition contradicted the Fourth Commandment, which says, “Honor your father and mother.”

However, Jesus did not reject religious tradition as a whole because he told his disciples to obey the Jewish leaders because they sat on something called “Moses’ seat” (Matt. 23:2-3). This was not an actual chair but a term that referred to a Jewish tradition, not found in Scripture, about the Jewish leaders’ teaching authority. In fact, prior to his Ascension into heaven Jesus never commanded the apostles to write anything down. Instead, their mission was to preach the gospel, and the word of God continued to be passed down in oral tradition even after the New Testament was written.

THE BIBLE’S TABLE OF CONTENTS

The clearest example of a Sacred Tradition that both Catholics and Protestants accept is the canon of Scripture. The word “canon” comes from a Greek word that means “rule,” and refers to the Church’s official list of inspired writings. You can find this list in the table of contents of every Catholic or Protestant Bible. The canon of Scripture was first declared in Rome in A.D. 382 and was later defined at two Catholic councils in North Africa (Hippo in A.D. 393 and Carthage in A.D. 397).⁶⁸

A PROTESTANT THEOLOGIAN ADMITS: THERE'S A PROBLEM

“The problem with contemporary Protestants is that they have no doctrine of the Table of Contents. With the approach that is popular in conservative evangelical circles, one simply comes to the Bible by means of an epistemological lurch. The Bible ‘just is,’ and any questions about how it got here are dismissed as a nuisance. But time passes, the questions remain unanswered, the silence becomes awkward, and conversions of thoughtful evangelicals to Rome proceed apace.”⁶⁹ —Protestant theologian Douglas Wilson

However, if you are a Christian who denies the authority of the Catholic Church, then by what authority can you say Christians must accept the canon of Scripture found in today’s Bibles?

Some say it’s just obvious the books of the Bible all belong there and we don’t need any Church to prove they do, but is it really so obvious? Paul’s letter to Philemon doesn’t teach any specific doctrine, and the third letter of John doesn’t even mention the name of Jesus Christ. Conversely, other writings that were popular in the early Church, like the Didache or the letter of Clement, are not in the canon of Scripture.⁷⁰

Others say “the church” (with a lowercase “c”) determined the canon, but we aren’t obligated to follow what any church might teach today. But if that group of early Christians did not have Christ’s authority, then we have no reason to continue following their doctrinal decisions, including their decisions about the canon. The Protestant theologian R.C. Sproul famously suggested that the best we can say is that the canon of Scripture is “a fallible list of infallible books.”⁷¹ This means any Christian who feels moved by the Holy Spirit could claim the table of contents in the Bible needs to be revised, or even that some portions of the Bible should be removed.⁷²

In fact, 500 years ago Martin Luther and other Protestant Reformers did just that. Luther called the letter of James “an epistle of straw” because it contradicted his theology, so he moved it to the back of the Bible. Even though Luther and the other Reformers kept the letter of James, they removed books, called the deuterocanonicals, from the Old Testament. These books, like Sirach, Tobit, and Maccabees (among others), were part of the Bible Jesus used and were considered inspired Scripture in the early Church.⁷³ One reason the Reformers rejected books was because they teach Catholic doctrines like the existence of purgatory and the need to pray for the dead.⁷⁴

SCRIPTURE, TRADITION, AND THE CHURCH

Catholics agree we should not believe anything that contradicts God's word, in either its written form (the Bible) or its oral form (Tradition).

If an alleged tradition contradicts Scripture, then the tradition must be of human—small “t”—rather than divine—capital “T”—origin. But if a document that claims to be Scripture (such as a forged or heretical gospel) contradicts Sacred Tradition, then it, too, must be of human origin. God speaks through the written word, but as we've seen, only through Sacred Tradition can we know which writings are the word of God and which ones are not.

Sacred Tradition also protects the Church from false interpretations of the Bible. My Protestant friends would sometimes debate other religious people who denied basic Christian doctrines like the deity of Christ. They would point out Bible passages that they say proved Jesus is God, only to hear the other person say, “Yes, but that's not how I interpret those passages.” I thought it was ironic when one of my Protestant friends said, “But my interpretation of these passages is the same one Christians have held for 2,000 years!”

This was a perfect example of how God's word speaks in Scripture through the written word (or what the Bible says), but also through oral Tradition (or teachings about what the Bible means). But whose tradition should we look to for guidance on interpreting the Bible?

My Protestant friends couldn't even agree among themselves on what the Bible taught concerning issues such as whether babies should be baptized or if salvation can be lost. It's no wonder that in his second letter St. Peter taught, “no prophecy of Scripture is a matter of one's own interpretation” (2 Pet. 1:20).

St. Vincent of Lerins made this point in the fifth century when he noticed that heretics could cite Scripture just as well as the faithful. This meant that another authority was necessary to settle disputes about what Christians should believe. This authority could be none other than the Church Christ founded, or, as Vincent wrote, “The rule for the right understanding of the prophets and apostles should be framed in accordance with the standard of ecclesiastical and Catholic interpretation.”⁷⁵

WHY WE BELIEVE: THE BIBLE AND TRADITION

- The Bible never teaches that God’s word is confined to the written word or that everything Christians believe is explicitly described in the Bible.
- The Bible teaches that God’s word exists in oral form as Sacred Tradition.
- One tradition that both Catholics and Protestants believe in is the canon of Scripture.

PART 3

The CHURCH

the SACRAMENTS

Why We Belong to the Catholic Church

When I was considering joining the Catholic Church, I sat down with some of my non-Catholic friends to see if they could talk me out of my decision. They were Christians, but they didn't consider themselves to be "Protestants." Instead, they called themselves Evangelicals or just "Christ-followers." Regardless, their response to my decision to become Catholic surprised me.

One of the girls said, "As long as Catholics believe in Jesus then I don't think it's a big deal." Another chimed in, "I mean, we're never going to know which church is the right church or even if there is such a thing, so why worry?"

That answer didn't satisfy me so I asked them, "Don't you wonder if one of the churches that exists today can be traced back to the Church Jesus founded? Don't you wonder which church Jesus wants us to join?"

THE FIRST CHRISTIANS

My question was met with a collective shrug and a simple recommendation that I just "believe in Jesus," but that wasn't good enough for me. How did my Evangelical friends know we only have to believe in Jesus to be saved? What does it mean to believe in Jesus? Do we have to be baptized to believe in Jesus? Do we have to receive Communion? If I stop believing in Jesus will I lose my salvation?

I wanted the answers to these questions so I decided to study what the very first Christians believed. These were the believers who lived just after the apostles. If there was one church I wanted to belong to, it was their church.

In the time of the apostles believers were called "Christians," but the Church was not called "the Christian Church." It was simply referred to as "the Church," as is evident in Luke's description of what Paul and Barnabas did in the city of Antioch. He said, “For a whole year they met with the Church, and taught a large company of people; and in Antioch the disciples were for the first time called Christians” (Acts 11:26).

A few decades later, St. Ignatius of Antioch wrote a letter to Christians who lived 600 miles away, in the coastal city of Smyrna (located in modern Turkey). He said, “Wherever the bishop shall appear, there let the multitude [of the people] also be; even as, wherever Jesus Christ is, there is the Catholic Church.”⁷⁶

WHO STARTED YOUR CHURCH?

- Calvary Chapel, 1965: Chuck Smith
 - Mormon church, 1830: Joseph Smith
 - Disciples of Christ, 1809: Thomas Campbell
 - Baptist church, 1609: John Smyth
 - Presbyterian church, 1560: John Knox
 - Calvinist church, 1536: John Calvin
 - Lutheran church, 1517: Martin Luther
 - Eastern Orthodox church, 1054: Eastern Patriarchs
 - Catholic Church, 33: Jesus Christ
-

The word Catholic comes from the Greek word kataholos, which means “according to” (kata) “the whole” (holos). Christ’s Church is called the Catholic Church because it is the same Church regardless of where or when it is found. The Church is the same because it contains the fullness of God’s eternal plan of salvation for the human race.

WHAT IS THE CHURCH?

St. Paul says the Church was built on “the foundation of the apostles” (Eph. 2:20) and is “the pillar and bulwark of the truth” (1 Tim. 3:15). Jesus said the gates of hell would not prevail against the Church, and that the apostles, especially Peter, would have authority over it (Matt. 16:18-19, 18:17). If the apostles alone had the authority to speak on Christ’s behalf (Luke 10:16), then that authority would be lost once they all died. Fortunately, God gave the apostles the ability to pass on their spiritual authority to worthy successors.

After the death of Judas (the apostle who betrayed Jesus), Peter proclaimed that Judas's position among the apostles would be transferred to a worthy successor (Acts 1:20). St. Paul even warned Timothy, "Do not be hasty in the laying on of hands" when he appointed new leaders in the Church (1 Tim. 5:22). The apostles did all this to make sure their authority to "bind and loose" (Matt. 18:18), that is, to determine Church teaching and practice, would be passed on to their successors.

In A.D. 110 St. Ignatius of Antioch told his readers, "Follow the bishop, even as Jesus Christ does the Father, and the presbytery [or priests] as you would the apostles; and reverence the deacons, as being the institution of God. Let no man do anything connected with the Church without the bishop."⁷⁷

THE FOURTH POPE SPEAKS

At the end of the first century, the fourth pope, Clement, reminded the Christians in the city of Corinth about the reality of apostolic succession, saying,

Our apostles knew through our Lord Jesus Christ that there would be strife for the office of bishop. For this reason, therefore, having received perfect foreknowledge, they appointed those who have already been mentioned and afterward added the further provision that, if they should die, other approved men should succeed to their ministry.⁷⁸

AN OLD BABY PHOTO

"How can today's Catholic Church with all of its traditions and rituals be the same humble Church we read about in the New Testament?" It's a good question, but it's sort of like asking, "How can that fully grown man be the same little boy whose diaper had to be changed decades earlier?" In both cases the body being described grew and developed over time without becoming a different kind of being.

The man, for example, has some things he did not have as a baby (like whiskers). But he also has many things he did have as a baby. This includes the same DNA that guides his growth and gives him features like "his father's nose," which can be seen in his old baby photos. In the same way, the Catholic Church, which St. Paul calls the Body of Christ (Eph. 5:23), has the same "DNA" as the Church of the first century: the word of God. This word is transmitted both through Sacred Scripture and Sacred Tradition, and you can see its effect in one of the Church's "old baby photos."

One particular “photo” comes from the second century, when St. Justin Martyr wrote about how when Christians gathered to worship, they “offer hearty prayers in common for ourselves and for the baptized person, and for all others in every place.” After that, they “salute one another with a kiss,” the presider at the service takes bread and wine and does the following:

[He] gives praise and glory to the Father of the universe, through the name of the Son and of the Holy Ghost, and offers thanks at considerable length for our being counted worthy to receive these things at His hands. And when he has concluded the prayers and thanksgivings, all the people present express their assent by saying Amen.^{79}

Justin’s description corresponds to the prayers of the faithful, the exchange of peace, the offering of bread and wine, and the “great amen” that are still said at Catholic services today. Justin goes on to say that the bread and wine at Mass are not mere symbols of Christ’s body and blood, but are instead “the flesh and blood of that Jesus who was made flesh.” This doctrine, the Real Presence of Christ in the Eucharist, is one the Catholic Church still teaches and defends (see chapter 14 for more).

Here are some other examples of what the first Christians believed. Can you see the resemblance to what Catholics believe today in these other “baby photos”?

- Submit to the bishop as you would to Jesus Christ. —St. Ignatius, A.D. 110.^{80}
- Happy is our sacrament of water, in that, by washing away the sins of our early blindness, we are set free and admitted into eternal life. —Tertullian, A.D. 203.^{81}
- The Church received from the apostles the tradition of giving baptism even to infants. —Origen, A.D. 248.^{82}
- Of how much greater faith and salutary fear are they who . . . confess their sins to the priests of God in a straightforward manner. —St Cyprian, A.D. 251.^{83}

IS CATHOLICISM PAGAN?

Some people claim that in the late fourth century, when Christianity became the official religion of the Roman Empire, non-Christians converted purely out of convenience. These new converts brought with them “man-made rituals” that corrupted Christ’s Church. But as we’ve seen, doctrines like the priesthood, the real presence of Christ in the Eucharist, and the sacrament of confession were believed long before the fourth century and can even be traced back to what Jesus and the apostles taught.

It’s true the Catholic Church took what was good in non-Catholic religions and used it to glorify God, but all Christians do this. The custom of exchanging rings at a wedding, for example, was first practiced in ancient Egypt and is not described in the Bible. Of course, the meaning of the ritual does not contradict what the Church teaches about marriage. In fact, the never-ending nature of rings symbolizes the permanence of marriage, which is why even Protestants usually have this “pagan” custom at their wedding services.

If Catholic customs like burning incense, lighting candles, and singing chants contain unforgivable infusions of “paganism” into the Church, then Protestant churches that use fog machines, stage lights, and popular music in their services would be just as pagan. Pope St. John Paul II taught that using cultural elements in service of the gospel is not wrong as long as such elements “in no way compromise the distinctiveness and integrity of the Christian faith.”⁸⁴

WHO WILL SHOW ME?

The book of Acts describes how a servant of the queen of Ethiopia was puzzled when he read the prophecies of the Old Testament.⁸⁵ Fortunately, the apostle Philip came along and asked the servant, “Do you understand what you are reading?” The servant replied, “How can I, unless someone guides me?” Philip then showed the servant how the Old Testament’s promised Messiah was Jesus Christ. The apostle then baptized the servant in a nearby pool of water (Acts 8:26-40).

Many people feel just as confused as the Ethiopian servant when they read the Bible. St. Peter even warned his readers that there are confusing passages in Scripture, whose meaning some people twist to their own destruction (2 Peter 3:16). If that’s true, then wouldn’t Jesus make sure someone like Philip was still around today to help people understand what they’re reading in God’s word? The Bible does not say there should be hundreds of competing denominations that each have different interpretations of the Bible. Instead, it says, “There is one body and one Spirit . . . one Lord, one faith, one baptism” (Eph. 4:4-5).

The Catechism teaches that through baptism all Christians are “put in a certain, although imperfect, communion with the Catholic Church” (CCC 838). What Catholics desire is for their non-Catholic friends to have a perfect communion with Christ’s Church. That way every Christian can fulfill Jesus’ prayer that all his followers “may be one,” just as he and the Father are one (John 17:11).

ST. AUGUSTINE ON BEING CATHOLIC

St. Augustine was the fourth-century bishop of Hippo who became one of the most famous theologians in the history of Christianity. Many Protestants even seek to follow his teachings, as is evident in John Calvin’s remark that “Augustine is so wholly with me, that if I wished to write a confession of my faith, I could do so with all fullness and satisfaction to myself out of his writings.”⁸⁶ In his letter to the heretic Mani, however, Augustine revealed what keeps him in the Catholic Church.

“The succession of priests, from the very see of the apostle Peter, to whom the Lord, after his resurrection, gave the charge of feeding his sheep (John 21:15-17), up to the present episcopate, keeps me here. And last, the very name Catholic, which, not without reason, belongs to this Church alone, in the face of so many heretics, so much so that, although all heretics want to be called ‘Catholic,’ when a stranger inquires where the Catholic Church meets, none of the heretics would dare to point out his own basilica or house.”⁸⁷

WHY WE BELIEVE: THE CATHOLIC CHURCH

- Jesus established a Church built on the apostles that included a hierarchy, or sacred order, that included deacons, priests, and bishops.
- Only the Catholic Church can trace its authority back to the apostles and their immediate successors.
- The Catholic Church maintains in its current teachings the ancient doctrines of Christ, the apostles, and the early Church.

Why We Have a Pope

Let's travel forward in time about ten years after my conversion to the Catholic faith. It was 4:45 a.m., and my wife and I were standing in a subway station outside of Rome waiting for the train to arrive. The handful of people on the platform couldn't help but stare at my wife pacing back and forth in her long, flowing wedding dress. Both of us were wearing our wedding attire because newly married couples are allowed to sit in a special section at St. Peter's Basilica, where they have the chance to meet the pope.

We were told that the pope usually just waves to newlyweds after his morning address, which is why we were shocked when a security official pointed to the middle of the platform, in front of an audience of 50,000 people, and told us, "You go there to see pope."

My stomach felt as if it was full of pins and needles, and when the pope finally met us I was at a loss for words. My wife skipped past the formalities and gave him a hug, which the pope's security detail was not happy about (though the pope seemed to have a good laugh over it).

Even our non-Catholic friends get excited when they hear we met the pope, but why is the pope so important to Catholics? The answer is because Christ has entrusted the pope, the bishop of Rome, with the office he first entrusted to St. Peter—to be the pastor of his entire Church.

This man is called "pope" because that word comes from a Latin word for "father" (papa). Just as St. Paul said he became a father to the Christians in the Greek city of Corinth (1 Cor. 4:15), the pope is a spiritual father to all believers. He has been entrusted with the same responsibilities Christ gave to Peter, which include spiritually feeding Christ's flock of believers (John 21:15-19) and determining doctrine and practice for Christ's Church (Matt. 16:18-19).

PETER THE LEADER

Peter's role as "chief apostle" is evident in the fact that he is mentioned more than any other apostle, often speaks for the whole group, and is placed first in almost every list of the apostles (Matt. 10:2). We know these lists were made in order of importance because Judas is always listed last.

The book of Acts also describes Peter's unparalleled leadership in the early Church, including his authority to make a binding declaration at the Council of Jerusalem (Acts 15). As the non-Catholic scholar J.N.D. Kelly put it, "Peter was the undisputed leader of the youthful church."⁸⁸

PETER LEADS THE CHURCH

- The first apostle to see the risen Jesus (Luke 24:34, 1 Cor. 15:5)
 - Preached the first sermon and received the first converts (Acts 2:14-41)
 - Performed the first healing in the Church age (Acts 3:6-10)
 - Excommunicated the first heretic (Acts 8:18-24)
 - Received the first revelation about the Gentiles (Acts 10:44-48)
 - Gave the first binding declaration of dogma for the entire Church (Acts 15:7-11)
-

Jesus also gave Peter his name, which had previously been Simon. This is important, because in the Bible when God changes someone's name he also changes that person's destiny. For example, Abram's destiny was to be the father of the Jewish people, so God changed his name to Abraham, which means "father of many nations." The name "Peter" means "rock," which meant Peter's destiny was to be some kind of rock or foundation. Jesus revealed just what kind of rock he would be after Peter correctly identified Jesus as "the Christ, the Son of the living God." Jesus said:

Blessed are you, Simon Bar-Jona! For flesh and blood has not revealed this to you, but my Father who is in heaven. And I tell you, you are Peter, and on this rock I will build my Church, and the powers of death shall not prevail against it. I will give you the keys of the kingdom of heaven, and whatever you bind on earth shall be bound in heaven, and whatever you loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven (Matt. 16:17-19).

In the ancient world, cities were surrounded by giant walls and could only be entered through a massive gate. The ruler of the city was given a large key to this gate, which was also a symbol of his authority over the city. When Jesus gave Peter "the keys of the kingdom," he was alluding to a passage in the Old Testament book of Isaiah that describes how Hezekiah, the king of Israel, gave Eliakim the authority to oversee his entire kingdom. According to Isaiah 22:22, Eliakim would have “the key of the house of David; he shall open, and none shall shut; and he shall shut, and none shall open.”

Jesus told the apostles, “as my Father appointed a kingdom for me, so do I appoint for you” (Luke 22:29). Like any responsible Jewish king, Jesus selected one person, the apostle Peter, to oversee this kingdom as his prime minister.⁸⁹ As the Protestant scholar Craig Keener writes in his commentary on Matthew, “[Jesus] plays on Simon’s nickname, ‘Peter,’ which is roughly the English ‘Rocky’: Peter is ‘rocky,’ and on this rock Jesus would build his Church.”⁹⁰

IS THE POPE THE ANTICHRIST?

The strangest and most persistent attacks on the papacy are claims that the pope is the Antichrist or the beast from the book of Revelation. But these claims are easily rebutted.

1 John 2:22 says that the Antichrist “denies that Jesus is the Christ,” but no pope has ever done this.⁹¹ Likewise, Revelation 17 speaks of a beast that sits on seven mountains and persecutes the holy ones of God, but the Catholic Church doesn’t persecute Christians and it doesn’t sit on “seven mountains.” Vatican City rests on Vatican Hill, which lies across the river from the seven hills of Old Rome, where Christians were crucified and fed to the lions.

Scholars agree that the “beast” in Revelation probably symbolizes a Roman emperor like Nero, or the Roman Empire as a whole because of its violent persecution of the Church during the first century.

IS THE POPE INFALLIBLE?

The doctrine of papal infallibility teaches that the pope has a special grace from God that protects him from leading Christ’s Church into error. Most Protestants would admit that St. Peter was at least infallible when he wrote his first and second letters, because they’re in the Bible. Catholics simply believe this kind of protection was given to Peter and each of his successors, none of whom led the Church into error.

But why should we believe the pope is infallible?

Matthew 16:18 says the “powers of death” (some translations say “gates of hell”) will never prevail against the Church, so it makes sense that the pastor of Christ’s Church would never steer it into hell by teaching heresy. Luke 22:31-32 records Jesus telling Peter, “Satan demanded to have you, that he might sift you like wheat, but I have prayed for you that your faith may not fail.” The original Greek in the passage reveals that Satan demanded to sift “you all,” or all the apostles, but Jesus prayed for “you” in the singular sense, just for Peter, that his faith would not fail.⁹²

It’s true that Christ once called Peter “Satan” for trying to stop the Crucifixion (Matt. 16:23). He also knew Peter would later deny him at his trial, but God doesn’t call the perfect—he perfects the called. That’s why Christ prayed that once Peter “turned again” from his sins, he would lead and strengthen the other apostles (Luke 22:32).

The grace of infallibility does not keep the pope from sinning (even gravely). For example, St. Paul rebuked Peter for refusing to dine with Gentiles so as not to offend his fellow Jews (Gal 2:14), but Paul didn’t deny Peter’s authority or show he had taught error.⁹³ He just reminded Peter that he needed to live up to his own teaching. As the Protestant theologian Thomas Schreiner puts it, “Peter and Paul still agreed theologically. Paul rebukes Peter because the latter acted against his convictions.”⁹⁴

Infallibility also doesn’t mean the pope will have the right answer to every problem facing the Church. The gift of infallibility only keeps the pope from officially leading the Church into heresy. Some Church Fathers, such as St. Cyprian of Carthage, criticized the pope’s decisions; but even Cyprian believed the pope could not lead the Church astray.

“The throne of Peter . . . from whom no error can flow.” —St. Cyprian of Carthage, A.D. 256⁹⁵

PETER’S SUCCESSORS, THE BISHOPS OF ROME

Even if Peter did have infallible authority over the early Church, how do we know this authority was passed on to his successors?

In the first century, Peter’s third successor, Clement, intervened in a dispute in the Church of Corinth. He warned the Corinthians they would be “in no small danger” if they disobeyed him, thus demonstrating his authority over non-Roman Christians. St. Ignatius of Antioch referred to the Roman Church as the one that teaches other churches and “presides in love” over them. In fact, the writings of Pope Clement (A.D. 92-99) and Pope Soter (A.D. 167-174) were so popular that they were read in the Church alongside Sacred Scripture.⁹⁶

In A.D. 190, Pope Victor I excommunicated an entire region of churches for refusing to celebrate Easter on its proper date. A French bishop named St. Irenaeus thought this wasn't a good idea, but neither he nor anyone else denied that Victor had the authority to do this. Indeed, Irenaeus said of the Church at Rome, "It is a matter of necessity that every Church should agree with this Church on account of its preeminent authority."⁹⁷ The fifth-century Council of Chalcedon read aloud a letter from Pope Leo I that defended the traditional doctrine of Christ's divinity. Once they finished, the bishops in attendance shouted, "Peter has spoken through Leo!"

Christ will always be the king of his kingdom, but like any good king, he appoints a prime minister to oversee that kingdom. Just as Israel's chief steward Eliakim was considered "a father to the inhabitants of Jerusalem and to the house of Judah" (Isa. 22:21), the bishop of Rome is a father, or pope, to those who belong to Christ's Church. He has inherited the keys to the kingdom and is faithfully charged with watching over it until the king returns in glory.

A POPE STANDS UP TO THE BARBARIANS

Popes not only protect the Church from spiritual threats, but physical ones as well. As the Roman Empire collapsed in the fourth century, barbarian hordes invaded from the north, burning villages to the ground and slaughtering people they didn't sell into slavery. The most fearsome of these barbarians was Attila the Hun, whose savage reputation for violence motivated the Romans to call him "the Scourge of God."

In A.D. 452 Attila's army gathered to attack the city of Rome, but Pope Leo I rode out to Attila, who was also on horseback. A historian who wrote about their meeting a few years later said that Attila "was so impressed by the presence of the high priest that he ordered his army to give up warfare and, after he had promised peace, he departed beyond the Danube [river]."⁹⁸

WHY WE BELIEVE: THE POPE

- Jesus gave Peter special authority as the leader of both the apostles and the early Church.
- This authority was passed on to Peter's successors, the bishops of Rome.
- Peter and his successors enjoy the gift of infallibility, which keeps them from leading the Church into heresy.

Why We Have Priests

Have you ever noticed in movies that when the heroes have to face something demonic or paranormal they almost always call in a Catholic priest to help? Even nonreligious people recognize a kind of ancient, transcendent mythos or power that radiates from a priest. But what they sense isn't a superstitious kind of magic. Rather, it's the grace of God that permanently changes a priest's soul and equips him to fight sin and even demonic forces that would attack Christ's Church.

St. Paul taught that Christ's Church would have a hierarchy composed of deacons (1 Tim. 3:8-13); presbyters, from where we get the English word "priest" (1 Tim. 5:17); and bishops (1 Tim. 3:1-7). When I first read these passages I asked myself, "Which churches today have deacons, priests, and bishops?" It must be in one of those churches, I imagined, where I would find the original church Christ established on Peter and the other apostles.

WHERE ARE PRIESTS IN THE BIBLE?

In the Old Testament, God's people had a three-tiered priesthood that has been fulfilled in Christ's Church. First, the people as a whole were called a kingdom of priests, because their holy conduct would allow them to intercede on behalf of an unbelieving world (Exod. 19:6). Some of them, like the Levites, were part of the ministerial priesthood and offered sacrifices on behalf of the people (Exod. 28:41). Finally, there was the high priest, who approached God's sacred dwelling among the people once a year to offer a sacrifice that made up for the peoples' sins as a whole (Exod. 28:1, Lev. 21:10).

Since the destruction of the Jerusalem Temple in A.D. 70, the Jewish sacrificial priesthood no longer exists; the Christian priesthood has now taken its place.

Just like in the Old Testament, St. Peter says every Christian belongs to a holy priesthood (1 Pet. 2:5), and the letter to the Hebrews says Jesus Christ is our new high priest (Heb. 4:14). Unlike all the other high priests, Christ was divine and without sin, so his sacrifice on the cross was able to take away the sins of the world. It is this single sacrifice that Catholic priests re-present in the form of the Eucharist (see also chapter 14). Through their service these men become the fulfillment of the ministerial priesthood of the Old Testament. The letter of James also refers to priests ministering to the community by offering sacraments that healed the sick and forgave sins:

Is any among you sick? Let him call for the elders of the Church, and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord; and the prayer of faith will save the sick man, and the Lord will raise him up; and if he has committed sins, he will be forgiven. Therefore confess your sins to one another, and pray for one another, that you may be healed. The prayer of a righteous man has great power in its effects (James 5:14-16).

Today this sacrament is called the anointing of the sick and is also part of the last rites, or the prayers and sacraments given to those who are in danger of dying. One of the sacraments the priest offers, if the person is conscious and alert, is one last chance to confess his sins. Notice that James 5:16 says we ought to confess our sins “to one another,” which in this context would have included the elders or priests of God’s Church.

WHY DO I HAVE TO CONFESS MY SINS TO A PRIEST?

Why can’t I just confess my sins directly to God? Why do I need to go to confession (or what is also called the sacrament of reconciliation)? Here’s my answer: Because God loves us and has given us an amazing way to experience his forgiveness.

The Church teaches that God has given us sacraments so that we can have physical moments when we experience God’s grace flooding into our hearts. Think of grace as God’s free gift of life that takes away sin and makes us more and more like him. God could just give us grace in an invisible way after we say a certain prayer, but he knows we are made of matter, and matter, well, matters!

Why is it more special to get a thank-you letter in the mail than a thank-you message by email? Why is an embrace a more powerful way of saying “I love you?” It is because in these actions we experience love and gratitude with our senses as well as our mind. God understands this and that's why he gave his Church sacraments, or outward, physical signs of our inward reception of God's grace.

THE SEVEN SACRAMENTS

Baptism, Confirmation, the Eucharist (the Lord's Supper), Confession, the Anointing of the Sick, Marriage, and Holy Orders.

There are seven sacraments, each of which has a specific way they are to be performed (the form) and a specific material that must be used (the matter). The form of baptism includes saying, "I baptize you in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit." The matter is the water that covers the person and is the physical means by which their sins are washed away (Acts 22:16).

The sacrament of confession includes several prayers in the form, but the matter is the priest himself. His physical presence and voice is the channel through which God's grace enters the sinner's heart and reconciles him to God. St. Paul even said, "All this is from God, who through Christ reconciled us to himself and gave us the ministry of reconciliation" (2 Cor. 5:18).

A PRIEST SAVES SOULS ON THE TITANIC

In 1912, a British priest, Fr. Thomas Byles, booked a ticket on the Titanic to New York to serve at his brother's wedding. He was on the upper deck when the ship struck an iceberg and stayed behind to hear as many confessions as he could before the ship sank.

One eyewitness said, "Father Byles could have been saved, but he would not leave while one [passenger] was left . . . After I got in the boat, which was the last one to leave, and we were slowly going further away from the ship, I could hear distinctly the voice of the priest and the responses to his prayers."⁹⁹

Fr. Byles's brother and family searched diligently for him among the survivors, but he is believed to have perished at sea; his body was never recovered. The current pastor of the church where Fr. Byles served nearly a century ago has begun the process of seeking a formal recognition of Fr. Byles's sainthood.¹⁰⁰

A priest doesn't forgive sins apart from God any more than a Protestant minister who baptizes someone makes that person a Christian apart from God. A priest has the same authority to forgive sins as the apostles, to whom Jesus said, "If you forgive the sins of any, they are forgiven; if you retain the sins of any, they are retained" (John 20:23).

In order for the apostles to know a person's sins should be retained, for example, if the person wasn't actually sorry for them, they would have to know what those sins were. Barring some kind of revelation from God, this knowledge could only come from a person confessing his sins out loud. As St. Cyprian of Carthage put it in A.D. 251, "with grief and simplicity confess this very thing to God's priests, and make the conscientious avowal, put off from them the load of their minds, and seek out the salutary medicine even for slight and moderate wounds."¹⁰¹

WHY ARE PRIESTS UNMARRIED MEN?

The Catholic Church selects men to be priests because it always strives to imitate Jesus Christ. Even though many women served in Jesus' ministry, he did not call any of them to be apostles. Instead, Jesus left the Church a dogma, or an unchanging part of divine revelation, that only men can be called to stand "in the person of Christ" (Latin, alter christus) and serve Christ's bride the Church (Eph. 5:22-33).¹⁰²

The requirement that priests be unmarried, or celibate, is a discipline rather than an unchanging dogma. St. Peter was married (Matt. 8:14), though we don't know if his wife was alive when he became the leader of the Church, since the Bible never mentions her.¹⁰³ Christ did not give the Church a single teaching on this question, so the Church is free to propose disciplinary rules that best serve the Body of Christ.

In the Eastern Catholic Church, married men can become priests but unmarried priests can't later get married. In the Western Church exceptions have been made for married priests who convert from other religions, like Anglicanism, but most priests are celibate.

These priests have followed a tradition given by St. Paul that says the unmarried are able to completely focus on pleasing the Lord without being hindered by the responsibility of caring for a family (1 Cor. 7:32). Paul affirmed the goodness of marriage, but he also wished that all could be celibate like him. He even described how some widows in the early Church took vows of celibacy (1 Cor. 7:7, 1 Tim. 5:12).

WHY DO CATHOLICS CALL PRIESTS "FATHER"?

If Jesus says in Matthew 23:9 to "call no man your father," then why do Catholics call priests “father”? For the same reason St. Paul called himself a father to the Christians in Corinth (1 Cor. 4:15), it is an appropriate title for the shepherds of Christ’s flock.

Jesus also says in Matthew 23:8–10 to call no man teacher or “master,” yet Protestants often call their seminary-educated pastors and theologians “doctor,” a word that literally means “master” or “teacher.”

Jesus was only warning his followers against inflating the pride of the Jewish leaders and elevating their authority above God’s authority. He was not forbidding the existence of any spiritual fathers or teachers that he might call to humbly serve his Church.

Other biblical examples of living a celibate life can be seen in the prophets Elijah and Jeremiah, as well as our Lord, who said, “There are eunuchs [people incapable of sexual intercourse] who have made themselves eunuchs for the sake of the kingdom of heaven” (Matt. 19:12). The Catholic Commentary on Holy Scripture says that in this verse Jesus was encouraging voluntary abstinence from sexual relations, “not by self-mutilation but by self-denial.”^{104}

Some people say that if priests were allowed to marry there would be less sexual abuse in the Church and more men would want to be priests. But many pedophiles are married men, and being single doesn’t cause someone to become attracted to children. Moreover, the priesthood isn’t a job whose requirements are changed in order to attract candidates. The Bible says that when Jesus saw the crowds of people following him

He had compassion for them, because they were harassed and helpless, like sheep without a shepherd. Then he said to his disciples, “The harvest is plentiful, but the laborers are few; pray therefore the Lord of the harvest to send out laborers into his harvest” (Matt. 9:36-38).

Priests are those men who answer God’s call to go out into the world and lead lost souls back to the Good Shepherd, Jesus Christ.

WHY WE BELIEVE: PRIESTS

- Catholic priests are the New Covenant’s fulfillment of the Old Covenant’s ministerial priesthood.
- Christ only called men to be apostles, and so the Catholic priesthood only includes men.
- Traditionally, priests in the Western Church have been unmarried so they can fully imitate Christ and serve his bride, the Church.

- Catholic priests have been given authority from Christ to forgive and retain sins, which is made manifest in the sacrament of confession.

Why We Go to Mass

A few years ago, some friends of ours bought a homemade-donut machine. You just poured batter into it and in one minute a bunch of mini-doughnuts rolled off its little conveyor belt. When they told their five-year-old son about it his eyes lit up and he exclaimed, “That’s amazing! Now we don’t have to go to Church anymore!”

Like this little boy, some people go to church for the “donuts.” They might be literal donuts, but usually the “donuts” are some other nonreligious reason that gets them up earlier than usual on Sunday. They may feel the need to please a family member or spouse. Or they might go because that’s just what their family always did. As they get older they might only keep that tradition going for major holidays like Easter and Christmas. But for many people, the “donuts” stop being worth it and they no longer go to Church. They might say:

“Catholic services are boring. I don’t feel like I’m getting anything out of it.”

“They’re always asking for money.”

“The music is dreadful and the homily is even worse.”

When people ask me why I go to church every Sunday, I tell them it’s because no matter how boring the homily, no matter how terrible the music, no matter what else is happening, the bread and wine on the altar at every Catholic Mass becomes the body and blood of our savior Jesus Christ. I go because that bread and wine don’t just symbolize Jesus; they actually become his body, blood, soul, and divinity. Jesus is there, not just every Sunday, but every day, ready to be received by the faithful so they can have eternal life.

THE NEW PASSOVER

The first time I visited a Catholic Church, the person who invited me explained that the services are called “Mass” because the name comes from the Latin word missa, which means “to send forth.” Catholics attend Mass so they can be equipped and “sent forth” to share the gospel with the entire world. When that friend told me about the “sacrifice of the Mass,” however, I stopped a few feet from the church entrance.

“Sacrifice? You’re not going to kill a goat up there on the altar, are you? Because I’m not sure I’m ready for that.”

He laughed and said that the sacrifice would be the bread and wine brought up to the altar, called the Eucharist, which comes from a Greek word that means “thanksgiving.” The Catechism says, “For in the blessed Eucharist is contained the whole spiritual good of the Church, namely Christ himself, our Pasch” (CCC 1324).

Pasch means “Passover” and is a reference to an event the Jewish people still celebrate. When they were enslaved in Egypt, God told his people to kill a lamb that was without blemish or defect so that the angel of death that was sent to punish the Egyptians would “pass over” their homes (Exod. 12:43-51). Christians also have a lamb who was sacrificed so that spiritual death would pass over them: Jesus Christ.

John the Baptist said that Jesus was “the lamb of God, who takes away the sin of the world” (John 1:29), and St. Paul said, “Christ, our Paschal Lamb, has been sacrificed” (1 Cor. 5:7). The Passover lamb in the Old Testament had to be a male, without blemish, and his legs could not be broken (Exod. 12:5,46). Christ, our Passover lamb, is male, without sin (Heb. 4:15), and during the Crucifixion his legs were not broken (John 19:33). Finally, the Passover was not complete until the lamb was eaten, and so the “Passover” that Christians still celebrate must be completed in the same way.

FOOD INDEED, DRINK INDEED

Since Jesus did not want us to be cannibals, he gave us his body and blood to consume under the miraculous form of bread and wine. He said:

Truly, truly, I say to you, unless you eat the flesh of the Son of man and drink his blood, you have no life in you; he who eats my flesh and drinks my blood has eternal life, and I will raise him up at the last day. For my flesh is food indeed, and my blood is drink indeed. He who eats my flesh and drinks my blood abides in me, and I in him. As the living Father sent me, and I live because of the Father, so he who eats me will live because of me (John 6:53-57).

The original Greek in this passage communicates an even more powerful message than what we read in English. Earlier in John 6, Jesus uses phago, a generic word for eating, but in these verses he switches to trogo, which means “to gnaw or chew.” Likewise, Jesus uses the word sarx, which refers to the soft, fleshy substance that covers our bones, and not soma, which just means “body.” Jesus’ word choice, as rendered in the Greek, shows that he is talking about real, physical chewing and eating of his very flesh.

“My flesh is food indeed, and my blood is drink indeed.” —John 6:55

After his resurrection, Jesus appeared to two of his followers on a road to the city of Emmaus. He hid his identity from them until after he blessed and broke bread for them to eat. Jesus made it clear that after his resurrection all of his disciples would not see him in a human form, but that he would instead be “known to them in the breaking of the bread” (Luke 24:35).

When I told one of my non-Catholic friends that I went to Mass he scoffed. “Don’t you think it’s weird that Catholics believe they’re eating Jesus’ actual flesh and blood?” I then showed him John 6:53-57 and asked him what he thought Jesus meant when he said, “He who eats my flesh and drinks my blood has eternal life.” My friend read the passage, closed the Bible, and while shrugging his shoulders said, “It’s just a metaphor.”

But that explanation didn’t sit well with me.

It’s true Jesus used metaphors to describe his mission. He said of himself, “I am the door” (John 10:9) and “I am the vine” (John 15:5), but in those cases Jesus didn’t also tell us to “oil his true hinges” or “water his true roots.” In addition, no one rejected Jesus for using metaphors involving the door or the vine, but when Jesus said that a person must eat his flesh to have eternal life, the Bible tells us that “many of his disciples drew back and no longer walked with him” (John 6:66).^{105}

THE FIRST CHRISTIANS BELIEVED IN THE REAL PRESENCE

St. Paul told the Corinthians that whoever “eats the bread or drinks the cup of the Lord in an unworthy manner will be guilty of profaning the body and blood of the Lord” (1 Cor. 11:27). Just sixty years later, St. Ignatius of Antioch said, “The Eucharist is the flesh of our Savior Jesus Christ, flesh which suffered for our sins and which the Father, in his goodness, raised up again.”^{106} J.N.D.

Kelly admits that in the early Church, “the consecrated bread and wine were taken to be, and were treated and designated as, the Savior’s body and blood.”^{107}

IT STILL LOOKS LIKE BREAD AND WINE!

At the Last Supper before his Crucifixion, Jesus offered the disciples bread and wine. Jesus did not say, “This bread contains my body” or “I am in this wine.” Jesus simply said of the bread, “Take, eat; this is my body” and of the wine “Drink of it, all of you; for this is my blood of the covenant” (Matt 26:26-28). The Church teaches that when they are consecrated at Mass, the substance of these things changes into the body and blood of Christ although the appearances of the bread and wine remain.

A substance is the “metaphysical core” of an object that unites all of an object’s appearances into a single entity. For example, humans look very different as they grow from being infants and become adults. In fact, many of our cells die and are replaced by new cells, but through all these changes we remain the same person. That’s because we possess an invisible, underlying substance, or a metaphysical core that unites our parts. This unity is only broken at death, when the soul leaves the body and we begin to decompose.

At Mass the bread and wine do not transform into the body and blood of Christ, because their form, or how the bread and wine look and taste to us, does not change. Rather, the substance of the bread and wine changes into the substance of the body and blood of Christ.

Through this miracle, God causes the appearances of bread and wine to remain but replaces the underlying reality that unites these appearances, the substance, with the body and blood of Christ. That’s why Catholics teach that during the Consecration at Mass the bread and wine transubstantiate, or change in substance, into the body and blood of Christ. This explains how we can consume what appear to be bread and wine and still be faithful to Jesus’ command to “eat his flesh and drink his blood.”^{108}

Finally, at Mass Christ is not re-sacrificed on the cross. Unlike the animal sacrifices of the Old Testament, Christ’s sacrifice was perfect and does not need to be repeated on a continual basis (Heb. 10:10). Instead, at every Mass Christ’s sacrifice is re-presented, or made present again, to the Father, and we receive the saving effects of his sacrifice by consuming it under the form of bread and wine in the Eucharist.^{109} The Didache, a first-century catechism manual, even tells Christians to “assemble on the Lord’s day, and break bread and offer the Eucharist; but first make confession of your faults, so that your sacrifice may be a pure one.”^{110}

FALL AT HIS FEET

After I became Catholic I used to count the number of times I’d received the Lord in the Eucharist. “My seventh time receiving Jesus!” I’d say to myself. By now I’ve lost count how many times I’ve received the Eucharist, and when I’m tired and bored at Mass I become tempted to just “get through it.”

Then I remember a story the philosopher Peter Kreeft likes to tell. He says that when one of his students explained the Eucharist to a Muslim friend, the man said, “I don’t think you really do believe that.” The student asked why he thought that and his Muslim friend said, “If I believed that thing that looks like a little round piece of bread was really Allah [God] Himself, I think I would just faint. I would fall at His feet like a dead man.”^{111}

I’m glad what I “get out of” Mass isn’t just a warm, fuzzy feeling. I’d rather have the feeling of receiving the God of the universe in my hands, on my lips, and into my very body. I’d rather have the joy of knowing that God has humbled himself to become a physical object that makes the temple of my body (1 Cor. 6:19) home to his actual presence. In that way, Jesus’ very life is joined with mine so I can share eternal life with him.

HE GAVE HIS LIFE FOR THE EUCHARIST

In the third century, a young Roman boy named Tarcisius who assisted at Mass was asked to bring the Eucharist to Christians who were dying in prison. It was illegal to practice the Faith, so Christians hid in underground tombs called catacombs. When Tarcisius emerged from the catacombs, a group of non-Christians demanded he hand over the Eucharist. He refused and so they beat him with clubs until he died. According to the Church’s records of those who were martyred for the Faith, “they could find no trace of Christ’s Sacrament either in his hands or in his clothing. The Christians took up the body of the martyr and buried it with honor in the cemetery of Callistus.”^{112}

WHY WE BELIEVE: MASS AND THE EUCHARIST

- Jesus is the new Passover lamb who was sacrificed to take away the sins of the world.

- The Passover lamb had to be eaten, which is why Jesus gave us his flesh and blood under the form of bread and wine.
- Christ is not sacrificed again at Mass. Rather, his one sacrifice on the cross is re-presented to the Father and through it we receive God's grace.

Why We Baptize Babies

I still remember the night I was baptized. When my name was called I walked up to the front of the church and dipped my feet into the cool water of the baptismal font. As the water swirled around my ankles, I lifted up my palms and closed my eyes.

I don't remember thinking about anything except the priest's voice saying, "I baptize you in the name of the Father . . ." As he poured the water over my head I opened my eyes to see what looked like a shimmering curtain separating me from the rest of the church. He continued, " . . . and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit."

I wiped the water from my eyes and saw hundreds of people breaking out into thunderous applause, including my non-Catholic parents. As I stepped out of the font I thought of the conversion of St. Paul, who had become a hero of mine as I prepared to be received into the Church.

According to the Bible, after he met the risen Jesus, St. Paul was left blind until God's messenger Ananias visited him. He told Paul, "The God of our fathers appointed you to know his will . . . you will be a witness for him to all men of what you have seen and heard. And now why do you wait? Rise and be baptized, and wash away your sins, calling on his name" (Acts 22:14-16).

HOW BAPTISM WORKS

Jesus didn't say baptism merely showed other people we were Christians. Instead, Jesus declared that, "Unless one is born of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter the kingdom of God" (John 3:5). St. Peter told a crowd in Jerusalem, "Repent, and be baptized every one of you . . . for the forgiveness of your sins" (Acts 2:38), and in his own letter to the entire Church Peter said that "baptism . . . now saves you" (1 Pet. 3:21).

Before Jesus' earthly ministry, a prophet named John the Baptist called people to give up their sins and faithfully worship the one, true God. John's baptism didn't take away sin, but rather showed that a person was sorry for his sins.¹¹³ However, John did say that, while he baptized with water, someone coming after him who was greater than him (or Jesus) would baptize with the Holy Spirit and with fire (Matt. 3:11). Jesus' baptism didn't just symbolize a person rejecting his sins; it actually took away that person's sins.

BAPTIZED WITH FIRE?

In the Bible, fire often symbolizes purification, such as when God's way of making us holy is compared to how a blacksmith uses fire to burn away the corrupt parts of a metal. Just as the blacksmith's fire leaves only pure, stainless metal, the fire of God's love leaves a pure believer who is free from the stain of sin (Prov. 17:3, Sir. 2:4-6). The Bible says that God is a consuming fire (Heb. 12:29), which means God is able to purify and "burn away" our sin so that we can stand sinless before him at the final judgment (1 Cor. 3:15).

God knows that we comprehend the world by thinking and by feeling. In order to help us truly understand that he cleanses us from our sins, God chose an instrument that every culture on earth associates with life and health—water. That's why Jesus instructed the disciples to baptize all nations in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit (Matt. 28:19).

PERSONAL VERSUS ORIGINAL SIN

I had been baptized as a young adult, which means that every sin I committed before that point was forgiven. But if baptism washes away sin, and babies don't commit any sins, then why do Catholics bother to baptize babies? The reason is that along with personal sin, or acts of wrongdoing that violate God's law, there is another kind of sin we all have—original sin.

WHAT IS SIN?

- Original sin: An inherited absence of God's grace that inclines us to sin and suffer death (CCC 403-404).
 - Personal sin: Choosing to do evil that violates God's eternal law, or failing to do good (CCC 1849-1850).
-

Unlike personal sin, original sin is not an evil thing we've done but an absence of God's grace in our souls. Baptism "removes" original sin by filling our souls with the love and life of God, or grace. So, when I was baptized, not only did God forgive every sin I committed, but he filled my heart with his life and took away the stain of original sin. In that moment he gave me, as Paul says, “the spirit of sonship. When we cry, ‘Abba! [literally, Daddy!] Father!’ it is the Spirit himself bearing witness with our spirit that we are children of God” (Rom. 8:15-16).

The reason this absence of grace is called original sin is because it is a consequence of the very first sin humans committed. When our first parents, Adam and Eve, disobeyed God, they lost the gift of God’s favor that protected them from death and suffering. After losing this grace they could not pass it down to their descendants, who in turn could not pass it down to us. Adam and Eve’s disobedience corrupted our human nature and made it possible for humans to suffer and die. Baptism cannot prevent our physical deaths, because it does not change our physical natures. However, it does change our spiritual nature, so through baptism we are saved from spiritual death by being united to Jesus Christ.

THE FATAL FALL

Some people say it’s not fair for God to punish us because of something Adam and Eve did, but original sin is not a punishment. Instead, it is a consequence of what Adam and Eve did that we have to endure.^{114}

To understand this, imagine a man is given an inheritance that makes him rich, but in his greed he steals more money from the estate of his deceased relative. The man’s wife and children, who didn’t know he did this, are thrilled about never having to worry about money again—until the police arrive, arrest the man, and the courts take back all the money he inherited.

The courts don’t punish the man’s family because they did nothing wrong. However, the man’s family still suffers because they would have been blessed with riches if he had not stolen more money. In the same way, we would have enjoyed supernatural gifts of grace if Adam and Eve had not fallen from grace and rebelled against God. St. Paul says that because of the fall of man, “sin came into the world through one man and death through sin, and so death spread to all men because all men sinned” (Rom. 5:12).

“O truly necessary sin of Adam, destroyed completely by the Death of Christ!
O happy fault
that earned so great, so glorious a Redeemer!”

Even though one man's disobedience cursed humanity, one man's obedience saved it (Rom. 5:19). St. Paul says that Christ's sacrifice atoned or made up not just for Adam's sin, but for the sins of the whole world (1 John 2:2). He also says that we are freed from sin by dying and rising with Christ, but how exactly do we "die and rise" with Christ? St. Paul explains:

Do you not know that all of us who have been baptized into Christ Jesus were baptized into his death? We were buried therefore with him by baptism into death, so that as Christ was raised from the dead by the glory of the Father, we too might walk in newness of life (Romans 6:3-4).

BRINGING CHILDREN TO CHRIST

The Bible says baptism washes away sin (Acts 22:16) and makes us members of the Body of Christ (1 Cor. 12:13). Should we exclude babies from the Body of Christ just because they can't choose to be baptized? Of course not! Babies never chose to be afflicted with original sin either, but we can choose to deliver them from this condition through baptism. Jesus even said, "Let the children come to me, and do not hinder them; for to such belongs the kingdom of heaven" (Matt. 19:14).

It's true the Bible never explicitly describes babies being baptized, but it does describe entire households being baptized, which may have included young children (Acts 16:15, 16:33; 1 Cor. 1:16). Although the Bible never describes the way we should baptize someone, that doesn't stop us from baptizing people.

Should we pour water over a person's head? Should we fully immerse him in water? Could we just sprinkle water on people, especially if they live in places like the desert, which barely have any water? God's written word doesn't tell us, but God's spoken word, preserved in Sacred Tradition, does. The Didache records how the first-century Church practiced baptism:

Concerning baptism, baptize in this manner: Having said all these things beforehand, baptize in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit in living water [that is, in running water, as in a river]. If there is no living water, baptize in other water; and, if you are not able to use cold water, use warm. If you have neither, pour water three times upon the head in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit.^{115}

The Bible also teaches that the New Covenant in Christ is greater than the Old Covenant God had with Israel (Heb. 8:6). Since the Old Covenant included babies through circumcision (Gen. 17:12), this means the New Covenant must also include babies or else it would be inferior to the Old Covenant. In fact, St. Paul calls baptism “the circumcision of Christ” (Col. 2:11).

Some people in the early Church believed this meant that parents must wait eight days to baptize their children, because that’s how long people waited to circumcise babies in the Old Covenant. But the Fathers of the Church said babies should be baptized as soon as possible, especially since children in that time were at risk of dying soon after birth.

“NO ONE IS HELD BACK”

In the third century, St. Cyprian said, “The mercy and grace of God ought to be denied to no man born . . . no one is held back from baptism and grace, how much more, then, should an infant not be held back.”^{116}

Denying babies God’s grace through baptism so that they can choose it later as an adult would be like denying a baby medicine so that he can choose to take it “for himself” when he gets older. Sin is just too serious to leave in anyone’s body, especially a child’s. That’s why even though I was baptized as an adult, I give all my children shortly after they’re born a gift I wasn’t blessed with at their age—the grace of God poured into their hearts through the sacrament of baptism.

WHY WE BELIEVE: BAPTISM

- Baptism takes away sin, unites us with Christ, and makes us members of his body, the Church.
- Infants must be baptized because they are born with original sin. Baptism is the ordinary means by which God removes original sin and makes us his adopted children.
- The early Church only debated when infants should be baptized, not if they should be baptized.

PART 4

SAINTS

SINNERS

Why We Believe in Spite of Scandal

Shortly after I became Catholic, I visited a party with some of my nonreligious friends, who were watching news coverage about the clergy sex abuse scandal. It seems that in several large dioceses priests who had been accused of abusing children weren't reported to the police. They were instead transferred to other parishes (or churches), putting untold numbers of children at risk.

As I entered the room, one of my friends turned to me, smirked, and said, "Great job picking a new religion, Trent."

PUTTING SCANDAL INTO PERSPECTIVE

It feels like a punch to the gut when something or someone you care about is caught up in scandal. You may even be tempted to cut off all association with a scandalized group or person and try to make a fresh start. But as St. Augustine is reported to have said, "The Church is not a hotel for saints, it is a hospital for sinners." The issue is not whether the patients are sinners, or even if the staff are sinners. The issue is whether the hospital (or the Church) has the cure for sin that has infected everyone. Pope Paul VI put it this way:

The Church is therefore holy, though having sinners in her midst, because she herself has no other life but the life of grace. If they live her life, her members are sanctified [or made holy]; if they move away from her life, they fall into sins and disorders that prevent the radiation of her sanctity.^{117}

The clergy abuse scandal does not prove there is no God or that Christ did not establish the Catholic Church. If anything, the revulsion we have against child abuse shows that some acts are always wrong—no matter what. Since universal moral laws must come from a universal moral lawgiver, or God, this means the clergy abuse scandal should push someone away from atheism, not toward it.

The scandal also doesn't justify leaving Catholicism for a Protestant church, since sex abuse is not only a “Catholic” problem. According to the John Jay College of Criminal Justice, about 4 percent of priests who served between 1950 and 2002 have been accused of sexual abuse (note that accusations do not always mean a crime was committed).¹¹⁸ Insurance company premiums suggest that similar rates of abuse exist in Protestant churches. According to one insurance industry spokeswoman, “Our claims experience shows this happens evenly across denominations.”¹¹⁹

This does not excuse incidents of sex abuse in the Church, but it does help us respond to those incidents. Just as we wouldn’t say public schools are “full of pedophile teachers,” we shouldn’t slander or abandon the Church because of the sinful actions of a tiny minority of the clergy.

IS ABUSE JUST A CATHOLIC PROBLEM?

Ernie Allen, the director of the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children, said in an interview with Newsweek magazine, “We don’t see the Catholic Church as a hotbed of this or a place that has a bigger problem than anyone else. I can tell you without hesitation that we have seen cases in many religious settings, from traveling evangelists to mainstream ministers to rabbis and others.”¹²⁰

GETTING THE FACTS RIGHT

Most accusations of sexual abuse among priests come from incidents that took place between 1950 and 1980. At that time it was thought that the urge to commit sexual abuse could be treated with therapy, and so involving law enforcement was not always necessary. According to Dr. Monica Applewhite, who has spent more than twenty years studying abuse and how to prevent it, “These treatment-based interventions for sexual criminals [instead of incarceration] were not only enormously prevalent in the United States, but surveys of ordinary citizens showed that they were enormously popular.”¹²¹

Modern psychology has now shown, however, that sex offenders are very likely to commit more crimes in the future. That’s why the Catholic Church has taken steps to increase transparency and accountability in the area of reporting sexual abuse. The Church has created offices of safe environment and child protection that have trained millions of adults to recognize signs of abuse. Dioceses across the world have instituted zero tolerance policies that require immediate and mandatory reporting of alleged abuse to law enforcement. In 2015, Pope Francis created a special tribunal for disciplining bishops who had been negligent in their response to allegations of abuse.^{122}

According to journalist David Gibson, “The Catholic Church may be the safest place for children. Whatever its past record, the Catholic Church in the U.S. has made unparalleled strides in educating their flock about child sexual abuse and ensuring that children are safe in Catholic environments.”^{123}

HISTORY FULL OF SCANDALS?

The clergy abuse scandal isn’t the only event in Church history that has been misunderstood. Consider the Crusades, which were not cases of the Church trying to forcibly convert people or steal their land. According to Thomas Madden, one of the world’s leading experts on the subject, “The crusades remain today one of the most commonly misunderstood events in Western history.”^{124}

Instead of seeking riches and conquest, the Crusaders risked life and limb to rescue Christians whose land and homes had been overrun by Muslim invaders. Even Christian pilgrims who visited the region risked their lives to worship in the Holy Land. For example, thirty years before the First Crusade, a group of 7,000 peaceful German pilgrims were viciously massacred.^{125} This, among other events, prompted Pope Urban II to call the First Crusade. In a speech he gave in 1095 the pope said:

Let those who for a long time have been robbers now become knights. Let those who have been fighting against their brothers and relatives now fight in a proper way against the barbarians. Let those who have been serving as mercenaries for small pay now obtain the eternal reward.^{126}

This does not mean the Crusaders were always virtuous. Some of them took advantage of “the fog of war” and committed unspeakable atrocities against civilians and even other Crusaders. But this does not make the Crusades an unjust war any more than the firebombing of the city of Dresden, which killed thousands of German civilians, and made the Allies unjust aggressors during World War II.

A RABBI DEFENDS THE POPE

Another historical myth about the Church involves Pope Pius XII allegedly ignoring or even actively helping the Nazis. However, that claim originally came from a 1963 Soviet propaganda play called The Deputy. According to Rabbi David Dalin, author of the book The Myth of Hitler's Pope:

“Eugenio Pacelli [the future Pope Pius XII] was one of Hitler’s earliest and most consistent critics and . . . as both the Vatican Secretary of State and subsequently as pope, was in fact a friend of the Jewish people who was instrumental in rescuing and sheltering a great many Jews from the clutches of the Nazis.”^{127}

Finally, when people focus only on scandal they forget how the Catholic Church has been a force for good in the world. The Church built the Western world’s first universities, hospitals, orphanages, and homes for the dying. Its missionaries preached the gospel in far-off lands, where they had to fight barbaric practices like wife-burning, foot-binding, and child marriages. In the fourth century, the Roman emperor complained that Christians “support not only their own poor but ours as well, all men see that our people lack aid from us.”^{128}

In his history of medicine, historian Roy Porter says, “Christianity planted the hospital” and it was considered a mark of holiness to expose oneself to infection in order to care for the sick.^{129} This legacy continues today in the Catholic Church, which is the largest provider of nongovernmental health care in the entire world.^{130}

A PRIEST BRINGS LEPERS TO CHRIST

Throughout human history many victims of leprosy (a disease that causes numbness in the limbs and skin lesions) were banished to “leper colonies.”^{131} One large colony existed on the island of Molokai in Hawaii where, in 1873, a man named Fr. Damien volunteered to be the colony’s first priest.

For the next eleven years Fr. Damien did what many weakened lepers could not: he built homes, churches, and public utilities. He healed the sick, cared for orphans and widows, and celebrated the sacraments. In 1884 he contracted leprosy and five years later was buried beneath the same tree he slept under when he first arrived on the island.

In 2009 the Church declared him to be St. Damien of Molokai. His life could be summarized in these words he shared with one of his friends: “I make myself a leper with the lepers to gain all to Jesus Christ.”^{132}

RESPONDING TO “SPIRITUAL MALPRACTICE”

After one of my public presentations, a woman approached me and asked, “How can Catholics have the true Church when their priests do such awful things?” I asked in reply, “Are you saying that all priests abuse children?”

“Oh, of course not,” she insisted, “but too many of them have.”

“What percent is too many for you? Personally I think one is too many, but does that prove the Catholic faith isn’t true?”

“If they’re really men of God in Christ’s Church,” she asked, “then how could they do that?”

I responded, “Let me ask you, does the devil hate Christ’s Church?”

“Absolutely!”

“Then of all the members of the Church, who is he going to attack the most?”

She thought for a moment and then said, “The priests!”

This is why we must pray for priests as well as for everyone else who fights against sin and despair in our world. This does not mean that we should excuse or ignore sins that any Catholic commits, even if that person is a priest. If you or someone you love was hurt by a member of the Catholic Church, know that I am sorry. Those responsible for these crimes, no matter who they are, must be brought to justice. Even if it turned out the pope was guilty of abusing a child I would wholeheartedly say he needed to be imprisoned. But just as a victim of abuse should not be blamed for a crime committed against him, the Church as a whole should not be blamed for crimes committed by priests or other Catholics who violate its teachings.

Leaving the Church because a priest or layperson committed a serious sin would be like swearing off hospitals because a doctor committed malpractice. What that doctor did was wrong, but that doesn’t change the fact that the hospital is still the best place to go if you’re sick. Similarly, Christ gave his Church the means to free us from sin, so we do ourselves no favors if we reject that remedy because some Catholics who fell into scandal refused to take it.

WHY WE BELIEVE: OVERCOMING SCANDAL

- Jesus never promised that his Church would be free of sinners, only that it would provide the means to save sinners.
- Some particular allegations of scandal are built on lies or misrepresentations of Church history.
- Scandal should not be ignored, but it also shouldn’t be used as a reason to leave the Church, because the sins of a few do not disprove the truth of what the Church as a whole teaches.

Why We Believe that Faith Works Through Love

Once when I was eating in a cafeteria I noticed two girls at another table smiling at me. I smiled back and they walked over to where I was sitting as I thought to myself, “Still got it . . .” One of them then said to me, “Hi, could I ask you a question?”

“Sure,” I said, in as relaxed a tone as possible.

“Would you mind answering a few survey questions for us?”

“Guess I don’t got it,” I thought to myself.

They first asked me what religion I was and I told them I was Catholic. One of the girls then asked me, “On a scale from one to ten how confident are you that you’re going to heaven?”

I thought for a moment and replied, “I’m pretty sure I’m going to heaven, but I can’t give it a number . . .” The second girl jumped in and said, “Actually the correct number is ten (I didn’t know you could get a survey question wrong!). All you need to do to go to heaven is believe in Jesus Christ. If you do that you can never lose your salvation.”

While this sounds wonderful, the problem with this view of salvation is that it is unbiblical. The Bible does not teach that simply making an act of faith guarantees heaven for us. Instead, it teaches that salvation is a process of “faith working through love” (Gal. 5:6), made possible through our spiritual adoption into God’s family.

GOD’S PLAN OF SALVATION

God desires the salvation of all people (1 Tim. 2:4). That’s why in one act of love Jesus Christ, who is fully man, represented all of us on the cross and perfectly obeyed God’s law in a way no other human could. Because Jesus is fully divine, his death on the cross had infinite value. It was a sacrifice of love that was so good it made up not just for the sins of Christians, but the sins of the entire world (1 John 2:2).

Does that mean everyone will go to heaven?

God has given everyone enough grace to come to know him and his offer of salvation. But since God is love, and love never forces itself on the beloved, God will not force people to be saved. Some people will reject God's offer of salvation, but other people will not resist God's grace. They will see the ugliness of sin and ask God to help them escape it. They will follow the Bible's three-step plan for being saved:

- Repent (turn away from sin)
- Believe (turn toward Christ)
- Receive (be united to Christ)

In his first sermon, St. Peter told a crowd in Jerusalem, "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the forgiveness of your sins; and you shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit" (Acts 2:38). St. Paul likewise told the Philippian jailer, "Believe in the Lord Jesus, and you will be saved, you and your household" (Acts 16:31). The text goes on to say that the jailer "was baptized at once, with all his family" (Acts 16:33).

The apostles preached that adult converts (like me) had to repent of sin, believe in Jesus, and then receive Jesus by being baptized. However, the order of these steps can be changed. For someone who hasn't committed a personal sin yet, like a baby, it would look like this:

- Receive (be united to Christ)
- Repent (turn away from sin)
- Believe (turn toward Christ)

When my wife was a baby she (like most Catholics) was baptized. This removed the stain of original sin and filled her soul with God's grace. This grace helped her when she learned about Jesus, and gave her "spiritual motivation" to repent from sin and believe in Christ and his Church.

SALVATION: PAST, PRESENT, AND FUTURE

So is that all there is to our salvation? Repent, believe, and receive? That's all there is to our initial salvation, or our being adopted into God's family. Our final salvation isn't complete until we enter into heaven. Between the beginning and end of salvation are all the moments we live out in this life where we remember Jesus' teaching that "he who endures to the end will be saved" (Matt. 10:22).

Salvation does not consist of a single moment when we accept Christ. Rather, it is a process through which we live out our faith and obey Christ until death. Here's a scenario that illustrates what I mean.

Imagine you are caught in a storm at sea with some friends and your boat is sinking. You hear a broadcast on your radio telling you that if you want to be saved you must put on life jackets, report your position, and wait for help to arrive. As the boat pitches up and down and water sprays over the bow, you reply into the radio, "Yes, save us!" You then put on the life jackets and dive into the water.

Two days go by and your rescuers are nowhere to be seen. One of your friends says help isn't coming and decides to swim to shore on his own: he is never seen again. A few days later a rescue boat finds you, pulls you onto the deck, and you breathe a sigh of relief. "Saved!"

But when exactly were you saved? Was it when you set foot on the rescue boat? Or was it when you made the initial radio call? The Bible teaches that salvation is a process that begins in the past through faith, continues throughout our lives in the present, and ends with our future eternal glory in heaven. Let's take a look at each part of our salvation:

Past Salvation: Ephesians 2:8-9 says, "By grace you have been saved through faith; and this is not your own doing, it is the gift of God—not because of works, lest any man should boast." That's true! Whether it was my wife who was baptized as a baby and later came to believe in Christ, or myself who came to believe in Christ and chose to be baptized, both of us were saved by faith. God adopted us as his children and we did nothing to earn that gift of faith; we simply chose not to reject it. This is similar to how the people on the sinking ship did not reject the rescue offer they heard on the radio, but accepted it and waited for help.

When the Bible says we are not saved by works, it means we did nothing to earn the first moment of our salvation. But as we will see, works do play a role in the process of our salvation.

JUSTIFIED BY FAITH ALONE?

In Romans 3:28 Paul says, "We hold that a man is justified by faith apart from works of law." The Reformers took this to mean that Paul condemned the idea that good works have any part in our salvation. But Protestant scholars like James Dunn and N.T. Wright have shown that Reformers like Luther and Calvin misunderstood Paul's argument.¹³³

When Paul talked about being justified, or being made righteous apart from the Law, he didn't mean good works have nothing to do with our salvation. What he meant was that a person is saved apart from obeying the Law of Moses, or that people don't have to become Jews before they can become Christians.

That's why in the very next verse Paul says, "Or is God the God of Jews only? Is he not the God of Gentiles also?" (Rom. 3:29). It's also why in Galatians 5:6 Paul says, "For in Christ Jesus neither circumcision nor uncircumcision is of any avail, but faith working through love."

Paul did not teach that works have nothing to do with our salvation, because he said that God "will render to every man according to his works: to those who by patience in well-doing seek for glory and honor and immortality, he will give eternal life" (Rom 2:6-7).

Present Salvation: In Philippians 2:12 Paul tells us, "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling." As long as a person remains in a state of grace, he will go to heaven after death. John 3:36 says, "He who believes in the Son has eternal life; he who does not obey the Son [emphasis added] shall not see life." That's why James 2:24 says, "A person is justified by works and not by faith alone."

There are no specific works that "earn" our salvation. Instead, we merit salvation by cooperating with God's grace to do the works he prepared for us before we were even born (Eph. 2:10). Because we are God's adopted children, everything we do in Christ, even mundane, day-to-day tasks, pleases God when they are done in a spirit of humility and charity. However, if we commit a mortal sin (1 John 5:17), and fall from grace (Gal. 5:4), then we risk losing our salvation (Heb. 10:28-29).

If we give up our faith or commit a serious sin and separate ourselves from God, then we will be like the foolish shipwreck survivor who tried to swim to shore on his own and perished. In fact, St. Paul warned his disciple Timothy not to be like people who rejected what their conscience told them and "made shipwreck of their faith" (1 Tim 1:19).

Future Salvation: Just as the shipwreck survivors' ordeal wasn't over until they made it to dry land, our salvation is not complete until we enter into God's kingdom. But in Romans 10:13 Paul says, "Everyone who calls upon the name of the Lord will be saved." Doesn't that mean all we have to do is believe and we know we will be saved?

Paul does not mean a person's salvation is finished immediately after he believes in Jesus. In Romans 13:11, Paul says of those who had believed for a while, “Salvation is nearer to us now than when we first believed.” Faith begins our salvation, and if we “kept the faith” (2 Tim. 4:7) then we “will be saved.” That’s why Paul warns the Church at Rome that if they don’t continue in God’s kindness, “you too will be cut off” (Rom. 11:22).

Fortunately for us, God has given his Church the “ministry of reconciliation.” Anyone who separates himself from Christ, no matter what he or she has done, can be restored to an intimate relationship with God through the sacrament of confession (John 20:23). Those who choose reconciliation with God know that “any one [who] is in Christ, he is a new creation; the old has passed away, behold, the new has come” (2 Cor. 5:17-18).

FAITH THAT WORKS IN LOVE

Through God’s grace our hearts are transformed so we can perform works of love that please him and prepare us to enter into his kingdom. The effect of this grace can be seen in people like Mother Teresa (now St. Teresa of Calcutta), who devoted her life to serving the poor and the dying. She founded the Missionaries of Charity, which now has thousands of members who take a vow to give “wholehearted free service to the poorest of the poor.”

Part of that service includes homes for dying people who could not be helped in hospitals and whose families have abandoned them. The missionaries founded the first home for people dying specifically of HIV/AIDS in New York’s Greenwich Village in 1985. A similar home was opened in Washington, D.C., despite public protests from residents who did not want “those kinds of people” in their neighborhood.^{134}

Mother Teresa summarized her work and her faith in this way: “By blood, I am Albanian. By citizenship, an Indian. By faith, I am a Catholic nun. As to my calling, I belong to the world. As to my heart, I belong entirely to the Heart of Jesus.”^{135}

WHY WE BELIEVE: FAITH WORKING THROUGH LOVE

- We are initially saved in the past through the gift of faith that comes from God and motivates us to be baptized (or motivates someone to baptize us when we are infants).
- We are saved in the present by obeying God and working out our salvation (Phil. 2:13) so that we can receive our final salvation in the future.
- Salvation involves being united to Christ and adopted into God’s family, where God freely rewards his children for the good works they do with the gift of grace (James 2:24, Rom. 2:6-8).

Why We Believe in Purgatory

C.S. Lewis, the author of Mere Christianity and The Chronicles of Narnia, was not Catholic but he did believe in the existence of purgatory. He knew dying does not change our sinful hearts, so God must do something to us after death in order to make us fit to spend eternal life with him. Lewis said, “Our souls demand Purgatory, don’t they?”¹³⁶

1 John 5:17 says, “All wrongdoing is sin, but there is sin which is not mortal.” The Church refers to mortal sins as our freely chosen, gravely evil acts that destroy God’s love in our hearts. These sins forfeit our hope of eternal life with God unless we ask God to forgive them through the sacrament of reconciliation (confession).¹³⁷

Unlike mortal sins, venial sins hurt the soul but do not kill God’s grace within it. These are sins that people commit in their day-to-day life that do not completely separate them from God but do hurt their relationship with him. Catholics don’t have to confess these sins to a priest (but they can if they wish), and the Eucharist also cleanses us of these sins. But what happens to people who don’t seek the sacraments and die in an unclean state of venial sin?

C.S. LEWIS DESCRIBES THE NEED FOR PURGATORY

Would it not break the heart if God said to us, “It is true, my son, that your breath smells and your rags drip with mud and slime, but we are charitable here and no one will upbraid you with these things, nor draw away from you. Enter into the joy”? Should we not reply, “With submission, sir, and if there is no objection, I’d rather be cleaned first.”

“It may hurt, you know.”

“Even so, sir.”

Since these people died in a state of grace and friendship with God, there is no possibility they will go to hell. But Revelation 21:27 says that nothing unclean will be in heaven. It logically follows, therefore, that these saved souls will be purged of their sins prior to spending eternity with God.

According to the Catechism, “The Church gives the name purgatory to this final purification of the elect, which is entirely different from the punishment of the damned” (CCC 1031).

Purgatory is not an alternative to heaven and hell nor is it a “second chance” to choose God. All souls that go to purgatory belong to people who died in God’s friendship. Purgatory isn’t a place as much as it is a state of existence after death, where we will be purified from sin. C.S. Lewis understood that because God loves us so much he won’t let us stay attached to any kind of sin, including minor ones, for all eternity.

WHAT IS PURGATORY LIKE?

We don’t know exactly what the process of purification includes or how long it will take. Jesus told the good thief on the cross, “Today you will be with me in Paradise” (Luke 23:43), and Pope Benedict XVI said, “The transforming ‘moment’ of this encounter eludes earthly time-reckoning—it is the heart’s time, it is the time of ‘passage’ to communion with God in the Body of Christ.”^{138}

WHERE IS PURGATORY IN THE BIBLE?

If you wonder where purgatory is in the Bible, then also wonder about this—where does the Bible say all Christians immediately go to heaven after death?

Some people say the Bible teaches that “to be absent from the body is to be present with the Lord.” In other words, after we die we will be “present with Christ” in heaven. But that is a misquotation of the Bible. In 2 Corinthians 5:8 St. Paul actually says, “We would rather [emphasis added] be away from the body and at home with the Lord.”

If I say, “I’d rather be away from the office and at home with my family,” that does not mean that once I step foot outside my office I will automatically be at home. Paul even tells us that after death we won’t automatically have blissful rest with Christ in heaven. He says we will instead “appear before the judgment seat of Christ, so that each one may receive good or evil, according to what he has done in the body” (2 Cor. 5:10).

“The existence of a purgatory I have never denied. I still hold that it exists, as I have written and admitted many times.” —Martin Luther^{139}

The Old Testament describes how Judas the Maccabee prayed for the souls of his slain comrades and “made atonement for the dead, that they might be delivered from their sin” (2 Macc. 12:45). Since prayers cannot help the damned in hell and are not needed for the saved in heaven, these prayers must have been applied to souls being cleansed of their sins after death in purgatory.

It’s true that Protestants reject the inspiration of deuterocanonical books like 2 Maccabees, but they can’t deny these books show how ancient Jews prayed for the dead so that their sins could be forgiven. In fact, Jesus taught about sins that are so serious they would not be forgiven in this life or “in the age to come” (Matt. 12:32). But this implies that “in the age to come,” or the afterlife, there are less serious sins that can be forgiven, which happens in purgatory.

Perhaps the most striking text about the purification we will undergo after death is 1 Corinthians 3:13-15. In this passage, Paul refers to the testing of our works that will take place after death:

Each man’s work will become manifest; for the Day will disclose it, because it will be revealed with fire, and the fire will test what sort of work each one has done. If the work which any man has built on the foundation survives, he will receive a reward. If any man’s work is burned up, he will suffer loss, though he himself will be saved, but only as through fire.

These verses unambiguously describe God’s judgment after death and how our works will be exposed with fire. The fire may not be literal, because Scripture uses fire in metaphorical ways to describe cleansing and purification (Matt. 3:11-12). The text does say that when a man’s inferior works are tested, the man being examined will suffer loss even though he will be saved.

What could that loss be given that he will be saved? The most natural interpretation is that the loss represents the suffering he will endure after death, as the negative effects of his inferior and wicked works are purged from his soul. He will be saved, but as through a purifying fire, or what we call purgatory.

MAKING AMENDS

It is natural for humans to want to make up for the wrong they have done, but no amount of work on our part can make up for the wrong caused by our sins against an infinitely holy God. (Only Christ’s sacrifice can do that.) We can, however, make up for the temporal or earthly consequences of our sins.

Here's a way to understand the difference.

If my five-year-old son recklessly breaks a neighbor's window, I will pay for the window because he cannot. If my son is sorry for what he did then I will forgive him, but I will also ask him to perform extra chores to make up for his bad behavior. This satisfies his conscience's desire to make amends and also helps him learn a valuable lesson.

We might think discipline is the opposite of love, but if you've ever been around a spoiled child you see that the lack of discipline can make a person angry, frustrated, selfish, and just plain miserable. Since God is our loving father, he also graciously corrects us, or as the Bible says, "The Lord disciplines him whom he loves, and chastises every son whom he receives" (Heb. 12:6).

How does God our Father love us? "He disciplines us for our good, that we may share his holiness" (Heb. 12:10).

For example, God forgave King David for committing the sins of adultery and murder, but he disciplined David by allowing him to suffer in this life (2 Sam. 12:7-14). Indeed, whenever we sin we cause pain and suffering to other people, and we develop an unhealthy attachment to sin. Fortunately, through his Church God has given us a way to make up for the consequences of our sins and become holy just as God is holy (1 Pet. 1:16). This gift is called an indulgence.

Indulgences are not special "tickets" that help Catholics get into heaven or stay out of hell. Indulgences do not forgive sins and the Church has never sold them.¹⁴⁰ Instead, through sincere and specifically prescribed acts of faith and charity (like saying certain prayers or even reading the Bible), the Church applies the merits of Christ and the saints to us, so that we can be purified from the effects of sin before death instead of afterward. These merits can also be applied to souls in purgatory by praying and obtaining indulgences for them, just as we would pray for any Christian who is striving for holiness.

In Colossians 1:24 Paul said he made up in his suffering "what is lacking in Christ's afflictions." Since Christ's sacrifice is perfect, what Paul means is what is lacking is our sacrifice. God wants all of our sacrifices in this life to be united to Christ so that, as a family, we can help one another be full of grace and free from the effects of sin. That's why St. Paul says if we are children of God then we are both heirs of God, “and fellow heirs with Christ, provided we suffer with him [emphasis added] in order that we may also be glorified with him” (Rom. 8:17).

DOES PURGATORY TAKE AWAY FROM CHRIST?

If Christ’s sacrifice is perfect and infinitely atones for sin, then why is purgatory even necessary? It’s necessary because Christ’s perfect sacrifice must be applied to each individual in different ways.

Those who reject Christ’s offer of salvation, for example, won’t have the saving effects of Christ’s sacrifice applied to them. Believers who are attached to sin in this life will have the effects of Christ’s sacrifice applied to them after death in purgatory. Theologians like Pope Benedict XVI have even speculated that the cleansing fire of purgatory is none other than Christ. He writes:

Some recent theologians are of the opinion that the fire which both burns and saves is Christ himself, the Judge and Savior. The encounter with him is the decisive act of judgment. Before his gaze all falsehood melts away. This encounter with him, as it burns us, transforms and frees us, allows us to become truly ourselves.^{141}

Purgatory doesn’t take away from Christ’s work, but rather it is Christ’s work. It is not something the Church created in order to force people to work their way into heaven. Purgatory is instead something God created so that the grace his Son obtained for us on the cross could make us “holy and blameless and irreproachable before him” (Col. 1:22), free from the pain and penalty of sin, and ready to enter into eternal glory with Christ our Lord.

WHY WE BELIEVE: PURGATORY

- Sin causes both a temporal and eternal harm to our souls that must be purged before we enter into heaven.
- Christ takes away the eternal punishment of sin, and it is through his grace that the temporal punishments of sin are removed in purgatory.
- Indulgences are a way we can remove the temporal punishment associated with sin for ourselves and for souls we pray for in purgatory.

Why We Pray to the Saints

In the weeks leading up to my reception into the Catholic Church, I prepared to not only to be baptized, but also to be confirmed. The sacrament of baptism uses water to communicate grace that takes away sin, while the sacrament of confirmation uses hands that spread oil across the forehead. This oil seals the person with the gifts of the Holy Spirit in order to help him live out the Catholic faith. Hebrews 6:2 alludes to this sacrament when it says how, after baptism, we receive “the laying on of hands.”

In some churches confirmation candidates choose a new name for the ceremony, which is usually the name of a saint who prays for that person. A lot of people pick a saint they can identify with, so, since I used to be someone who mocked the Christian faith but now enjoyed defending it, I chose St. Paul. He was, of course, a Jewish leader who used to kill Christians, but after an encounter with the risen Jesus, he became one of the Faith’s greatest defenders (Phil. 3:3-11).

After our preparation class, one of the volunteers said to me, “You chose Paul as your confirmation name? Those are pretty big shoes to fill.” I wanted to say “I’ve got big feet!” but instead I admitted, “I know, that’s why I need his prayers.”

ONLY ONE MEDIATOR?

Many non-Catholics struggle with the concept of praying to saints because they think prayer and worship are the same thing. Since the Bible says we should only worship God, then shouldn’t we only pray to God? But the word “worship” refers to giving someone “worth-ship,” or the honor that person is due. We call judges “your honor,” for example, as a way of paying them respect, but we don’t treat them like gods.

“Prayer” comes from the Latin word precarius and refers to making a request for something. In Old English a person might have said to a friend, “I pray you will join us for dinner tomorrow night.” They aren’t worshipping their friend as a god, but simply making a request of them. Catholics do the same thing when they pray to saints; they don't honor them as gods but ask them for their prayers.

DEFINE IT

The Church uses three Greek terms to define the kind of “worth-ship” we should give to those who are in heaven.

- Latria: The adoration and praise reserved for God the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit.
 - Hyperdulia: The honor given to Mary, the most blessed of God's creatures.
 - Dulia: The honor given to saints and angels in heaven.
-

Why should we ask saints in heaven to pray for us when we can just pray to God instead? After all, 1 Timothy 2:5, says, “For there is one God, and there is one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus.” Catholics agree that it is great to pray directly to God, but if this argument were taken to its logical conclusion, then it would forbid asking anyone on earth to pray for us.

After all, why ask a friend on earth to pray for you when you can go directly to God? Of course, St. Paul encouraged Christians to pray for everyone (1 Tim. 2:1-4), so 1 Timothy 2:5 must mean that Christ is our one mediator of redemption. Jesus Christ is the only person who unites man and God to one another and removes the barrier of sin between them. But Christ's unique role as our redeemer does not prevent us from mediating or interceding for one another—either in this life or the next one.

All Christians are united to one another because we are all members of the one body of Christ. Romans 12:5 says, “We, though many, are one body in Christ, and individually members one of another.” If the saints in heaven are Christians, then they must belong to the same body of Christ to which all other Christians belong. This means Christians in heaven are united in the bond of love with Christians on earth, and so there is nothing wrong with asking them to pray for us.^{142}

ARE THE SAINTS ALIVE OR DEAD?

It doesn't make sense to say Christians who are in heaven are some kind of “amputated” part of Christ's body that cannot pray for any of the other parts.

Jesus calls himself the vine and says we are the branches (John 15:5). If Jesus holds the “keys of Death” (Rev. 1:18), then how could death ever completely separate the branches from one another as long as they are all spiritually connected to the same vine?¹⁴³

Jesus said that God “is not the God of the dead, but of the living,” and reminded his Jewish audience that the Father said, “I am [not “I was”] the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob” (Mark 12:26-27). In the time of Christ (as well as the time of Moses), the Father was still the God of Jewish heroes like Abraham, who had died centuries earlier. To write off saints like them as being “dead” ignores the fact that, by virtue of their heavenly union with Christ, they are more alive than they were on earth.

In fact, Hebrews 12:1 provides an explicit reference to the saints in heaven having knowledge of what happens on earth. Hebrews 11 praises Old Testament figures like Abraham, Moses, and David, but then, in the first verse of chapter 12 (which in the original work was not separated into chapters), the author says, “Therefore, since we are surrounded by so great a cloud of witnesses, let us also lay aside every weight, and sin which clings so closely, and let us run with perseverance the race that is set before us.”

The Protestant Bible scholar William Barclay says of this passage: “Christians are like runners in some crowded stadium. As they press on, the crowd looks down; and the crowd looking down are those who have already won the crown.”¹⁴⁴ The great figures of the Old Testament, which the Church will always honor as saints (CCC 61), are like members of a cosmic stadium cheering us to finish the race and “keep the faith” (2 Tim. 4:7) lest we be disqualified by our sins (1 Cor. 9:27).

HOW DO THE SAINTS HEAR OUR PRAYERS?

It might be difficult to understand how saints in heaven could hear our prayers by themselves, but for God nothing is impossible (Matt. 19:26). At Pentecost, God gave the apostles the ability to speak and understand different languages, so there’s no reason to think he wouldn’t give the saints this same ability (Acts 2:4-6). Moreover, if God will give us glorified bodies at the end of time, then why wouldn’t he also give us glorified minds that can know much more than normal human minds?

1 Peter 5:8 also says, “Your adversary the devil prowls around like a roaring lion, seeking some one to devour.” Remember that Peter’s warning is given to all Christians in all times and all places. This means the devil, who is just a creature, has the ability to ensnare billions of Christians at the same time with unique temptations he has crafted for each of them.¹⁴⁵ If God’s enemy can have knowledge of what billions of humans do in order to tempt them, then why wouldn’t God’s friends, the saints, have a similar kind of knowledge and use that knowledge to pray for us?

HEAVENLY HELP WANTED

If the saints in heaven are aware of what affects believers on earth, then this naturally leads to the question of whether we should ask them to pray for us. Some people say that praying to saints is not in the Bible so Christians should not do that. But the Bible doesn't record anyone praying the "sinner's prayer" ("Lord Jesus, I am a sinner. Please save me."), but that doesn't make it wrong to say that prayer.

The Bible teaches that the prayers of holy people are more effective than the prayers of less holy people. For example, after Job's friends sinned, God instructed them to have Job pray for them. That's because Job was a very good man and God would hear his prayers (Job 42:8-9). James 5:16 says, "The prayer of a righteous man has great power in its effects"—and who could be more righteous than the saints in heaven, who have been cleansed of all sin? Hebrews 12:23 refers to these people as "the spirits of just men made perfect," and Revelation 5:8 describes them offering our prayers to God.

Finally, just as Protestants don't worship the wooden crosses they pray in front of but use them as reminders of Christ's death and resurrection, Catholics don't worship statues of saints they bow or kneel in front of. They instead use these figures as an aid to prayer, and their posture is done out of respect to the figure being represented; it is not an act of divine worship. Bowing to someone who isn't God isn't always wrong because, for example, Jesus promised the Church that, at the end of time, he would take its enemies and "make them come and bow down before your feet, and learn that I have loved you" (Rev. 3:9).

In the third century, St. Clement of Alexandria said that when a Christian prays, "though he pray alone, he has the choir of the saints standing with him."¹⁴⁶ In fact, prayers found in Christian catacombs of the fourth century describe how people asked their deceased loved ones to pray for them. One inscription near St. Sabina's in Rome says, "Atticus, sleep in peace, carefree in your security, and pray earnestly for our sinful desires."¹⁴⁷

Catholics simply continue the ancient Christian tradition of paying respect to and seeking intercession from the holy men and women who reign with God in heaven.

ASKING A SAINT FOR A MIRACLE

During the Korean War, Fr. Emil Kapaun served as a chaplain and would often celebrate Mass using the hood of his jeep as an altar. He also ministered to dying soldiers under enemy fire. When his unit was captured and put in a prison camp, Fr. Kapaun dug latrines, gave away his food, and performed many other acts of heroism to help the soldiers under his care. In 1951, Fr. Kapaun died in the Sombakol POW camp, but over fifty years later people are saying he has not stopped helping young men in need.

Chase Kear, a member of a Kansas Community College track team, suffered what seemed to be a fatal head injury during a pole vault. Since Fr. Kapaun had always helped young men in impossible situations, Chase's aunt asked people in her church to pray for his intercession (Fr. Kapaun also grew up in a nearby Kansas town). Seven weeks later, Chase walked out of the hospital and told his story to reporters, despite the fact that a large part of his brain had been removed.^{148}

Chase and his family credit the prayers of Fr. Kapaun for his recovery, and the Vatican is currently investigating the incident as evidence for a possible declaration of Fr. Kapaun's sainthood.

WHY WE BELIEVE: THE SAINTS

- The Bible teaches there is one body of Christ and the saints in heaven belong to it.
- Each member of Christ's body should pray for the other members.
- The saints in heaven can hear our prayers and their prayers are powerful because they are holy people.

Why We Honor Mary

A few months before I was received into the Catholic Church, my family experienced a crisis. I was in high school when my mother told me she had been diagnosed with a large tumor in her abdomen. She didn't know how much longer she had to live, and my dad wasn't in the best position to take care of me and my siblings.

I felt like the weight of the world was on my shoulders, so I told my mom, "I need to just go to Church to process all of this." She had left the Church a long time before, but understood it was important to me, so she nodded in approval. I gave her a hug, told her I loved her, and started walking to the church.

As I knelt in that dark, empty church, my hands were clasped tight and my eyes watched the candles by the altar flicker. I just kept asking God for everything to be okay. Then I saw a statue of Mary. I took a deep breath and prayed:

Hail Mary Full of grace the Lord is with you, blessed are you among woman and blessed is the fruit of your womb Jesus. Holy Mary, Mother of God, pray for us sinners, now and at the hour of our death.

Devotion to Mary was the last hurdle I faced coming into the Catholic Church. At first, I feared that Catholics went overboard when it came to Mary and turned her into a rival goddess who took away glory from Christ. But the more I read Scripture the more I saw that Mary didn't take people away from Christ, she led people to him.

THE MOTHER OF GOD

The most important title the Church gives to Mary is also the one that explains why Mary matters so much to Catholics—theotokos. This Greek word means "God-bearer," but it is usually translated into English as "the Mother of God." Mary is praised above all of God's other creatures because she has the most intimate relationship with God. She gave birth to God, nursed God, taught him about life, followed him throughout his ministry, and was at the foot of the cross when Jesus, the God-man, died.

If Jesus is God and Mary is his mother, it logically follows that Mary is the mother of God.

At this point some people might say, “Mary didn’t give birth to God, she gave birth to Jesus.” Yes, but is Jesus God? Calling Mary the Mother of God doesn’t mean that she created the Trinity or that Mary existed before God existed. Being a mother means conceiving and giving birth to a person. God is a Trinity of three divine persons: Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. One of those persons, the Son, became man and had a mother (Gal. 4:4). It logically follows that this woman, or Mary, is the Mother of God.^{149}

Mothers don’t give birth to “natures” or “humanity,” they give birth to persons. The person Mary gave birth to was the divine second person of the Trinity, God the Son, whom she and Joseph named Jesus. Even Protestants understand that Mary should be praised in this way. Timothy George says, “Evangelicals can and should join the church catholic in celebrating the Virgin Mary as the mother of God, the God-bearer.”^{150} Martin Luther eloquently said, “Men have crowded all her glory into a single word, calling her the Mother of God.”^{151}

EVER-VIRGIN

When Catholics call Mary the “blessed virgin,” they mean that not only did Mary never have sexual relations before she gave birth to Jesus, she never had sexual relations at all. She remained “ever-virgin” throughout her life. But doesn’t Matthew 1:25 say Mary did not have relations with her husband “until” she gave birth to Jesus?

Yes, but the word “until” in that verse does not always imply a reversal of conditions. 2 Samuel 6:23 says, “Saul’s daughter Michal bore no children from that day on until the day she died” (ISV), but that doesn’t mean Michal had children after she died. Likewise, 1 Corinthians 15:25 says Christ “must reign until he has put all his enemies under his feet,” even though Christ will still reign even after he has defeated all his enemies.

Matthew 1:25 simply says that Jesus was born of a virgin. Concerning this verse, the Protestant Reformer John Calvin wrote, “No just and well-grounded inference can be drawn from these words of the Evangelist . . . as to what took place after the birth of Christ.”¹⁵²

What about the “brethren of the Lord”? Matthew 13:55-56 describes the people of Nazareth saying of Jesus, “Are not his brethren James and Joseph and Simon and Judas? Are not his sisters with us?” But consider that Mary calls Joseph Jesus’ father (Luke 2:48), even though Joseph was not Jesus’ biological father. This means that Jesus’ brothers and sisters may not have been his biological brothers and sisters, or had Mary as their mother.

The Greek word translated “brethren” in this passage is also used in the Bible to refer to cousins and nephews.¹⁵³ Matthew actually describes James and Joseph as the children of another woman named Mary (Matt. 27:56), and Mark refers to Jesus as “the son of Mary,” rather than “a son of Mary.” In fact, none of Jesus’ brethren are ever called sons or daughters of Mary, and it was unlikely that Mary would have given birth to seven children who all survived past infancy in a harsh first-century world.

Therefore, we can conclude that these brethren were Jesus’ extended relatives, perhaps his cousins. Joseph may even have been a widower who had these children from a previous marriage. This would explain why people from Jesus’ hometown referred to Jesus as the “son of Mary,” rather than by the more traditional “son of Joseph.” This would indicate that Jesus was not a child from Joseph’s previous marriage. Either way, the “brethren of the Lord” were not sons or daughters of the Virgin Mary.

Keep in mind that Mary’s decision to refrain from sexual intimacy was not because sex is bad. It was because the act of the Holy Spirit “overshadowing” her (Luke 1:35) and her body becoming God’s intimate dwelling place is so good! In the Old Testament, when a woman gave birth to a child she belonged to the father of that child. Since Mary gave birth to God’s son she belonged to God and gave her whole life to him.¹⁵⁴

Joseph was still Mary’s lawful husband and he protected her in a culture that was often unfair toward women. However, he also understood that many of the normal conventions we associate with marriage would be different because his family was “the Holy Family,” commissioned by God with raising the most important person who ever lived.

IMMACULATE CONCEPTION AND BODILY ASSUMPTION

The Immaculate Conception does not refer to Jesus' miraculous virginal conception in Mary's womb. Instead, the term means that Mary herself was conceived without the stain of original sin.

The normal means to be freed from original sin is through baptism, but God is free to give his grace to whomever he chooses. He knew from all eternity that Mary would say yes to being the mother of his Son, so when she was conceived, God gave Mary an abundant gift of grace. In Luke 1:28, the angel Gabriel says to Mary "Hail, full of grace, the Lord is with you!" The Greek word that is translated "full of grace" refers to having grace as an enduring, complete quality of a person.¹⁵⁵

But doesn't the Bible say all people have sinned (Rom 3:10)? If that's true, then how could Mary have been immaculately conceived?

First, that passage refers to the truth that both Jews and non-Jews are sinners and need Christ. In Romans 9:11, Paul says that before Isaac and Esau were born they had done neither good nor bad. Millions of human beings die in infancy, long before they reach the age of moral accountability, and thus have never committed a personal sin.

But aren't all humans born with original sin? No, because Jesus was human and he was born without original sin. If we say that Jesus is the exception because he is God, or the new Adam whose obedience undid the crime of the first Adam, then we have room for another exception: Mary, the Mother of God and the "new Eve," whose obedience to God undid the curse brought about by the old Eve. In the second century, St. Irenaeus said, "The knot of Eve's disobedience was loosed by the obedience of Mary. What the virgin Eve had bound in unbelief, the Virgin Mary loosed through faith"¹⁵⁶

Finally, God demonstrated his surpassing love for his mother by taking her body and soul into heaven at the end of her earthly life. In the Old Testament, God assumed, or took, the prophet Elijah's body and soul into heaven before he died (2 Kings 2:11). The Church teaches that Mary was also assumed into heaven, and Revelation 12:1 describes a woman in heaven clothed with the sun who gives birth to the Messiah. She appears right after a vision of the Ark of the Covenant, which carried God's word written on stone tablets. It would be fitting if this woman were Mary, for she is the Ark of the New Covenant, who carried within her body the word of God made flesh, Jesus Christ.

"ALL GENERATIONS WILL CALL ME BLESSED"

As I knelt in that darkened church and prayed the Hail Mary over and over again, I more clearly saw that Catholics weren't turning Mary into a God. The reason Mary is "full of grace," "blessed," "holy," and the "Mother of God" is because her son is Jesus Christ. (It's amazing that, for the rest of time, God the Son will not only have a human face and body, but will bear a physical resemblance to a human woman who lived around 2,000 years ago.) The only thing Catholics were "guilty of" was recognizing the awesome role Mary played in the history of humanity. In Luke 1:48–49, Mary herself says "all generations will call me blessed; for he who is mighty has done great things for me, and holy is his name."

Speaking of awesome mothers, a few weeks after my mom told me about her diagnosis she was released from the hospital. I was nervous until she gave me the news: the tumor was benign. It ended up being the size of a basketball, but it was benign. I prayed to God, "Thank you for letting me have my mom for a little longer," and to his mother I prayed, "Please lead me and my whole family closer to your son, Jesus Christ."

WHY WE BELIEVE: MARY

- Of all of God's creatures, Mary has the closest relationship with God because she gave birth to him.
- As the Mother of God, Mary remained a virgin her whole life, was conceived without original sin, and was assumed into heaven.
- Catholics honor Mary because she always leads us to her son, Jesus Christ.

PART 5

MORALITY

DESTINY

Why We Protect Life

In ancient Rome, fathers had almost unlimited rights over their families. These paterfamilias, as they were called, could even take their own infants and abandon them in the wilderness if they didn't want them. Sometimes a passing stranger would find these children and raise them as slaves, but more often the children would be ripped apart by animals or slowly die of starvation.

Amidst this horror, the members of a new religion called Christianity took a stand. Their catechisms forbade killing children before and after birth, and some believers even rescued abandoned infants and raised them as their own children.¹⁵⁷ Fathers in the Roman Empire had the right to choose what happened to their families, but Christians said no one has the right to “choose” to directly kill another innocent human being.

Today the killing of unwanted children still takes place, but it doesn't happen in the wilderness. Instead, it takes place in hospitals and clinics, where it's called the “right to choose.” But just as it did 2,000 years ago, the Catholic Church opposes the killing of unborn human beings, and it does so with nonreligious arguments any reasonable person can appreciate.

IMPOSING MORALITY?

Some people say, “Don't like abortion, don't have one!” or, “Don't impose your morality on me!” But civilized people impose morality on one another all the time. We impose the view that stealing is wrong on shoplifters who think “it's not a big deal.” We impose the view that child abuse is wrong on parents who think hitting their kids “is not anybody else's business.” Furthermore, the Church does not impose morality. Instead, it gently proposes a way to live that treats all human beings with respect and kindness.

“The State may not impose religion, yet it must guarantee religious freedom and harmony between the followers of different religions.”¹⁵⁸ —Pope Benedict XVI

Once when I was giving a presentation at a secular university, a woman in the audience asked me if I would deny abortion to a pregnant woman who had three children she could barely feed. I agreed with her that poverty is incredibly difficult, but then I asked, “Would it be wrong for this woman to kill one of her born children, like say a two-year-old, in order to free up resources for her unborn baby?” She said, “Of course that would be wrong,” to which I simply asked, “Why?”

“Because you can’t kill real human beings,” she replied.

That, rather than poverty, was the real issue. If the unborn are not real human beings, then abortion is just a routine surgery and personally opposing it would be as odd as personally opposing heart surgery. But if the unborn are human beings like you or me, then personal opposition to abortion is not enough. If we care about justice and equality, then we must change people’s minds so that the lives of unborn children can be protected under the law.

HOPE FOR THE POST-ABORTIVE

The Church teaches that God’s mercy and grace are never far from the man or woman who is sorry for being involved in an abortion procedure. In his encyclical The Gospel of Life, Pope St. John Paul II wrote this message for post-abortive women:

Do not give in to discouragement and do not lose hope. Try rather to understand what happened and face it honestly. If you have not already done so, give yourselves over with humility and trust to repentance. The Father of mercies is ready to give you his forgiveness and his peace in the sacrament of reconciliation. To the same Father and his mercy you can with sure hope entrust your child. With the friendly and expert help and advice of other people, and as a result of your own painful experience, you can be among the most eloquent defenders of everyone’s right to life. 159

WHAT MAKES US HUMAN?

If the fetus or unborn child is growing, then he or she must be alive. If a fetus has human parents and human DNA, then he or she must be human. The human fetus is also not a body part like skin cells or sperm or an egg. It is a whole human being who just needs time, nutrients, and the right environment in order to develop into a fully grown human being (the same things you and I need to develop into fully grown human beings).

The standard medical text Human Embryology & Teratology states: “Fertilization [also called conception] is a critical landmark because, under ordinary circumstances, a new, genetically distinct human organism is formed.”¹⁶⁰

DEFINING LIFE

- Embryo: Greek word that means “developing one”; a human being from conception until the eighth week of life.
 - Fetus: Latin word that means “young one”; a human being from the eighth week of life until birth.
-

Some people say that even if a fetus is a member of the human species, it is not a “person,” or it is not “fully human.” But what is a “person”? What makes us “fully human”?

If being able to think or feel makes someone a person, then newborns and certain disabled born humans would fail that test. Born babies can’t think or feel more than nonhuman animals like cows or rats, but we treat those infants better than these animals just because they are biologically human. Since science proves that unborn children also belong to the human species, this means we should value unborn children in the same way we value newborns, and protect them from being killed through abortion.

Other people say that an unborn child isn’t viable until birth, so it’s not a person because it needs the mother’s body in order to live. But what gives us the right to take a human being who can survive in one environment and place him in an environment where he can’t survive? Imagine if a group of Martians teleported us to their planet, whereupon we suffocated due to the lack of oxygen. Would their actions be justified because earthlings aren’t “viable” on Mars? Of course not! Just the same, unborn humans have the right to live in the environment that is designed to sustain their lives: their mother’s womb.

At this point, some people say, “Fine, it is a baby. But I have the right to do what I want with my body.”¹⁶¹ But if that were true then doctors could not deny pregnant women drugs like thalidomide, which, while effective at reducing nausea in pregnancy, can also cause babies to be born without arms or legs. Even more absurd, there would be nothing wrong with taking a healthy, prematurely born infant out of a hospital incubator, reinserting him into his mother’s womb, and then killing him, since a woman can do “anything” with her own body.

It’s true that we have the right to control our bodies, but that doesn’t give us the right to use our bodies to hurt other innocent human beings. This is especially true with the tiny, unborn human beings a man and woman helped to create. If we expect fathers to be responsible and pay child support for the children they create, then shouldn't we expect mothers to be equally responsible for those same children? Shouldn't they provide "child support" through bodies that are naturally designed to care for those children?

WHAT ABOUT IN THE CASE OF RAPE?

It is never a woman's fault if she has been raped and she should never be punished for what happened. Unfortunately, in our culture we sometimes blame women for crimes committed against them, and in other cultures women are executed for becoming pregnant through rape. That's barbaric and wrong; no innocent person should suffer for another person's crimes.

But what about the child conceived in rape? He is just as innocent as his mother and yet we say it is okay for him to suffer for another person's crimes. Instead, why don't we provide nonjudgmental, nonviolent care for the victims of rape and only punish those who are responsible for committing this act of violence?

MANUFACTURED BABIES?

Although the Church supports technology that helps parents naturally conceive children, it opposes in vitro fertilization, or IVF. This process involves mixing sperm and egg in a laboratory and then implanting the newly created human embryo into a woman's body. Sometimes this woman is the child's mother, but in many cases it is a stranger who acts as a "surrogate" womb for the baby.

The Church opposes IVF because children have a right to be conceived and grow in the wombs of their mothers. They should not be manufactured in a laboratory by technicians who treat them like a product. In addition, more than one embryo is usually created, which means the healthiest child gets to live while his brothers and sisters are destroyed.

Some people find it hard to understand the wrongness of killing embryos, because they imagine human beings are constructed in the womb the way a car is constructed in a factory. If we wouldn't say a car exists when the first nut and bolt are screwed together, then how can we say a human exists when the first cells come together? But this analogy is inaccurate, because humans aren't constructed objects; they're developing persons. Here's an example from law professor Richard Stith that illustrates the difference.^{162}

In the twentieth century, Polaroid cameras printed their pictures on paper that was stored inside the camera. When the paper emerged from the camera after the photo was taken, the image looked like a brown smudge. After several minutes the image began to appear on the paper, until it was fully developed.

Everything that was a picture of the Loch Ness Monster was there in that photo, just as everything that is a new human being is present in tiny human embryos.

Now, imagine you are on a boat on a famous lake in Scotland and you took a Polaroid picture of the Loch Ness Monster. You show the Polaroid to your friend, who then throws it overboard and says, “Too bad it was just a brown smudge and not the Loch Ness Monster.”

How would you respond to your friend? You would be furious and shout, “No! That was a picture of the Loch Ness Monster; you just didn’t give it enough time to develop for you to recognize it and now it’s gone forever!”¹⁶³

Likewise, an aborted embryo or fetus was a living human being who had simply not developed into the more recognizable “infant stage” of life. Destroying a human embryo or fetus doesn’t end the life of a potential person; it ends the life of a person with great potential.

These little persons, who are in a stage of life we all went through, possess the same dignity that exists in every human being from conception to natural death. This dignity deserves to be recognized and respected under the law, which is why the Church fights for the right to life of all human beings, especially the weakest and most vulnerable ones.

THE ABORTIONIST WHO CHANGED HIS MIND

Dr. Bernard Nathanson was a doctor who oversaw 60,000 abortions: he even performed an abortion on his own son.¹⁶⁴ In 1969, he cofounded NARAL, an organization dedicated to overturning laws that banned abortion. However, in the 1980s Dr. Nathanson saw the overwhelming evidence from ultrasounds and fetal photography that showed how abortion destroys the lives of small human beings.

He later joined the pro-life movement and admitted that he and other abortion advocates lied about the number of women who died from illegal abortions in order to get the laws changed. He wrote, “It was always ‘5,000 to 10,000 deaths a year.’ I confess that I knew the figures were totally false, and I suppose the others did too if they stopped to think of it. But in the ‘morality’ of our revolution it was a useful figure.”¹⁶⁵

Nathanson grew up Jewish but converted to Catholicism in 1996. He said, “I’m confident about the future, whatever it may hold, because I’ve turned my life over to Christ. I don’t have control anymore, and I don't want control. I made a mess of it; nobody could do worse than I did. I'm just in God's hands."¹⁶⁶ The prayer card handed out at his baptism contained one Scripture verse: "God, who is rich in mercy" (Eph. 2:4).

Dr. Nathanson passed away on February 21, 2011.

WHY WE BELIEVE: PROTECTING LIFE

- Catholics do not impose morality but propose moral principles that treat all human beings with dignity and respect.
- Human embryos and fetuses are biological human beings. There are no morally relevant differences between born and unborn humans.
- The unborn are not potential persons but persons with great potential who are unjustly killed when they are aborted.

Why We

Cherish Our Sexuality

Several years ago, a television show called The Pickup Artist would train socially awkward men in the “art” of seducing women, and then have them compete against one another. Each week the guys would be sent out, followed by hidden cameramen, and whoever could pick up the most women was the winner of that week’s challenge. A friend called me up and told me I had to watch the most recent episode.

“Why would I want to watch a trashy show like that?” I asked.

“Because your sister is on the show this week!”

I turned on the television and there it was, an awkward guy wearing a giant cowboy hat trying to pick up my sister. I screamed, “Don’t do it, sis! Don’t give this sleazeball your phone number!” But she did.

OBSESSED WITH SEX?

A lot of people think the Catholic Church is obsessed with sex or teaches that sex is dirty. But as shows like The Pickup Artist demonstrate, it is actually our culture that is obsessed with sex. Think of magazines at the grocery store that promise “874 Tips for Great Sex!” Or the fact that 70 percent of television shows contain sexual content.¹⁶⁷ The Church only seems obsessed with sex because it must interact with a culture that is always talking about it.

And contrary to what some people think, the Catholic Church does not teach that sex is bad or dirty. Pope St. John Paul II even taught that men have a moral obligation to help their wives experience orgasms so that the sex between them can be a truly intimate union.

THE POPE ON MUTUAL SEXUAL JOY

“What does a celibate old man in Rome know about sex, anyway?” Actually, a lot! After he spent several years counseling married couples as a parish priest, the future Pope St. John Paul II wrote a book called Love and Responsibility. In the chapter on “sexology,” he writes, “[I]t is necessary to insist that intercourse must not serve merely as a means of allowing sexual excitement to reach its climax in one of the partners, i.e., the man alone, but that climax must be reached in harmony, not at the expense of one partner, but with both partners fully involved.”¹⁶⁸

When people ask me why the Church teaches that sex outside of marriage is wrong, I don’t say it’s because sex is bad or makes someone “impure.” I say instead, “It’s because lying is wrong and God wants us to practice sexual honesty.”¹⁶⁹

THE MEANING OF SEX

In the second century after Christ, the Roman philosopher and emperor Marcus Aurelius described sex in this way: “It is the rubbing together of pieces of gut, followed by the spasmodic secretion of a little bit of slime.”¹⁷⁰ Fast-forward 1,800 years and the philosopher Peter Singer fares no better. In his textbook Practical Ethics, Singer says the morality of sex is no different than the morality of driving a car since, in both cases, all that matters is being “safe.” He even says, “The moral issues raised by driving a car . . . are much more serious than those raised by safe sex.”¹⁷¹

But almost everyone knows that sex is more important than driving and that it isn’t a mere recreational activity like going to the movies.

If I were to tell you I had seen 500 movies in my relatively short adult life, you would probably think nothing of it. On the other hand, if someone else said he had been sexually intimate with 500 people, most of us would be shocked. But if sex is no more special than driving, then why does such behavior shock us? After all, we aren’t shocked by Uber drivers who have driven thousands of people, so why be shocked by individuals who have slept with the same number of people?

Or consider that one of the worst things you can do in a romantic relationship is “cheat,” or be sexually intimate with another person. Most people would feel betrayed if their partner even asked to have a “meaningless” fling with someone else. But why? The only explanation is that sex can never be objectively meaningless. Instead, it has a sacred, unchanging meaning that is expressed through the language of the body.

For example, a handshake says, “Nice to meet you.” A hug says, “I’m here for you.” But what bodily action says, “I give my whole self to you. I want to become one with you and be with you for the rest of my life”? It makes sense that an idea as powerful as the permanent, faithful, and total gift of self to another person could only be physically expressed through the most powerful way to unite two people—sexual intercourse.

WHAT’S WRONG WITH PORNOGRAPHY?

What the Church believes about pornography is best summarized in a quote attributed to Pope St. John Paul II: “Pornography is not wrong because it shows too much, it is wrong because it shows too little.” Pornography reduces people to objects that are only meant to satisfy the desires of a consumer. It also trains the user’s brain to be excited by sexual novelty and by power over other people’s bodies. But this attitude is disastrous in marriage, where joy comes from being a gift of self to one, irreplaceable person.

If you or someone you know struggles with porn, know that God loves you and wants to free you from this sin, and that there are steps you can take to make that happen. Aside from seeking God in the sacrament of confession, I’d recommend searching the Internet for Catholic “brain retraining” programs. These courses use exercises that “rewire” your brain so it can find pleasure in authentic sexual joy rather than the false promises of the pornography industry.

ONE FLESH

The Bible says that when God created Adam and Eve they “were both naked, and were not ashamed” (Gen. 2:25). God doesn’t want us to be ashamed of either the bodies he gave us or the pleasure that comes from uniting those bodies with our spouse. God could have designed us to reproduce without sexual intercourse, but he specifically wanted husband and wife to become “one flesh” (Gen. 2:24, Matt. 19:6).

What does that mean?

Think about when a person receives a heart transplant. Even though the heart has different DNA, it becomes a literal part of the person’s body. The body and the heart “become one” because they each contribute to something greater than themselves (in this case, keeping the person alive).^{172}

Likewise, when a man and woman have sex, their reproductive systems, incomplete on their own, become complete by contributing to something greater than themselves. The couple’s bodies become one because through every act of sex they are ordered toward the creation of a new human life.

OUR BODIES AS TEMPLES OF THE HOLY SPIRIT

“Do you not know that he who joins himself to a prostitute becomes one body with her? For, as it is written, ‘The two shall become one. . . .’ Do you not know that your body is a temple of the Holy Spirit within you, which you have from God? You are not your own; you were bought with a price. So glorify God in your body” (1 Cor. 6:16, 19-20).

Not every act will result in a child, but each act does express through the body what the couple already expressed through their wedding vows: I give my whole self to you and only you until “death do us part.” In fact, sex has traditionally been called the marital act because every act of sex communicates marital love to another person.

This explains why cheating causes so many people to end a relationship: through their body, the cheating partner didn’t just “secrete some slime” with another person. Whether they intended to or not, they used their body to communicate the most sacred form of love and commitment to someone else.

Even if a couple consensually has sex outside of marriage, their bodies still speak a lie to each other. No matter how much an unmarried person may say, “I’ll love you forever,” he or she is always free to walk away from the relationship. As I told a group of couples I was recently mentoring, “You don’t need a divorce to break off an engagement.” That freedom disappears, however, after a person publicly makes this promise in front of the community, the Church, the state, and before God.

After marriage, a couple’s sexual union expresses the true reality of their lifelong, faithful bond to each other. The couple may even be blessed with what is the most obvious sign that sex is ordered toward a permanent, one-flesh union: a child who will usually outlive this love and be a witness of it to the whole world.

HOW FAR IS TOO FAR?

Even if it doesn’t involve intercourse, other behaviors like genital stimulation and even heavy petting are only appropriate in marriage because they excite the body enough to make it ready to have sex.

Engaging in these behaviors while abstaining from sex is like driving up an on-ramp and then slamming on the brakes just before you reach the freeway. Outside of marriage these behaviors become another form of sexual dishonesty, and the more they are committed, the harder it becomes to unnaturally “slam on the brakes” and not allow them to fulfill their purpose through intercourse.

So the question we should ask is not, “How far can I go?” but rather, “What can I do to protect my beloved?”

On the other hand, when an unmarried couple conceives a child they often have to face the grim reality that, whether they like it or not, they have been forever joined not only to their partner (even if it's just as "the ex I had a baby with"), but to a third person. Unfortunately for that other person, the child, recent studies have shown that unmarried couples who conceive a child are much more likely to either break up or divorce after getting married than married couples who have a child.¹⁷³

FEAR AND PERFECT LOVE

In 1 John 4:18 we read, "There is no fear in love, but perfect love casts out fear." This is why I will never regret waiting to have sex until marriage. When my wife and I came together for the first time, there was no fear of disease, no fear we'd have an unplanned pregnancy, no fear that I would leave her if she didn't meet my sexual needs, and no fear of what other people would think of us. In its place was simply the joy of knowing that not only were we allowed to freely give ourselves to each other, but that is exactly what God wanted us to do now that we'd become husband and wife.

God's plan for sex never included shame, disease, lies, heartbreak, abandoned children, or abortion. Human beings brought those things into sex through the sin of sexual dishonesty. If you or your significant other has already had sex, then I hope you will find healing and peace through the sacrament of confession and make a renewed commitment to practicing sexual honesty.

No matter what your past experience has been, God loves you and wants you to be happy by saving sexual intimacy for marriage. That way, if you are called to married life, your sexual intimacy won't be haunted with shame, but will be an occasion when you can always honestly say to your beloved: "I give my whole self to you, and only you, as long as we both shall live."

WHAT ABOUT HOMOSEXUALITY?

Once I was going for a jog in Balboa Park in San Diego when I noticed that the city's annual gay pride parade was passing through. I decided to ask people what they thought of the Christian protesters who had come out, and ended up having a conversation with three self-identified gay men. One of them asked me, "So what does the Catholic Church say about me being gay?"

I answered:

“The Church makes a distinction between someone’s desires and someone’s actions. We can’t control our desires, and so they shouldn’t be central to our identity. You can’t say someone is sinning just because they have certain desires because, like I said, you can’t control them. So I wouldn’t say that I’m straight or that you’re gay, but that we are men made in God’s image with different desires for sexual intimacy.”

They nodded, so I continued.

“Our desires don’t define us, but we can be held accountable for how we act on those desires. A husband might desire other women he’s not married to, but that doesn’t mean he should act on that desire. The Church teaches that we shouldn’t use sex for something it wasn’t meant for, which means it’s wrong for anyone to engage in same-sex behavior—even if they’re straight.”

They raised their eyebrows at the unexpectedness of what I said, so I went on.

“For example, if a straight guy has been in prison for a long time and he just wants sexual release, he might have sex with a man, even though he’s not gay. But that would be wrong, because sex isn’t just for satisfying our urges. For me, the big question I ask when I think about tough issues like same-sex attraction is: What is sex for?”

To my surprise, one of the young men said, “Procreation?”

My eyes lit up.

“Yes! You can love anyone without having sex with him or her, but for me it makes sense that sex isn’t an expression of just any kind of love. Instead, it is an expression of the love that only exists between men and women, and that reaches its fullness in the creation of a new human life.”

Rather than be offended, these young men pondered what I said and seemed to appreciate the reasonableness of it, as well as the fact that I didn’t just quote the Bible and rest my case. Before we parted ways I gave them the website of a Catholic group named Courage (www.couragerc.org).

Courage doesn’t try to change people’s sexual orientation. Instead, the members of this group help people who are attracted to members of the same sex to understand God’s plan for them as a whole person, which includes their sexuality. They even produced a documentary called Desire of the Everlasting Hills that is about three people with same-sex attractions who returned to the Catholic Church. You can watch it for free online at <https://everlastinghills.org>.

WHY WE BELIEVE: SEXUAL HONESTY

- The Catholic Church does not teach that sex is bad or dirty, but rather that it is a very good gift God gave us.
- Sex expresses through the body the language of marital commitment by making a couple “one flesh.” Sex outside of this context, including oral sex and masturbation, involves a lie, because the body expresses marital love outside the bonds of marriage.
- God’s plan for sex and marriage is not meant to shame us, but to free us from shame and give us peace and joy in our most intimate relationships.

Why We Defend Marriage

A few years ago I was researching the issue of marriage and came across a clip from the television show Sesame Street. It's a conversation between a little boy named Jessie and the character Grover. It begins with Grover asking Jessie, "Do you know what marriage is?" It continues this way:

Jessie: A marriage is when two people get married?

Grover: Yeah. That's good. That's marriage. What do they do when they're married?

Jessie: Kiss.

Grover: They kiss, yes; what else when they are married?

Jessie: Hug.

Grover: That's good. That's good. Anything else?

Jessie: Nope.

Grover: That's it?

Jessie: Yeah.

Grover: Are they friends also?

Jessie: Yeah.

Grover: Oh that's a lot in the marriage, isn't it? Kissing hugging, friends, helping, all that stuff. Yeah. Well, I guess that's what marriage is all about.

But this is not what marriage is all about. Why didn't Grover talk about the promise to be "true to you," in "good times and in bad, in sickness and in health," until "death do us part?" Why is there no mention of raising children or being a family? What Sesame Street is describing isn't marriage; it's cohabitation.

In contrast, the Catholic Church defines marriage as "the matrimonial covenant by which a man and a woman establish between themselves a partnership of the whole of life and which is ordered by its nature to the good of the spouses and the procreation and education of offspring.”¹⁷⁴

I know that’s not the most romantic definition, but at its core this definition means that marriage is not just a legal contract. Instead, a Catholic marriage is a covenant, or a sacred pledge of loyalty between persons. In marriage, man and woman don’t just give their legal consent; they give their whole selves to each other both for their good and the good of any children they may have.

That’s why, in the face of tremendous opposition from the world, and even from other Christian denominations, the Catholic Church upholds God’s plan for marriage to be permanent and open to life.

“TILL DEATH DO US PART”

In 1969, Ronald Reagan, then governor of California, passed the first state law allowing for no-fault divorce. Instead of having to prove one partner committed a fault such as adultery or abuse, a marriage could be ended simply because the couple had “irreconcilable differences.” But what have been the consequences of this redefinition of marriage?

After hitting a highpoint in the 1980s, the divorce rate has returned to the level it was at prior to no-fault divorce. But that’s only because more people are choosing not to marry—11 percent more people, to be precise.¹⁷⁵ But that doesn’t mean an increased number of people have stopped engaging in the marital act.

In 1963, only 7 percent of children were born out of wedlock. Today, that number is 40 percent, and in some socioeconomic communities it’s as high as 71 percent.¹⁷⁶ On average, one out of four children in the U.S. lives apart from his or her biological father.¹⁷⁷ Research has found that children from divorced or unmarried households are more likely to live in poverty and more likely to be abused than children from stable marriages.

THE BEST GIFT FOR A CHILD

Child Trends, a nonpartisan research group that has studied the family for the past four decades, says that children in households with married parents have “in general, better health, greater access to health care, and fewer emotional or behavioral problems than children living in other types of families.”¹⁷⁸ In contrast, a child whose parents cohabit but aren’t married is four times more likely to be abused. A child whose mother has a live-in boyfriend is eleven times more likely to be abused.¹⁷⁹ The best gift you can give your child isn’t the latest toy or game; it’s married parents who are willing to resolve their problems in a healthy way.

Aside from the evidence social science provides for the goodness of lifelong marriage, the Bible reveals that God’s plan for marriage always involved permanence. Jesus said that when a man and woman marry, “they are no longer two but one. What therefore God has joined together, let not man put asunder” (Mark 10:8-9). To make his point even clearer he said, “Whoever divorces his wife and marries another, commits adultery against her; and if she divorces her husband and marries another, she commits adultery” (Mark 10:11-12).¹⁸⁰

The Catholic Church allows for legal separation and even civil divorce if there are circumstances like spousal abuse.¹⁸¹ However, if the couple are both baptized Christians, then, following what Jesus taught, they are still validly married and so the Church prohibits either person from getting remarried. Even if the marriage fell apart because of infidelity or abuse, sin cannot undo what God has joined together. But grace can overcome sin.

It gives divorced spouses the strength to bear the crimes committed against them, and it gives spouses whose marriages are in trouble the humility to seek spiritual and professional help. Marriage is not easy, but as St. Paul said, “I can do all things in [Christ] who strengthens me” (Phil 4:13).

DIVORCE AND ANNULMENTS

At this point some people will say, “I’ve known lots of divorced people who’ve gotten remarried in the Church. All they had to get was an annulment!” But annulments are not a Catholic version of divorce.

Unlike divorce, which tries to dissolve a valid marriage, an annulment recognizes that there was never a valid marriage in the first place. It may appear that the couple was married on their wedding day, but a necessary element of marriage was missing. This may include:

1. Understanding of marriage: You can’t validly say “I do” unless you know what you’re saying “I do” to. If a person attaches conditions to marriage (“I’ll stay married as long as we live near my family”) or does not understand he or she are agreeing to be in a permanent, monogamous union that is open to life, then the marriage may be invalid, or never happened in the first place, and thus declared “null” (hence the term “annulment”).

2. Consenting to marriage: If a person is coerced or marrying to please others, then he isn’t free, and the marriage may therefore be invalid. The young man who marries his pregnant girlfriend out of fear of her family (in a “shotgun wedding”) would be one example of lack of freedom. But the presence of a psychological disorder or even being drunk on one’s wedding day could render a marriage invalid, since the person was not truly free to say “I do.”

3. Being able to marry: If a person is already validly married, below the age of consent, or is related to the intended by blood or adoption (among other circumstances), then he or she may not be capable of making the commitment that marriage requires, and would thus render any future marriage invalid if those circumstances—what the Church calls impediments—remain.

WHY DO I HAVE TO GET MARRIED IN THE CHURCH?

Just as a civil marriage isn’t valid unless it happens in the presence of a representative of the state (like a judge or an approved minister) and according to the law of the state, a Catholic marriage isn’t valid unless it happens in the presence of the Church and according to the law of the Church.

Weddings must normally take place in a Catholic church (unless the bishop has granted an exception), because marriage is one of the most sacred responsibilities a person will undertake in life and so it should begin in a sacred place. The Church also wants to make sure that the couple truly understands the vows of permanence, monogamy, and openness to the life they are agreeing to, which is why the Church normally doesn’t allow weddings to take place in churches of other denominations or in secular places where its views on marriage aren’t shared.

A Catholic who is married outside the Church would be in an invalid marriage (and thus would be sinning by having sexual relations). This situation can be resolved, however, by having the existing marriage convalidated, or officially recognized by the Church.

“FIRST COMES LOVE, THEN COMES MARRIAGE, THEN . . .”

The Church doesn’t demand that married couples have enough children to form their own basketball team. It also doesn’t tell them, like the nation of China tells its citizens, that there are a maximum number of children they are allowed to have. The Catechism simply says that parents should exhibit “generosity appropriate to responsible parenthood” (CCC 2368), and that they should not use immoral means, like abortion or contraception, to plan their families.

In fact, many popular forms of contraception—such as IUDs and even some hormonal birth control pills—can kill an unborn child by preventing him from implanting in his mother’s womb as an embryo. But even if a contraceptive didn’t have the potential to cause abortions (like condoms, for instance), it is still wrong, because it’s another form of sexual dishonesty.

We’ve already seen how sex has an intrinsic, marital meaning. When an unmarried couple has sex, they physically express a vow, like permanence, that doesn’t exist yet and so they communicate a lie with their bodies. One of the vows the Church asks couples to make on their wedding day is to “accept children lovingly from God.” The couple doesn’t have to try to conceive a child every time they are intimate; they just promise not to directly sterilize their intimacy through the use of contraceptives.

WHAT DOES THE BIBLE SAY?

Even though condoms were known to exist in ancient Egypt, the Jewish people believed fertility was a gift from God so they did not promote the use of contraception. In fact, the Bible only records one act of contraception, when Onan “withdraws” from sex before climaxing. Genesis 38:10 says, “What he did was displeasing in the sight of the Lord, and he slew [killed] him.”^{182}

But why can’t the couple keep their vow to be “open to life” by using contraceptives only occasionally?

The answer is: For the same reason a couple can’t keep their vow of being “faithful” or monogamous by only having affairs “on occasion.” As we’ve seen, in order for sex to be a one-flesh union it must be a total gift of self (nothing, not even fertility, can be held back), and it must be ordered toward something beyond the husband and wife’s private feelings. It must be ordered toward the creation of a new human life.

But if that’s true, then how are couples supposed to follow the Church’s teaching that they responsibly plan their families? The answer: natural family planning, or NFP.

ORGANIC FAMILY PLANNING

It always amazes me that the same people who worry about buying organic food at the grocery store usually have no objection to using hormonal contraceptives, which the American Cancer Society has classified as a group-one carcinogen (or something known to cause cancer in humans).¹⁸³ That's why I love that NFP is an all-natural, latex-free, hormone-free way for my wife and I (along with millions of other couples) to space our children's births.

While men are usually fertile until they have one foot in the grave, women's fertility sharply declines later in life and is only present for a set number of days each month. NFP uses fertility tracking technology so if a couple wants another baby, they can choose to be intimate on a woman's identifiable fertile days. On the other hand, if they don't feel ready for another baby, they would simply choose to be intimate on an infertile day instead.

NFP requires both partners to work together to track fertility and decide when to be intimate. And to be honest, waiting for infertile days can be difficult. However, in my short time being married I've seen how the patience and communication NFP forces couples to practice helps to resolve conflict and improve marital health. Maybe this is why couples who use NFP have divorce rates between just 1 and 3 percent.¹⁸⁴

But isn't NFP just a Catholic version of contraception? In both cases, the couple does something so that they don't have a baby. Although they appear to be the same, they are not. Here's an analogy that explains the difference, and why NFP is moral and contraception is not.

Imagine you are trying to select a wedding date and it's right around the time your wife's high-school-age cousins have a big football game. If you really want them to attend the wedding, you'll pick the week before their game. But let's say your budget is tight and you have no more room on your guest list. You might choose to schedule the wedding during their big game and send an invitation anyway as a sign that you still value the relationship. If they show up, it might be a bit stressful, but you'll be glad they came.

Now, let's imagine you don't want to wait a week and you absolutely don't want the cousins to come to the wedding. In order to make sure they don't arrive, you send them a "dis-invitation" that says, "Please don't come to our wedding, you're not wanted here!"

How does this relate to NFP?

Picking the date that works best for the cousins is like being intimate on a fertile day; you've created optimal conditions for children to arrive.

Postponing the wedding by a week is like waiting to be intimate on an infertile day. The children probably can't arrive, but if they do that's still great!

Sending a dis-invitation, however, is like using contraception. Just as you'd be telling your cousins, "We want this day, so don't show up and ruin it!" using contraception sends the message to your future child (as well as God, who is responsible for every blessing of pregnancy), "We want sexual pleasure at this specific time, so don't show up and ruin it!" But children don't ruin sexual pleasure, they are its fulfillment, so we should never engage in an activity that sends the message that a child God may choose to bless us with is unwanted.

MARRIED SAINTS?

In 2015 Pope Francis canonized the first modern married couple, Louis and Zelie Martin. He said they "practiced Christian service in the family, creating day by day an environment of faith and love which nurtured the vocations of their daughters, among whom was Saint Thérèse of [Lisieux]."¹⁸⁵

It's not uncommon for marriages to be strained after the death of a child, and the Martins endured the deaths of four infant children. Rather than give into despair, they lived as a model of married holiness for their five surviving children. Their days were divided into time for prayer, garden work, and relaxation, much of it in the countryside where Thérèse inherited her father's love of flowers and nature.

After his wife passed away, Louis struggled with loneliness as each of his five daughters joined the convent and became nuns. He still said, "It is a great, great honor for me that the Good Lord desires to take all of my children. If I had anything better, I would not hesitate to offer it to him."¹⁸⁶

WHY WE BELIEVE: MARRIAGE

- Marriage is not a legal contract between two adults, but a sacred covenant between man and woman that, between baptized Christians, is an indissoluble union.
- A married couple always renews their marital vows in sexual intimacy, including the vow to "accept children lovingly from God."
- To responsibly space births, couples are encouraged to use methods like natural family planning, that do not harm either spouse or contradict the sacred meaning of the marital act.

Why We Believe There's a Hell

“What you people do is child abuse! You should be ashamed of yourselves!” a woman screamed at me while I was engaged in evangelism at a college campus.

I was genuinely confused so I asked her, “What exactly should I be ashamed of?” She fired back, “Hell! Telling little children they might go to hell traumatizes them!”

I’ll admit this scares me! It’s almost too difficult to imagine the possibility of being in agony not just for a while, but forever, living in despair and pain without end. And yet we can’t reject hell just because we don’t like it. Just as it’s not child abuse to warn children about “stranger danger” or what will happen if they run into traffic, even if the truth is scary, it’s not child abuse to warn children (or adults) about the dangers of hell—provided that hell is real.

WHO BELIEVES IN HEAVEN AND HELL?

Fifty-eight percent of Americans believe in hell and 72 percent believe in heaven. Even among nonreligious people, 36 percent believe in hell and 50 percent believe in heaven.^{187}

WHAT THE HELL?

In the New Testament, the word “hell” usually refers to the final, eternal dwelling place for the damned.^{188} According to the Catechism, “To die in mortal sin without repenting and accepting God’s merciful love means remaining separated from him forever by our own free choice. This state of definitive self-exclusion from communion with God and the blessed is called ‘hell’” (CCC 1033).

Scripture uses a variety of images to describe the awfulness of hell. Christ said it was a place of fire (Matt. 5:22), undying worms (Mark 9:48), gnashing of teeth (Matt. 13:42), and an outer darkness (Matt. 22:13). Matthew even compared it to Gehenna (Matt. 23:33), which was a place where children were offered as fire sacrifices to pagan gods.^{189} Since Jesus walked out of his own tomb, he is a reliable source about the afterlife, and so we should believe what he taught about hell.

While Christ used earthly images to convey spiritual truths, we must remember that none of these images, including those of unending fire, are necessarily literal descriptions of hell. But even if hell is not a place of literal fire, it is still the worst thing we can imagine. Those who think hell is fun because all the “cool sinners” will be there should think again.

The sins that make life miserable, like selfishness, greed, hatred, and the vindictive desire to hurt others because we’ve been hurt, are just some of the evils that make hell so “hellish.” In hell, sinners will eternally receive the one thing they cared the most about in life—theirself. Pope St. John Paul II said,

The images of hell that Sacred Scripture presents to us must be correctly interpreted. They show the complete frustration and emptiness of life without God. Rather than a place, hell indicates the state of those who freely and definitively separate themselves from God, the source of all life and joy.^{190}

DOES HELL LAST FOREVER?

The most terrifying aspect of hell is its permanence. According to the Catechism, “The chief punishment of hell is eternal separation from God, in whom alone man can possess the life and happiness for which he was created and for which he longs” (CCC 1035). Jesus taught that hell is not temporary but lasts forever. He said that those who are damned “will go away into eternal punishment, but the righteous into eternal life” (Matt. 25:46).^{191}

Some argue that if God were fair, then hell would be temporary and someone could eventually “work themselves” out of it. But no one can ever work himself out of hell any more than he could work himself into heaven. Salvation is a gift from God that we “work out” in this life (Phil. 2:12) by persevering in faith that works through love (Gal. 5:6) until the end of our lives (Matt. 10:22). The only time we can accept this gift, or this free offer of grace from God, is during our earthly lives. Upon our death, our choices in this life forever seal what our destinies will be in the next life (Heb. 9:27).

Moreover, if hell were temporary, it would be incredibly unjust. Since heaven includes eternal bliss and happiness with God, then no matter how long a person spends in hell it will seem like only a few seconds compared to the infinite happiness that awaits them in heaven. It would be like telling a child who purposefully breaks his sibling's arm that he has to go to "time out" for thirty seconds before he can go to an amusement park for the rest of the day.

Hell may also be eternal because the damned continue to sin and reject God after death. In this scenario, their punishment is everlasting because they make it that way and cannot do otherwise. If you've ever been around a self-centered person, you know he finds it excruciating to be in the presence of a person everyone else admires more. The damned in hell may even love themselves and their sins so much that the selfless love of God may be unbearable to them. They may even choose to remain in hell, thinking it is better than heaven.

WHAT ABOUT REINCARNATION?

After death the soul proceeds to heaven, hell, or purgatory; it does not return to earth to inhabit another body or become reincarnated. We can know this from the testimony of Scripture, Sacred Tradition, and even human reason.

First, humans do not behave as if they possessed souls that lived before the birth of their bodies. The third-century ecclesial writer Tertullian put it this way, "If souls depart at different ages of human life, how is it that they come back again at one uniform age? For all men are imbued with an infant soul at their birth. But how happens it that a man who dies in old age returns to life as an infant?"¹⁹²

Second, if proponents of reincarnation are correct and souls are never created or destroyed but are only "reborn" into other bodies, then why has the human population been growing over time? This can only be explained by the creation of new human souls rather than the reincarnation of the same group of souls into different bodies.

Finally, if our memories from our previous lives are lost when we reincarnate, then, in the words of St. Irenaeus, "How do advocates of reincarnation know we've all been reincarnated?"¹⁹³ It makes more sense to believe, as Hebrews 9:27 teaches, that, "it is appointed for men to die once, and after that comes judgment."

IS HELL UNFAIR?

Many people ask, "How could a loving God send someone to hell?" But this question, as honest and important as it is, displays a mistaken view of the relationship between earthly choices and eternal destinies. The Catechism says, "God predestines no one to go to hell; for this, a willful turning away from God [a mortal sin] is necessary, and persistence in it until the end"

(CCC 1037).

Hell is not something God created for the purpose of arbitrarily punishing people. Instead, humans created the necessity for hell through sinful choices that separated them from God. The Bible says that God is love (1 John 4:8) and God wants all men to be saved (1 Tim. 2:4), but love is free. God does not save people who don't want to be saved from their sins. According to the Catechism, "We cannot be united with God unless we freely choose to love him. But we cannot love God if we sin gravely against him, against our neighbor or against ourselves" (CCC 1033).

Another objection to hell is that it's unfair to inflict an infinite punishment for a finite crime. But the length of time it took to commit a crime does not indicate what the punishment for the crime should be. After all, a parking violation could happen over a period of hours while a murder could happen in a few seconds. It is the nature of the crime and the intention of the criminal that are relevant in deciding what the punishment should be.

THE REALITY OF THE DAMNED

"There can be people who have totally destroyed their desire for truth and readiness to love, people for whom everything has become a lie, people who have lived for hatred and have suppressed all love within themselves. This is a terrifying thought, but alarming profiles of this type can be seen in certain figures of our own history. In such people all would be beyond remedy and the destruction of good would be irrevocable: this is what we mean by the word hell."¹⁹⁴ —Pope Benedict XVI

But are the crimes in this life really so serious that they deserve infinite punishment in the next? Many people are willing to accept that while very awful people like genocidal dictators or sadistic serial killers deserve to go to hell, regular "good people" who commit "everyday" sins do not. But what makes someone a good person?

Does she give 20 percent of her income to charity? Does he ever gossip about people or break a promise? In his letter to the Galatians, St. Paul said that everyday sins like jealousy, anger, selfishness, sexual immorality, and drunkenness can prevent an otherwise good person from going to heaven (Gal. 5:19-20).

It's easy to define our own standard of a good person so that we always "clear the bar," but it's harder to meet Jesus' standard. He said, "You, therefore, must be perfect, as your heavenly Father is perfect" (Matt 5:48). No matter how hard we try, none of us is "good enough" to get to heaven on our own. That's why we need the free gift of God's grace so that we can be transformed not into "good people," but into "God's people," who share his divine life and are prepared in this life to be able to receive his unending love for all eternity.

A CHILD ALIVE AGAIN

In the Gospels, Jesus told a parable about a son who left home and squandered the money his father gave him. He became so poor he nearly starved to death, but he didn't think his father would let him come home. He hoped that maybe his father would let him work as a servant so he could at least have something to eat.

The son then decided to make the journey home, and Jesus says, "While he was yet at a distance, his father saw him and had compassion, and ran and embraced him and kissed him" (Luke 15:20). The Father then threw a party for the son because, as he says, "my son was dead, and is alive again; he was lost, and is found" (Luke 15:24).

This is called the parable (or story) of the prodigal son. Many people, including non-Christians, have heard it, but there's a detail that often gets missed: the father sees the son at a distance. This is probably because the father kept watch every day, waiting for his son's return. Imagine the joy he felt when he recognized the far-off figure was his son—alive and safe in his arms again!

Like the father of the prodigal son, God won't force us to love him or obey him. This is why hell is a real possibility for those who choose selfishness and sin over love and holiness. But like the father in the parable, God is always waiting for us to come home to him. That's why 2 Peter 3:9 says that God is patient with us, "not wishing that any should perish, but that all should reach repentance."

WHY WE BELIEVE: HELL

- Since God is love, he never forces anyone to love or obey him, but allows those people to live apart from him for all eternity, a state that is called hell.
- Since God is just, he punishes evil by allowing unrepentant sinners to choose their sin over his goodness and life.
- Since God is merciful, he gives everyone an opportunity to know him, reject sin, and choose eternal life through his son, Jesus Christ.

Why We Hope for Heaven

The famous evangelist Billy Graham once visited a small town to preach at the local church. Before he went to the church he needed to mail a letter back home, so he went looking for the post office. He pulled his car over to the side of the road and asked a boy walking his dog where it was and the boy politely answered.

Mr. Graham then invited the boy to attend the church where he'd be preaching. He said, "You can hear me telling everyone how to get to heaven." The boy simply replied, "I don't think I'll be there. You don't even know your way to the post office!"¹⁹⁵

WHAT IS HEAVEN LIKE?

"How do I get to heaven?" is one of the most important questions a person can ask. But what do we mean by the word "heaven?"

In some cases, the Bible uses the word "heaven" to refer to the sky, or to the place of the sun, stars, and moon. This is seen in passages like Psalm 19:1, which says, "The heavens are telling the glory of God." Other times, "heaven" refers to the place where God dwells, as in the Lord's Prayer, where we address "Our Father who art in heaven" (Matt. 6:9). Finally, "heaven" is used to refer to the eternal dwelling place of those who love God. St. Paul says, "Our citizenship is in heaven. And we eagerly await a Savior from there, the Lord Jesus Christ" (Phil. 3:20, NIV).

Many people imagine this heaven to be a place in the clouds where saints and angels play harps for all eternity. But while the Bible does use earthly imagery like wedding feasts to describe heaven, the Catechism says, "This mystery of blessed communion with God and all who are in Christ is beyond all understanding and description" (CCC 1027). Paul, quoting the promises given to the prophet Isaiah, said, "No eye has seen, nor ear heard, nor the heart of man conceived, what God has prepared for those who love him" (1 Cor. 2:9).

Our inexact knowledge of heaven does not mean that we are ignorant of heaven in general. According to Pope St. John Paul II, “The ‘heaven’ or ‘happiness’ in which we will find ourselves is neither an abstraction nor a physical place in the clouds, but a living, personal relationship with the Holy Trinity.”¹⁹⁶ In heaven we won’t be angels; we will be reunited with our bodies and will experience both spiritual and physical joy in the presence of God. The Catechism teaches us, “Heaven is the ultimate end and fulfillment of the deepest human longings, the state of supreme, definitive happiness” (CCC 1024).

“THEN I SHALL UNDERSTAND FULLY”

St. Paul once compared our knowledge of God in this life to our knowledge of ourselves when we see our reflection in a dirty bronze mirror. At this time in history glass mirrors were just beginning to be invented and were not as popular as polished metal. He said, “For now we see in a mirror dimly, but then face to face. Now I know in part; then I shall understand fully, even as I have been fully understood” (1 Cor. 13:12). Because of sin and our fallen human natures, we only perceive God indirectly; our relationship with him lacks the intimacy and wonder that it will have in heaven.

Heaven won’t be an eternally long Church service; that would be as insufferable as hell. In fact, any earthly activity, be it a Church service, a rock concert, or a day at an amusement park, would be hellish if it were drawn out over an infinite period of time. Heaven won’t consist of unending earthly joys, because these finite things can’t satisfy our longing for perfect and unending happiness.

But God, who is infinite goodness itself, is the only reality that can provide us with the perfect love and understanding our hearts desire. In heaven, believers will adore God for all eternity and never reach an end or stagnant plateau of what they adore.

CAN ANYONE GET TO HEAVEN?

St. Paul says that even though non-Jews were not given written, divine revelation, God would judge them on the basis of another law. Paul says, “What the law requires is written on their hearts, while their conscience also bears witness and their conflicting thoughts accuse or perhaps excuse them on that day when, according to my gospel, God judges the secrets of men by Christ Jesus” (Rom. 2:15-16).

Does this contradict Jesus' teaching that he is "the way, and the truth, and the life; no one comes to the Father, but by me" (John 14:6)? No, because acknowledging that Christ is the only objective way we are saved (i.e., only Christ takes away the sins of the world) does not mean a person cannot be saved if he does not know this truth about Christ. For example, one could say antivenom is the only way to be saved from a snakebite, but a child receiving antivenom does not have to know this truth in order to be saved from the bite.

Similarly, a person could seek after "the way" or "the truth" and strive to act with perfect love, all without realizing that he was unknowingly seeking after Christ who is "the way, the truth, and the life." This also applies to non-Catholic Christians who do not understand the ordinary necessity of receiving sacraments like the Eucharist for salvation. The Catechism says that those "who believe in Christ and have been properly baptized are put in a certain, although imperfect, communion with the Catholic Church" (CCC 838).

But if people can be saved if they don't know Jesus or his Church, then why bother telling them about the Faith at all? Don't we risk their souls by giving them an opportunity to reject the gospel?

Consider this analogy. Imagine you are trying to help people cross over a river that has partially frozen over. The river is shrouded in fog and when people choose to walk across its icy surface they disappear into the mist. Did they make it across? It's possible they safely made it, but it's also possible, if not probable, that many of them did not make it across. Let's say, however, that you knew about a bridge that safely crosses over the river. Even if they might reject your offer, wouldn't you still tell people about this safer and more certain way to get across the river?

Preaching the gospel doesn't endanger souls because every person who never knew Jesus will not automatically go to heaven. Such people, like everyone else, are tempted by sin, and without God's grace it is even harder for these people to resist the devil's lies. The Church is, therefore, mindful of these people and so it, "fosters the missions with care and attention."¹⁹⁷ That's why Jesus commanded his followers to "make disciples of all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit" (Matt. 28:19).

WHY WE BELIEVE . . . EVERYTHING

My favorite description of heaven is from a homily I heard a deacon tell more than a decade ago. As a child, the deacon lived in Maine, and one winter he developed a severe case of strep throat and had to be hospitalized. His mother was usually at home caring for his siblings and his father had to travel for work. He loved reading the letters his dad sent from the road, but usually he spent a lot of time by himself listening to the radio or just staring out the window.

One day he woke up and it was quiet all around his hospital room. There didn't even seem to be anyone out in the hall. It was cold outside, but the rays of the sun warmed the floor by the window. He got out of bed, shuffled over to the window, and saw a car pull up beside a tree whose leaves were shedding.

As the orange and brown leaves gently fell to the ground, the little boy saw a man getting out. He was wearing a dark suit and a hat obscured his face. But when the man looked up, the little boy recognized it was his father, home early from his trip. His heart swelled with joy and he ran down the hallway and the stairs of the hospital. He leapt into his father's arms and shouted, "Daddy, you're home!"

The deacon then spoke about heaven and what people think it is. He hoped that at the end of his life he would be at home and would get to say goodbye to his wife, children, and grandchildren.

He imagined that after breathing his last breath, the next moment he would be opening his eyes and seeing the same ceiling over the same hospital bed he was confined to as a child (he even thought his throat might be sore from the cleansing he received in purgatory). All he would hear was the creaking of his bed as he placed his feet on the same tile floor warmed by the sun shining through the window.

With his hands pressed against the cool glass, he would see gently falling leaves and his father—but this time it would be his heavenly Father. Then he would run. His body would leap like he was ten years old again and in one embrace he'd feel the warmth of God's all-powerful love. Struggling to overcome his emotions, he holds tight, never wanting to let go again, and exclaims, "Daddy, I'm home!"

This is why we're Catholic. Not to follow arbitrary rules or rituals, but to go home. Everyone knows, deep down, that sin has wounded our relationship with God and with one another. We are Catholic because we want to give up the empty promises of sin and trust in God's promises to his family, which is united to him through the Church his Son gave us.

If you have been away from the Church, no matter how long, or even if you aren't Catholic, I'd like to invite you to experience God's love and discover his plan for you in the Catholic Church. I'd like to invite you to come home.

WHY WE BELIEVE: HEAVEN

- Heaven is the state of perfect happiness where we will adore and rest in God for all eternity.
- God will judge people on the revelation they've received and he extends his offer of salvation to everyone, even if they've never heard of Christ or his Church.
- Out of love for their fellow man, Christians are called to preach the gospel to the entire world so that anyone can have a personal relationship with Jesus Christ and find salvation through his Church.

How to Become Catholic

If you (or someone you know) are interested in becoming Catholic, seek out a nearby Catholic parish and inquire about its RCIA program. RCIA stands for “Rite of Christian Initiation for Adults” and has always been present, in some form, since the beginning of Church history, as a way of preparing adults and older children to enter the Church. It’s also available to Catholics who have fallen from the practice of the Faith and want to come back, or who just want to learn more.

Prospective converts to the Catholic faith are called catechumens, which means “ones being instructed.” A local priest or religious education director can determine what level of instruction a catechumen needs, but normally they will encourage the person to take part in a process that includes:

The Period of Inquiry: This time allows prospective converts to learn about the Catholic Church by attending Mass, spending time with the Lord in an adoration chapel, meeting with a priest or knowledgeable Catholic, or even by listening to Catholic radio or television. Above all else, the catechumen should pray for guidance through the RCIA process in order to develop a personal relationship with God through his son, Jesus Christ.

The Order of Catechumens: An inquirer who wishes to become Catholic enters the order of catechumens. In order to do this, he is required to select a sponsor, a practicing Catholic who will guide and support him through the process and will be present when he receives the sacraments of initiation.

Catechesis: The catechumen is formally taught the doctrines of the Faith and instructed in how to live the Christian life. This period culminates in the Rite of Election, where the Church formally recognizes a person’s desire to become Catholic.

The Sacraments of Initiation: For most people, the RCIA process reaches its climax at the Easter Vigil, where non-Christian catechumens receive baptism, confirmation, and the Eucharist. Catechumens from other Christian denominations with valid baptisms receive confirmation and the Eucharist. It is a joyous occasion that celebrates how God has brought his children into full communion with Christ’s “one, holy, Catholic, and apostolic Church.”

How to Go to Confession

If you are Catholic you can be at peace with God by confessing your sins in the sacrament of reconciliation, or what is often called confession. Before you receive the sacrament understand that God doesn't want you to feel miserable for your sins: he wants to free you from them. But in order to do that, we must repent, or turn away from sin and turn toward Christ. The only way we can reject our sins is by identifying them and expressing our sorrow to God for having committed them.

In the sacrament of reconciliation you can confess any sin, but you must confess any mortal sins you've committed, or gravely evil actions you freely chose to take part in even though you knew they were wrong. These sins cut us off from a relationship with God, and so we must seek forgiveness for having committed them. One way to determine if you've committed a mortal sin is to conduct an "examination of conscience." These practical guides, which can be found online, ask a series of questions that help us see if we have committed a mortal sin. Here are some examples of sins that can be mortal, and thus need to be confessed:

1. Denying God exists or rejecting the Catholic faith
2. Taking God's name in vain or failing to go to Mass on Sunday and other important Holy Days
3. Disrespecting or failing to care for one's parents
4. Murder, abortion, or intense hatred of others
5. Adultery, sex outside of marriage, the use of contraception, the use of pornography, getting married outside of the Church, or engaging in homosexual behavior
6. Stealing that causes serious harm
7. Lies or even gossip that cause serious harm

After you've examined your conscience, you are ready to receive the sacrament of confession. Most Catholic churches offer this sacrament on a certain day of the week, which can be found on the church's website or by calling the parish office. In the church, there will usually be a room off to the side with a sign indicating that it is where confession is held. Don't worry if it's been a long time or if you've never been to confession. The priest will help you through any part of the sacrament you aren't familiar with, but here are the basic steps to remember:

1. Introduction: You can speak to a priest directly or from behind a curtain to remain anonymous. Begin by saying, "Bless me Father, for I have sinned. It has been [insert amount of time] since my last confession."

2. Confession: Keep it simple and just say what sins you committed and how many times you committed them. Don't worry about explaining unnecessary details or why you sinned, you just need to tell the priest your sins and say you're truly sorry. If you can't remember how many times you committed a sin, give an estimate. If you desire further counseling, call the church office and an appointment can usually be made so you can discuss these issues with a priest at greater length.

3. Contrition: The priest will then ask you to say an Act of Contrition. Here is one many Catholics use: "My God, I am sorry for my sins with all my heart. In choosing to do wrong and failing to do good, I have sinned against You, whom I should love above all things. I firmly intend, with your help, to do penance, to sin no more, and to avoid whatever leads me to sin. Our Savior Jesus Christ suffered and died for us. In his name, my God, have mercy."

Don't worry about memorizing this prayer as it is usually posted in the confessional for you to recite (though it's still a good prayer to memorize).

4. Penance: The priest will suggest something for you to do, such as a series of prayers, to make up for the consequences of your sins. Only Christ can make up for the eternal consequence of our sins, but through our prayers and works we can make up for the harm our sins cause in this life. Remember the penance you're given and complete it soon after your confession.

5. Absolution: The priest will then offer a prayer of absolution, through which God will forgive you your sins. He will usually say this: "God, the Father of Mercies, through the death and resurrection of his Son, has reconciled the world to himself and sent the Holy Spirit among us for the forgiveness of sins. Through the ministry of the Church, may God grant you pardon and peace. And I absolve you from your sins in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit. Amen." You respond by saying, "Amen."

6. Conclusion: The priest will probably say something like, “Go in peace,” to which you can respond “Amen” or “Thanks be to God.”

Common Catholic Prayers

SIGN OF THE CROSS

In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit. Amen.

OUR FATHER

Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed be thy name; thy kingdom come; thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread; and forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us; and lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. Amen.

HAIL MARY

Hail Mary, full of grace. The Lord is with thee. Blessed art thou among women, and blessed is the fruit of thy womb, Jesus. Holy Mary, Mother of God, pray for us sinners, now and at the hour of our death. Amen.

GLORY BE

Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Spirit. As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be, world without end. Amen

APOSTLES' CREED

I believe in God, the Father almighty, Creator of heaven and earth, and in Jesus Christ, his only Son, our Lord, who was conceived by the Holy Spirit, born of the Virgin Mary, suffered under Pontius Pilate, was crucified, died, and was buried; he descended into hell; on the third day he rose again from the dead; he ascended into heaven, and is seated at the right hand of God the Father almighty; from there he will come to judge the living and the dead. I believe in the Holy Spirit, the holy catholic Church, the communion of saints, the forgiveness of sins, the resurrection of the body, and life everlasting. Amen.

PRAYER BEFORE MEALS

Bless us O Lord, and these thy gifts, which we are about to receive, from thy bounty, through Christ, our Lord. Amen.

PRAYER TO OUR GUARDIAN ANGEL

Angel of God, my guardian dear, to whom God's love commits me here, ever this day be at my side to light and guard, to rule and guide. Amen.

MORNING OFFERING

O Jesus, through the Immaculate Heart of Mary, I offer you all my prayers, works, joys, and sufferings of this day, for all the intentions of your Sacred Heart, in union with the holy sacrifice of the Mass throughout the world, in reparation for my sins, for the intentions of all my relatives and friends and in particular for the intentions of the Holy Father.

EVENING PRAYER

O my God, at the end of this day I thank you most heartily for all the graces I have received from you. I am sorry that I have not made a better use of them. I am sorry for all the sins I have committed against you. Forgive me, O my God, and graciously protect me this night. Blessed Virgin Mary, my dear heavenly mother, take me under your protection. St. Joseph, my dear guardian angel, and all you saints of God, pray for me. Sweet Jesus, have pity on all poor sinners, and save them from hell. Have mercy on the suffering souls in purgatory.

Endnotes

Introduction: Why We Believe . . . Anything

¹ 1 Thessalonians 5:21.

Chapter 1: Why We Believe in Truth

² Only a few statements are absolutely true, or true in all times and all places. These include statements about logical contradictions like “there are no square circles” or “there are no married bachelors.”

³ “Penn Jillette gets the gift of a Bible.” Available online at www.youtube.com/watch?v=6md638smQd8

Chapter 2: Why We Believe in Science

⁴ St. Thomas Aquinas, Summa Contra Gentiles, 1:64.

⁵ P. B. Medawar, Advice to a Young Scientist (New York: Basic Books, 1979), 31.

⁶ Pope Benedict XVI, Meeting of the Holy Father Benedict XVI with the Clergy of the Dioceses of Belluno-Feltre and Treviso, July 24, 2007, www.vatican.va/holy_father/benedict_xvi/speeches/2007/july/documents/hf_ben-xvi_spe_20070724_clero-cadore_en.html.

⁷ Sheila Rabin, “Nicolaus Copernicus,” in Edward N. Zalta, ed., The Stanford Encyclopedia of Philosophy, Fall 2010 ed., plato.stanford.edu/archives/fall2010/entries/copernicus/.

⁸ This is found in Niccolini’s February 13 and April 16 letters in 1633 to the king of Tuscany.

⁹ Pew Research Forum, “Scientists and Belief,” November 5, 2009, www.pewforum.org/2009/11/05/scientists-and-belief/.

¹⁰ J. L. Heilbron, The Sun in the Church: Cathedrals as Solar Observatories (Cambridge: Harvard University Press, 1999), 3.

¹¹ Catechism of the Catholic Church (CCC) 1814. The Catechism is a summary of what Catholics believe.

¹² See also CCC 142-165 for a more comprehensive description of faith from a Catholic perspective.

¹³ I owe this example to philosopher Timothy McGrew.

Chapter 3: Why We Believe in a Creator

¹⁴ This is called the Kalām cosmological argument. For more, see chapters nine and ten of my book Answering Atheism (2013).

¹⁵ While the Big Bang is still the majority view, it is incomplete. Scientists have proposed new mechanisms such as “inflation” to account for irregularities in this standard model such as the flatness problem or the horizon problem. Scientists also need a quantum theory of gravity to account for the universe’s structure at the Big Bang itself because relativity theory becomes incapable of describing the singularity prior to what is called the Planck time, or 10^{-43} seconds.

¹⁶ Lisa Grossman, “Why Physicists Can’t Avoid a Creation Event,” New Scientist Magazine, January 11, 2012. In their original paper, Audrey Mithani and Alexander Vilenkin write, “Did the universe have a beginning? At this point, it seems that the answer to this question is probably yes.” Mithani and Vilenkin, “Did The Universe Have a Beginning?,” Cornell University Library, High Energy Physics—Theory, 2012, arxiv.org/abs/1204.4658.

¹⁷ For more information, see John Farrell, The Day Without a Yesterday: Einstein, Lemaître, and the Birth of Modern Cosmology (New York: Thunder’s Mouth Press, 2005), 115. Farrell cautiously notes, “There is some confusion as to the extent of Einstein’s enthusiasm for Lemaître’s primeval atom theory . . . Encouraging as Einstein was, it’s unlikely that he regarded Lemaître’s primeval atom theory as the last word on the subject—and unlikelier still that he would have employed the word ‘creation’ to describe it.”

¹⁸ Quoted in Michio Kaku, Parallel Worlds: A Journey through Creation, Higher Dimensions, and the Future of the Cosmos (New York: Anchor Books, 2005), 69-70.

¹⁹ David Albert, “On the Origin of Everything: ‘A Universe from Nothing by Lawrence Krauss,’” New York Times Book Review, March 23, 2012, www.nytimes.com/2012/03/25/books/review/a-universe-from-nothing-by-lawrence-m-krauss.html?_r=0.

²⁰ This is called the fine-tuning argument. For more, see chapters eleven and twelve of my book Answering Atheism (2013).

²¹ Alexander Vilenkin, Many Worlds in One (New York: Hill and Wang, 2006), 10.

²² Some people say our universe can be fine-tuned by chance if it is one universe within a larger collection of universes called the “multiverse.” Within this collection there would be trillions of dead universes and maybe just one universe like ours that has life. But aside from the lack of evidence for the multiverse, there are bigger problems with this explanation of fine-tuning. Paul Davies, an accomplished non-Christian physicist, explains: “Can the multiverse provide a complete and closed account of all physical existence? Not quite. The multiverse comes with a lot of baggage, such as an overarching space and time to host all those bangs, a universe-generating mechanism to trigger them, physical fields to populate the universes with material stuff, and a selection of forces to make things happen. Cosmologists embrace these features by envisaging sweeping ‘meta-laws’ that pervade the multiverse and spawn specific bylaws on a universe-by-universe basis. The meta-laws themselves remain unexplained—eternal, immutable, transcendent entities that just happen to exist and must simply be accepted as given. In that respect the meta-laws have a similar status to an unexplained transcendent god.” Paul Davies, “Stephen Hawking’s Big Bang Gaps,” Guardian, September 3, 2010, www.guardian.co.uk/commentisfree/belief/2010/sep/04/stephen-hawking-big-bang-gap.

²³ Assume for simplicity that the odds of getting a royal flush are one in a million (it’s closer to one in 650,000). The odds of getting fifty royal flushes in a row would be $(1/10^6)^{50}$, which leave us with $1/10^{300}$. This comes nowhere near physicist Roger Penrose’s number for the odds of our universe having low enough disorder to allow life to exist ($1/10^{10^{123}}$). Richard Dawkins, The God Delusion (New York: Houghton Mifflin Company, 2006), 147.

²⁴ Lisa Dyson, Matthew Kleban, and Leonard Susskind, “Disturbing Implications of a Cosmological Constant,” Cornell University Library, High Energy Physics—Theory, 2002, arxiv.org/abs/hep-th/0208013.

Chapter 4: Why We Believe in God

²⁵ Aristotle, The Metaphysics, Book XII.

²⁶ CCC 239, 270.

Chapter 5: Why We Believe God Conquers Evil

²⁷ Nick Vujicic, Life Without Limits (New York: Doubleday, 2010), 34.

²⁸ J.L. Mackie, The Miracle of Theism: Arguments For and Against the Existence of God (Oxford: Oxford University Press: 1982), 115.

²⁹ Available online at http://www.africa.upenn.edu/Articles_Gen/Letter_Birmingham.html.

³⁰ Some people say that morality can’t be grounded in God because if God commanded us to do something evil, like torture a child, it wouldn’t become moral just because God commanded it. Therefore, something over and above God must exist in order to ground morality and determine these acts are objectively evil. But because God is a perfect and infinite being who exists without limit or flaw, he will necessarily command only good acts that correspond with his perfect nature. God could never will us to do anything evil, because he is goodness itself and desires that we be made holy because he is holy (1 Pet. 1:16). The Catechism, quoting St. Thomas Aquinas, teaches that “God’s almighty power is in no way arbitrary: ‘In God, power, essence, will, intellect, wisdom, and justice are all identical. Nothing therefore can be in God’s power which could not be in his just will or his wise intellect’” (CCC 271).

³¹ Jennifer Jackson, Ethics in Medicine: Virtue, Vice, and Medicine (Cambridge: Polity Press, 2006), 140.

Chapter 6: Why We Believe in Jesus

³² I owe this insight to the Christian philosopher Randal Rauser.

³³ Josephus, Antiquities of the Jews, 18.3.3; see also 20.9.1.

³⁴ Tacitus, Annals, 15.44.

³⁵ Bart Ehrman, Did Jesus Exist? The Historical Argument for Jesus of Nazareth (New York: HarperOne, 2012), 4.

³⁶ From “The Buddha’s Farewell Address” in Paul Carus, The Gospel of Buddha, Compiled from Ancient Records (Chicago and London: Open Court Publishing Company, 1915).

³⁷ This copy is called Codex Sinaiticus because it was discovered in a monastery at the foot of Mount Sinai.

³⁸ For a defense of the reliability of the Gospels see Craig Blomberg’s The Historical Reliability of the Gospels (Downers Grove, Ill.: InterVarsity Press, 2007) and The Historical Reliability of John’s Gospel (Downers Grove, Ill.: InterVarsity Press, 2011).

³⁹ F.F. Bruce, The Books and the Parchments: How We Got Our English Bible (Grand Rapids, Mich.: Fleming H. Revell Co., 1984), 78.

⁴⁰ Therese de Lisieux. Story of a Soul: The Autobiography of St. Thérèse of Lisieux, 3rd ed., trans. John Clarke (Washington, D.C.: ICS Publications, 1996), 100-101.

Chapter 7: Why We Believe in the Resurrection

⁴¹ John Dominic Crossan, Jesus: A Revolutionary Biography (San Francisco: HarperCollins, 2009), 163.

⁴² Gerd Lüdemann, What Really Happened to Jesus?, trans. John Bowden (Louisville, Ky.: Westminster John Knox Press, 1995), 80.

⁴³ William Edwards, Wesley Gabel, and Floyd Hosmer, “On the Physical Death of Jesus Christ,” Journal of the American Medical Association, 255, no. 11 (March 21, 1986), 1457.

⁴⁴ The skeleton belongs to Yehohanan of the village Giv’at Ha-Mivtar. Matthew W. Maslen and Piers D. Mitchell, “Medical Theories on the Cause of Death in Crucifixion,” Journal of the Royal Society of Medicine 99, no. 4 (2006), 185-88.

⁴⁵ Gary R. Habermas and J.P. Moreland, Immortality: The Other Side of Death (Nashville, Tenn.: Nelson, 1992), 60.

⁴⁶ Gary R. Habermas and Antony Flew, “My Pilgrimage from Atheism to Theism: An Exclusive Interview with Former British Atheist Professor Antony Flew,” Faculty Publications and Presentations of Liberty University Paper, 2004, 333.

⁴⁷ Buddha is recorded as saying in Sutta 11.5 of the Digha Nikaya, “Seeing the danger of such miracles, I dislike, reject and despise them.” Sura 13:7 of the Qu’ran says, “Those who disbelieved say, ‘Why has a sign not been sent down to him from his Lord?’ You are only a warner, and for every people is a guide.” Muhammad’s role was simply to preach about Allah, not perform any miracles.

⁴⁸ Gary Habermas and Michael Licona, The Case for the Resurrection of Jesus (Grand Rapids, Mich.: Kregel Publications, 2004), 70.

⁴⁹ St. Justin Martyr, Dialogue with Trypho, chapter CVIII.

⁵⁰ Talmud, Sotah 3:4, 19a (cited in Rachel Keren, “Torah Study,” in Jewish Women: A Comprehensive Historical Encyclopedia, March 20, 2009, Jewish Women’s Archive, <http://jwa.org/encyclopedia/article/torah-study>); and Talmud Rosh Hashanah, 22a.

⁵¹ Josephus, Antiquities of the Jews, 4.8.15.

⁵² Pope St. Clement, a disciple of St. Peter, wrote in his letter to the Corinthians that Peter, for example, “through unrighteous envy, endured not one or two, but numerous labors, and when he had finally suffered martyrdom, departed to the place of glory due to him. Owing to envy, Paul also obtained the reward of patient endurance . . . and suffered martyrdom under the prefects” (First Clement, 5:4-5). St. Polycarp of Smyrna, who was a disciple of St. John, describes Jesus’ endurance till death and similarly exhorts believers to “practice all endurance, which also you saw with your own eyes in the blessed Ignatius and Zosimus and Rufus, and in others also who came from among yourselves, as well as in Paul himself and the rest of the apostles” (Letter to the Philippians, 9.1). Because Clement and Polycarp personally knew the apostles, we can have a high degree of confidence in their testimony that St. Peter and St. John were indeed martyred. Finally, Josephus records that James, whom he describes as “the brother of Jesus,” was stoned by Caiaphas the high priest for transgressing the law (Antiquities of the Jews, 20.9.1).

Chapter 8: Why We Believe in the Trinity

⁵³ Some Mormons claim that the reason they pray only to the Father (whom they call “Heavenly Father”) is because Jesus taught his disciples to address their prayers to “our Father” and because Jesus told his disciples to “ask of the Father in my name.” Of course, just because Jesus gave us one way to pray does not mean that is the only way to pray. After all, Mormons give thanks to Heavenly Father even though Jesus never showed his followers through the Lord’s Prayer how to give thanks to God. It seems more likely that Mormons only pray to the Father because they are following the prescription in the Book of Mormon, where Jesus says, “Ye must always pray unto the Father in my name” (3 Nephi 18:19).

⁵⁴ Mormons believe that we (along with Jesus) are all God’s spirit children. But as one Mormon apologetics website admits, “[I]t is technically true to say that Jesus and Satan are ‘brothers,’ in the sense that both have the same spiritual parent, God the Father” (en.fairmormon.org/Jesus_Christ/Brother_of_Satan). The belief that we will become Gods is a consequence of the fact that Mormons believe God and man are of the same species. Human beings are simply less developed gods and have the potential to be “exalted,” or become gods—provided they follow the teachings of the Church of Latter-day Saints. Joseph Smith said in the King Follett sermon, “Here, then, is eternal life—to know the only wise and true God; and you have got to learn how to be gods yourselves, and to be kings and priests to God, the same as all gods have done before you, namely, by going from one small degree to another, and from a small capacity to a great one; from grace to grace, from exaltation to exaltation.” For more, see my booklet 20 Answers: Mormonism.

⁵⁵ In Isaiah 44:8 God says, “Is there a God besides me? I know not any.” If the God of this world were omniscient, then wouldn’t he know about the God that he worshipped when he was a man? God also makes it clear in Isaiah 43:10 that “Before me no god was formed, nor shall there be any after me.” This can’t refer to false gods or idols, because many of those are still “formed” to this day. Instead, the Bible teaches that no other God besides the one true God has ever existed, and no other

God ever will exist. The New Testament also firmly teaches there is only one God. Jesus described God as “the only God” (John 5:44) and “the only true God” (John 17:3). St. Paul describes God as “the only wise God” (Rom. 16:27) and the only being who possesses immortality (1 Tim. 6:16).

⁵⁶ “[T]he scriptures point to the resurrected Jesus Christ as the chief of all angels—Michael the archangel.” “Who is Michael the Archangel?” Awake! February 8, 2002, 17, <http://wol.jw.org/en/wol/d/r1/lp-e/102002085>. However, the Bible teaches that Jesus is not an angel, so this claim is false (Heb. 1:4-6).

⁵⁷ The Greek word for “firstborn,” prototokos, can refer to a special position someone has that is worthy of honor and privilege, and not only to the literal order of birth among siblings. For example, in Psalm 89:27 God says of David, “I will make him the first-born, the highest of the kings of the earth.” Obviously, David was not the first king to reign among the kings of the Earth. He was instead placed in a position of preeminence or authority over all other kings. But just as the firstborn of kings is the one who rules over kings, it follows that the firstborn of creation, or Jesus, as Colossians 1:15 describes him, is the one who rules over creation.

⁵⁸ When the Bible says, “God raised Jesus from the dead,” it refers to the Father, the Son (John 2:19-21), and the Holy Spirit all raising him from the dead. See also CCC 648.

⁵⁹ Tertullian, Against Praxeas, 2.

Chapter 9: Why We Believe in the Bible

⁶⁰ CCC 390.

⁶¹ William G. Dever, Who Were the Early Israelites and Where Did They Come From? (Grand Rapids, Mich.: Wm. B. Eerdmans), 202.

⁶² Jeffrey H. Schwartz, What the Bones Tell Us (New York: Henry Holt, 2015), 29-30.

⁶³ Karl Keating, Catholicism and Fundamentalism: The Attack on Romanism by Bible Christians (San Francisco: Ignatius Press, 1988), 126.

⁶⁴ St. Augustine, Against the Fundamental Epistle of Manichaeus, 5.

Chapter 10: Why We Aren’t Bible-Only Christians

⁶⁵ Another verse that is cited in defense of sola scriptura is Acts 17:11, which describes how the Jews in Berea “were more noble than those in Thessalonica, for they received the word with all eagerness, examining the scriptures daily to see if [Paul’s teaching was true].” But the Jews in Thessalonica were not ignorant of Scripture. They just opposed Paul’s interpretation of Scripture because he “reasoned” and “proved” from it that Jesus was the Messiah. The Bereans, on the other hand, were more “noble” because they were open-minded and saw that Scripture was a witness to Paul’s preaching. Luke even acknowledges that “the word of God was proclaimed by Paul at Berea” (Acts 17:13), which means that the word of God is not confined to written words alone.

⁶⁶ The Catechism says, “The Tradition here in question comes from the apostles and hands on what they received from Jesus’ teaching and example and what they learned from the Holy Spirit” (CCC 83).

⁶⁷ St. Irenaeus, Against Heresies, 1:10:2, 3:4:1.

⁶⁸ It was also defined in the face of Protestant criticism of the canon at the ecumenical Council of Trent (1545-1563).

⁶⁹ Douglas Wilson, “A Severed Branch,” Credenda Agenda 12, no. 1, www.credenda.org/archive/issues/12-1thema.php.

⁷⁰ Eusebius, Church History, 4:23:11.

⁷¹ R.C. Sproul, What Is Reformed Theology? Understanding the Basics (Grand Rapids, Mich.: Baker Books, 2005), 54.

⁷² Consider the group that wants to remove from the Bible the story about Jesus having mercy on the woman caught in adultery (John 7:53-8:11), www.conservapedia.com/Essay:Adulteress_Story.

⁷³ For a defense of the inspiration of the deuterocanonical books see Gary Michuta, The Case for the Deuterocanon: Evidence and Arguments (Livonia, Mich.: Nikaria Press, 2015).

⁷⁴ See 2 Maccabees 12:46 for one example.

⁷⁵ St. Vincent of Lerins, Commonitory, 2.5

Chapter 11: Why We Belong to the Catholic Church

⁷⁶ St. Ignatius of Antioch, Letter to the Smyrnaeans, 8.

⁷⁷ Ibid.

⁷⁸ Pope St. Clement, Letter to the Corinthians, 44:1-3.

⁷⁹ St. Justin Martyr, First Apology, 65.

⁸⁰ St. Ignatius of Antioch, Letter to the Trallians, 2:1.

⁸¹ Tertullian, Baptism, 1.

⁸² Origen, Commentaries on Romans 5:9.

⁸³ St. Cyprian, The Lapsed, 28.

⁸⁴ Pope St. John Paul II, Redemptoris Missio, 52.

⁸⁵ The text describes the servant as a eunuch. A eunuch was a man who had been castrated so that he could be trusted to guard female members of the royal family and not become sexually involved with them. In the ancient world it also referred to men who were impotent or otherwise incapable of engaging in sexual intercourse.

⁸⁶ John Calvin, A Treatise of the Eternal Predestination Of God, 38.

⁸⁷ St. Augustine, Against the Letter of Mani Called "The Foundation," 4:5.

Chapter 12: Why We Have a Pope

⁸⁸ J.N.D. Kelly, The Oxford Dictionary of the Popes (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1996), 1.

⁸⁹ Didn't Peter refer to himself as a "fellow elder" and not as "pope" in 1 Peter 5:1? Yes, but in this passage Peter is demonstrating humility, which he is encouraging other priests to practice. He wrote, "Clothe yourselves, all of you, with humility toward one another" (5:5), so exalting his status would have contradicted his message. Addressing his audience as "fellow elders" no more invalidates his leadership than when the president addresses the nation as "my fellow Americans." Besides, St. Paul often referred to himself as a mere deacon (1 Cor. 3:5, 2 Cor. 11:23) and even said he was "the very least of all the saints" (Eph. 3:8)—but that did not take away from his authority as an apostle.

⁹⁰ Craig Keener, The Gospel of Matthew: A Socio-Rhetorical Commentary (Grand Rapids, Mich.: Wm. B. Eerdmans, 2009), 426.

⁹¹ Some people quote Pope Leo X (1513-1521) as saying, "How profitable that fable of Christ has been to us and our company," to show that a medieval pope was the Antichrist because he thought Jesus was a myth created to justify the existence of a power-hungry Church. But the problem with this quote is that while it does come from the sixteenth century, Pope Leo X never said it. This quote actually comes from the Protestant dissenter John Bale's satirical book The Pageant of Popes, and was an amateur attempt to smear the Roman pontiff's character.

⁹² Jesus speaks of "you all" with the Greek word hymas in verse 31, but in the next verse Jesus uses the Greek word sou, which is the singular "you" in reference to Peter.

⁹³ In this situation Peter, at most, made an error in behavior, not teaching. Peter feared antagonism from Christians who thought circumcision was necessary for salvation. So, while he was in their presence, Peter declined to eat with the uncircumcised. Paul criticized Peter for doing this, but Paul himself accommodated this same group when he had his disciple Timothy circumcised. Paul did this to make it easier to preach to the Jews (Acts 16:1-3), but he called circumcision a grave sin in Galatians 5:2. Therefore, if prudentially yielding to critics doesn't invalidate St. Paul's authority, then neither does it invalidate St. Peter's.

⁹⁴ Thomas R. Schreiner, Galatians (Grand Rapids, Mich.: Zondervan, 2010), 145.

⁹⁵ St. Cyprian, Epistle, 54.14

⁹⁶ Eusebius, Church History, 4:23:9

⁹⁷ St. Irenaeus, Against Heresies, 3.3.2

⁹⁸ Prosper, Account I, sourcebooks.fordham.edu/source/attila2.asp.

Chapter 13: Why We Have Priests

⁹⁹ This account comes from third-class passenger Helen Mary Mocklare and was published in the New York World on April 22, 1912.

¹⁰⁰ Joseph Pronechen, "Father Thomas Byles: God's Faithful Servant on the Titanic," National Catholic Register, April 15, 2015, www.ncregister.com/daily-news/father-thomas-byles-gods-faithful-servant-on-the-titanic.

¹⁰¹ St. Cyprian, The Lapsed, 28.

¹⁰² The Church does not teach that women are inferior to men and that is why they cannot be priests. God's eternal wisdom is personified as a woman (Prov. 8) and in Galatians 3:28 Paul says that in Christ there is no difference in value between men and women. At the end of his letter to the Romans, St. Paul refers to various women who acted as coworkers with him in the field of evangelization (Rom. 16). The Church even recognizes that the one creature who deserves to be praised more than any other is a woman—Mary, the Mother of God. But this does not contradict the Church's practice of imitating Christ, who only selected men to be apostles even though many women supported his ministry. Some people say Jesus chose only men to be apostles because that was expected in the culture of his time, but Jesus routinely contradicted the cultural sensitivities of his day. Priestesses were common in ancient mystery religions, yet St. Paul firmly taught that women could not have the same leadership positions in the Church as men (1 Cor. 11:35). Men and women are equal in dignity but they are not identical, so it makes sense God would call each to different vocations.

¹⁰³ Some argue that 1 Corinthians 9:5 proves that Peter had a wife during Paul's missionary journeys. Karl Keating responds in this way: "The key Greek words in 1 Corinthians 9:5 are 'adelphai gunaika.' The first means 'sister,' and the second can be translated as either 'woman' or 'wife.' This means the phrase translates as 'sister woman' or 'sister wife,' with 'sister' indicating not a biological but a spiritual relationship." See Karl Keating, "Did Peter Have a Wife," Catholic Answers Magazine 18, no. 5, May 2007, www.catholic.com/magazine/articles/did-peter-have-a-wife.

¹⁰⁴ A. Jones, "The Gospel of Jesus Christ According to St Matthew," in B. Orchard and E. F. Sutcliffe, eds., A Catholic Commentary on Holy Scripture (New York: Thomas Nelson, 1953), 885.

Chapter 14: Why We Go to Mass

¹⁰⁵ Earlier in John's Gospel Jesus used a metaphor involving food that his disciples misunderstood. Jesus said he had food to eat, to which the disciples essentially asked, "Who brought Jesus' lunch" (and maybe wondered, "Why didn't they get us anything!"). Jesus corrected them, saying that he was being metaphorical. He explained, "My food is to do the will of him who sent me, and to accomplish his work" (John 4:34). But in John 6, when people began to abandon Jesus over the supposed metaphor of "eating his flesh," Jesus does not say, "Wait, it's just a metaphor!" Instead he reaffirmed the difficulty of his teaching, and his disciples stood by him because they knew there was no one else they could go to who had the words of eternal life (John 6:68).

¹⁰⁶ St. Ignatius, Letter to the Smyrnaeans, 7.

¹⁰⁷ J.N.D. Kelly, Early Christian Doctrines (New York: Harper Collins, 1978), 440.

¹⁰⁸ Jesus said to take the Eucharist “in remembrance of me” (Luke 22:19), but he did not mean the Eucharist was only a symbolic representation of him. The word translated “in memory” comes from the Greek word anamnesis, which means “to offer a memorial sacrifice.” It refers to making something present through a sacrifice. In this case, the body of Jesus Christ is made present when the priest presents to the Father the one sacrifice of Christ, our paschal lamb, under the form of bread and wine. See also Stephen K. Ray, Crossing the Tiber: Evangelical Protestants Discover the Historical Church (San Francisco: Ignatius Press, 1997), 210.

¹⁰⁹ Mass is called the “holy sacrifice” because “it makes present the one sacrifice of Christ the Savior and includes the Church’s offering . . .

it re-presents (makes present) the sacrifice of the cross” (CCC 1330,1336). Even though Christ said on the cross, “It is finished” (John 19:30), this does not mean nothing else needs to be done to secure our salvation. Romans 8:34 says Christ, at this very moment, intercedes for us before the Father. Representing Christ’s sacrifice to the Father does not take away from the unique, saving effect of that sacrifice any more than Christ’s current intercession for us takes away from what he did on the cross.

¹¹⁰ Didache, 14. Hebrews 13:10 also reveals that Christians “have an altar from which those who serve the tent have no right to eat,” which means that Christians have a sacrifice to offer God. Those who “serve the tent” are the Jewish priests in the Temple who were not allowed to receive the sacrifice of the Eucharist, which only Christians could receive.

¹¹¹ Peter Kreeft, “What I Learned from a Muslim About Eucharistic Adoration,” catholicity.com, April 21, 2011.

¹¹² St. Tarcisius, Martyr, www.ewtn.com/library/MARY/TARCISI.htm. Taken from Berchmans Bittle, A Saint a Day According to the Liturgical Calendar of the Church (Milwaukee: Bruce Publishing Company, 1958).

Chapter 15: Why We Baptize Babies

¹¹³ “For immersion in water, it was clear to him, could not be used for the forgiveness of sins, but as a sanctification of the body, and only if the soul was already thoroughly purified by right actions,” Josephus, Antiquities of the Jews, 18.5.2.

¹¹⁴ “By yielding to the tempter, Adam and Eve committed a personal sin, but this sin affected the human nature that they would then transmit in a fallen state. It is a sin that will be transmitted by propagation to all mankind, that is, by the transmission of a human nature deprived of original holiness and justice. And that is why original sin is called ‘sin’ only in an analogical sense: it is a sin ‘contracted’ and not ‘committed’—a state and not an act” (CCC 404).

¹¹⁵ The Didache, 7.

¹¹⁶ St. Cyprian, Letters, 64.5.

Chapter 16: Why We Believe in Spite of Scandal

¹¹⁷ Pope St. Paul VI, Solemnly Hac Liturgia, 19. Cited in CCC 827.

¹¹⁸ “The Nature and Scope of Sexual Abuse of Minors by Catholic Priests and Deacons in the United States 1950-2002,” research study conducted by John Jay College of Criminal Justice, City University of New York, for the United States Conference of Catholic Bishops, February 2004, www.usccb.org/issues-and-action/child-and-youth-protection/upload/The-Nature-and-Scope-of-Sexual-Abuse-of-Minors-by-Catholic-Priests-and-Deacons-in-the-United-States-1950-2002.pdf.

- ¹¹⁹ Electa Draper, “Scandal creates contempt for Catholic clergy” Denver Post, May 25, 2010, <http://blogs.denverpost.com/hark/2010/05/25/scandal-creates-contempt-for-catholic-clergy/39/>
- ¹²⁰ Pat Wingert, “Priests Commit No More Abuse Than Other Males,” Newsweek, April 7, 2010, www.newsweek.com/priests-commit-no-more-abuse-other-males-70625.
- ¹²¹ “Address of Dr. Monica Applewhite to the Irish Bishops,” March 10, 2009, www.themediareport.com/wp-content/uploads/2012/11/Appleswhite-Ireland-Address-Bishops-2009.pdf.
- ¹²² Elisabetta Povoledo and Laurie Goodstein, “Pope Creates Tribunal for Bishop Negligence in Child Sexual Abuse Cases,” June 10, 2015, www.nytimes.com/2015/06/11/world/europe/pope-creates-tribunal-for-bishop-negligence-in-child-sexual-abuse-cases.html?_r=0.
- ¹²³ David Gibson, “10 Years After Catholic Sex Abuse Reforms, What’s Changed?,” Washington Post, June 6, 2012, www.washingtonpost.com/national/on-faith/10-years-after-catholic-sex-abuse-reforms-whats-changed/2012/06/06/gJQAQMjOJV_story.html.
- ¹²⁴ Thomas F. Madden, The New Concise History of the Crusades (Lanham, Md.: Rowman & Littlefield Publishers, 2005), vii.
- ¹²⁵ Peter Lock, The Routledge Companion to the Crusades (New York: Routledge, 2006), 412.
- ¹²⁶ Cited in S.J. Allen and Emilie Amt, eds., The Crusades: A Reader, 2nd. ed., (Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 2014), 35.
- ¹²⁷ Thomas E. Woods Jr., “The Myth of Hitler’s Pope: An Interview with Rabbi David G. Dalin,” Catholic Exchange, July 29, 2005, catholicexchange.com/the-myth-of-hitlers-pope-an-interview-with-rabbi-david-g-dalin.
- ¹²⁸ Julian the Apostate, Letter to Arsacius.
- ¹²⁹ Roy Porter, The Greatest Benefit to Mankind: A Medical History of Humanity (New York: HarperCollins, 1997), 88.
- ¹³⁰ Anthony Fisher, Catholic Bioethics for a New Millennium (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2012), 279-80.
- ¹³¹ Leprosy is now known as Hansen’s disease.
- ¹³² Butler’s Lives of the Saints, vol. 4, 106.

Chapter 17: Why We Believe in Faith Working Through Love

- ¹³³ For a good treatment of this issue see Jimmy Akin, The Drama of Salvation (San Diego, Calif.: Catholic Answers Press, 2015), especially chapter 2.
- ¹³⁴ “Despite repeated assurances that AIDS has been shown to be transmitted only through intimate sexual contact or through the exchange of blood, some neighbors remain fearful that the virus could be transmitted through the air. Others disapprove of the fact that the home is caring for gay men.” Sandra G. Boodman, “Neighbors Are Fearful of Nuns’ Caring for the Dying in Convent,” Washington Post, January 12, 1987, B01.
- ¹³⁵ Mae Elise Cannon, Just Spirituality: How Faith Practices Fuel Social Action (Downers Grove, Ill.: InterVarsity Press, 2013), 19.

Chapter 18: Why We Believe in Purgatory

- ¹³⁶ C.S. Lewis, Letters to Malcolm: Chiefly on Prayer (New York: Mariner Books, 2002), 108-109. Although Lewis was critical of some medieval conceptions of purgatory, he affirms the depiction of the sinner in Cardinal Newman’s poem “Dream of Gerontius,” seeking purification before God’s throne.
- ¹³⁷ See also CCC 1855-59.

¹³⁸ Pope Benedict XVI, Spe Salvi, 47. For a thorough treatment of the good thief on the cross and its relation to purgatory, see Jim Blackburn, “Dismissing the Dismas Case,” Catholic Answers Magazine, 23, no. 2, March 2012.

¹³⁹ Martin Luther, Defense and Explanations of All the Articles, Article 37.

¹⁴⁰ In the Middle Ages one of the acts of charity that could be done to obtain an indulgence was to give money to the poor, or alms. Although this is a virtuous and good act, some people only saw it as a transaction and did not give money in a spirit of humble repentance for sin. Therefore, the Church removed almsgiving as a work associated with the granting of indulgences.

¹⁴¹ Spe Salvi, 47.

¹⁴² Some people say praying to saints violates Deuteronomy 18:11, which forbids the sin of necromancy. But that refers to using magic to summon the souls of the dead (like when Saul summoned Samuel’s soul from the dead with the help of the witch of Endor in 1 Samuel 28: 3-19). It is not always wrong to talk to the dead, since Jesus spoke with Moses on the Mount of Transfiguration and Moses had been dead for centuries (Matt. 17:3).

Chapter 19: Why We Pray to Saints

¹⁴³ Paul also says that death does not separate us from the love of Christ (Rom. 8:39), so if we are all united to Christ, then we are united to one another in a bond of faith and love.

¹⁴⁴ William Barclay, The Letter to the Hebrews (Louisville, Ky.: Westminster John Knox Press, 1976), 202.

¹⁴⁵ Even if the devil doesn’t personally tempt us, and only his demons do, Satan himself is organizing all of this. This means that, in order to lead his demonic kingdom, he has mental abilities that far surpass what humans in this life possess.

¹⁴⁶ St. Clement of Alexandria, Miscellanies, 7:12.

¹⁴⁷ Robert Milburn, Early Christian Art and Architecture (Oakland, Calif.: University of California Press, 1991), 38.

¹⁴⁸ Elizabeth Vargas and Donna Hunter, “Miracle of Faith: The Work of a Saint?,” ABC News, April 2, 2010, abcnews.go.com/2020/miracle-faith-chase-kear-recovers-fatal-accident-prayers/story?id=10239513.

Chapter 20: Why We Honor Mary

¹⁴⁹ When God the Son became man, he remained a divine person with a divine nature. In becoming man, however, he assumed an additional human nature and was conceived in Mary’s womb, from which he was born.

¹⁵⁰ Timothy George, “The Blessed Virgin Mary in Evangelical Perspective,” Mary, Mother of God, eds., Carl E. Braaten and Robert W. Jenson (Grand Rapids, Mich.: Wm. B. Eerdmans, 2004), 110.

¹⁵¹ See Luther’s Commentary on The Magnificat. Cited in Beth Kreitzer, Reforming Mary: Changing Images of the Virgin Mary in Lutheran Sermons of the Sixteenth Century (New York: Oxford University Press, 2004) 53.

¹⁵² John Calvin, Commentary on a Harmony of the Evangelists Matthew, Mark, and Luke, section 39.

¹⁵³ This word is used to describe Abram and his nephew Lot (Gen. 14:14) as well as the cousins of Moses and Aaron (Lev. 10:4).

¹⁵⁴ “According to Scripture and ancient Jewish tradition, Mary belonged to the father of her child—the Holy Spirit. However, the Holy Spirit could not be the protector that Mary needed. The Holy Spirit could not sign legal documents and be Mary’s legal spouse. But Joseph was ready and willing—just man that he was—to care for Mary as his lawfully wedded spouse.” Tim Staples, Behold Your Mother: A Biblical and Historical Defense of the Marian Doctrines (San Diego, Calif.: Catholic Answers Press, 2014), 247.

¹⁵⁵ Ibid. 83-103.

¹⁵⁶ St. Irenaeus, Against Heresies, 3:22:24.

Chapter 21: Why We Protect Life

¹⁵⁷ Didache, 2.

¹⁵⁸ Pope Benedict XVI, Deus Caritas Est, 28.

¹⁵⁹ Pope St. John Paul II, Evangelium Vitae, 99.

¹⁶⁰ Ronan R. O’Rahilly and Fabiola Müller, Human Embryology & Teratology, third edition. (New York: Wiley-Liss, 2001), 8. The full quote reads: “Although human life is a continuous process, fertilization (which, incidentally, is not a ‘moment’) is a critical landmark because, under ordinary circumstances, a new, genetically distinct human organism is formed when the chromosomes of the male and female pronuclei blend in the oocyte.”

¹⁶¹ Some people understand why abortion is wrong, but still think assisted suicide is okay. They say, “The baby never had a choice, but shouldn’t someone in terrible pain be allowed to die if that’s what he wants?” Catholics believe everyone deserves to be treated with dignity and have access to treatment for pain. It’s even okay to give a dying person pain medication that, as an unintended side effect, speeds up the natural process of dying. But we rob sick people of their dignity when we say that healthy people deserve to be talked out of suicide because they have “lives worth living,” but the sick or disabled are better off ending their own lives. By making it legal to help someone end his life, this pressures other sick and disabled people, who may feel like they are a burden on their loved ones, to do the same thing. We euthanize sick and unwanted pets because even though we don’t want them to suffer we don’t believe it is appropriate to treat their suffering with expensive medicine or round-the-clock human care. But shouldn’t humans receive appropriate levels of human care? That is why the Church encourages doctors to kill disease or kill pain, but not to kill their own patients.

¹⁶² Richard Stith, “Arguing with Pro-Choicers,” First Things, November 4, 2006, www.firstthings.com/onthesquare/2006/11/stith-arguing-with-pro-choicer.

¹⁶³ In Stith’s original essay he uses the example of a jaguar that has leaped back into dense jungle foliage. My friend and fellow pro-life colleague Stephanie Gray combines Stith’s argument with the example of the Loch Ness monster.

¹⁶⁴ Bernard Nathanson, The Hand of God (Washington, D.C.: Regnery Publishing, 1996), 58-60. Nathanson admits that at the time, “I had no feelings aside from the sense of accomplishment, the pride of expertise.”

¹⁶⁵ Bernard Nathanson, Aborting America (Pinnacle Books, 1981), 193.

¹⁶⁶ Nathanson, The Hand of God, 202.

Chapter 22: Why We Cherish Our Sexuality

¹⁶⁷ Juve Shiver, Jr., “Television Awash in Sex, Study Says,” Los Angeles Times, November 10, 2005.

¹⁶⁸ Karol Wojtyla, Love and Responsibility (San Francisco: Ignatius Press, 1993), 272.

¹⁶⁹ For this particular argument I am indebted to the writings of Karol Wojtyla, Christopher West, Janet Smith, and Alex Pruss.

¹⁷⁰ Marcus Aurelius, Meditations, 6:13.

¹⁷¹ Peter Singer, Practical Ethics (New York: Cambridge University Press, 2011), 2.

¹⁷² This example comes from Sherif Gergis, Robert George, and Ryan Anderson, What Is Marriage? Man and Woman: A Defense (New York: Encounter Books, 2012), 25.

¹⁷³ Daniel T. Lichter, Katherine Michelmores, Richard N. Turner, and Sharon Sassler, “Pathways to a Stable Union? Pregnancy and Childbearing Among Cohabiting and Married Couples,” Population Research and Policy Review, 35, no. 3 (June 2016), 377-99.

Chapter 23: Why We Defend Marriage

¹⁷⁴ Code of Canon Law, 1055.

¹⁷⁵ Wendy Wang and Kim Parker, “Record Share of Americans Have Never Married,” Pew Research Center, September, 24, 2014, www.pewsocialtrends.org/2014/09/24/record-share-of-americans-have- never-married/.

¹⁷⁶ “In 1963, as President Lyndon Johnson was launching the War on Poverty, 7 percent of American children were born outside marriage . . .

According to CDC, a record 40.6 percent of children born in 2008 were born outside marriage—a total of 1.72 million children.” Robert Rector, “National Review: Out Of Wedlock,” NPR, April 12, 2010, www.npr.org/templates/story/story.php?storyId=125848718. “The percentage of all births to unmarried women was 40.2% in 2014, down from 40.6% in 2013, the lowest level since 2007. This percentage peaked in 2009 at 41.0%. In 2014, the percentage of nonmarital births varied widely among population groups, from 16.4% for [Asian Pacific Islander] mothers to 70.9% for non-Hispanic black mothers.” Hamilton, et al. “Births: Final Data for 2014” National Vital Statistics Reports Volume 64, Number 12, December 23, 2015, https://www.cdc.gov/nchs/data/nvsr/nvsr64/nvsr64_12.pdf.

¹⁷⁷ Rose M. Kreider and Renee Ellis, “Living Arrangements of Children: 2009,” United States Census Bureau, June 2011, <https://www.census.gov/prod/2011pubs/p70-126.pdf>.

¹⁷⁸ D. L. Blackwell, “Family Structure and Children’s Health in the United States: Findings from the National Health Interview Survey, 2001-2007,” National Center for Health Statistics, Vital Health Statistics 10 (2010), 246. Cited in Family Structure, December 2015, www.childtrends.org/wp-content/uploads/2015/03/59_Family_Structure.pdf.

¹⁷⁹ W. Bradford Wilcox, “Suffer the Little Children: Cohabitation and the Abuse of America’s Children,” Public Discourse, April 22, 2011, www.thepublicdiscourse.com/2011/04/3181/.

¹⁸⁰ In the parallel passage in Matthew 19:9, Jesus says, “whoever divorces his wife, except for unchastity, and marries another, commits adultery.” Scholars debate the meaning of “unchastity,” but it probably refers to adultery that takes place after the betrothal period but before the consummation of the marriage, or it may refer to sexually unlawful marriages that involve close relatives.

¹⁸¹ According to the Catechism, “Between the baptized, ‘a ratified and consummated marriage cannot be dissolved by any human power or for any reason other than death.’ The separation of spouses while maintaining the marriage bond can be legitimate in certain cases provided for by canon law. If civil divorce remains the only possible way of ensuring certain legal rights, the care of the children, or the protection of inheritance, it can be tolerated and does not constitute a moral offense.” The Catechism goes on to affirm, though, that “Divorce is a grave offense against the natural law. It claims to break the contract, to which the spouses freely consented, to live with each other till death” (CCC 2382-84).

¹⁸² The full text says, “Then Judah said to Onan, ‘Go in to your brother’s wife, and perform the duty of a brother-in-law to her, and raise up offspring for your brother.’ But Onan knew that the offspring would not be his; so when he went in to his brother’s wife he spilled the semen on the ground, lest he should give offspring to his brother. And what he did was displeasing in the sight of the Lord, and he slew him also (Gen. 38:8-10). Normally in the Old Testament the punishment for not raising up children for a deceased brother (or practicing Levirate marriage) was public shaming (Deut. 25:5-10). The fact that the Lord slew Onan is evidence that he was displeased with the way Onan disobeyed his law, that is, by practicing contraception.

¹⁸³ “Known and Probable Human Carcinogens,” American Cancer Society, November 3, 2016, www.cancer.org/cancer/cancercauses/othercarcinogens/generalinformationaboutcarcinogens/known-and-probable-human-carcinogens.

¹⁸⁴ M. A. Wilson, “The Practice of Natural Family Planning Versus the Use of Artificial Birth Control: Family, Moral and Sexual Issues,” Catholic Social Science Review, 7 (2005), 185-211.

¹⁸⁵ “Holy Mass and Canonization of the Blessed: Vincenzo Grossi, Mary of the Immaculate Conception, Ludovico Martin and Maria Azelia Guérin,” Homily of His Holiness Pope Francis, October 18, 2005, w2.vatican.va/content/francesco/en/homilies/2015/documents/papa-francesco_20151018_omelia-canonizzazioni.html.

¹⁸⁶ Ferdinand Holböck, Married Saints and Blessed: Through the Centuries (San Francisco: Ignatius Press, 2002), 411.

Chapter 24: Why We Believe in Hell

¹⁸⁷ Caryle Murphy, “Most Americans Believe in Heaven . . . and Hell,” Pew Research Center, November 10, 2015, www.pewresearch.org/fact-tank/2015/11/10/most-americans-believe-in-heaven-and-hell/.

¹⁸⁸ In the Old Testament the word “hell” usually referred to sheol, or the abode of the dead. The Church teaches that after his Crucifixion, Christ preached to the spirits in sheol (1 Pet. 4:6), an event the Apostles’ Creed refers to as Christ’s “descent into hell.” Regarding this event, the Catechism clearly says, “Jesus did not descend into hell to deliver the damned, nor to destroy the hell of damnation, but to free the just who had gone before him” (CCC 633).

¹⁸⁹ Gehenna was in the valley of Hinnom, which 2 Kings 23:10 and Jeremiah 7:31-32 refer to as a site of child sacrifice.

¹⁹⁰ Pope St. John Paul II, General Audience, July 28, 1999.

¹⁹¹ In contrast to the traditional view of hell, “annihilationists” say hell is temporary and God will eventually destroy the damned. They claim the Greek word rendered “eternal” in this passage, aionios, means “age” or “a long period of time” and doesn’t necessarily mean “forever.” But Matthew always uses this word to mean “eternal.” Also, in this context Jesus is making a comparison between the eternal life the righteous will enjoy forever and the eternal punishment the wicked will endure forever. The comparison doesn’t make sense if the wicked are destroyed and don’t have an everlasting existence like the righteous will. Others argue that the Greek word rendered “punishment,” kolasin, is derived from a word that means to “prune” or “cut off.” Therefore, hell is just separation from God by being annihilated or destroyed. It is not eternal, conscious punishment. But analyzing a word’s meaning from its etymology can lead to gross errors. After all, the word “virtue” is derived from the Latin word vir, which means “man,” but that doesn’t mean all virtuous people are “manly” people. As any Greek dictionary will tell you, kolasin just means “punishment” and kolasin aionion means “eternal” or “everlasting punishment.”

¹⁹² Tertullian, A Treatise on the Soul, 31.

¹⁹³ St. Irenaeus, Against Heresies, II.33.1.

¹⁹⁴ Pope Benedict XVI, Spe Salvi, 45.

Chapter 25: Why We Believe in Heaven

¹⁹⁵ Harold Myra and Marshall Shelley, The Leadership Secrets of Billy Graham (Grand Rapids, Mich.: Zondervan, 2005), 49.

¹⁹⁶ Pope John Paul II, General Audience, July 28, 1999.

¹⁹⁷ Pope Paul VI, Lumen Gentium, 16. This paragraph also says, “nor does divine providence deny the helps necessary for salvation to those who, without blame on their part, have not yet arrived at an explicit knowledge of God and with his grace strive to live a good life. Whatever good or truth is found amongst them is looked upon by the Church as a preparation for the Gospel. She knows that it is given by Him who enlightens all men so that they may finally have life. But often men, deceived by the Evil One, have become vain in their reasonings and have exchanged the truth of God for a lie, serving the creature rather than the Creator.”

About the Author

Trent Horn is a staff apologist for Catholic Answers who specializes in teaching Catholics to graciously and persuasively engage those who disagree with them. Trent has a master's degree in theology from Franciscan University of Steubenville and is currently pursuing a graduate degree in philosophy from Holy Apostles College. He is the author of three books: Answering Atheism, Persuasive Pro-Life, and Hard Sayings: A Catholic Approach to Answering Bible Difficulties.

Table of Contents

Introduction Why We Believe . . . Anything

1. Why We Believe in Truth

2. Why We Believe in Science

3. Why We Believe in a Creator

4. Why We Believe in God

5. Why We Believe God Conquers Evil

6. Why We Believe in Jesus

7. Why We Believe in the Resurrection

8. Why We Believe in the Trinity

9. Why We Believe in the Bible

10. Why We Aren't Bible-Only Christians

11. Why We Belong to the Catholic Church

12. Why We Have a Pope

13. Why We Have Priests

14. Why We Go to Mass

15. Why We Baptize Babies

16. Why We Believe in Spite of Scandal

17. Why We Believe that Faith Works Through Love

18. Why We Believe in Purgatory

19. Why We Pray to the Saints

20. Why We Honor Mary

21. Why We Protect Life

22. Why We Cherish Our Sexuality

23. Why We Defend Marriage

24. Why We Believe There's a Hell

25. Why We Hope for Heaven

How to Become Catholic

How to Go to Confession

Common Catholic Prayers

Endnotes

About the Author